[D] The great number of books which he publiſhed.] They may be reduced to theſe five claſſes; Didactical, Polemical, Practical, Hiſtorical, and Oratorical. Thoſe of the firſt claſs are, Inſtitutiones Theologicæ, i. e. "An Introduction to Divinity, in 8vo." Irenicum de ſtudio Pacis & Concordiæ, i. e. "A Treatiſe of Peace "and Concord," in 4to. De Conſociatione Evangelica inter Reformatos & Evangelicos, i. e. "Of an Evan- "gelical Union between the Reformed and the Lu- "therans," in 4to. Thoſe of the ſecond claſs are as follow. Socinianiſmi confutati Tomi tres, i. e. "A "Refutation of Socinianiſm," in three volumes in 4to. Pro convincendis & convertendis Judæis Lib. VIII (7). i. e. "Of convincing and converting the Jews, in "eight books," in 4to. De Converſione Gentilium, Libri duo, i. e. "Of the Converſion of the Heathens, "in two books," in 4to. Examen Bullæ Urbani VIII de Jeſuitiſſis, Imaginibus & Feſtis, i. e. "An Exa- "mination of Pope Urban VIII's Bull concerning Je- "ſuitiſſes, Images and Holy-days," in 4to. Examen Bullæ Innocentii X de Pace Germaniæ, i. e. "An Exa- "mination learning. He underſtood many languages [E], and had a ſhare in the friendſhip of the moſt excellent Divines of his time (c). He never departed one inch from the moſt ſtrict orthodoxy; and he was not leſs commendable for thoſe qualities of the heart which make up the character of an honeſt man, than for his wit and his learning. You may ſee a particular account of all this in his life (d). He left children worthy of him [F], which is paſſing a great encomium upon them.

(7) This is certainly the book which Mr. Baillet, tom. 2. of the Anti, pag. 38. calls Diſp. Anti-Judaïques. But it is certain, that it is not thus intitled. Some author, who for ſhortneſs ſake, quoted it thus, may have miſled Mr. Baillet.

(c) See a liſt of them in his Life.

(d) It is prefixed to his treatiſe, De Converſione Indorum, & Gentilium, and has been written by David Stuart. I have extracted this article from it.

" mination of Pope Innocent X's Bull concerning the " Peace of Germany." Epiſtola ad Duræum de Independentiſmo, i. e. " Letters to John Dury concerning " the Opinions of the Independents," in 8vo. Commentarius de Paradoxis Weigelianis, i. e. " Remarks " upon Weigel's Paradoxes," in 12mo. Apologia pro Eccleſia Chriſtiana hodierna, contra Libellum, ad Legem & Teſtimonium, &c. i. e. " A Vindication of the preſent Chriſtian Church, againſt the Book intitled, " To the Law and to the Teſtimony, &c." in 8vo. De obſervando à Chriſtianis Præcepto Decalogi quarto, i. e. " Of the Obligation under which the Chriſtians are to " keep the fourth Commandment," in 12mo. De Epiſcopatu, i. e. " Of Epiſcopacy." The books of the third claſs are, Theologiæ practicæ Tomi duo, i. e. " Two Volumes of Practical Divinity," in 4to. De Peſte, i. e. " Of the Plague," in 12mo. Thoſe of the fourth are, Summa Controverſiarum, i. e. " A Sum " of Controverſies," in 8vo. Miſcella vetera & nova, i. e. " Ancient and Modern Miſcellanies." I refer to the fifth claſs the Orationes variæ Inaugurales, Valedictoriæ, Rectorales, & Funebres. i. e. " Various " orations delivered upon his inſtallation, when he " took his leave, when he reſigned the Rectorſhip, " and funeral orations." I do not give the titles of his Dutch works, which conſiſt of ſeveral treatiſes.

[E] He underſtood many languages.] The Author of his Life has the following expreſſions: Linguas ſi ſpectes, novit plurimas doctarum & vulgarium, Latinam, Græcam, Hebraicam, Chaldaicam, Syriacam, Rabinicam, Belgicam, Germanicam, Anglicam, Gallicam, Italicam, Arabicæ & Hiſpanicæ Rudimenta attigit (8). i. e. " As for the languages, he underſtood a great " many, both of the learned and vulgar tongues, as " the Latin, Greek, Hebrew, Chaldaic, Syriac, Ra- " binical, Dutch, German, Engliſh, French, and " Italian tongues; he underſtood alſo the principles of " the Arabic and Spaniſh languages."

[F] He left children worthy of him.] He married at Utrecht in the year 1650 Ann Bernard. By this marriage he became related to ſeveral illuſtrious men, as, for inſtance, to Conſtantine l'Empereur (9), Divinity Profeſſor (10), and to Jodocus Hondius (11) a very famous Geographer, grand-father to Henry Hondius, who was killed when he was fighting very bravely for the ſervice of his own country in Admiral Tromp's ſhip, which he commanded. Our John Hoornbeeck left two ſons. ISAAC HOORNBEECK, formerly a famous Counſellor at the Hague, and at preſent Penſionary to the city of Rotterdam (*); and HENRY EMILIUS HOORNBEECK, one of the Commiſſioners for receiving the Taxes in the province of Holland.

(8) In Vitâ Hoornbeeckii.

(9) Ann Bernard's grandmother by her father's ſide was called Joan l'Empereur, and was aunt to Conſtantine l'Empereur, and to John l'Empereur Miniſter at the Hague.

(10) Firſt at Harderwyk, and then at Leyden.

(11) He was Ann Bernard's grandfather by her mother's ſide.

(*) In 1720 he was made Counſellor-Penſionary, Keeper of the Seals, and Stadtholder of the Fiefs belonging to Holland and Weſt-Frieſland, &c. He died at the Hague June 17, 1727, in the 71ſt year of his age. Addit. to the Amſt. edition.

HORATIUS (PUBLIUS) ſurnamed Cocles, did a very noble action, whilſt the city of Rome his native place was beſieged by King Porſenna. As his article is very good and pretty full in Moreri's Dictionary (a), I ſhall give but a very ſhort article of him, and I ſhall dwell only upon the difference there is in the ſeveral accounts of the ancient Hiſtorians with regard to a particular circumſtance, which ought to have been related without any variety [A].

(a) Of the Paris edition.

HORNECK

[A] I ſhall only dwell upon the difference there is . . . with regard to a particular circumſtance, which ought to have been related without any variety.] There are ſome Hiſtorians, who aſſert, that Horatius, having caſt himſelf into the Tiber, after he had oppoſed the enemies, till the bridge was broken down behind him, ſwam to the oppoſite ſhore, notwithſtanding the weight of his arms, without receiving the leaſt wound. But others relate, that he received ſuch a blow on his thigh, that he continued lame ever after. Livy ſuppoſes evidently that he was not wounded. Cunctati aliquandiu ſunt (Hetruſci) dum alius alium, ut prælium incipiant, circumſpectant. Pudor deinde commovit aciem, & clamore ſublato undique in unum hoſtem tela conjiciunt, quæ cum in objecto CUNCTA ſcuto hæſiſſent, neque ille minus obſtinatus ingenti pontem obtineret gradu, jam impetu detrudere conabantur virum, cum ſimul fragor rupti ponderis, ſimul clamor Romanorum alacritate perfecti operis ſublatus pavore ſubito impetum ſuſtinuit. Tum Cocles, Tiberine pater, inquit, te ſancte precor, hæc arma & hunc militem propitio flumine accipias. Ita ſic armatus in Tyberim deſiluit: multiſque SUPERINCIDENTIBUS TELIS INCOLUMIS ad ſuos tranavit, rem auſus plus famæ habituram ad poſteros quam fidei (1). i. e. " The Hetruſci ſtood ſtill for a while, conſidering who ſhould firſt begin the battle. But ſhame put at laſt the army in motion; and with a great outcry they all ſhot their arrows againſt one ſingle enemy, which he received on his SHIELD, continuing unmoved to defend the bridge with the utmoſt courage; upon which they endeavoured to ruſh upon him all together, with a deſign to fling him down; but the cracking of the bridge, which that moment was broken down, together with the ſhoutings of the Romans, when they perceived the work compleated, ſtruck the enemy with terror, and ſtopped the enemy's fury. Whereupon Cocles addreſſing himſelf to the God of the Tiber, prayed him thus; O Tiberine father, let thy propitious ſtreams kindly receive theſe weapons and this ſoldier; " having ſaid this, he flung himſelf thus armed into " the river, and notwithſtanding the arrows which " on all ſides were ſhot at him, he ſwam aſhore " without being wounded; thus he dared to attempt " an action, which will gain more reputation than " credit with poſterity." We may be certain that all they, who do not expreſly aſſert that he was wounded, ſuppoſe the ſame thing with Livy; for their deſign was to raiſe our admiration for this Roman's great courage. Now this action is more wonderful ſtill, and more glorious if he had been wounded, than if he had not. Whence it follows, that ſince neither Florus (2) nor (3) Seneca mention any wound, it is a proof that they were perſuaded he received none. Valerius Maximus aſſerts ſo poſitively that Cocles was not wounded, that we ought to believe the negative was grounded on ſome tradition. Ut patriam periculo imminenti liberatam vidit, armatus ſe in Tiberim miſit: cujus fortitudinem Dii immortales admirati, INCOLUMITATEM SINCERAM ei præſtiterunt. Nam neque altitudine dejectus, quaſſatuſve, neque pondere armorum preſſus, nec ullo vorticis circuitu actus: nec telis quidem, quæ undique congerebantur, LÆSUS, TUTUM natandi eventum habuit (4). i. e. " As ſoon as he ſaw that " his country was free from the imminent danger to " which it had been expoſed, he flung himſelf, armed " as he was, into the Tiber. The immortal Gods " admiring his courage, preſerved him entirely from " all wounds; for he was neither hurt nor bruiſed, " though he fell from a very great height. Nor was " he oppreſſed by the weight of his arms, nor whirl- " ed about by the ſwiftneſs of the ſtream, nor even " WOUNDED by the arrows which on every ſide were " ſhot at him: thus he ſwam ſafe to ſhore." But there are three famous Hiſtorians, who followed another tradition. Dionyſius of Halicarnaſſus gives a very particular account of that battle, and he aſſerts expreſly, that Horatius was wounded through the thigh with a ſpear, and that this wound pained him ſo much, that he could hardly ſtand upon his legs, when he heard

(1) Titus Livius, lib. 2. Decad. 1. cap. 10.

(2) Florus, lib. 1. (and not, as Moreri has it, lib. 5; this author's work contains but 4 chapters) cap. 10.

(3) Seneca, Ep. 120. p. m. 464.

(4) Val. Max. lib. 3. cap. 2. num. 1. pag. m. 241, 242.

☞ HORNECK (Dr. ANTHONY), a learned and pious Divine of the ſeventeenth Century, was born at Baccharach in the Lower Palatinate in 1641. His father was Recorder or Secretary of that place. Our author was ſent to Heidelberg, where he applied himſelf to the ſtudy of Divinity under Dr. Spanheim, afterwards Profeſſor at Leyden. At nineteen years of age he came over to England, and was entered into Queen's College in Oxford December the 24th 1663; and by the intereſt of Dr. Barlow, Provoſt of that College, he was made Chaplain of it ſoon after his entrance (a). December the 21ſt 1663 (b) he was incorporated Maſter of Arts from the Univerſity of Wittemberg. Soon after this he became Vicar of Allhallows in Oxford, where he continued two years. In 1665 he removed into the family of the Duke of Albemarle, and was Tutor to his Grace's ſon, then Lord Torrington. The Duke preſented him to the Rectory of Doulton in Devonſhire, and procured for him a Prebend in Exeter. In 1669, before he married, he went over into Germany to ſee his friends; and after his return was choſen Preacher of the Savoy [A], where he continued about twenty ſix years till he died (c). In 1693 he was collated to a Prebend in Weſtminſter; and the year following reſigned his Prebend of Exeter; and on the 28th of September the ſame year he was admitted to a Prebend in the Cathedral of Wells (d). He was likewiſe Chaplain to King William and Queen Mary. He publiſhed ſeveral works [B]. He died January the

(a) Life of Anthony Horneck, D. D. By Richard [Kidder] Lord Biſhop of Bath and Wells, pag. 3, 4. edit. London 1698.

(b) Wood, Faſti Oxon. vol. 2. col. 154. ſays it was March the 15th.

(c) Life of Dr. Horneck, pag. 4, 5, 6.

(d) Ibid. pag. 21, 22, 23.

(5) Dionyſ. Halicarn. lib. 5. cap. 23, 24.

heard the bridge was broken down (5). This Hiſtorian adds, 1, that it was thought he would ſoon die of his wounds; 2, that as ſoon as it was known he would recover, they beſtowed noble rewards upon him, but that he could never obtain the Conſulſhip, nor any military employment, becauſe he had continued lame ever ſince that battle. Plutarch relates that they raiſed a brazen monument to him in the temple of Vulcan, to comfort him under his misfortune of being lamed by that wound (6). Plutarch had obſerved a little before, that Horatius ſwam to the city, being wounded in his thigh, Δόρατι Ἑτρουσκικῷ βεβλημένον τὸν γλουτόν (7). i. e. "Wounded in his thigh by an Hetruſcan dart." Dion Caſſius aſſerts, that Tully, in an oration delivered before the Senate againſt Mark Anthony, ſwore by Horatius's thigh, and Mucius's hand (8). I know that this direct oration, which Dion gives us, is not like any of Tully's Philippic Orations (9); but Dion who compoſed it, would not have made uſe of ſuch an oath, if there had not been a tradition, that Horatius had been wounded in his thigh, whilſt he defended his country againſt Tarquin's friends. Let us mention a fourth witneſs, and quote Servius's words. Solus Cocles hoſtilem impetum ſuſtinuit, donec à tergo pons ſolveretur à ſociis, quo ſoluto ſe cum armis præcipitavit in Tyberim, & licet LÆSUS eſſet in coxa, tamen ejus fluenta ſuperavit. Unde eſt illud ab eo dictum, cum ei in comitiis coxæ vitium objiceretur, per ſingulos gradus admoneor triumphi mei (10). i. e. "Cocles alone reſiſted the ene-" my's attack, till the bridge was broken down behind " him, and then he flung himſelf headlong into the " Tiber with his arms on, and though he was wound-" ed in his hip, yet he ſwam to ſhore. This occa-" ſioned a witty ſaying of his, for as they objected " his lameneſs to him in an aſſembly of the people, " he anſwered, every ſtep I make calls my triumph to " my mind." You ſee that the tradition of Horatius's wound was ſupported by this circumſtance of a witty ſaying of his, when they objected his lameneſs to him. It is pretended that Alexander made uſe of this thought, in order to comfort the King his father, who grieved at his being lame through a wound he had received in a battle (11).

If we have reaſon to wonder, that with regard to Horatius's ſtory, two inconſiſtent traditions, namely, that he had been, and had not been wounded, ſhould have been followed even by the moſt celebrated writers, what ſhall we ſay of Polybius (12), who ſuppoſes, that this brave and intrepid Roman loſt his life in the Tiber? Shall we ſay, that this alſo was grounded upon a tradition? and ſhall we infer from thence, that ancient hiſtory is ſo dark and uncertain, that for the moſt part we do not know which ſide of a queſtion to chuſe between thoſe that aſſert, and thoſe that deny the ſame facts; and that both the affirmative and the negative appearing to be equally ſupported by credible authority, even with regard to ſuch particulars, the truth or falſhood of which could be moſt eaſily determined, we can have no certainty with regard to the leſs remarkable events recorded in hiſtory? Shall we, I ſay, draw ſuch inferences? I would rather adviſe the reader to make uſe of theſe obſervations in order to ſtrengthen his mind againſt the cuſtom, which prevails, of reading without attention, and believing without examining. Obſerve that the different opinions there are concerning Horatius's face, are not ſo ſurprizing, but yet it is a proof of the uncertainty of Hiſtory. Some aſſert that Horatius was perfectly beautiful (13); others ſay that he was ſurnamed Cocles, ... becauſe his noſe was extremely flat, and ſo deeply ſunk in his head, that there was nothing between his eyes, and that his eye-brows joined: ſo that the people intending to call him cyclops, miſtook the name, and called him Cocles (14).

(6) Plutarch. in Valerio, pag. 106.

(7) Idem, ibid. pag. 105.

(8) Οὐ μὰ τὸ σκῆλον τὸ Ὁρατίου καὶ τὴν χεῖρα τὴν Μουκίου. Non per crus Horatii, & manum Mutii, Dio, lib 45. pag. m. 325.

(9) See above the remark [F] of the article FULVIA, in the 2d a-linea.

(10) Servius, in Æneid. lib. 8. ver. 646.

(11) Plutarch. de Fortuna Alexand. Orat. 2. pag. 331, B.

(12) Polyb. lib. 6. cap. 53.

(13) Dion. Hal. cap. 22.

(14) Plutarch. in Valerio, pag. 105.

[A] After his return was choſen Preacher of the Savoy.] The maintenance of this place is ſmall, and precarious; and whatever it was to him at his firſt taking it, when there were perſons of conſiderable quality inhabiting there, who were very kind to him, yet afterwards when his family increaſed, and his neceſſities were greater, it could not be called a complete maintenance. But whatever it was firſt or laſt, he could not be perſuaded to keep his living in Devonſhire; nor could he ever be prevailed with afterwards, whatever offers were made him, to accept of any living to hold in conjunction with it. He was irreconcileable to pluralities and to non-reſidence, and would upon occaſion declare his abhorrence of them with ſome conſiderable warmth (1).

(1) Life of Anthony Horneck, D. D. By Richard Lord Biſhop of Bath and Wells, pag. 6.

[B] He publiſhed ſeveral works.] I. The great Law of Conſideration: Or, a Diſcourſe, wherein the Nature, Uſefulneſs, and abſolute Neceſſity of Conſideration in order to a truly ſerious and religious Life, are laid open. London, 1676, in 8vo. It has been ſeveral times reprinted with Additions and Corrections. II. A Letter to a Lady revolted to the Romiſh Church. London, 1678, in 12mo. III. The happy Aſcetick: or the beſt Exerciſe. London, 1681, in 8vo. To this is ſubjoined A Letter to a Perſon of Quality concerning the holy Lives of the primitive Chriſtians. The third edition of The happy Aſcetick, and of this letter is corrected and enlarged, with Prayers at the end of each Exerciſe. IV. Delight and Judgment: Or a Proſpect of the great Day of Judgment, and its Power to damp and imbitter ſenſual Delights, Sports, and Recreations. London, 1683, in 12mo. V. The Fire of the Altar: or certain Directions how to raiſe the Soul into Holy Flames, before, at, and after the receiving of the bleſſed Sacrament of the Lord's Supper; with ſuitable Prayers and Devotions. London, 1683, in 12mo. To this is prefixed A Dialogue between a Chriſtian and his own Conſcience, touching the true Nature of the Chriſtian Religion. VI. The Exerciſe of Prayer: or a Help to Devotion; being a Supplement to the Happy Aſcetick, or Beſt Exerciſe, containing Prayers and Devotions ſuitable to the reſpective Exerciſes, with additional Prayers for ſeveral Occaſions. London, 1685, in 8vo. VII. The firſt Fruits of Reaſon: or, a Diſcourſe ſhewing the Neceſſity of applying ourſelves betimes to the ſerious Practice of Religion. London, 1685, in 8vo. VIII. The Crucified Jeſus: or a full Account of the Nature, End, Deſign, and Benefit of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, with neceſſary Directions, Prayers, Praiſes, the 31ſt 1696, and was interred in Weſtminſter-Abbey, where a monument was erected by his friends to his memory. He was a man of exemplary character, and great learning. He had applied himſelf to the Arabic from his younger years, and retained it in a good meaſure to the laſt. He had very good ſkill in Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, in Controverſial Divinity, and Caſuiſtry (e).

(e) Ibid. pag. 40, 41.

Praiſes, and Meditations, to be uſed by Perſons, who come to the holy Communion. London, 1686, in 8vo. IX. Queſtions and Anſwers concerning the two Religions; viz. that of the Church of England, and of the Church of Rome. X. An Anſwer to the Soldier's Queſtion, What ſhall we do? XI. Several ſingle Sermons. XII. Fifteen Sermons upon the fifth Chapter of St. Matthew. London, 1698, in 8vo. XIII. He tranſlated out of High Dutch into Engliſh A wonderful Story or Narration of certain Swediſh Writers, printed in Mr. Joſeph Glanvil's Sadduciſmus Triumphatus; in the ſecond edition of which book is a Preface to The wonderful Story of the Swediſh Witches more correct and full; where alſo is an addition of a new relation from Sweden tranſlated by Dr. Horneck out of High Dutch. XIV. He tranſlated likewiſe from French into Engliſh, An Antidote againſt a careleſs Indifferency in Matters of Religion; being a Treatiſe in oppoſition to thoſe, that believe that all Religions are indifferent, and that it imports not what men profeſs. Wherein the vulgar Objections of Atheiſts, Sceptics, Libertines, Latitudinarians, &c. are ſuccinctly anſwered. London, 1693, in 8vo. with an Introduction, by Dr. Horneck. He collected and publiſhed likewiſe, Some Diſcourſes, Sermons, and Remains of Mr. Joſeph Glanvil, London, 1681, in 4to, to which he added a ſhort Preface, as alſo another larger before a book intitled, The true Intereſt of Families: or Directions how Parents may be happy in their Children, and Children in their Parents, &c. London, 1690, in 12mo, written by James Kirkwood, Rector of Aſtwick in Bedfordſhire. XVI. He wrote in conjunction with Dr. Gilbert Burnet, The laſt Confeſſion, Prayers, and Meditations of Lieutenant John Stern, delivered by him on the Cart immediately before his Execution, to Dr. Burnet. Together with the laſt Confeſſion of George Boroſky, ſigned by him in the Priſon, and ſealed up in the Lieutenant's Packet. With which an Account is given of their Deportment, both in the Priſon, and at the place of their Execution, which was in the Pall-Mall, on the 10*th of* March, in the ſame place, in which they had murthered Thomas Thynn, Eſq; on the 12*th of* February before, in the year 1681. London, 1682, in Folio. H.

☞HORROX (JEREMIAH), an eminent Engliſh Aſtronomer in the ſeventeenth Century, was born at Texteth near Liverpoole in Lancaſhire about the year 1619 [A]. From a ſchool in the country, where he had made himſelf maſter of Grammar Learning, he was ſent to Emanuel College in Cambridge, and ſpent ſome time there in academical ſtudies. About the year 1633 he began to apply himſelf to the ſtudy of Aſtronomy; but living at that time with his father at Toxteth, in very moderate circumſtances, and being deſtitute of proper books and other aſſiſtances for the proſecution of this ſtudy, he could not make any very conſiderable progreſs in it. He ſpent ſome of his firſt years to no purpoſe in the writings of Lanſbergius, neglecting the works of Tycho, Kepler, and other excellent writers. But in 1636 he contracted an acquaintance and friendſhip with Mr. William Crabtree, who was engaged in the ſame ſtudies, and who lived at Broughton near Mancheſter; and they carried on a correſpondence by letters with each other, and ſometimes wrote to Mr. Samuel Foſter, Profeſſor of Geometry at Greſham College in London. Mr. Horrox having now obtained a companion in his ſtudies, aſſumed new vigour, and procuring Aſtronomical inſtruments and books, applied himſelf to the making of obſervations; and by Mr. Crabtree's advice laid aſide Lanſbergius, whoſe tables he found to be very erroneous, and his hypotheſes inconſiſtent. He was purſuing his ſtudies with great vigour and ſucceſs, when he was cut off by ſudden death January the 3d $164\frac{0}{1}$, in the twenty ſecond or in the entrance of the twenty third year of his age (a). What we have extant of his writings ſhew how great a loſs the world had of him [B].

(a) Dr. John Wallis's Epiſtola Nuncupatoria, prefixed to Horrox's Opera poſthuma, edit. London 1673 in 4to.

HORSTIUS

[A] Born . . . about the year 1619.] Dr. Wallis tells us (1), that at his death on January the 3d $164\frac{0}{1}$ he was but in the twenty ſecond or in the beginning of the twenty third year of his age.

(1) Epiſtola Nuncupatoria, prefixed to our author's Opera poſthuma.

[B] What we have exant of his writings ſhew how great a loſs the world had of him.] He had juſt finiſhed his Venus in Sole viſa a little before his death; for it appears from a letter of his to Mr. Crabtree dated October the 3d 1640, that this book was not then finiſhed, and he intimates that he was reſolved to put the laſt hand to it before he took his journey to ſee him. And in another letter to Mr. Crabtree dated December the 19th following, he fixes upon the 4th of January to ſet out upon this journey; but died the day before, as appears from what Mr. Crabtree wrote on the backſide of Mr. Horrox's laſt letter. Our author made his obſervations of Venus in Sole at Hool near Liverpool, as is evident from his letters, which from June 1639 to July 1640 are dated at Hool, though the preceding and ſubſequent letters are dated at Toxteth; but this circumſtance is omitted in Hevelius's edition of that book, who publiſhed it at Dantzick 1662 in fol. with ſome works of his own under the following title: Johannis Hevelii Mercurius in Sole viſus Gedani Anno Chriſtiano MDCLXI. d. III. Mait St. N. cum aliis quibuſdam rerum Cæleſtium obſervationibus rariſque Phænomenis. Cui annexa eſt Venus in Sole pariter viſa anno 1639 d. 24 Novemb. St. V. Liverpoliæ a Jeremia Horroxio, nunc primum edita notiſque illuſtrata &c. Beſides this work he had begun another, in which he propoſed theſe two things; firſt, to refute Lansbergius's Hypotheſes, and to ſhew how inconſiſtent they were with each other and the Heavens; and ſecondly to draw up a new ſyſtem of Aſtronomy agreeable to the Heavens from his own obſervations and thoſe of others, retaining for the moſt part the Keplerian Hypotheſes, but changing the numbers, as the obſervations required. He ſeems to have finiſhed the firſt part, as far as was neceſſary, except reducing his papers into order. But the ſecond part is wanting; though it appears from his letters to have been almoſt finiſhed; for he had proceeded ſo far in the correction of all the Tables, as to begin Ephemerides for ſeveral years to come. His papers came into the hands of Dr. John Worthington, Maſter of Jeſus College in Cambridge, who was contemporary with Mr. Horrox at Emanuel College, and found them, together with his Venus in Sole viſa, among Mr. Crabtree's papers. Dr. Wallis publiſhed them with ſome other pieces at London 1673 in 4to under the following title: Jeremiæ Horroceii Liverpolienſis Angli, ex Palatinatu Lancaſtriæ, Opera Poſthuma; viz. Aſtronomia Kepleriana defenſa & promota. Excerpta ex Epiſtolis ad Crabtræum ſuum. Obſervationum Cæleſtium Catalogus. Lunæ Theoria nova. Accedunt Gulielmi Crabtræi, Mancheſtrienſis, Obſervationes Cæleſtes. In calce adjiciuntur Johannis Flamſtedii, Derbienſis, de Temporis Æquatione

HORSTIUS (JAMES) Profeſſor of Phyſic in the Univerſity of Helmſtadt, was born at Torgaw May the 1ſt 1537 (a). He took his degree of Maſter of Arts in the Univerſity of Frankfort on the Oder, in the year 1556 (b), and of Doctor of Phyſic in the year 1562 (c). They offered him in ſeveral places the office of public Phyſician, and he exerciſed it ſucceſſively at Sagan and at Suidnitz in Sileſia, and at Iglaw in Moravia, till the year 1580, when he was made Phyſician in ordinary to the Archduke of Auſtria (d). He continued in that poſt during four years, after which he was promoted to the Chair of Phyſic Profeſſor in the Univerſity of Helmſtadt. The oration he delivered at his inſtallation is very good, it is intitled, De remoris diſcentium Medicinam & earum remediis (e). i. e. "Of the Difficulties which attend the ſtudy of Phyſic, and of "the means to remove them." He acquitted himſelf worthily of his functions, and publiſhed ſome books [A], which kept up the reputation he had already gained. I have not been able to diſcover in what year he died; I only know that he was ſtill living in the year 1595, and that he was then Decanus (or the eldeſt Profeſſor) of the Faculty of Phyſic at Helmſtadt, and Vice-Rector-Magnificus of the Univerſity. This I learn from ſome verſes that were written on his Anagram, and which are to be found at the end of a book intitled, Jacobi Horſtii Epiſtolæ Philoſophicæ & Medicinales; i. e. "James Horſtius's "Philoſophical and Phyſical Letters." It was printed at Leipſic in 8vo in the year 1596. We ought, in his commendation, to take notice of a particular, which will appear very ſurprizing, though perhaps unjuſtly; it is, that he joined devotion with the knowledge and practice of Phyſic. He carefully prayed God to bleſs his preſcriptions, and he publiſhed a form of prayers upon this ſubject [B]. He married his firſt wife in the year 1562, and loſt her in the year 1585 (f), having got ten children by her (g). He married again in the year 1587 (h). He was brother to GREGORY HORSTIUS, who died May the 10th 1592, and who had been ſeven times Burgomaſter of the City of Torgaw,

(a) Jacob. Horſtii, Epiſt. Philoſoph. & Medicinal. pag. 41.

(b) Ibid. pag. 48.

(c) Ibid. pag. 77.

(d) Ibid. pag. 199.

(e) You will find it in pag. 530, &c. of the book I have quoted.

(f) Ibid. pag. 77.

(g) Ibid. pag. 330.

(h) Ibid. pag. 363.

tione Diatriba, Numeri ad Lunæ Theoriam Horroccianam. A great many of our author's papers were carried to Ireland by his brother Jonas Horrox, who had proſecuted the ſame ſtudies, and died there, by which means they are ſuppoſed to be loſt; and others of his writings were burnt by the ſoldiers during the civil wars. Others likewiſe came into the hands of Mr. Jeremiah Shakerly, who by the aſſiſtance of them formed his Britiſh Tables, publiſhed at London in 1653; and theſe papers, after Mr. Shakerley's voyage to the Eaſt Indies, where he died, remained for ſome time in the poſſeſſion of Mr. Nathaniel Brooks, a Bookſeller at London, but were deſtroyed in the great fire at London in September 1666. T.

[A] He publiſhed ſome books.] The firſt, if I am not miſtaken, was a commentary In Librum Hippocratis de corde. i. e. "On Hippocrates's Book upon the "Heart," which was printed in the year 1563 (1). In the year 1576 he publiſhed a treatiſe Qualem virum Pharmacopolam eſſe conveniat. i. e. "Of the Qualities "which make up the Character of a good Apothe-"cary (2)." He had already publiſhed in the German tongue a treatiſe of the Qualities of a good Phyſician; and in the year 1580 he publiſhed a book upon the ſame ſubject in Latin, and dedicated it to the Biſhop of Olmutz (4). He publiſhed a German tranſlation of Lemnius's book De occultis Naturæ miraculis, i. e. "Of the hidden miracles of Nature," in the year 1579, and added a great many obſervations to it (5). In 1580 was printed his book De morbo epidemico febri Catharrali per totam Europam graſſante (6). i. e. "Of the epidemical Catharrick fever, which "raged through all Europe." And in the year 1583 he printed a treatiſe of the Plague in the German tongue, and in 1587 a book De Vite vinifera (8), i. e. "Of "the Wine-bearing Vine," and in 1593 a book De Noctambulis, i. e. "Of Perſons who walk in their "Sleep (9)." In 1595 was publiſhed his diſſertation upon the golden tooth of a child in Sileſia (10). You will find in Lindenius renovatus (11), that his Diſputationes Catholicæ de rebus ſecundum & præter naturam, i. e. "Catholic Diſputations of things according to "and againſt nature," were printed at Wittemberg, in the year 1630, with Gregory Horſtius's Compendium medicarum Inſtitutionum, i. e. "An Abridgment of Phy-"ſical Inſtitutions," and that the abridgment of his Herbarium, ſive de ſelectis plantis & radicibus Libri duo; i. e. "Two Books concerning choice Plants and "Roots;" made by the ſame Gregory, was printed at Marpurg in the year 1630.

(1) Epiſt. Philoſoph. & Medicin. Jacobi Horſtii, pag. 79.

(2) Ibid. p. 153.

(3) In the year 1570, ibid. pag. 127.

(4) It is amongſt his Philoſophical and Phyſical Letters, pag. 209, & ſeq.

(5) Ibid. pag. 189.

(6) Ibid. pag. 203.

(7) Ibid. pag. 257.

(8) Ibid. pag. 354.

(9) Ibid. pag. 435.

(10) Ibid. pag. 373.

(11) In pag. 485. of the edition publiſhed in the year 1686.

Let us obſerve that he ſuffered himſelf to be groſly impoſed upon with regard to that pretended golden tooth. It was only an impoſture, and if you have a mind to know how the cheat was found out, you may conſult Van Dale in the laſt chapter of his firſt book De Oraculis (12). He obſerves, that our James Horſtius took this golden tooth for a great prodigy, which ought to be a comfort to thoſe Chriſtians, who were oppreſſed by the Turks; that is to ſay, that it was a good omen of the downfall of the Ottoman Empire. I have ſeen a letter which this Phyſician wrote to David Chytræus February the 7th 1595, in which he ſpeaks of the preſages of meteors. He aſſerts that the comet which was ſeen in the year 1556, and which appeared at Conſtantinople, when it was no longer viſible in Germany, might very well produce its dangerous effects in the year 1596, and that the new ſtar in the conſtellation of Caſſiopea would not then be idle (13), and that the golden tooth would alſo be ſure to act its part. Dens aureus, dens pueri &c. (14). He does not conclude without cenſuring the ſecurity of mankind, nor without earneſt wiſhes.

(12) Pag. 423, edit. 1700.

(13) Stella prope Caſſiopeam nec tunc feriabitur. Jac. Horſtius, Epiſt. Philoſoph. & Medic. pag. 521.

(14) Idem, ibid.

[B] He prayed God to bleſs his preſcriptions, and he publiſhed a form of prayers upon this ſubject.] Thus it was that he ſignalized himſelf at his firſt entering upon his poſt of Profeſſor of Phyſic in the Univerſity of Helmſtad. This book was the preſent the Univerſity received from him. Helmſtadium ubi veniſſet, Librum dictum, &c. (15). It muſt be obſerved in honour to the Phyſicians, that ſeveral of them gave him thanks for publiſhing thoſe prayers, and confeſſed that their art ſtood very much in need of God's aſſiſtance (16). See what a Phyſician of the city of Ratiſbon wrote to him. Mittis ad me libellum medicorum, &c. (17).

(15) Ibid. pag. 282.

(16) Vide Jac. Horſtii, Epiſt. Philoſoph. & Medic. pag. 283, & ſeq.

Amongſt the letters that were written to him upon this ſubject, there is one in which he is told, that very few Phyſicians in Bohemia followed the advice he gave, to call upon the name of God, but that a great many old women made uſe of charms and enchantments. Cum paucis optime Horſti, habes, &c. (18). Matthew Dreſſerus, Profeſſor of Eloquence at Leipſic, did very much commend him for his piety and prayers, and told him, that he had known a Phyſician, who never undertook any cure, nor preſcribed any thing without ſaying the Lord's prayer. De precum medicarum formulis &c. (19).

(17) Vide eund. ibid. pag. 284.

(18) Ibid. pag. 290.

(19) Ibid. pag. 293.

Compare this work with the remark [C] of the article KIRSTENIUS, and read (20) the pious letter which James Horſtius wrote to a Miniſter at Berlin. He ſeems to be determined to compoſe a treatiſe of Chriſtian Phyſic (21). I muſt add, that the bill or advertiſement.

(20) Ibid. pag. 294 & ſeq.

(21) Binis literis tuis, quibus me &c.

Torgaw, and was a man of great merit, as we learn from his Elogy, written by Reineccius (i). The book which I have quoted, contains a particular, which deſerves, I think, to be related [C].

(i) It is prefixed to the book intitled, Jacobi Horſtii Epiſtolæ Philoſophicæ & Medicinales.

vertiſement, in which he exhorted the ſtudents duly to celebrate St. Michael's Day in the Angel's honour (22), is a very devout piece.

(22) Ibid. pag. 493, & ſeq.

To conclude, I do not believe there ever was a Book of Devotion but what ſold better than theſe Prayers, which Horſtius wrote for the Phyſician's uſe.

[C] His letters contain a particular which deſerves to be related.] Jerom Nymnam, a Miniſter, and Horſtius's brother-in-law (13), wrote him a letter dated from Torgaw March the 10th 1556, in which he deſired him (24) to let him know whether a certain ſtory, which Sabinus had lately told at Wittemberg, were true or not. The ſtory was, that a certain Gentleman of the Marquiſate of Brandenburg, near Standel, having repulſed a poor woman who deſired him, for God's ſake, to abate ſomething of the price of the corn ſhe intended to buy of him, the piece of money ſhe gave him for it was changed into a ſnake, by an unknown perſon, whom that Gentleman met with in his way, and that the ſnake had twiſted itſelf round the Gentleman's neck, and would not leave it. Horſtius, who was then at Francfort upon the Oder, anſwered (25) his brother-in-law, that he knew nothing of this ſtory, and that if he heard any thing of it, he would write it to him. We have here an inſtance of the uncertainty of common reports. Prodigies often make much more noiſe in diſtant countries, than in that where it is pretended they happened. This is a mark of falſity; for true facts are known with more certainty in the places where they happen, than any where elſe. They, who deſign to tell falſe ſtories, muſt take care not to tell them too near the place where they ſuppoſe the ſtories happened; they do not always take ſuch a precaution, and yet they find credit, but then they run a greater riſk of being found out.

(23) Ibid. pag. 11.

(24) Ibid. pag. 53.

(25) Ibid. pag. 54.

HORSTIUS (GREGORY) nephew (a) of the preceding, gained ſuch a reputation in the practice of Phyſic, that he was uſually called the Æſculapius of Germany (b). He was born at Torgaw in the year 1571, and was admitted Maſter of Arts at Wittemberg in the year 1601 (c), and commenced Doctor of Phyſic at Baſil in the year 1606. He was that ſame year made Profeſſor of Phyſic in the Univerſity of Wittemberg; he left that City at a year's end, and went to Soltwedel in the Electorate of Brandenburg, to be the City-Phyſician there. He did not continue long in that City, for he accepted the Phyſic-Profeſſor's Chair, which the Landgrave of Heſſe offered him in the Univerſity of Gieſſen, in the year 1608, and the next year he was made firſt Phyſician to that Prince. Being tired at laſt with leading a ſingle life (d) he married in the year 1615. The great reputation he had gained made the Magiſtrates of Ulm offer him the poſt of firſt Phyſician to that City, which he accepted, and he performed the functions of it with great applauſe from the year 1622 till the year 1636, in which he died. He left four ſons [A] and two daughters by his firſt wife. He loſt her in November 1634; and finding too much trouble in the care of a family, he married again in June 1635. He met with very great comfort in this ſecond match [B]; but the gout, which he had more

(a) He was the ſon of George Horſtius, one of the Magiſtrates of the City of Torgaw.

(b) Konig. Bibliotb. pag. 413.

(c) Lindenius renovat. pag. 359.

(d) Solitariæ vitæ pertæſo ſibi privato quoque invigilare curatio fuit. i. e. "Being tired "with leading a ſingle life, he "imagined he "might alſo "take care of "his own particular affairs." Joh. Daniel Dietericus, in Oratione funebri Gr. Horſtii, apud Witte, Memor. Medicor. pag. 67, & ſeq.

[A] He left four ſons by his firſt wife.] Three of them were Phyſicians, and the other an Apothecary (1). JOHN DANIEL HORSTIUS, the eldeſt of them all, was born at Gieſſen, and was Profeſſor of Phyſic in the Univerſity of Marpurg, and afterwards in that of his native place, and Phyſician to the Landgrave of Heſſe Darmſtad, and laſtly to the city of Francfort. He was admitted under the name of Phœnix, a Fellow of the Society of Inquirers into Nature. He publiſhed a great many books, and died January the 27th, 1685, at the age of threeſcore and eight years (2). Here follow the titles of ſome of his works. Phyſica Hippocratea, Takenii, Helmontii, Carteſii, Eſpagnet, Boylei, aliorumque recentiorum Commentis illuſtrata. i. e. "The "Natural Philoſophy of Hippocrates, illuſtrated with a "Commentary from Takenius, Van Helmont, Des "Cartes, Eſpagnetus, Boyle, and other moderns." At Francfort 1682, 8°. Decas Obſervationum & Epiſtolarum Anatomicarum, quibus ſingularia ſcitu digna, lacteorum nempe thoracicarum, & vaſorum lymphaticorum natura, embryoniſque per os nutritio, atque alia rariora exponuntur. i. e. "A Decad (or ten books) of Anato-"mical Obſervations and Letters, in which ſome par-"ticulars worthy to be known are explained; namely, "the nature of Lacteal veins in the Thorax, and of "the lymphatic veſſels; and the manner how the "fœtus takes its nouriſhment by its mouth in the "womb, with other more curious particulars." At Francfort 1656, in 4to. Pharmacopœa Galeno-Chemica Catholica. i. e. "An Univerſal Pharmacopy or "Diſpenſary, Galeno-Chemical." At Francfort 1651, in folio. He gave a new edition with corrections and additions, of Pauli Zachiæ Queſtiones Medico Legales. i. e. "Paul Zachias's medical queſtions with regard to "the Law." At Francfort 1666, in folio; and of Lazari Riverii Opera Medica Univerſa; i. e. "All "Lazarus Riverius's Phyſical Works;" at Francfort, 1674, in folio (3). GREGORY HORSTIUS, the youngeſt of his brothers, was born at Ulm, September the 20th 1626. He commenced Doctor of Phyſic at Padua, Fortunius Licetus preſiding at his Diſputation, May the 11th, 1650. He was admitted a Fellow of the College of Phyſicians at Ulm, and declared public Profeſſor of Phyſic in the year 1653. He died May the 31ſt, 1661, and left ſome children behind him (4). He is the author of a treatiſe De Mania, i. e. "Of "Madneſs," and he promiſed Hiſtoriam Zibethi (5). i. e. "The Hiſtory of Civet."

(1) Paulus Freher. in Theatro, pag. 1366.

(2) Witte, in Diario Biographico, ad ann. 1615.

(3) Taken from Lindenius renovatus, pag. 564, 565.

(4) Paulus Freherus in Theatro, pag. 1389.

(5) Witte, in Diario Biograph. ad ann. 1661.

[B] Finding too much trouble in the care of a family, he married again. ... He met with very great comfort in this ſecond match.] He had lived leſs comfortably with his firſt wife, if we may credit the author of his funeral oration. Huic optimæ conſorti ſuæ, dum fata Deuſque ſinebant, ex veteri formula feliciſſimè convixit, & optimè cohabitavit. Quid autem hic Archiater noſter glorioſus, conceſſit ne illorum in numerum, qui blanda venere detenti, omnem Muſis remittunt nuntium? Nullatenus, ſed potius domeſticis, privatiſque omnibus ſcitè adornatis, famæ ſuæ gloriam & calamo, & ore, & praxi expandere, & diffundere ſategit (6). We ſee in the latter part of this paſſage, that Horſtius did not follow the example of a great many other men, who indulge themſelves ſo much in the pleaſures of the nuptial bed, that they bid the Muſes farewell for ever. Horſtius took care to ſpread his reputation more and more, by his writings, by his diſcourſes, and by his practice. As to his happineſs with his ſecond wife, here follows what the ſame author tells us of it. Is ... poſteaquam ſecunda, quæ vocant, expleſſet vota, ... jamque conjugalem lineam ex animi ſententia duceret, amantiſſimè ab amantiſſima marita habitus, domique ac foris felix, optata ἰυπραξία gauderet: ecce! malo arthritico, quod multò antè non ſemel fortiter ſuſtinendo repulerat, invaditur (7). i. e. "When he had married his ſecond wife, living "moſt lovingly with the moſt loving ſpouſe, being "happy both at home and abroad, and having a con-"ſiderable portion with her, he fell ſick of the gout, "which he had long before more than once ſuffered "with patience, and couragiouſly overcome." What I ſhall now quote relates both to his firſt and more than once vigorouſly reſiſted, coming again upon him, and being attended with ſeveral dangerous ſymptoms, carried him to the grave Auguſt the 9th 1636. He was eminently poſſeſſed of three chief qualities of a good Phyſician; namely, honeſty, learning, and ſucceſsfulneſs (e) [C], as it is related at length in his funeral Oration. He publiſhed to his ſecond marriage (8). Quando autem factum ut Anno 1634: ſuavissimam hanc ipſius tori ſociam maligna febris deæſtuaret, in hoc infelix fuit, quod ſævam illam declinare neſciens, menſe Novembri miſeram viduitatem colere fuerit coactus: qua in cum ſex Liberorum Pater & occupatiſſimo functionis muneri & moleſtiſſimæ rei familiaris curæ vix non ſuccumberet, divina adlucente gratia, ad vota ſecunda accedens, Præclariſſimi Medici Fingerlini p. m. relictæ viduæ (9), matrimonialem addixit fidem, hoc ipſo iterum titulo felicitais privatæ redonatus, quod hæc caſtiſſimis illius amoribus mira morum amabilitate reſpondebat: ita ut charitate Conjugem, ſedulitate Miniſtram præſtaret. i. e. "It happened in the year "1634 that the moſt dear partner of his bed was "taken ill of a malignant fever, which he not being "able to cure, he became a widower in November "that ſame year; and being a father of ſix children, "and having a great deal of buſineſs, he almoſt ſunk "under the care of his domeſtic affairs. So that he "determined to marry again, and took for his ſecond "wife the widow of a moſt eminent Phyſician, named "Fingerlinus; becauſe he found that her moſt agreeable behaviour anſwered the modeſt love he had for "her: ſhe was a tender ſpouſe by her affection for "him, and a ſervant by her care and diligence."

(6) Joh. Daniel Dietericus, apud Witte, Memor. Medicor. folio (e) 4.

(7) Idem, ibid. pag. 67, 68.

(e) Taken from his Funeral Oration, delivered by Joh. Daniel Dietericus, apud Witte, Memor. Medicor. pag. 67, & ſeq.

(8) Idem, ibid. pag. 5. before the end. I quote it thus, becauſe but few pages of this funeral Oration are numbered.

(9) The author had obſerved that Horſtius had married a maiden to his firſt wife, who was Hedwige Stammia. Interea, ſays he, pag. 69. & maritalem conditionem exoſculatus, HEDWIGEM STAMMIAM Virginem lectiſſimam confarreatione ſibi ſacroſancta copulat.

[C] He was eminently poſſeſſed of the three chief qualities of a good Phyſician; namely, honeſty, learning, and ſucceſsfulneſs.] I omit what relates to the two firſt of theſe qualities, and I ſhall only obſerve, that with regard to the third, his Panegyriſt aſſerts, that the good ſucceſs of our Horſtius's preſcriptions was not an effect of chance, but of the attention with which he examined the nature of the diſtempers, &c. On this occaſion that author caſts a very ſevere reflection upon thoſe Quacks, who boaſt that they have cured thouſands and thouſands, and who by their impudent bragging extort a great deal of money from unwary perſons. He applies to them what a certain Poet replied to a man who was at once a Chirurgeon and a Phyſician. I do not wonder at it, ſaid the Poet, for you kill a great many perſons both with your own hand, and with poiſon. Ea eſt Empiricorum, Thalmudicorum, & Bullatorum Medicorum indoles & natura, ut mucoſam ſuam praxin pro admiranda felicitate venditantes, ſæpiſſimè animos Magnatum & Divitum (utpote hoc cenſu facile ſe defraudari patientium) à verò Medicorum vultu & cultu abalienent, egregiam ſpem & verè prodigioſæ ſuæ curæ (quippe illa ipſa excidium denunciant) expectationem concitando: qua ſuperſtitioſa, ſplendidiſque ſtrophis ſuffulta infeliciſſima felicitate Microcoſmum argento ſimul, & ſanguine emungere ſceleratiſſimè norunt: quibus Plagiariis interim Poetæ apprimè adaptari convenit,

Es Medicus, ſimul Chirurgus,
Cur? mittis ſtygiam viros ad Orcum,
Et manu ſimul, & ſimul veneno:

Nequaquam autem hujuſmodi felicitatis exceſſum in Defuncto noſtro, velut abſoluto Practici Exemplo, quæremus: quin potius fortunam illius in Praxi integram & illibatam, cumulatiſſimo rationis & experientiæ inſtructu partam demirabimur, &c. (10).

(10) Dietericí, Orat. fun. Gr. Horſtii, apud Witte, Memor. Medicor. in the page after the leaf marked (e) 5.

I ſhall take this opportunity to obſerve, that there are ſome perſons who believe, that the ſucceſsfulneſs of a Phyſician is ſomething, which does not depend from his learning and knowledge. This is Joubert's opinion. "If a perſon recovers, ſays he (11), the Phy- "ſician is judged to be a very able man, though his "preſcriptions were nothing to the purpoſe; on the "contrary, the Phyſician is thought to be an igno- "rant man, if the patient dies, or lingers a great "while under a diſtemper, which the vulgar ima- "gines could be eaſily cured. Moderate perſons will "not think that Phyſician the more or the leſs learned "for it; if they know that he has the reputation of "learning amongſt the men of letters, but they will "ſay, that he has no ſucceſs with his patients, and "conſequently, that he is not a good Phyſician; for "they always judge from the event. It is certain "that there is good and bad luck in every thing, or, "as the Italians expreſs it la buona è la mala ſorte; "and it is a Phyſician's happineſs never to be called "to a Patient that is to die of his diſtemper; for he "gets neither fame nor friends by preſcribing for ſuch "patients; and yet he is not to be blamed; and if "he has done his duty, he ought to be as much eſteemed, "as if the patient had recovered.... It is indeed a "great advantage to be ſucceſsful in one's undertakings, "but ſuch a happineſs does not depend on learning and "ability; it is a particular favour from God, to be "called only to ſuch patients as are to recover, and "with regard to whom God bleſſes the remedies and "renders them ſucceſsful; as alſo not to be called by "them, who are to die, and with whom nothing ſuc- "ceeds well. It is therefore a very wrong way to "judge of Phyſicians by their ſucceſs, which is owing "to a particular luck and to God's bleſſing, rather "than to a man's learning (12)." A Flemiſh Phyſician, who has tranſlated Joubert's firſt book of popular errors into Latin, and added a commentary to it, was not of that opinion, and aſſerted, that the Phyſicians happineſs conſiſts only in their learning and ſkill, and that their unhappineſs is owing only to their ignorance. Huic equidem Jouberti ſententiæ non ſubſcribam; quin potius ad Cratonis &c. (13). He has alſo quoted a paſſage from Paracelſus, in which the the ſame thing is aſſerted. I believe, that he goes a little too far, and that there are Phyſicians, who ſometimes cure or kill their patients, though they cannot be juſtly commended or blamed for it. How learned and experienced ſoever they may be, they do not always know the true cauſe of a diſtemper, and they preſcribe according to the rules of their art, a remedy, which becomes pernicious, becauſe there is ſomething in the patient's conſtitution, which it is not in their power to diſcover. Such a particular diſpoſition of the body, the patient's fancy affected after a certain manner, ſome ſecret paſſions, &c. are capable to produce ſome effects, which the moſt learned and moſt experienced Phyſicians would never expect. The efficacy of thoſe unknown cauſes may be ſuch, that a remedy, preſcribed raſhly, ignorantly, fooliſhly, will cure the diſtemper, and that a remedy preſcribed according to all the rules of art, will kill the patient. There is therefore good and bad luck here, which does not depend upon the learning or ignorance of the Phyſician; and a man cannot be charged with ignorance, for not knowing the hidden paſſions of the heart, or the ſtrange qualities of a certain conſtitution, and for not foreſeeing how they will prevent the effects of the remedies he preſcribed. A Phyſician is reckoned to commit blunders through ignorance, only when he does not know thoſe things, which ſtudy and practice ought to have acquainted him with. The queſtion is, whether there be ſome Phyſicians, who, through a prerogative peculiar to themſelves, do by chance and yet often hit upon the very remedy that will cure, and whether the contrary happens to others by an ill-luck peculiar to them? Or elſe, the queſtion is this; are there Phyſicians who are called juſt when the patient is predeſtinated to be cured? And are there others, who are called juſt when the patient is predeſtinated to die? Joubert ſeems to have been of that opinion, and to have called this a particular favour or bleſſing from heaven, or the want of a divine favour. Crato ridicules ſuch an opinion. This controverſy is much of the ſame nature with that which I have mentioned in another place (14); whether there be an happineſs and a misfortune annexed to certain perſons, or whether the one be always the effect of a man's prudence, and the other of his imprudence? The antients were not of this laſt opinion; for when they reckoned up the qualities of a good General, they gave fortune a place by itſelf, and diſtinguiſhed it from the knowledge in the art of war. Ego ſic exiſtimo, ſays Tully, in ſummo Imperatore quatuor has res ineſſe oportere, ſcientiam rei Militaris, virtutem, auctoritatem, felicitatem (15), i. e. "I "am of opinion that theſe four things are requiſite "in a General; the knowledge of the military art, "courage, authority, and happineſs." He ſhews afterwards, (11) Joubert, Erreurs Populaires, liv. 1. chap. 7. pag. m. 33. 34.

(12) Ibid. pag. 35.

(13) Joannes Bourgeſius, in Scholiis, ad cap. 7. Jouberti, de Erroribus Vulgi, pag. 105, 106.

(14) In the remark [K] of the article TIMOLEON.

(15) Cicero pro Lege Manilia, cap. 10. pag. m. 35. tom. 3.

lished a great many books [D], which have been very much esteemed. Two of his sons have also published some books (f).

(f) See the remark [E].

terwards, that these four qualities met most eminently in Pompey. Reliquum est ut de felicitate quam præstare DE SE IPSO nemo potest, meminisse, & commemorare de altero possumus: sicut æquum est homini de potestate deorum, timide & pauca dicamus. Ego enim sic existimo: Maximo, Marcello, Scipioni, Mario, & ceteris magnis imperatoribus, NON SOLUM propter virtutem, sed etiam propter fortunam, sæpius imperia mandata atque exercitus esse commissos. Fuit enim profectò quibusdam summis viris quædam ad amplitudinem, & gloriam, & ad res magnas benè gerendas divinitus adjuncta fortuna (16). i. e. "We come now to speak of the other's (Pompey's) "happiness, which a man can never have OF HIMSELF; but it is proper we should speak modestly and "sparingly of the power of the Gods. I am of opinion, that Fabius Maximus, Marcellus, Scipio, "Marius, and others, were so often placed at the head "of our armies, not only because of their courage, "but also on account of their happiness. For some "great men were certainly assisted by fortune, when "they gained so much glory and reputation, and performed such noble actions."

(16) Cicero, pro Lege Manilia, cap. 16. pag. 53. tom. 3.

[D] He published a great many books.] I believe that he begun with his Institutiones Logicæ, which he published, when he read private lectures on Philosophy at Wittemberg, about the year 1601 (17). He published in the same city in the year 1607 his treatise De Natura Humana (18). His Dissertatio de natura Amoris, additis Resolutionibus de cura Furoris amoris, de Philtris, atque de pulsu Amantium; i. e. "A Dissertation "of the nature of Love, on Philters, and on the "Lover's pulse:" this book, I say, was printed at Giessen in 4to, in the year 1611. He published in the same city his work De tuenda Sanitate Studiosorum & Literatorum; i. e. "Of preserving the health of Stu"dents and men of Letters;" in 4to. and in 1619, the treatise De causis similitudinis & dissimilitudinis in fœtu, respectu parentum &c. cui annexa est Resolutio Quæstionis de diverso partus tempore, imprimisque quid de septimestri & octimestri partu sentiendum; i. e. "Of the "causes why children are not like their parents &c. "to which is added a solution of the question concerning the time of the women's delivery, and what we "ought to think of their being delivered at the seventh, or eighth month;" in 4to. I refer the reader to Lindenius renovatus (19), where he shall meet with a particular account of the titles and editions of all this Physician's writings. I shall only observe, that there was a new edition of it published after his death, in one volume in folio, at Nuremberg in the year 1660, at Gauda (Tergou) in three volumes in 4to, in the year 1661.

(17) Dieterici, Oratio Fun. Gr. Horstii, apud Witte, Memor. Medicor. folio (s) 2.

(18) Idem, ibid. folio (e) 3.

(19) Pag. 359, &c.

HORTENSIA, sister to Hortensius the Orator. Thus a modern author names her (a): but, as he himself owns in another place (b), Valeria is the name which Plutarch gives to Hortensius's sister. See therefore VALERIA, for there is no reason why we should ascribe to Hortensius, two sisters of different names.

(a) Glandorpius, pag. 406.

(b) Idem, pag. 865.

HORTENSIA daughter of Hortensius the Orator, shewed her self worthy of such a father by the eloquence she displayed, when she pleaded the cause of the Roman Ladies before the Triumviri, who had sentenced fourteen hundred of them to declare the estates they possessed; intending afterwards to tax them at pleasure, towards defraying the expences of the war. The Triumviri were Mark Anthony, Octavius and Lepidus. These had declared at first, that all such women as did not give in a faithful and exact inventory of their estates should be fined; and that all persons impeaching others, who made such concealments, should be rewarded for their discoveries. The Ladies had recourse to the intercession of such among them as might have some interest with the Triumviri, and met with a gracious reception from Octavius's sister, and Mark Anthony's mother; but Fulvia, wife to the latter, shut her door against them, whereupon they resolved to address the Triumviri. Hortensia spoke in the name of all the rest, and made a very fine speech, which Quintilian has mentioned with applause (a). The Triumviri were so brutal as to be displeased with the Ladies, for the rigour they shewed in addressing them, and thereupon ordered their officers to turn them out of Court [A]. Upon this order the whole assembly murmured, which prevented the officers from putting it in execution, whereupon the Triumviri suspended the affair till the next day. The result was, that only four hundred women should be obliged to discover all their possessions (b). By this we are enabled to form a much more just idea of that incident than from Moreri's account, even from Valerius Maximus, whose words are quoted below [B].

(a) Quinti Hortensii filiæ oratio apud Triumviros habita legitur non tantum in sexus honorem. Quintil. Instit. lib. 1. cap. 1.

(b) Ex Appiano, lib. 4. Bell. Civil.

HORTENSIUS

[A] The Triumviri . . . . ordered their officers to turn them out of Court.] Instead of this, Jacobus Philippus Bergamensis, whom Prosp. Mandosius (1) copies, relates, that Hortensia's eloquence was so much admired by the auditors, that they imagined it was her father who spoke, and that it forced the Triumviri, not only to grant whatever they desired, but to bestow the highest applauses on them. He has committed two other errors, first in asserting that Hortensia wrote many things; and secondly, in saying that the Roman Ladies were taxed, because the necessity of the times required it; whereas it was owing rather to the tyrannical avarice of the Triumviri. How many errors do authors fall into, from their desire of applauding those on whom they write?

(1) In Biblioth. Roman. Cent. 2. num. 88.

[B] From Moreri's account, or . . . . from Valerius Maximus, whose words are quoted hereunder.] He says that the Senate had laid a severe tax on the Roman women, ... and that Hortensia alone undertook the cause of all the women. I. It was the Triumviri, and not the Senate, who laid this heavy tax, in case a tax was laid. II. It was not to affect all the women of Rome, but only the most wealthy; it was a tax on persons who were in flourishing circumstances. III. Hortensia was indeed the only woman who spoke, but she was not the only one who acted for the women, or undertook their cause; for all who were concerned in that affair, went in a body to sollicit the mothers, sisters, and wives of the Triumviri; after which they went to the Court where they were assembled, on which occasion, as in deputations of every kind, one spoke in the name of all the rest. I take no notice of Moreri's omissions, nor of the false citation from Appian of Alexandria, which was taken into the Dutch edition, with a small alteration that may impose upon the reader. That error is owing to the Printers. Moreri had certainly writ, li. 4. belli civil. instead of which the Printers of Lyons put li. 4. b. li civil; and those of Holland li. 4. b. li. civil. So small a mistake has been sufficient, on many occasions, to make people imagine, that an author had wrote several books which he had never so much as dreamt of. Who would not believe, seeing Ovid cited in elog. at the close of the article Hortensius the Orator, both in the Dutch edition and the preceding one, but that Ovid had wrote a Poem entitled Elogia? Every reader does not guess that instead of in elog. it should be in eleg. a citation a little too general, with submission to Vos-

sius

HORTENSIUS, the name of a Plebeian family in Rome, taken, in all probability, from their devoting themſelves to gardening, as that of Fabius, Lentulus, &c. ſprung from a like original. Antonius Auguſtinus had no reaſon to rank this family among the Patricians [A], ſince we find, in the Faſti, one LUCIUS HORTENSIUS, Tribune of the People, the year of Rome 331. He charged Sempronius Atratinus, Conſul the preceding year, with having attacked the Volſci raſhly; but his four collegues, who were preſent at the battle in queſtion, deſired Hortenſius ſo very earneſtly to drop the impeachment, that after having done all that was poſſible, on his ſide, to oblige them to allow him to proceed in it; he at laſt complied with their deſires, when he found they were firmly determined to lay aſide the enſigns of their dignity, all the time the trial ſhould laſt. He would not let the people ſee their Tribunes in that condition, nor quite ruin a Conſul, who at leaſt had gained the love of his ſoldiers. Non videbit plebs Romana ſordidatos Tribunos ſuos. C. Sempronium nihil moror quando hoc eſt in imperio conſecutus ut tam carus eſſet militibus (a). We find, above an hundred years after, one QUINTUS HORTENSIUS who was Dictator [B]. He brought back the people who had retired to the Janiculum; and enacted a Law, viz. that thenceforward all the Romans ſhould be obliged to obey the ordinances of the people [C]. He died in his office (b), which no one had done before (c). Moreri has committed ſtrange miſtakes with regard to this Dictator [D]. He

(a) Liv. lib. 4. cap. 42. See alſo Valer. Maxim. lib. 6. cap. 5.

(b) Livius, in Epit. lib. 11.

(c) Auguſt. de Civ. Dei, lib. 3. cap. 17.

(2) De Hiſt. Lat. pag. 48. de Poet. Lat. pag. 15.

ſius who made uſe of it (2); but yet true in the main. There are many other wrong citations in this article of Moreri's Dictionary: Pliny is cited there twice, and the firſt time falſely. The 5th chapter of book 3d de re ruſtica of Varro, and the 13th of book 3d of Macrobius's Saturnalia, are not juſt quotations; and ſhew that Moreri did not take care to verify, whether the Printers of Voſſius had put one figure for another.

Here follow the words of Valerius Maximus, which I promiſed to cite. Hortenſia Q. Hortenſii filia cum ordo Matronarum gravi tributo à Triumviris eſſet oneratus, nec quiſquam virorum patrocinium eis accommodare auderet, cauſſam fœminarum apud Triumviros conſtanter & feliciter egit. Repræſentata enim patris facundia impetravit, ut major pars imperatæ pecuniæ his remitteretur (3). i. e. "Hortenſia, the daughter of "Q. Hortenſius, upon the Triumviri's laying a very "heavy tax on the Ladies of Rome, and no man's "daring to appear in their favour, pleaded their cauſe "with great reſolution and ſucceſs before the Triumviri; for by her eloquence, which was equal to "that of her father's, ſhe prevailed ſo far as to get "the greateſt part of that tax remitted."

(3) Valer. Max. lib. 8. cap. 3. Moreri has cited lib. 3. Hofman lib. 2.

[A] Antonius Auguſtinus had no reaſon to rank this family among the Patricians.] The tract written by Antonius Auguſtinus de Romanorum Gentibus & Familiis, which I make uſe of, was printed at Lyons in 1592, in 4to. We there find word for word, on the family Hortenſia, what Richard Streinnius relates concerning it, in the book written by him on the ſame ſubject in 1559. Both proceed on a falſe foundation, in order to make this family Patrician, viz. that Cicero, ſay they, beſtows the epithet noble on Hortenſius, in his ſpeeches againſt Verres. Who does not know that the epithets nobilis and plebeius were conſiſtent in old Rome?

[B] Above an hundred years after .... QUINTUS HORTENSIUS the Dictator.] It would be very difficult to find exactly the year when our QUINTUS HORTENSIUS was Dictator. I fancy Sigonius was right in fixing it to the year 467. Father Hardouin (1) doubtleſs approved this opinion; but the printers of his work, by omitting a letter, make him ſay that the ſedition of the people, which was quieted by Hortenſius the Dictator, happened in the year CCCLXVII. St. Auſtin is of opinion, that Hortenſius was created Dictator, on account of the peoples retiring at that time to the Janiculum, which is very probable. Poſt graves & longas Rom. ſeditiones quibus ad ultimum plebs in Janiculum hoſtili diremptione ſeceſſerat, cujus mali tam dira calamitas erat, ut ejus rei cauſa, quod in extremis periculis fieri ſolebat, & Dictator crearetur Hortenſius, qui plebe revocata in eodem magiſtratu expiravit, quod nulli Dictatori ante contigerat (2). i. e. "The Plebeians "in Rome, after ſeveral grievous and long ſeditions, "withdrew at laſt in an hoſtile manner to the "Janiculum, which occaſioned ſo dire a calamity, "that on this account, as when the State was in "imminent danger, Hortenſius was created Dictator, "who having brought back the people, died in his "office, which no other Dictator had ever done before."

(1) In Plin. lib. 16. cap. 10. pag. 239. tom. 3.

(2) Auguſt. de Civitate Dei, lib. 3. cap. 17.

[C] .... and enacted a law, viz. that thenceforward all the Romans ſhould be obliged to obey the ordinances of the people.] An author cited by Aulus Gellius informs us, that the ordinances made by the report, or at the deſire of the Tribunes of the people, were not properly called laws, but plebiſcita; and that the Patricians, till the Dictatorſhip of Hortenſius, were not ſubject to ſuch kind of Ordinances. Ne leges quidem proprie ſed plebiſcita appellantur, quæ tribunis plebis ferentibus accepta ſunt, quibus rogationibus ante Patricii non tenebantur, donec Q. Hortenſius Dictator eam legem tulit, ut eo jure quod plebs ſtatuiſſet, omnes Quirites tenerentur (3): now Livy tells us the very contrary of this; for he ſays that Lucius Valerius, and Marcus Horatius, who were appointed Conſuls in the year of Rome 305, began to ſhew their complacency for the people, by enacting a law, which left it no longer in doubt, whether the laws eſtabliſhed by the people, were binding to the Senate. That law decided this affair to the advantage of the people. Omnium primum cum veluti in controverſo jure eſſet tenerenturne Patres plebiſcitis, legem centuriatis comitiis tulere, ut quod tributim plebes juſſiſſet populum teneret, qua lege tribunitiis rogationibus telum acerrimum datum eſt (4). i. e. "Firſt of all, it having been controverted in "ſome meaſure, whether the ordinances of the peo"ple were binding with reſpect to the Senators; "they enacted a law in the Comitia Centuriata, that "whatſoever the Plebeians or Commons might decree "in their tribes, ſhould bind the whole Roman peo"ple; which Law enforced prodigiouſly all the mo"tions the Tribunes might make." The Magiſtrates called Decemviri had been juſt before put down; and the ſeditious populace, who had retired to mount Aventine, recalled. The new Conſuls did all that lay in their power to make themſelves popular. Quintus Capitolinus acknowledged the ſame of this new law three years after; when repreſenting to the people all the advantages which the Senate had granted them, he brings into the account ſcita plebis injuncta patribus (5). This law was renewed in the year of Rome 415, Publius Philo the Dictator having ordained that the Plebiſcita ſhould oblige all the Romans (6). The author quoted by Aulus Gellius was therefore not juſtly informed. Had he ſaid that the Senators were ſo very artful as to elude the deciſion; and therefore that it was found neceſſary to renew it in an authentic manner, under the Dictatorſhip of Quintus Hortenſius, he would not be the juſt object of our criticiſm; but this he has not done. Pliny (7) ſpeaks of what was enacted by this Dictator in favour of the people, without ſaying whether ever ſuch a law had, or had not, been enacted before. Sigonius did not know what had been tranſacted under Valerius and Horatius the Conſuls; he ſaying (8), that Hortenſius's law had been already enacted by Publius Philo the Dictator, in the year of Rome 414.

(3) Lælius Felix, apud A. Gellium, lib. 15. cap. 27.

(4) Livius, lib. 3. cap. 45.

(5) Idem, cap. 47.

(6) Ut plebiſcita omnes Quirites tenerent. Livius, Dec. 1. lib. 8. cap. 12.

(7) Lib. 16. cap. 10.

(8) In Faſt. ad ann. 467.

[D] Moreri has committed ſtrange miſtakes with regard to this Dictator.] Two groſs blunders in a few words; one is, in ſaying that he was a famous Civilian

He who made himſelf the moſt famous, is HORTENSIUS the Orator of the following article.

lian and Legiſlator; the other, the affirming that Hortenſius the Orator was his grandſon. Were ever ſuch Magiſtrates, in the Commonwealth of Rome, who had procured the enacting of ſome laws, called Legiſlators? Had this been, the number of the Roman Legiſlators would be exceedingly great; neither are they the ſet of people called Juriſconſulti or Civilians. Now it is very plain, that Moreri knew no circumſtance relating to Q. Hortenſius the Dictator, but that he had enacted a law, whereby the Senate was ſubjected to the Plebiſcita. Farther, ſince Moreri obſerves that the Dictatorſhip of this Hortenſius falls under the year of Rome 468, how could he take him for the grandfather of Hortenſius the Orator, who, according to him, was a military Tribune, in the year of Rome 664? How ſhamefully inattentive and negligent muſt he have been on this occaſion!

HORTENSIUS (QUINTUS) contemporary with Cicero, and almoſt as great an Orator, was born the year of Rome 639 (a). He pleaded his firſt cauſe at nineteen years of age, and with ſuch ſucceſs, that he not only gained the applauſe of his hearers, but alſo that of the two Conſuls, who were the greateſt judges of eloquence in that age [A]. This was the cauſe which he pleaded for Africa, before the Senate, under theſe two Conſuls. He pleaded, ſome time after, for the King of Bithynia, and with ſtill greater ſucceſs than before. The ſocial war breaking out the year of Rome 663, ſo entire a ſtop was put in the city to all judicial proceedings, that Hortenſius embraced a military life (b). He was a military Tribune ſo early as his ſecond campaign; but I believe he roſe no higher; and that thoſe who declare him to have been Lieutenant General under Sylla, in the Mithridatic War, miſtake him for another [B]. He filled, ſucceſſively, all the exalted employments of the Commonwealth, ſuch as thoſe of Quæſtorſhip, Ædileſhip, Prætorſhip, and even that of Conſulate, which he obtained in conjunction with Q. Cæcilius Metellus the year of Rome 684. The lot fell upon him to go into Crete, to reduce the inhabitants of that iſland; but as his eloquence made him triumphant in Rome (c), he choſe to diſplay his talent at the bar, rather than to march into the field. Accordingly he gave up that employment to his collegue, who there gained the honour of a triumph, and the ſurname of Creticus. Hortenſius had a moſt wonderful memory [C]. He uſed a great deal of action when he

(a) See the remark [B].

(b) Cicero in Bruto.

(c) Xiphilinus ex Dione, lib. 35. initio.

[A] He gained the applauſe . . . . of the two Conſuls, who were the greateſt judges of eloquence in that age.] Theſe were Lucius Craſſus and Quintus Scævola, the former of whom was one of the greateſt Orators, and the latter one of the greateſt Civilians, that had ever appeared in Rome. Eloquentium juriſperitiſſimus Craſſus, juriſperitorum eloquentiſſimus Scævola putaretur (1). This Conſulſhip falls under the year 658; ſo that as Hortenſius was then but nineteen years of age, he conſequently was born in 639; which we may likewiſe gather from Cicero's being eight years younger than he; Cicero, I ſay, who was born in 647. Me adoleſcentem (Hortenſius) nactus octo annis minorem quàm erat ipſe (2). Here follows the proof of what I ſaid with regard to the firſt cauſe which Hortenſius pleaded (3): Q. Hortenſii admodum adoleſcentis ingenium, ut Phidiæ ſignum ſimul aſpectum & probatum eſt. Is L. Craſſo, Q. Scævola Coſſ. primum in foro dixit, & apud hos ipſos quidem Conſules, & cum eorum qui affuerunt, tum ipſorum Conſulum qui omnes intelligentia anteibant, judicio diſceſſit probatus; undeviginti annos natus erat eo tempore. i. e. "The genius of Quintus Hortenſius, whilſt "he was young, like the ſtatue of Phidias, was no "ſooner beheld but it was immediately admired. The "firſt made his appearance at the bar, under the "Conſulſhip of L. Craſſus and Q. Scævola; though "but eighteen years old at that time, he pleaded in "preſence of the Conſuls with the applauſe, not only "of the whole auditory, but of the Conſuls themſelves, "who were the moſt conſummate judges of that time." Cicero (4) makes this L. Craſſus ſpeak thus: Ego eſſe jam judico (omnibus iſtis laudibus, quas oratione complexus ſum, excellentem Hortenſium) & tum judicavi cum me Conſule in Senatu cauſam defendit Africæ, nuperque etiam magis cum pro Bithyniæ rege dixit. i. e. "I am now of opinion, that Hortenſius merited all "the applauſes which I beſtowed upon him; and I "thought this, when, during my Conſulate, he plead-"ed in favour of Africa in the Senate; and ſtill more "ſo, when he lately undertook the cauſe of the King "of Bithynia."

(1) Cicero in Bruto, cap. 39.

(2) Idem, in Bruto.

(3) Idem, ibid. cap. 64.

(4) De Orat. lib. 3. ſub fin.

[B] Thoſe who declare him to have been Lieutenant-General under Sylla, in the Mithridatic war, miſtake him for another.] What makes me conclude, that our Orator is not the Hortenſius who had that poſt in the armies of Sylla, is, on one ſide, Cicero's ſilence; and on the other, the character which Plutarch gives of this Lieutenant. Plutarch repreſents him as a man who was perfectly well ſkilled in the arts of war, and who never yielded (5); and relates ſome actions atchieved by him, which ſuit only an old experienced Officer, and that refer to the year of Rome 667. But where ſhould Hortenſius the Orator have gained this experience, ſince he did not embrace a military life till the year 663? And had he gained it, and had ſignalized himſelf under Sylla, how comes it that theſe circumſtances were not ſpoke of, in thoſe places where he is applauded, and ſaid to have been a military Tribune, even in his ſecond campaign? Judicia intermiſſa bello . . . Erat Hortenſius in bello primo anno miles, altero Tribunus militum (6). Glandorpius was doubtleſs miſtaken (7), in ſuppoſing him to be Sylla's Lieutenant-General. But what need is there to take advantage of Cicero's ſilence? What he ſays is much more favourable to me. Do not the three years during which Hortenſius made the greateſt figure at the bar, becauſe of either the death or abſence of the moſt renowned Orators, correſpond with the time that Sylla had the other Hortenſius in his army? Triennium fere fuit urbs ſine armis, ſed oratorum aut interitu aut diſceſſu, aut fuga . . . . Primis in cauſis agebat Hortenſius, magiſque quotidie probabatur. (8)

(5) Στρατηγικὸς ἀνὴρ καὶ φιλονικος. Vir rei bellicæ pervicax Plutarchus in Sylla, pag. 461.

(6) Cicero in Bruto.

(7) Onomaſt. pag. 404.

(8) Cicero, in Bruto.

[C] Hortenſius had a moſt wonderful memory.] He delivered his pleadings directly as he had meditated them, without writing down ſo much as a ſingle word, and did not forget one particular which had been advanced by his adverſaries. Primum memoria tanta, quantam in viro cognoviſſe me arbitror, ut quæ ſecum commentatus eſſet, ea ſine ſcripto verbis iiſdem redderet quibus cogitaviſſet. Hoc adjumento illo tanto ſic utebatur, ut ſua & commentata & ſcripta, ut nullo referente omnia adverſariorum dicta meminiſſet (9). What Seneca ſays of him, is ſtill much more remarkable. Upon a challenge that was made to Hortenſius, he ſtaid a whole day at a public ſale, and repeated in order, the ſeveral things which had been ſold, to whom, and at what price. His recital being compared with the account taken by the Clerk, it appeared that his memory had not made him miſtake in one particular. Hortenſius à Siſenna provocatus in auctione perſedit diem totum, & omnes res, & pretia, & emptores ordine ſuo argentariis recognoſcentibus, ita ut in nullo falleretur, recenſuit (10).

(9) Cicero in Bruto. See alſo Tuſcul. 1. & Academ. 2. init.

(10) Seneca, Præfat. lib. 1. Controverſ.

he pleaded [D], which once drew upon him a very ſevere ſtroke of raillery in preſence of the Judges; L. Torquatus giving him the name of Dionyſia, who was a famous female dancer. The anſwer which Hortenſius made to him is ſeen in Aulus Gellius. It cannot be denied but that he was vaſtly affected; or at leaſt, that he was exceſſively nice and finical in his dreſs [E]. He uſed to conſult his glaſs very earneſtly, all the time he was dreſſing; and it is ſaid that he commenced a ſuit againſt his collegue, for diſcompoſing or ruffling the order and ſymmetry of his gown, as he was paſſing through a narrow place (d). He had amaſſed great riches, of which he was no ways ſparing, to procure himſelf conveniences and pleaſures both in town and country. He had ſeveral country-houſes [F]; and being a great lover of ſumptuouſneſs, he oppoſed the ſumptuary laws (e) which the Conſuls would have enacted the year of Rome 699. He applauded them ſo very artfully for the ſplendor and magnificence in which they lived, that they did not dare to inſiſt farther on preferring of a law, which agreed ſo little with their own conduct. He was the firſt who eat peacocks (f), of which he had a courſe, in an entertainment he gave to the college of Augurs. He was very curious and ſplendid in his parks and fiſh-ponds (g), and was as ſollicitous for the health of his fiſh [G], as for that of (d) Macrob. Saturn. lib. 2. cap. 9. Moreri, after Voſſius, cites lib. 3. cap. 13. Now there are but twelve chapters in the 3d book.

(e) Dion. lib. 39.

(f) Varro, de Re ruſtica, lib. 3. cap. 6. Plin. lib. 10. cap. 20. Ælian, lib. 5. Hiſtor. Anim. cap. 21. Tertullian. de Pallio, ſub fin.

(g) Varro, de Re ruſtica, lib. 3. cap. 13 & 17.

[D] He uſed a great deal of action when he pleaded.] Neſcires utrum cupidius ad audiendum eum, an ad ſpectandum concurreretur, ſic verbis oratoriis aſpectus, & rurſus aſpectui verba ſerviebant. Itaque conſtat Æſopum & Roſcium ludicræ artis peritiſſimos viros illo cauſas agente in corona frequenter aſtitiſſe, ut foro petitos geſtus in ſcenam referrent (11). Though his action was ſo fine, as to make the two fineſt Actors of that time (Æſopus and Roſcius) ambitious of imitating it on the ſtage, it is yet certain that it exceeded the juſt bounds of the Oratorial Art: Vox canora & ſuavis, ſays Cicero in his Brutus, motus & geſtus etiam plus artis habebat quàm erat Oratori ſatis. Moreri does not relate Torquatus's jeſt or raillery faithfully. He uſed to move about ſo much in making his ſpeeches, that the name of Graſhopper, Dionyſia Saltatricula, was given him. What perſon would not ſuppoſe from theſe words, but that Hortenſius had been plagued with this nickname in every part of the city? and yet there was but one man, who, on a ſingle occaſion, gave him the name, not of Graſhopper, but of Dionyſia, who was a famous female dancer. It is a very falſe tranſlation to render the words Saltatricula, Graſhopper. Here follows the paſſage from Aulus Gellius, Chap. V. Book I: Cùm L. Torquatus, ſubagreſti homo ingenio & infeſtivo, gravius acerbiuſque apud conſilium judicum, cùm de cauſa Sullæ quæreretur, non jam hiſtrionem eum eſſe diceret, ſed geſticulariam Dionyſiamque eum notiſſimæ Saltatriculæ nomine appellaret; tum voce molli atque demiſſa Hortenſius, Dionyſia, inquit, Dionyſia malo equidem eſſe quam quod tu Torquate, ἄμουσος, ἀγροϊκώτατος, καὶ ἀπροσώτατος. i. e. "Lucius Torquatus, a rude, moroſe "ſort of a man, having declared, in Sylla's cauſe, "after a harſh and ſevere manner, before the Judges, "that Hortenſius did not then behave as an Actor, "but like Dionyſia the famous female dancer; Hortenſius replied as follows, in a ſoft low tone of voice, "I had rather be Dionyſia, than, like you Torquatus, void of all taſte for learning, inelegant, and "without underſtanding."

(11) Val. Max. lib. 8. cap. 10.

[E] He was exceſſively nice and finical in his dreſs.] The following paſſage from Aulus Gellius, which precedes the words above cited, ſerve both to prove Hortenſius's fondneſs for action, and his too great niceneſs with reſpect to dreſs. Hortenſius omnibus fermè Oratoribus ætatis ſuæ niſi M. Tullio clarior, quod multa mundicia & circumſpectè compoſitèque indutus & amictus eſſet, manuſque ejus inter agendum forent argutæ admodum & geſtuoſæ, maledictis compellationibusque probroſis jactatus eſt, multaque in eum quaſi in hiſtrionem in ipſis cauſis atque judiciis dicta ſunt. i. e. "Hortenſius who was almoſt the greateſt orator of his "time next to Cicero, being extremely nice and finical in his dreſs, and ſtudied in his pleadings, employing a great deal of action, was rallied and "abuſed, and was often reproached, in open court, "with being a player rather than an orator." With regard to the action he took out for the rumpling the folds of his robe, here follows the proof or teſtimony of it: Hortenſius vir alioquin ex profeſſo mollis & in præcinctu ponens omnem decorem; fuit enim veſtitu ad munditiem curioſo, & ut bene amictus iret, faciem in ſpeculo ponebat: ubi ſe intuens togam corpori ſic applicabat, ut rugas non forte ſed induſtria locatas artifex nodus conſtringeret, & ſinus ex compoſito defluens nodum lateris ambiret. Is quondam cum incederet elaboratus ad ſpeciem collegæ de injuriis diem dixit; quod ſibi in anguſtiis obvius offenſu fortuito ſtructuram togæ deſtruxerat, & capitale putavit quod in humero ſuo locum ruga mutaſſet (12). i. e. "Hortenſius was profeſſedly ſoft "and effeminate, and made all decency to conſiſt in "outward ſhew. He was vaſtly finical in his dreſs; "and to adjuſt it the better, he employed a looking-"glaſs, by whoſe aſſiſtance he ſo diſpoſed of his gown, "that the plaits did not fall at random, but were diſ-"poſed very carefully by means of a knot; and the "fold or lappet flowing or falling down with art, "went round the knot at his ſide. As Hortenſius "was one day walking in his elaborate dreſs, he took "out an action againſt his collegue; becauſe that, "meeting him in a narrow paſſage, he had acci-"dentally ruffled the order and oeconomy of his gown: "looking upon it as a capital crime, becauſe his col-"legue had changed one plait on his ſhoulder."

(12) Macrob. lib. 2. Saturn. cap. 9.

[F] He had ſeveral country-houſes.] Pliny (13) mentions Hortenſius's Tuſculanum, where he placed the Argonauts of the painter Cydias, which coſt him fourteen thouſand four hundred French livres, according to Father Hardouin's computation. He had a houſe at Bauli (14), one near Laurentium (15), and another near Porta Flumentana (16). The reader may judge of his expences, by the great number of hogs-heads of wine, above ten thouſand, which he left to his heir. Hortenſius ſuper decem millia cadûm hæredi reliquit (17). Here follows the proof of what I ſaid (18) with regard to the care which he himſelf took to pour wine, with his own hands, on his plane-trees. Is Hortenſius platanos ſuas vino irrigare conſuevit, adeo ut in actione quadam, quam habuit cum Cicerone ſuſceptam, precario à Tullio poſtulaſſet ut locum dicendi permutaret ſecum, abire enim in villam neceſſario ſe velle, ut vinum Plantano quam in Tuſculano poſuerat ipſe ſuffunderet (19). i. e "It was Hortenſius's cuſtom to refreſh his plane-"trees with wine, in which he was ſo exact and "punctual, that being engaged in a cauſe with "Cicero, he begged him to change the place of plead-"ing, being, as he declared, under an abſolute ne-"ceſſity of going into the country, to pour wine on "a plane-tree which he himſelf had planted at Tuſ-"culanum."

(13) Plin. lib. 35. cap. 11.

(14) Cicero, II Acad. Quæſt. Varro, de Re ruſtica, lib. 3. cap. 17.

(15) Varro, ibid.

(16) Cicero, ad Atticum, lib. 7. Epiſt. 3.

(17) Varro, apud Plin. lib. 14. cap. 14.

(18) In the body of this article, citation (b).

(19) Macrob. Saturn. lib. 2. cap. 9.

[G] He was ſollicitous for the health of his fiſh.] Varro (20) relates ſome very ſingular particulars on this ſubject. Hortenſius acted with regard to his fiſh, juſt as miſers do with reſpect to their money; I mean he did not dare to make uſe of it, but choſe rather to buy fiſh in any of the neighbouring towns, than take any out of his own fiſh-pond. Not ſatisfied with ſparing his fiſhes, and not ſuffering them to be killed for his repaſts, he uſed to have them fed very plentifully and delicately. Neque ſatis erat eum non paſci piſcinis, niſi eos ipſe paſceret ultro . . . Celerius voluntate Hortenſii ex equili educeres rhedarias ut tibi haberes mulas, quàm è piſcina barbatum mullum . . . Non minor cura ejus erat de ægrotis piſcibus, quàm de minus valentibus ſervis: itaque minus laborabat ne ſervus æger, quàm aquam frigidam biberent ſui piſces. i. e. "Nor was it "enough for him that he did not eat of the fiſh out "of his own ponds, he himſelf feeding them very "carefully . . . Such was Hortenſius's turn of mind, "that he would ſooner have given the mules out of "his

(20) De Re Ruſtica, lib. 3. cap. 17.

of his footmen. Hortenſius muſt have had a ſtrong paſſion for plane-trees, ſince he uſed to refreſh them with wine inſtead of water; and ſo far was he from making a ſecret of this, that he one day deſired Cicero to change with him the hour in which he was to plead; for I my ſelf, ſays he, muſt go and pour wine on a plane-tree, which ſtands in one of my country-houſes (b). Thoſe who are ever ſo little acquainted with human nature, will wonder much more that theſe two great Orators ſhould have given each other ſuch ſtrong teſtimonies of friendſhip on ſeveral occaſions [H], than to hear that they were not always true friends; for, after all, Cicero was the cauſe why Hortenſius did not preſerve the glory which he had enjoyed a conſiderable time, viz. of being the firſt Orator in Rome; and Hortenſius was the cauſe that Cicero was not without a dangerous rival, who trod cloſe upon his heels. Hortenſius had publiſhed, not only orations and annals, but alſo laſcivious poems [I]; but none of theſe compoſitions have been tranſmitted

(b) See the remark [F].

" his ſtable, than a mullet out of his fiſh pond. He " was equally ſollicitous of the health of his fiſh as of " that of his ſervants; and, when any one of theſe " was ſick, he was leſs anxious about his having freſh " water, than about the ordering it for his fiſh." We are told he was ſo paſſionately fond of a lamprey, that he bewailed the death of it with tears. Apud Baulos in parte Baïana Piſcinam habuit Hortenſius Orator, in qua Murænam adeo dilexit ut exanimatam fleſſe credatur (21). Which circumſtance Porphyry (22), Macrobius (23), and Tzetzes (24) have related of Craſſus the Orator.

(21) Plin. lib. 9. cap. 55.

(22) De Abſtin. lib. 3.

(23) Saturn. lib. 2. cap. 11.

(24) Chil. 8. Hiſt. 174.

[H] People will wonder . . . that theſe two great Orators ſhould have given each other ſtrong teſtimonies of friendſhip.] Perhaps there is nothing in which jealouſy is more apt to occaſion hatred between people than eloquence. I cannot ſay whether beauty or poetry are not to be excepted. We ſeldom find that two celebrated Preachers love one another; and a trifling matter ſhall make them quarrel with one another. It is much if they can conceal their jealouſy and ſave appearances; ſo that we may juſtly admire what Hortenſius did in Cicero's behalf; but we are not to be ſurpriſed to hear of any ill offices he might have done him privately. He got him admitted into the college of Augurs (23); he gave him the nobleſt applauſes at a time when encomiums might be of ſervice to him. At Hercule alter tuus familiaris Hortenſius quàm plena manu, quàm ingenue, quàm ornate noſtras laudes in aſtra ſuſtulit, quum de Flacci Prætura & de illo tempore Allobrogum diceret. Sic habeto nec amantius, nec honorificentius, nec copioſius potuiſſe dici (26): he ran the hazard of loſing his life for Cicero's ſake: Vidi, vidi hunc ipſum Q. Hortenſium lumen & ornamentum Reipub. penè interfici ſervorum manu cum mihi adeſſet (26); and Cicero himſelf owns, that they always indulged good offices one to the other. Cùm præſertim non modo nunquam ſit aut illius à me curſus impeditus, aut ab illo meus, ſed contra ſemper alter ab altero adjutus, & communicando, & monendo, & favendo (28). i. e. " Particu- " larly as neither of us oppoſed the intereſt of the " other; but on the contrary, gave mutual aſſiſtance " of counſel and favour." We are not to wonder ſo much at Cicero's good offices with regard to Hortenſius, as thoſe of Hortenſius towards him; becauſe though Cicero's heart, naturally ſpeaking, for many years, muſt have harboured the rancour of jealouſy, we muſt ſuppoſe that he threw out half of it when he found himſelf the ſuperior. There was a time when he did not equal Hortenſius; another time when he equalled him, and a third when he excelled him. This laſt period is an excellent medicament againſt jealouſy. But, on the contrary, how violent a heart-burning muſt it be to Hortenſius, to ſee the man who did but follow him in the beginning, overtake him ſome time after, and at laſt get beyond him? Hortenſius . . . qui diu Princeps Oratorum, aliquando æmulus Ciceronis exiſtimatus eſt, noviſſimè quoad vixit, ſecundus. Theſe are Quintilian's words in Chapter III, Book XI. I am ſenſible that it was not diſadvantageous to Hortenſius to have ſuch a rival as Cicero. The honours of the Conſulſhip had ſo much ſlackened the ardent and indefatigable application with which he had cultivated his mind from his younger years, that people took notice daily, that he flagged (29). However, he rouzed his ſpirits, when he perceived the great progreſs which Cicero's glory made; but he certainly would have diſpenſed with ſuch an incentive or ſpur, ſince it coſt him the firſt place. There were few great cauſes but theſe two famous Orators were employed in them; ſometimes for the ſame, and at other times for contrary parties (30). Verres that renowned plunderer, was to have Hortenſius for his Lawyer: which was one of the ſtrongeſt reaſons Cicero alledged, in order to exclude Cæcilius from being the accuſer. The reader may ſee by that pleading (31), how capable Hortenſius was of managing ſuch cauſes as he undertook. Cicero had all kinds of advantage on this occaſion. He was the accuſer; and it is ſaid that he made Hortenſius reſolve not to plead in favour of Verres (32), ſo numerous were the charges and proofs brought againſt him. Multis diebus prima actio celebrata eſt, dum teſtes Verris producuntur criminum diverſorum, dum recitantur publicæ privatæque literæ. Quibus rebus adeò ſtupefactus Hortenſius dicitur, ut rationum defenſionis omitteret (33). We have ſeen how Cicero has declared that Hortenſius would never do him an ill office; and we may ſee, in the ſame place, that he refutes thoſe who thought that Hortenſius was not favourable to him. Dolebam quod, non ut plerique putabant, adverſarium aut obtrectatorem laudum mearum, ſed ſocium potius & conſortem glorioſi laboris amiſeram (34). i. e. " I was afflicted, not as moſt " people imagined, becauſe I had loſt an adverſary " and an envious rival, but rather a companion and " ſharer in my glorious labours." Nevertheleſs it was in a different ſtrain he wrote to his brother Quintus, when he expreſſed himſelf as follows. Quantum Hortenſio credendum ſit neſcio: me ſumma ſimulatione amoris, ſummaque aſſiduitate quotidiana ſceleratiſſimè infidioſiſſimèque tractavit, adjuncto quoque Arrio: quorum ego conſiliis, promiſſis, præceptis deſtitutus in hanc calamitatem incidi (35). i. e. " How far Hortenſius may be " truſted, I cannot ſay; he and Arrius have treated me, " on the ſpecious pretences of affection and friendſhip, " in the moſt wicked and moſt inſidious manner. I " am involved in this calamity, by my being deprived " of their advice, their promiſes and directions." How few, even of thoſe who paſs for honeſt men, but have two ſorts of language, the one for printed books, the other for thoſe letters they write their friends? See the remark [M] of the article GROTIUS. So long as they are kept in manuſcript, the inſincerity or amphibious language does not appear; but I ſurely expect to find theſe at the publication of their letters. It would very much vex certain authors, ſhould they be obliged to repeat or to hear repeated in converſation, the ſame encomiums which they gave in a book. Prefaces, citations, the pleaſing neceſſity of compoſing a funeral panegyric, what multitudes do you impoſe upon! Be this as it will, it has been juſtly conſidered as the marks of a wonderful addreſs in Pomponius Atticus, that he was able to preſerve the intimate friendſhip both of Cicero and Hortenſius, and to have kept them from falling out. Utebatur intimè Q. Hortenſio, qui iis temporibus principatum eloquentiæ tenebat, ut intelligi non poſſet, uter eum plus diligeret, Cicero an Hortenſius; & id quod erat difficilimum efficiebat ut inter quos tantæ laudis eſſet æmulatio, nulla intercederet obtrectatio, eſſetque talium virorum copula (36). i. e. " He " had contracted an intimate friendſhip with Hortenſius, " who was the greateſt Orator of the age, inſomuch " that one could not tell, whether he was beſt beloved " by Cicero or Hortenſius: and he ſo ordered matters, " a moſt difficult circumſtance, that no jealouſy broke " out between theſe two mighty rivals; he being as " the band, which held theſe two friends together."

(25) Cicero in Bruto, initio.

(26) Idem, ad Attic. Epiſt. ult. lib. 2.

(27) Idem, pro Milone.

(28) Idem, in Bruto.

(29) Cicero in Bruto, ſub fin.

(30) Sæpe in iiſdem, ſæpe in contrariis cauſis verſati ſumus. Cicero, Divinat. in Q. Cæcil.

(31) Divinatio in Q. Cæcilium.

(32) It is to be obſerved that Hortenſius did not abandon Verres ſo far but that Quintillian, Book 10. chap. 1 ſpeaks of his Pleadings for him.

(33) Aſcon. Pedian. in Præmio Act in Verrem.

(34) Cicero. in Bruto, init.

(35) Idem, Ep. 3. lib. 1. ad Quintum fratrem. See alſo Epiſt. 9. ad Attic. lib. 3.

(36) Cornel. Nepos, in Vita Pomponii Attici.

[I] Hortenſius publiſhed . . . laſcivious poems] This Ovid informs us, in his ſecond book De Triſtibus, where he gives us the liſt of thoſe men, who had written Love Poems or Books with impunity.

mitted to poſterity; and it muſt be confeſſed that he was a much better ſpeaker than a writer [K]. Though he won the cauſe of Meſſala, his ſiſter's ſon, in whoſe favour he had employed the utmoſt efforts of his eloquence [L], finding him accuſed of engaging in a faction, he yet did himſelf great injury by it; and occaſioned his being laughed at and hiſſed in his old age, which ridicule he was the only man who had eſcaped before (i). He died the year of Rome 703, aged threeſcore and four years, forty four or forty five whereof he had ſpent with great glory and reputation at the bar (k). Some author ſays, that he wore out his voice to ſuch a degree, that he quite loſt it before he died. Others have the ſame judgment as the reſt. Hortenſium magnum Oratorem ſemper putavi maximeque probavi pro Meſſala dicentem, cum tu abfuiſti. Sic ferunt, inquam, idque declarat totidem quot dixit, ut ajunt, ſcripta verbis oratio (41). If Hortenſius was hiſſed next day, it was not becauſe he pleaded with leſs eloquence than uſual, but becauſe people were vexed that he had brought his client off. The people had already ſhewn their reſentment againſt the Judges in this cauſe. Clamoribus ſcilicet maximis judices corripuerunt, & oſtenderunt planè eſſe quod ferri non poſſet ... Acceſſit huc quod poſtridie ejus abſolutionem in Theatrum Curionis Hortenſius introiit, puto ut ſuum gaudium gauderemus. Hic tibi ſtrepitus, fremitus, clamor, tonitruum & rudentum ſibilus. Hoc magis animadverſum eſt, quod intactus ab ſibilo pervenerat Hortenſius ad ſenectutem. Sed tum ita bene ut in totam vitam cuivis ſatis eſſet, & pœniteret eum jam viciſſe (42). i. e. "They made a great "outcry againſt the Judges, and ſhewed that it was "not to be born with... Farther, Hortenſius, the "day after he was cleared, went into Curio's theatre, "probably, in expectation of being congratulated: but "ſo far from it, he was received with clamours and "hiſſes. The more notice was taken of this, becauſe "Hortenſius had, till then, attained old age without "ever being hiſſed; but he then got ſo much of it "as was ſufficient for a perſon's whole life, and which "made him ſorry that he had gained his cauſe." He pleaded a few days before his death, as Cicero informs us. He certainly was one of thoſe great men, who long preſerve their genius and fire. It is true indeed, that he ſhone more in his youth than in his more advanced age, which he aſcribed to two cauſes; the one, becauſe he had made choice of the Aſiatic eloquence, which was more becoming in young people than in thoſe advanced in years; the other, that his application was greater in his younger years. Si quærimus, cur adoleſcens magis floruerit dicendo, quàm ſenior Hortenſius, cauſas reperiemus veriſſimas duas: primum, quod genus erat orationis Aſiaticum, adoleſcentiæ magis conceſſum, quàm ſenectuti. Genera autem Aſiaticæ dictionis duo ſunt... Hæc ... genera dicendi aptiora adoleſcentibus, in ſenibus gravitatem non habent. Itaque Hortenſius utroque genere florens, clamores faciebat adoleſcens ... Sed cum jam honores, & illa ſenior autoritas gravius quiddam requireret, remanebat idem, nec decebat idem: quodque exercitationem ſtudiumque dimiſerat, quod in eo fuerat acerrimum, concinnitas illa crebritaſque ſententiarum priſtina manebat, ſed ea veſtitu illo orationis, quo conſueverat, ornata non erat (43). i. e. "If we ſhould "enquire, how Hortenſius came to be more famed for "eloquence in his youth than when he came to ad- "vanced years, two ſubſtantial reaſons will be found "for it: firſt, becauſe he made choice of the Aſiatic "ſtyle, which is more allowable in young, than in "old men. The Aſiatic eloquence is of two kinds... "Theſe... are better adapted to young people, but "have not gravity enough for old age. As Hortenſius, therefore, excelled in both, he could not fail of "gaining the higheſt applauſes. But when the honours he had obtained, and the authority which "age gives, required a graver ſpecies of eloquence, he "yet retained the ſame, though it had no longer "its former grace. Farther, having abated very "much of his application and ſtudy, which had once "been very great; the former neatneſs and frequency "of his ſentences remained, but the elegant dreſs in "which he uſed to clothe them was now gone." He was fortunate even in the time of his death; he dying juſt before the breaking out of the dreadful confuſions into which the commonwealth was plunged. Perpetua quadam felicitate uſus ille ceſſit è vita ſuo magis quam ſuorum civium tempore, & tum occidit cum lugere facilius Rempub. poſſet ſi viveret, quam juvare (44).

(i) Epiſt. 2. Ciceron. ad Familiar. lib. 8.

(k) Eſt autem L. Paulo, C. Marcello Coſs. mortuus, ex quo videmus eum in Patronorum numero annos quatuor & quadraginta fuiſſe. Cicero, in Bruto.

Is quoque Phaſiacas Argo qui duxit in undas
Non potuit Veneris furta tacere ſuæ.
Nec minus HORTENSI, nec ſunt minus improba Servi
Carmina. Quis dubitet nomina tanta ſequi?

"He, whom fam'd Argo ſet on Phaſis' ſhores,
"Could not conceal his private love-intrigues.
"Hortenſius, Servius, both obſcenely write:
"Who could refuſe ſuch mighty names to follow?

(41) Cicero in Brut.

Aulus Gellius doubtleſs hints at the ſame verſes of Hortenſius, when he ſays (37) that they were ungraceful, invenuſta. I know not whether the Poem which Varro (38) aſcribes to him be another work. As to the Annals, they have been cited by Velleius Paterculus. I believe Hortenſius was a man of learning, for Cicero has beſtowed that elogium on him; but I do not ſee that his Poem, his Annals, and the proffer of Lucullus, are ſuch good proofs of his erudition, as Corradus would perſuade us. Sanè, ſays he (39), videtur benè doctus fuiſſe, ſiquidem Poëma ſcripſit, ut Autor eſt Varro libro primo de Analogia, & Annales, ut Paterculus affirmat: & certè cum Siſenna & Lucullo de Græce Latineque ſcribendo venit in eam contentionem, quam Plutarchus in Lucullo refert. i. e. "He ſeems indeed "to have been a man of learning, for he wrote a "poem, as Varro tells us, Book I of his Analogy; "he alſo drew up Annals, as we are aſſured by Pater- "culus; and he certainly contended with Siſenna and "Lucullus, with regard to the ſuperiority of writing, "in Greek as well as in Latin, as Plutarch relates "in the Life of Lucullus." I do not ſee that Corradus underſtood Plutarch's meaning; for he does not there ſpeak of a challenge between Hortenſius, Siſenna and Lucullus, but of a ſmall preſumption of the laſt mentioned, who boaſted, in preſence of the other two, that he would write the ſocial war, either in Latin or in Greek, in proſe or verſe, as chance ſhould decide it. Plutarch conjectures, that the Greek proſe fell to him by lot, ſince the Hiſtory of that War, compoſed in Greek proſe by Lucullus, was extant in his time: but once again, this does not ſignify in any manner that Hortenſius and Siſenna would have engaged in the ſame work, had the lot fell to them. Catanæus who relates it thus (40) is miſtaken.

(37) Lib. 19. cap. 9.

(38) Lib. 1. de Annal. apud Corradum in Cicer. Brutum, pag. 428.

(39) Ibid.

(40) In Plinii Epiſt. lib. 5. pag. m. 283.

(42) Cælius ad Ciceron. Epiſt. 2. lib. 8. ad Famil.

(43) Cicero, in Bruto, ſub fin. pag. m. 451.

(44) Idem, ibid. init.

[K] He was a much better ſpeaker than writer.] This we are told by Quintilian, Chap. III, Book XI, where he obſerves that action has a very peculiar force or ſtrength in an orator; and the great talent of Hortenſius lay here: when his pleadings or ſpeeches came to be read, they were not found worthy of the author's reputation. M. Cicero, ſays he, unam in dicendo actionem dominari putat, hac ... Antonium & Craſſum multum valuiſſe, plurimùm verò Q. Hortenſium, cujus rei fides eſt quod ejus ſcripta tantum infra famam ſunt ... ut appareat placuiſſe aliquid eo orante, quod legentes non invenimus. i. e. "Action, according to Tully, is the "chief talent of an Orator... Anthony and Craſſus "were eminent for it; but above all Hortenſius, a "proof of which is, his writings falling ſo much be- "low his reputation; ſo that one would conclude, that "they had certain charms whilſt he was repeating "them, which are quite loſt to us in the reading." How many Preachers have we, to whom this may be applied? Mr. Morus is an inſtance of this.

[L] He had employed the efforts of his eloquence] This cauſe was pleaded the year of Rome 702. Hortenſius was then ſixty three years of age, notwithſtanding which he made an excellent plea. Brutus, who always thought him a great orator, had never admired him ſo much as he did on that day. The reſt of the auditors formed the ſame judgment; and Cicero having read the plea, publiſhed word for word as it had been ſpoke, formed have miſtaken this thought ſo far, as to ſuppoſe it had been told of Hortenſius, that he died as he was pleading, the efforts of his voice having killed him. But this may be looked upon as a fiction, ſince he pleaded, a few days before his death, an important cauſe [M] ; and ſince Cicero, ſo far from ſaying that Hortenſius died in the above-mentioned manner, as he doubtleſs would have done had the Orator in queſtion met with ſuch an end, gives us reaſon to conclude otherwiſe. Conſult, with regard to all this affair, the remark [M]. Hortenſius married a daughter of C. Catulus in his younger days (l). I am not very ſure whether ſhe was likewiſe the daughter of Servilia (m) a Lady of as high quality as any in Rome. He was his ſon-in-law during Verres's trial. But nothing perhaps is more ſingular than his marriage with Marcia [N] wife

(l) Cicero, de Orat. lib. 3. ſub fin.

(m) Ex ſocru tua, fœmina primaria Servilia. Idem, Verr. 4.

[M] Some writers ſay .... that he quite loſt ... his voice, others have miſtaken this thought... But this may be looked upon as a fiction, ſince he pleaded, a few days before his death, an important cauſe.] The proof of the firſt of theſe particulars is found in the following paſſage of Quintus Serenus Samonicus.

Sic eſt Hortenſius olim
Abſumptus, cauſis etenim confectus agendis,
Obticuit, cum vox domino viuente periret,
Et nondum extincti moreretur lingua diſerti.

The ſenſe is,

" Hortenſius, worne with pleading, ſtill ſurvived
" His voice, which quite forſook him——

Glandorpius did not underſtand the meaning of theſe verſes. Deceſſit è vita, ſays he (45), ſub bellum civile Cæſ. & Pompeii ... clamore in actione cauſæ diruptus, ut indicat Q. Serenus. i. e. " He died in the time of " the civil war between Cæſar and Pompey ... having " burſt himſelf as Serenus relates, whilſt he was plead- " ing a cauſe with too great vehemency." The following words of Cicero do not agree with the paſſage above cited of Samonicus. Perpaucis ante mortem diebus una tecum ſocerum tuum defendit Appium... Q. Hortenſii vox extincta fato ſuo eſt, noſtra publico (46). i. e. " Not many days before his death, he and you " defended Appius your father-in-law... Hortenſius's " voice was ſilenced or loſt by his own fate, but ours " by that of the public."

(45) Glandorp. Onomaſt. pag. 405, 406.

(46) Cicero in Bruto.

[N] But nothing can be more ſingular than his marriage with Marcia.] Plutarch relates it in the manner following (47). Hortenſius deſired Cato to give him his daughter Porcia in marriage, ſhe being wife to Bibulus, and having had two children by him. Give her alſo to me (ſaid he to Cato) like a fruitful field wherein I may ſow children. I am ſenſible, ſays he, that, according to the common way of thinking of the world, there is ſome abſurdity in this ; but, in reality, can any thing be more excellent or more beneficial to ſociety, than not to ſuffer the fruitful field of a young woman to lie uncultivated ; and, on the other ſide, not to permit ſuch a one to bring too many children into a family, which is already burdened with them ? Not to mention that the reciprocal lending of wives, among men of honour, diffuſes virtue among a greater number of families, and forms a greater number of alliances in the State. But in caſe Bibulus ſhall not be willing to quite give up his pretenſions to Portia, I promiſe to reſtore her to him, after ſhe ſhall have brought me ſome children, which may prove a ſincere bond between you, him, and myſelf. Cato did not think proper to treat about this affair. But when Hortenſius told him he had a mind to Marcia, Cato's wife, conſidering that ſhe was ſtill very young, and that Cato had children enough ; the latter promiſed to acquieſce with his deſires, provided Martius, his wife's father, would agree to it. Martius gave his conſent, upon which Marcia was immediately tranſferred to Hortenſius. When ſhe became afterwards, both his widow, and the heireſs to his eſtate, ſhe was wife, a ſecond time, to her firſt huſband, a circumſtance which Cæſar did not omit in his Anti-Cato. " If he had need of a wife, ſays he (41), why did " he give her up to another ? And if he had no occa- " ſion for a wife, why did he take her back ? Does " not this ſhew that he employed this by way of " lucre, in order that, by lending a young wife to " Hortenſius, he might get her back very rich ?" Strabo (49, having related that the Tapyres (50), had a law among them, by which their huſbands gave up their wives to others, when they had had two or three children by them ; adds, that Cato had done the ſame thing, in order to gratify Hortenſius, who requeſted his wife Marcia ; and he obſerves that Cato did but follow an antient cuſton of the Romans. There is room to doubt whether this was their antient cuſtom ; for we not only find ſo few examples of it, that Tertullian cites only that of Cato (51) ; but we ſee alſo that Hortenſius owned there was ſomething very ſingular or very new, in his deſign, according to the common opinion of mankind. Δόξῃ μὲν γὰρ ἀνθρώπων ἄτοπον εἶναι τὸ τοιοῦτον, φύσει δὲ καλὸν καὶ πολιτικόν. Nam eſſe hominum quidem illud opinione novum (in this manner Xylander tranſlates) natura pulchrum tamen & civile (52). i. e. " This, in the opinion of the world, " ſeems ſtrange and odd ; however, it is naturally " decent and politic." He does not oppoſe to this opinion the antient laws, or the antient cuſtom or practice of the Romans, which ſo great a Civilian would not have failed to alledge on this occaſion ; he, I ſay, oppoſes only nature. Bodinus (53) anſwers Plutarch without reaſon, as though the latter had ſaid, in the life of Cato Uticenſis, that the Romans were allowed to lend their wives ; for this hiſtorian does not ſpeak of it, as of a cuſtom founded on the laws, or as a thing that was uſually practiſed ; on the contrary, he introduces Hortenſius, who owns that his propoſal ſeemed odd or new. The abovementioned Bodinus is very raſh, in not believing that Cato lent his wife ; for this is a ſtory which Thraſeas had taken from the writings of Munatius, Cato's friend. Cæſar would not have dared to reproach Cato for it, had it not been pretty well known (54). The reaſon on which Bodinus grounds his not believing that ſtory is a new fault : It is, ſays he, becauſe by a law enacted by Romulus, and according to the antient practice revived by Tiberius, relations uſed to chaſtiſe at pleaſure ſuch wives as committed adultery. But what does this make againſt Cato's wife, who was given up, by her father and huſband, to another man ? I ſhall not animadvert on the following words, Plutarchus & Strabo Parthos æque ac Lacedæmonios mutuas uxores amicis dare conſueviſſe ajunt (55), though they may very eaſily miſlead the reader : for who, in reading theſe words, would not conclude, but that Plutarch aſcribes this conduct to the Parthians, and that Strabo imputes it to the Lacedæmonians ? Nevertheleſs Bodinus's meaning is, that Strabo aſcribes it to the Parthians (56), and Plutarch imputes it to the Lacedæmonians. This way of quoting is but too common, and it miſleads people ; it ſeeming to give many teſtimonies or vouchers of the the ſame thing, when there really is but one. Bodinus ſeems to ſay, that both Plutarch and Strabo declare, that the Parthians, as well as the Lacedæmonians, uſed to lend their wives. I have read in Menage, that Caſaubon affirms that Plutarch ſpeaks of the marriage of Hortenſius and Marcia, as a thing he doubted of. Ad quem Strabonis locum notat Caſaubonus, Plutarchum de Catone rem ita narrare ut de ea dubitaſſe ſignificet (57). Menage had reaſon to declare that this is falſe : Plutarch does not expreſs his doubt with reſpect to the fact itſelf, but ſays only that this part of Cato's life is like that part of a play, where the plot is not opened ; that is, in my opinion, people formed a very different judgment of it.

It is to be obſerved, that when I anſwer Bodinus for aſcribing the abovementioned to Plutarch, I conſider that he cites the life of Cato Uticenſis ; for had he quoted the parallel between Lycurgus and Numa Pompilius, he would not have erred. Plutarch affirms there, that the King of Rome allowed huſbands to lend their wives, but I believe he is wrong in affirming (47) Plutarch. in Catone Utic. pag. m. 770.

(48) Idem, ibid. pag. 784.

(49) Strabo, lib. 11. pag. 355.

(50) A people living near the Parthians.

(51) Ex illa, credo, majorum & ſapientiſſimorum diſciplina, Græci Socratis & Romani Catonis, qui uxores ſuas amicis communicaverunt ... O ſapientiæ Atticæ! & Romanæ gravitatis exemplum! lenones Philoſophus & Cenſor. Tertull. in Apologet Socrates's example does not concern the Romans. Tertullian aſcribes to Cato the Cenſor, what ſhould have been ſaid of Cato Uticenſis.

(52) Plutarch. pag. 771.

(53) Bodin Method. Hiſt. cap. 4. pag. m. 78.

(54) Plutarch. in Catone, pag. 770.

(55) Bodin. Method. Hiſt. pag. 78.

(56) He ſhould have ſaid to the Tapyri, not to the Parthians.

(57) Menag. Amæn. Juris, cap. 10. I do not find this in Caſaubon's Notes on Strabo.

wife to Cato Uticenſis, and daughter to Marcius Philippus. He begged her of Cato by way of loan, and obtained her without much difficulty, though the child ſhe was at that time going with, ſhewed that there was no very great miſunderſtanding between Marcia and her huſband. He had a ſon, who proved the occaſion of great ſorrow to him; ſo that when Hortenſius pleaded for his nephew, he declared that he had made choice of him for his heir, in prejudice of his ſon; and yet, if Valerius Maximus may be credited, he left his eſtate to this unworthy ſon. See the following article.

ing this. Mr. Dacier thinks ſo too. "This is "true, ſays he (58), of Lycurgus; but it does not "appear to me in any manner that Numa ever had "ſuch a deſign. It might even be eaſily proved, "that this community of wives did not begin at Rome "under Numa, but much later; and that it was not "general."

(58) Dacier, in a marginal note of his tranſlation of Plutarch, in the parallel between Lycurgus and Numa, pag. 362, 363. Dutch edit. [pag. 399. Not. 10. tom. 1. Amſterd. edit. 1724.]

Lucian ſuppoſes that Marcia, being left a widow by Hortenſius, went to Cato, and beſought him moſt humbly to take her again. She declared to him, that being of years ſo as to be paſt child bearing, ſhe only deſired to be his wife nominally: She ſaid, that ſhe would lead a life of continence with him; and only wiſhed to divide with him the troubles and fatigues, which the unhappy ſituation of the affairs of the government had brought upon him. Lucian adds, that theſe words of Marcia ſtruck Cato; and although that was not a time proper for marriage, he yet granted her requeſt. It is true indeed that all the nuptial ceremonies were omitted, without even excepting that which is conſidered as the principal, and the completion of the work. Marcia did not lay aſide her widow's weeds, but embraced her huſband as a mother does her child.

Sic ut erat, mœſti ſervans lugubria cultus,
Quoque modo natos, hoc eſt amplexa maritum (59).

(59) Lucan. lib. 2. ver. 365.

Cato grieved ſo much at the calamities of his country, that, ever ſince the civil war, he deprived himſelf of diverſions of every kind: He let his beard grow, and ſpent his days like a man who was in a ſtate of mourning. Marcia's offers were accepted in a literal ſenſe. Lucian puts the following words into her mouth.

Dum ſanguis inerat, dum vis materna, peregi
Juſſa Cato, & geminos excepi fœta maritos.
Viſceribus laſſis, partuque exhauſta revertor
Jam nulli tradenda viro: da fœdera priſci
Illibata tori: da tantum nomen inane
Connubii: liceat tumulo ſcripſiſſe, Catonis
Martia: nec dubium longo quæratur in ævo,
Mutarim primas expulſa, an tradita, tædas.
Non me lætorum ſociam, rebuſque ſecundis
Accipis, in curas venio, partemque laborum.
Da mihi caſtra ſequi (60).

(60) Lucan. ibid. ver. 338.

"Whilſt nature yet with vigour fed my veins,
"And made me equal to a mother's pains,
"To thee obedient I thy houſe forſook,
"And to my arms another huſband took;
"My powers at length with genial labours worn,
"Weary to thee and waſted I return;
"At length a barren wedlock let me prove,
"Give me the name without the joys of love.
"No more to be abandon'd let me come,
"That Cato's wife may live upon my tomb,
"So ſhall my truth to lateſt times be read,
"And none ſhall aſk if guiltily I fled,
"Or thy commands eſtrang'd me from thy bed.
"Nor aſk I now thy happineſs to ſhare,
"I ſeek thy days of toil, thy nights of care.

ROWE.

It is my opinion, that had Lucian been as fond of fiction throughout his work, as in the above cited paſſage, he would not have been accuſed of adhering too cloſely to hiſtory, and of not throwing his work into a form that was ſufficiently poetical. But be this as it will, here follows what he ſays concerning the extreme rigidneſs of Cato.

Ille nec horrificam ſancto dimovit ab ore
Cæſariem, duroque admiſit gaudia vultu.
(Ut primum tolli feralia viderat arma,
Intonſus rigidam in frontem deſcendere canos
Paſſus erat, mœſtamque genis increſcere barbam,
Uni quippe vacat ſtudiiſque odiiſque carenti,
Humanum lugere genus) nec fœdera priſci
Sunt tentata tori: juſto quoque robur amori
Reſtitit: hi mores (61).

(61) Idem, ibid. ver. 372.

"Nor he, the chief, his ſacred viſage chear'd,
"Nor ſmooth'd his matted locks or horrid beard,
"Nor deigns his heart one thought of joy to know,
"But met his Martia with the ſame ſtern brow.
"For when he ſaw the fatal faction's arm,
"The coming war, and Rome's impending harm,
"Regardleſs quite of every other care,
"Unſhorn he left his looſe neglected hair;
"Rude hung the hoary honours of his head,
"And a foul growth his mournful cheeks o'erſpread.
"No ſtings of private hate his peace infeſt,
"Nor partial favour grew up in his breaſt,
"But ſafe from prejudice he kept his mind,
"Free, and at leiſure, to lament mankind.
"Nor would his former Love's returning fire
"The warmth of one connubial wiſh inſpire,
"But ſtrongly he withſtood the juſt deſire.

ROWE.

HORTENSIUS (QUINTUS) ſon of the preceding, behaved ſo unworthily of ſuch a father, that he had like to have been diſinherited by him [A]: but if he is the ſame who was Proconſul of Macedonia after the death of Julius Cæſar, we may preſume that he

[A] He had like to have been diſinherited.] Cicero hints pretty plainly, in his epiſtles (1), that Hortenſius's ſon was a worthleſs creature; and that his depraved diſpoſition (2), and a freedman called Salvius, had quite corrupted him. Illa Hortenſiana omnia fuere infantia: ita fiet homo nequiſſimus: à Salvio liberto depravatus eſt (3). He ſeems to ſay that his father did not love him (4); but let us hear Valerius Maximus, who is more than ordinary clear on this occaſion. Q. Hortenſii, qui ſuis temporibus ornamentum Romanæ eloquentiæ fuit, admirabilis in filio patientia extitit. Cum enim eo uſque impietatem ejus ſuſpectam & nequitiam inviſam haberet, ut Meſſallam ſuæ ſororis filium bæredem habiturus ambitus reum defendens judicibus diceret, ſi illum damnaſſent nihil ſibi præter oſculum nepotum in quibus acquieſcerat ſuperfuturum: Hac ſcilicet ſententia, quam etiam editæ orationi inſeruit, filium potius in tormento animi quam in voluptatibus reponens: tamen ne naturæ ordinem confunderet, non nepotes ſed filium bæredem reliquit (5). i. e. "The patience, which Hortenſius, "who was the glory of the Roman eloquence in the "age he lived in, diſcovered with regard to his ſon, "is wonderful. For notwithſtanding that he was ſo "highly exaſperated againſt him, on account of his "ungracious and ſhameful behaviour, that he de-"clared to the Judges, in a ſpeech he made in defence "of Meſſala, his ſiſter's ſon, whom he then intended "to appoint his heir, that, ſhould they condemn him, "the only comfort leſt him would be in the fondling "of grand-children: He ſhewed by this ſentence, "which he alſo inſerted in his ſpeech, when he pub-"liſhed it, that he looked upon his ſon as a torment, "rather than a pleaſure to him. However, that he "might not act contrary to the order of nature, he "appointed his ſon, and not his grand-children, his "heir." It is ſomething odd that Hortenſius ſhould have diſcovered, that he had appointed his nephew for his heir; for in caſe he thought that his ſon deſerved

(1) Epiſt. 3. lib. 6. ad Attic.

(2) Natura metuenda eſt; hæc Curionem, hæc Hortenſii filium, non patrum culpa corrupit. Ibid. lib. 10. Epiſt. 4.

(3) Ibid. Epiſt. 18.

(4) Ibid. Epiſt. 3. lib. 6.

(5) Val. Max. lib. 5. cap. 9. num. 2.

he changed his conduct. He ſided very warmly with the fautors of liberty; and joined ſtrenuouſly with Brutus, in order to raiſe ſuch armies as might be powerful enough to maintain the cauſe for which they had drawn the ſword (a). He was taken at the battle of Philippi; and put to death by way of reprizal, by Mark Anthony's command, upon the grave of Caius Antonius. Some are of opinion that our Hortenſius is the ſame with him who had ſided with Julius Cæſar againſt Pompey [C]. Now as thoſe who mention him intimate plainly enough that he was Hortenſius's only ſon, we may conſider him as the father of Q. HORTENSIUS CORBIO, and of MARCUS HORTENSIUS HORTALUS, the former whereof was a monſter of impurity and debauchery [D], and the latter fell into poverty; but was ſo wiſe as not to marry, till Auguſtus had given him money ſufficient to ſupport a family (b); but as the ſums beſtowed by the beneficence of that Emperor, were not ſufficient to ſupply the neceſſities of all the children who ſprung from this marriage, Hortalus implored the aſſiſtance of the Senate [E]. Tiberius rejected, at firſt, this petition with great ſeverity; but obſerving afterwards that the Senate diſapproved ſerved to be diſinherited, could not he bequeath or transfer his eſtate to his grand-children, as he ſaid he ſhould be forced to do, in caſe they ſhould condemn his nephew? A ſtrange grandfather ſure, not to think of his grandſons, but after the failure of his ſiſter's ſon! Valerius Maximus has perhaps maimed this incident, by ſuppreſſing ſome eſſential clauſes. Perhaps too we are to conſider Hortenſius's declaration no otherwiſe than as a rhetorical figure. There are ſome ſtratagems in this profeſſion, which our author knew how to make an advantage of. He wanted to excite the pity of the Judges, in diſcovering a ſtrong deſire to have his client diſcharged, as one who ſhould be as ſon to him. Others ſay that Hortenſius's wife inherited his eſtate (6); the wife, I ſay, which Cato had lent him, whom he took back after the death of Hortenſius.

(a) Cicero, Philipp. 10.

(b) Tacit. Ann. lib. 2. cap. 37.

(6) Plutarch. in Catone min. pag. 784.

[B] He was put to death by way of repriſal .... upon the grave of Caius Antonius.] To know what was meant by theſe repriſals, the reader muſt call to mind that Caius Antonius, brother to Mark Anthony, fell into Hortenſius's hands, during the diſorders and confuſions which followed Julius Cæſar's death, and that Brutus having heard that the Triumviri, in their fury, had put to death, among other illuſtrious perſonages, D. Brutus and Cicero, he therefore commanded Hortenſius to ſacrifice his priſoner to their manes (7), which was accordingly done. Such was the end of Caius Antonius, and in this manner was his death revenged.

(7) Plutarchus in Bruto. See alſo Velleius Paterculus, lib. 2. cap. 71. who declares that Hortenſius's ſon loſt his life in that war.

[C] Some are of opinion, that our Hortenſius is the ſame with him who had ſided with Julius Cæſar againſt Pompey.] A circumſtance which cauſes ſome difficulty here is, that Hortenſius's ſon was in Laodicea, in the year of Rome 702, and led a moſt ſcandalous life in that city (8). How is it probable then, will ſome ſay, that, two years after, he ſhould have ingratiated himſelf ſo well with Cæſar, that this conqueror ſhould entruſt him with the command of his troops, the day that he deſigned to croſs the Rubicon, and ſeize upon Ariminum, which was the firſt puſh to be made in the grand affair that was to determine the fate of the Empire? Yet this is what Cæſar did to Hortenſius, who was in his party (9). He, ſome time after, gave him the command of a fleet on the coaſt of Italy (10). We ought not to determine ſimply on appearances.

(8) Cicero, Epiſt. ad Attic. 3. lib. 6.

(9) Plutarch. in Cæſar. pag. 723.

(10) Appian. lib. 2. Brutus, Bell. Civil.

I do not find in Eutropius what Glandorpius (11) pretends to have taken from Book VI, viz. that Octavius and Libo, Pompey's Lieutenants, defeated this fleet of Hortenſius. It is Oroſius who informs us of this particular (12). However this be, Glandorpius inſiſts that the Admiral of this fleet is the ſame ſon of Hortenſius the Orator, of whom Valerius Maximus ſays ſo many ill things. He goes on a pretty good foundation here; for Cicero (13) does not leave us room to doubt, that Hortenſius's ſon in queſtion went over to Cæſar's party. I have not been able to find the time when he left it, nor in what manner he obtained the Pro-conſulate of Macedonia, an employment wherein he merited the applauſes of Cicero (14). Catanæus (15) confounding the father and ſon, falſely charges the Orator with joining in Pompey's party; with putting to death Caius Antonius, and being put to death by Mark Anthony.

(11) Onomaſt. pag. 406.

(12) Lib. 6. cap. 15.

(13) Epiſt. ad Attic. 4, 16, 17, 18. lib. 10.

(14) Philip. 10.

(15) In Plin. Epiſt. lib. 5.

[D] Q. HORTENSIUS CORBIO, ... was a monſter of impiety and debauchery.] Valerius Maximus (16), giving a liſt of thoſe children who have verified the proverb Heroum filii noxæ, forgets the ſon (17), but not the grandſon of Hortenſius. Q. Hortenſii .... nepos Hortenſius Corbio omnibus ſcortis abjectiorem & obſceniorem vitam exegit, ad ultimumque lingua ejus tam libidini cunctorum inter lupanaria proſtitit, quàm avi pro ſalute civium in foro excubuerat. i. e. "Hortenſius Corbio, grandſon to Q. Hortenſius, led a "life ſtill more miſerable and beaſtly than the "moſt abandoned whores; and at laſt his tongue "was no leſs proſtituted to the luſt of every one "in the ſtews, than his grandfathers had been "active for the ſafety of the citizens in the forum." Had Lipſius remembred, that this author mentions the grandſons of Hortenſius in the plural number, in Chap. IX of Book V, he would not have ſuppoſed (18) Hortenſius Hortalus, and Hortenſius Corbio, to be the ſame perſon. The character, which Tacitus gives the former, diſtinguiſhes him viſibly from the latter. Moreri and Hoffman commit the ſame error as Lipſius, ſince they cite Valerius Maximus, Chap. V. Book III; Tacitus in Book II of his Annals; and Suetonius in the life of Tiberius, with reſpect to Hortenſius's grandſon who was prodigiouſly diſſolute. Voſſius occaſioned their error, by his referring theſe three quotations to a grandſon of Hortenſius, as tho' they had related to the ſame perſon (19).

(16) Lib. 3. cap. 5.

(17) He ſpeaks of him on another occaſion, as has been ſeen in the note [A].

(18) Comment. in Tacit. Ann. lib. 2.

(19) Voſſius, de Hiſt. Latin. pag. 48.

[E] M. HORTENSIUS HORTALUS implored the aſſiſtance of the Senate] This ſpeech is found in Tacitus (20). He had brought with him his four little ſons; and ſhewing them to the Senate, he beſought them to ſhew ſome regard to the deſcendants of ſo many Conſuls and Dictators, en ſtirps & progenies tot Conſulum, tot Dictatorum. In Lipſius's (21) opinion this hyperbole is ſomething ſtrong, ſince the family of Hortenſius has given but one Conſul and one Dictator. He endeavours to excuſe Hortenſius, by ſaying that he perhaps had his mother's anceſtors in view. Ryckius (22) ſpeaks in a more confident manner; and lays it down as a thing undeniable, and thinks that Hortenſius had chiefly in view the Marcii Philippi, from whoſe family, according to him, Marcia, Hortalus's grandmother, deſcended. But this laſt circumſtance has not the leaſt ſhadow of probability; for, on one ſide, it does not appear that Hortenſius the Orator had above one ſon, who was grown up to man's eſtate when Cicero paſſed through Laodicea, in the year 702. On the other ſide, Cato could not be very young, when he reſigned Marcia to Hortenſius, ſince his daughter Porcia had, at that time, born two children (23). Now Cato died at forty eight years of age, the year of Rome 407 (24). If therefore we ſuppoſe, as it is very probable, that he was at leaſt five and thirty years old, when he gave up Marcia to Hortenſius; we muſt conclude that this marriage was ſolemnized in the year of Rome 694. It is not therefore poſſible, that the ſon of Hortenſius, whom Cicero ſaw in the city of Laodicea, in the year of Rome 702, ſhould be Marcia's ſon. But why ſhould we have recourſe to conjecture, there being a particular in Plutarch which decides the queſtion? Marcia was ſtill Cato's wife, during the expedition of Cyprus (25), that is, in the year of Rome 696. We muſt not omit that Hortalus is called a young man by Tacitus, under the year of Rome 769; which could not coincide very well with the ſuppoſition, that Hortenſius's only ſon is the debauchee hinted at by Cicero

(20) Annal. lib. 2. cap. 37.

(21) Comment. in Tacit.

(22) In Tacit. pag. 41.

(23) Plutarch. in Caton. min. pag. 770, 771.

(24) Ibid. pag. 794.

(25) Idem, ibid. pag. 777.

proved of it, he ſaid that in caſe they deſired it, he would give a certain ſum to each of Hortalus's ſons (c) [F]. They thanked him for it; but Hortalus, either out of fear, or from a greatneſs of ſoul, which he rouzed on that occaſion, ſaid not a word; and from that time, as Tiberius did not aſſiſt him in any manner, Hortalus fell by degrees into the extremes of miſery. Egere alii grates; ſiluit Hortalus, pavore an avita nobilitatis etiam inter anguſtias fortunæ retinens. Neque miſeratus eſt poſthac Tiberius, quamvis domus Hortenſii pudendam ad inopiam dilaberetur (d).

(c) Ducena ſeſtertia ſingulis qui ſexus virilis eſſent. Tacitus, ibid. Rijckius makes this amount to 5000 Ducatoons.

(d) Tacit. Ann. lib. 2. cap. 38.

and Valerius Maximus, who loſt his life a little after the battle of Philippi, in the year 712. But it is much more natural to conclude, that Tacitus was not ſo accurate as he ought to have been with reſpect to Hortalus's age, than to cavil about the ſpeech which Valerius Maximus had read, and which Hortenſius ſpoke a little before his death. Now it is manifeſtly ſuppoſed in this ſpeech, that he had but one ſon; for if Hortenſius, beſides the profligate youth who waited upon Cicero in the city of Laodicea, had had one ſon or more by Marcia, he would not have been obliged to appoint his grandſons for heirs, in default of a debauched ſon, and of Meſſala his nephew.

[F] Tiberius . . . . ſaid . . . . that he would give a certain ſum to each of Hortenſius's ſons.] This would incline one to ſuppoſe, that Hortalus had brought only his four ſons with him, and had left ſome daughters at home; ſo that, to ſpeak with accuracy, we muſt not ſay with Suetonius (26), that his wife had brought him four children; for had ſhe brought him no more, Tacitus would aſcribe an abſurdity to Tiberius. Neither do I think that, ſtrictly ſpeaking, it can be affirmed that Tiberius gave nothing to Hortalus (27). Did not he offer to give him a ſum of money, in caſe the Senate ſhould approve of his ſo doing? Was he not thanked for it? Could he ſuppoſe that the aſſembly would not be inclined to favour this poor Senator? It is therefore highly probable that this ſum was given, but as that Prince did not indulge him any further liberality, it did not prevent Hortalus from falling into want. Let not Suetonius be urged (28), who pretends that the benefactions which Tiberius beſtowed on the poor Senators, were made on certain conditions that excluded the perſon in queſtion. Theſe conditions, ſays he, were, that thoſe who deſired the benefactions, ſhould diſcover their indigence to the Senate (29); quo pacto pleroſque modeſtia & pudore deterruit, in quibus Ortalum Q. Hortenſii Oratoris nepotem. i. e. "The "greateſt part, through ſhame and modeſty, were "hindred by thoſe conditions; and, among the "reſt, Hortalus, Hortenſius the Orator's grand-"ſon." But it is a great falſity to aſſert, that either ſhame or modeſty prevented the grandſon of Hortenſius from fulfilling the condition. Did he not confeſs the miſerable ſtate to which he was reduced? Did not he bring his four ſons, in order to beſeech the Senate to indulge them their compaſſion? Did he not implore the Emperor to keep them from ſtarving? Nec ad invidiam iſta, ſed conciliandæ miſericordiæ refero: adſequentur florente te, Cæſar, quos dederis, honores; interim Q. Hortenſii pronepotes, divi Auguſti alumnos ab inopia defende (30). i. e. "Nor is this petition offered up "invidiouſly, but in order to excite compaſſion. O "Cæſar, theſe children, in the courſe of your auſpici-"ous reign, may attain thoſe honours which you will "pleaſe to beſtow on them; in the mean time pre-"ſerve them from want, for they are the great grand-"ſons of Hortenſius, and the foſter ſons of Auguſtus." Achilles Statius (31), who ſaid that our Hortalus is perhaps the perſon mentioned in the ſixty ſeventh epigram of Catullus, did not conſider that what he relates out of Tacitus, and which the reader has juſt now ſeen, relates to the year of Rome 769. I know very well that Catullus did not die in 697. Scaliger refutes, in a ſolid manner, this falſity of St. Jerom, but it is noways probable that he lived till the year 763. I have refuted Joſeph Scaliger on this head in the article CATULLUS. It is certain that the Hortalus of this antient Poet was Hortenſius rather than his grandſon; and I cannot forbear being ſurprized that Iſaac Voſſius, in the ſame book (32) where he aſſerts againſt Scaliger, that Catullus died in the year 704 or 705 of Rome, ſhould pretend (33) that the Hortalus of this Poet is the ſame with him mentioned by Tacitus.

(26) In Tiber. cap. 47.

(27) This is affirmed in the Dutch edit. of Moreri, under the word Hortalus.

(28) In Tiber. cap. 47.

(29) Tacit. Ann. lib. 1. cap. 75. ſays the ſame.

(30) Tacit. Ann lib. 2. cap. 37.

(31) Notis, in Catull. Epigr. 67.

(32) Obſervat. ad Catull. pag. 83.

(33) Pag. 252.

HORTENSIUS (JOHN) in French DES JARDINS, Phyſician to Francis I, was born in the neighbourhood of Laon in Picardy, and ſon to John Des-Jardins Captain of de Hamelle Caſtle, in the Dioceſe of Laon. He taught Claſſical Learning at Paris in Cardinal le Moine's College; and afterwards applying himſelf to the ſtudy of Phyſic, took his Bachelor's degree therein in the year 1514; that of Licentiate in 1517, and his Doctor's degree in 1519. It appears by the Regiſters of the Univerſity of Paris, that he was Regent-Doctor there in 1521, and Dean of the Faculty in the year 1524. Being perfectly well ſkilled in the Greek, he ſtrongly exhorted his pupils to ſtudy that language; and, in order that every one might have an opportunity to conſult Galen in the original, he made a preſent of the Greek edition of that antient Phyſician to the Library of the Faculty; for the Phyſicians of Paris at that time had a public Library in their ſchools (a). He acquired ſo great a reputation, that he was thought able to cure diſeaſes of every kind, provided the fatal hour was not come (b). That only was excepted [A]; ſo that the following proverb was commonly applied to him, Contra vim Mortis non eſt medicamen in Hortis (c). He is applauded in ſeveral books [B]: but he himſelf never printed any thing; and no compoſition of his was publiſhed after his death.

(a) Hemeræus, Diſſert. de Academ. Pariſienſi.

(b) Bulæus, Hiſt. Academ. Pariſienſis.

(c) He was called, in Latin, Hortenſius, or de Hortis.

[A] That only was excepted.] Vulgarly ſpeaking that is ſaying a great deal; but, in reality, it was excepting a great deal, for provided death does not interfere, there is no diſeaſe but is within the reach of the Phyſician's ſkill. Nature only, on this occaſion, may work a perfect cure. Nevertheleſs, according to our uſual way of judging things, figuring to our ſelves a numberleſs multitude of very poſſible Conditions, which would change the chain and the courſe of events, it is giving a very high idea of a Phyſician, to ſay that he will reſtore a patient to his health, provided a ſuperiour force does not interpoſe. This recalls to my mind the too blunt expreſſion aſcribed to certain Admirals, who, being ready to engage the enemy under favourable circumſtances, and after having taken the beſt meaſures, declared that they were ſure of gaining the victory, provided God would ſtand neuter, and leave the combatants to themſelves.

[B] He is applauded in ſeveral books.] Menage (1) cites Arnaud d'Oſſat, in his expoſition againſt James Charpentier; Renatus Moreau, in the Life of James Sylvius; du Boulay, in the Hiſtory of the Univerſity of Paris; Louïs d'Orleans, in the Plante humaine; Peter Myrault, in his books de Ordine judiciario; John Vaſſé, in an Epiſtle Dedicatory. Ei præterea & Martino Acaciæ & Michaëli Dumontio, Medicis Pariſienſibus doctiſſimis interpretationem librorum Hippocratis & Galeni de victus ratione in morbis acutis nuncupavit Johannes Vaſſæus Medicus & ipſe Pariſienſis doctiſſimus (2).

(1) Remarques ſur la Vie de Pierre Ayrault, pag. 150.

(2) Menagius, in eodem Volumine, pag. 512.

death. He married Jane Bourdin in 1520, and Mary le Tellier in 1541, leaving ſeven children by the former, and four by the latter. The ſettlements they had [C], and the real eſtate he left, are a proof that he had amaſſed great ſums. He was ſeized with an apoplexy of which he died, whilſt he was at an entertainment which he gave his relations and friends, on his birth-day, in the year 1547; a circumſtance which gave occaſion to a fine ſonnet of Des-Portes [D], which is taken, entire, into the remarks. Menage, who ſprung from John Des-Jardins by the mother's ſide [E], has given us his life (d), whence we have extracted this article.

(d) It is in Latin, in the volume he publiſhed at Paris in the year 1675 in 4to, containing the Life of Ayrault, of William Menage, &c. with a great number of remarks.

[C] The ſettlements . . . which his children . . . had.] Menage ſpeaks as follows (3), Prædivitem fuiſſe, ut tum erant tempora, teſtantur & ejus ædes plurimæ, & prædia multa & liberi undecim, qui nido majores pennas, ut Flacci verbis utar, extenderunt. By the particular account we have of the eleven children mentioned in this Latin paſſage, it appears that the daughters were married to perſons of figure; the firſt to William Verſoris, Counſellor in the Chatelet, ſon of John Verſoris, a famous Counſellor in the Parliament of Paris; the ſecond to John Metayer, Counſellor of the Exchequer; the third to Peter Ayrault, Lieutenant-Criminal of Angers. One of the ſons was Counſellor at the Chatelet, another was Canon of Senlis, and a third was Counſellor in the Exchequer. This Counſellor in the Chatelet left a ſon who exerciſed the ſame employment; was Echevin of Paris in 1600; and left a ſon, to whom was brought, among other children, the wife of Denys Godefroi, Hiſtoriographer of France. There ſurvived, among all the deſcendents of John Des-Jardins, only one perſon who bore his name, at the time that Menage was writing this book. Petrum Hortenſium militem ſtrenuum, qui Margaretam de Gravella uxorem ſibi adjunxit (4).

(3) Ibid. pag. 514.

(4) Menage, Remarques ſur la Vie de P. Ayrault, pag. 517.

[D] His death . . . . gave occaſion to a fine ſonnet of Des-Portes.] The reader will not be diſpleaſed to meet with it here. It was tranſlated into Latin by father Vavaſſeur, and Menage compoſed an epigram on the ſame thought (5).

Après avoir ſauvé par mon art ſecourable
Tant de corps languiſſans que la mort menaçoit,
Et chaſſé la rigueur du mal qui les preſſoit,
Gagnant comme Eſculape un nom toujours durable.
Cette fatale ſœur, cruelle, inexorable,
Voyant que mon pouvoir le ſien amoindriſſoit;
Un jour que ſon courroux contre moi la pouſſoit,
Finit quant & mes jours mon labeur profitable.
PASSANT, moi qui pouvois les autres ſecourir,
Ne dis point qu'au beſoin je ne me pus guerir,
Car la mort qui doutoit l'effort de ma ſcience,
Ainſi que je prenois ſobrement mon repas,
Me prit en trahiſon, ſain & ſans defiance,
Ne me donnant loiſir de penſer au trepas.

The ſenſe is,

" After having ſaved by my friendly art ſuch a number of languiſhing bodies which were threatned with death, and expelled the fury of the diſeaſe that attacked them; gaining, like Eſculapius, an ever-memorable name: That fatal, cruel, inexorable being, obſerving that my power leſſened his; one day, that he was highly exaſperated againſt me, at once put an end to my conqueſts which were ſo advantageous to human nature. Paſſenger, ſay not that I, who was ſo good a friend to the reſt of the world, could not, when ſick, perform a cure upon myſelf; for Death, who dreaded the efforts of my ſkill, as I was taking a meal calm and undiſturbed, ſeized me treacherouſly at a time when I did not harbour the leaſt ſuſpicion; not allowing me leiſure to think of the other world."

(5) All this is found ibid. pag. 514. The French Sonnet is in pag. 519.

[E] Menage . . . ſprung from John Des-Jardins by the mother's ſide.] Peter Ayrault, grandfather by the mother's ſide to Menage, married Anne Des-Jardins, daughter to our Hortenſius, and of Mary le Tellier his ſecond wife, who was of the ſame family from which Chancellor le Tellier deſcended (6).

(6) Menage, Remarques ſur la Vie de P. Ayrault, pag. 515, 517.

HORTENSIUS (LAMBERT) born at Montfort in the Province of Utrecht, the firſt of April 1518 [A], has been ranked among the learned men of the age in which he flouriſhed. He ſtudied with extreme application the learned languages at Louvain, under very excellent maſters, and alſo heard Ludovicus Vives on Logic. He publiſhed a tranſlation in Latin verſe, of Ariſtophanes's Plutus, with notes, and thereby ſhewed what advances he had made in the Greek tongue. He wrote ſeveral other books [B]. He taught ſchool a great number of years at Naerden in Holland; and very narrowly eſcaped being taken, when that town was plundered by the Spaniards in 1572, under the conduct of Frederic of Toledo, ſon to the Duke of Alva. This houſe had been plundered; a baſtard ſon of his had been killed before his face (a); and he himſelf, though a Prieſt, was going to be murthered; but by good luck a Gentleman (b), who had been his ſcholar, and carried arms under the Spaniards, happened to be there very ſeaſonably to ſave his life. It was obſerved that he was ſollicitous of ſaving nothing from the common wreck but his Notes on Lucan's Pharſalia. He wrote a Deſcription of the plundering and ſlaughter of Naerden, the manuſcript whereof is at Utrecht. Hortenſius did not long ſurvive that cataſtrophe, he dying in 1573 (c) in a country ſeat (d) near Naerden (e).

(a) Occiſo in oculis filio ſuo naturali. Valer. Andreas, Biblioth. Belg. pag. 613. But it is to be obſerved, that Brandt in his Flemiſh Hiſtory of the Reformation, under the year 1584, pag. 702, 703. ſpeaks of Jerom Hortenſius Miniſter of the Hague, and afterwards at Waſſenaer, who, he ſays, was ſon to Lambert.

(b) His name was Weldam.

(c) Anno à lanigena quæ ſoli propter doctrinam ſingularem parſerat altero, à nato Chriſto MDLXXIII. See the epitaph which the people of Naerden ſet up to his memory in St. Vitus's church, and which is found in Valerius Andreas.

(d) Freherus, in his Theatrum, pag. 1473, ſays in præſidio ſuburbano; but he ſhould have ſaid prædio.

(e) Ex Valer. And. Biblioth. Belg. pag. 613.

HORTENSIUS

[A] He was born at Montfort . . . the 1ſt of April 1518.] I differ, on this occaſion, from Valerius Andreas, my author, who declares that he was born in 1500. He doubtleſs was miſled by the following words of Swertius (1) Naſcitur anno CIↃ. IↃ. XVIII. Kal. Aprilis. He doubtleſs imagined that theſe numerical letters XVIII referred to the word Kalends, for want of calling to mind, that there is not, in the Roman Calendar, any eighteenth day before the Kalends of April. This is not the only reaſon which determined me to joyn XVIII with the preceding letters; I having been alſo prompted to it from the following conſideration. Valerius Andreas ſays that he was very young (2) when he came to ſtudy at Louvain, under Rutgerus Reſcius, Profeſſor of the Greek tongue; now he ſays in another place (3), that Reſcius died in 1545, at which time he had ſat near ſeventeen years in the Profeſſor's chair, and conſequently he did not begin to fill it till the year 1528. How therefore was it poſſible for Hortenſius to come and ſtudy very young under this Profeſſor, if he was born in 1500? But if he was born in 1518, all is eaſily reconciled. Paul Freherus (4) is miſtaken, both in the year of his birth and in that of his death, ſince he ſays that Lambert Hortenſius was born in 1501, and died in 1577.

(1) Athen. Belg. pag. 508.

(2) Admodum adoleſcens, pag. 615.

(3) Pag. 806.

(4) In Theatro, pag. 1473 Konig ſays likewiſe that he was born in 1501.

[B] He wrote ſeveral other books.] Here follow the titles of them: Enarrationes in Virgilii Æneïda, in fol. Explanationes in Lucani Pharſaliam, printed at Baſil in 1578, folio. Satyrarum in ævi ſui vitia & mores libri II. Epithalamiorum liber I. Seceſſionum civilium Ultrajectinarum libri VII. De bello Germano à Carolo V. Cæſare geſto libri VII. Tumultuum Anabaptiſtarum liber I (5).

(5) I have quoted this book in the remark [B] of the article PICARDS. I add here, that it was reprinted at Amſterdam in 1636, with the Hiſtoria Anabaptiſtica de factione Monaſterienſi of Conrad Heresbachius, under the direction of Theodore Strackius, Miniſter of Burik, in Cleves.

HORTENSIUS (MARTIN) a native of Delft in Holland, and Profeſſor of Mathematics in Amſterdam, might have made a very great progreſs in the Sciences he profeſſed, had he not been ſnatched away in the flower of his age (a) in the year 1639 [A]. The preface he wrote to a work of Philippus Lanſbergius, tranſlated by him into Latin, and wherein he raiſes very ſtrong objections to Tycho Brahe's ſyſtem, ſhews in what manner he cultivated the ſtudy of Aſtronomy; wherein he was aſſiſted by the converſations of Lanſbergius, to whom he was recommended by Beekman, Rector of the ſchool of Dort, a man very much ſpoken of in Des Cartes's hiſtory. That book of Lanſbergius is intitled, Commentationes in motum terræ diurnum & annuum, & in verum aſpectabilis cæli typum, and was printed at Middleburg in the year 1630, in 4to. Hortenſius alſo tranſlated the aſtronomical inſtitution of William Blaeuw; and wrote a Diſſertation de Mercurio ſub Sole viſo & Venere inviſa, inſcribed to Gaſſendi; and an anſwer to what Kepler had prefixed to his almanack in 1624 (b). The letters which Gaſſendi wrote to Hortenſius, ſhew that he had a ſingular eſteem for him. Hortenſius's letters to that famous Philoſopher are printed among thoſe of the latter. I thereby found that he was born in 1605 (c), and had been admitted Profeſſor in Amſterdam in the year 1634 (d). He did not appear ſatisfied with his condition; and he ſpeaks (e) of the ſpirit that prevailed in that renowned city, as a man who was highly offended becauſe people did not come to his Lectures, nor encourage the making of thoſe machines he had projected, and from which he expected ſuch a ſucceſs as would be ſuperior to any thing Tycho Brahe had done (f). He has left ſome Orations, one De utilitate & dignitate Matheſeos, and another De Oculo ejuſque præſtantia. He ſays in one of his letters to Gaſſendi (g), that the only reaſon why the publication of his anſwer to the book which Peter Bartholinus had publiſhed againſt him in defence of Tycho Brahe, was deferred, was for want of paper. In all probability that work kept company with the Pleiadographia (h), which our author left in manuſcript at his death. Des Cartes has not ſpoken advantageouſly of his abilities: As to the School-profeſſors, ſays he (i), not one of them underſtands my Geometry; no not Golius, much leſs Hortenſius, who has not made a ſufficient progreſs for that purpoſe.

(a) Val. And. Biblioth. Belg. pag. 652.

(b) See Voſſius, de Scient. Math. pag. 201, 202.

(c) Oper. Gaſſendi, pag. 418. tom. 6.

(d) Ibid. pag. 422. tom. 6.

(e) Ibid. pag. 429.

(f) Ibid. p. 423. See alſo pag. 429, and 432.

(g) Pag. 129.

(h) Val. And. Biblioth. Belg. pag. 652.

(i) Lettres, tom. 3. pag. 191.

[A] He might have made a very great progreſs in the ſciences he profeſſed, had he not been ſnatched away in the flower of his age in the year 1639.] I have not here followed Valerius Andreas, who ſays that he died in 1640. The circumſtance, which prompted me to depart from him is, a paſſage of Des Cartes that deſerves to be copied. I extract it from one of his letters to Father Merſenne (1), which, though it be not dated, yet fixes in a ſolid manner the date I want, ſince the author informs us in the very opening of his letter, that he wrote it in anſwer to a letter of the laſt day of December 1639. Here follows what I judged proper to tranſcribe from it. "Hortenſius being "in Italy ſome years ſince, ſet about calculating the "ſcheme of his own nativity; and told two young "men of this country who were with him, that he "ſhould die in 1639, and that they ſhould not live "long after him. Now he dying this ſummer as you "know, the two young men abovementioned were "ſeized with ſuch a pannic, that one of them is already "dead; and the other, who is Heinſius's ſon (2), is "ſo melancholy, and in ſo languiſhing a condition, "that he ſeems to do whatever lies in his power, to "verify the Aſtrologer's prediction. This indeed is a fine "ſcience, which kills people, who perhaps would not "otherwiſe have been ſick." It would be wrong in any perſon to object to me, that Des Cartes might have writ this letter, after the ſummer of the year 1640, and conſequently that he does not contradict Valerius Andreas; for he had ſo frequent a correſpondence with Father Merſenne, that ſuch an objection cannot but be falſe. But farther, I find in a letter of Boxhornius (3), dated the 13th of September 1639, that he bewailed the loſs of Hortenſius, who was lately dead.

(1) It is the 35th of volume 2. in the edit. of 1659.

(2) It is doubtleſs Nichol. Hortenſius, who died but in 1681. Baillet ſays the contrary, he declaring that Heinſius had two ſons; and that he of whom Des Cartes ſpeaks actually died, and that his name was Daniel.

(3) See Epiſt. Boxhornii, pag. 144. edit. Francof. 1679.

HOSIUS (STANISLAUS) Cardinal and Biſhop of Warmia, was one of the greateſt men that Poland ever gave birth to. He was born at Cracow in 1504. The reader will find in Moreri (a) an account of his actions, and the honours to which he was raiſed. It was not thought, whilſt he was one of the Preſidents of the Council, that he was maſter of all the addreſs requiſite for ſuch a ſtation [A]. His controverſial writings are very

(a) And ſtill better in the Sieur Bullart, Academie des Sciences, tom. 1. pag. 64, & ſeq.

[A] It was not thought, whilſt he was one of the Preſidents of the Council, that he was maſter of all the addreſs requiſite for ſuch a ſtation.] The Cardinal of Mantua dying the 2d of March 1563, thoſe who had preſided with him in the Council, ſent immediate notice of it to the Pope. He who was the firſt Preſident (1), required to have a Legate ſent that ſhould be above him. Hoſius deſired that leave might be given him to go into Poland; but Simonetta adviſed the Pope not to ſend a new Legate to Trent, hoping thereby to get poſſeſſion of the direction, not only becauſe Cardinal Seripando was grown weary of this Council, and did not care to have the direction of it any longer, but becauſe Cardinal Hoſius was a weak man, who was eaſily governed. Simoneta deſideroſo che la ſomma di guidare il Concilio reſtaſſe à lui, & havendo ſperanza di condurlo bene, con ſodisfattione del Pontefice, & honor proprio; conſiderando che Seripando era ſatiato di quel negotio, & poco inclinato a volerlo guidare, & che Varmienſe era ſemplice perſona, diſpoſta a laſciarſi reggere; miſe in conſideratione ael Pontefice, che, ritrovandoſi le coſe del Concilio, &c (2). Any one will eaſily perceive that Amelot has not tranſlated theſe words faithfully. Here follows his verſion. "Simoneta earneſtly deſiring to have the direction, and hoping to acquit "himſelf of it with honour, and to the Pope's ſatisfaction, repreſented to him; that as affairs were not "in a very happy poſture, the leaſt novelty or innovation would only make them go worſe; ſo that "he did not ſee, there was occaſion of ſending another Legate; that ſince Seripando who hated trouble, "had not a mind to have the direction of the Council; "and that the Biſhop of Warmia was a weak man, and "entirely governed by other people, he offered to go in "their ſtead, boaſting that he would ſteer the ſhip hap-"pily (3)." 1. The original does not ſay, that Hoſius was entirely governed by other people. 2. It is not true, that Simoneta told the Pope by letter, that Hoſius was a weak man. He thought ſo indeed, and built upon it; but then he did not inform the Pope of this circumſtance. Father Paul diſtinguiſhes very clearly what was thought, from what was written by him, which diſtinction ought to have been obſerved by the tranſlator.

It is to be obſerved that Cardinal Palavicino (4) pretends to prove, by authentic pieces, that whatever Father Paul advances with regard to the ambitious artifices of Simoneta is a falſhood.

(1) It was Cardinal Sepirando.

(2) Fra-Paolo, Iſtoria del Concilio di Trento, lib. 7. pag. m. 693. Compare with this the paſſage of book 6. pag. 548. It is page 517. in Amelot's tranſlation.

(3) Hiſt. du Concile de Trente, pag. 657, 658. edit. d'Amſterd. 1686.

(4) Hiſt. Concil. Trident. lib. 20. cap. 6. num. 6.

very little inferior to the beſt of that age. Caſaubon is not in the wrong, for charging him [B] with apologizing for what a controverſial writer had advanced, viz. that the holy Scriptures, were it not for the authority of the church, would have no more weight than Eſop's fables. The Jeſuit who criticiſed Caſaubon on that occaſion, did but betray his ignorance (b). Hoſius died near to Rome the 5th of Auguſt 1579. Moreri has committed ſome errors [C].

(b) See the remark [B].

This

[B] Caſaubon is not in the wrong for charging him &c.] Let us go on with the progreſs of that diſpute, and begin with the words of that great critic (5). Verbo Dei viventis ſcripto minus etiam tribuit (Scioppius in Eccleſiaſtico, cap. 135.) quam ſive Pighius, ſive alius qui dixit Patrum memoria: Scripturam, ſi auctoritate Eccleſiæ deſtituatur, non plus per ſe valere quam fabulas Æſopi. Quod blaſphemum dictum poſtea defendere auſus eſt Cardinalis Hoſius. i. e. "Scioppius in Eccleſiaſt. Chap. 135, aſcribes not ſo much authority to "the written word of the living God, as Pighius, or "another perſon, who ſaid in the memory of our Fa"thers, that were the Scriptures diveſted of the authority "of the Church, they would be of no more authority than "Eſop's fables; which blaſphemous expreſſion Cardi"nal Hoſius dared to defend." Eudæmon-Joannes the Jeſuit aſſerted, that this was a calumny invented by Brentius, and he pretends to prove it in the following manner. Jam vero quando non memorat, neque quis Æſopicæ hujus fabulæ auctor ſit; neque quo loco eam Hoſius defenderit, vel ne convinci impoſturæ poſſit, vel quod in aliquo alio rem eam legerat, & auctorem, & calumniam ex Hoſio detegam: videant deinde lectores, quàm bona fide infideles iſti fidei patroni diſputent. Is igitur lib. 3. in prolegomena Brentii, ipſo fere initio: Magna pars, inquit, libelli prolegomenorum Brentii non aliunde conſtant, quàm è ſannis, dicteriis, conviciis; in quo ſic etiam ludit Scripturis, ſic eas tractat jocularitèr; ut verè de ipſo dici poſſit, quod venerabili viro Petro à Soto falſo impingit, eum haud aliter Scripturis, quàm Æſopi fabulis uti. Non eſt igitur ea Catholici cujuſquam Scriptoris vox, ſed calumnia Brentii: quam vir illuſtriſſimus falſo in virum doctiſſimum excogitatam, in auctorem ipſum vere convenire defendit (6). i. e. "Now "ſince he does not mention who was the author of "this Eſopic fable, nor in what place Hoſius defended "it, and this either to prevent his being found guilty "of an impoſture, or becauſe he had read this inci"dent of ſome other perſon; I will point out both "the author and the calumny from Hoſius himſelf; "and after this let the reader judge, in how inge"nuous a manner theſe faithleſs defenders of the faith "diſpute. Hoſius therefore, in Book III, in oppoſi"tion to the Prolegomena of Brentius, almoſt at the "beginning ſays; the greateſt part of the Prolegomena "of Brentius, are made up merely of ſneers, taunts and "reproaches, wherein he is ſo ludicrous with the Scrip"tures, and treats them in ſo burleſque a manner, that "we may juſtly ſay of this writer, what he falſely aſ"cribes to the venerable Peter à Soto; that he uſed the "Scriptures juſt as one would uſe Eſop's fables. This "therefore is not the aſſertion of any Catholic writer, "but a calumny of Brentius, which our moſt illuſtrious "author ſhews to be a falſe invention with regard to "that very learned man, and to belong properly to the "inventor himſelf." We here have four things. I. A complaint that Caſaubon did not ſpecify the place in Hoſius's work where this is to be found. II. That Brentius accuſes Soto of making the ſame uſe of the Scriptures as of Eſop's Fables. III. That Hoſius aſſerts that ſuch an accuſation is a ſlander with reſpect to Soto, and very true with regard to Brentius. IV. That theſe words of Hoſius gave occaſion to the reflection or reproach mentioned by Caſaubon. The firſt of theſe four particulars is juſt. We cannot complain too much againſt the negligence of thoſe writers who do not quote the particular chapter, in accuſations of importance. Great authors are moſt ſubject to this fault; they imagine that the public will believe them on their bare words, and ſo they will not give themſelves the trouble to quote: it is enough for them to ſay, Plutarch, Cicero, St. Auſtin, ſay this. Numberleſs readers had rather give credit to what they ſay, or continue in doubt, than be at the trouble of verifying ſuch an aſſertion. Although Caſaubon did not really intend to hinder any perſon from diſcovering whether his accuſation was true or falſe, he yet has given occaſion to ſuch a ſuſpicion. Why did he quote after ſo random a manner? The ſecond and third of theſe four things form two indiſputable facts (7), but then they are abſolutely nothing to the diſpute itſelf. But the fourth is a notorious blunder of the Jeſuit, as the reader will ſee below. The confidence with which he accuſes Caſaubon of ſlandering Cardinal Hoſius, raiſes I know not what prejudices to the diſadvantage of that Critic; but when we ſee the apologiſt for Caſaubon ſtop ſhort, and flatly own that he has no book of Hoſius, we are prompted to conclude that the accuſation of Eudæmon-Joannes is well grounded. Si nihil gravius dixit Hoſius, erit hæc in Brentium calumnia, non in Spiritum S. blaſphemia. Ego Pighii, Hoſii, nihil habeo, nec Hermanni, cui blaſphemam hanc Scripturæ cum Æſopi fabulis comparationem tribuentes viros magnos audivi (8). Can one eaſily believe that a Miniſter who undertakes to refute the cenſurer of Caſaubon ſhould not ſearch for Hoſius's works till he finds them? Are they ſo hard to be met with? One is apt therefore to ſuſpect, that this confeſſion of his want of them is a ſubterfuge, invented on purpoſe that we may not be forced to own this Cardinal's ignorance. However, the reader need not be in pain about Caſaubon, he charging Hoſius with nothing but what is perfectly true. Fingamus autem nunc verum eſſe, theſe are Hoſius's words (9), in the ſame book quoted by Eudæmon-Joannes, quod tu ſcripſiſſe neſcio quem narras, nam nomen non exprimis, ac fieri poteſt ut ſit commentum tuum, Scripturas valere quantum fabulas Æſopi, ſi deſtituantur autoritate Eccleſiæ. Cedo, Brenti, num hic minus reverenter de Scripturis loquutus eſt, quam qui vocat eam librum Hæreticorum (10), cum tamen nullorum ſit minus quam Hæreticorum: eſt enim Catholicorum propria, qui tot ſeculis in ejus poſſeſſione præſcripſerunt. Et potuit illud tamen pio ſenſu dici, quem homo pius, qui charitatem habeo, quæ non cogitat malum, ex iis verbis eliceret. Nam revera, niſi nos Eccleſiæ doceret autoritas hanc ſcripturam eſſe canonicam, perexiguum apud nos pondus haberet. i. e. "Let us take it "for granted that it is true, which you declare to "have been written by ſome one or other, for you "name no perſon, and it may perhaps be a fiction of "your own, viz. that the Scriptures, were it not for "the authority of the Church, would be of no more "value than Eſop's fables. But Brentius, did this "man ſpeak leſs reverently of the Scriptures, than he "who calls them the Book of Heretics, when indeed "they belong to none leſs than to the Heretics; theſe "being certainly the property of the Catholics, who, "by a poſſeſſion during ſo many ages have a right to "them? Nevertheleſs theſe words might have been "ſaid in a pious ſenſe, which a pious man, who has "a ſpirit of charity and harbours no evil thought, "may draw out of them. For indeed, did not the "authority of the Church teach us, that theſe Scriptures "are canonical, they would have very little weight "with us."

[C] Moreri has committed ſome errors.] I. It was not to Pavia, but to Padua, that Hoſius's relations ſent him to ſtudy. Moreri might have found his error, had he known that Lazarus Bonamici, whom he declares to have been Hoſius's maſter, was Profeſſor in Padua. Du Sauſſai (11) ſuppoſes that Hoſius having been ſent into Italy, by the advice of Peter Thomicki Biſhop of Cracow, ſtopt at Bologna. Now this is not diſtinguiſhing particulars juſtly. He ſhould have ſaid that Hoſius having ſtudied ſome time at Padua, went to Bologna, and there took his degrees of Doctor of Laws. Patavii, dein Bononiæ . . . Juriſprudentiæ induſtriam primo addixerat, & lauream ſub ipſo Hugone Boncompagno qui S. S. Gregorii XIII. nomine dein præfuit, poſtremo adeptus eſt (12). i. e. "He firſt applied "himſelf to the ſtudy of the Law in Padua, and after"wards in Bologna; and at laſt took his degree "under Hugh Boncompagnus, who afterwards ſat in "the Pontifical chair, and was called Gregory XIII."

(5) Caſaubon, in Baronium, Exercit. 1. cap. 33. pag. m. 134.

(6) Andr. Eudæmon-Joannes, Caſtigat. Exercitat. Iſaaci Caſauboni, lib. 2. cap. 5. pag. 147.

(7) Hoſius's words quoted by Eudæmon-Joannes, are found in book 3. of Brentius's Prolegomena, pag. 196. Colen. edit. of 1558, folio.

(8) Jacobus Capellus, Vindic. If. Caſaub. lib. 3. cap. 5. pag. 78.

(9) Hoſius, lib. 3. in Prolegom. Brentii, pag. 230, 231.

(10) Hoſius had ſaid juſt before that Luther called the holy Scriptures the Book of Heretics. Gretſer remarks this alſo Proleg. Exam. Myſterii Pieſſæani, pag. 90. and cites Luther's words ex Poſtil. Eccleſ. Domin. 8. poſt Trinitat.

(11) Continuat. de Script. Eccleſ. cap. 32. pag. m. 23.

(12) Thuan. lib. 68. ſub fin. pag. m. 297.

This Cardinal was thought to be the author of an anonymous piece that was highly injurious to the Swiſs, which was refuted by Bullinger, in the preface to Joſias Simler's treatiſe de æterno Dei filio (c).

(c) See Hottinger in Pentade Diſſert. Miſcell. pag. 214.

He certainly (d) wrote the anonymous piece juſt mentioned. He compoſed it in 1564, and intitled it, Judicium & Cenſura de Judicio & Cenſura Miniſtrorum Tigurinorum & Heidelbergenſium de dogmate contra adorandam Trinitatem in Polonia nuper ſparſo. It has been inſerted in the collection of his works (e), and I don't doubt but that it is taken into the editions which the author himſelf publiſhed. I believe that the moſt complete edition of his works, is that of 1584 [D]. It contains a volume of poſthumous works, among which are a great number of letters, where Cardinal Hoſius repeats often the ſame particulars, viz. that the heretics muſt be extirpated, and their diviſions diſcovered ſufficiently the injuſtice of their pretended reformation. He had ſtudied with great application the writings which the Zuinglians and Lutherans had publiſhed againſt one another, and thoſe concerning the violent diſputes which had broke out among the Lutherans. He was for ever drawing odious concluſions from them; and he artfully took advantage of this circumſtance, viz. that theſe new Doctors wrote books in defence of penal Laws againſt thoſe who erred; and that ſuch as were moſt powerful among the Schiſmatics which divided the Lutherans, baniſhed, impriſoned, &c. thoſe Lutherans who differed from them.

(d) Crenius, Part 12. Anim. pag. 65. ſays only, that it is reported.

(e) From pag. 669. to pag 707. tom. 1. of the Colen edit. My copy is dated, in the title 1639.

HOSPINIAN

This ſhews the ſecond falſity of Moreri. He ſays that Hoſius took his Doctor's degree at Pavia. III. He was made Biſhop of Culm, at the requeſt of King Sigiſmund I: but this is another error, Sigiſmund Auguſtus having procured him that Biſhopric. IV. How could it have been poſſible for Sigiſmund I to ſend him to Rome, to Pope Julius III? for he died in 1548, and this Pope was not raiſed to the Papal throne till 1550. V. He ſhould not have ſaid, that retiring to Poland, after the concluſion of the Council, he wrote thoſe admirable works which are extant of his; for he is declaring, that he had not wrote any books before that time, and yet it is certain, that his anſwer to Brentius was printed at Colen in 1558; it is a folio volume, and conſiſts of four hundred pages. His book intitled Confeſſio Catholicæ fidei Chriſtiana (13), had been publiſhed already in Mentz. His work De Communione ſub utraque ſpecie, that De Sacerdotum conjugio, and that De Miſſa vulgari lingua celebranda, had been publiſhed at Paris in 1561 (14). Du Sauſſai (15) ought to be cenſured a little here; he inſerting moſt of theſe works in the catalogue of books which Hoſius cauſed to be printed after the holding of the Council. VI. He ſhould not have ſaid in general, that there were thirty two editions of Hoſius's works during his life-time; but ought to have made ſome exception to this, as Bullart has done. Several of his works, ſays he (16), have been printed thirty two times, during his life, in the chief cities of the Chriſtian world; and tranſlated into French, Italian, German, Flemiſh, Poliſh, Engliſh, Scotch, and the Armenian language. De la Rochepozai (17) is wrong in making no exception. Read the following remark.

(13) See the preface to his Anſwer to Brentius's Prolegomena.

(14) Oldoinus, in Athen. Romano, pag. 615.

(15) In Continuat. de Scriptor. Eccleſ. pag. 23.

(16) Bullart, Academie des Sciences, tom. 1. pag. 70.

(17) In Nomenclatore Cardinalium, pag. 151.

I take no notice of what Moreri ſays, concerning the reaſons which obliged Cardinal Hoſius not to be preſent at the twenty fourth ſeſſion. He declares that it was becauſe Hoſius did not approve thoſe deciſions which had been made with reſpect to clandeſtine marriages. It is very certain that he diſapproved of this deciſion, and endeavoured three or four times to get it repealed, a circumſtance which made him be looked upon as an obſtinate man (18); but it is no ways certain that his abſence is grounded on the reaſon given by Moreri; for he was preſent in the precedent ſeſſion, notwithſtanding he diſapproved part of the particulars which had been decreed therein, with reſpect to the ſacrifice of the maſs. He did not ſcruple to oppoſe them. Why therefore did he not dare to do as much with reſpect to clandeſtine marriages? Would he not have been ſeconded by Cardinal Simonetta his colleague, and by ſome others? Did he not ſend his opinion, in writing, which was contrary to the decree? Did he not declare, in writing, that he referred with regard to all thoſe things, to the Pope's judgment? In a word, his ſickneſs was very real, and of very long continuance. Theſe are moſt of the reaſons which Palavicino (19) employs to refute a ſtory adopted by Father Paul, viz. that Hoſius pretended to be ſick purpoſely to prevent his being preſent at the ſeſſion, in which the decree with regard to clandeſtine marriages was to paſs into a law. Sometimes writers have reaſon to ſay, that the ſickneſſes of perſons in high ſtation are either counterfeit, or mere political grimace; but then Hiſtorians who are over ſpeculative, are alſo ſometimes miſtaken in making ſuch aſſertions.

(18) Palavic. Hiſt. Conc. Trid. lib. 22. cap. 9. num. 6.

(19) Ibid. lib. 23. cap. 7. num. 17.

[D] I believe that the moſt complete edition of his works, is that of 1584.] It was printed by Cologne by Maternus Cholin, and conſiſts of two volumes in folio. The firſt volume containing the works which had been already publiſhed, but then they were printed, as laſt reviſed by the author. The ſecond volume conſiſts of pieces that had never been printed; and which were collected by Staniſlaus Reſcius, who dedicated them to Stephen Battori, King of Poland. His Dedication is dated from Rome the 1ſt of September, 1582. From the manner in which Crenius delivers himſelf (20), I conclude that the Treatiſe entitled Judicium & Cenſura, &c. is not inſerted in the Antwerp edition of 1566 in folio; but I think it is in the Venice edition which the author himſelf dedicated to Pope Gregory XIII, the 15th of Auguſt 1573. He had reviſed and enlarged his works, for that edition. He dedicated the firſt treatiſe of it to Henry de Valois, King of Poland; and dates the Epiſtle Dedicatory, the ſame day with that of the whole volume. This firſt treatiſe is entitled Confeſſio Catholicæ Fidei Chriſtianæ. The author had wrote part of it three and twenty years before; and that part being ſent to Rome by the Archbiſhop of Geneva, was approved in that City; ſo that Cardinal Otho Truchſes, Biſhop of Auſburg, had it printed in his own City of Dillingen. The things that were wanting having been added, the whole work was printed at Mentz, under the direction of the Archbiſhop of Gneſna. This edition was ſoon followed by others. Hoſius's name was not yet prefixed to the work; and was not printed till Ruard Tapper intreated the author to put his name to it, becauſe it was uſual in Germany to diſcourage the ſale of anonymous books (21). This met with the beſt reception of any of Hoſius's works. Pope Pius IV made Paulus Manutius print it in Rome (22). If there be no hyperbole in the thirty two editions ſpoken of (23), it muſt relate chiefly to this piece. Reſcius extends it to all the works publiſhed by Cardinal Hoſius: Ipſo etiam Authore vivente bis & trigeſies in præcipuis Chriſtiani Orbis urbibus, Latinâ, Germanicâ, Gallicâ, Flandricâ Linguâ omnes Hoſii Libri typis excuſi, in Polonicam etiam & Italicam tranſlati videbantur, & fortaſſe etiam in Armenicam, ſicut ex ſermone viri cujuſdam in hac urbe illuſtriſſimi accepimus (24); i. e. "All Hoſius's works were printed thirty two "times in his life-time, in the chief cities of Chriſten- "dom, in the Latin, German, French and Flemiſh "tongues; they were tranſlated into Poliſh and Ita- "lian, and perhaps into the Armenian language, as "I have been told by a moſt illuſtrious man in this "city." But as his poſthumous writings, which make a pretty large volume in folio, ought to be excepted, I had juſt reaſon for anſwering Moreri's too general expreſſion on this occaſion.

(20) Crenius, Animadv. Part. 12. pag. 65.

(21) Extracted from Hoſius's Dedication, to Henry de Valois King of Poland.

(22) See the ſame Epiſt. Dedicat.

(23) See the preceding remark citation (16).

(24) Stan. Reſcius, Epiſt. Dedicat tom 2 Operum Hoſii, fol. 3 verſo. edit. Coloniæ apud Cholinum 1584.

HOSPINIAN (RODOLPHUS) in Latin Hoſpinianus, was one of the greateſt writers that Switzerland has given birth to. He was born at Altorf, a village of the county of Kiburg in the canton of Zurich, the 7th of November 1547; and was ſent, at ſeven years of age, to Zurich, there to begin his ſtudies. He made a great progreſs in them, under the direction of John Wolphius (a) his uncle on the mother's ſide; and having loſt his father (b) in 1563, he found a moſt affectionate Patron in Rodolphus Gualterus (c) his godfather. He left Zurich in order to viſit the other Univerſities in March 1565, and ſtaid two years in Marpurg, where he diſtinguiſhed himſelf by the affiduity with which he applied himſelf to his ſtudies, and by his good behaviour. He did the ſame at Heidelberg during the ſix months he ſpent in that city; after which he was recalled by his Superiors, and received into the miniſtry in the year 1568, and this was to go and preach twice a week in a country church, four or five leagues from Zurich. He diſcharged theſe ſeveral duties very exactly for eight years together, though he had a great deal of other buſineſs in the city; for he was appointed maſter of the third claſs or ſchool in 1569, and was made Proviſor of the Abbey-ſchool in 1571. He was Proviſor of Caroline-ſchool five years after; and it was a kind of Siſyphean ſtone, which he rolled with prodigious patience during nineteen years [A]. He obtained the freedom of the city (d) in 1569, and was happily married the ſame year [B]. His paſtoral labours were ſomewhat leſſened in 1576, he being appointed Miniſter of a Church that ſtood but a league from Zurich. Though his ſchool engroſſed ſo much of his time, he yet had courage enough to undertake a noble work of a vaſt extent [C]. As he devoted all his leiſure moments to the ſtudy of Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, he laid down the plan

(a) He was a Miniſter, and has publiſhed ſeveral books.

(b) He was a Miniſter in Altorf.

(c) He was a famous Miniſter, and wrote ſeveral Homilies in Latin.

(d) Jus Civitatis Tigurinæ rara felicitate ipſi collatum eſt. Heideg. ubi infrà Citat. (e).

[A] It was a kind of Siſyphean ſtone, which he rolled with prodigious patience during nineteen years.] I borrow this thought from the author of his Life. Hanc quoque Spartam ornavit, ſays he (1), quantum potuit, ſaxumque hoc vere Siſyphium volvit revolvitque, & novemdecim annorum orbe circumegit indefeſſus athleta pari & induſtria & ſucceſſu. i. e. "He alſo adorned this pro- "feſſion exceedingly, and rolled this truly Siſyphean "ſtone with incredible labour during nineteen years, "with equal induſtry and ſucceſs." What he ſays a little afterwards is very judicious. He is ſurprized that Hoſpinian's genius was not debaſed by theſe painful employments. Ferreum certe adamantinumque dixeris qui tot labores exantlare, & ſimul ingenium à ſitu & ſqualore vindicare poſſet.

(1) Jo. Henr. Heidegger, in Vita Hoſpiniani, pag. 8.

[B] He was happily married in 1569.] His wife was Anne Lavater, daughter of Lewis Lavater, at that time Archdeacon of Caroline church, and afterwards principal Miniſter. He was ſon to Rodolphus Lavater, Burgomaſter of Zurich. The mother of Anne Lavater was daughter to Henry Bullinger, one of the chief Reformers. Our Hoſpinian lived in great unity for upwards of thirty years with his wife; Annoſque pluſquam triginta concorde in matrimonio tenuit (2); and had fourteen children by her, the youngeſt of whom, Elizabeth, was living in 1681. She was the widow of Rodolph Stuckius, fourſcore and eight years of age; and as ſhe had preſerved her judgment and memory, ſhe furniſhed materials to the author of her father's life. Quæ annum agens 88, ſic ſatis vegeta etiamnum integro judicio & memoria, ex qua non pauca mihi ſuggeſſit hiſtoriam hancce locupletantia, pollet (3). John Henry Hospinian, her brother, was Miniſter of Bulac church, and Dean of the Chapter of Reinſburg. Rodolphus Hospinian, his brother, Profeſſor of Hebrew in Zurich, and Deacon of the Caroline Church, left two ſons, Rodolphus Hospinian, who was Provoſt of the Chapter of the ſame city, when Heidegger was writing the Life of our Rodolphus, and John Henry Hospinian, Miniſter of the Church of Glattfield. Heidegger gives an account of ſeveral other perſons deſcended from our Rodolphus, who loſing his wife in 1612, made ſuch reflections as became a good Chriſtian, and it was not long before he ſought for conſolation in a ſecond wife. Patienter tamen domeſticam illam calamitatem, utcunque acerbam, tulit, memor utique, & mortalem ſe duxiſſe, & ad æternam beatitudinem præmiſiſſe. Conſolabantur etiam mox orbitatem ejus ſecundæ nuptiæ cum matrona honeſtiſſima Magdalena Wirzia, nobilis & eximii viri Conradi Wirzii, Præfecti quondam Vadivillani, filia, bonis omnibus contractæ, & d. XIII. Maji An. M. DC. XII. ſolenniter celebratæ (4). i. e. "He yet ſubmitted with patience to "this domeſtic and bitter calamity, calling to mind "that he had married a mortal woman, and that ſhe "was gone before him to everlaſting bliſs. He con- "ſoled himſelf for his widowhood ſome time after, "by his marrying for his ſecond wife a moſt virtuous "matron named Magdalen Wirz, daughter to that "renowned and good man Conrad Wirz, formerly "Governor of Wediſchewyl; which nuptials were "ſolemnized the 13th of May, 1612." He had found by experience, that a wife did not interrupt his ſtudies in any manner. Cujus conſortium tantum abeſt ut, quod Romanenſes noſtris objiciunt, impedimentum aliquod ſtudiis ejus piis objecerit, ut magno illi contra & dulci ad omne opus bonum incitamento adjumentoque fuerit (5). i. e. "Whoſe company and fellowſhip was ſo far from "being an hindrance to his pious ſtudies, as the Ro- "maniſts object to us, that it was a ſweet excitement "and help to every good work."

(2) Idem in Vita Hoſpiniani, pag. 9.

(3) Idem, ibid.

(4) Idem, pag. 23.

(5) Heidegger, ibid.

[C] He . . . . had courage enough to undertake a noble work of a vaſt extent.] This was the Hiſtory of the Errors of Popery. The circumſtance which firſt ſuggeſted this thought was, upon his engaging in converſation, in a country alehouſe, with the landlord, who was ſo ſilly as to imagine, that the monaſtic life came immediately from Paradiſe. Faſſum aliquando ferunt, cum illa excurſione neceſſum haberet in hoſpitio pernoctare, hoſpitem ruſticum non incurioſum crebra ſecum colloquia miſcentem, & de Origine Papatus, vitæ in primis Monaſticæ, quam ille pro ſimplicitate ſua ex Paradiſo arceſſendam ridiculè ſuſtinuerit, anxiè inquirentem, anſam ſibi libros de Origine errorum ſcribendi præbuiſſe (6). He conſidered that the Papiſts, when defeated by the holy Scriptures, had recourſe to tradition; and were for ever vaunting their antiquity, and deſpiſed the Proteſtants for their being ſo modern. Now Hoſpinian, to deprive the Papiſts of this ſanctuary, ſearched into the riſe and progreſs of the Romiſh doctrines and ceremonies; and by what gradations the truth, which had been taught by Chriſt and his Apoſtles, had given way to innovations. Impetum concepit animo ſuo plane heroicum, & laude nunquam intermoritura digniſſimum fictitiæ illius vetuſtatis ſpectrum debellandi, Gibeonitaſque artes & fraudes, monſtratis genuinis errorum, qui paulatim Eccleſiam inundaverant, originibus detegendi, convellendique. Et magnæ quidem molis, immenſique laboris opus aggrediebatur, cùm de cæleſti doctrina, & ceremoniis veræ primitivæ Eccleſiæ, tum de inclinatione & depravatione ejuſdem doctrinæ, deque ceremoniarum mutatione, auctione, & progreſſu iis ſeculis, quæ Chriſtum & Apoſtolos primùm, deinde verò Conſtantinum Imperatorem, imprimis autem Gregorium M. ſecutæ ſunt (7). i. e. "He meditated a deſign that was truly "heroic, and worthy of immortal honour, viz. of "ſubduing that ſpectre of fictitious antiquity; and of "diſcovering and rooting out all their gibberiſh arts "and frauds, by exhibiting the real and genuine "origin of thoſe errors, which overſpread the church "by inſenſible degrees. And indeed the work in "queſtion was of vaſt importance and of immenſe la- "bour, it being to treat, not only of the celeſtial "doctrine, and the ceremonies of the truly primitive church;

(6) Ibid. pag. 8.

(7) Ibid. pag. 11.

plan of a work, which might ſhew the Roman Catholics, that it is idle in them to boaſt of the conformity of their doctrines to antiquity. He could not complete his work; but then he publiſhed conſiderable parts of it [D], which gained him great reputation; and obliged his Superiors to take him out of the duſt of the ſchools, in order to fix him in a higher ſtation. He was appointed Arch-deacon of Caroline Church the 25th of September 1588; ſix years after which he was appointed Miniſter of the Abbey Church; a function, which was ſo much the more commodious, as it did not prevent much his continuing the great work he had in view. The work he publiſhed on the Euchariſt, and that which he intitled, Concordia diſcors, exaſperated the Lutherans in a high degree. They exaſperated him by their anſwers [E], to which he did not finiſh his reply, becauſe

" church; but likewiſe of the decay and corruption " of that doctrine, as well as of the change, increaſe " and progreſs of theſe ceremonies; firſt in thoſe ages " which followed our Saviour and his Apoſtles, and " then in thoſe which followed the Emperor Conſtan- " tine, but particularly in thoſe ages which came after " Gregory the Great." He intended to write chiefly concerning Baptiſm, the Euchariſt, Churches, Feaſts, Faſts, Orders, Monks, the Pope's Primacy, and Burials (8). He alſo began to write the Lives of the Popes, and ſome animadverſions on Gratian. Anti-Gratianum inſuper moliebatur, quo demonſtrare inſtituerat, Gratianum in ſuo Decreto multa falſa, pugnantia, commentitia & notha recitare, tum vero impudenter, fallaciter, malitioſe & impie corrumpere (9). He was above forty one years of age when he meditated this vaſt deſign.

(8) Heidegger, ibid.

(9) Idem, ibid.

[D] . . . he publiſhed conſiderable parts of it.] Here follows a catalogue of the books he publiſhed. The firſt was an Oration de origine & progreſſu Rituum & Ceremoniarum Eccleſiaſticarum. He ſpoke it in an academical aſſembly, and printed it in 1585. Two years after he publiſhed his Treatiſe de Templis, hoc eſt de origine, progreſſu, uſu, & abuſu Templorum, ac omnino rerum omnium ad Templa pertinentium. In 1603 he publiſhed a ſecond edition of it, not only corrected, but alſo greatly augmented; he adding to it a confutation of the arguments which Bellarmin and Baronius had alledged, in behalf of thoſe of their party on that ſubject, ſince the firſt edition. In 1588 he publiſhed a Treatiſe de Monachis, ſeu de origine & progreſſu Monachatus ac Ordinum Monaſticorum, Equitum militarium tam ſacrorum quam ſecularium omnium. He publiſhed a ſecond edition of it in 1609, in which he confuted Bellarmine's book de Monachis, publiſhed ſince the firſt edition of his work. In 1589 he was juſt going to publiſh a Treatiſe de origine & progreſſu Jejuniorum, when he found by a work of Bellarmine juſt printed, that this Jeſuit promiſed to write a book on that ſubject; for which reaſon he ſuſpended the publication of his work, till he might annex to it a confutation of what Bellarmine ſhould alledge. However, having applied himſelf to other matters in the mean time, he never compleated that treatiſe. Theſe other matters were the Feaſts or Holy Days, on which he publiſhed two volumes, the firſt in 1592, and the ſecond in 1593. The firſt Treatiſe, de Feſtis Judæorum & Ethnicorum, hoc eſt de origine, progreſſu, ceremoniis, & ritibus feſtorum dierum Judæorum, Græcorum, Romanorum, Turcarum, & Indianorum. He printed it in 1611, with ſeveral corrections and additions. The ſecond volume treats de origine, progreſſu, ceremoniis, & ritibus feſtorum dierum Chriſtianorum. He printed it in 1612, with conſiderable ſupplements, which were of uſe to refute Bellarmine upon the idolatry of the church of Rome, and James Gretſer on Corpus Chriſti day. In 1598 he publiſhed the firſt volume of his Hiſtoria Sacramentaria: Hoc eſt libri quinque de Cœnæ Dominicæ prima inſtitutione, ejuſque vero uſu & abuſu in primitiva Eccleſia, nec non de origine, progreſſu, ceremoniis, & ritibus Miſſæ, Tranſubſtantiationis, & aliorum pæne infinitorum Errorum, quibus Cœnæ prima inſtitutio horribiliter in Papatu polluta & profanata eſt. i. e. " Five books relating to the inſti- " tution of the Lord's Supper, and of its true uſe and " abuſe in the primitive church; alſo concerning the " origin, progreſs, ceremonies and rites of the Maſs, " of Tranſubſtantiation, and almoſt numberleſs multi- " tude of errors, whereby the primitive inſtitution of " the Lord's Supper has been horribly polluted and " profaned in the Romiſh church." Four years after he publiſhed the ſecond volume of this Hiſtory, containing the conteſts that have been carried on between thoſe of the Auſburg Confeſſion, and other Proteſtants, with regard to the Lord's Supper. This work is intitled, de origine & progreſſu Controverſiæ Sacramentariæ de Cœna Domini inter Lutheranos & Orthodoxos quos Zwinglianos & Calviniſtas vocant exortæ, ab anno Chriſti Salvatoris 1517 uſque ad annum 1602. i. e. " Concerning the origin and progreſs of the Sacramenta- " rian Controverſy, with regard to the Lord's Supper, " between the Lutherans and thoſe of the orthodox " faith called Zwinglians and Calviniſts, from the year " of our Lord 1517, till 1602." In 1607 he publiſhed a work intitled, Concordia diſcors, ſeu de origine & progreſſu Formulæ Concordiæ Bergenſis. i. e. " The " diſcording Concord, or of the riſe and progreſs of " the Formulary of the Concord of Berg." In 1619 he publiſhed a work againſt the Jeſuits: Hiſtoria Jeſuitica, hoc eſt de origine, regulis, conſtitutionibus, privilegiis, incrementis, progreſſu, & propagatione Ordinis Jeſuitarum, item de eorum dolis, fraudibus, impoſturis, nefariis facinoribus, cruentis conſiliis, falſa quoque ſeditioſa & ſanguinolenta doctrina (10). i. e. " A Hiſtory " of the Jeſuits, that is, of the origin, rules, conſtitu- " tions, privileges, increaſe, progreſs and propaga- " tion of the Order of Jeſuits; alſo of their treacheries, " frauds, impoſtures, wicked crimes, and bloody coun- " ſels; their falſe, ſeditious, and bloody doctrine." Here he put an end to his compoſitions, being reſolved to ſpend his life hereafter in nothing but prayer, in the peruſal of good books, and in pious meditations.

(10) Extracted from his Life wrote by Heidegger.

[E] Two of his works . . . . exaſperated the Lutherans in a high degree. They exaſperated him by their anſwers.] The Hiſtory of the Sacramentarian War between the Lutherans and Calviniſts, and the Hiſtory of the Formulary of Concord, ſhew ſo much confuſion, ſo much paſſion, ſhuffling, and cavilling on the Lutheran ſide, that it would have been a miracle had not theſe two books exaſperated the Saxon Divines in a furious manner. In Saxony they chooſe to refute Hoſpinian, a man who was fit to dazzle and impoſe on the public; a man, I ſay, who treated his adverſaries in the moſt contemptuous manner, and aſſumed a magiſterial air. Nothing is ſo well adapted as this, to conceal the bad or weak ſides of a cauſe. Hiſtoriæ Sacramentariæ pars poſterior & concordia illa diſcors vehementer eos, qui Lutheranarum partium aſſeclas ſe profeſſi ſunt, urebant; qui eorum operum vim Chryſippeis ſophiſmatis, & tortuoſis argutiis, acribuſque dicteriis convellere maximopere laborabant. Conſtat autem, utriuſque operis refutandi in Saxonicis oris negotium Leonhardo Huttero, Wittebergenſi Profeſſori, homini arroganti & prave facundo, datum eſſe. Et primum quidem Ann. M.DC.XI. perſonatus ille, uti prudenter conjectabant, prodiit, larva ſcilicet aſſumpta cujuſdam Chriſtophori à Vallo, S. Theologiæ Candidati, ſub qua adverſus ea, quæ Hoſpinianus in Annalibus Sacramentariis ad annum M.DC.XIX. (11) geſta prodidit, vernacula ſcriptione ingenii ſui libidinem procaciter ſatis exercuit (12). i. e. " The ſecond part " of the Sacramentarian Hiſtory, and the diſcording " Concord, greatly exaſperated the Lutherans, who " employed their utmoſt endeavours to defeat the ef- " fects they might have, by ſophiſtry, cavilling, and " ſcoffing. It is certain that the taſk of refuting them " both was given to Leonard Hutterus, Profeſſor at " Wittenberg, a man whoſe wit was of an arrogant " and peeviſh caſt. He firſt appeared in public in the " year 1611, diſguiſed, as was well conjectured, un- " der the name of Chriſtopher à Vallo, ſtudent in Di- " vinity. In this fictitious dreſs he haughtily exer- " ciſed the licentiouſneſs of his wit, in his native " tongue, againſt thoſe particulars which are con- " tained cauſe he was ſenſible that the common enemies of the Proteſtant Faith were too much diverted with ſuch a ſcene; but he turned his arms againſt the Jeſuits. I don't doubt but that ſome Princes were pleaſed that he had ſuppreſſed his reply [F]. He was deprived of his ſight for near a year, by a cataract, notwithſtanding which he preached as uſual; but he was happily couched the 18th of September 1613. At threeſcore and ſixteen years

(11) This is an error of the preſs, it ſhould be M. D. XXIX.

(12) Heidegg. in Vita Hoſpiniani, pag. 22.

" tained in Hoſpinian's Sacramentarian Hiſtory, till " the year 1529." The inſtant David Pareus had ſeen this firſt work of Hutterus (13), he gave Hoſpinian notice of it, and adviſed him to draw up an Anſwer in the German language, without waiting till his adverſary ſhould finiſh his confutation. Adverſus Commentarium tuum alterum de re ſacramentaria, nec non Concordiam diſcordem comperimus, mandatum ex aula Saxonica D. Huttero datum, hiſtoriam tuam ut refutaret. Laboraſſe etiam illum ea in re ex domeſticis meis ſtudioſis cognovi. His nundinis Lipſenſibus prodiit Germanica hæc Hiſtoriæ Sacramentariæ conſignatio, uſque ad annum 29 deducta. Credo vobis non eſſe viſam. Author magna pollicetur, & triumphus eſt, ut audio, noſtris vicinis, &c. Percurri librum. Præter magnifica mendacia nihil video novi. Suaſerim ut veſtigia hujus ſcriptoris, qui haud dubiè eſt ille Hutterus, premas illico, neque exſpectes, dum tota moles te opprimat. Feceris magnum operæ pretium Germanicè reſpondendo (14). i. e. " I am " told that D. Hutterus is commanded, by the Court " of Saxony, to anſwer the ſecond part of your Sacramentarian Hiſtory, and your diſcording Concord; " and ſome ſtudents who lodge with me, ſay, that he " has been employed for ſome time in it. The German refutation of this Sacramentarian Hiſtory, continued to the year 1529, was publiſhed laſt Leipſic " fair. I believe you have not ſeen that piece. The " author promiſes mighty things; and it is ſaid that " our neighbours triumph upon it, &c. I have peruſed the book, and find nothing new in it, but notorious falſhoods. I would adviſe you to tread cloſe " upon the heels of this writer, who doubtleſs is the " abovementioned Hutterus; and not wait till you are " oppreſſed with the whole load. It would be of " great uſe to anſwer him in the German language." Hoſpinian immediately drew up a reply, but did not publiſh it. Non defuit bonæ cauſæ Hoſpinianus, utpote qui . . . . perſonato larvam egregiè detraxit, adornata ſcriptione vernacula, quo & hiſtoriæ à ſe conſignatæ veritatem in arce collocavit, & adverſantis vanitatem ſolidè detexit. Neque tamen reſponſio iſthæc, omnibus numeris abſoluta, lucem vidit (15). In 1614 a new work of Hutterus was publiſhed, entitled Concordia concors, ſeu de origine & progreſſu formulæ Concordiæ Eccleſiarum Confeſſionis Auguſtanæ. i. e. " Concording Concord; " or, concerning the origin and progreſs of the For" mulary of Concord of the Churches of the Auſburg " confeſſion." In this work Hutterus undertook to deprive Hoſpinian of all the reputation he might have gained, either with reſpect to learning or candor. Quo quantum de libro ipſo, tantundem de eruditionis, candoris & judicii Hoſpiniani fama, ſuæque Eccleſiæ infamia ſe detrahere poſſe ſperavit. Opus ipſum haud exiguæ molis, & μῆλα πολλῆς φανλασίας prodiit, aſt ſi inanem verborum ſtrepitum, & rerum, convitiorum, ſplendidarumque calumniarum tumorem ei demeres, tantùm non ad incitas redigi, atque in nihilum recidere liquebat (16). i. e. " Wherein he hoped to take as much from the " fame of Hoſpinian's erudition, candor and judg" ment, and from the infamy of his own Church, " as he could detract from the book in queſti" on. This work, which was of no inconſiderable " ſize, made its appearance with mighty pomp; " but ſhould we ſubſtract or take from it the empty " ſound of high-flown words, and the idle reproach" es, and ſlanders, it would be reduced to a very " narrow compaſs." Hoſpinian's friends adviſed him to draw up an anſwer immediately, and to humble his adverſary's pride. Sine mora reprimendam exultantem hominis audaciam (17). He immediately took up the pen, and ſet about an anſwer, but never finiſhed it. Heidegger aſſures us that this is an excellent work. In all probability the author was diſheartned, becauſe he had to do with ſo abuſive an enemy. He alſo was afraid of affording the Jeſuits too great a farce, in caſe he ſhould ſtill carry on the civil-war; but however this be, his work was never publiſhed. Neque tamen opus iſthoc ad metam perduxit, ſeu tædio victus eſt maledicentiæ adverſarii, qui neſcio quibus agitatus furiis ubique inſultare, quàm cum ratione quadam diſputare maluit; ſeu faſtidium ſubiit ducendi funem moleſtiæ adeò contentionis, qua non tantùm animos veritatis factâ copiâ ſauciatos ægroſque magis exulceratum iri, ſed etiam capitales religionis hoſtes, Jeſuitas cumprimis, infauſti certaminis illius futuros ſpectatores avidiſſimos, delicias jucundo ejuſmodi ſpectaculo ſibi facturos . . . . metuit (18). Hence one would conclude that the Lutherans came off victorious; the public being pretty much inclined to aſcribe it to him who has the laſt word, which may be called remaining maſter of the field. We ſhall ſoon take notice of a reaſon, which contributed, in all probability, to Hoſpinian's ſilence.

(13) It is to be obſerved that ſome ſay, that Chriſtophorus Wilhelmus à Vallo, was Chr. Wilh. Walpurgerus, a Divine of Leipſic. See Mollerus, Iſagoge Hiſt. Cherſoneſi Cimbricæ, Part 3. pag. 133.

(14) Heidegg. in Vita Hoſpiniani, pag. 22.

(15) Idem, ibid.

(16) Idem, ibid.

(17) Idem, pag. 24.

(18) Idem, ibid.

[F] I do not doubt but that ſome Princes were pleaſed that he had ſuppreſſed his reply.] About the time that Hoſpinian printed his Concordia diſcors, Frederic IV, Elector Palatine, wrote to the magiſtrates of Zurich, concerning a conference that was negotiating between the Lutherans and Calviniſts, to ſearch out expedients for an accommodation which might ſerve as a league among the Proteſtant Princes, againſt the bloody deſigns of the Jeſuits. For this reaſon Hoſpinian was thought to have publiſhed his book very unſeaſonably. He juſtified himſelf as to that affair in the beſt manner he could, in a letter which he wrote to Maurice Landgrave of Heſſe. He ſays, that though theſe conferences are only apt to inflame the wound, as has been often found by experience, he yet would have ſuſpended the impreſſion of his work, or even kept it in manuſcript in his cloſet, had he known the intention of the Princes. " Libri intempeſtivi editi culpam, . . ſic ſtudioſe amoli" tur, ut ſimul de inſtitutis ejuſmodi Colloquiis ſenten" tiam graviter proferat hunc ferè in modum: Etſi " ego de hujuſmodi colloquio nihil boni polliceri " poſſim, & majores animorum diſtractiones & contur" bationes, odia item, contentiones, ac diſſidia poſt illud " nocentiſſima vehementer metuam, præſertim ſi mecum " reputem, quæ Marpurgenſe, Maulbrunnenſe, Mom" pelgardenſe, & Ratiſbonnenſe colloquia ſecuta ſint; " & adverſarii palam proteſtentur, ſe non diſcere, ſed " docere, & ne in minimo quidem articulo ſententiam " mutare, ſed in ſemel concepta opinione firmiter per" manere velle: nihilominus editionem hujus libri " vel in aliud tempus rejeciſſem, ac reſervâſſem; vel, " ſi ex uſu eccleſiæ fuiſſet, prorſus ſuppreſſiſſem, ſi hoc " conſilium & inſtitutum Illuſtriſſ. Principum vel ante " ſemeſtre mihi cognitum fuiſſet, ne illud impediiſſe " accuſari meritò poſſem (20)." i. e. " He apologizes " for his having publiſhed his book ſo unſeaſonably; and " at the ſame time gravely delivers his opinion, with " regard to ſuch ſort of conferences, as follows. Though " I my ſelf cannot hope for any good from ſuch a " conference, but am prodigiouſly afraid that it will " be followed by ſtill greater diſtractions of men's " minds, ſtronger hatred, contentions, and moſt dan" gerous diviſions; particularly when I reflect on what " were the conſequences of the conferences at Mar" purg, Maulbrun, Montbeliard, and Ratiſbon; and " that the adverſaries proteſt publicly, that they will " teach but not learn; that they will not alter their opi" nion in the leaſt article, but adhere ſtedfaſtly to the " principles they firſt imbibed: nevertheleſs I would " have ſuſpended the publication of this book for " ſome time; or, had it been of advantage to the " Church, would have ſuppreſſed it intirely, had I " but known the intention of theſe illuſtrious Princes " ſix months ago, in order that I might not be juſtly " accuſed of hindering it." The fear he was under leſt he ſhould diſpleaſe ſome Princes, and expoſe great numbers to very grievous dangers, obliged him not to inſert in his work all he knew. (21) Faſſus eſt ingenuè, operi illi de Concordia diſcorde, deeſſe plurima; nulla equidem ſua culpa, ſed tum quod ad cognitionem & manus ſuas plura non pervenerint; tum quod nonnulla dedita opera, omitti conſultius viſum ſit, propter admonitionem ex aula potente inſinuatam, ut in ſcribenda ea hiſtoria caute circumſpecteque agat, ſi quid ſecretorum ex cameris Principum, præſertim vero exoris Saxonicis habeat. Fore alioquin, ut res hæc ingenti periculo non

(19) The 22d of Auguſt 1607.

(20) Vita Hoſpiniani, pag. 21.

(21) In Literis ad Wolphangum Amlingum, Eccleſiæ Serveſtanæ Paſtorem & Superintendentem, die 22 Aug. 1607.

years of age he grew childiſh; and continued in that wretched condition till his death, which happened the 11th of March 1626, he being then in his threeſcore and nineteenth year. The public had entertained ſo high an idea of his learning from his writings, that he was exhorted from all quarters to refute Baronius's Annals; and no one was thought to have greater abilities for ſuch a taſk (e). A new edition of his works was publiſhed at Geneva in the year 1681, in ſeven volumes in folio [G].

(e) Extracted from his Life wrote by John Henry Heidegger, and prefixed to the edition of his works printed in 1681.

non careat, propter orthodoxos iis in locis ſuſpectos, ne cum iis ludus Crellianus vel Procerianus (22) ludatur. i. e. "He frankly owned, that many things were wanting in the Diſcording Concord; however, that this was no way his fault, but was partly occaſioned, becauſe many particulars never came to his knowledge; and becauſe he had thought it more adviſeable to omit certain things on account of an admonition which had been ſent him from a very powerful Court, viz. that it would be proper for him to act very cautiouſly in compoſing that Hiſtory, in caſe he had got any ſecrets from the cabinets of Princes, particularly thoſe who ſided with Saxony. That otherwiſe, this might be of very dangerous tendency with reſpect to the welfare of ſuch of the orthodox as might be ſuſpected in thoſe places, and the Crellian and Procerian game might be played a ſecond time." It is therefore probable enough, that he laid aſide his anſwer, becauſe, among other reaſons, he ſhould be conſidered as the cauſe of an Eccleſiaſtical War, which might prevent the ſeveral Proteſtant powers from purſuing, in concert, their common intereſt (23). We may be very well aſſured, that both the Lutheran and Calviniſt Princes of the Empire were highly pleaſed at his continuing ſilent; for we are told by the hiſtory of that period, that the quarrels between Divines perplexed Princes very much; and they every now and then, even to this day, cauſe the greateſt uneaſineſs to magiſtrates in ſeveral Imperial cities. Was not Hamburg lately (24) involved in great troubles, occaſioned by the conteſts and diſputes of the Clergy, which divided the people, and occaſioned ſeditious aſſemblies? An end is very ſeldom put to theſe conteſts, except by the exile of him whoſe faction is weakeſt; ſo that, if one might dare to employ compariſons, it might be ſaid that the quarrels in queſtion are like thoſe of two bulls who fight for a heifer; the weaker bull runs away and hides himſelf.

(22) I fancy it is an error of the preſs for Peucerianus.

(23) Heidegger, in Vita Hoſpiniani, pag. 21.

(24) About two or three years ago, the Flemiſh News-papers ſpoke of nothing elſe. I write this in Sept. 1695.

Nec mos bellantes una ſtabulare: ſed alter
Victus abit, longeque ignotis exulat oris,
Multa gemens ignominiam, plagaſque ſuperbi
Victoris, tum quos amiſit inultus amores:
Et ſtabula aſpectans regnis exceſſit avitis (25).

(25) Virgil. Georg. lib. 3. ver. 224.

" Nor when the war is over, is it peace;
" Nor will the vanquiſhed bull his claim releaſe:
" But finding in his breaſt his antient fires,
" And curſing fate, from his proud foe retires.
" Driven from his native land, to foreign grounds,
" He with a generous rage reſents his wounds;
" His ignominious flight, the victor's boaſt,
" And more than both, the lives, which unreveng'd
" he loſt.
" Often he turns his eyes, and, with a groan,
" Surveys the pleaſing kingdoms once his own.
Dryden.

Perhaps the reaſon I took notice of, might oblige Hoſpinian not to compleat his Hiſtory of the Reformation, projected in Saxony under the Elector Chriſtian. Some Memoirs had been communicated to him, which might have exaſperated his ſucceſſors. The title of this Hiſtory was to have been as follows. Chriſtianus redivivus, hoc eſt, de ortu & progreſſu ſuſceptæ a Chriſtiano Electore Saxoniæ Eccleſiarum & Scholarum in Saxonia ſuperiore Reformationis Hiſtoria, ex actis & originalibus, ut ſint optimi Principis defuncti vindiciæ perennes, fideliter congeſta, & tribus libris comprehenſa (26). i. e. " Chriſtianus redivivus, that is, a Hiſtory of the riſe and progreſs of the Reformation of the Churches and Schools in upper Saxony, begun by Chriſtian Elector of Saxony. Faithfully taken from originals and authentic papers, that they may ſerve for ever as a laſting apology for that beſt of Princes. In three books." Heidegger ſays as follows, concerning the memoirs which had been furniſhed. Grande ſcilicet volumen ex Saxonia ſubmiſſum in hæredum manibus verſatur, quo Chriſtiani Electoris illius Principis & pientiſſimi & fortiſſimi, dicere crebrò ſoliti: Ego nec Calvinianus ſum, nec Flaccianus, ſed Chriſtianus. Habent Flacciani ſuum Cœlum, in quo etiam ipſum orcum collocant; Ephemerides accuratiſſimè texuntur, & inſtituta ab ipſo Eccleſiarum Saxonicarum Reformatio, ſubita & improviſa ejus morte interrupta, pleniſſimè exponitur, ex quibus, aliiſque etiam irrefragabilibus monumentis Chriſtianum illum redivivum orbi Chriſtiano, non parum arte pia Principis illius meditamenta admiraturo, repræſentare ſtatuerat (27). i. e. " His heirs are poſſeſſed of a large volume, ſent him from Saxony, wherein are very accurately drawn up the annals of Chriſtian, that moſt pious and moſt courageous Prince, who uſed often to ſay; I am neither a Calviniſt, nor a Flaccian, but a Chriſtian. The Flaccians have their heaven, wherein they place even hell itſelf. This work contains likewiſe a compleat Hiſtory of the Reformation of the Saxon Churches, begun by our author, but interrupted by this ſudden and unexpected death, from which, and ſeveral other indiſputable authorities, he intended to exhibit his Chriſtianus redivivus to the Chriſtian world, which could not have failed greatly to admire the pious deſigns of that Prince."

(26) Heidegger, in Vita Hoſpiniani, pag. 22.

(27) Idem, ibid.

[G] A new edition of his works was publiſhed at Geneva, in the year 1681, in ſeven volumes in folio.] The editors did not inſert any tract of the author, but what had been compleated by him. His heirs have followed very religiouſly his intentions, they not being willing to communicate them to the public, but only furniſhed a few remarks, which the author had added to his works after they were in print. Neque contemnenda etiam illa quæ inchoata & affecta, quod nondum juſtus ordo, lima & colophon iis adhibita, ultimaque manu necdum perpolita eſſent, neque ipſe ſuperſtes prodire paſſus eſt, ceu imparia ſuſtinendæ famæ nominis ſui; neque præter ejus voluntatem & conſilium hæredes, cimeliorum iſtorum cuſtodes, edere voluerunt (28). We are told in his life, what pieces he had advanced very far in, as well as thoſe that were but juſt ſketched by him; circumſtances which repreſent him as a very learned and very laborious writer.

(28) Idem, ibid. pag. 11.

HOSPITAL (MICHAEL DE L'), Chancellor of France in the ſeventeenth Century, was one of the greateſt men of his age. He was of Auvergne, and of a family not very conſiderable. He raiſed himſelf by degrees [A], and was Counſellor in the Parliament

[A] He was of Auvergne, and of a family not very conſiderable. He raiſed himſelf by degrees.] His father was a Phyſician, and in that quality ſerved the Conſtable Charles de Bourbon. He never abandoned him, attending him in diſguiſe, ſharing in all his misforunes, ſeconding him in all his deſigns againſt the King, againſt the Emperor, and againſt Rome, the Cardinals, and the Pope himſelf (1). When he followed him in his retreat to the Emperor Charles, he left " in France all his children, both ſons and daughters, who being very young could not bear the fatigues of ſuch a journey. Our Michael was at Toulouſe, and aged eighteen years; and though he lived there on no other account than that of his ſtudies, he was ſeized upon ſuſpicion, and committed to the public priſon till there was an expreſs command from the King to releaſe

(1) Naudé, Coups d'Eſtat, cap. 5. pag. m. 787.

Parliament of Paris, when the Princeſs Margaret, ſiſter to King Henry II, having had the Duchy of Berri ſettled on her, choſe him for her Chancellor (a). He continued in the ſame poſt under her in Italy after ſhe had married the Duke of Savoy, and he was at Nice, when he was raiſed to the dignity of Chancellor of France under King Francis II in the year 1560 (b). It was thought that the Guiſes had procured him this poſt, and that they did it with no other view, but that they imagined, as he had an obligation to them [B], he would do whatever they ſhould deſire. They were miſtaken; for he propoſed as his maxim the good of the Kingdom and the true intereſts of the King his maſter. It is true, he was obliged to uſe addreſs [C]; for if he ſhould have openly oppoſed the deſigns of the Guiſes, he would not have been in a ſituation to remedy the confuſions of France. It was neceſſary for him therefore to ſwim between two ſtreams, and by

(a) Paſquier, Lettres, lib. 22. pag. 758. of the ſecond tome.

(b) La Planche, Hiſt. de François II, pag. m. 228.

" releaſe him, that he might purſue his ſtudies, ſince " he was not found engaged in any deſign, that could " render him criminal (2)." He went to ſee his father at the time, when the Conſtable being returned found affairs much embarraſſed there (3); for Francis I had laid ſiege to Milan (4): and " becauſe this ſiege " would probably laſt long, that Phyſician fearing " leſt his ſon, by too great a diſcontinuance, ſhould " make a dangerous breach in his ſtudies, ordered " ſome Couriers to take him away with them from " Milan diſguiſed like a Muletier; and he paſſed, " not without great danger of his life, the river Abdua, " and afterwards went to Padua, where from all anti- " quity the ſtudy of law had flouriſhed. In this Uni- " verſity his father left him for the ſpace of ſix years, " and then ſent him to Bologna and Rome, where he " was honoured with the place of Judge, under the " title of Auditor of the Rota. But reſigning this by " the advice of his father on account of the promiſes " made to him by the Cardinal de Grandmont of ad- " vancing him to the higheſt poſts in his country, he " was diſappointed of his expectations both ways; " for the poſt of Auditor was given to another per- " ſon; and the ſudden death of the Cardinal de Grand- " mont fruſtrated the hopes, which had engaged him " to return to France. Being in this ſituation he ap- " plied himſelf to the Bar, where he had not conti- " nued three years before he married Mary Morin, " daughter of the Lieutenant Criminal Morin, who " brought for a portion the place of Counſellor in the " Parliament (5), which he held about nine years, " and afterwards was ſent Embaſſador to Bologna for " King Henry, where the general Council of all the " Biſhops had been appointed in order for ſome reforma- " tion." Thevet adds, that he was afterwards Chancellor to the Ducheſs of Berri, and then " Head and " Superintendant of the Finances of his Majeſty in his " Chamber of Accounts, and after the death of King " Henry was choſen of the Privy Council (6)." Obſerve, that his father, after the Conſtable's death, followed ſome time the Court of the Emperor Charles V (7), and afterwards entering into the ſervice of the ſiſter of his firſt Patron Renée de Bourbon, wife of Anthony Duke of Lorrain, ſpent there the reſt of his life (8). He has been repreſented as the ſon of a man, who was born, and always lived, and died a Jew in the city of Avignon (9). Mr. Varillas, from whom I borrow theſe words, remarks in another place (10), that Michael de l'Hoſpital's father was a Jew. He is very ſubject to this kind of confuſion. Monſieur Teiſſier aſſures us, that Mr. de Mezerai relates, that the Chancellor's father was ſon of a Phyſician to a Queen of Navarre, wife of Anthony de Bourbon (11). He cites (12) page 1156 of the ſecond Tome of Mezerai's Hiſtory of France. I find nothing relating to the Chancellor l'Hoſpital in the ſecond Tome to that author. I only ſee in page 22 of the third Tome, that he was the ſon of the Phyſician to Renée de Bourbon, wife of Anthony de Lorrain.

(2) Thevet, Elog. tom. 7. pag. 363. edit. in 12mo. He has taken this, as he owns, from the will of the Chancellor l'Hoſpital. See the Bibliotheque Choiſie of Colomiés, pag. 53.

(3) Ibid. pag. 369.

(4) Ibid. What he ſays is to be found in the Chancellor's will. See the Biblioth. Choiſie of Colomies, pag. 53.

(5) Obſerve that there is a miſtake with regard to the time in Moreri, where we are told, that he was Counſellor in the Parliament of Paris in 1524, and that his poſt of Chancellor to the Princeſs Margaret was poſterior to all the reſt except that of Chancellor of France.

(6) Thevet, Elog. tom. 7. pag. 371.

(7) Teſtam. de l'Hoſpital, cited by Colomiés, Biblioth. Choiſie, pag. 55.

(8) Belcarius, lib. 28. num. 57.

(9) Varillas, Hiſt. de l'Hereſie, lib. 22. pag. m. 170. Dutch edit. He has taken this from Beaucaire, lib. 28. num. 57.

(10) Hiſt. de Francois II. pag. m. 194.

(11) Teiſſier, Addit. aux Elog. tom. 1. pag. 396. edit. 1690.

(12) Ibid. tom. 2. pag. 413. edit. 1683.

[B] It was thought, that the Guiſes had procured him this poſt, and that they did it with no other view but that they imagined, as he had an obligation to them, &c.] Lewis Regnier Sieur de la Planche relates, that after the death of the Chancellor Olivier they offered his poſt to Morvilliers Counſellor in the Privy Council, and Biſhop of Orleans . . . a ſervant very zealouſly attached to their family, and that they artfully ſerved themſelves by his refuſal. " For imagining that they could make " better uſe of Michael de l'Hoſpital, brought up, " advanced, and formed by their hand, they took " Morvilliers at his word, and ſent for the other from " Nice, where he was Chancellor to the Ducheſs of " Savoy, who was given to underſtand that the King " out of regard to her would take her Chancellor for " his own (13)." But other Hiſtorians ſay that the Queen-Mother was the real cauſe of this choice, being urged to it by the Ducheſs of Montpenſier, who deſigned to lay an obſtacle in the way of the ambition of the Guiſes. See the article of LONGVIC (14). Thuanus (15) adds, that when they agreed to this choice the affair was already concluded, and that Catherine de Medicis informed Monſieur de l'Hoſpital, that it was not at their recommendation, but at hers, that the King had honoured him with that dignity; and that therefore ſhe hoped to ſee him more attached to the intereſts of his Prince and thoſe of the Queen-Mother, than to thoſe of that family, whoſe ambition was deteſted by the whole world. The ſame Hiſtorian obſerves, that it was the more eaſy for the Queen-Mother to ſucceed, becauſe Monſieur de l'Hoſpital was very much in favour with the Cardinal of Lorrain. Remark, that Mr. Teiſſier is miſtaken in ſaying under the quotation of the twenty fourth book of Thuanus, that Catherine de Medicis obliged Henry II to make Michael de l'Hoſpital Chancellor of France (16). He ſhould have ſaid Francis II.

(13) La Planche, pag. m. 228. Hiſt. de François II.

(14) Remark [I].

(15) Thuanus, lib. 25. ſub fin.

(16) Teiſſier, Addit. aux Elog. tom. 1. pag. m. 396.

[C] He was obliged to uſe addreſs.] Let us again make uſe of the Sieur de la Planche for a Commentator upon this text. " As to the Chancellor de l'Hoſpital, " few perſons were pleaſed at firſt to ſee him raiſed to " that dignity, who had been ſo familiar with the " Cardinal (17); ſo that it was ſuppoſed, that he " would not venture to contradict him in any thing, " having received ſo many favours and preferments " from him. But as he knew the diſpoſition of the " Guiſes, having had long experience of it, he was " dextrous enough to prevent their ſtratagems, if not as " he ought, at leaſt as he could, conſidering the iniquity " of the time, warding off their moſt furious blows with " a peculiar induſtry. For having reſolved as ſoon as he " was ſettled in his poſt to proceed in a right courſe like " a prudent man, and not to favour either one party " or the other, and by this means to ſerve his King " and country, he was obliged to make uſe of won- " derful addreſs in order to reſtrain the houſe of " Lorrain within their proper bounds. This he was " deſirous to perform in ſuch a manner, that they " might not perceive, that he deſigned in any point to " oppoſe or diſpleaſe them, knowing, that if they once " conceived ſuch an opinion of him, he ſhould be able " to do nothing of conſequence. Thus with a great deal " of diſſimulation many things paſſed through his " hands, which were thought to be of a very dan- " gerous nature. Notwithſtanding this he kept a " medium, giving hopes to thoſe who loved the pub- " lic intereſt, that every thing at laſt would turn to " its advantage, provided he was ſuffered to bring it " about. Few people underſtood his intention; but " time ſhewed, that he had purſued the ſervice of the " King and the ſafety of the people in a way quite " different from what had been imagined. And to " ſpeak the truth, his prudent management cannot be " ſufficiently diſplay'd. For certainly, though if he " had taken a ſhorter way in oppoſing reſolutely what " was wrong, he would have been more to be com- " mended, and God perhaps would have bleſſed his " conſtancy; yet as far as we may judge, he alone, by " his moderate conduct, was the inſtrument made uſe of " by God to ſtop thoſe impetuous waves, which would " have drowned all France; and yet the outward ap- " pearances were againſt this. In ſhort, when he was " put in mind of any approaching misfortune, he had " always this expreſſion in his mouth; patience, pa- " tience, all will go well (18)."

(17) Thuanus, lib. 13. ſub fin. pag. m. 278. obſerves that Michael de l'Hoſpital, Preſident of the Chamber of Accounts in 1554, favoured the Cardinal of Lorrain's deſign of making the Parliament of Paris ſit half a year.

(18) La Planche, Hiſt. de François II, pag. 359, 360.

by this management he diverted ſeveral ſtorms which threatened the Kingdom, he retarded ſome others, and found means to do good ſervice to his country as far as the unhappy condition of the time would permit him. He prevented among other things the introduction of the inquiſition, by agreeing to an edict (c) much ſeverer againſt the Proteſtants than he could have wiſhed [D]. It was that of Romorantin. There is no doubt but that if he had had the whole management of theſe affairs, he would have procured a full toleration for thoſe of the reformed Religion. His good offices and his addreſs were undoubtedly one of the cauſes, which changed the diſpoſition of people in their favour; this change was ſo remarkable, that in the ſecond year of his adminiſtration there were almoſt as many voices for them as againſt them in the council, which examined the petition, which they preſented to the King [E] to deſire the free exerciſe of their religion. His influence was no leſs effectual in the reſtrictions of the edict of July 1561 (d), and in the liberty which they had of not obſerving it (e). The edict of January, which

(c) Dated in May 1560.

(d) Theſe reſtrictions diſpleaſed the zealous Roman Catholics. See the remark [E] towards the end.

(e) See the remark [F] citation (33).

[D] He prevented the ... introduction of the inquiſition, by agreeing to an edict much ſeverer againſt the Proteſtants than he could have wiſhed.] Here is the ſequel of the Sieur de la Planche's account (19). "To make "ſhort, when the queſtion was about expediting the "edict for the Spaniſh inquiſition, he knowing that the "members of the Privy Council and the Parliament "had agreed to this, moderated the affair by an expreſs edict, and gave ſuch cogent reaſons, that the "Guiſes themſelves, who had procured the former "edict, were of his opinion, and obliged the Spaniards "to approve of it, who had been deſirous, that France "ſhould be regulated after their model. This happened in May in the city of Romorantin, and that "edict was ever after called the edict of Romorantin." Mr. Varillas obſerves (20), that "this moderate conduct "diſpleaſed the Calviniſts, and did not ſatisfy the Catholics. The Calviniſts complained, that thoſe of "the oppoſite party and their irreconcileable enemies "were made their Judges (21); and the Catholics ſuſpected from that time that the Chancellor was of "the new religion ... They reproached him with "going to maſs merely for form-ſake, and uſed the "Chancellor's maſs as a proverb to expreſs a maſs, "which people went to only out of obedience to the "King. The Houſe of Guiſe had not a better opinion of that magiſtrate, and repented of having "contributed with the Ducheſs of Savoy to the making him what he was. They imagined that this "able Politician would endeavour to throw off his dependence on them, by forming at Court a third party "with the Queen-Mother, which might ballance the "other two in ſuch a manner that the one might not "ſupplant the other." This puts me in mind of the following paſſage in Brantome (22). He was taken for an Huguenot, though he went to Maſs; but it was ſaid at Court, God keep us from the Maſs of Monſ. l'Hoſpital.

(19) Ibid. pag. 361.

(20) Hiſt. de l'Hereſie, lib. 22. pag. 170.

(21) This edict gave the Biſhops alone the cogniſance of the crime of hereſy, and took it away from the King's Judges.

(22) Eloge du Connet. de Montmorenci, tom. 2. of his Memoires, pag. 89.

REFLECTION upon moderate meaſures generally diſpleaſing two oppoſite parties.

This is the common fate of thoſe, who ſeek a medium between the pretenſions of two oppoſite parties; they ſatisfy neither of them. But this inconvenience is ſometimes a leſs evil than accommodating one's ſelf to the paſſion of one of the parties; and there are many conjunctures, in which the greateſt good, which can be done, is to divide the diſadvantages, that each may have his ſhare. Our Chancellor would have ruined all, if he had undertaken at firſt to give full ſatisfaction to the Guiſes. This would have been running upon a rock. Prudence required, that he ſhould not attack that faction but by a ſide-wind; they had the wind in their ſtern, and it was not proper to ſteer againſt that wind. I believe that many Calviniſts, who had more zeal than knowledge of the world, always condemned this conduct of the Chancellor. They would have had him declare himſelf openly and reſolutely the protector of their cauſe: but could he have maintained his poſt three months together, if he had not uſed ſome management? He knew well enough, that the beſt way of oppoſing a ſtorm, was that mentioned by Plutarch, when he ſpeaks of the government of commonwealths. "As "Mathematicians tell us, that the ſun does not abſolutely follow the courſe of the firmament, and yet "his motion is not quite oppoſite or contrary, but declining a little, and taking an oblique courſe, by "this means preſerves all things, maintaining the "world in proper temperature. So in affairs of government, to oppoſe upon all occaſions, and in all "points the inclination of the people is too harſh and "ſevere a method of acting; as on the other hand an "eaſineſs to be led away by the diſpoſition of the people is a very dangerous precipice. But the middle "way, in ſubmitting ſometimes to the humour of the "people in order to make them obey in other points, "and granting them a thing which is agreeable, in order to demand a thing which is uſeful, is a ſafe method of governing men, who are prevailed upon by "gentle means to perform a great many things, which "they would refuſe to do, if they were required in a "violent and magiſterial way (23)." Our Chancellor was not ignorant of what Cicero obſerves, that politicians ought to imitate ſailors. An, cùm videam navem ſecundis ventis curſum tenentem ſuum, ſi non ea eum petat portum, quem ego aliquando probavi, ſed alium non minùs tutum atque tranquillum, cum tempeſtate pugnem periculoſe potius, quam illi ſalute præſertim propoſita obtemperem & paream? neque enim inconſtantis puto ſententiam tanquam aliquod navigium, atque curſum ex Reipub. tempeſtate moderari (24). i. e. "Shall I, when "I ſee a ſhip carried on by the winds, though it does "not go towards the port, which I before deſired, "but another no leſs ſafe and calm, expoſe myſelf to "danger by contending with the ſtorm, rather than "give way to it for my ſafety? For I do not think "it to be the ſign of inconſtancy to govern one's reſolution like a ſhip, and to ſteer one's courſe as the "ſtorms which agitate the commonwealth direct." Though he had not the good fortune of that Lepidus, who maintained the eſteem of Tiberius by a juſt medium between low flattery and too great ſtiffneſs; yet he deſerved the commendation which Tacitus has expreſſed in this manner. Hunc ego Lepidum, temporibus illis, gravem & ſapientem virum fuiſſe comperio. Nam pleraque ab ſævis adulationibus aliorum in melius flexit: neque tamen temperamenti egebat, cum æquabili auctoritate & gratia apud Tiberium viguerit. Unde dubitare cogor, fato & ſorte naſcendi, ut cetera, ita principum inclinatio in hos, offenſio in illos: an ſit aliquid in noſtris conſiliis, liceatque inter abruptam contumaciam, & deforme obſequium, pergere iter ambitione ac periculis vacuum (25). i. e. "This Lepidus I find to have been a "man of gravity and prudence in thoſe times. For "he ſoftened and diverted the cruel meaſures propoſed "by the flatterers, and yet did not want addreſs enough "to preſerve ſtill an equal ſhare in Tiberius's favour. "This leads me to doubt whether there is not a certain fatality in this, as well as other things, that "Princes are inclined toward ſome perſons, and averſe "to others; or whether this does not depend upon "our own management, and we have it not in our "power to purſue a courſe free from ambition and "danger by ſteering between harſh ſtiffneſs and mean "flattery."

(23) Plutarch, in Phocione, init.

(24) Cicero, Orat. pro Plancio, cap. 39. pag. m. 619. See alſo Epiſt. 9. lib. 2. ad Famil. pag. m. 56.

(25) Tacit. Ann. lib. 4. cap. 20.

[E] There were as many voices for them as againſt them in the Council, which examined the petition which they preſented to the King.] This particular ſeems to me curious, and I imagine that the reader will not be diſpleaſed to ſee the circumſtances of it here. I make uſe of the commentary, which a Catholic writer furniſhes me with (25). "The Huguenots preſented a "petition to the King, in order that they might be allowed to have a ſeparate Church from ours. The "King referred this petition to the Parliament, to "conſult about it with the Lords of his Council. They "have declared their opinions there on both ſides with "great freedom; ſome for the Catholic party, and "others for thoſe of the new religion. The Catholics "carried it by three voices, it being reſolved by them, "that which they obtained ſome time after, was undoubtedly his work; now this edict allowed them public aſſemblies and many other privileges. This was the only remedy for the evils of the Nation; all the ſhocking misfortunes, which afflicted the Kingdom for thirty years, ſprung from the infraction of that edict; and after theſe dreadful calamities it was neceſſary to make uſe of the ſame remedy in a ſtronger doſe. It was neceſſary to grant the edict of Nantes, which was much more advantageous to the reformed Church, than that which the Chancellor Hoſpital had procured for it. But I own likewiſe, that the Romiſh Religion did not run ſo great a riſque, when the edict of Nantes was granted, as when he procured the edict of January [F]. The obſtacles to be ſurmounted by him were not removed after he had ſealed it; new ones aroſe upon its being regiſtred

(26) Paſquier, Lett. lib. 4. pag. 196. of the 1ſt tome.

" that people ſhall be obliged either to follow the " Church of Rome like our anceſtors, or to leave the " Kingdom with permiſſion to ſell their eſtates. " When the voices came to be caſt up, there was no " ſmall murmur; becauſe thoſe of the other party " aſſerted, that in a point of ſuch importance it was " not reaſonable, that on account of three voices all " France ſhould be reduced to a flame; as this me- " thod of baniſhment was impoſſible to be executed, " and as beſides this, to oblige thoſe, who continued in " France, to ſubmit to the Romiſh Religion againſt " their conſcience, was an abſurd attempt, which " was equal to an impoſſibility. The Admiral and " ſome other Lords cannot be ſilent. Monſieur de " Guiſe on the other hand, though the time " ſeemed to oppoſe his intention, declared openly and " plainly, that ſince it had been reſolved ſo, it was " neceſſary to ſtand to that determination, and that " his ſword ſhould never reſt in his ſcabbard, when " it ſhould be queſtioned whether that decree was to " take effect. Things in this conteſt paſſed without " concluſion ... (27). Afterwards to ſatisfy both par- " ties by a kind of neutrality, there was publiſhed an " edict in July laſt (28). The zealous Catholics com- " plain of this edict, and ſay, that thoſe of the new " or pretended reformed religion being not to be " ſearched for in their houſes, it is in plain terms " making the firſt article of the edict a mere illuſion, " and yet releaſing them from the power of a magiſtrate; " which will afterwards occaſion an opportunity to " ſhake off the yoke entirely from their neck (29)."

(27) Ibid. pag. 197.

(28) In 1561.

(29) Paſquier, pag. 198.

[F] The Romiſh religion did not run ſo great a riſque, when the edict of Nantes was granted, as when he procured the edict of January.] Thoſe of the reformed religion were very near gaining the aſcendant in the beginning of the reign of Charles IX; and if they had gained it, God knows what would have become of the religion, which had perſecuted them under the three preceding reigns. If the King of Navarre, who had declared reſolutely for them, had been able to perceive the ſnare, which the other party had laid for him, he would have continued firm in their communion. Nothing more was wanting to procure them the ſuperiority; for he poſſeſſed the poſt of Lieutenant-General of the Kingdom, and it would not have been difficult then to oblige Catherine de Medicis to profeſs the reformed religion (30). But he ſuffered himſelf to be deceived by chimerical hopes; he had not ſagacity enough to diſcover the groſſneſs of the ſnare: he took the iſland of Sardinia, a country of baniſhment, a country miſerable and diſgraced (31); he took it, I ſay, ſo well he knew the map, for one of the fortunate iſlands mentioned in the fables. Being ſo groſly impoſed upon by theſe artifices of the Spaniards and the Cardinal Legate, he abandoned the reformed (32). See here how very little was wanting to render them maſters. I am going to cite a paſſage, which will inform us of the intereſts which they had by his favour among the States of Orleans, and the liberty, which they enjoyed under his protection. They aſſembled publickly, even in the capital of the Kingdom before there were edicts, which permitted them to do ſo. But we are to obſerve, that the Queen Regent, Catherine de Medicis, agreed with the King of Navare in this point (33). " (34) The Huguenots .... " repoſed all their confidence in this King (35), as one " whom they had ſupported upon their ſhoulders, and " for whom they had procured the government of " France by their intrigues and practices in the aſ- " ſembly of the three States. And indeed as an ac- " knowledgment of this he had by connivance allow- " ed them to preach with the doors open, not only " at Paris, but even at the Court of St. German en " Laye. In truth, it was very difficult for him to " ſupport himſelf in his grandeur, except by the means " of thoſe, who on the other hand received their aſ- " ſiſtance and ſupport from him. However he chang- " ing his mind, was the firſt inſtrument by which the " Catholics armed themſelves againſt the others. But " becauſe this is a ſecret to many perſons, and per- " haps you have not heard in what manner theſe prac- " tices were carried on, you muſt know, that the " Pope ſeeing the meaſures taken by us, ſent the " Cardinal of Ferrara, uncle to Madam de Guiſe, " Legate into France, with very ample powers .... " (36) We have likewiſe there the Lord of Charenton- " neau, ſon of the late Chancellor Granvelle. This " Embaſſador of King Philip is ſaid to be gained by " ſome of our great Princes, who did not approve " of this diverſity of religions. He, according to " the agreement between them, went diſguiſed to the " King of Navarre, aſſuring him, on the part of his " maſter, that as ſoon as he would undertake the pro- " tection of the Church of Rome, he would reſtore to " him the Kingdom of Navarre, or at leaſt an equi- " valent, in as rich and fruitful a country. This " ſcheme beginning to work, the Legate applied himſelf " on the other hand, and promiſed on the part of the " holy ſee the county of Venaiſſin, and to obtain for " him from the Catholic King the iſland of Sardinia, " which the Pope would erect into a Kingdom, in caſe " that King would not reſtore to him the Kingdom of " Navarre. It is ſaid, that the Conſtable and Mar- " ſhal de St. André uſed their endeavours to make " him reliſh theſe promiſes. That this is as true as " the Goſpel, I would not venture to aſſure you; " but the common report was ſo (37). This I can " affirm, that in an inſtant his countenance and diſ- " poſition were ſeen to be changed with regard to the " Huguenots. For he forbid the Miniſters to preach " at the Caſtle, as they had taken the liberty to do " five or ſix months before. Even in the aſſembly " of St. German, where the cauſe of the two churches " was debated, he oppoſed the reformed to the utmoſt " of his power; but the Prince of Condé, the Ad- " miral, and others, who then enjoyed not the leaſt " ſhare of the King's favour, oppoſed him, and car- " ried the point with regard to the publication of the " edict (38)." The ſame author proceeds to inform us of the proſperity, which the reformed enjoyed, even before the edict of January, and while Anthony King of Navarre favoured them. " The ſame day, that is, " the 29th of September 1561, the Queen of Navarre, " in the ſight of all the people, cauſed the marriage " between young Rohan and the Lady Brabançon, " niece to Mademoiſelle d'Eſtampes, to be ſolemnized " by Beza, after the manner of Geneva, at the Bo- " rough of Argenteuil. There were preſent the " Prince of Condé and the Admiral. This being " done without any controul near the gates of Paris, " and St. German en Laye, where the King reſided, " greatly raiſed the ſpirits of the Miniſters. And in " fact in October following they preached without the " walls of Paris, near the Monaſtry of St. Anthony " des Champs, between eight and nine thouſand per- " ſons being preſent. Upon their return a popular " ſedition was raiſed, which was eaſily ſuppreſſed by " the authority of the King of Navarre. They after- " wards proceeded ſtill further. For on the eve of " All Saints day there was held a public aſſembly in " the houſe of the Counteſs de Senignan, which was " guarded by the Provoſts of the Mareſchals and their " Archers, to pervent any commotion of the people. " A few days after, without confining themſelves to

(36) Paſquier, Lett. tom. 1. pag. 219.

(37) This common report was true: the moſt faithful Hiſtorians own it.

(38) That is to ſay, the edict of January 1562.

(30) See the remark [B] of the article SOUBISE (John &c.)

(31) See above the remark [G] of the article CHATEL (Tannequi du) and Tacitus, Annal. lib. 2. cap. 85.

(32) See the remark [L] of the article HENRY IV.

(33) Beze, Hiſt. des Egliſes, liv. 4. pag. 670. and Beauclaire, lib. 29. num. 34. pag. 966.

(34) Paſquier, Lett. liv. 4. pag. 218. of the 1ſt tome.

(35) That is, the King of France.

regiſtred in Parliament; and he was obliged to make uſe of the utmoſt efforts of his genius

" the edicts of the King, but breaking through that " of July, they undertook to preach two ſermons al- " ternately, one in the ſuburbs of St. Marcellus, in " the place called the Patriarch, the other without the " gate of St. Anthony, in the place called Popin- " court. It would be incredible to relate what a " multitude of people flocked to thoſe new devotions. " Gabaſton, Captain of the watch, and his Archers, " guarded them. L'Aulnay and l'Eſtang preached " at Popincourt, Malo and Viret at the Patriarch. " The Catholic Lords ſeeing that it was neceſſary to " give way to the ſtorm, Monſieur de Guiſe in a rage " retired to his houſe at Nanteuil, the Cardinal of " Lorrain to his Biſhoprick of Reims, Monſieur de " Nemoux to Savoy, the Conſtable to Chantilly, " &c. (39)." See in others of Paſquier's Letters (40) the prodigious multitudes which flocked to theſe aſſemblies, and the ſupport afforded them by the ſecular arm. The reader may alſo conſult the Letters of Hubert Languetus (41), where he will find among other things (42), that the aſſemblies held near Paris conſiſted ſometimes of fifteen thouſand perſons (43), the women in the midſt being ſurrounded with men on foot, and the latter ſurrounded by others on horſeback; and during the ſermon the Governor of Paris cauſed the avenues to be guarded by ſoldiers, who beat, or impriſoned, or repreſſed in any other manner all thoſe, who attempted to diſturb the devotions of the aſſembly.

(39) Paſquier, Lett. tom. 1. lib. 4. pag. 200, 201.

(40) Ibid. pag. 202, 203, & ſeq.

(41) Lib. 2. pag. 145, 150, 155. edit. Hal. 1698.

(42) Ibid. pag. 155.

(43) In a letter written Jan. 23, 1562 the edict was then made, but not regiſtered) he affirms, that there were preſent in the aſſemblies between 30 and 40000 people, and that two or three Miniſters were obliged to preach at the ſame place and time. Ibid. pag. 196.

WHETHER it can be ſaid, that the Reformed behaved in too oſtentatious a manner.

Many perſons, who judge of things only by the event, will be very apt to ſay, that thoſe of the reformed religion would have acted more prudently, if they had affected leſs haughtineſs at that time, for this oſtentation of their numbers was reckoned a bravado, which exaſperated their enemies, and induced them to have recourſe to the moſt preſſing remedies. We ſee from a letter of the Cardinal Legate, that he hoped for a fortunate iſſue of theſe haughty proceedings. His letter is dated at St. Germans, February 27, 1562. Here is a paſſage of it. " There happened lately a " conteſt between thoſe of the two religions, in which " ſome were left dead upon the place; and yet the " danger proved greater than the loſs. The Catho- " licks are immediately come hither, to complain of " the inſolencies of the Huguenots. They have re- " monſtrated, that for their part they had, according " to his Majeſty's expreſs order, laid down their " arms, but that their enemies had done quite the " contrary. For this reaſon they earneſtly requeſted, " that they might be permitted to reſume them, in or- " der to ſecure themſelves from their ambuſcades, " which had made them apprehenſive, upon good " grounds, that being encouraged by theſe ſoldiers, they " might hereafter do violence to their goods and per- " ſons. But the others on their ſide did not fail to " excuſe themſelves, or to alledge, that the jealouſies " raiſed in them every day by the Catholicks on account " of their great number, were the reaſons why they did " not lay down their arms. The anſwer of the King and " Queen of Navarre was greatly favourable to thoſe of " our party; for they invited them to take courage, " and even promiſed them, that they would take great " care to provide for their particular ſafety, and the " common repoſe of the city. So that after ſuch oblig- " ing words from the mouths of their Majeſties, " by which they declared more affection than " was before imagined, they returned fully ſatiſ- " fied. On the contrary the Huguenots were aſtoniſhed, " when they were told in very rough terms, that if " they would not be more quiet, and refrain from ſuch " violencies, they ſhould be taught how to behave. The " King of Navarre went much further, for he ſaid to " the Queen in their preſence, that her Majeſty needed " only to command, and that when ſhe thought proper, " he would find means to ſtop the courſe of their inſolence. " I ſhall add this particular, which is no inconſider- " able one, that not only their Majeſties, but all " other people in general, are greatly ſcandalized, that " Beza goes about Paris, attended conſtantly by Mon- " ſieur d'Andelot, and a great number of Gentlemen. " After all, notwithſtanding diſorders and ſcandals are " almoſt always prejudicial, they ſometimes produce " this advantage, that by raiſing the reſentments of the " great men, they engage them in generous enter- " prizes. This leads me to think, that we ought " ſo much the leſs to be uneaſy at this, ſince it is " probable, that in the temper in which the minds of " the moſt powerful men now are, theſe diſorders will " immediately fall on the heads of thoſe, who occa- " ſion them (44)." However let us obſerve to theſe Critics, that it was very natural for thoſe, who had groaned near forty years under ſo ſevere and cruel an oppreſſion, to make a full uſe of their liberty, and to ſpread like waters upon the opening of the ſluices. There were even reaſons of prudence, which might urge them to this conduct. They might reaſonably imagine, that it would be thought neceſſary to treat well a party, whoſe power would appear formidable. Laſtly, I obſerve, that neither the Miniſters nor private perſons could pervent Monſieur d'Andelot, and other brave men of quality, from mixing with their zeal for religion the airs of Soldiers and Gentlemen, which courage and habit made them aſſume. However that be, the other church eſcaped narrowly; for if notwithſtanding the deſertion of the King of Navarre, the Proteſtants ſupported very well the firſt war, what would not they have done under the protection of the Lieutenant-General of the Kingdom, which would undoubtedly have procured that of the Queen-Mother? Languetus informs us of the good opinion one might have of their forces. Re patefacta plerique noſtrorum venerunt armati ad Concionem, & jam idem quotidie faciunt, & inter reliquos ſtudioſi magno numero. Iis præbent ſe Duces Dandelotus Frater Amirali, Princeps de Rohan, & Frater nothus Reginæ Scotiæ, ac alii Illuſtribus familiis nati, quod, meo judicio, non faciunt ſine conſenſu Reginæ: aliter enim graviter peccarent in leges regni. Monmorantio urbis præfecto mandatum eſt, ut huc inducat, præſidii cauſa, duas alas equitum, & certum numerum peditum, quibus præerit Dandelotus. Interea autem dum iſti milites præſidiarii expectantur, nobilitas & ſtudioſi funguntur eorum officio, & tota urbs armis perſtrepit. Pontificii deſperant fere de reliquis urbibus Galliæ, ſed exiſtimant ſummam rerum in hoc conſiſtere, ut hanc ſibi addictam retineant. Verum ita creſcunt hic ſtudia factionum, ut verear, ne eam omnium primam amittant. Quamvis enim à partibus eorum ſint plures Cardinales, Epiſcopi, Abbates, Præſides, Aſſeſſores, & alii, qui opibus & auctoritate valeant; noſtri tamen viribus & ferocia videntur eſſe potiores, & ſi ad vim deveniatur, totius ipſorum ſapientiæ nullus erit uſus. Mihi venit in mentem facetum dictum Ludovici 12 Regis Galliæ, cui ſuſcepturo bellum adverſus Venetos, cum quidam dicerent fore periculoſum illud bellum propter eximiam Venetorum ſapientiam: ego, inquit, multitudine ſtultorum ipſorum ſapientiam obruam . . . . Heri hic celebrarunt Jubilæum, ex mandato Legati Pontificii: noſtri vero convenerunt (ut exiſtimo) ad quadraginta millia, & præcipuas plateas urbis armatis compleverunt. Tres concionatores tantæ multitudini vix ſufficiebant (45). i. e. " The thing being diſcovered, moſt of our party came " armed to the ſermon, and they now do the ſame " every day, and among the reſt a great number of " ſtudents. They are headed by Monſieur d'Andelot, " brother of the Admiral, the Prince of Rohan, and " the baſtard-brother of the Queen of Scotland, and " others of noble families; and this they do, in my " opinion, not without the conſent of the Queen; for " otherwiſe they would greatly offend againſt the laws of " the Kingdom. Montmorency, Governor of the City, " has been ordered to bring hither, as a guard, two " ſquadrons of horſe and a certain number of foot, " which will be commanded by d'Andelot. But while " theſe guards are expected, the Gentlemen and Stu- " dents ſupply their place, and the whole City re- " ſounds with arms. The Papiſts deſpair almoſt of " the reſt of the Cities of France; but think the whole " affair turns upon retaining this City in obedience to " them. But the other party gains ſo much ground " here, that I am apprehenſive, the Papiſts will loſe " it firſt of all. For though the Cardinals, Biſhops, " Abbots, Preſidents, Aſſeſſors, and others eminent " for their riches and authority adhere to them; yet " our party ſeems ſuperiour in ſtrength and reſolution, " and

(44) Negotiations, ou Lettres d'Affaires eſcrites au Pape Pie IV, & au Cardinal Borromée, par Hippolite d'Eſt, Cardinal de Ferrare, Légat en France, pag. 93, 94.

(45) Hub. Languet. Epiſt. 70. lib. 2. pag. 207, 208. It is dated at Paris in March 1562. See alſo the 67th Letter of that book.

genius and the reſolution of his mind, to ſurmount the ſcruples and ill humour of the Parliament of Paris [G]. The ſpeeches which he made in order to inſpire a ſpirit of toleration rendered him very much ſuſpected to the Roman Catholics, and extremely odious to the Court of Rome [H]; and becauſe he was perpetually declaring againſt a civil war, he was prevented from being preſent at the councils of war (f). He appeared

(f) See the remark [H] citation (*).

" and if the affair comes to force, all their wiſdom " will be of no uſe. There comes into my mind a " witty ſaying of Lewis XII, King of France, who " undertaking a war againſt the Venetians, and being " told by ſome, that it would be dangerous on account " of the admirable wiſdom of the Venetians, anſwer- " ed; I will overwhelm their wiſdom by a multitude " of fools . . . . Yeſterday the Jubilee was ſolemnized " at the command of the Pope's Legate: but our party " met, to the number, I think, of forty thouſand, " and filled the chief ſtreets of the City with armed " men. Three Preachers were ſcarce ſufficient for ſo " great a multitude."

[G] He was obliged to make uſe of the utmoſt efforts of his genius, and the reſolution of his mind, to ſurmount the ſcruples and ill humour of the Parliament of Paris.] This Parliament refuſed to regiſter the edict of January, and deputed to the King a Preſident and Counſellor to make their remonſtrances. Theſe two Deputies " having laid before the King all that induced the " Parliament not to receive the edict, the Chancellor, " on account of the dignity of his office, and the mi- " nority of the King, undertook to ſpeak, and told " them, that he did not doubt, but that all the rea- " ſons repreſented by them were of great weight; " but yet he deſired them to conſider, that they had " not been forgot in the Grand Aſſembly at St. Ger- " man; that the queſtion before them was one of " thoſe, which had its difficulties, on whatever ſide it " was viewed; and to ſpeak the truth, in the reſolu- " tion of it, the Magiſtrate was to be excuſed, what- " ever ſide he might take. He owned, that the foun- " dation of a State required, that there ſhould be but " one religion; but when things were come to ſuch a " paſs, as they were then in France, whoever rejected " the edict, muſt chooſe one of theſe two things; " either to put all the adherents of the new religion to " the ſword, or to baniſh them intirely, allowing them " to diſpoſe of their effects. The firſt point could not " be executed, ſince that party was too ſtrong both " in leaders and partizans; and though it could be " done, yet as it was ſtaining the King's youth with " the blood of ſo many of his ſubjects, perhaps when " he came to age, he would demand it at the hands of " his governors. And with regard to the ſecond " point, it was as little feaſible; and though it could " be effected as we intend, it would be raiſing by this " means as many deſperate enemies as exiles. With " reſpect to the edict of July, though there was a " plauſible pretext for it, yet it would lead men to " Atheiſm, by allowing them not to frequent the Ca- " tholic Churches, and yet prohibiting the exerciſe of " their religion. To obviate therefore all theſe incon- " veniencies it had been thought proper to eſtabliſh in " France two Churches, till God ſhould pleaſe to re- " unite them; and this had been formerly practiſed by " the Emperors Galerius, Maximian, and Conſtantius, " in order to compoſe the diviſions between the Chri- " ſtians and Pagans; remonſtrating to them and de- " ſiring them to give way to the preſent neceſſity; " in ſhort, to tolerate this ſcandal to avoid a greater; " and that if they committed a fault in this, it was " in imitation of the neighbouring nations, which in " ſuch an exigence had been obliged to do the ſame. " This anſwer being reported to the Parliament, and " the Chambers again aſſembled, they did not change " their opinion (46)." This oppoſition of the Par- liament troubled the Court, and a new conſultation was held there with ſome of the Deputies of Paris, what was to be done (47). The plurality of voices carried it for maintaining the edict, and " it was " committed to the Prince de la Roche-ſur-yon to " procure it to be publiſhed in Parliament, with ex- " preſs orders, that if they refuſed or delayed to do " it, he ſhould cauſe it to he publiſhed without the " judicial forms, being aſſiſted only by ſome private " Counſellors, whom he ſhould chooſe. This com- " miſſion was violent; but the prudent Prince exe- " cuted it in a very gentle manner, remonſtrating that " the King's intention was founded upon the neceſſity " of the times; that the Court of Parliament might " know well enough what paſſed in their ſight in " Paris, but was not acquainted with the complaints " which came daily from all parts of the Kingdom to " the ears of the King and his Council; deſiring " them to reſolve immediately, and without any long " diſcourſe, whether to anſwer yes or no. Upon this " it was agreed unanimouſly, that all who had been " preſent at the Council of St. Germans ſhould have " a deliberative voice in that affair as well as others; " ſo that at laſt it was reſolved that the edict ſhould " paſs." Indeed in the execution they " ſhewed plain- " ly, that it was by a forced conſent; for on Friday " the 26th of March, an extraordinary day of plead- " ing, it was confirmed with all the marks of con- " ſtraint, ſince with the edict were publiſhed all the " orders of the King, which was not cuſtomary in ſuch " publications. Beſides, the Attorney-General re- " quired nothing publickly, but declared that he had " given his concluſions in writing. It was ordered " therefore by the Court, that upon the back of the " letters it ſhould be written, that they had been " read, publiſhed, and regiſtered, after the King's " Attorney-General had been heard, but without any " approbation of the new religion; the whole by way " of proviſion, and till the King ſhould otherwiſe or- " der. Thus paſſed this edict at Paris (48)." This has ſome connexion with the Hiſtory of Monſieur l'Hoſpital, and contains ſuch particular circumſtances, which are not to be found ſo minutely in a general Hiſtory, that the reader will have ſome reaſon to be pleaſed with my mentioning of them.

(46) Paſquier, Lett. lib. 4. tom. 1. pag. 212, & ſeq.

(47) Ibid. pag. 214.

(48) Ibid.

[H] The ſpeeches, which he made, in order to inſpire a ſpirit of toleration, rendered him very much ſuſpected by the Roman Catholics, and extremely odious to the Court of Rome.] We have ſeen above (49) in a paſſage from Varillas, what was ſaid in France by way of raillery of the Chancellor's maſs. Beaucaire de Peguillon, ſpeaking of the aſſembly of St. German (50), and reporting the ſubſtance of the ſpeech, which the Chancellor l'Hoſpital made there, obſerves, that this firſt magiſtrate ſerved as an example to Judges, who favoured the ſectaries, and that he loved only the Calviniſts. Deinde Regios miniſtros, qui juri dicundo præſunt & Regia edicta non ſatis accurate exequuti ſunt, excuſat: inter quos ille merito accuſatus eſt, qui illis exemplo erat, & nullos, niſi Calvinianos in oculis habebat: quique præclara hac oratione, & multis aliis perverſis machinis ad condendum ſatis celebratum poſtea ſuum Januarii ſequentis edictum viam præparavit (51). i. e. " He then excuſes the King's Judges, who had not " been careful in executing the King's edicts; among " whom he was juſtly accuſed, who had been an " example to them, and regarded none but Calviniſts, " and by this excellent ſpeech and many other perverſe " arts prepared the way for forming his famous edict " of January following." This Hiſtorian has the aſſurance to call that great man atheiſt: here is what he ſays, when he remarks that the Cardinal of Lorrain procured him the dignity of Chancellor. Interim Olivario Cancellario vita functo Cardinalis Lotharingus præter domeſticorum ſuorum omnium ac familiarium ſententiam, ut Michaël Hoſpitalis homo quidem doctus, ſed nullius Religionis, aut ut vere dicam ἄθεος, in ejus locum ſurrogaretur, effecit (52). i. e. " In the mean while " upon the death of Olivier the Chancellor, the Car- " dinal of Lorrain, contrary to the opinion of all his " ſervants and friends, procured, that Michael l'Hoſ- " pital, a man of learning indeed, but of no religion, " or, to ſpeak truly, an atheiſt, ſhould be advanced " to his poſt." Something has been ſaid elſewhere (53) concerning this accuſation. Odoric Raynaldus has revived this cruel reproach, and made uſe of the very expreſſions of Beaucaire. It is in that paſſage where he ſpeaks of a certain attempt of the Preſident du Ferrier, which I have mentioned above (54). Monſieur Couſin is juſtly angry at this injuſtice and outrage of Raynaldus, and quotes a fine paſſage from the letter, which the

(49) In the remark [D] citation (20).

(50) Held in 1561.

(51) Belcar. lib. 29. num. 30. pag. 964.

(52) Idem, lib. 28. num. 57. pag. 937.

(53) See Penſées diverſes ſur les Cometes, pag. 539. & Critique Generale du Calviniſme de Maimbourg, Letter 16. num. 2. of the 3d edit.

(54) In the remark [C] of the article FERRIER (Arnaud).

peared to be greatly afflicted, when he ſaw that both parties were preparing to take arms after the affair at Vaſſi. He declared his ſentiments plainly upon that point, and returned a good anſwer to the Conſtable, who had ſaid to him, that it did not belong to men of the long robe to give their judgment with relation to war: though ſuch men, anſwered he, do not know how to bear arms, yet they know when they ought to be uſed (g). Cardinal Hippolyto the Chancellor l'Hoſpital wrote to Pius IV, September the 29th 1562 (55). Father Paul (56) informs us, that this Pope found the ſpeech the Chancellor had made at the conference of Poiſſi to be heretical in many points. He adds, that the ſame Pope threatned even to ſummon him before the inquiſition, and that the Court of Rome, where copies of that ſpeech had been diſperſed, ſpoke very ill of him, and ſuppoſed, that all the Miniſters of the Kingdom, had the ſame ſentiments of the Court; and the French Embaſſador had much ado to defend himſelf. Obſerve, that Pius IV having reſolved to give the King of France an hundred thouſand crowns by way of preſent, and to lend as many more, ſtipulated among other things, that the Chancellor, the Biſhop of Valence, and ſome others whom he named, ſhould be impriſoned (57). We ſhall quote here a paſſage from a letter, which the Cardinal Legate Hyppolytus d'Eſte wrote to that Pope June 14, 1562. It is dated at Bois de Vincennes. "It is not one of the leaſt difficulties to remove from "Court the Chancellor and many other perſons of "rank, as your Holineſs deſires. For you place in this "number both heretics, and thoſe who are ſuſpected "of hereſy. But if it be neceſſary to remove from "Court all the latter, it would undoubtedly be empty, "theſe new opinions having already made ſuch an "impreſſion upon the minds of the Courtiers, that "there are but few, who have not at leaſt ſome "ſmall tincture of them ... But to return to the moſt "turbulent of the Court, your Holineſs is not igno-"rant, how difficult it was to remove the Chaſtil-"lons ... But as for the removal of the Chancellor *, "which is deſired, it is quite another thing; for be-"ſides that his poſt does not permit him to abſent him-"ſelf from Court except on very important reaſons, "he cannot yet be deprived of his place without ex-"preſs orders from the King, or for ſome conſiderable "fault, if he has committed any; nor can it be juſtly "ſaid, that he has deſerved death, unleſs it be ſhewn "by indubitable proofs. Now to bring him to a "tryal upon ſuch an accuſation cannot be done with-"out employing a great deal of time in the affair. "Beſides, ſuch an accuſation would undoubtedly be "ill grounded, ſince he is commonly ſeen to go to "maſs, to confeſs, and to communicate, ſo that he "cannot be openly convicted of not being a Catho-"lic (58)." The letter which he wrote the day following to Cardinal Borromeo ſhews, that Catherine de Medicis was not pleaſed with his propoſal of removing certain perſons, and that ſhe was ſtill more angry than before, when he named particularly the Chancellor according to expreſs orders, which he had from Pius IV (59). Hence it appears, that Mr. Varillas is greatly miſtaken, when he ſays, that the Triumviri obliged Monſieur de l'Hoſpital to retire, and that the Queen made a ſacrifice of him (60). He aſſerts, that this pretended retreat preceded the declaration of April the 7th 1562, and that it continued during all the firſt war (61). This is contradicted both by the ſilence of the other Hiſtorians, and the letters of the Legate dated June the 15th and July the 8th 1562 (62).

(g) Paſquier, Lettres, tom. 1. lib. 4. pag. 226. See alſo Baptiſt le Grain, lib. 1. of the Hiſtory of Henry IV. p. m. 129, 130. where he commends him as much as he blames thoſe who excluded him from the council of war.

It was not a miſtake to believe that Monſieur de l'Hoſpital approved in his heart the doctrine of the reformed. Catherine de Medicis did not advance any falſity in all the diſcourſe, which is related by Monſr. de Mezerai. "She uſed all her arts to ſap the credit, "which he had gained with the young King, whom "ſhe aſſured by her confidents, that he certainly was a "favourer of heretics; that his wife, daughter, ſon-"in-law, and all his family, being of that religion, "there was no doubt but he was ſo in his heart, and "that he was only reſtrained by the apprehenſion of "loſing his poſt from publicly profeſſing Calviniſm. "Therefore as concealed enemies are much more dan-"gerous than open ones, it was neceſſary to be more "cautious of him than of the Admiral; and that his "Majeſty ought not any longer to ſuffer him to poi-"ſon his whole Council by theſe fine maxims of peace, "under which, as under the ſkin of a ſerpent varie-"gated with the moſt beautiful colours, was concealed "a moſt deadly poiſon, which by flattering would "prove fatal (63)." She had no reaſon to ſay, that Monſieur de l'Hoſpital was a dangerous enemy; for if he favoured the Proteſtants, it was not by diſloyal artifices, but by maxims the moſt conformable to the intereſt of the Kingdom and the ſervice of his Majeſty. The integrity of his manners, his experience, and prudence in the management of affairs, were allowed by all the world; as his unbiaſſed affection to the intereſt of the Kingdom, the preſervation of the Laws, and the eaſe of the people, and his conſtant reſolution in oppoſing the injuſtice of great men, were highly applauded by good men (64). Catherine de Medicis ſpoke the truth, when ſhe affirmed that the Chancellor's family was of the reformed religion (65). Now this is a good proof that he diſapproved of the doctrines of the Church of Rome. He has been pictured with a lighted candle behind him in the Icones of Theodore Beza, to ſignify, ſays Mr. Spondanus (66), that he carried a torch to light others, but not to light himſelf. The diſcourſe, which attends this Icon, informs us, that two reaſons reſtrained him from publicly profeſſing the truth. He was apprehenſive of loſing the means of ſerving the cauſe, and he hoped, that the time would come, when he ſhould not any longer be obliged to diſſemble. He in vain expected this conjuncture, and afterwards being deſirous of declaring himſelf he could not execute his reſolution. He ſacrificed himſelf, for others. Beza's Latin expreſſes this very well. Huic ... ad juſtum laudis cumulum id videtur defuiſſe, quòd partim ne ſibi ad pios juvandos aditum præſtruere, ſi veram religionem apertè profiteatur, partim vana quadam expectatione deluſus, eo luto ex quo erutos omnes optabat, penitus extricare ſeſe quum diu neglexiſſet, poſtea volens id præſtare non potuit. Sed ecquis illius memoriam non celebrarit, qui, ut aliis conſuleret, ſeipſum tamdiu pene neglexit (67)? i. e. "This "ſeems to have been wanting to compleat his cha-"racter, that partly left he ſhould diſqualify himſelf "from aſſiſting the faithful, if he ſhould openly pro-"feſs the true religion, and partly being deluded by "a vain expectation, after he had long neglected "wholly to extricate himſelf from that mire, out of "which he deſired all might be reſcued, when he "afterwards deſired to do it, he had not the power. "But who would not celebrate his praiſe, who ſo long "almoſt diſregarded himſelf, that he might ſerve "others?" His will is a proof, that in his heart he was not a Papiſt: there is no mention in it of the Maſs, or Purgatory, or Prieſt, or any thing of that kind; and he obſerves there, that Chriſtians have no great eſteem for funeral ceremonies or burials (68). Spondanus pretends, that this is the language of a profane perſon (69); and Monſieur Maimbourg ſays theſe terms are unworthy of a Chriſtian (70). Genebrard had already ſhewn his reſentment againſt theſe expreſſions in the funeral oration of Peter Danes. Obſerve, that it is ſaid, that Monſieur de l'Hoſpital had been engaged in the enterpriſe of Amboiſe. Conſider well theſe words of the Sieur d'Aubigné. "The Chancellor "Olivier dying at that time in the manner which we "have repreſented, L'Hoſpital, a man highly eſteemed, "ſucceeded him, though he had been one of the Con-"ſpirators in the affair of Amboiſe. This I affirm in "oppoſition to every thing which has been written, "ſince the original of the enterpriſe was conſigned into "the hands of my father, in which was his name at "length between that of Andelot, and one Spifame; "a thing, which I have ſhewn to many perſons of "diſtinction (71)." Mezerai endeavours to refute all this by a very weak reaſon: it is, ſays he (72), that L' Hoſpital departed from France in the month of November. But did not he know how many journeys la Renaude cauſed to be made? Was it ſo difficult to diſpatch one of the accomplices to Monſieur de l'Hoſpital in Piedmont? However this be, I imagine, that if he ſigned this conſpiracy, he was ſhewn only the fair ſide of it, and that he never expected, that it ſhould

(55) See Journal des Savans of Feb. 28, 1689, pag. 118, 119. of the Dutch edit.

(56) Hiſtory of the Council of Trent, lib. 5. pag. 438. of Amelot's verſion.

(57) Ibid. lib. 6. pag. 487. ad ann. 1562.

(*) He accommodated himſelf in the Council to the deſigns of the Queen, who had ſecretly inſtructed him; but becauſe he voted for peace contrary to the ſentiments of the Duke of Guiſe and the Conſtable he was ill treated by both parties, and under pretence that he was a man of the gown, he was excluded from the councils of war, where the Queen afterwards found that ſhe wanted one of her chief Miniſters. Davila, Hiſt. lib. 2.

(58) Negotiations ou Lettres d'Affaires eſcrites par le Cardinal de Ferrare Légat en France, pag. 224, 225.

(59) Ibid. pag. 240, 241.

(60) Varillas, Hiſt. de Charles IX, of tom. 1. pag. m. 151.

(61) Ibid. pag. 353.

(62) See Negotiations du Cardinal de Ferrare, pag. 308.

(63) Mezerai, Hiſt. de France, tom. 3. pag. 85.

(64) Ibid. pag. 296.

(65) See Spondan. ad ann. 1573, num. 15. pag. m 745.

(66) Ad ann. 1561, num. 18. pag. 609.

(67) Beza in Iconibus, folio V, iii.

(68) See the Bibliotb Choiſie of Colomies, pag. 70.

(69) Ad ann. 1573, num. 15. pag. 745.

(70) Hiſt. du Calvin. pag. 105. See what has been anſwered to him in the Critique Générale of his book, Letter 16. num. 3.

(71) D'Aubigné, Hiſt. Univerſelle, tom. 1. lib. 2. cap. 18. pag. m. 129.

(72) Mezerai, Hiſt. de France, tom. 3. pag. 22.

Hippolyto d'Eſte, Legate à latere in France, received orders to endeavour to remove him from Court, but he returned anſwer to the Pope, that he ſaw no probability of ſucceeding in that affair (h). He propoſed it however to the Queen-Regent, who was extremely angry at it. If Mr. Varillas had known this, he would not have committed the miſtake, which we ſhall ſee below (i). The pacific counſels of the Chancellor contributed more to his diſgrace than any thing elſe; I have given good proofs of this (k). He retired voluntarily, when he ſaw that his enemies had exaſperated the King againſt him; and he ſpent the remainder of his life in a country ſeat (l), which he had in Beauce. He retired in June 1568. The ſeals were demanded of him ſome days after. He reſigned them very readily, ſaying that indeed he was not any longer fit for the affairs of the world, which he ſaw to be too much corrupted (m). We ought not to think it more ſtrange, that he could ſupport himſelf ſeven or eight years in ſo corrupt a Court, than to find that he fell at laſt into diſgrace. There would have been ſomething wanting to the luſtre of his virtue and glory, if he had continued in the poſt of Chancellor till his death; for under ſuch a reign it was a kind of blemiſh and an ill ſign to be thought very proper for that great office. A man of integrity was not what thoſe, who had the direction of affairs then, wanted. We may remark, that Monſieur de l'Hoſpital took care however to procure excellent laws [I], and flattered neither the ſubjects nor the Prince. He had a great zeal for maintaining and confirming the Royal Majeſty and Authority, and by the gravity

(h) See the citation (58) about the middle.

(i) Citation (60).

(k) In the remark [H] towards the end.

(l) Named Vignai and not Vignan, as Mezerai calls it, pag. 186. of the 3d tome of his larger Hiſtory. He is not exact in proper names.

(m) Brantome, au Diſcours du Connetable de Mommorenci, pag. 17. of tome 2.

ſhould be executed in the manner in which it was concerted.

Father Garaſſe, tranſported with a blind deſire of cenſuring the Proteſtants, has charged them with calumny in endeavouring to perſuade all France, that the Chancellor de l'Hoſpital was of their faith. He compares them to the Novatians, who publiſhed in lying writings, that St. Cyprian died in their communion; and he ſays, that this has been from all antiquity an ingenious piece of malice of wicked men (73). He only diſcovers his ignorance.

(73) See Doctrine Curieuſe de Garaſſe, pag. 918, 919.

I cannot avoid inſerting here two obſervations, which I find in an anonymous piece, which is an excellent one. They inform us of the cauſes of the Chancellor's diſgrace. I do not think, ſays this unknown author (74), "that a great Miniſter, who is "employed in the important affairs of a Prince, "ought to be ſilent, whatever may happen; otherwiſe he would be the cauſe of his maſter's ruin by "his ſilence, as well as others by their attempts and "conſpiracies. For this reaſon I cannot be of their "opinion, who think that the Chancellor de l'Hoſpital had no occaſion to inſiſt ſo ſtrongly againſt the "reſolution which had been taken * * * * contrary to "the prudent advice of the late Conſtable, of engaging the King to depart * * * * at the beginning "of the ſecond troubles. For ſince that wiſe and prudent Miniſter judged, and judged very rightly, as "the event ſhewed, that this ſuddain departure being "put in execution ... would undoubtedly prevent a "reconciliation, and reduce matters to extremities; "there is no manner of doubt, but that if he had "concealed his opinion, and not inſiſted upon it, as "he did, he would have been guilty of a baſeneſs "unworthy of a man, who had been raiſed by his "virtue only to ſo high a dignity. For though afterwards he was ſinking, and his enemies, that is, the "enemies of his virtue, integrity, and ſincerity begun "from that time to conſpire to remove him; yet this "was not any reaſon for him to fail in his duty, ſince "the aim of thoſe, who have the honour to be employed in ſuch poſts, ought not to be to keep them "by injuring their honour and conſcience, but to ſerve "well and faithfully. Beſides, matters taking the "turn, which they did afterwards, a man of great "probity and courage, as this worthy Chancellor was, "ought to be very well ſatisfied with retiring ... (75). "A good Miniſter, who is really a man of virtue ... "will never give his advice contrary to his opinion, "and being commanded to ſpeak, and declare his ſentiments, will acquit himſelf faithfully and courageouſly. This is what the ſame Chancellor did, "when the queſtion was about the bulls, which allowed "the ſale of the Church-Lands to the value of an "hundred and fifty thouſand livres, for the extirpation of heretics; for this clauſe being contrary to "the edicts of the pacification, the maintenance of "which the Chancellor thought neceſſary to the good "of the Kingdom; beſides that as they had been "granted ſolemnly, he thought they could not be contravened, and that this was one of the effects of the "league, which was then concerting; and therefore "he declared openly his opinion, which was followed, "that they ſhould procure new bulls without that "clauſe, which was the laſt ſtumbling-block and occaſion of involving that great man under the ſuſpicion of "hereſy, and depriving him of the ſeals, in order to "give them to a man, who was thought more proper "for the time; and ſoon after every thing was diſpoſed for war."

(74) Fragment de l'Examen du Prince de Machiavel, pag. 95, & ſeqq. edit. 1622 in 12mo.

(75) Ibid. pag. 97, & ſeq.

[I] He took care however to procure excellent Laws.] Stephen Paſquier has furniſhed me with this reflection. I ſhall quote his words (76). "We have ſeen in "our time a young King Charles IX in France, "whoſe minority at firſt, and afterwards the extraordinary violence of his temper gave him no leiſure "to make Laws; yet never any King before him "made ſo many excellent edicts as he did; witneſs "that in 1560 in the States held at Orleans; the "other, which he made at Rouſſillon in 1563; and "the third at Moulins in 1566. Theſe three edicts "contain a prodigious number of articles in point "of policy, and excellent regulations, which vaſtly "ſurpaſs our ancient ordinances. To whom do we "owe this advantage? To no other than Michael de "l'Hoſpital, his great and wiſe Chancellor, who, under "the authority of the young King his maſter, was "the principal mediator of the firſt, and inſtigator, "promoter, and author of the two others. And I "ſhould be extremely glad that they were obſerved "with the ſame zeal as they were introduced." I am ſurprized that Paſquier does not mention the excellent edicts, which Monſieur de l'Hoſpital procured under Francis II. An Hiſtorian of that time (77) ſpeaks of three, which were very good and of great uſe. I ſhall ſhew what the firſt conſiſted of; it was that which regulated wills or donations of widows, who quickly married again. I ſhall make uſe of the words of an author of that age (78). "It was at "the ſollicitation of the Chancellor de l'Hoſpital, "that ſeveral ordinances, edicts, and ſtatutes were "made and publiſhed by our Kings of France for the "relief of the people, and the maintenance of juſtice. "Among others we have the edict of King Francis II, "which reſtrains ſecond marriages by taking away "the liberty, which thoſe women who married a-"gain, had to give more to their ſecond huſbands, "than to one of the children of their firſt. The occaſion of this edict was, that it happened, that a "woman of this Nation, who was very rich, fell in love "with a young Nobleman, who, becauſe ſhe ſeemed "too old, had no inclination to marry her. She was "ſo tranſported by her paſſion after him, that know-"ing he loved money, ſhe gave him all her eſtate, "reſerving only what belonged to her children by "her firſt huſband as their lawful portion. So that "her children for a morſel of bread were in a man-"ner deprived of their mother's inheritance, which "was transferred to a ſecond huſband. To prevent "ſuch frauds the Chancellor introduced into France "the ordinance of the Emperor Leo, mentioned in "the Law hac Edictali 6, tit. de ſecund. nupt. in the "fifth gravity of his cenſures knew how to make Parliaments ſenſible of their ill conduct in diſobeying their King [K] ; but on the other hand he took care, that the Prince ſhould obey

(76) Paſquier, Lett. lib. 19. tom. 2. pag. 520, 521.

(77) Lewis Reignier, Sieur de la Planche, Hiſt. de François II, pag. 515, & ſeq.

(78) Thevet, Eloge. tom. 7. pag. 375.

" fifth book of the Juſtinian Code, which prohibits " the giving or leaving to a ſecond huſband more " than to one of the children of the firſt." It was very juſt and very neceſſary to renew this Law for the intereſt of the children of the firſt huſband ; for there were too many women, who being deſirous to marry again, would deprive them of their rights, in order to make themſelves the more agreeable to their new huſbands. They would ſupply by their liberality the charms which time had deprived them of; and beſides, the liberty of diſpoſing of their eſtates would expoſe them to lovers, who otherwiſe would not come to diſturb the reſolution, which they might have taken of edifying their neighbours by a virtuous widowhood.

[K] Knew how to make Parliaments ſenſible of their ill conduct in diſobeying their King.] An Attorney could not reprimand a Clerk who has committed a groſs blunder, more ſeverely than the Chancellor de l'Hoſpital did the Parliament of Bourdeaux, when Charles IX held his bed of juſtice there April the 12th 1564 before Eaſter. " The King, ſays he (79), has found a " great many faults in this Parliament, which having " been the lateſt erected, ſince it is but of an hundred " and twelve years ſtanding, you have the leſs excuſe " for departing from and neglecting ſo ſoon the antient ordinances, which would be excuſable in other " Parliaments, that are old ; and yet you are as much " or more corrupted than the old ones . . . . I have " received a great many complaints of your diſſentions . . . . See here an houſe ill governed ; and you " are accountable for it. The firſt fault is your diſobedience to your King ; for though his ordinances " are preſented to you, you obſerve them as you " pleaſe. If you have any remonſtrances to make to " him, bring them immediately, and he will hear " them. You rob him of his royal power, when you " refuſe to obey his royal ordinances, which is worſe " than to rob him of his demeſnes. I am informed " that the ordinance made at the requeſt of the States, " is not yet publiſhed here. And addreſſing himſelf " to the Preſident and King's Council, he ſaid, I ſhall " now ſpeak to you, Preſident and King's Council, " who ought to require and ſollicit the publication of " the edicts and ordinances of the King ; and you " Preſident, ought to propoſe, for you are the King's " Preſident in the Court. I am alſo informed, ſaid " he, that the ordinance of juſtice has not been publiſhed. I have likewiſe an account of ſome others, " which I ſhall not inſiſt upon to avoid prolixity. I " think, that you imagine yourſelves wiſer than the " King, but your wiſdom is limited to judge of proceſſes ; do you not think your ſelves wiſer than the " King, Queen, and his Council ? He has procured " peace, and at preſent there is war between him " and his Court of Parliament . . . (80). You deſpiſe " the Queen and King's Council. I ſee that you " value your own decrees ſo highly, that you prefer " them to ordinances, which, after you receive them, " you interpret as you pleaſe. It is not your buſineſs, " but the King's, to interpret ordinances, even thoſe " which concern the public good." I omit the concluſion of his diſcourſe, which is ſtill more ſevere than what I have cited. Obſerve, that this is a Commentary on what the King had ſaid in a few words in this Parliament, " that he would for the future be " better obeyed than he had been ; that he would " not ſuffer any of his ſubjects to take arms without his " leave ; and that he would likewiſe have his edicts " obſerved (81)." It is undoubted, that Monſieur de l'Hoſpital ſuggeſted to him this diſcourſe, as alſo the vigorous declaration, which had been made by the ſame Prince ſometime before to the Deputies of the Parliament of Paris. He had made remonſtrances to him concerning the edict of his majority, which they had not regiſtered. " The King, whoſe voice " and countenance were compoſed to a ſtudied ſeve- " verity, anſwered them, that they muſt obey ; that " they ſhould not interpoſe any more in public affairs ; " and that they ſhould diveſt themſelves of this old " error, that they were tutors of the King, defenders of " the Kingdom, and guardians of the City of Paris. " The Deputies having made their report to the " Court, it was divided (82)," and they ſent a new deputation to the King, " who ordered that the " edict ſhould be publiſhed and regiſtered without de- " lay, and that all the Preſidents and Counſellors " ſhould be preſent upon pain of interdiction (83)." It is eaſy to conceive, conſidering the King's age, that in this caſe he only repeated the leſſon of Monſieur de l'Hoſpital. " He made once a ſpeech to the " Parliament with the doors open, upon their refuſing " to paſs ſome of his edicts . . . . and complaining of " the adminiſtration of juſtice and corruption there, " and the rejecting of his edicts, ſaid with a noble, " and at it were menacing reſolution, It is your " buſineſs to obey my ordinances, without diſputing " what they are, for I know better than you what is " proper for the good of my Kingdom. Though " he had not yet any beard, he ſpoke thus before " theſe old and wiſe perſons, who were all ſurprized " at this reſolute and grave ſpeech, which favoured " more of his own generous courage, than the leſſons " of Monſieur Amiot his Preceptor (84)." Brantome ſhould have added that this ſpeech was dictated to him by Michael de l'Hoſpital. The Prince, who had already diſgraced him (85), well remembred the inſtructions which he had received from his Chancellor, that it was of importance to him to humble the preſumption of the Parliament of Paris, which was ſo pernicious at that time to the whole Kingdom.

Here I ought to examine in a few words the diſcourſe which we hear every day, and which repreſents as a principle of miſery the ſuppreſſion of the right, which Parliaments had formerly of rejecting thoſe edicts, which appeared to them unjuſt. This, it is ſaid, was a bank, which prevented the people from being drowned under the arbitrary power of the Monarch. The breaking down of this bank ought to be compared to the blow, by which Æolus ſhook the mountain, which ſerved as a priſon to the winds.

Cavum converſa cuſpide montem
Impulit in latus : ac venti, velut agmine facto,
Quâ data porta, ruunt, & terras turbine perflant.
Incubuêre mari, totumque à ſedibus imis
Unà Euruſque Notuſque ruunt, creberque procellis
Africus ; & vaſtos volvunt ad littora fluctus.
Inſequitur clamorque virûm, ſtridorque rudentum (86).

" He ſaid, and hurl'd againſt the mountain's ſide
" His quiv'ring ſpear, and all the God apply'd :
" The raging winds ruſh thro' the hollow wound,
" And dance aloft in air, and ſkim along the ground :
" Then ſettling on the ſea the ſurges ſweep,
" Raiſe liquid mountains, and diſcloſe the deep,
" South, eaſt, and weſt, with mix'd confuſion roar,
" And roll the foaming billows to the ſhore ;
" The cables crack, the Sailors frightful cries
" Aſcend, and ſable night involves the ſkies,
" And Heav'n itſelf is raviſh'd from their eyes.

DRYDEN.

They illuſtrate this with a great many maxims, which have a great appearance of ſolidity ; but they go no further ; they never turn the tables ; they never conſult experience ; they never examine whether a perſon may not anſwer, I appeal to experience. Now this is the weak ſide ; for it is eaſy to prove, that France never was ſo diſtreſſed and unhappy, as when the Parliament moſt enjoyed the authority of rejecting the edicts and ordinances of the Prince under Charles IX and Henry III. It is eaſy to prove alſo, that the exerciſe of this authority was the principal ſource of the calamities of the Kingdom from the year 1562 to 1594. The Chancellor de l'Hoſpital had laid the foundation of the public peace by the edict of January. The Church of Rome had no longer any reaſon to fear the danger, which I have mentioned above (87) : the King of Navarre had abandoned the Huguenots ; Catherine de Medicis no longer thought of taking off the maſk. They would have been ſatisfied with having their fill of preaching ; and thus the Kingdom might have

(79) See Recueil de divers Memoires, printed at Paris by Peter Chevalier 1623 in 4to, pag. 424.

(80) Ibid. pag. 426.

(81) Ibid. pag. 421.

(82) Mezerai, Abregé Chronolog. tom. 5. pag. 80. ad ann. 1563.

(83) Ibid.

(84) Brantome, Eloge de Charles IX, pag. 33, 34. of the 4th tome of his Memoires.

(85) Without doubt Brantome ſpeaks of the ſame ſpeech of Charles IX, which Mezerai mentions under the year 1571, pag. 239. of the 3d tome of his Great Hiſtory.

REFLEXION on what is ſaid by many people, that it is for the intereſt of the Kingdom of France, that Parliaments ſhould have much more authority than they have.

(86) Virgil. Æneid. lib. 1. ver. 85.

(87) In the remark [F].

obey juſtice and reaſon. He oppoſed to the utmoſt unjuſt edicts, and if notwithſtanding he was obliged to ſeal them, he ſhewed that it was againſt his will [L]. One of the occaſions, in which he diſplayed his great preſence of mind, was when the demands of the Embaſſadors of England concerning the reſtitution of Calais were conſidered in the King's Council. He anſwered with ſo much force their firſt reaſons and replies, that he manifeſtly have continued in peace, if the edict of January had been obſerved. But the Catholics infringed it, and this occaſioned the firſt religious war, the root of all the evils, which afflicted the Kingdom till the extinction of the league; for all theſe evils were grafted upon or ſprung from one another, by a well connected train of cauſes and effects (88). Now to what muſt we principally aſcribe the infraction of this edict of January? Is it not to be imputed to the Parliament of Paris? Did not they encourage all the world not to obſerve it? They did not regiſter it without defaming it (89), that is, after three commands, and with ſuch reſtrictions and clauſes, as ſhewed, that they only regiſtered it by compulſion, and as a tranſient and very pernicious regulation. Who after this would ſcruple to break ſuch an edict? Might not one be aſſured, that a Parliament, which judged in this manner, would not trouble themſelves with puniſhing thoſe, who ſhould infringe it? Now at that time it was abſolutely the ſame thing to be acceſſary to the infraction of the edict, and to ſound an alarm for a civil war. Obſerve Monſieur Varillas's words, when he begins to relate the meaſures taken againſt thoſe of the reformed religion a little before the maſſacre of Vaſſi. The houſe of Guiſe, ſays he (90), judged from the oppoſition, which the edict of January had met with in the Parliament, that it would not ſubſiſt long, and did not doubt but that civil wars would ſoon break out. Let us ſay in general, that the Parliaments of France, by refuſing to regiſter the edicts of pacification, or by regiſtering them with an ill grace, and afterwards by a natural conſequence not taking care to ſee them obſerved, were one of the principal cauſes of the long calamities, which diſtreſſed the Kingdom, and were very near deſtroying abſolutely the Monarchy. If Charles V had reigned at that time, it would infallibly have become a province to his dominions, and been divided into a thouſand pieces.

But ſome body will ſay, you alledge only the abuſe which the Parliament then made of the right, which they had to reject the edicts of the Prince. To this I anſwer, are tyranny and moſt other diſorders any thing elſe than the abuſe of good things? It is ſufficient to refute your reflections, that it may be ſaid, that this bank or barrier, which you ſpeak of, and which properly ſpeaking includes this contradiction, that a State is and is not monarchical, cannot be reckoned a good remedy, ſince it has done much more harm than good. What compariſon is there between the advantages, which reſult from the rejecting of ſome pecuniary edicts (91), and the deplorable ruin, which the Kingdom ſuffered for above thirty years? Theſe horrible calamities are much leſs to be imputed to the Court, than to the Parliaments. The Court was become wiſe through the inſtructions of a very able and very virtuous Chancellor. Monſieur de l'Hoſpital had induced it to prevent, by the edict of January, all misfortunes, and to deſtroy the root of civil wars. The Parliaments inſtead of ſeconding this, oppoſed and rendered ineffectual the remedy which he had found; a remedy which could not but be good, ſince there was no other (92). The Court would have followed the ſteps which the Chancellor had directed it to; and left it only on account of the confuſions, into which the Kingdom fell, through the fault of thoſe, who diſobeyed the edict; and theſe were the Parliaments, which opened a wide path to this diſobedience. They are anſwerable therefore for the profanation, plundering, and demoliſhing ſo many Churches, of which ſome are pleaſed to give catalogues, in order to render the Huguenots odious. It was not owing to them, that the miſeries of the Kingdom were not perpetual, even after the League was ſubdued. They oppoſed the edict of Nantes, the only remedy for the inteſtine diſorders; the Parliament of Paris would never have regiſtered it, if Henry IV had not made uſe of intreaties, but with a tone, which ſhewed, that he knew how to make himſelf obeyed (93). Obſerve, that the (88) Compare this with the remark made by d'Aubigné chap. 2. lib. 5. of the 3d tome of his Hiſtory, pag. m. 628.

(89) See remark [G].

(90) Varill. Hiſt. de Charles IX. tom. 1. pag. m. 121. ad ann. 1562.

(91) The 9th of September 1578, the Parliament regiſtered but two pecuniary edicts of 22 which were preſented. See Father du Londel's Faſtes, pag. 88.

(92) Optimum remedium quia unicum.

(93) See Matthieu, Hiſtoire de la Paix, liv. 2. Narrat. 1. num. 7. pag. 210, & ſeqq.

ſpeech of Monſieur de l'Hoſpital to the Parliament of Bourdeaux (94), ſhews, that at that time, when little regard was paid to the King's ordinances, the adminiſtration of juſtice was full of corruption and ſhocking diſorders. Let us conclude with remarking, that a popular government is ſomething ſo perplexed, that the remedies, which ſeem to be the beſt, are ſometimes worſe than the diſeaſe, and the ſource of the greateſt diſorders. I have juſt given an eminent inſtance of this.

(94) I have cited it above quotation (79).

[L] If he was obliged to ſeal unjuſt edicts, he ſhewed, that it was againſt his will.] A Miniſter of State, and eſpecially a Chancellor to a King, ought to do two things, if he would diſcharge his duty. One is to recommend very ſtrongly to ſubjects ſubmiſſion and obedience; he ought not to ſpeak to them of any thing elſe; let him not amuſe himſelf with diſputing with them, whether they have a right ſometimes of taking up arms, and refuſing to obey the ordinances, which they think unjuſt and burthenſome. He muſt lay it down as a thing inconteſtible that they have no ſuch right. The other thing, which he ought to do, is to repreſent in a lively manner, and inceſſantly to the Prince, that the royal authority does not diſpenſe him from an abſolute ſubmiſſion to juſtice, and that he has no right, nor privilege, to violate juſtice, equity, his word, &c. Monſieur de l'Hoſpital acquitted himſelf exactly of both theſe duties. He took the part of the King before his ſubjects, and the part of the ſubjects before the King. He repreſſed with great vigour thoſe, who made any attempt upon the royal authority. See (95) the cenſures, which he made, or which the King made to the Parliament, by his advice. See alſo (96) what he anſwered to the Deputy of the Parliament of Dijon. But you will now ſee with what integrity, with what firmneſs, he reſiſted the unjuſt propoſitions, which were ſuggeſted to the King. He oppoſed them by his reaſons as far as was in his power; and if his remonſtrances did not prevent the concluſion of the affair, he waſhed his hands of it, he ſhewed, that he did not give his conſent to it. "Ah, "Sir, what a foul and venomous tail it is in an "edict, when the regiſtring of it is ſtopped by theſe "words, by the expreſs command of the King often "repeated, which produce only a condemnation among "wiſe and good men, againſt the injuſtice of it, ſupported only by the commands, which the Chancellors are frequently obliged to ſeal contrary to their "opinion, in which are ſeen theſe odious and reproachful words: Notwithſtanding all the remonſtrances made and to be made, which we hold as heard "and underſtood, and for which we will not have it "deferred: That is to ſay, in deſpite of reaſon, by a "malignant counſel, by an unjuſt will, by a precipitate deliberation, by the rebuke of virtue, by the "toleration of evil, by the hatred of honour, and by "an affected ignorance, and the contempt of right. "It was therefore to avoid partaking in this diſgrace, "that the good and very worthy Chancellor de l'Hoſpital wrote generally theſe words with his own "hand upon the back of ſuch letters, Me non conſentiente, that is to ſay, I have been obliged to "ſeal them againſt my will; as he did in the letters "about the reception of the powers of the Cardinal "of Ferrara, ſent as Legate into France by Pope "Pius IV (*), to which reſolute conduct of the Chan-"cellor, the Court of Parliament having ſeen theſe "words upon the back of the letters, joined themſelves, and would never regiſter theſe powers (97)." The Preſident de la Place will inform us more particularly of what relates to this laſt fact. "Now for as "much as among other articles decreed in the States, "it was ordered, that the benefices of this Kingdom "ſhould be collated by the Ordinaries, each in his "dioceſe, and no longer by the Pope, and that no "diſpenſations ſhould be admitted; there was a great "difficulty to admit the powers of the ſaid Legate, "the Chancellor remonſtrating, that he could not do "any

(95) In the preceding remark.

(96) In the article BEGAT.

(*) La Popeliniere, lib. 7.

(97) Le Grain, Décade d'Henri le Grand, lib. 8. pag. m. 898.

manifeſtly had the advantage (n), and gave the King his maſter occaſion to flatter himſelf, that by keeping that place he ſhould not contravene the treaty of peace of Cateau. His vigilance, great as it was, could not ſecure him from the artifices of a Secretary, who was a diſhoneſt man [M]; and this gave him great uneaſineſs. It was obſerved, that he reſembled Ariſtotle in the face [N]. Some aſcribe to him the compariſon of the apes; and probably (n) See Thuanus, lib. 41. pag. 840, 841. ad ann. 1567. and Varillas, Hiſtoire de Charles IX. pag. m. 39, & ſeqq. of the 2d tome. See alſo pag. 256. of the 1ſt tome.

" any thing contrary to what had been ſo readily re-
" ſolved and concluded by the ſaid States. But not-" withſtanding this, the ſaid Legate giving them to " underſtand, that as he was allied to the houſe of " France, it would be a great reproach and diſhonour
" to him to be the firſt Legate refuſed there, offering
" not to make uſe of his ſaid powers, but to return
" immediately after the regiſtering of them; the " Chancellor was ordered to ſeal the letters, which he " did after many altercations between the ſaid Legate
" and him; and after he had written under the ſeal of " theſe letters with his own hand theſe words, me non
" conſentiente, that is to ſay, againſt my conſent:
" Which being ſeen by the ſaid Court, they were re-
" fuſed, and it was declared, that they could not and " ought not to receive them (98)." There are ſome Hiſtorians, who ſay that at laſt the Legate, " not-" withſtanding the Chancellor's opinion, procured that " his powers ſhould be admitted in the Council of " State, in which he was allowed a ſeat (99)." Every one knows the vaſt authority of the Guiſes under Francis II; yet it was not capable of biaſſing the Chancellor: he was the only perſon, who refuſed to ſign the ſentence of death againſt the Prince of Condé (100).

(98) La Place, Commentaires de l'Eſtat de la Religion & République, lib. 6. fol. m. 214. verſo, ad ann. 1561. See concerning this Legate the book de l'origine des Cardinaux, pag. 265, & ſeq. Dutch edit. 1670.

(99) Le Grain, Décade de Henri le Grand, lib. 1. pag. 118.

(100) Idem, ibid. lib. 1. pag. 109.

Languetus has preſerved a lively repartee, which the Chancellor made to the Legate. The latter had preſumed to charge him with not knowing what his poſt required of him. At leaſt, replied the Chancellor, I have endeavoured to learn it; but you, who hold ſeveral Biſhoprics, have never had any thoughts of inſtructing yourſelf in the duties of the Epiſcopal function. Solus Cancellarius pertinaciſſime reſtitit, & dixit in ea re fieri ſummam injuriam Regi puero, ac regni Gallici jura, & Majeſtatem proſtitui, nec ſe paſſurum, ut Regio ſigillo ſibi concredito ad eam rem abuterentur. Ad quæ incandeſcens Ferrarienſis, dixit eum ignorare, quæ eſſent ſui muneris & officii. Ego vero, inquit Cancellarius, hoc ſaltem egi, ut id intelligerem, ſed tu ne quidem cogitaſti unquam quod ſit officium Epiſcopi, cum tamen aliquot Epiſcopatus poſſideas. Tandem victus aliorum importunitate tradidit eis Regium Sigillum, ſed tamen voluit inſtrumento permiſſionis inſeri, ſe contradicente hoc eſſe permiſſum (101). i. e. " The Chancellor alone reſolutely
" oppoſed it, and urged that by this affair a great in" jury would be done to the King in his minority,
" and that the Privileges and Majeſty of the Kingdom
" of France would be proſtituted; and that he would " not ſuffer them to abuſe to ſuch a purpoſe the King's
" ſeal intruſted with them. The Cardinal of Ferrara
" being provoked at this, ſaid, that he did not know
" what belonged to his office. But I, returned the
" the Chancellor, at leaſt have done thus much,
" that I have endeavoured to underſtand it; but you
" have never thought of what is the duty of a Biſhop,
" though you are poſſeſſed of ſeveral Biſhoprics. At
" laſt being overcome by the importunity of others
" he delivered up the King's ſeal to them, but would " have it inſerted in the inſtrument of permiſſion, that
" this was done againſt his will."

(101) Languet. Epiſt. 62. lib. 2. pag. 157.

Here follows a paſſage of Bodin. " It is very cer" tain, that the Laws, Ordinances, Letters Patents, " Privileges, and Grants of Princes have no force but
" during their life, if they are not ratified by the expreſs
" conſent or at leaſt the permiſſion of the Prince, who " has the cognizance of them ... This was the reaſon
" that Monſieur de l'Hoſpital Chancellor of France,
" refuſed to ſeal the confirmation of the Privileges and " exemption from taxes for St. Maur des Foſſes,
" whatever orders he had to do it, becauſe they con" tained a perpetual exemption, which is againſt the " nature of perſonal privileges, and leſſens the power
" of ſucceſſors, and cannot be given to any bodies of " men or colleges, except during the life of the Prince,
" who grants them, although the word perpetual be
" inſerted (102)."

(102) Bodin, De la Republique, lib. 1. cap. 8. pag. m. 131, 132.

[M] His vigilance ... could not ſecure him from the artifices of a Secretary, who was a diſhoneſt man.] I ſhall cite upon this ſubject what I have read in a book intitled, La Fortune de la Cour. The Chancellor de l'Hoſpital, who was blamed becauſe being na" turally very ſevere in expediting juſtice, and ſtiff to
" thoſe who came to ſollicit him, yet was not ſo
" with regard to his domeſtics, and eſpecially his Se" cretary Bouvaut, who ſurprized him as often as he " thought proper; which he continued to do till com" plaint was made to the Council upon occaſion of a " very rude letter. The Chancellor was aſhamed to " be ſurprized in this manner, and was obliged to " turn away, with a thouſand reproaches, a ſervant
" whom he had a great affection for before (103)." The author mentions another thing, which has no relation to my text; but I ſhall quote it, as it is a remarkable fact. " He was likewiſe ſeverely repri-
" manded by the late Monſieur de Montpenſier in a
" full Council, becauſe having ſhewn himſelf almoſt
" inexorable to paſs the Grants, which the King had " made him of no large ſum, yet ſome days before he " had received from the Treaſurer fifty thouſand
" livres in ready money; and he was greatly re-
" proached for it, though it was certain, that the " King, even of his own accord, had preſſed him to " take it (104)."

(103) Fortune de la Cour, pag. 349. This book was printed at Paris in 1642 in 8vo. See Bibliotheque Françoiſe de Sorel, pag. 414. edit. 1667.

(104) Ibid. pag. 350.

[N] It was obſerved, that he reſembled Ariſtotle in the face.] Theodore Beza aſſures us of this in very ſtrong terms. Ut ex antiquiſſimo numiſmate apparuit, ſummum illum omnium Philoſophorum principem Ariſtotelem ſic ore toto retulit, ut alterius ex altero imago expreſſa videri poſſet (105). i. e. " It appears from a very old
" coin, that he ſo much reſembled Ariſtotle, the Prince
" of Philoſophers, in the face, that the picture of
" one might ſeem to be taken from the other." Thevet refutes this. And with regard to the reſemblance, ſays he (106), which Beza feigns between Ariſtotle and our Chancellor, if he means the traces and lineaments of the face, there is no man, who compares the true picture of Ariſtotle, which I have given above, with that of the Chancellor, which had been drawn to the life, but will perceive at firſt ſight, that there is a difference. But Stephen Forcadel informs us of the circumſtances, which favour Beza. He tells us, that while Charles IX viſited the cities of his Kingdom, there was dug up a ſtatue, which bore the name of Ariſtotle, and perfectly reſembled Michael de l'Hoſpital. He adds, that verſes were written upon it, which pleaſed the Chancellor. I ſhall cite at large his words, becauſe they contain the praiſes of this great man, and becauſe my Dictionary ought, at leaſt ſometimes, to reſemble thoſe compilations in which are collected the judgments of learned men upon eminent perſons. Here then is what Stephen Forcadel writes (107). Legis pervigil & excellens cuſtos Cancellarius: qualem re ipſa ſe præbuit, dum viveret, ideoque à fato maxime laudabilis vir Michaël Hoſpitalis, cui Muſæ ſtatuam libentiſſime ponerent, niſi Juriſprudentia, ſimulque Philoſophia hoc decus præripuiſſet. Idque non ambigue ſignificatum eſt ſuperioribus annis, Carolo IX Rege ſuam Galliam oppidatim luſtrante, cum forte eruta fuit, & è ſinu terræ altius effoſſæ ſtatua inciſo Ariſtotelis titulo, quæ apprime M. Hoſpitalem lineamentis ac figuram referebat, ut nec ſibi ipſi magis ſit ille ſimilis, ſicut nec animi dotibus ab inſigni Philoſopho multum differt. Unde bene ominare cæpi de componendo turbulentæ Reipublicæ ſtatu, quia Gallorum Cancellarius Regi maximo intimus Magni illius Alexandri doctorem effigie exæquaſſet... Nos itaque Hoſpitali humaniſſimoque viro, honoris gratia, tunc verſiculos dedicavimus comiter ſupra expectationem accipiendos:

(105) Beza, in Iconibus, fol. vilj.

(106) Thevet, Eloges, tom. 7. pag. 367.

(107) Stephanus Forcatulus, de Gallor. Imperio & Philoſophiâ, lib. 7. pag. m. 1086, 1087.

Quiſquis Ariſtoteli doctum te contulit, idem Blanditus docto fertur Ariſtoteli.

i. e. " A Chancellor, a vigilant and excellent
" Guardian of the Law, as Michael l'Hoſpital really " ſhewed himſelf to be, while he lived, and therefore
" deſerved the higheſt commendations after his death.
" The Muſes would gladly raiſe a ſtatue to him, if probably they do in this point what is very common, not only with thoſe who talk at random, but even with writers; I mean, that they aſcribe to one what belongs to another [O]. He made an excellent will, which has been printed, and he expreſſed in it among other things his inclination to peace [P], and his indifference for funeral ſolemnities (o). He died

(o) See remark [H] citation (63).

" Civil Law and Philoſophy had not beforehand taken " away this honour. And this was plainly ſignified " ſome years ago, when during the time that Charles IX " made a progreſs through the cities of France, a ſtatue " with Ariſtotle's name upon it was dug up, which ſo " much reſembled Monſieur de l'Hoſpital, that he was " not more like himſelf, as he was not much un- " like that famous Philoſopher in the endowments of " his mind. Hence I began to preſage that the tur- " bulent ſtate of affairs in the Kingdom would be " compoſed, becauſe the Chancellor of France, who " was intimate with our great King, reſembled the " Tutor of Alexander the Great ... I therefore wrote " verſes in honour of de l'Hoſpital, a man of the " utmoſt humanity, which were received beyond my " expectation.

" Whoe'er compared you to learn'd Ariſtotle,
" Paid him the greateſt compliment in nature."

Thuanus confirms what Theodore Beza has aſſerted (108). Obſerve that Brantome mentions another reſemblance. The Chancellor de l'Hoſpital, ſays he (109), had all the appearance of Cato, a great white beard, a pale countenance and grave air, ſo that to ſee him, one would have ſaid, that he was the true picture of St. Jerom; and ſeveral perſons at Court ſaid the ſame.

[O] Some aſcribe to him the compariſon of the apes, and probably .... they aſcribe to one what belongs to another.] They transfer to the Chancellor de l'Hoſpital a thought of his predeceſſor. Read the following words of Montagne (110): " I have found the ſhorteſt " and eaſieſt way ... to rid myſelf of this deſire, and " to ſit ſtill ... judging rightly of my powers, that " they are not capable of great things; and remem- " bering the ſaying of the late Chancellor Olivier, " that the French are the apes, which leap up a tree " from branch to branch, and do not ſtop till they " reach the higheſt branch, to ſhew their breech " when they are there (§α)." Mr. Menage (111) cites theſe words of Montagne, after having quoted ſome Greek verſes (112), in which Scaliger made uſe of the ſame thought againſt Lydiat, and the Latin verſes, which Salmaſius wrote againſt Father Petavius; and which turn upon the ſame compariſon. Coſtar intimates that the Chancellor ſpoke thus in a ſpeech. This is what I am not eaſily led to believe. The Chancellor Olivier, ſays he (113), made no ſcruple publicly to compare the French to apes, which leap from branch to branch, and ſhew their breech when they are at the top of the tree. We ſhall ſee preſently, that an Advocate of the Parliament of Paris aſcribes this compariſon to the Chancellor de l'Hoſpital. This Advocate is little known but by the name of Gutherius (114), which may be tranſlated five or ſix different ways, without receding from the analogy, according to which the French latinize their names. Let this be ſaid by the bye. Here is the fact. Sæpe ego audivi à fori noſtri principibus viris, Michaëlem Hoſpitalium Franciæ Cancellarium, cui nulla ætas habuit parem, ſolitum dicere, multos, qui ad honores à fortuna pelluntur, ſimiarum eſſe ſimillimos, quæ altiorem arborem nactæ, eouſque conſcendunt, ut cum ad ſummum arboris faſtigium evaſerint, foliis vento ſtridentibus opertæ totæ poſteriora tantum prætereuntibus ridiculè oſtentant (115). i. e. " I have often heard of the " principal men of our Court of Judicature, that " Michael de l'Hoſpital, Chancellor of France, whoſe " equal has been in no age, uſed to ſay, that many " perſons, who have been raiſed to honours by for- " tune, are very like apes, who meeting with an " high tree, mount to the top of it, but the wind " moving the leaves they expoſe themſelves to laugh- " ter by ſhewing only their breech." There are a thouſand inſtances which prove, that the ſame thought is aſcribed to ſeveral perſons. I ſhall mention but one, which relates to the reign under which our Monſieur de l'Hoſpital held the office of Chancellor. " It was ſaid one day to Monſieur de Villeroy, that " he was the fitteſt man in the world to write the " Hiſtory of Charles IX, ſince he had a ſhare in the " whole of it; and that upon this account he ought " to write it. I have too many obligations to that " Prince, ſaid he, and I love his memory too much " to write his hiſtory (§β); meaning, that the truths " which he ſhould be obliged to relate, would be a " diſgrace to the King (116)." This is what the author of the book, intitled, La Fatalité de Saint Clou, ſays; but Mr. le Laboureur (117) tells us, that Morvillier made that anſwer. I ſhould chooſe to follow this latter tradition.

(§α) The edition of Montagne's Eſſays in 16mo printed at Lyons by Francis le Fevre 1595 has ſuppreſſed this as injurious to the French Nation. However it is no more than that of Livy, lib. 10. Gallorum prima prælia plus quam virorum, &c. a ſaying, which Rabelais has not ſcrupled to put into the mouth of one of Garagantua's Generals, in a ſpeech which he makes in a full council, and before his maſter. CRIT. REM.]

(§β) It is probable that this repartee, which in Matthieu's Hiſtory of Louis XI, pag. 571. edit. 1610, is related of a certain Lord to one Monſieur de Tinteville, who had ſaid to him, that none could write the Life of his late maſter better than he, was originally made by Chancellor Morvillier, whom Lewis XI had affronted by diſowning ſome ſevere words which he had charged him to deliver in his name to the Count of Charolois. CRIT. REM.]

[P] He expreſſed in his will his inclination to peace.] He was deſirous, in this laſt act of his life, to do himſelf honour on account of the ſame thing, which Cicero boaſted in a full Senate. Quo quidem in bello, ſaid that great Roman Orator, ſemper de pace agendum, audiendumque putavi; ſemperque dolui, non modo pacem, ſed orationem etiam civium pacem efflagitantium repudiari; neque enim ego illa, nec ulla unquam ſecutus ſum arma civilia: ſemperque mea conſilia pacis, & togæ ſocia, non belli, atque armorum fuerunt ... Quod quidem meum conſilium minimè obſcurum fuit, nam & in hoc ordine, integra re, multa de pace dixi; & in ipſo bello eadem etiam cum capitis mei periculo ſenſi (118). i. e. " In which war, I always thought it was pro- " per to treat of peace, and was always ſorry, that " not only peace, but likewiſe the petitions of the " citizens for it, were rejected; for I never followed " thoſe nor any other civil wars, and my advices " have been conſtantly on the ſide of peace, and not " of arms ... This opinion of mine was far from " being concealed; for in this aſſembly, while affairs " were yet entire, I ſpoke amply in favour of peace, " and during the war itſelf I declared my ſentiments " to the ſame purpoſe even to the danger of my life." There is ſcarce any thing in this but what Monſieur de l'Hoſpital might have ſaid; but here is what he wrote in his will (119). " I can affirm, that tho' " arms have been taken up four times, and four or " five battles have been fought, I always adviſed " peace, eſteeming nothing ſo injurious to a country " as a civil war, or more advantageous to it than " peace upon any terms whatſoever (120)." Having afterwards ſpoken of the enemies whom that maxim had raiſed againſt him, and the misfortunes in which France was plunged, &c. he adds (121): " I gave " way to arms, which were the ſtrongeſt, and retired " into the country with my wife, family, and little " children, requeſting but this one thing of the King " and Queen at my departure, that ſince they had re- " ſolved to break the peace, and purſue by war thoſe, " with whom a little before they had concluded " a peace, and ſince they had removed me from " Court, becauſe they underſtood, that I was averſe " to and had a bad opinion of their deſign; I requeſted " the King and Queen, I ſay, if they would not ac- " quieſce in my advice, yet at leaſt, ſoon after they " had ſatiated and glutted their heart and thirſt with " the blood of their ſubjects, that they would embrace the " firſt opportunity of peace, which ſhould offer, before " things

(116) Fatalité de Saint Clou. I have mentioned that book in the article of HENRY III, quotation (89), and at the end of the remark [R].

(117) Le Laboureur, Addit. aux Mémoires de Caſtelnau, tom. 1. pag. 522.

(108) Qui non vultu tantum Ariſtotelis os, quod ex utriuſque imaginum ubique proſtantium comparatione conſtat, ſed Solonis ... pectus ... referebat. Thuan. lib. 56. pag. 43.

(109) Brantome, Mémoires, tom. 2. pag. m. 73. in the Elogium of the Conſtable Montmorenci.

(110) Montagne, Eſſais, lib. 2. cap. 17. pag. m. 576, 577.

(111) Menage, Modi di dire Italiani, at the end of his Etymologies of the Italian Tongue.

(112) You will find them tranſlated into Latin in Voſſius de Scient. Mathem. pag. 237.

(113) Coſtar, Suite de la Defenſe de Voiture, pag. 189.

(114) His French name was Goutiere, as I learn from the Sieur Guichenon, pag. 36. of the Hiſt. de Breſſe.

(115) Jacobus Gutherius, de Jure Manium, lib. 2. cap. 26. pag. 351. edit. Lipſ. 1671.

(118) Cicero, pro Marcello, pag. m. 581.

(119) Teſtament de Michel de l'Hoſpital, quoted by Colomies, Biblioth. Choiſie, pag. 60.

(120) See Paſquier's Letters, lib. 10. pag. 626, & ſeq. tom. 1. in which he repreſents the miſery of civil wars.

(121) Teſtament, &c. Biblioth. Choiſie, pag. 62.

died March the 13th 1573, aged about ſixty eight years [Q]. He made his only daughter, whom he had married to Robert Hurault, his heireſs, and left his library to Michael Hurault, his ſecond grandſon, who has been well known by the name of Monſieur du Fay [R]. I could have mentioned a great many other particulars, but I have omitted them becauſe they may be met with in Moreri, and in Monſieur Teiſſier's Additions to the Elogies of Thuanus, or in the Elogies of Thevet, or in Brantome's Memoirs. This laſt, who was a man of the ſword, has ſucceeded better in the elogium of this Chancellor (p), than all the profeſſed writers, whom I have read, though I own, that Thuanus, and Scevola Sammarthanus have written very fine elogies on him. Ronſard's Ode (q), deſigned as a compliment on this great officer of juſtice, has been eſteemed an excellent one; but in ſhort, in ſome reſpects, I think nothing equal to Brantome's deſcription. It ſhews us, that Monſieur de l'Hoſpital was a perſon, who might be oppoſed to all great and generous men of the gown among the antient Greeks and Romans. I ſhall quote in my remarks ſo many other paſſages, that to avoid prolixity, I ſhall wave citing what Brantome has written. I only deſire my readers to conſider two things. The firſt is, what he remarks concerning the diſpute which the Chancellor maintained with the utmoſt reſolution againſt the Cardinal of Lorrain, who demanded, that the Council of Trent ſhould be received (r); the other relates to the intrepidity which Monſieur de l'Hoſpital ſhewed after the maſſacre of St. Bartholomew, when he had reaſon to believe, that the aſſaſſins had received orders to do execution in his houſe (s). I will add this one particular more. A famous author (t) having defined the force of the ſoul to be a "certain temper and diſpoſition of mind always equal in itſelf, firm, ſtable, heroic, capable of ſeeing every thing, hearing every thing, and doing every thing without trouble, confuſion, or amazement," adds, that this is very near the ſame with what Juvenal has deſcribed in ſix fine verſes of his tenth ſatyr (u). "The Chancellor de l'Hoſpital, continues he (x), who was endowed with this ſtrength of mind as much as any who went before him or followed him, deſcribed it ſtill more briefly, though in terms much bolder, which he had taken for his device, Si fractus illabatur Orbis, impavidum ferient ruinæ (y)." See the margin (z). Shall I forget the ſervices which he did even after his death? Is it not juſt to obſerve, that the maxims of State, upon which he regulated himſelf, were of great advantage to France, ſince he formed ſome diſciples, who oppoſed in proper time the pernicious attempts of the Leaguers, and rendered them abortive [S].

I ſhall

(p) It is inſerted in that of the Conſtable de Montmorenci.

(q) It is the 10th of the 1ſt book. Richelet, who has commented on it, ſays, it is a maſter piece in Poetry. See alſo Paſquier, lib. 22. of his Letters, p. 758.

(r) Brantome, Memoires, tom. 2. pag. m. 85. See in Varillas, Hiſt. de Charles IX. lib. 6. pag. m. 5, & ſeqq. a particular account of this diſpute.

(s) Brant. Mem. tom. 2. pag. 87, 88.

(t) Naudé, Coups d'Eſtat, cap. 5. pag. m. 784.

(u) Fortem poſſe animum, mortis terrore vacantem, &c.

(x) Naude, Coups d'Eſtat, pag. 785, 786.

(y) Theſe words are Horace's, Ode 3. lib. 3. and ſignify, that if the world ſhould fall in ruins about him, it would not ſtrike him with the leaſt terror.

(z) The vigour which the Court of France ſhewed in 1565 againſt the Pope, who had cited the Queen of Navarre, &c. and who had been obliged to revoke his monitory, was the work of Monſ. d'Hoſpital and the Conſtable Montmorenci. See Thuanus, lib. 80. pag. m. 32, 33.

"things were reduced to extreme deſtruction; for "whatever would be the iſſue of that war, it could "not but be very pernicious to the King and Kingdom."

[Q] He died ... aged about ſixty eight years.] He begins his will in this manner (122): "I have always "been uncertain about my age, becauſe my friends "ſaid that they have had various accounts from my "father (*), who ſometimes ſaid that I was born before the war againſt the Genoeſe, ſometimes ſaid, "that I was born at the time when that war was concluded by the late K. Lewis XII, in which my father "ſerved as Phyſician to Charles Duke of Bourbon." It would be ſtrange, that an ignorant ſtupid peaſant ſhould not know the age of his ſon, and yet even this happens but ſeldom: but it is very ſtrange, that a man of parts and learning, as Michael de l'Hoſpital's father was, ſhould vary in that point not a day or a week, but ſeveral months. His ſon determines (123), that he was eighteen years old when the Conſtable of Bourbon left France (124); he thought therefore, that he was born in 1505. Obſerve, that the war of Lewis XII againſt the Genoeſe was concluded in April 1507. Brantome, who has inſerted in his memoirs (125) the Chancellor's will, does not omit the preface (126), which declares that the teſtator was ſixty eight years old. The will is dated the third (127) day of March 1573. This is ſtill placing his birth in 1505. If Thuanus (128) and Scevola Sammarthanus (129) had attended to theſe particulars, they would not have ſaid, that Michael de l'Hoſpital lived about ſeventy years.

(122) Ibid. pag. 52.

(*) John de l'Hoſpital.

(123) Ibid. pag. 53.

(124) He departed in 1523.

(125) Tom. 2 in the Eloge de Connétable de Mommorenci.

(126) It is not in the edition of Colomies.

(127) The 12th in Colomies's edition.

[R] His ſecond grandſon ... has been well known by the name of Monſieur du Fay.] We ſee in his elogium written by Sammarthanus, that he was a man of conſiderable parts and learning, and Chancellor to the King of Navarre, and that he might have been advanced to the dignity of Chancellor of France, if, inſtead of engaging unſeaſonably in the profeſſion of a ſoldier, he had continued to apply himſelf to the functions and buſineſs of the gown. We find there that he died of regret in 1592, on account of his having been obliged to reſign the government of Quillebeuf (130); but we do not find there, that he was actually of the reformed religion. Some have charged him with being ready to change his religion. See the Confeſſion Catholique de Sanci (131), and the notes, which accompany it in the edition of 1699. He wrote in 1588 a piece intitled, Le franc & libre Diſcours (132), which was reckoned an excellent one. See the Perroniana in the word Fay, and Thuanus L. XCII.

(128) Thuan. Hiſt. lib. 56. in fin. pag. 43.

(129) Sammarth. an Elog. lib. 1. pag. m. 60.

(130) See the Elogia of Sammarthanus, lib. 2. pag. m. 177, & ſeq.

(131) Chap. 5. lib. 1. and cap. 9. lib. 2.

(132) It is inſerted in the 3d tome of the Mémoires de la Ligue, pag. 1, & ſeqq. under the title of Excellent & libre Diſcours ſur l'eſtat preſent de la France.

[S] He formed ſome diſciples, who oppoſed .... the pernicious attempts of the leaguers, and rendered them abortive.] An anonymous author, whom I have already cited, furniſhes me with a commentary, which I have occaſion for. He ſays (133), that "if the devotion of a Miniſter or Counſellor of a Prince is not "well grounded, and his zeal well regulated, it is impoſſible to imagine the evils which he may do. Firſt, "he ſuffers himſelf to be deceived, and afterwards deceives his maſter. For in the affair of devotion the "ableſt men are impoſed upon. Many perſons think "themſelves extremely pious and devout, if they are "greatly ignorant of what concerns religion, for which "they refer themſelves to thoſe whoſe buſineſs it is; ſome "of whom, being practiſed upon, lead them a fine "dance. We have ſpoken of the great misfortunes, into "which ſeveral great Princes, who were otherwiſe men "of prudence, have been involved for want of underſtanding this cabal. We ſhall ſpeak one word of "ſome of their Miniſters ... There were two ſorts of "them; for thoſe, who had been educated under the "diſcipline of the Chancellor de l'Hoſpital, held "maxims, that were not only agreeable to Chriſtian "piety and moderation, but likewiſe uſeful for the "preſervation of the peace, and the maintenance of "the King's authority. The reſt, on the contrary, "whether through conſcience, without much knowledge, or in order to make a ſeparate party, applied "themſelves in ſuch a manner to the externals of "religion, that they thought it better to ſuffer the "Kingdom to fall into a combuſtion, than to allow the "leaſt accommodation in points of religion. Now "the conſequence of this diverſity of opinions was, "that this latter greatly aſſiſted in forming, raiſing, "and ſtrengthening the league; and the other in "deſtroying it and reſtoring the Kingdom, which the "contrary faction had brought very near to ruin."

(133) Fragment de l'Examen du Prince de Machiavel, pag. 83, & ſeqq.

(aa) In the remark [R].

I ſhall add ſomething to the remark, which relates to Mr. du Fay, his grandſon (aa) [T].

[T] I ſhall add ſomething to the remark which relates to Monſieur du Fay, his grandſon.] He wrote ſeveral treatiſes upon the affairs of thoſe times. There are aſcribed to him the Anti-Sixte, Ante-Eſpagnol, and the Francophile contre les Conſpirations du Roi d'Eſpagne, du Pape, & des Rebelles de France (134). Mr. Baillet, from whom I take this, doth not give us any character of the firſt of theſe three tracts, and I know not whether he means a book which I have ſeen an edition of printed at Cologn by Herman Jolin (135) in 1586 in 8vo. The title of it is, Moyens d'abus, entrepriſes & nullitez du reſcrit & bulle du Pape Sixte V du nom en date da mois de Septembre 1585, contre le Sereniſſime Prince, HENRY DE BOURBON, Roy de Navarre . . . & HENRY DE BOURBON . . . . . Prince de Condé, par un Catholique, Apoſtolique, Romain : mais bon François, & très-fidele Subjet de la Couronne de France. i. e. "A Proof of the Abuſes, Incroachments, "and Nullities of the Reſcript and Bull of Pope "Sixtus V, dated September 1585 againſt the moſt "ſerene Prince, Henry of Bourbon King of Navarre, "and Henry of Bourbon .... Prince of Condé ..... "by a Catholic, Apoſtolic, and Roman, but a true "Frenchman and faithful Subject of the Crown of "France." As for the ſecond edition of theſe three tracts, Mr. Baillet writes as follows. The Anti-Eſpagnol "has been printed at different times with ſome al- "terations. That which was publiſhed in 1594 in "12mo, is intitled. L'Anti Eſpagnol, & Exhortation "de ceux de Paris qui ne ſe veulent faire Eſpagnols, "à tous les François de leur parti, de ſe remettre en l'o- "beiſſance du Roi Henry quatriéme, & de ſe delivrer de "la Tyrannie de Caſtille. i. e. The Anti-Eſpagnol, and "Exhortation of ſuch Pariſians as are unwilling to be- "come Spaniards, to all the Frenchmen of their party, to "return to their obedience to King Henry IV, and to de- "liver themſelves from the tyranny of Caſtille. It is "the fourth and laſt of theſe excellent diſcourſes con- "cerning the ſtate of France, publiſhed in 1695. "But that which was afterwards reviſed, was publiſhed "with the title of L'Anti-Eſpagnol, ou Brief Diſcours "du but où tend Philippe Roi d'Eſpagne ſe meſlant des "affaires de France. i. e. The Anti-Eſpagnol, or a brief "Diſcourſe concerning the Deſigns of Philip King of "Spain in meddling in the affairs of France." It is inſerted in the fourth volume of the Memoirs of the League, publiſhed in 1604 by Samuel du Lis (136). There is an edition antecedent to both theſe, printed in 1590 in 8vo, and intitled only, Coppie de l'Anti-Eſpagnol faict à Paris. i. e. "A Copy of the Anti- "Eſpagnol compoſed at Paris." My edition of the fourth volume of the Memoirs of the League is printed in the year 1595 ; the Anti-Eſpagnol is inſerted in it at page 230. If Mr. Baillet ſaw an edition in 1604, it is not the firſt. What I ſhall now quote may ſerve as a ſupplement to a remark in the article of Gregory VII (137). It is that in which I obſerve, that it is not a certain method to judge of Princes by the pieces, which are publiſhed againſt them during the violence of factions. "It is uſual for all factions to "produce libels. He who wrote the Anti-Sixte, would "not have ſtopped there, if he had not had expreſs or- "ders from the King to do ſo, long before he had the "happineſs of being reconciled to the Church. His "Majeſty, who never had any eſteem for theſe turbu- "lent and violent ſpirits, ordered that ſatyrical piece "to be ſuppreſſed. But it was impoſſible to do ſo; "and if it be preſerved to another age, it will be made "uſe of as a ſword and ſhield by the enemies of the "Church, who will riſe out of the aſhes of theſe people, "to attack the head of the Church, according to their "cuſtom (138)."

(134) See Baillet in the Recueil des Anti, Art. 34.

(135) I believe that this is ſuppoſititious.

(136) Baillet, Recueil des Anti, Art. 122.

(137) It is in remark [O].

(138) Florimond de Remond, l'Anti-Papeſſe, cap. 16. num. 3. fol. 406.

HOSPITAL (FRANCIS DE L'), created Mareſchal of France April the 23d 1643 (a), was ſtiled before that time Monſieur du Hallier. Moreri copying Father Anſelme ſpeaks amply of his genealogy, and mentions his exploits and dignities; but he ſays nothing of a thing which I have read in an account of the State of France [A]. I ſhall relate it. I ſhall give likewiſe a ſupplement to an obſervation which I have made above concerning the firſt wife of the Mareſchal de l'Hoſpital [B].

(a) Anſelme, Hiſt. des grans Offic. pag. 266.

I have

[A] Moreri ſays nothing of a thing, which I have read in an account of the ſtate of France.] It is, that Mareſchal de l'Hoſpital "was originally of Calabria, "of a very noble family, having had a great many "alliances with the Kings and Queens of Naples. "But the affection, which his predeceſſors had for "Charles of Anjou ſecond King of Naples, engaging "them in his intereſts in oppoſition to the King of "Arragon and Caſtile, they were obliged to retire "into France, when theſe Spaniſh Princes reſumed "the ſceptre of that Kingdom (1)." Since Father Anſelme has omitted this, he muſt either have been ignorant of it, or thought it not certain. He begins the genealogy of that family with one Francis de l'Hoſpital, who lived in 1314 and 1338 (2), and in another work (3) he goes no higher than Francis de l'Hoſpital, Chamberlain, &c. to Charles VI in 1404, and fifth grandfather to the perſon who is the ſubject of this article (4). Obſerve, that the author of the notes upon the Coups d'Eſtat of Gabriel Naudé is extremely miſtaken in aſſerting that our Mareſchal de l'Hoſpital was deſcended from the Chancellor of that name.

(1) Etat de la France, printed in 1657, pag. 92, 93.

(2) Anſelme, Palais de l'Honneur, pag. 414.

(3) Idem, Hiſt. des grans Offic. pag. 232.

(4) Pag. 905.

[B] I ſhall give a ſupplement concerning the firſt wife of the Mareſchal de l'Hoſpital.] We have ſeen elſewhere (5), that he had ſo little delicacy, that he made no ſcruple to marry Charlotte des Eſſars, mother of ſeveral illegitimate children, ſome of whom ſhe had by King Henry IV, and others by the Cardinal de Guiſe. I forgot, when I wrote that remark, what I had read in the notes upon the amours of Henry the Great. But ſince I recollect it now, it is neceſſary to inform the reader of a new circumſtance concerning the victory which Mr. du Hallier had gained over matrimonial ſcruples. You will ſee, that Charlotte des Eſſars was a baſtard herſelf, and that after the death of the Cardinal de Guiſe, ſhe was miſtreſs to another Prelate. Henry IV "was ſtill fond of Charlotte des Eſſars, "the natural daughter of the Baron de Sautour in "Champagne, and the Lady de Dheny, by whom "he had two daughters. She had attended the "Counteſs de Beaumont Harlay in her embaſſy to "England. Then ſhe was miſtreſs to the Cardinal "de Guiſe, who had ſeveral children by her, the "Count de Romorantin, the Abbe de Chailly, the "Chevalier, Madam de Rhodes, &c. Then ſhe was "miſtreſs to Monſieur de Vic, Archbiſhop of Auſch, "three years. Then ſhe married Francis de l'Hoſ- "pital, Count de Roſnay, Baron de Beine, Mareſ- "chal of France (6)." Father Anſelme informs us, that ſhe married about the year 1629, and that her huſband "married for his ſecond wife, Auguſt the 28th "1633, Frances Mignot, by whom he had a ſon, "who died a few days after he was born (7)." Moreri obſerves, that the adventures of this Francis Mignot are very ſingular. This has been ſuppreſſed in the Paris Edition of 1699. The Mareſchal de l'Hoſpital's ſtars were not fortunate in that point.

(5) Above remark [B] of the article GUISE (Lewis de &c.)

(6) Obſervations ſur l'Hiſtoire des Amours du grand Alcandre, pag. m. 299.

(7) Anſelme, Hiſt. des grans Offic. pag. 266.

Father Anſelme (8) remarks, that Charlotte des Eſſars died in the year 1651. It muſt be concluded from this, that our Francis de l'Hoſpital procured his marriage to be diſſolved, for he married another wife in 1633 (9). I know nothing how this affair came about, nor whether there are any books, which give us the particulars of it. I believe that many of my readers will imagine, that he diſcovered his miſtake after he had committed it, and that in hopes to repair it, he carried on a ſuit againſt his wife. He did not perhaps find her ſo rich as he had thought. He probably imagined, that a woman, who had been ſucceſſively miſtreſs of the King of France and two Archbiſhops, had amaſſed a vaſt fortune; and that if a man of quality is allowed to marry a maid of mean

(8) Hiſt. Généalog. de la Maiſon Roiale, pag. 156.

(9) See the marginal note at the end of this remark.

I have ſaid in the ſecond edition of this Dictionary, that Father Anſelme has not obſerved, that the family of this Mareſchal was originally from the Kingdom of Naples, as another writer, whoſe words I cited, had remarked. I ſhall confirm this by the teſtimony of another author, and ſhew that the Marquis de l'Hoſpital, one of the moſt profound Mathematicians of the ſeventeenth Century, was of the ſame family with this Mareſchal of France [C].

birth, but who brings him the treaſures of a financier, he ought not to be blamed for putting his own affairs into a good condition by marrying a woman, whoſe gallantries had raiſed her a great fortune. If he reaſoned in this manner, and found afterwards that the Lady's fortune would not repair either her want of youth or reputation, what remained for him to do but to annul the contract? However that be, the Lady gained the great end of thoſe of her ſex: ſhe had an huſband; ſhe entered the port in ſpite of ſo many ſtorms and ſhipwrecks. It is very probable, that the notion of her being rich procured her an huſband. Let us conclude this remark with ſome verſes of Regnier:

Je ne ſuis point adroit, je n'ay point d'éloquence
Pour colorer un faict, ou deſtourner la foy,
Prouver qu'un grand amour n'eſt ſujet à la loy,
. . . . . .
Deſbaucher une fille, & par vives raiſons
Luy monſtrer comme Amour fait les bonnes maiſons,
Les maintient, les eſleve, & propice aux plus belles
En honneur les advance, & les fait Damoiſelles.
. . . . . .
Et pour le faire court
Dire qu'il n'eſt rien tel qu'aymer les gens de court
Allegant maint exemple en ce ſiecle ou nous ſommes
Qu'il n'eſt rien ſi facile à prendre que les hommes,
Et qu'on ne s'enqueirt plus s'elle a fait le pourquoy,
Pourveu qu'elle ſoit riche, & qu'elle ait bien dequoy.
Quand elle auroit ſuivy le camp à la Rochelle,
S'elle a force ducats elle eſt toute pucelle.
L'honneur eſtropié, languiſſant, & perclus,
N'eſt plus rien qu'un idole en qui l'on ne croit plus (10).

(10) Regnier, Sat. 3. fol. m. 12. He ſays in Sat. 13. fol. 66 verſo, que lors qu'on a du bien, il n'eſt ſi decrepite, Qui ne trouve (en donnant) couvert à ſa marmite.

" I have no art nor eloquence to colour
" A faulty action, or to overthrow
" Juſtice and right, or prove that powerful love
" Is ſubject to no law.
. . . . . .
" Debauch a girl, or ſhew her by ſly reaſons,
" That love's the cauſe of raiſing families,
" Exalts the fair, propitious to their fortune,
" And gives to them the rank of Gentlewomen.
. . . . . .
" And in ſhort, to ſay,
" 'Tis honourable to intrigue with Courtiers,
" Urging examples of the preſent age;
" That men are eaſy to be gain'd upon,
" And that the only queſtion now in vogue,
" Is what a woman has, not how ſhe got it;
" And tho' to Rochelle ſhe the camp has follow'd,
" If ſhe be wealthy, ſhe is ſtill a maid.
" Honour's an idol now no longer worſhipp'd."

There are truths as well as hyperboles in the expreſſions of this Satyriſt. See the margin (11).

[C] I ſhall confirm this by the teſtimony of another author, and ſhew that the Marquis DE L'HOSPITAL, one of the moſt profound Mathematicians of the XVIIth century, was of the ſame family with this Mareſchal of France.] The Count de Sainte-Meſme, who died December the 4th, 1701, " was of the family de l'Hoſ-
" pital, a family much more illuſtrious of itſelf (ſince
" the origin of it is loſt in royal and conſular fami-
" lies) than celebrated for the great poſts and high
" dignities, which it held in France for above four " hundred years, that it was ſettled there. It was " originally of Naples, and bore the name of Gallucy,
" which it quitted to aſſume a French name, which
" was that of the Eſtate of L'Hoſpital, which one
" Gallucy, the head of that houſe in France, bought
" upon his arrival there (12)." You will obſerve, that this Count de Sainte-Meſme was deſcended (13) of ALOLF DE L'HOSPITAL, Sieur de Choiſy, Captain of the Foreſt of Orleans, elder brother of CHARLES DE L'HOSPITAL, Sieur de Vitry, from whom the Mareſchal of France ſprung. Theſe two brothers were ſons of HADRIAN DE L'HOSPITAL and Anne Rouhault, daughter of Joachim Rouhault, Mareſchal of France. He paid homage to the King at Paris, November the 27th, 1498. The Count de Sainte-Meſme was Lieutenant-General of the King's armies, Governor, Bailif, and particular Judge of the Waters and Foreſts of the County of Dourdan, firſt Maſter of the Horſe to Gaſton of France, Duke of Orleans, Gentleman of Honour, and firſt Maſter of the Horſe to the Ducheſs Dowager of Orleans (14), and afterwards to the Great Ducheſs of Tuſcany (15). You will find his elogium in the book, which I quote (16). He was married to Elizabeth Gobelin, daughter of Monſieur Gobelin, Counſellor of State and Intendant of the Armies, and left two ſons. The elder is the Marquis DE L'HOSPITAL, Author of the Analyſe des infiniment petits. The younger is the Count DE L'HOSPITAL, who enjoys the ſame place under the Ducheſs of Tuſcany, which his father held (17).

The Marquis de l'Hoſpital, Author of the Analyſe des infiniment petits, and one of the greateſt Mathematicians of our age, died at Paris the 2d of February 1704, aged forty three years. See his elogium in the Memoirs de Trevoux (18), and in the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres (19). " He married Made-
" moiſelle Romilley de la Chenelaie, with whom " he lived always in ſo perfect an union, that he " communicated to her his genius for the Mathe" matics. He left four children, a ſon and three " daughters (20)."

(11) See the remark of the article ESSARS (Charlotte des) you will find there that the ſecond marriage of our Mareſchal was poſterior to the death of his firſt wife.

(12) Mercure Galant, for Jan. 1702, pag. 170, 171. See alſo Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, for June 1704, pag. 61, & ſeq.

(13) Father Anſelme, Hiſt. des grands Officiers, pag. 232.

(14) Wife of Gaſton of France.

(15) Mercure Galant, January 1702, pag. 169.

(16) Ibid. pag. 172, & ſeq.

(17) Taken from the Mercure Galant, ibid. pag. 179, 180.

(18) In the Addition to the month of Feb. 1704, pag. 24, & ſeq. of the edit. of France. See alſo June 1704, pag. 1014, & ſeq.

(19) June 1704, Art. 2.

(20) Journal de Trevoux, June 1704, pag. 1016.

HOTMAN (FRANCIS), in Latin Hotomanus (a), was one of the moſt learned Civilians of the ſixteenth Century. He was born Auguſt the 23d 1524 at Paris, where his family, originally of Sileſia [A], had flouriſhed for ſome time. At fifteen years of age he was ſent to Orleans to ſtudy the Civil Law, and he became capable of a Doctor's degree in three years. His father, a Counſellor in the Parliament, who had already deſigned his employment for him, ſent for him home, and placed him at the bar. But the young man was ſoon diſpleaſed with the chicane of the Court, and applied himſelf vigorouſly to the ſtudy of the Roman Law and of Polite Learning. He reliſhed the new opinions, on account of which a great many perſons were put to death in the Kingdom; and finding that he could not profeſs them at Paris, went to Lyons in the year 1547, where he publiſhed a book. This was the ſecond work which he had committed (3).

(a) Thus he writes his name at the beginning of his books. Many perſons write it Hottomanus, or Hotomannus.

(3) Redimendo Franciſco Regi ad Ticinum capto, ingentem pecuniæ vim ſolus fide ſua curaverit ſummo Galliæ bono, ſummaſua rum laude. Petrus Nᵘs veletus Doſchius, in Vita Fr. Hottomanni, pag. m. 208.

[A] His family was originally of Sileſia.] There are ſeveral families of the name of Hotman at Breſlaw, the capital of Sileſia, and from theſe are deſcended ſeveral others ſettled in Luſatia, in Miſnia, in the country of Cleves, &c. LAMBERT HOTMAN (1) went into France to bear arms in the ſervice of Lewis XI (2), and married advantageouſly at Paris. JOHN HOTMAN, his eldeſt ſon, was ſo rich, that he diſburſed very great ſums for the ranſom of Francis I (3). PETER HOTMAN, the youngeſt of the eighteen children of Lambert, was Chief-Juſtice in Eyre, and afterwards Counſellor in the Parliament of Paris. FRANCIS HOTMAN was his eldeſt ſon (4). The Supplement to Moreri aſſerts, that HENRY HOTMAN, born at Cleves in the year 1466,

(1) Born at Emmerick in the county of Cleves, according to Mr. Baillet, tom. 2. of the Anti, p. 131.

(2) Thus I correct the miſtake Ludovici VI, in the Life of Hotman in the edition of Leipſic 1686, and that of Amſterdam 1700.

(4) Idem, ibid.

mitted to the preſs [B]. Seeing that he had nothing to hope for from his father for his ſubſiſtence, he went to Lauſanne [C], where the Magiſtrates of Berne gave him the place of Profeſſor of Polite Literature. He publiſhed there ſome books, and married a French Gentlewoman (b), who had retired thither on account of Religion. His merit was ſo well known in all parts, that the Magiſtrates of Straſburg offered him a Profeſſorſhip of Civil Law; and while he was diſcharging the functions of it, he received invitations from the Duke of Pruſſia and the Landgrave of Heſſe. He did not accept of thoſe invitations; but he did not refuſe to go to the Court of the King of Navarre at the beginning of the troubles. He went twice into Germany, to deſire aſſiſtance of Ferdinand in the name of the Princes of the blood, and even in the name of the Queen-mother (c). The ſpeech which he made at the Diet of Francfort is publiſhed. Upon his return to Straſburg he was prevailed upon by John de Monluc to go and teach Civil Law at Valence [D]; which he did with ſuch ſucceſs, that he raiſed the reputation of that Univerſity. Three years after he went to be Profeſſor at Bourges, at the invitation of Margaret of France, ſiſter of Henry II; but he left that city in about five months, and retired to Orleans to the heads of the party, who made great uſe of his advice. The peace made a month after did not prevent him from apprehending the return of the ſtorm; upon which account he retired to Sancerre, and waited there for better times. It was there that he wrote an excellent book de Conſolatione (d). He returned afterwards to his Profeſſorſhip at Bourges, where he was very near being killed in the maſſacre in 1572. But having the good fortune to eſcape he left France, fully reſolved never to return thither, and went to Geneva. He read there Lectures upon Civil Law, and publiſhed books againſt the perſecutors with ſuch ſtrength, that great promiſes were made to

(b) She was of Orleans and her name was Claudine Aubelin. Petrus Niveletus, ubi infra, citation (e).

(c) See below the citation (23).

(d) His ſon publiſhed it after his father's death.

1466, was the firſt of that name, who came into France, and that he came thither with Engilbert, Duke of Cleves, who was the firſt Duke of Nevers.

[B] This was the ſecond work which he had committed to the Preſs.] For he had already publiſhed a little Tract de gradibus cognationis, which was greatly eſteemed. Pene puer libellum de gradibus cognationis adjuncto diagrammate publicavit à doctiſſimis viris in precio habitum, & mox à quodam haud ignobili Juriſconſulto probatum, ita ut eum ſuis in inſtitutiones commentariis vehementer commendatum inſereret (5). i. e. "While he was very young he publiſhed a ſmall tract of the Degrees of Affinity, to which he added a table, and this tract was highly eſteemed by men of the greateſt learning, and approved of ſo much by a conſiderable Civilian, that he inſerted it with great commendations in his Commentaries on the Inſtitutions." The ſecond work was a Commentary ad titulum Inſtitutionum de actionibus. The beauty of the ſtile, and the knowledge of the Roman antiquities, which were very conſpicuous in this piece, made it prodigiouſly eſteemed (6). Monſ. Teiſſier (7) ought not to have applied this fine encomium to the little tract upon the Degrees of Affinity. If he had conſulted with a little more attention the work, which he quotes (8), he would not have taken one for the other.

(5) Idem, Neveletus in Vita Hottomanni, p. 210.

(6) Juriſconſultis etiam magnis gratum ob Latini ſermonis elegantiam, & Rom. antiquitatis exquiſitam ſcientiam. Idem, ibid.

(7) Addit. aux Eloges, tom. 2. pag. 115.

La Croix du Maine will inform you, that the French tranſlation, which Hotman made of the Apology for Socrates, written by Plato, was printed in 1549 at Lyons, by Sebaſtian Gryphius, in 8vo.

(8) Nevelet, Vita Hottomanni.

[C] He went to Lauſanne.] Mr. Teiſſier ſays, that Francis Hotman, when he left France, retired to Geneva, and lived ſome time in Calvin's houſe (9). I believe that he is in the right, though the Life of Hotman, which he quotes, mentions nothing of it. It ſeems that Nevelet has ſuppreſſed a particular, which he ought not to have omitted. Is it not very probable, that the Magiſtrates of Bern ſhould offer a Profeſſorſhip in Polite Literature in the Univerſity of Lauſanne to a youth of three and twenty years old, who lived at Lyons. But it is probable that they offered it to him, if we ſuppoſe that he lived at Geneva, and that he had gained the affection of Calvin. Here we ſee the want of exactneſs, which is to be found in the beſt books, becauſe good Authors generally are thoſe, who value themſelves upon making their Narration conciſe. They do not always conſider, that by contracting it in this manner they ſometimes ſtrangle it. Brevis eſſe laboro, obſcurus fio (10). This may have been the caſe of Nevelet here: or we may ſay, that not having ſeen in the memoirs given him the journey from Lyons to Geneva, he thought, that Francis Hotman did not leave Lyons till he went to be Profeſſor of Polite Learning at Lauſanne. In urbem Equeſtrium . . . . ad humaniorum quæ dicuntur literarum profeſſionem honorifice à Senatu Bernenſis Reipub. evocatus, cujus in ditione urbs illa ſe contulit (11). But let us not determine in favour of what is moſt probable, for as there was then at Lauſanne ſeveral eminent Refugees, who knew and had a great eſteem for the merit and piety of Francis Hotman (12), they might eaſily obtain of the Magiſtrates of Bern to ſend an invitation to him, while he lived at Lyons. Mr. Teiſſier obſerves, that it was by mediation of Theodore Beza, that the city of Lauſanne offered to Hotman the poſt of Profeſſor of Polite Learning. I believe, that he is miſtaken, and that he ſhould rather have ſaid, that it was by Calvin's mediation; for Hotman was Profeſſor at Lauſanne, before Theodore Beza went to be Profeſſor of Greek there: Erant Lauſannæ tunc temporis doctrina & pietate viri inſignes Petrus Viretus Eccleſiæ Paſtor . . . . . Franciſcus Hottomannus eloquentiæ Profeſſor (13): And it is certain Theodore Beza had occaſion for the intereſt of Calvin to obtain that Profeſſorſhip. Is it poſſible, that a man ſhould procure for another a Profeſſorſhip in a city, where he is not, and in which he cannot ſettle himſelf but by the intereſt of another? Mr. Teiſſier undoubtedly thought, that Beza was Profeſſor of Greek at Lauſanne before Hotman was ſent for thither. Judge how important it is in a narration of this ſort of little particulars, to conſult well the dates and niceties of Chronology.

(11) Neveletus, in Vita Hottomanni, pag. 211.

(12) Idem, ibid.

(13) In Vitæ Theodori Bezæ, apud Melchior Adam, pag. 205.

[D] Upon his return to Straſburg, he was prevailed upon by John de Monluc to go and teach Civil-Law at Valence.] If Thuanus had conſulted dates, he would not have ſaid, that John de Monluc took Hotman from Lauſanne, to ſettle him at Valence. Lauſanæ primum docuit, INDE à Joanne Monlucio Valentiæ Epiſcopo, & poſtea à Margarita Biturigum Duce evocatus repetitis vicibus Valentiæ & Avarici Biturigum, ubi eum aliquando audivi, evocatus, &c. (14). i. e. "He firſt taught at Lauſanne, and thence was ſent for by John de Monluc, Biſhop of Valence, and afterwards by Margeret Ducheſs of Berry, two ſeveral times, to Valence and Bourges, where I heard him." Theſe words repetitis vicibus, were not underſtood by the French tranſlator: he thought that they meant, that Hotman taught Civil Law by turns, ſometimes at Valence, and ſometimes at Bourges (15). It is not ſo: he did not teach again at Valence after he had once left it. It ſhould therefore have been ſaid, that the Ducheſs of Berry ſent for him twice to Bourges, as may be ſeen in the body of this article. Thoſe who ſee in the life of Francis Hotman the ſeries of his removals from one City to another, will pay no regard to the Memoirs given to Thuanus, ſince he ſays, that after the maſſacre in 1572, Hotman went to Montbelliard, and thence to Baſil. He ſhould have ſaid, that he went to Geneva, thence to Baſil, thence to Montbelliard, afterwards to Geneva, and at laſt to Baſil.

(14) Thuan. lib. 99. pag. 378, ad ann. 1590.

(15) See the Eloges tirez de Mr. de Thou par Mr. de Teiſſier, tom. 2. pag. 136. edit. 1696.

(10) Horat. de Arte Poet. ver. 25, 26.

to him, to engage him not to write any more in that manner; but he did not regard thoſe offers [E]. Some time after he went to Baſil, and taught Civil Law there. The plague obliging him to leave that city he retired to Montbelliard, where he loſt his wife. He went afterwards to Geneva, and wrote a book there upon the rights of the King of Navarre [F]; after which he returned to Baſil, and died there February the 12th 1590. He [E] He publiſhed at Geneva (16) books againſt the perſecutors with ſuch ſtrength, that great promiſes were made to him.... but he did not regard thoſe offers.] Here is what the author of his life ſays (17). "Ad "Allobroges igitur iterum tanquàm in portum ſe refert, "ſcriptiſque aliquot eruditis contra fidem immò per fidem "ipſam cæſorum innocentiam conſtanter tuetur: & qui- "dem adeò efficaciter, ut qui mollem putabant futurum "ejus in tanta calamitate animum, prolixis pollicitationi- "bus hortarentur ab iſtiuſmodi ſcriptionis genere abſtineret; "quibus ille hoc tantum repoſuit, Nunquam ſibi pro "pugnatam cauſam quæ iniqua eſſet: nunquam quæ "jure & legibus niteretur, deſertam præmiorum ſpe "vel metu periculi; opprimi enim in bona cauſa me-"lius, quam male cedere. Non modò non excuſan-"dum parricidium, ultro etiam defendendam cauſſam "innocentium." i. e. "He retires therefore again "to Geneva, as to a ſecure haven; and in ſeveral "learned treatiſes boldly defends the innocence of "thoſe, who were killed contrary to all faith, nay "on account of their faith; and this he did with ſuch "force, that thoſe, who thought his mind would be "broken in that great calamity, urged him with "large promiſes to refrain from that way of writing; "to whom he made only this anſwer; that he never "defended an unjuſt cauſe, and never deſerted a good one "through hope of reward or fear of danger, ſince it "was better to fall in a righteous cauſe than to retreat "with diſhonour. That the maſſacre was ſo far from "deſerving to be defended, that the cauſe of the inno- "cent ought voluntarily to be undertaken." A little after he mentions the book de Regni Galliæ ſtatu, which Hotman publiſhed about this time under the title of Franco-Gallia. It is a work valuable on account of its learning, but very unworthy a French Civilian, even in the opinion of many Proteſtants. Here is what Mr. Teiſſier ſays. "His book intitled Franco-Gallia drew "upon him WITH REASON the cenſure of true French-"men. For in this work he endeavours to prove (18), "that this Kingdom, the moſt flouriſhing one in "Chriſtendom, is not ſucceſſive, as the inheritances "of private men are; and that antiently perſons were "advanced to the Crown only by the ſuffrages of the "nobility and people; ſo that as antiently the power "and authority of electing Kings belonged to the "States of the Kingdom, and to the whole nation "aſſembled in a body, ſo it was the States who de-"poſed them from the government. And to this pur-"poſe he produces the examples of Philip de Valois, "John, Charles V, Charles VI, and Lewis XI. But "what he principally inſiſts upon is to ſhew, that as it "has always been judged, that women were incapable of "the crown, ſo they ought always to be excluded from "all public poſts and adminiſtration (19)." Let us join to this paſſage of Mr. Teiſſier the following judi-cious words of Bongars, extracted from a letter to Thuanus (20). "I will frankly own to you, de Franco- "Galliâ, vellem parciùs, both becauſe the book is un-"ſeaſonable, and it ſeems to me, that the good man "is groſsly miſtaken in this diſpute. Grief (21) "gave ſome colour to this work, when it was printed "at firſt; and we ſuffer a great many words to eſcape "us in extreme ſorrow, which we ſhould be aſhamed "to have repreſented to us, after our paſſion is over. "I write you what I think, not knowing your judg-"ment about it. I am ſorry, that I did not do it "ſooner. I know well enough that the good man "was pleaſed with this piece; he ſhewed it by the re-"peated editions of it. It is a diſeaſe, which many, "too many of our nation are ſeized with, who would "gladly reduce our monarchy to an anarchy. If "there be any evil in a thing, we muſt not ſay "therefore, that it ought to be deſtroyed (22)." Bongars, it will be ſaid, put his finger upon the wound; Hotman was in a paſſion againſt his country, when he wrote that book; and not content with having revenged himſelf upon thoſe, who governed at that time, endeavoured to diſcharge his reſentment upon the monarchy itſelf, and the whole body of the nation; and this with ſo little judgment, that he furniſhed very ſtrong arms to the league for the excluſion of Henry IV; for according to his principles, the Catholics of France had a full right to elect the Duke of Guiſe King, to the prejudice of the Princes of the Blood. A paſſionate writer (will it be farther ſaid) is not capable of conſi-dering what may happen: he thinks only of the preſent: he does not reflect that times may change, and that the doctrine, which agrees at preſent with the intereſt of our cauſe, will be one day favourable to our enemies. This is what happened in France under Charles IX and under Henry III: each party was obliged to confute itſelf, as Montagne has finely ob-ſerved. See the remark [T]. It is certain that if Cathe-rine de Medicis had eſpouſed the reformed religion, and eſtabliſhed it in France, Hotman would have wrote an excellent book to prove that the regency of women is a very good thing, and agreeable to the deſign of our fundamental laws. With what force would he have confuted the Papiſts, who ſhould have written againſt that Queen? The ſtrongeſt reaſon, which the Pro-teſtants of France urged to juſtify their firſt taking of arms, is what Catherine de Medicis wrote to the Prince of Condé. They owned therefore the authority of that woman. Did not Hotman deſire aſſiſtance in Germany in the name of that Queen? Ab his paullo poſt, immo & ab ea, quæ tum minorem annis regem reg-numque adminiſtrabat, in Germaniam bis miſſus eſt de Regis regnique rebus legatus, & auxilium à Cæſ. Fer-dinando ordinibuſque Germaniæ rebus ruentibus petere juſſus. Exſtat dicta tum ab eo in comitiis Imperii Fran-cofordienſibus oratio (23). i. e. "He was ſoon after "ſent Embaſſador into Germany on account of the "affairs of the King and Kingdom by theſe, and alſo "by the Queen who was Regent during the King's "minority, and was ordered to deſire aſſiſtance from "the Emperor Ferdinand and the States of Germany "to prevent the ruin of the Kingdom. His Speech "made in the Diet at Francfort is ſtill extant." We ſhall ſee elſewhere (24), that he was accuſed of want of ſincerity in his Franco-Gallia, and we ſhall endeavour to ſay ſomething in favour of this learned man.

[F] ... and wrote a book there upon the rights of the King of Navarre.] It was that concerning the right of the Nephew againſt the uncle. Vexatam illam re-bus ita poſtulantibus & magnis viris hortantibus tractavit controverſiam, de ſucceſſione inter patruum & fratris filium, atque in univerſum de jure ſucceſſionis regiæ in regno Galliæ (25). The league had put it into the head of Cardinal de Bourbon, uncle of the King of Navarre, to ſet up for the lawful ſucceſſor, and they employed an Italian Civilian, who wrote a treatiſe Of the Right of the Uncle againſt the Nephew. Francis Hotman refuted it learnedly. Let us cite Father Maim-bourg: "Anthony Hotman, ſays he (26), Advocate "General of the league in the Parliament of Paris, "wrote the treatiſe Of the Right of the Uncle againſt "the Nephew to ſucceed to the Crown. But it happened "by a lucky and pleaſant co-incidence, that Francis "Hotman the Civilian, brother to the Advocate, ſee-"ing this book, which was ſold in Germany, where "he was at that time, maintained with great ſtrength "and learning the right of the nephew againſt the "uncle, and ſhewed plainly in a learned treatiſe, "which he publiſhed upon that ſubject, the weakneſs "and all the falſe reaſonings of his adverſary's book, "without knowing that it was his brother who had "not put his name to it." There are ſeveral miſtakes in this paſſage. I. It is not true that Francis Hotman wrote againſt an unknown author. He wrote againſt one Matthew Zampini, of Recanati, an Italian Civilian. Id Matthæus Zampinus Racanatenſis de trivio J. C. à fœderatis pecunia ſubornatus, edita conſultatione probare conatus fuerat, quam Fr. Hotomannus magni nominis noſtra ætate J. C. contraria conſultatione itidem edita con-futavit.

(16) Mezerai was miſtaken in ſaying in his Great Hiſtory, tom. 3. pag. 293. that Francis Hot-man was a re-fugee in the Pa-latinate, when he publiſhed his Franco-Gallia.

(17) Pag. 221.

JUDGMENT concerning the book intitled, Franco-Gallia.

(18) This is only a tranſlation of the Latin of Thuanus, lib. 57. pag. 49. ad ann. 1573.

(19) Teiſſier, Additions aux Eloges de Mr. de Thou, tom. 2. pag. 139.

(20) It was written from Straſburg in 1595 upon the ſubject of the Life of Francis Hotman written by Ne-velet.

(21) It is in the original la doute; but I think it ought to be la douleur.

(22) Lettres de Bongars; pag. 651. edit. de la Haye, 1695.

(23) Nevel. in Vita Hottomanni.

(24) In the re-mark [H].

(25) Neveletus, in Vita Hotto-manni, pag. 224.

(26) Hiſt. de la Ligue, liv. 4. pag. m. 367, ad ann. 1589.

He had refuſed to go to Leyden, where there had been offered him a Profeſſorſhip. He had time to put his works in order for a new edition (e), which was not publiſhed till a long time after his death in three volumes in folio (f). It does not contain all that he had publiſhed [G]. His Franco-Gallia, which he greatly valued (g), is that of his writings which is leaſt approved of, and has perſuaded ſome perſons that he was the author of the Vindiciæ contra Tyrannos [H], which is a book entirely conformable to Republican notions.

(e) Taken from his Life written by Petrus Neveletus Doſchius, whom we ſhall ſpeak of below in the remark [O]. It is one of the ten Lives of Civilians, reprinted by Leickherus at Leipſic 1686. I make uſe of that edition.

(f) They were printed at Geneva by the care of James Lectius in 1599.

(g) See the remark [E].

futavit (27). i. e. "Matthew Zampini of Recanati, "a mean Civilian, being hired by the Leaguers, endeavoured to prove this in a diſſertation, which he "publiſhed, and which was confuted in another treatiſe, publiſhed by Francis Hotman an eminent Civilian of our age." II. Conſequently it is no true, that he wrote againſt his brother. III. It is not true, that he wrote this book in 1589 (α): he wrote it about the year 1585, as Thuanus obſerves; which agrees with Nevelet, who repreſents him as ſixty years old at that time. IV. He was then at Geneva, and not in Germany. V. Anthony Hotman was not one of the Advocates General of the League in 1589: he was not ſo till two years after (28), when John le Maître, who performed that office with Lewis d'Orleans, was advanced to the Poſt of Preſident au Mortier. The Preſident Briſſon was then dead. VI. It was Anthony Hotman, who wrote againſt his brother Francis Hotman, and not Francis who wrote againſt Anthony. Poſtea & peculiari libro quem conſultationi à Franciſco fratre pro Navarro editæ... oppoſuiſſe videri voluit, (Antonius Hotmannus) rationes amplificatæ (29). i. e. "Afterwards the arguments were propoſed more amply "in a particular book, which he (Anthony Hotman) "ſeemed to oppoſe to a diſcourſe publiſhed by his "brother Francis in favour of the King of Navarre."

(27) Thuan. lib. 81. init. ad ann. 1585.

(28) Mezerai, Hiſt. de France, tom. 3. pag. 999.

(29) Thuan. lib. 91. ſub finem. See alſo Mezerai, Hiſt. de France, tom. 3. pag. 708.

§ (α) I have a treatiſe intitled, Ad Tractatum Matthæi Zampini J. C. Recannatenſis, de ſucceſſione prærogativæ primi Principis Franciæ; Ornatiſſimi viri P. C. A. F. Civis Pariſienſis & Regii Conſiliarii Reſponſio. It is in 8vo, and conſiſts of 80 pages, printed by the heirs of Wechelius 1589. Francis Hotman was a Pariſian, and alſo Counſellor of State to the King of Navarre, who came to the Throne of France by the name of Henry IV during the life of Hotman. So that this may be his book. CRIT. REM.]

[G] It does not contain all that he had publiſhed.] There are not inſerted the burleſque pieces, which he wrote againſt Matharel and againſt Papyrius Maſſo, nor the book which he publiſhed at Geneva in 1553 under the name of Francis de Villiers, Ad Remundum Rufum defenſorem Rom. Pontificis contra Carolum Molinæum de ſtatu primitivæ Eccleſiæ &c (30), nor the Nullitatis proteſtatio adverſus formulam Concordiæ (31), which he publiſhed under the name of Johannes Palmerius; nor the apology for this laſt book, in which he diſguiſes himſelf under the name of Johannes Franciſcus Aſpaſtis Salaſſi V. D. M. (32). There is omitted his Anti-Tribonianus, which was publiſhed in French in 1603, and a Latin tranſlation of which was printed in Hamburg in 1647. See concerning this book the curious Mr. Baillet (33). Laſtly they have left out his Brutum Fulmen, which is not a burleſque piece, as Thuanus affirms. It is a work intirely ſerious, in which Francis Hotman refutes the bull, which Sixtus V publiſhed in 1585 againſt the King of Navarre and the Prince of Condé. Poſtea, ſays Thuanus (34), & in cenſuram illam ſcripſit Franciſcus Hotmannus J. C. joculari iſto ſtilo, libroque Brutum Fulmen titulum fecit, quo & de B. Franciſci & B. Dominici vita ac moribus veteres hiſtoriæ, ab obſolete devotis viris ſcriptæ ridicule diſcutiuntur. i. e. "And "Francis Hotman, a Civilian, wrote againſt that bull "in a burleſque ſtyle, and intitled his book Brutum "Fulmen, in which the old accounts of the lives and "actions of St. Francis and St. Dominic, written by "ſuperſtitious men, are expoſed to ridicule." Francis Hotman treats of nothing leſs than of this ſubject. Deckher (35) was miſled in this point by Thuanus, but he has committed an error of his own: he aſſerts, that this learned Civilian was baniſhed France on account of this piece. This is a miſtake. Hotman left France in the year 1572, fully reſolved never to return thither. Neque unquam poſtea induci potuit, ut in patria conſiſtendum ſibi judicaret: non Andegavenſis ipſius Ducis literis inflexus, non promiſſis, non denique cum ab eo Magiſter ſupplicum apud ſe libellorum dictus eſſet: hoc ſæpe uſurpans: Fruſtra Neptunum accuſat, iterum qui naufragium facit (36). The Brutum Fulmen was publiſhed in 1585, as Deckher obſerves againſt Goldaſt, who has placed the edition under 1586. I have ſaid nothing of the treatiſe de regno Vulvarum, which d'Aubigné aſcribes to our Hotman in the ſecond chapter of the firſt book of the Confeſſion of Sanci: I know not what it is (β).

(30) Epitome Bibliotb. Geſneri, pag. m. 239.

(31) Placcius, de Pſeudon. p. 233.

(32) Idem, ibid. pag. 153.

(23) Baillet, tom. 2 des Anti, pag. 156.

(34) Lib. 82. pag. 33. ad ann. 1585.

(35) De Scriptis adeſpotis, pag. 84. edit. 1686.

(36) Nevelet. in Vita Hottomanni, pag. 221.

§ (β) The following epigram was in every body's hands about the year 1561 (*), occaſioned by the greateſt part of the Kingdoms of Europe being then governed by women, or at leaſt under their adminiſtration.

(*) Le Laboureur, Addit. au Memoires de Caſtelnau, tom. 1. pag. 773.

Vulva regit Scotos (a), hæres (b) tenet illa Britannos, Flandros & Batavos nunc nothæ vulva (c) regit.
Vulva regit populos quos ſignat Gallia portu (d)
Et ſortes Gallos Itala vulva regit (e).
His furiam furiis, vulvam conjungite vulvis,
Sic natura capax omnia Regna capit.
Ad Medicem (†) artem incertam Gallia ſaucia tendit (††).
Non uti Medicis eſt medicina tibi.
Non credas Medicis, vena qui ſanguinis hauſta
Conantur vires debilitare tuas.
Ut Regi, matrique ſuæ ſis fida Deoque,
Utere concilio Gallia docta meo.
Et pacem tu inter proceres non ponito bellum,
Hoſpita (f) lis Artus rodit agitque tuos.

(a) Mary Stuart.

(b) Queen Elizabeth.

(c) Margaret, Ducheſs of Parma, natural daughter of Charles V.

(d) Catherine of Auſtria ſiſter to Charles V, widow of John III King of Portugal and Regent during the minority of Sebaſtian her ſon

(e) Catherine de Medicis.

(†) Medicam.

(††) Tendis.

(f) An alluſion to the name of the Chancellor de l'Hoſpital, to whom Catherine de Medicis chiefly owed the Regency.

This poſſibly is the pretended treatiſe de Regno Vulvarum, aſcribed to Francis Hotman by d'Aubigné. This Civilian was a Latin Poet, and his Franco-Gallia, which he publiſhed about twelve or thirteen years after, ſhews, that he did not approve of the adminiſtration of women. REM. CRIT.]

[H] Perſuaded ſome perſons that he was the author of the Vindiciæ contra Tyrannos.] When I ſpoke of this work in the plan of this Dictionary, I ſaid (37), that the miſtake of thoſe, who aſcribed to Francis Hotman the book of Junius Brutus, is a ſmall one. Hotman, continued I, "left France on account of "religion, and though he was not like thoſe, who "fly from perſecution, breathing out threatnings and "ſlaughter (38) as vehemently as the perſecutors themſelves, yet he complained and murmured in his retreat. He wrote a book intitled Franco-Gallia, to "ſhew, that the French Monarchy is not what it is "ſuppoſed to be, and that in right the people are the "true Sovereigns in it. Here is what made it believed, that he alſo wrote the book of Junius "Brutus, beſides that we ſee a great many maxims "of the Franco-Gallia diſperſed in it. Barclay refutes only this laſt reaſon, which ſeems to him "plauſible enough, and pretends to overthrow it by "ſomething ſtill more plauſible: It is, ſays he (39), "that Brutus makes uſe of divers arguments, which "Hotman had ridiculed and confuted, and that he "falls into ſuch childiſh errors with regard to the "Civil-Law, as ſuch a man as Hotman could not "be capable of. This is more obliging towards "this learned Civilian, than what Boeclerus ſays. I "wiſh, ſays he, that Hotman had not affected ſo obſtinately to appear among thoſe writers, who ſound "an alarm againſt Kings, and who by their private "authority convert them into tyrants, by means of chicaneries, which corrupt not only true Philoſophy, but "alſo the holy Scriptures. I wiſh that he had not ſhewn "this bad example to others in his Franco-Gallia, and "had not falſified Hiſtory more than once, in order to "indulge his prejudices with too ſervile a complaiſance. "Boeclerus's Greek phraſe has much more force than "this, Εἰς το ἁλιτεῖν τῇ ὑποθέσει, etiam hiſtoriam non "ſemel corrumpit (40). . . . . (41) I cannot forbear "ſaying, that Boeclerus extremely ill treats Hotman, "who, once more, was not one of thoſe men, who "after the example of ſome Engliſh Catholics of the "laſt age, left their country for religion with threat-

(37) Pag. 90.

(38) Ἐμπνέων ἀπειλῆς καὶ φόνου, ſays the Scripture in the Acts of the Apoſtles, cap. 9. ver. 1. concerning Saul.

(39) Barclay, contra Monarchomacos, lib. 3. cap. 1. pag. 311.

(40) In Grot. de Jure Belli & Pacis, lib. 1. cap. 4. pag. m. 275.

(41) In the Plan, pag. 92.

notions. His own maxims were retorted upon him ſome time after [I]. It is difficult to avoid this inconvenience when a perſon writes upon certain ſubjects. He was well rewarded

" ning airs, caſting out fire and flame, vomiting a " thouſand imprecations, thundring out Maranatha, " ſeeking to return thither ſword in hand, or by the " aſſiſtance of the moſt exterminating armies; in ſhort, " deſiring a return, preceded, like the departure from " Egypt, by all the plagues of Pharaoh, not excluding " the paſſage of the deſtroying angel. Hotman was " contented with the ſeverity of his pen, and touching " upon certain things, which were not agreeable. It " is true, that without thinking of it, he laboured " for the League (42), and forged arms for Bellar- " mine. It is true likewiſe, that his blows were like " thoſe of the Parthians (43); I mean, that in the " condition of a fugitive he fought better than he " could have done, if he had not retired: but his " writings by no means deſerve the blame, which " ought to fall on others, which have been publiſhed " in the ſame circumſtances. For inſtance, the Engliſh " Catholics in vain wrote ſatires and violent invec- " tives againſt Queen Elizabeth (44): theſe writings " are all loſt, and the leaſt uſe is not made of them " by any party. However that be, the appearances " were a little againſt Hotman with regard to the " book of Junius Brutus; and as I have already ob- " ſerved, it was a very ſlight error to make him the " author of the Vindiciæ contra Tyrannos."

(42) See the following remark.

(43) Navita Boſphorum Pœnus perhorreſcit . . . Miles ſagittas & celerem fugam Parthi. Horat. Od. 13. lib. 2.

(44) See the remark [K] of the article ELIZABETH.

[I] His own notions were retorted upon him ſome time after.] It was by accident, and by a very common fatality, which changes the intereſts of parties, that Hotman's book was ſubject to the inconvenience, which I ſpeak of. The revolutions in France changed the ſcene in ſuch a manner, that the maxims of the two parties paſſed reciprocally to the direct contraries. It is pleaſant to ſee how finely Montagne ridicules the Catholics. " See, ſays he (45), the hor- " rible impudence, with which we throw about di- " vine reaſons, and how irreligiouſly we have re- " jected them and taken them up again, according " as fortune has altered our ſituation in theſe public " ſtorms. This ſo important a propoſition, whether " it is lawful for a ſubject to rebel and take up arms " againſt his Prince in defence of religion, you may " remember to have been laſt year zealouſly affirmed " by a certain party, and denied by the other party. " But obſerve now in what quarter the affirmative is " maintained, and whether arms rattle leſs for this " cauſe than that. We burn thoſe perſons, who ſay, " that truth ſhould ſubmit to the yoke of neceſſity; and " yet how much worſe does France than ſay ſo? &c." While the world continues as it is, there will always be every where ambulatory doctrines, dependent upon times and places; true birds of paſſage, which are in one country in ſummer, and in another in winter; and wandering lights, which like the comets of the Carteſians, inlighten by turns different vortices. Whoever ſhould endeavour to act the Cenſor upon this occaſion, would only be conſidered as an ill-natured Critic, a native of Plato's Republic. So that Hotman is not anſwerable for what the famous Advocate of the holy League found means to take advantage of from the Franco-Gallia. " They cannot complain, (it is Lewis " d'Orleans who ſpeaks in the name of the Engliſh " Catholics), that the ſame meaſure is meeted out to " them as they have meeted out to others. Follow " their counſels, tread in the paths which they have " taken to eſtabliſh themſelves, you will eſtabliſh your- " ſelves, and cover them with ſhame and confuſion. " In their Franco-Gallia, which is one of the moſt de- " teſtable books ever publiſhed, and written on pur- " poſe to throw all France into a combuſtion, they " affirm, that it is lawful to chooſe a King to one's " taſte. Say therefore to the Heretics, that the King " of Navarre is not to your taſte, and therefore let " him ſtay in his own country of Bearn, till you have " an inclination for him. Thus ſhould they be whip- " ped with the rods which they have made, that they " may know, that the powerful hand of God chaſtiſes " them by their own evil counſels and pernicious " writings (46)." This book of Hotman is at the bottom an excellent one, well written, and full of learning, and ſo much the more troubleſome to the contrary party, as the author contents himſelf with alledging facts, as he repreſents himſelf to his cenſurers. Cur vel Maſſonus, ſays he (47), vel Matharellus Francogalliæ ſcriptori & ſimplici hiſtoriarum narratori ita terribiliter iraſcitur? Nam ut dicit Sylva nup. lib. 1. num. 10. quomodo poteſt aliquis ei ſuccenſere qui eſt tantum relator & narrator facti? Francogalliſta enim tantum narrationi & relationi ſimplici vacat, quod ſi aliena dicta deleverentur, charta remaneret alba. i. e. " Why is Maſſon or Matharellus ſo terribly angry at " the author of the Franco-Gallia, who is a mere re- " later of facts? For as the Sylva Nuptialis ſays, how " can any perſon be diſpleaſed at one, who only gives " an account of the fact? The writer of the Franco- " Gallia does nothing but lay down a plain narrative: " and if his quotations were removed, there would be " nothing left but blank paper." He was reproached, that his book appeared to be the production of a man drunk, furious, and mad: he anſwers, that this reproach is a piece of impudence, which deſerved puniſhment, ſince he had always kept up in this book the character of a moderate and cool relater. Quod dicit Franco-Galliam compoſitam ab auctore bene poto in aliquo cænopolio, & eum evomuiſſe ſcriptum plenum furoris & inſaniæ, video multos auctoris amicos, dictum iſtud appellare meretriciam impudentiam flagris & carcere dignam . . . . Ubi ullum iracundi animi ſignum? Ubi vox ulla perturbati animi in toto libro, ac non potius ſedatæ & moderatæ narrationis (48)? This is a vaſt advantage in ſuch kind of books. For the reſt, though his anſwer is written in a burleſque ſtile, it contains a thouſand things, which muſt be ſeriouſly underſtood. Ridentum dicere verum quid vetat (49)? Such, for inſtance, is what he ſays there to his antagoniſt, that it is not ſufficient that he had brought in his accuſation, and given ſecurity de Lite proſequendâ; but that he ought likewiſe to engage expreſſly to ſuffer the Lex Talionis, in caſe he ſhould be convicted of calumny. Sed adhuc requiritur tertius ut ſe expreſſe obliget ad pœnam talionis, in caſu quo probetur calumniator; quod probatur per L. ult. C. de calumniat. & omnes Canoniſtas; ſed maxime per Hieronym. de Zanetinis in repetit. cap. 1. Extr. de accuſat. De quo ſi ſumus concordes, & Matharellus ſe ſubjiciat talioni in caſu quòd calumniæ convincatur, totum negotium noſtrum bene vadit, niſi forte, &c (50).

(45) Eſſais, lib. 2. cap. 12. pag. m. 193. Mezerai makes the ſame remark, pag. 792. of the 3d tome of the Hiſtory of France.

(46) Advertiſſement des Catholiq. Anglois, pag. 74, 75. edit. 1587 in 8vo.

(47) Matagonis de Matagonibus, Monitoriale adverſus Italo-Galliam ſive Antifrancogalliam Antonii Matharelli. It is a piece of Hotman's in the Macaronic ſtyle.

(48) Idem, ibid.

(49) Horat. Sat. 1. lib. 1.

(50) Matagonis Monitoriale, &c.

If we believe an Hiſtorian, who had been a Miniſter, this book of Hotman did not pleaſe all who were of the Reformed Religion, and did not diſpleaſe all the Catholics of France, and was not written without ſome relation to the cabal of the Mareſchal d'Amville. " A little after, ſays he (51), the Duke of Alençon, " brother to his Majeſty, retired from the Court with " ſeveral Lords, being practiſed upon by the ſaid " Mareſchal d'Amville, and taking the name of male- " contents joined themſelves to the Huguenots, ſome of " whom began then to write differently from what " they had done before; and Hotman the Civilian in " his Franco-Gallia undertook to ſhew, That the French " people had a ſovereign authority, not only to elect " Kings, but alſo to reject the ſons of their Kings, and " elect ſtrangers: and he ſays upon this ſubject many " things, commending thoſe people, who reſtrain the li- " centiouſneſs of their Kings, and reduce them to rea- " ſon. He proceeds, after diſcourſing upon other points, " to except againſt the regency of Queens, the mothers " of Kings; which he did, becauſe the Queen-Mother " had been declared Regent, till the return of the King " of Poland her ſon. In ſhort, he cited our antient " Hiſtories, right or wrong, according to his paſſion. " This book was agreeable to ſome of the Reformed, " and to ſome united Catholics, who wanted innova- " tions, but not to all." D'Aubigné (52) gives the ſame plan of this book; but he repreſents it as being publiſhed in 1573, during the life of Charles IX. Thuanus (53) and Mezerai (54), who give the ſame plan, place it, the former ſimply in the reign of Charles IX, the latter before the departure of the King of Poland. This overthrows the hypotheſis of Cayet, viz. that the Regency's being conferred on Queen Catherine at the time of the death of Charles IX, was one of the grievances of Francis Hotman. It is certain, that his book was printed before the Queen was declared

(51) Peter Victor Cayet, Avant-propos de la Chronologie Novenaire.

(52) Hiſt. Univerſ tom. 2. pag. 670. Simler, Epit. Bibliotb. Geſneri fixes the impreſſion of the Franco-Gallia in 1573, and he is in the right. This book was printed at Geneva by Jacobus Stoerius in 1573. The epiſtle dedicatory to the Elector Palatine dated Aug. 21, 1573.

(53) Thuan. Hiſt. lib. 57.

(54) Hiſt. de France, tom. 3. in fol. pag. 293.

warded for his Brutum Fulmen [K] by the King of Navarre. He was one of thoſe who would never conſent to be painted (h), but his picture was taken while he was in his laſt agony. He left two ſons and four daughters. JOHN HOTMAN Sieur de Villiers, his eldeſt ſon, paſſes for the author of the Anti-Chopinus, a burleſque piece, and of the Anti-Colazon, which is an apology for his treatiſe of the Embaſſador, in which it was ſaid, he had been a plagiary from Charles Paſchal. See Mr. Baillet (i). Moreri has not committed many miſtakes [L].

(h) Nevelet in Vitâ Hotomanni, pag. 229.

(i) In the firſt tome of the Anti, pag. 120, & ſeq.

I am ſurprized that there has been omitted in the Life of Francis Hotman a particular, which is very much to his honour: it is, that at the age of twenty three years he read public Lectures in the ſchools of Paris [M]. There is likewiſe no mention (and I do not wonder at it) of certain things which Baudouin had publiſhed againſt him, and which would blacken his memory horribly, if they were true [N]. One could not credit them, without declared Regent by the edict of the 30th of May, 1574; but he foreſaw perhaps that ſhe would be ſo; and it is very probable, that he had her in his view, in what he wrote againſt the Regency of women. He remembred the evils, which that Princeſs had cauſed during her firſt Regency. This able Civilian, who had quitted the place of Counſellor of Paris for his religion, would have done better to anſwer his adverſaries (55) in a ſerious and modeſt manner, than to make uſe of the Macaronic ſtile. See what Mr. Baillet ſays in pag. 336 of the ſecond Tome of the Anti.

(55) Anthony Matharel, and Papyrius Maſſo.

[K] He was well rewarded for his Brutum Fulmen.] Let us begin our Commentary by theſe words of the Author of his Life. His meritis præmium deberi cum intelligeret Henricus tum Navarræ Rex, ultro codicillos ad eum miſit Senatoriæ in Conſiſtorio ſuo dignitatis: cujus tamen eum fructum non tulit, quem beneficus Princeps voluerat: ac opinor in tantis rerum omnium anguſtiis factum, ut ex annuo quod debebatur ſalario, vix ad eum quidquam, ſicut audio, pervenerit (56). i. e. "Henry then King of Navarre finding, that a "reward was due to him on account of theſe merits "of his, he ſent him of his own accord a patent to "be one of his Counſellors of State; but he did "not enjoy that advantage of the place, which the "generous King intended; and I believe it happened "through the diſtreſs of the affairs, that of his an-"nual ſalary ſcarce any thing came to him, as I "am informed." Bongars, to whom Nevelet addreſſes the Life of Hotman, has made a reflection upon this paſſage. "(57) There is another paſſage. After "having ſaid, that the King had, on account of his "Brutum Fulmen, given him the place of Counſellor "of State, cujus tamen eum fructum non tulit quem beneficus princeps voluerat (58: I aſſure you, Sir, that "the King never bought a book ſo dear as that: it "was paid for much above the value of it. It will "be ſaid to me, that I ought to have delivered my opi-"nion upon theſe paſſages ſooner; but it often hap-"pens, and to me too often, that we never conſider "till after the thing is done. I wrote to Mr. Hotman "what I thought about the firſt (59); I do not touch "upon the ſecond; he might be offended, not know-"ing how the affair paſſed." Obſerve, that Nevelet does not ſpeak there of the Brutum Fulmen, as Bongars ſuppoſes, but of the book againſt Zampini de ſucceſſione inter patruum & fratris filium.

(56) Nevel. in Vita Hotomanni, pag. 225.

(57) Lettres de Bongars, p. 651. printed at the Hague 1695.

(58) Theſe words are full of miſtakes in the edition of the Letters of Bongars, which I quote; I cite them as they ought to be.

(59) That is, of what relates to the Franco-Gallia. See above the words of Bongars, remark [E] citation (22).

[L] Moreri has not committed many miſtakes.] I. He falſely ſuppoſes, that Hotman was ſaved by his ſcholars at Bourges, at a different time from that of the maſſacre on St. Bartholomew's day; that is, of one event he makes two. II. The year of his death is not rightly expreſſed: it ſhould be 1590, and not 1591. And III, this miſtake ſhould not be imputed to Spondanus in citing him under the year 1591, n. 22. for it is under that numero in the preceding year that he ſpeaks of Hotman's death.

[M] At the age of three and twenty years he read public lectures in the ſchools of Paris.] I prove this by the following words of Stephen Paſquier (60). "I "can tell you, that one of the moſt lucky things "which happened to me in my youth, was, that the "day after the Aſſumption of our Lady in 1546, Hot-"man and Baudouin began their lectures of Law in "the ſchools du Decret of this city of Paris; the for-"mer at ſeven in the morning, reading upon this "title, De notionibus; the latter at two in the after-"noon, reading this title, De publicis Judiciis, in a "great aſſembly of Auditors. And the ſame day, "under theſe two learned men, I began to ſtudy the "Law."

(60) Paſquier, Lettre a Mr. Loyſel. It is in the 19th book of his Letters. The words, which I quote, are in page 501. of the 2d tome.

[N] Certain things which Baudouin had publiſhed againſt him . . . would blacken his memory horribly, if they were true.] Baudouin affirms, that Hotman was excommunicated at Straſburg for the crime of adultery. Argentinæ propter adulterium excommunicarat ſodalem tuum Hottomannum (Petrus Alexander) (61). i. e. "Pe-"ter Alexander excommunicated your companion "Hotman at Straſburg for adultery." Theſe words are addreſſed to Theodore Beza. The author had already mentioned this fact with more circumſtances, and added, that the ſame Hotman loſt likewiſe his canonry and office in the univerſity. Recitata tunc quoque noſtris fuit cauſa tui Hotmanni, nempe propter quod facinus illic aliquando primum fuiſſet excommunicatus abs ſuo Gallo Concionatore Petro Alexandro, te quidem propter antiquam ſocietatem ſubmurmurante, ſed aſſentiente tamen tuo ſi minus parente, at certe avo Gulielmo Farello, ſæpius illum juriſperditum appellante. Addebant & complura ejuſdem generis quæ pervulgata erant per Joannem Infantium, teſtem valde idoneum, & cujus non ſolum opera, ſed & opibus quamdiu opus habuiſti, tam liberaliter es abuſus, ut fidem ei detrahere vix audeas. Altera cauſa fuit expoſita cur tuus ille Hotmannus (cujus cauſa non eſt abs te ſejuncta) ut antea Eccleſia, ſic deinde ſchola & ſuo Canonicatu pulſus eſſet: tandemque quid in eo Sturmius ipſe graviſſime accuſaret narratum eſt, & perlecta Sturmiana adverſus eum terribilis expoſtulatio, quæ profecto non modo de iſtius flagitiis, ſed de veſtræ conjurationis myſteriis narrabat nimis multa (62). i. e. "Then "the caſe of your friend Hotman was related to us, "viz. for what crime he was excommunicated there "formerly by his own French Preacher Peter Alexander, "while you complained on account of your old friend-"ſhip with him, though at the ſame time William "Farel, who is, if not your father, at leaſt your "grandfather, conſented to it, and frequently ſtyled "him Juriſperditus. They added alſo a great many "other things of the ſame kind, which were told "about by John L'Enfant, a competent witneſs, "whoſe aſſiſtance and wealth you made uſe of ſo "freely, as long as you had occaſion, that you will "ſcarce preſume to detract from his credit. There "was another ſtory related, why your friend Hotman, "whoſe cauſe is connected with yours, was deprived "of his ſchool and canonry, as he was before expelled "the Church; and at laſt the grievous charge laid "againſt him by Sturmius was told, and Sturmius's "terrible expoſtulation againſt him was read, which gave "an account of too many things relating not only to "his crimes, but likewiſe to the myſteries of your ca-"bal." All theſe things were before the year 1562. Baudouin a little after (63) mentions, that having known Hotman at Paris to be a man, who loved learning, he adviſed him to go and viſit Geneva; that he entertained him in his houſe at Straſburg, with all poſſible civility, as an old friend, when Hotman retired thither, after having deſired his intereſt for a profeſſorſhip of Civil Law, and declared a great deal of diſlike to teaching at Lauſanne; Alterum Balduini ex non diſſimili errore peccatum quod fuit Hotmanni tui Lauſannæ languentis & in cædendis quos in tuo ludo Grammaticam docebat, pueris defatigati, & ex eo carcere liberari miſere cupientis, & commendatione Balduini ad aliquam juris profeſſionem redire literis temere crediderit (64); that he ſoon perceived, that he kept a viper in his boſom, ſince Hotman uſed all his endeavours to ſupplant him by ſecret artifices. Here follows one of his tricks: having by fraudulent inventions engaged Dua-

(61) Reſponſ. ad Calvin. & Bezam pro Franciſco Balduino, folio 77.

(62) Ibid. fol. 70 verſo.

(63) Ibid. fol. 86.

(64) Ibid.

without believing, that it is much eaſier to be a perfect ſcholar and a great enemy to the perſecuting religion, than to be a tolerably honeſt man. I ſhall ſpeak one word concerning renus to addreſs to him an invective againſt Baudouin, he diſperſed it all over the city, taking care at the ſame time to conceal it from Baudouin. At laſt he was obliged by Sturmius to go to him, and bear his reproaches, and expreſſed great regret for his conduct. There is cited (65) a fragment of the letter, which Sturmius wrote to him, in which he accuſes him of having employed a great many artifices to ſupplant Baudouin. They ſucceeded; for he made Baudouin weary of Straſburg, and induced him to ſeek another poſt (66), and Hotman ſucceeded him. All theſe particulars are found in the third reply of Baudouin to Calvin. He had before cited in the ſecond Reply this letter of Sturmius, and had drawn from it a great many things diſadvantageous to Hotman. He had mentioned a paſſage, which contained a reproach of an execrable perjury. Hotman, the ſame day that he received the communion, proteſted to Sturmius, that he prayed to God that the ſacrament, which he received, might change him to a Devil, if he falſely denied what he denied (67). And yet adds Sturmius, he denied a thing which was very true. Baudouin mentions this as a proof, that his antagoniſt, who undertook to diſpute about the Lord's Supper, paid no great regard to it; and he takes that opportunity to reproach him with being excluded from the ſacrament in Germany on account of adultery. Etiam de myſterio Cœnæ Dominicæ diſputat, & me cum ſua Gallica (ut vocat) Eccleſia non idem ſentire narrat, qui ab ea propter Clodianum facinus in Germania excommunicatus aliam quæcunque illi fortaſſe patuit menſam occupavit. Vis ſcire quanti faciat totum iſtud myſterium tuus Myſtagogus? Audi Sturmium (68). i. e. "He alſo diſputes concerning the "myſtery of the Lord's Supper, and affirms, that I "am not of the ſame opinion with his French Church, "(as he calls it) though he was excluded from it in "Germany on account of adultery, and went to the "next table which offered, and which would admit "him. Would you know what a reverence your ex"plainer of myſteries has for this myſtery? Hear "Sturmius." Here is another paſſage from the ſecond Reply of Baudouin (69). Nonne ille eſt qui ... Sileſium ſe eſſe finxit, cum in Germania negaret ſe eſſe Gallum ut in aulam Auſtriacam irreperet? Nonne ille eſt qui cum tuam (70) Eccleſiam clam fugeret & ſcholam, in qua tamen docuit aliquot annis Grammaticam, depoſita Juriſconſulti perſona, venit in Germaniam tuis ad Sturmium literis inſtructus quæ Sturmium ſefellerunt? Nonne ille eſt cujus (ut nunc dicebam) vitam perfidiæ, nequitiæ, ſceleris, & omnium maleficiorum plenam ipſe Sturmius nuper deſcripſit? ... Nonne ille eſt magnus ardelio, qui cum in Germania Principes miris modis eſt ludificatus, huc & illuc diſcurrens, modo in Gallia tumultuatur, modo ad Rheni ripas adverſus Regem ſuum milites cogit? Nonne ille eſt quem Sturmius ... oſtendit etiam Galliæ Principibus plus quam proditorie maledicere, cujuſque lingua nullum veneficium magis veneficum eſſe ait & probat? Nonne ille eſt qui ſuperioribus annis in Germania pinxit ſive ſuum ſive tuum tumultum Amboſianum, & Tigrim (71) peperit, & ejus generis formulas quotidie concipit novus magiſter libellorum, non (ut jactabat) ſupplicum ſed famoſorum? Denique nonne eſt ille tenebrio qui ad me aliquando ſcripſit, σκοτισίον ἐν τῷ νῦν χρόνῳ (72). i. e. "Is it not he, "who pretended to be a Sileſian, when in Germany "he denied himſelf to be a Frenchman, that he might "be admitted into the Court ot Auſtria? Is it not he, "who, when he had clandeſtinely fled from your "Church and School, in which he had taught Gram"mar for ſeveral years, having laid aſide the character "of a Civilian, came into Germany recommended by "your letters to Sturmius, which letters deceived Stur"mius? Is it not he, whoſe life, as I ſaid juſt before, "being full of perfidy, wickedneſs, and all kinds of "guilt, has been lately deſcribed by Sturmius him"ſelf?... Is not he, that buſy-body, who after he had "impoſed upon the Princes of Germany, runs about "here and there, ſometimes raiſing tumults in France, "and at other times levying ſoldiers againſt his own "King upon the banks of the Rhine? Is it not he, "whom Sturmius ... has ſhewn to have curſed the "Princes of France in a moſt traiterous manner, and "whoſe tongue he proves to be as dangerous as poiſon "itſelf? Is it not he, who ſome years ago deſcribed "his or your tumult at Amboiſe, and brought forth "the Tiger, and is daily compoſing libels of the ſame "kind? Laſtly, is it not that knave, who wrote to me "formerly, that in theſe times one ought to ſeek the "ſhades?"

Here is the reaſon why I made a diſtinction between what we read in the third reply of Baudouin, and what is in the ſecond. Theodore Beza has refuted the ſecond, but ſaid nothing in anſwer to the third; ſo that the third is not of ſuch great conſequence againſt our Civilian Hotman; for we may preſume, that if Beza had anſwered it, he would have juſtified that Civilian. We ought therefore to attend more to the reproaches contained in the ſecond, ſince they may be compared with a piece, in which Theodore Beza refuted it. We muſt judge by that refutation, what might be the foundation upon which Baudouin proceeded. I have found, that his antagoniſt advances nothing, which may clear Hotman: he only ſays, that the reproach of ignorance in Latin, and being an atheiſt would not at all trouble Hotman, who would not condeſcend to open his mouth with regard to the latter charge. Magnum tibi certamen ſupereſſe video. Nam quæ tibi objecit magnam inſcitiam arguunt, quæ tamen (ut ajunt) refellere non poſſis. Illa verò quæ regeris, cujuſmodi ſunt quæſo? Latinè ſcilicet neſcit, ut eum oportuerit ad Latinam epiſtolam ſcribendam alterius operam requirere. Crimen autem ἀθεότητος, etſi omnium eſt graviſſimum, ille tamen, ut opinor, ne reſponſo quidem dignam putabit. Quid enim hoc aliud eſt quam latrare (73). i. e. "I ſee, that you have a hard "taſk to undertake. For what he objects to you, "are marks of great ignorance, which, they ſay, you "cannot confute. But what is it, that you ſay in re"turn? He does not underſtand Latin; ſo that he "was obliged to make uſe of the aſſiſtance of another "perſon in writing a Latin letter. With regard to the "charge of atheiſm, though it is the moſt grievous of "all, yet he, I believe, will not think it worthy "of an anſwer. For what elſe is this but mere bark"ing?" There is nothing in this relating to the accuſations, which I have tranſcribed, and which are to be found in page 176, 180, 181, 182 of Baudouin's ſecond reply. All that Beza has anſwered in defence of Hotman relates to page 175, where we find I, that Francis Hotman took to himſelf an Epiſtle Dedicatory, which Sturmius had compoſed. II. That he then commended the ſame works of Duarenus, which he had deſpiſed before when he wrote againſt Rufus for Du Moulin. III. That an elegant maſter of Cicero's atheiſm is not a fit perſon to catechiſe others. Noſter magiſter Latinitatis prius quam de meis ſcriptionibus garriat, ſuarum oblitus reſpondeat Sturmio & aliis à quibus accuſatus eſt quod ſuo nomine ediderit epiſtolam abs Sturmio ſcriptam, eamque inſtitutionibus præfixam tamquam ſuam vendiderit Duci Saxoniæ ... Oportet iſtius tui patroni incredibilem eſſe, non jam dicam, impudentiam quia latitat, ſed nequitia cum quidem poſteaquam edito libello de ſacerdotiis adverſus Ruffum pro Molineo, proſcidit illos Beneficiarios commentarios (Duareni) nunc eos ſe adorare fingat ... ſcilicet religionem nos docebit elegans magiſter Ciceronianæ ἀθεότητος (74).

I am certain, that all my readers will agree, in comparing theſe paſſages of Baudouin with that of Beza, that nothing could be more diſadvantageous to Hotman than to anſwer as Beza has done. Silence would have done him infinitely leſs harm. To compleat the misfortune, Beza publiſhed (75) a letter of Sturmius, which diſowns all that could be alledged from him to the diſadvantage of Calvin and Beza; but there is nothing of this kind with regard to Hotman.

Languet, a true Refugee, and a perfectly honeſt man, having ſeen Sturmius's accuſations againſt Hotman, made ſeveral very ſenſible reflections, and worthy of a pious man; but it was with a ſevere regret, that his countrymen ſhould behave ſo ſcandalouſly in Germany, and that perſons, who under pretence of religion ſought only to gratify their vanity, did more injury to the Proteſtant Religion, than the King of Spain and the Pope. He could not believe that Hotman could forget

(65) Ibid. pag. 87.

(66) He went to Heidelberg.

(67) Balduin. Reſponſio altera ad Joann. Calvin. pag. m. 176.

(68) Idem, ibid.

(69) Idem, ibid. pag. 181, 182.

(70) Theſe words are addreſſed to Calvin.

(71) It is a Libel, which I ſpeak of in the article of GUISE (Francis) remark [I].

(72) That is to ſay, in theſe times one ought to ſeek the ſhades.

(73) Beza, Reſponſ. ad Balduin, ſub finem, pag. 223. tom. 2. Operum.

(74) Balduin. Reſponſ. altera ad J. Calvinum, pag. 175.

(75) Beza, Reſponſ. ad Balduin. Oper. tom. 2. pag. 234.

ing the author of the Life of Francis Hotman [O]. The work printed at Amſterdam (k) under the title of Franciſci & Joannis Hotomanorum Patris ac Filii & clarorum Virorum ad eos Epiſtolæ would furniſh me with a great many additions to this article, with regard to our Civilian's application to the ſearch after the Philoſopher's ſtone, which was very injurious to his circumſtances (l), and to many other particulars of his life; but it is better to refer the reader to Monſieur Bernard's Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres (m). The extract which he gives of that work leaves nothing wanting. The reader may alſo conſult the firſt volume Obſervationum ſelectarum ad Rem Litterariam ſpectantium printed at Hall in 1700.

(k) In 1700 in 4to.

(l) See the Funeral Oration of Scipio Gentilis apud Witte, Memor. Juriſconſ. pag. 33.

(m) March 1701, pag. 268, & ſeqq.

forget himſelf ſo much as to be guilty of ſuch crimes. Let us quote his own words. Hæc ſunt levia ſi conferantur cum turpibus factis noſtrorum hominum in Germania, & quidem eorum qui ornati ſunt eruditione, & religionis ſpecie, inſinuarunt ſe in amicitiam bonorum virorum, qui ipſis ſumma beneficia exhibuerunt. Ut alios omittam, nuper vidi accuſationem Sturmii adverſus Hottomannum, quæ, ſi vera eſt, miſeret me Sturmii; & pudet alterius, ſed talia ſunt, ut mihi videantur vix poſſe venire in mentem erudito viro. Quidam mecum egerunt, ut ipſius accuſationis capita, ad te preſcriberem, ſed a talibus miniſteriis ego plane abhorreo, cum præſertim ſciam, te nec voluptatem nec utilitatem ex iis percipere poſſe, & ad me nihil pertineant, niſi forte infamiæ pars in me redundet, eo quod a noſtris hominibus talia perpetrentur in ipſa Germania. Hæc ſane tanto dolore me afficiunt, ut neſciam an ex ulla re majorem unquam ſenſerim. Video ubique eorum ambitionem, qui prætextu religionis ſua quærunt, magis obeſſe ipſius religionis progreſſui, quam Pontificem Ro. Regem Hiſpaniæ, & omnes ipſorum miniſtros. Sed de re odioſa nimis multa ſcribo (76). i. e. "Theſe "are light things, if compared with the ſcandalous beha- "viour of our countrymen in Germany, and indeed of "thoſe who are eminent for their learning, and under "pretence of religion have inſinuated themſelves into "the friendſhip of worthy perſons, who have done "them the higheſt ſervices. To omit others, I lately "ſaw Sturmius's accuſation againſt Hotman, which, if "true, I pity Sturmius, and am aſhamed of Hotman; "but the facts are of ſuch a kind, that I ſcarce think "that a man of learning could be guilty of them. "Some perſons have deſired me to write the heads of "the accuſation to you; but I am greatly averſe to "ſuch an employment, eſpecially as I know, that you "can find neither pleaſure nor advantage from it, and "as they have no relation to me, unleſs perhaps part "of the diſgrace is reflected upon me, becauſe ſuch "things are done by our countrymen in Germany. "This gives me ſo much regret, that I know not "whether I ever felt greater upon any occaſion. I ſee "every where, that the ambition of thoſe, who under "pretence of religion ſeek their own intereſt, is more "injurious to the progreſs of religion itſelf, than the "Pope, the King of Spain, and all their adherents. "But I inſiſt too long upon a diſagreeable ſubject." The letter from which I extract theſe words, is dated at Paris December the 11th 1561. Another of his letters dated at the ſame city January the 23d 1562 informs us, that the Duke of Guiſe, who was gone to meet the Biſhop of Straſbourg at Saverne (77), had begun a proſecution againſt Francis Hotman for defamatory libels; and that many perſons affirmed, that in conſequence of this he had undertaken that journey. Languet could not think, that ſo ſlight a motive would have engaged the Duke of Guiſe to go to Saverne: but I do not doubt but that he judged it to be a diſgrace to Hotman to be proſecuted as a libeller.

(76) Languet. Epiſt. 64. lib. 2. pag. 186, 187.

(77) Idem, ibid. Epiſt. 67. pag. 197.

[O] I ſhall ſpeak one word concerning the author of the life of Francis Hotman.] His Latin name Petrus Neveletus Doſchius, ſignifies Peter Nevelet, Lord of Oſche. The title of this Lordſhip is given him in Paſquier's letters, as alſo that of Advocate in the Court of Parliament at Paris (78). He was ſon of a ſiſter of Peter Pithou, as appears from a letter, which that uncle wrote to him, and which was printed at the end of Quintilian's declamations in ſome editions. Iſaac Nicholas Nevelet his ſon publiſhed Æſop and the other antient Fabuliſts, with notes in 1610. It was the firſt fruits of his ſtudies, and he dedicated it to his father.

(78) See the 8th book of Paſquier's Letters, pag. 467. of tome 1.

HOTTINGER (JOHN HENRY) one of the moſt famous authors of the ſeventeenth Century, was born in Zurich the 10th of March 1620. The progreſs he made in his firſt ſtudies gave ſuch promiſing hopes, that the truſtees of the ſchools reſolved to ſend him to ſtudy in foreign countries, at the expence of the public. He began his travels the 26th of March 1638; and went to Geneva, whence, after two months ſtay, he went to France. He afterwards viſited Flanders and Holland, and made choice of Groningen for the ſeat of his ſtudies; but being very deſirous of improving himſelf in the Oriental tongues, he went, a year afterwards, to Leyden (a), to be tutor there to the children of Profeſſor Golius, who was the beſt ſkilled in thoſe languages of any man in the world. He improved greatly, by the inſtructions which Golius gave him and the aſſiſtance of a Turk, in the ſtudy of the Arabic. He would have followed the Embaſſador (b) of the States General in 1641, in quality of Chaplain, to Conſtantinople, had the Magiſtrates of Zurich conſented to it; but they choſe rather to recall him, in order to employ him for the glory and advantage of their public ſchools. They permitted him to viſit England before he returned to Switzerland; and the inſtant he was returned from that country, they appointed him (c) Profeſſor of Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory; and a year after they gave him two Profeſſorſhips, that of Catechetical Divinity, and that of the Oriental Tongues. He married at twenty two (d), and ſet up for an author at twenty four years of age [A]; and was ſo well pleaſed with

(a) In 1639.

(b) William Boſwell.

(c) In 1642.

(d) See the remark [F].

[A] He ſet up for an author at twenty four years of age.] And this was not for a ſmall enterprize, but to attack, on a very delicate and knotty ſubject, one of the moſt learned men of Europe at that time; Hottinger undertaking to refute father Morin's diſſertations on the Samaritan Pentateuch (1). We may therefore apply to him the following words of the Chapelain décoiffé.

(1) Printed in 1631, and not in 1651, as is ſaid in Father Morin's Life, pag. 22. edit. Francof.

Mes pareils avec toi ſont dignes de ſe batre,
Et pour des coups d'eſſai veulent des Henris quatre.
"My equals, ſure, are worthy of engaging "With thee; and, for their firſt eſſay, would write
"An Epic Poem."

This work, which he intitled Exercitationes Anti-Morinianæ, was greatly approved by the Proteſtants, either on account of the author's erudition, or from the matter and ſubject, which could not be more favourable, ſince Hottinger defended the Hebrew text of the Bible, whoſe authority father Morin did all that lay in his power to enervate. In Mr. Simon's opinion this is one of the

with that character, that he afterwards was for ever publiſhing books [B]. This was not very difficult for him to do, he being extremely laborious, and was bleſſed with a very happy memory. It is nevertheleſs ſurprizing, that a man who had poſſeſſed ſo many academical employments, and was ſo often interrupted by viſits, and by the very extenſive literary correſpondence in which he was engaged [C], ſhould have found time to write the beſt works that Hottinger ever publiſhed; ſo that we may ſay that his firſt attempt was his maſter-piece. I will quote the whole paſſage of Mr. Simon, which is far from being advantageous to the memory of the Swiſs doctor. "Had Hottinger obſerved ſome moderation "in his works, and not dwelt ſo long upon trifles, "we might find ſome uſeful things in them, with re- "ſpect to the underſtanding the literal ſenſe of the "Scriptures. But as he generally writes for a party, "and uſed to compoſe his works with too much pre- "cipitation, he is liable to frequent miſtakes. One "of his beſt works on this ſubject, is that written by "him againſt father Morin's Exercitationes Samari- "tainæ; but neither is he quite accurate in this "work (2)."

(2) Simon, Hiſtoire Critique de vieux Teſtament, liv. 3. chap. 19. pag. m. 474.

[Father Morin had aſſerted, in the ſtrongeſt manner, that this Samaritan Pentateuch was authentic, and preferred it to the Hebrew text, upon pretence that the latter had been corrupted by the Jews; and it was to combat this opinion that Hottinger wrote the work in queſtion. Addition by the Tranſlator.]

Mr. Simon criticiſed, in another book, this work of Hottinger; but then he does this in the moſt gentle manner, and without really deſigning to prejudice him. His words are as follow (3): Joannes Henricus Hottingerus, qui ſtatim à Libri ſui limine cujus hæc eſt inſcriptio, Exercitationes Anti-Morinianæ de Pentateucho Samaritano ejuſque udentica authentica; Morinum appellat Monachum qui communem Monachorum ſortem ſuperet. Ille de Samaritanis & eorum codicibus diſſerit, putatque Samaritanos à Judæis Pentateuchi ſui exemplar hauſiſſe; ſed conjecturis tantum, non autem firmiſſimis rationibus, ut ita ſentiret, adduci potuit; iſtud minus accuratum eſſe probat exemplis aliquot pleonaſmorum, vocum vel mutatarum in alias vel omiſſarum, ſimilibuſque erroribus quos profert, & ex quibus confici poſſe arbitratur, non magis credendum eſſe Samaritanis Pentateuchum ſuum jactantibus, quam Ebionitis verum & ſolum Matthæi Evangelium Hebræum venditantibus, qua in re profectò graviſſime hallucinatus eſt Hottingerus, qui tam venerandæ antiquitatis Pentateuchum Samaritanum cum adulterato Ebionitarum Evangelio comparare audeat. Morinum etiam imperitiæ arguit Hottingerus, quaſi Rabbinorum quorundam quos laudaverat mentem haud aſſecutus fuiſſet. i. e. "John Henry Hottinger, at the very "opening of his work intitled, Exercitations againſt "Morin, with regard to the authenticalneſs of the Sa- "maritan Pentateuch, calls Morin a Monk, more "learned than his brethren are generally found to "be. In the work in queſtion he treats concerning "the Samaritans and their copies, and is of opinion "that the Samaritans had their copy of the Penta- "teuch from the Jews; but he muſt have been "prompted to think ſo, merely from conjectures, and "not from any very ſolid reaſons; he proves this to "be leſs accurate, from ſome examples of pleonaſms, "omiſſions or changes of words, and ſuch kind of er- "rors; whence he thinks it may be proved, that "we ought not to give greater credit to the Sama- "ritans when they boaſt their Pentateuch, than to the "Ebionites, when they pretend their being poſſeſſed "of the only true Hebrew Goſpel of St. Matthew. "On this occaſion Hottinger has been groſly miſtaken, "in daring to compare the Samaritan Pentateuch, ſo "venerable for its antiquity, with the ſpurious Goſpel "of the Ebionites. He alſo charges Morin with ig- "norance, as not underſtanding ſome Rabbins he had "praiſed." Heidegger had reaſon to obſerve, that father Morin's ſilence was a glorious circumſtance with reſpect to our Hottinger; but I queſtion whether he underſtood father Merſenne's thought (4). Liber toti erudito orbi charus, acceptuſque fuit. Conſtat Morinum diu adhuc ſuperſtitem librum accepiſſe & legiſſe, neque contra mutire auſum* (5). Et Merſennus, cui Hottingerus librum adjunctis literis miſit, id ſolùm reſpondit, nec ſibi Hottingeri juvenilem ardorem ſatis probari, nec Hottingerum Morinum penitus noſſe. Quaſi videlicet juveni integrum non fuerit ſenum deliria taxare, & ipſe Morinus interiorem animi ſui notam in vulgus edito libro non patefecerit. i. e. "This work met with a gracious re- "ception from all the learned world. It is certain "that Morin, who lived a long time after, received "and read the book in queſtion, but did not dare to "ſpeak or write againſt it. And father Merſenne, to "whom Hottinger ſent a copy of his work and a "letter, anſwered only this, that he did not approve "of Hottinger's juvenile fire, and that he (Hottinger) "did not know Morin thoroughly. As tho' it were "not juſt for a young man, to anſwer the dreams "and chimera's of old men; and as though Mori- "nus had not diſcovered ſufficiently to the public, "his deſign in publiſhing the book in queſtion." In my opinion, father Merſenne meant only this, viz. that Hottinger did not know father Morin very well: and I do not doubt but the ſenſe of his anſwer was this: The fire of youth has carried you too far; and were you but fully acquainted with father Morin's merit, you would not treat him after this manner. Do you pretend to confute this, by ſaying that father Morin has laid open, by this work, the moſt hidden receſſes of his heart? I will grant that he ſhowed his intention was to raiſe the credit of the Latin tranſlation of the Bible, and to weaken the authority of the original text; but is not this the intereſt, and general deſign of the controverſial writers of the Romiſh communion? Hottinger knew but little of father Morin, ſince he took him for a Friar.

(3) In Vita Joh. Morini, pag. 36, 37.

(4) Jo. Henr. Heideggerus, in Vita Hottingeri, ad ann. 1644.

(5) The following words of Hottinger bear a relation to this; Non diſplicuerant hæ primitiæ viris eruditis, qui hinc inde novo Morini conatui finem impoſitum publicis teſtabantur ſcriptis. Hotting. in Bibliotb. Tigurin. pag. 322.

[B] He afterwards was for ever publiſhing books.] If the reader is deſirous of ſeeing an exact catalogue of all the works he publiſhed from the year 1644, till the year 1664, let him peruſe his Bibliotheca Tigurina (6); where he will find the Hiſtory and Chronological Catalogue of his compoſitions; and another catalogue where they are ranked and digeſted according to the order of the ſubjects. The Author of his Life has alſo drawn up, in a Chronological order, all the works publiſhed by him. The number of them is aſtoniſhing.

(6) Pag. 121, & ſeq.

[C] He was . . . . ſo often interrupted by viſits, and by the very extenſive literary correſpondence in which he was engaged.] The particulars of this will be ſeen in the following quotation. Non publicis tantùm his, quibus diſtrictus fuit, curationibus vigilantiſſimè vacavit, & quotidie calamum in exarandis, quos in publicum mitteret, libris exercuit: verùm etiam amicorum, peregrinorum & hoſpitum, qui ipſius videndi & audiendi gratiâ huc commeârunt, deſideriis ſatisfecit. Erat enim ipſius domus plena ſemper & frequens concurſu ſplendidiſſimorum hominum. Quoties aliquid abditum quærebatur, ille theſaurus, ille delubrum adibatur. Ex omnibus, quæ ei obvenerunt, negotiis miro vigore & induſtria ſe explicavit. Neque etiam deficiebat ad ſubita extemporali facultate. Veniebant omnium Ordinum, omnium ætatum viri: percontabantur de arduis, de dubiis quæſtionibus, quarum ille pondus præſenti ſemper animo excepit. Quid moleſtiam epiſtolarum & ſcribendi ad amicos hîc recenſeam; quo nonnunquam ſolo perire ſibi diem ſæpè querebatur? Quotidie aut Galli, aut Germani, aut Belgæ, aut Angli, aut Dani, aut Itali ad ipſum Epiſtolas miſitavêre de literis, de caſibus Eccleſiæ, de Civilium rerum momentis, de aliis, quibus ille gnaviter & promptiſſimè reſpondit (7). i. e. "He not only performed very "diligently the duties of his public profeſſion, and "was daily employed in preparing books for the preſs; "but alſo gratified the deſires of ſuch friends and "ſtrangers, as came hither from all parts to ſee and "hear him; for his houſe was ever full of the nobleſt "company. Whenever any difficulty occurred, peo- "ple conſulted him as though he had been an "oracle. He acquitted himſelf of all buſineſs with a "ſurprizing vigour and application of mind; and was "very quick and ready on all occaſions. He was "viſited by perſons of all ranks and ages; and con- "ſulted upon the hardeſt and moſt doubtful queſtions; "all which he anſwered in the moſt ſatisfactory man- "ner. I might mention the great pains he uſed to "take in writing to his friends, which alone, as he "frequently

(7) Heidegger, in Vita Hottingeri.

write so many books. New Professorships were bestowed upon him in 1653 (e), and he was admitted into the College of the Canons. Two years after he was sent, for three years, to the Elector Palatine, who was desirous to employ Hottinger, in order that he might restore the fame and reputation of the University of Heidelberg; but before he set out for that city he went to Basil, and there took his degree of Doctor of Divinity (f). He arrived at Heidelberg in August 1655, and was very graciously received in that city. Besides the Professorship of Divinity of the old Testament and the Oriental tongues, he was appointed Principal of the Collegium Sapientiæ, and raised to the dignity of Ecclesiastical Counsellor. He was Rector of the University the year following, and wrote a book concerning the re-union of the Lutherans and Calvinists, which he did to please the Elector who was pretty zealous on this occasion; but he met with the same obstacles as had so often put a stop to the like design [D]. Hottinger accompanied this Prince to the Electoral Diet of Frankfort in 1658, and there had a conference with Ludolf on important matters [E]. He was not recalled to Zurich till 1661, his superiors being so complaisant as to prolong the term of years for which they had lent him to the Elector Palatine. He was immediately elected President of the Commissioners who were to revise the German translation of the Bible. A civil war breaking out in Switzerland in the year 1664, Hottinger was sent into Holland on state-affairs. The University of Leyden offered him a Professorship of Divinity in 1667; but not obtaining leave of his Superiors, he refused it. The Dutch were not disheartened at this refusal, but insisted that

(e) Artium Rhetorologicarum ordinarius, & Theologiæ Vet. Test. atque Controversiarum extra ordinem Professor designatus. Heidegg. ubi infra, Citation (g).

(f) He took it the 26th of July 1655.

" frequently complained, would often employ whole " days; for he was perpetually receiving letters from " the Literati of France, Germany, Holland, Eng- " land, Sweden, Denmark, and Italy, with regard " to learned matters, and affairs relating both to church " and state, to all which he gave the most exact " and speedy answers." Some pages after a list is given of all those persons who corresponded by letter with Hottinger, and their names take up above two pages. Among the foreigners who came to visit him, we must not forget the Deputies of the Jansenists; he having several conferences with them, when they passed by Zurich in 1653, in their return from Rome to Paris. An account of these conferences was found among his papers, and lately published (8).

(8) At the end of Historia Jansenismi, published by Leydecker at Utrecht, in 1695.

[D] He met with the same obstacles to that reunion which had so often put a stop to the like design.] These obstacles, according to Heidegger, are party animosities, and a certain itch for disputation, which subsists upon contests, in the same manner as the Cameleon does on air. Conciliis de pace Reformatos inter & Lutheranos sarcienda, à Serenissimo Principe, tum temporis saxum illud magna contentione volvente, implicitus, aliquot disputationes Irenicas ad ventilandum proposuit, non eo tamen eventu,, quem calidis votis boni omnes præceperunt. Obstabant eadem, quæ antehac, impedimenta, odia parum pia partium, & ingeniorum, quæ rixis haud secus quàm Chamæleon vento pascuntur, scabies (9). i. e. " He aided the most serene Elector with " his counsels, in order to bring about an union be- " tween the Calvinists and Lutherans, which that " Prince greatly desired; and proposed some Irenical " disputations in order for the promoting of this; but " they were not crowned with the success which all " good men wished. The same obstacles that had " formerly been so hurtful, now rendred these endea- " vours fruitless; I mean, the strong animosity of the " parties one against the other; and a sort of itch of " some people's minds, which is fed with contest as " the Cameleon is with air." Spanheim observes, that the pacific design of the Elector Palatine, was defeated by a too passionately-zealous Treatise, written by Danhawerus, a Lutheran Professor in Strasburg. Qualiter etiam hoc sæculo in Colloquio Lipsiaco, anno 1631 ubi ad tria capita dissensus omnis rediit; tum sub Carolo Ludovico, Electore Palatino, Heidelbergæ quum profiterer, cujus pacificum institutum intervertit præcipuè J. Conr. Danhawerus, A. 1658 scripto virulento Teutonico, Reformatorum salve, ad lapidem Lydium exactum, &c. (10). It is certain that a union between the Lutherans and Calvinists would have been brought about long since, had it depended on Princes; but as that affair depends on the Divines, it could never take effect, and in all probability never will. It is not I who form this judgment in general (11) of these Gentlemen; it is one of their own body, and he who can best speak of this, from experience. He says that the secular Magistrates, not the Clergy (12), ought to be chiefly employed in order for bringing about the union in question; for the Divines, says he, are extremely tenacious of their own opinions, and not very just with respect to those who think in a different manner from them .... They should not dispute concerning the truth of the doctrines; for disputes rather create new wars, than put an end to the old ones. Disputants do not seek for concord, but for victory; and those who find themselves defeated, grow haughtier and more passionate. Were an assembly to meet, in order for treating of an union, the Divines in it should be allowed no more than barely to plead as Council; they should be heard but not be received as Judges; only the secular Magistrates should be allowed to act in that character; and it would even be proper to make the Divines promise, upon oath, to obey the sentence which the political Judges shall pronounce. Theologi sint advocati, loquantur; Politici audiant, & sint judices sub authoritate principum. At ante omnem disputationem Theologi ambarum partium fidem suam juramento obstringant se judicio delegatorum obtemperaturos, nec quidquam adversus pacem molituros (13). Hoc opus per manus præsertim Virorum Politicorum, non autem Ecclesiasticorum est tractandum & inchoandum. Theologi sunt suorum placitorum tenacissimi, parum placitis alienis æqui (14) .... In colloquiis quæ de pace ineundâ habebuntur, de veritate dogmatum nullo modo erit disputandum. Pugnæ non dirimunt bella, sed faciunt. In illis disputationibus non quæritur pax, sed victoria. Nullus se victum unquam fatebitur, & si sentiat se dejectum aut prostratum, tantum abest ut ad concordiam fiat pronior; contra ferocior evadet iratus & indignans, quod res ipsi male cedat (15). This author was not capable of succeeding better in any description than in this.

(13) Petrus Jurius, de Pace ineunda, pag. 263.

(14) Idem, ibid. pag. 262.

(15) Idem, ibid. pag. 263.

I must not omit that in 1666 Tobias Wagnerus, Chancellor of the University of Tubingen, attacked Hottinger's book concerning the re-union, in his Inquisitio Theologica in Acta henotica nostro potissimum tempore inter Theologos Augustanæ Confessionis & Reformatæ Ecclesiæ à Reformatis resuscitata (16). Hottinger wrote a defence of himself, not in a work written expressly for that purpose, but transiently, and occasionally: It was in a synodal dispute, where he proved that the Reformed or Calvinist Church is not schismatical (17).

(16) Heidegger in Vita Hotting.

(17) Idem, ibid. folio F.

[E] He had .... a conference .... in Frankfort .... with Ludolf, on important matters.] It is known universally that Job Ludolf has acquired a vast knowledge of Ethiopia; and he, in conjunction with Hottinger, concerted measures for sending into Africa some persons skilled in the Oriental tongues, and who might make exact enquiries with regard to the state of the Christian religion in that part of the world. Agitata præterea inter eos sunt secretiora consilia de mittendis Principum authoritate & impensis in Africam juvenibus uno vel duobus, in Orientalium idiomatibus & rebus paulò jam provectioribus, qui Africanarum, imprimis Æthiopicarum Ecclesiarum arcana paulò penitùs indagarent, & novis monumentis ibi collectis copias nostras augerent (18). I believe this was the chief subject of the letters which they wrote to one another after the Diet of Frankfort; but I make no doubt that they began to speak of it in that city.

(18) Idem, ibid. folio D.

(9) Heidegger, in Vita Hottingeri, folio D 2.

(10) Frid. Spanhem. Elencho Controvers. pag. 335. edit. 1694.

(11) In this manner all these phrases ought to be understood: they do not relate to any person in particular, and leave room for exceptions.

(12) See the Bishop of Meaux's Reflexions on all this at the close of his Histoire des Variations, in the Addition.

that Hottinger ſhould be lent to them; upon which the Magiſtrates of Zurich having conſented to this, in complaiſance to the States of Holland who had intereſted themſelves in this affair, he accepted the offer. As he was preparing all things for his journey, he unfortunately loſt his life the 5th of June 1667, in the river which paſſes through Zurich (g) [F]. He had often refuſed the Profeſſorſhips which were offered him [G]. The moſt violent adverſaries who wrote againſt him were, Leo Allatius, Abraham Ecchellenſis and father Labbe [H]. Arnauld had a fling at Hottinger, but (g) Extracted from his Life, written by Joh. Henr. Heidegger, and prefixed to tom. 9. of Hottinger's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory.

[F] He unfortunately loſt his life . . . . in the river which paſſes through Zurich.] He went into a boat with his wife, three of his children, his brother-in-law, a good friend, and a maid-ſervant, in order to go and let out, upon leaſe, an eſtate he had two leagues from Zurich. The boat ſtriking a peer, which the ſwelling of the water hid, overſet. Hottinger, his brother-in-law, and his friend eſcaped by ſwimming; but when they ſaw the danger the reſt of the company were ſtill in, they jumped back into the water. It was then Hottinger, his friend, and his three children (19) loſt their lives; but his wife, his brother-in-law, and ſervant-maid were ſaved (20). His wife was the only daughter of John Henry Huldric, Miniſter of Zurich, a man of very great learning (21). She brought him ſeveral children; for beſides the three who were drowned with him, and thoſe who died before, he left four ſons and two daughters.

(19) A ſon and two daughters; his eldeſt and youngeſt daughter.

(20) Heidegger, in Vita Hotting. folio F 4. See alſo the Letter which he wrote to the Curators of the Univerſity of Leyden, the 9th of June 1667. Crenius has publiſhed it in Part 1. of his Animadverſiones Philologicæ & Hiſtoricæ, Rotterdam, 1695.

[G] He had often refuſed the Profeſſorſhips which were offered him.] The magiſtrates of Deventer earneſtly ſollicited him in 1661, to accept of the profeſſorſhip of Divinity, in the room of Henry Dieſt, who on account of his old age, was declared emeritus (22). The Landgrave of Heſſe would have got him to Marpurg, to be a Divinity Profeſſor there, and ordered Felix Platerus, a Phyſician of Baſil, to negotiate that affair. He alſo had invitations from the magiſtrates of Amſterdam, and thoſe of Bremen (23).

(21) See Hotting. Biblioth. Tigurinæ, pag. 138.

(22) Heidegger, in Vita Hottinger.

(23) Idem, ibid. folio E.

[H] The moſt violent adverſaries who wrote againſt him were Leo Allatius, Abraham Ecchellenſis, and Father L'Abbe.] Here follows the account, which Heidegger gives, in Hottinger's life, of the fury of the firſt (24). Quorum in numerum refero imprimis Labbeum Lojolitam miſerum & rancidum, nec non moroſum illum & triſtem Senecionem Chium, Allatium, qui vel ſolo illo libro contra Hottingerum furiis inſpirantibus & mentem ac calamum flectentibus ſcripto, apud bonos omnes cognomen Leonis conturbavit ac decoxit, & Canis pluſquam Epirotici jure meritoque obtinuit. Quæ enim, malum, hæc feralis inſania eſt, quis furor, quæ canina rabies, leviter ſibi contradicentem, & contradictionem argumentis talibus, quibus ſi error infuiſſet, hominis tamen non pecoris eum fuiſſe apparuerat, munientem, non æquo animo tolerare, non fomentis, malagmatis & lenibus remediis curare, ſed probris veluti de plauſtro congeſtis non cumulare ſed obruere, & eidem convitia ac maledicta atrociſſima non modio nec trimodio, ſed toto horreo admetiri? Quæ obſcœnitas ad nomen ita alludere, ut caſtæ aures & purus animus abhorreat? Canem hæc, non Leonem generoſum, non hominem, nedum Chriſtianum obolent. Fuerit Allatius, ille Gigantum frater, paulò in Græcorum, imprimis eorum, quæ hactenus inedita nobis fortuna invidet, monumentis verſatior. Habuerit ſenex ingenium (25) ad corrumpendum & detorquendum, ad dolos ac fallacias inſtruendum, ad paraſitandum denique ſubactius. Hæc enim ſola laus ipſi propria & eximia eſſe poteſt. Quanquam hominem in Græcia natum, Græcum idioma calluiſſe paulo exactius, mediocri in laude ponendum mihi videtur. Sed fuerint hæc, quæ dixi, in eo ſumma. Quo pacto ille aſſurget ad gloriam Hottingeri, qui, præterquam quod veritatis & Orthodoxiæ ſtudio ductus ſub ſignis Chriſti militavit, etiam excelluit non in vernaculo ſibi idiomate, ſed in Hebraico, Chaldaico, Syriaco, Arabico, Coptico, Perſico, in quibus ſingulis Allatius non tantum nihil vidit, ſed Talpa Tireſiâ cœcior fuit? Olim Chiis in ſenatu Attico data eſt licentia vomendi. Credidi igitur lecto Allatii Chii libro, quod tot convitia in Hottingerum noſtrum non jactavit, ſed vomuit, gentis ſuæ antiqua licentia eum uti voluiſſe. i. e. "Among whom I firſt "reckon Labbe, that churliſh and wretched diſciple "of Ignatius Loyola; and that old Chian Allatius, "who, were it only for the book, which he, his mind "and pen being inſpired by the furies, wrote againſt "Hottinger, has forfeited and loſt, in the opinion of "all good men, the ſirname of Lion; and deſerved "got, inſtead of this generous one, that of more than "Epirotic cur. For what fury, what deadly horrid "rage could prompt a man to fall foul on a perſon "who had only contradicted his notions in the moſt "gentle manner; and had enforced his objections or "criticiſms by ſuch reaſons, as proved that he was an "opponent who was far from being contemptible; "what deadly rage, I ſay, could prompt him, inſtead "of bearing this with patience, or endeavouring to "heal it with gentle remedies, to almoſt overwhelm "him with loads of injurious words or ſcurrilities? "Then, how could he pun on his name in ſo ob-"ſcure a manner as could not but raiſe an abhorrence "in pure and chaſte ears? This is acting more like the "dog than the lion; not like a man, much leſs a "Chriſtian. If we ſhould take it for granted that "this mighty Allatius was a little better ſkilled in the "Greek authors, particularly in ſuch as ſtill continue "in manuſcript; though we ſhould ſuppoſe that he had "a genius more fit for artifice, for cunning, and for "playing the paraſite; for in theſe things only he is "particularly eminent and excellent; though I can-"not look upon it as a very great merit, for a Greek "to be well ſkilled in the idiom of his native lan-"guage: but taking it for granted, I ſay, that he "poſſeſſed all theſe advantages, with what juſtice can "he be compared with Hottinger, who, beſides his "fighting for the truth and orthodoxy under Chriſt's "banners, excelled, not only in his mother tongue, "but alſo in the Hebrew, Chaldaic, Syriac, Arabic, "Coptic and Perſian languages, in every one of "which Allatius is blinder than Tireſias? The na-"tives of Chios were antiently allowed by the Athe-"nians, the liberty of vomiting; and therefore I, on "reading this book of Allatius the Chian, imagined "that he, laying hold of the antient privilege of his "countrymen, rather vomited than threw out theſe "reproaches on Hottinger." Hottinger defended himſelf in few words (26); and as for Ecchellenſis, he put him a little in mind (27) of the blunders he had been convicted of, and pointed out ſome others. Præfatus eſt illi libro de gradibus ſtudii Philologiæ, inſerta ſimul Apologia brevi adverſus Abrahamum Ecchellenſem, qui Præfatione in Catalogum librorum Chaldæorum Hebed Jeſu Metropolitæ Sobenſis, traduxit Seldenum, Hottingerum noſtrum, Calixtum, Ludovicum de Dieu, Conſtantinum L'Empereur, Salmaſium, eo potiſſimum nomine, quod Orientalibus ſtudiis intenti, germanam tamen verborum, ſignificationem, ut plurimum non deprehendant, ambigua & obſcura pro certis & luculentiſſimis ſtatuant, atque interim ea, quæ in clariſſima luce verſantur, quod ipſorum commenta radicitus extirpent, omnino prætereant. Verùm non aliam defenſionem tum ſui, tum virorum horum doctiſſimorum, quos eâdem accuſatione involverat adverſarius, Hottingerus paravit, quàm in memoriam revocatis Ecchellenſi errorum plauſtris, quæ ipſi à contribulibus Flavignio, Gabriele Sionita, Johanne Morino objecta ſunt; nec non ex proprio ingenio demonſtratis notoriis ſphalmatis, quæ ille in tractatu Arabico-Latino, Synopſis propoſitorum ſapientiæ Arabum Philoſophorum inſcripto, adverſus genium Arabicæ linguæ admiſit (28). i. e. "He drew up a preface to the work "concerning the degrees of the ſtudy of Philoſophy; "and introduced therein a ſhort apology for himſelf "in oppoſition to Abraham Ecchellenſis, who, in a "preface to a catalogue of the Chaldee books of He-"bed Jeſu, Metropolitan of Seba, traduced Selden, "our Hottinger, Calixtus, Lewis de Dieu, Conſtantine "l'Empereur, and Salmaſius; charging them, that "notwithſtanding their application to Oriental Learn-"ing, they nevertheleſs had commonly miſtook in "the true and genuine ſignification of words, and "given doubtful and obſcure matters as certain and "manifeſt truths; though they quite paſſed over many "particulars that were clear as noon day, only becauſe "they

(24) Idem, ibid. folio C 2.

(25) See Claude's words in the following remark.

(26) In Enneade Diſſert. Philologico-Theolog. printed in the 1662.

(27) In the Preface Etymologici Orientalis, ſive Lexici Harmonico Pentaglotti, publiſhed in 1661.

(28) Heidegger, in Vita Hottingeri.

but was taken up for it by Claude [I]. [We ſhall add a few particulars to this article [K], eſpecially with regard to the pieces he wrote on the Oriental affairs or literature [L].]

" they quite invalidated their forgeries. Now Hottinger did not make any other defence either of himſelf, or of thoſe learned men whom his adverſary had involved in the ſame accuſation, but to remind Ecchellenſis of the great number of errors with which he had been charged by thoſe of his own tribe, viz. by Flavigny, Gabriel Sionita, and John Morin; taking notice alſo of ſome egregious miſtakes which Ecchellenſis had fallen into, in oppoſition to the genius of the Arabic Tongue, in his work written in Latin and Arabic, intitled Synopſis propoſitorum ſapientiæ Arabum Philoſophorum."

[I] Arnauld had a fling at Hottinger, but was taken up for it by Claude.] " I relate this whole hiſtory (29) chiefly on the credit of Allatius, who took a particular care in informing himſelf of this; and who, being a native of Greece, ought to be believed ſooner than Dutch or Swiſs Miniſters; and, among others, than Hottinger, who is one of the fierceſt and moſt inſincere writers I ever read." Theſe are Arnauld's words (30), and here follows Claude's anſwer (31). " For what reaſon would Arnauld have us give credit to Allatius ſooner than to Hottinger? The former has the characteriſtic of a headſtrong writer who is ever miſrepreſenting things; the latter, on the contrary, in ſpite of all Arnauld may ſay, has all the marks of a ſincere man, who relates things as he heard them. I own that the former is more polite and elegant, but the other is the more ingenuous and ſincere. Allatius ſays whatever he pleaſes out of his own head, whereas Hottinger produces his vouchers.

(29) Viz. that of Cyril Lucaris, Patriarch of Conſtantinople.

(30) Perpétuité défendue, liv. 4. chap. 6. pag. 561. Bruſſels edit. in 12mo.

(31) Réponſe à la Perpétuité de la Foi, liv. 3. chap. 12. pag. m. 467.

☞[K] We ſhall add a few particulars to this article.] As Hottinger was born with a great genius for languages, he ſoon learnt the Latin, Greek and Hebrew. When he was at Geneva, he ſtudied two months under Frederic Spanheim. At Groningen he ſtudied Divinity under F. Gomarus and H. Alting, and Arabic under Matthias Paſor. As Grotius had a conſiderable number of Arabic manuſcripts, Hottinger copied a great many of them for his own uſe, during the fourteen months that he reſided in Leyden. Whilſt he was in England, he contracted a great intimacy with ſeveral learned men of that country. When Hottinger was invited by the Elector Palatine in 1655, it was with difficulty that the Senate of Zurich, ſo great was their regard for him, were prevailed upon to let him go. And when that body deſired him back again of the Elector, at whoſe Court he had reſided ſix years, that Prince diſmiſſed him with great regret; and, before he went away, honoured him with the title of Eccleſiaſtical Counſellor (32).

(32) Heidegger, in Vita Hottingeri, & Hommes Illuſtres du Pere Niceron, tom. 8.

[L] Particularly with regard to the works he wrote on the Oriental affairs or literature.] We may firſt mention his Theſaurus Philologicus, ſeu clavis Scripturæ, quâ quicquid ferè Orientalium, Hebræorum maximè & Arabum habent monumenta de Religione ejuſque variis ſpeciebus, Judaiſmo, Samaritaniſmo, Muhammediſmo, Gentiliſmo, de Theologia & Theologis, Verbo Dei &c. breviter & aphoriſticè ita reſeratur & operitur, ut multiplex inde ad Philologiæ, Theologiæ ſtudioſos fructus redundare poſſit. Tiguri 1649, 4to. Secunda Editio in qua Samaritica, Arabica, Syriaca, ſuis quæque nativis characteribus exprimuntur. Tiguri 1659, 4to. The next is Hiſtoria Orientalis, quæ ex variis Orientalium monumentis collecta agit. 1. De Muhammediſmo ejuſque cauſis tum procreantibus, tum conſervantibus. 2. De Saraceniſmo, ſeu Religione veterum Arabum. 3. De Chaldaiſmo Superſtitione Nabatæorum, Chaldæorum, Charranæorum. 4. De Statu Chriſtianorum & Judæorum tempore orti & nati Muhammediſmi. 5. De variis inter ipſos Muhammedanos circa Religionis dogmata & adminiſtrationem, ſententiis, ſchiſmatis, & hæreſibus excitatis. 6. Acceſſit, ex occaſione Genealogiæ Muhammedis, plenior illuſtratio Taarich Bene Adam, qua, ex ipſis Arabum Scriptis, vita & res geſtæ Prophetarum Patriarcharum, quorundam etiam Apoſtolorum, Regum Perſiæ, aliorumque ab Adamo ad Muhammedis uſque natales in orbe de gentium, explicantur. Tiguri 1651, 4to. Secunda Editio auctior. Tiguri 1660, 4to. No man was better qualified to write on Oriental affairs than Hottinger, as he was ſkilled in moſt of the languages, which were antiently, as well as at preſent, ſpoke in the Eaſt, viz. the Hebrew, Syriac, Chaldee, Arabic, Turkiſh, Perſian and Coptic languages. Hottinger wrote alſo eight diſſertations on the uſe and advantage of the Oriental Tongues. He wrote alſo the following work, Promptuarium ſive Bibliotheca Orientalis, exhibens catalogum ſive Centurias aliquot tam Auctorum, quam Librorum Hebraicorum, Syriacorum, Arabicorum, Ægyptiacorum; addita Mantiſſa Bibliothecarum aliquot Europæarum. Heidelbergæ 1658, 4to. Mr. Baillet does not ſpeak advantageouſly of this work of Hottinger, whom he accuſes of not being very accurate in any of his compoſitions. Hottinger publiſhed in 1661, Etymologicum Orientale, ſive Lexicon Harmonicum Heptaglotton; cum præfatione de gradibus ſtudii Philologici, & Apologetico brevi contra Abrahamum Ecchellenſem Maronitam. Francofurti, in 4to. The ſeven languages contained in this Lexicon are, the Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriac, Arabic, Samaritan, Ethiopic and Rabinical. We omit ſeveral other pieces of our author, written on Oriental matters (33); and ſhall conclude with obſerving, that Hottinger though a very great man, is thought by moſt to have writ in too great a hurry.

(33) Idem, ibid.

☞HOWE (JOHN), a learned Non-conformiſt Divine in the ſeventeenth Century, was a Miniſter's ſon, and nephew to Mr. Obadiah Howe, Vicar of Boſton in Lincolnſhire. He was born May the 17th 1630, at Loughborough in Leiceſterſhire, of which town his father was Miniſter (a), being ſettled there by Archbiſhop Laud, though afterwards ejected by that Prelate, on account of his adherence to the Puritans; upon which he went with his ſon, our author, to Ireland, where they continued till the Iriſh Rebellion broke out, when they returned to England, and ſettled in Lancaſhire, where our Author was educated in the firſt rudiments of learning and the knowledge of the tongues (b). He was ſent pretty early to Chriſt College in Cambridge, where he continued till he had taken the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and then removed to Oxford (c), and became Bible-Clerk of Brazen-Noſe College in Michaelmas Term 1648 (d), and took the degree of Bachelor of Arts Jan. the 18th 1649 (e). He was made a Demy of Magdalen College by the Parliament Viſitors, and afterwards Fellow (f); and July the 9th 1652 took the degree of Maſter of Arts (g). Soon after this he became a Preacher, and was ordained by Mr. Charles Herle at his Church of Winwick in Lancaſhire, and not long after became Miniſter of Great Torrington in Devonſhire (b) [A], and on the 1ſt of March

(a) Memoirs of the Life of the late Reverend Mr. John Howe, collected by Edmund Calamy, D. D. pag. 5. edit. London 1724, in 8vo.

(b) Ibid. pag. 6, 7.

(c) Ibid. pag. 7, 8.

(d) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 1014. 2d edit.

(e) Idem, Faſti Oxon. vol. 2. col. 69.

(f) Idem, Ath. Oxon. ubi ſupra.

(g) Idem, Faſti Oxon. vol. 2. col. 99.

(b) Memoirs, pag. 12, 13.

[A] Became Miniſter of great Torrington in Devonſhire.] His labour in the diſcharge of his duty here was very great, eſpecially on the public faſts, which in thoſe times returned pretty frequently, and were generally kept with great ſolemnity. He informed Dr. Calamy (1), that upon theſe occaſions it was his common way to begin about nine in the morning with a prayer for about a quarter of an hour, in which he begged a bleſſing on the work of the day; and afterwards read and expounded a chapter or pſalm, in which he ſpent about three quarters; then prayed for about an hour, preached for another hour, and prayed for about half an hour. After this he retired, and took ſome little refreſhment for about a quarter of an hour or more (the people ſinging all the while), and then came again into the pulpit, and prayed for another

(1) See Memoirs of the Life of the late Reverend Mr. John Howe, collected by Edmund Calamy, D. D. pag. 14.

March 1654 married the daughter of Mr. George Hughes, Miniſter of Plymouth (i). He was afterwards appointed Houſhold Chaplain to Oliver Cromwell the Protector [B], and became Lecturer of St. Margaret's Weſtminſter (k). Upon the death of Oliver Cromwell, his ſon Richard ſucceeding him as Protector, Mr. Howe ſtood in the ſame relation to him of Chaplain, as he had done to the father; and though he meddled not with State-affairs either then or afterwards, yet he was in his judgment very much averſe to Richard's parting with his Parliament, which he foreſaw would prove his ruin (l) [C]. When the army had ſet Richard aſide, Mr. Howe returned to his people at Great Torrington, among whom he continued till the Act of Uniformity took place Auguſt the 24th 1662 (m), after which he preached for ſome time in private houſes in Devonſhire (n). In April 1671 he went to Ireland, where he lived as Chaplain to the Lord Maſſarene in the pariſh of Antrim (o), and had leave from the Biſhop of the Dioceſe and the Metropolitan to preach in the public Church of that town every Sunday in the afternoon, without ſubmitting to any terms of conformity (p). In 1675, upon the death of Dr. Lazarus Seaman, he was choſen Miniſter of his congregation, upon which he returned to England, and ſettled at London (q), where he was highly reſpected not only by his brethren in the Miniſtry among the Diſſenters, but alſo by ſeveral eminent Divines of the Church of England, as Dr. Whitchcot, Dr. Kidder, Dr. Fowler, Dr. Lucas, and others (r). In Auguſt 1685 he travelled beyond ſea with the Lord Wharton (s), and the year following ſettled at Utrecht, and took his turn in preaching at the Engliſh Church in that city (t). In 1687, upon King James's publiſhing his Declaration for liberty of Conſcience, Mr. Howe returned to London (u). He publiſhed a conſiderable number of works [D]. He died at London April the 2d 1705, and was interred in the Pariſh Church

(i) Ibid. pag. 15.
(k) Wood, Ath. Oxon. ubi ſupra.
(l) Memoirs, pag. 25.
(m) Ibid. pag. 27-30.
(n) Ibid. pag. 37.
(o) Ibid. pag. 51, 53.
(p) Ibid. pag. 54.
(q) Ibid. pag. 58, 67.
(r) Ibid. pag. 67.
(s) Ibid. pag. 113.
(t) Ibid. pag. 126.
(u) Ibid. pag. 131, 132.

ther hour, and gave them another ſermon of about an hour's length, and ſo concluded the ſervice of the day, at about four of the clock in the evening, with about half an hour or more in prayer.

[B] He was afterwards appointed Houſhold Chaplain to Oliver Cromwell the Protector.] Dr. Calamy tells us (2), that while he was in this ſtation, he behaved in ſuch a manner, that he was never charged, even by thoſe, who have been moſt forward to inveigh againſt a number of his contemporaries, with improving his intereſt in thoſe, who then had the management of affairs in their hands, either to the enriching himſelf, or the doing ill offices to others, though of known differing ſentiments. He readily embraced every occaſion, that offered, of ſerving the intereſt of religion and learning, and oppoſing the errors and deſigns, which at that time threatened both. The notion of a particular Faith prevailed much at Cromwell's court; and it was a common opinion among them, that ſuch as were in a ſpecial manner favoured of God, when they offered up prayers and ſupplications to him for his mercies, either for themſelves or others, often had ſuch impreſſions made upon their minds and ſpirits by a divine hand, as ſignified to them, not only in the general that their prayers would be heard and anſwered, but that the particular mercies, which were ſought for, would be certainly beſtowed; nay, and ſometimes alſo intimated to them in what way and manner they would be afforded, and pointed out to them future events beforehand, which in reality is the ſame with inſpiration. Mr. Howe told Dr. Calamy, that not a little pains was taken to cultivate and ſupport this notion at Whitehall; and that he once heard a ſermon there from a perſon of note, the avowed deſign of which was to defend it. He ſaid, that he was ſo fully convinced of the ill tendency of ſuch a principle, that after hearing this ſermon, he thought himſelf bound in conſcience, when it came next to his turn to preach before Cromwell, to ſet himſelf induſtriouſly to oppoſe it, and to beat down that ſpiritual pride and confidence, which ſuch fancied impulſes and impreſſions were apt to produce and cheriſh. He obſerved, while he was in the pulpit, that Cromwell heard him with great attention, but would ſometimes knit his brows, and diſcover great uneaſineſs. When the ſermon was over, a perſon of diſtinction came to him, and aſked him, if he knew what he had done? and ſignified it to him as his apprehenſion, that Cromwell would be ſo incenſed at that diſcourſe, that he would find it very difficult ever to make his peace with him, or ſecure his favour for the future. Mr. How replied, that he had but diſcharged his conſcience, and could leave the event with God. He afterwards obſerved, that Cromwell was cooler in his carriage to him than before; and ſometimes he thought he would have ſpoken to him of the matter, but never did (3).

(2) Ibid. pag. 18.
(3) Ibid. pag. 22, 23.

[C] Was in his judgment very much averſe to Richard's parting with his Parliament, which he foreſaw would prove his ruin.] Dr. Calamy tells us (4), that he had been informed by a friend, that diſcourſing once freely with Mr. Howe about the ſetting Richard aſide, he intimated to him, that it was but a parentheſis in a public paper, which was the occaſion of the great ill will of the Officers to him, which roſe at length to that height, that nothing would ſatisfy but the pulling him down. And when the ſame perſon ſignified to Mr. Howe, that he had heard Richard reflected on as a weak man, he with ſome warmth made this return: "How could he be a weak man, when "upon the remonſtrance that was brought from the "army by his brother Fleetwood, he ſtood it out all "night againſt his whole Council, and continued the "debate till four of the clock in the morning, having "none but Thurloe to abet him; maintaining that "the diſſolving that Parliament would be both his ruin "and theirs?" Upon ſome further diſcourſe upon the ſame ſubject, Mr. Howe ſaid, that Fleetwood undertook with great ſolemnity, that if Richard would but comply with the propoſal which was made him, the army ſhould not do him the leaſt damage. And when Fleetwood was afterwards put in mind of this, all the anſwer he returned was, that he thought he had had more intereſt in the army than he found he had. Mr. Howe added, that accidentally meeting with Major-General Berry, who was in thoſe times ſo active and buſy, ſome time after the Reſtoration, when he was but in very mean circumſtances, he very freely told him, with tears running down his cheeks, that if Richard had but at that time hanged up him and nine or ten more, the Nation might have been happy.

(4) Ibid. pag. 25.

[D] He publiſhed a conſiderable number of works.] they are as follow: I. A Sermon from Eccleſ. vii. 29. preached at St. Giles's in the Fields in May 1659, and intitled, Man created in an holy but mutable State, publiſhed in The Morning Exerciſe methodiz'd, printed in 1660, in 4to. II. The Bleſſedneſs of the Righteous laid open and further recommended from the Conſideration of the Vanity of this mortal Life, on Pſal. xvii. 25. London 1668 and 1673, in 8vo. III. The Vanity of this mortal Life, or of Man conſidered only in this preſent mortal State, from Pſal. lxxxix. 47, 48. London, 1671, in 12mo. The Dedication to John Upton, of Lupton in Devonſhire, Eſq; his kinſman, is dated at Antrim April 12, 1671. IV. Treatiſe of delighting in God, in two parts, from Pſal. xxxvii. 4. London, 1674, in 8vo. V. The Living Temple: or a deſigned Improvement of that Notion, that a good Man is the Temple of God. London, 1674, in 8vo. VI. The Reconcileableneſs of God's Preſcience of the Sins of Men with the Wiſdom and Sincerity of his Counſels and Exhortations, and whatſoever other Means he uſes to prevent them. London, 1677, in 8vo. written by way of Letter to Robert Boyle, Eſq;. Mr. Theophilus Gale, his old fellow-

Church of Allhallows Breadſtreet; and his funeral Sermon was preached April the 8th by Mr. John Spademan from 2 Tim. iii. 14. Mr. Wood tells us (w), that he was a perſon of neat and polite parts, and moderate and calm in thoſe ſmaller matters under debate between the Church and his party; and that his books are written in a fine, ſmooth, and natural ſtyle. But this laſt obſervation is undoubtedly a miſtake, ſince Mr. Howe's ſtyle is generally allowed to be very harſh, embarraſſed and obſcure. Dr. Calamy, who has given his character at large, obſerves (x), that he was a man of great prudence, affability, moderation, and charity, pleaſant and facetious in converſation, and of extenſive learning, and ſtrong judgment.

(w) Ath. Oxon. ubi ſupra.

(x) Memoirs, pag. 237, & ſeqq.

fellow collegiate, publiſhing about this time the fourth part of The court of the Gentiles, made ſome animadverſions upon this treatiſe of Mr. Howe (5), upon which our author added to his book a Poſtſcript containing a defence of it, printed the ſame year, and added to thoſe copies of it, which were not then ſold. Mr. Thomas Danſon wrote likewiſe againſt our author's book a tract, intitled, De Cauſa Dei: A Vindication of the common Doctrine of Proteſtant Divines concerning Predeſtination [i. e. the Intereſt of God as the firſt Cauſe in all Actions as ſuch, of all rational Creatures] from the invidious Conſequences, with which it is burdened by Mr. John Howe in a late Letter and Poſtſcript of God's Preſcience. London, 1678, in 8vo. In anſwer to this was publiſhed Remarks upon a late diſingenuous Diſcourſe writ by one T. D. under pretence De Cauſa Dei, and of anſwering Mr. John Howe's Letter and Poſtſcript of God's Preſcience, &c. affirming in the Proteſtant Doctrine, that God doth by efficacious Influences univerſally move and determine Men to all their Actions, even to thoſe that are moſt wicked. London, 1678, in 8vo. This was written by Andrew Marvel, Eſq; VII. A View of Antiquity preſented in a ſhort but ſufficient Account of ſome Fathers, &c. London, 1677, in 8vo (6). Some animadverſions were made on this, and interſperſed in a book intitled, Remarks relating to the State of the Church of the three firſt Centuries, written by Abedn. Seller, and printed in 8vo. VIII. A Letter written out of the Country to a Perſon of Quality in the City, who took offence at the late Sermon of Dr. Stillingfleet, Dean of St. Paul's, before the Lord Mayor. This was occaſioned by the Doctor's Sermon, preached on the firſt day of Eaſter-Term 1680, on Phil. iii. 16. and intitled, The Miſchief of Separation. IX. Of Thoughtfulneſs for To-morrow. London, 1681, in 8vo. To this are added an Appendix concerning the immoderate Deſire of fore-knowing things to come; and A Diſcourſe of Charity, in reference to other Men's Sins, from 1 Cor. xiii. 6. X. A Funeral Sermon on the Deceaſe of Mrs. Margaret Baxter, who died Jan. 28, 1687, on 2 Cor. v. 8. London, 1681, in 4to. XI. The right Uſe of that Argument in Prayer, from the Name of God, on behalf of a People that profeſs it, from Jer. xiv. 21. London, 1682, in 8vo. XII. Self-Dedication, diſcourſed in the Anniverſary Thankſgiving of a Perſon of Honour (7) for a great Deliverance. London, 1682, in 12mo. XIII. A Sermon at the Funeral of that faithful and laborious Servant of Chriſt Mr. Richard Fairclough late of Briſtol, who deceaſed July 4, 1682, aged 61 Years, from Matth. xxv. 21. London, 1683, in 4to. XIV. About the ſame time he drew up thoſe Annotations on the three Epiſtles of St. John, which are publiſhed in the ſecond volume or continuation of Mr. Matthew Poole. XV. A Sermon from Col. ii. 2. upon this queſtion, What may moſt hopefully be attempted to allay Animoſities among Proteſtants, that our Diviſions may not be our ruin? printed in the Continuation of the Morning Exerciſe. London, 1683, in 4to. XVI. The Redeemer's Tears wept over loſt Souls, a Treatiſe on Luke xix. 41, 42. London, 1684, in 8vo. With an Appendix, where ſomewhat is occaſionally diſcourſed concerning the Blaſphemy againſt the Holy Ghoſt, and how God is ſaid to will the Salvation of them that periſh. XVII. The Caſe of the Proteſtant Diſſenters repreſented and argued. Printed at London 1689, in a ſingle ſheet of paper. XVIII. Humble Requeſts both to Conformiſts and Diſſenters touching their Temper and Behaviour toward each other upon the lately paſſed Indulgence. Printed in another ſheet of paper. XIX. A Funeral Sermon for Mrs. Eſther Sampſon, late Wife of Henry Sampſon Doctor of Phyſick, who died November 24, 1689, on Luke xiii. 16. London, 1690, in 4to. XX. The Carnality of Chriſtian Contention, in two Sermons preached at the Merchants Lecture in Broadſtreet 1693. XXI. A calm and ſober Inquiry concerning the Poſſibility of a Trinity in the Godhead, in a Letter to a Perſon of worth. To which are added ſome Letters written formerly to Dr. Wallis on the ſame ſubject. London, 1694. In this Inquiry Mr. Howe aſſerts, that "the "perſons in the Trinity are diſtinct eſſences (8); diſ- (8) Pag. 110, "tinct numerical natures, beings, and ſubſtances (9). 111. "That there is a variety of individual natures in the (9) Pag. 112. "Deity (10). That there are in the Godhead three (10) Pag. 140. "diſtinct intelligent hypoſtaſes, having each his own "diſtinct ſingular intelligent nature (11). That theſe (11) Pag. 126. "three divine perſons maintain a delicious ſociety, "no enjoyment being pleaſant without conſociation "therein; and we muſt needs think this is a more "bleſſed ſtate, or a more perfect idea of bleſſedneſs, "than can be conceived in an eternal ſolitude (12)." (12) Pag. 55. As to the queſtion, If each of theſe perſons and beings is God, how can it be ſaid, that all three are but one God? he anſwers (13), that each of the three perſons (13) Pag. 51. conceived by itſelf is an individual eſſence; but conceived together they are the intire eſſence of God. This Inquiry was animadverted upon in a Treatiſe intitled, Conſiderations on the Explications of the Doctrine of the Trinity, printed in 1694 in 4to, and a Poſtſcript to the Defence of Dr. Sherlock's Notions of a Trinity in Unity. Upon which Mr. Howe publiſhed a Letter to a Friend concerning that Poſtſcript. He publiſhed alſo in 1695 a View of the Conſiderations on the Explications abovementioned, in a Letter to a Friend. XXII. A Diſcourſe relating to the much lamented Death and ſolemn Funeral of Queen Mary, on Heb. xii. 23, latter part. London, 1695, in 4to. XXIII. A Sermon on the much lamented Death of that reverend and worthy Servant of Chriſt Mr. Richard Adams, M. A. ſometime Fellow of Brazen-Noſe College in Oxon, afterwards Miniſter of St. Mildred's Breadſtreet, London; more lately Paſtor of a Congregation in Southwark, who deceaſed February 7, 169⅞. XXIV. A Sermon preached on the Day of Thankſgiving December 2, 1697. XXV. A Sermon preached before the Society for Reformation of Manners, from Rom. xiii. 4. London, 1697. XXVI. A Sermon on the Death of that reverend and moſt laborious Servant of Chriſt in the Work of the Miniſtry, Mr. Matthew Mead, who deceaſed October 16, 1699. XXVII. The Redeemer's Dominion over the viſible World, and the Entrance thereinto by Death: A Diſcourſe preached on the occaſion of the Death of John Hoghton, Eſq; eldeſt Son of Sir Charles Hoghton of Hoghton-Tower, in the County of Lancaſter, Bart. London, 1699. XXVIII. Funeral Sermon for that excellent Miniſter of Chriſt, the truly Reverend William Bates, D. D. London, 1699. XXIX. A Twofold Diſcourſe of Man's Enmity againſt God; and Reconciliation between God and Man, from Col. i. 21. London, 1701. XXX. Some Conſiderations of a Preface to an Inquiry concerning the Occaſional Conformity of Diſſenters. XXXI. The Second Part of The Living Temple, containing Animadverſions on Spinoſa, and a French writer pretending to refute him; with a recapitulation of the former part, and an account of the diſtinction and reſtitution of God's temple amongſt men. London, 1702. XXXII. A Sermon preached at the Funeral of Mr. Peter Vink, B. D. London, 1702. XXXIII. A Sermon on Coloſſ. i. 13. preached Nov. 5, 1703. XXXIV. A Diſcourſe of Patience, relating to the Expectation of future Bleſſedneſs. London, 1705, His Works have been reprinted together in one volume in folio, at London. H.

(5) See the 4th part of The Court of the Gentiles, pag. 522. edit. London 1677.

(6) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 1015.

(7) The Earl of Kildare.

(a) Wood, Hiſt. & Antiq. Univ. Ox. l. 2. p. 321.

☞ HOWELL (JAMES), a voluminous writer of the ſeventeenth Century, was born at Abernant in Caermarthenſhire (a), of which place his father was Miniſter (b). He was

(b) Id. Ath. Ox. vol. 2. col. 382. ed. 2. Lon. 1721.

was born about the year 1594 [A], and educated in grammar learning in the free-ſchool of Hereford, from whence he was ſent to Jeſus College in the Univerſity of Oxford in the beginning of the year 1610 (c) where he took the degree of Bachelor of Arts December the 17th 1613 (d). He afterwards left the Univerſity, and in 1619 went to France, Spain, and Italy, as Agent for Sir Robert Manſell, the Earl of Pembroke, and others, to procure workmen and materials for making of glaſs [B]. In 1622 he was ſent into Spain, in order to recover a rich Engliſh ſhip, ſeized on by the Viceroy of Sardinia for his maſter's uſe, on pretence of its having prohibited goods on board [C]. In 1623, during his abſence abroad, he was choſen Fellow of Jeſus College (e); and two years after his return to England, he was made Secretary to Emanuel Lord Scrope, Earl of Sunderland, and Lord Preſident of the North [D]; in which poſt reſiding at York, he was by the Mayor and Aldermen of Richmond choſen a Burgeſs for their Corporation in the Parliament which began at Weſtminſter in 1627 [E]. In 1632 he went Secretary to Robert Earl of Leiceſter, Embaſſador Extraordinary from King Charles I to the Court of Denmark, where he made divers ſpeeches in Latin (f), ſhewing the cauſe of their Embaſſy, which was to condole the death of Sophia Queen Dowager of Denmark, grandmother to King Charles I. Afterwards paſſing through ſeveral beneficial employments, particularly the aſſiſting of the Clerks of the Council, he was at length in the beginning of the civil wars, appointed one of thoſe Clerks; but in 1642 he was ſeized by order of a certain Committee, and committed to the Fleet [F], where he ſupported himſelf for many years by writing and tranſlating of books [G]. Though he had been a zealous Loyaliſt, he afterwards flattered Cromwell, and joined with

(c) Idem, ibid. and Athen. Oxon. ubi ſupra.

(d) Idem, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 194.

(e) Idem, Athen. Oxon. col. 382. See Howell's Familiar Letters, vol. 1. Sect. 2. Letter 6. edit. 5. London 1678 in 8vo.

(f) Familiar Letters, vol. 1. Sect. 6. Letter 2.

[A] He was born about the year 1594.] Mr. Wood tells us in his Hiſtoria & Antiquitates Univerſitatis Oxonienſis (1), that he was entered in Jeſus College in Oxford in 1610, in the 16th year of his age; ad Collegium iſtud literas ſublimiores hauriendi avidus acceſſit Ann. Dom. CIↃDCX, ætatis XVI; and in his Athenæ Oxonienſis (2) he obſerves the ſame, aſſuring us, that he was ſent to that College in the beginning of 1610, aged 16 years. And yet the ſame Hiſtorian juſt before remarks, that in what year Mr. Howell was born, he cannot preciſely tell. Mr. Howell obſerves himſelf (3), that "at his nativity his aſcendant was that hot conſtellation of Cancer about the midſt of the dog-days."

(1) Lib. 2. pag. 321.

(2) Vol. 2. col. 381.

(3) Familiar Letters, domeſtic and foreign. Divided into four Books, vol. 1. Sect. 6. Letter 60. 5th edition London 1678 in 8vo.

[B] In 1619 went to France, Spain, and Italy, as Agent for Sir Robert Manſell, the Earl of Pembroke, and others, to procure workmen and materials for making of glaſs.] In a letter to his father dated in Broadſtreet in London, March 1, 1618 (4), he obſerves, that he had been Steward of the Glaſs Houſe in Broadſtreet; and that he was then upon the point of going beyond ſea. "The main of my employment, ſays he, is "from that gallant Knight Sir Robert Manſell, who, "with my Lord of Pembroke, and divers other prime "Lords of the Court, have got the ſole patent of "making all ſorts of glaſs with pit-cole, only to ſave "thoſe huge proportions of wood, which were con-"ſumed formerly in the glaſs furnaces. And this "buſineſs being of that nature that the workmen are "to be had from Italy, and the chief materials from "Spain, France, and other foreign countries, there "is need of an Agent abroad for this uſe; and better "than I have offered their ſervice in this kind, ſo that "I believe I ſhall have employment in all theſe coun-"tries before I return." His firſt letter from Amſterdam is dated April 1, 1619 (5). We have another letter of his dated at Barcelona Novem. 10, 1620 (6); another dated from on board the ſhip before Venice May 5, 1621 (7); another dated at Naples October 1, 1621 (8); another at Lyons December 5, 1621 (9). It appears from a letter of his dated at London February 2, 162½ (10), that he was then juſt returned to England.

(4) Ibid. vol. 1. Sect. 1. Letter 2.

(5) Ibid. Letter 5.

(6) Ibid. Letter 22.

(7) Ibid. Letter 27.

(8) Ibid. Letter 39.

(9) Ibid. Letter 44.

(10) Sect. 2. Letter 1.

[C] In 1622 he was ſent into Spain, in order to recover a rich Engliſh ſhip ſeized on by the Vice-Roy of Sardinia for his maſter's uſe, on pretence of its having prohibited goods on board.] In a letter of his to his father, dated at London September 8, 1622 (11), he gives us an account of his being engaged in this affair. His firſt letter from Madrid is dated December 28, 1622. Another letter of his to his father dated at London December 10, 1624 (12), ſhews, that he was newly returned from Spain.

(11) Sect. 2. Letter 6.

(12) Sect. 3. Letter 1.

[D] Made Secretary to Emanuel Lord Scrope, Earl of Sunderland, and Lord Preſident of the North.] In a letter of his to his brother, dated at London March 15. 1626 (13), he takes notice of that place being lately conferred on him.

(13) Sect. 4. Letter 26.

[E] Choſen a Burgeſs for the Corporation of Richmond in the Parliament, which began at Weſtminſter in 1627.] In a letter of his dated March 2, 1627 (14), he obſerves that he had been juſt choſen; and on the 24th of that month he wrote a letter (15) to that Corporation to thank them for his election.

(14) Sect. 5. Letter 3.

(15) Ibid. Letter 4.

[F] In 1642 he was ſeized by order of a certain Committee, and committed to the Fleet.] Mr. Wood (16) tells us, that being prodigally inclined, and therefore running much into debt, he was ſeized on by order of a certain Committee, after the King was forced from his Parliament, and committed priſoner to the fleet. But let us hear Mr. Howell's own account of the affair in a Letter to the Earl of B——, dated November 20, 1642 (17). "I was come lately to London upon ſome "occaſions of my own, and I had been divers times "in Weſtminſter-Hall, where I conferred with many "Parliament-men of my acquaintance; but one morn-"ing betimes there ruſhed into my chamber five arm-"ed men with ſwords, piſtols, and bills, and told me "that they had a warrant from the Parliament for "me. I deſired to ſee their warrant; they denied "it. I deſired to ſee the date of it; they denied it. "I deſired to ſee my name in the warrant; they de-"nied it. At laſt one of them pulled out a greaſy "paper out of his pocket, and ſhewed me only three "or four names ſubſcribed, and no more. So they "ruſhed preſently into my cloſet, and ſeized on all my "papers and letters, and any thing that was manu-"ſcript; and many printed books they took alſo, "and hurled all into a great hair-trunk, which they "carried away with them. I had taken a little phy-"ſic that morning, and with very much ado they "ſuffered me to ſtay in my chamber with two guards "upon me till evening; at which time they brought "me before the Committee for examination, where I "confeſs I found good reſpect, and being brought "up to the cloſe Committee, I was ordered to be "forth-coming till ſome papers of mine were peruſed, "and Mr. Corbet was appointed to do it. Some days "after I came to Mr. Corbet, and he told me he had "peruſed them, and could find nothing, that might "give offence. Hereupon I deſired him to make a "report to the houſe; according to which, as I was "told, he did very fairly; yet ſuch was my hard "hap, that I was committed to the Fleet, where I "am now under cloſe reſtraint. As far as I ſee, I "muſt lie at dead Anchor in this Fleet a long time, "unleſs ſome gentle gale blow thence to make me "launch out." It appears from ſome of his letters, that he was in the Fleet in 1648.

(16) Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 381.

(17) Familiar Letters, vol. 1. Sect. 6. Letter 47. The date in this Letter is 1643; but it appears to be a miſtake for 1642.

[G] Supported himſelf for many years by writing and tranſlating of books.] We ſhall give a catalogue of his writings. I. Dodona's Grove: or the Vocal Foreſt. London, with the prevailing party; ſo that upon the Reſtoration he was not reſtored to his place of Clerk of the Council, but only made Hiſtoriographer to the King, being the firſt in England who enjoyed that title. He died in the beginning of November 1666 (g), and was don, 1640 and 1644, in 4to. The third edition, more exact and perfect than the former, was printed at Cambridge 1645, in 12mo. To this edition are ſubjoined two other tracts; viz. 1. England's Tears for the preſent wars, which for the Nature of the Quarrel, the Quality of the Strength, the diverſity of Battles, Skirmiſhes, Encounters, and Sieges, happened in ſo ſhort a Compaſs of Time, cannot be parallel'd in any preceding Age. This piece had been publiſhed at London, 1644, in two ſheets and an half in 4to. and was reprinted at London 1650 in 12mo. It was tranſlated into Latin under the title of Angliæ Suſpiria & Lacrymæ, &c. and printed at London 1646 in 4to. 2. The Pre-eminence and Pedigree of Parliament. Whereunto is added a Vindication of ſome Paſſages reflecting upon the Author in a Book called The Popiſh Royal Favorite, penned and publiſhed by Mr. Prynne, wherein he ſtiles him, No Friend to Parliaments, and a Malignant, pag. 42. With a clearing of ſome Occurrences in Spain at his Majeſtie's being there, cited by the ſaid Maſter Prynne out of the Vocal Foreſt. By J. H. Eſq; one of the Clerks of his Majeſtie's moſt honourable Privy-Council. Publiſhed by ſpecial Order. London, 1645. The Dedication to his worthy honored Friend Sir W. S. Knt. is written from the Fleet-priſon. In this piece he aſſerts (18), that "the principal fountain, whence the "King derives his happineſs and ſafety, is his Parlia-"ment." With regard to the imputation, thrown upon him by Mr. Prynne, that he was no Friend to the preſent Parliament; "therein, ſays he (19), I am "traduced, and I am confident it will be never proved "againſt me from any action, words, or letters, tho' "divers of mine have been intercepted, or any other "miſdemeanour, though ſome things are fathered up-"on me, which never dropped from my quill. Alas, "how unworthy and uncapable am I to cenſure the "proceedings of that great Senate, that high Syne-"drion, wherein the wiſdom of the whole Senate is "epitomized!" II. The Vote; or a Poem-Royal, preſented to his Majeſty for a New-Year's-Gift, by way of Diſcourſe 'twixt the Poet and his Muſe. Calendis Januarii, 1641. London, 1641, in two ſheets in 4to, and reprinted before his Familiar Letters. III. Inſtructions for forraine Travell; ſhewing by what Cours, and in what Compaſſe of Time, one may take an exact Survey of the Kingdomes and States of Chriſtendome, and arrive to the practicall Knowledge of the Languages to good purpoſe. London, 1642, in 12mo. Dedicated to Prince Charles. It was reprinted in 1650 in 12mo, with additions. IV. Caſual Diſcourſes and Interlocutions between Patricius and Peregrin, touching the Diſtractions of the Times. It was written by the Author in the Fleet-priſon, ſoon after the battle of Edge-Hill, and was the firſt book, which came out in vindication of the King (20). V. Mercurius Hibernicus: Or a Diſcourſe of that horrid Inſurrection and Maſſacre, which happened lately in Ireland. Written in the Fleet 1643. It was printed at Briſtol, 1644, in two ſheets and an half in 4to. VI. Parables reflecting upon the times. London, 1644, two ſheets in 4to. at the latter end of the ſecond edition of Dodona's Grove. VII. Epiſtolæ Hoe-Elianæ. Familiar Letters Domeſtic and Foreign, divided into ſundry Sections, partly Hiſtorical, partly Political, partly Philoſophical. London, 1645, 1647, in 4to. 1650, 1655, 1678, in 8vo. Mr. Wood tells us (21), that "many of the ſaid letters were never "written before the Author of them was in the Fleet, "as he pretends they were; only feigned, no time "being kept with their dates, and purpoſely publiſhed "to gain money to relieve his neceſſities; yet give a "tolerable Hiſtory of theſe times." VIII. A Nocturnal Progreſs: or a Perambulation of moſt Countries in Chriſtendom, performed in one Night by Strength of Imagination. Written in the Fleet in 1645. IX. Luſtra Ludovici: Or the Life of Lewis XIII, King of France, of his Cardinal de Richelieu. London, 1646, in Fol. It is divided into ſeven Luſtres, and dedicated to Prince Charles, at his Court in the Iſle of Jerſey. X. An Account of the deplorable and deſperate Condition, that England ſtands in, Anno 1647, in a Letter to Francis Cardinal Barberini. Written from the Fleet 1647. XI. A Letter to the Earl of Pembroke concerning the Times, and the ſad condition both of Prince and People. Printed 1647 in two ſheets in 4to. XII. Bella Scot-Anglica. A Brief of all the Battles and Martial Encounters, which have happened 'twixt England and Scotland from all Times to this preſent. Printed in 1648. XIII. Corollary declaring the Cauſes whereby the Scot is come of late Years to be ſo heightned in his Spirits. Theſe two laſt are in three ſheets in 4to. XIV. The Inſtruments of a King; or, a ſhort Diſcourſe of the Sword, Septre, and Crown, &c. London, 1648, in two ſheets in 4to. XV. Winter-Dream, 1649, in three ſheets in 4to. XVI. A Trance, or News from Hell, brought firſt to Town by Mercurius Acheronticus. London, 1649, in two ſheets and an half in 4to. XVII. Inquiſition after blood, to the Parliament in ſtatu quo nunc, and the Army Regnant, &c. Printed in 1649, in two ſheets in 4to. XVIII. Viſion or Dialogue between the Soul and the Body. London, 1651, in 8vo, &c. IX. Survey of the Signory of Venice, of her admired Polity, and Method of Government. London, 1651, in a thin Folio. To this is added, A Diſcourſe of the Intereſts of the Republic of Venice, with the reſt of the States of Italy. Printed with the Survey. XX. Some ſober Inſpections made into the Carriage and Conſults of the late Long-Parliament, whereby occaſion is taken to ſpeak of Parliaments in former Times, and of Magna Charta; with ſome Reflections upon Government in general. London, 1653, in 12mo. Dedicated to his Highneſs the Lord Protector. In the Dedication he writes as follows: "Among the multi-"tude of mighty atchievements, which your Highneſs "hath performed ſo much to the aſtoniſhment of man-"kind, the diſſolving of the late Long-Parliament may "well deſerve to be ranked in the number. For "thereby your Highneſs, Hercules-like, may be ſaid "to have quelled a monſter with many heads; ſuch "a monſter, that was like to gormandize and devour "the whole nation, as will appear in the whole diſ-"courſe, which though ſmall in bulk, yet the ſubject-"matter is of the greateſt concernment (otherwiſe I "had not ventured on ſo high a Dedication) for it "was of the power and practice of Engliſh Parlia-"ments in former times, with the firſt riſe of the "Houſe of Commons, and of the Magna Charta, "&c. which will be found to have had but hard "births." He obſerves, that the quotations here produced, (whereof there are many) are all true, and extracted out of antient records. "But what conſequen-"ces ſoever, ſays he, are drawn from them, the judg-"ment is ſtill reſerved for your Highneſs, en dernier "reſſort. There is a memorable ſaying of Charles "Martell in that mighty revolution in France, when "he introduced the ſecond race of Kings, that in the "purſuit of all his actions, he uſed to ſay, that he fol-"lowed not the ambition of his heart as much as the in-"ſpiration of his ſoul, and the deſigns of providence. "This may be applied to your Highneſs in the con-"duct of your great affairs and admirable ſucceſſes." This Tract is written by way of dialogue between Philanglus and Polyander; the firſt, as our author obſerves in his Preface, a good Patriot, and a great lover of the Engliſh; the other a perſon, who had ſeen much of the world abroad, and ſtudied men. In the cloſe of it (22) Polyander is introduced recommending "the "modeſty and practice of Parliaments in former "times, who declined high affairs of State, eſpecially "foreign, much more to arrogate to themſelves the "ſupreme power; for ſovereignty may be ſaid to be "an indiviſible ray, derived and darted from the "Divine Majeſty itſelf. It cannot be divided among "a multitude. We never read, that the people were "called God's, or the Lord's anointed, or Nurſing Fa-"thers; nor do we read of any Ariſtocracies or Demo-"cracies at all in the holy Scriptures. Therefore I "ſubſcribe to his judgment, who holds, that the firmeſt "and moſt compendious way of government is when "the ſupremacy reſides in one perſon, whom the peo-"ple ought to truſt by an indiſpenſible neceſſity for "their own advantage in ſteering the great veſſel of "the Commonwealth, with the advice of a ſelect Council.

(g) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 381-385.

(18) Pag. 13.

(19) Pag. 16.

(20) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 382.

(21) Ibid. col. 382.

(22) Pag. 181.

was interred in the North-ſide of the Temple-Church in London, where a monument was erected to his memory [H]. Mr. Wood tells us (b), that "he had a ſingular command "of his pen whether in proſe or verſe, and was well read in modern hiſtories, eſpeci- "ally in thoſe of the countries wherein he had travelled; and had a parabolical and "alluſive fancy, according to his motto, Seneſco non ſegneſco;" but that "his writings "having been only to gain a livelihood, and by their dedications to flatter great and "noble perſons, are very trite and empty, ſtollen from other authors without acknow- "ledgment, and fitted only to pleaſe the humours of novices."

(b) Col. 381, 382.

HUARTE

"Council. And herein a State may be compared to "a gally, wherein ſome are to obſerve the compaſs, "others to furl the ſails, others to handle the ropes, "others to tug at the bar, others to be ready in "arms; but there is but one Pilot to ſit at the Helm. "It is requiſite alſo, that this ſingle perſon ſhould be "attended with a viſible ſtanding veteran army, to "be paid well, and puniſh'd well, if there be cauſe, "to awe as well as to ſecure the people; it being the "greateſt ſoleciſm that can be in Government, to de- "pend merely upon the affections of the people; for "there is not ſuch a wavering windy thing, not ſuch "an humourſome and croſs-grain'd animal in the "world, as the Common People; and what authors ſo- "ever, either Greek or Latin, have pretended to po- "licy, affirm ſo much." The fourth edition of this book was publiſhed in 1660, with ſeveral additions, containing Reflections upon Government in general. XXI. Hiſtory of the Wars of Jeruſalem epitomiz'd. Printed in 8vo. XXII. Ah, Ha; Tumulus, Thalamus: Two Counter-Poems; the firſt an Elegy upon Edward late Earl of Dorſet; the ſecond an Epithalamium to the Lord Marqueſs of Dorcheſter; with an Hymenæum or Bridal Sonnet of four Stanzas, according to a choice Air ſet thereunto by Mr. Will. Webb. London, 1653, in two ſheets in 4to. XXIII. The German Diet: or the Ballance of Europe, wherein the Power and Weakneſs, Glory and Reproach, Virtues and Vices, &c. of all the Kingdoms and States of Chriſtendom are impartially poiſed. London, 1653, Folio. The Author's Picture at whole length, is ſet before the title. XXIV. Parthenopœia: or the Hiſtory of the moſt renouned Kingdom of Naples, with a Liſt of their Kings, &c. London 1654 in fol. The firſt part of it was written by Scipio Mazzella, and tranſlated into Engliſh from the Italian by Sampſon Lennard, Herald of Arms. The ſecond part was compiled by Mr. Howell. XXV. Londinopolis: An Hiſtorical Diſcourſe or Perluſtration of the City of London and Weſtminſter, with the Courts of Juſtice, Antiquities, and new Buildings. London 1657 in folio. XXVI. Diſcourſe of the Empire and of the Election of the King of the Romans, &c. London 1658 in 8vo. XXVII. Lexicon Tetraglotton: An Engliſh-French-Italian-Spaniſh Dictionary. London 1660 in fol. To this is added A particular Vocabulary or Nomenclature in Engliſh, Italian, French, and Spaniſh, of the proper Terms belonging to ſeveral Arts and Sciences, to common Profeſſions and Callings, both liberal and mechanic, &c. and alſo Proverbs; or, old ſayed Sawes and Adages in Engliſh (or the Saxon Tongue) Italian, French and Spaniſh: whereunto the Britiſh, for their great Antiquity and Weight, are added. XXVIII. A Cordial for the Cavaliers: London 1661. This was anſwered immediately after its publication by Mr. Roger L'Eſtrange in a book intitled, A Caveat for the Cavaliers; which having given offence to divers perſons, he publiſhed a ſecond edition of it with his name, and a preface to it. Soon after Mr. Howell publiſhed a vindication of his Cordial under this title, XXIX, Some ſober Inſpections made into thoſe Irregularities, that went to the Compoſition of a late Cordial for the Cavaliers. London 1661. Upon which Mr. L'Eſtrange animadverts briefly in the cloſe of a piece of his intitled, A modeſt Plea both for the Caveat and Author of it. XXX. A French Grammar, and a Dialogue conſiſting of all Galliciſms, with additions of the moſt uſeful and ſignificant Proverbs &c. Printed at London twice, the laſt time in 1673 in folio. XXXI. The Parley of Beaſts: or Morphandra Queen of the inchanted Iſland, &c. Tom. I. London 1660 in folio. XXXII. The Second Part of caſual Diſcourſes and Interlocutions between Patricius and Peregrin, &c. London 1661. Printed in a book intitled, Divers Hiſtorical Diſcourſes of the late popular Inſurrections in Great Britain and Ireland. To this is added An Apology for Fables mythologized. XXXIII. Twelve Treatiſes of the late Revolutions. London 1661 in 8vo. XXXIV. New Engliſh Grammar for Foreigners to learn Engliſh; with a Grammar for the Spaniſh or Caſtilian Tongue; with ſpecial Remarks on the Portugueſe Dialect, for the ſervice of her Majeſty. London 1662 in 8vo. XXXV. Diſcourſe concerning the Precedency of Kings. London 1663 in folio. Tranſlated into Latin by B. Harris, and printed at London 1664 in 8vo. XXXVI. Poems on ſeveral choice and various ſubjects, occaſionally compoſed by an eminent Author. Collected and publiſhed by Serjeant-Major P. F. [Payne Fiſher]. London 1663 in 8vo. Dedicated by the editor to Dr. Henry King Biſhop of Chicheſter. In the preface the editor tells us, that our author "may be called the prodigy of the age for "the variety of his volumes; for from his Δενδρολογίαι "or Parly of Trees to his Θηρολογίαι or Parly of Beaſts "(not inferior to the other) there hath paſſed the preſs "above forty of his works on various ſubjects, uſeful "not only to the preſent times, but to all poſterity. "And it is to be obſerved, that in all his writings "there is ſomething ſtill new, either in the matter, "method, or fancy, and in an untrodden tract." XXXVII. Treatiſe concerning Ambaſſadors. Tranſlated into Latin by John Harman of Magdalen College Oxford. London 1664 in 8vo. XXXVIII. Concerning the ſurrender of Dunkirk, that it was done upon good Grounds. London 1664 in 8vo. He likewiſe tranſlated from Italian into Engliſh, 1. St. Paul's late Progreſs upon Earth about a Divorce 'twixt Chriſt and the Church of Rome by reaſon of her diſſoluteneſs and exceſſes, &c. London 1644 in 8vo. The author of this book publiſhed it about the year 1642, and being obliged to fly from Rome on that account in the company and under the conduct of one, who pretended friendſhip to him, was betrayed at Avignon, and there hanged, and then burnt. 2. A Venetian Looking-glaſs: Or, a Letter written very lately from London to Cardinal Barberini at Rome by a Venetian Clariſſimo, touching the preſent diſtempers in England. Printed in 1648 in three ſheets in 4to. 3. An exact Hiſtory of the late Revolutions in Naples, and of their monſtrous Succeſſes not to be paralleled by any antient or modern Hiſtory. London 1650 in 8vo. This book was written in Italian by Alexander Giraffi. 4. A Letter of Advice ſent from the prime Stateſmen of Florence how England may come to herſelf again. Dated at Florence the 12th of March 1659. Printed at the end of The ſecond Part of caſual Diſcourſes &c. abovementioned. He tranſlated from French into Engliſh, The Nuptials of Peleus and Thetis; conſiſting of a Maſk and Comedy, or the great Royal Ball acted lately in Paris ſix times, &c. London 1654 in 4to; and from Spaniſh into Engliſh, The Proceſs and Pleadings in the Court of Spain upon the death of Anthony Aſcham, Reſident for the Parliament of England, and of John Baptiſta Riva, his Interpreter, &c. London 1651 in folio. He publiſhed A French-Engliſh Dictionary compiled by Mr. Randal Cotgrave: with another in Engliſh and French. Whereunto are newly added the Animadverſions and Supplements &c. of James Howell Eſq; London 1650 in folio. He publiſhed alſo Cottoni Poſthuma: divers choice pieces of that renowned Antiquary Sir Robert Cotton, Knight and Baronet. Preſerved from the injury of Time, and expoſed to the public light for the benefit of Poſterity, By J. H. Eſq; London 1651 in 8vo. He publiſhed alſo The late King's Declaration in Latin, French, and Engliſh, ann. 1649.

181.

[H] Where a monument was erected to his memory.] The following inſcription is upon it: JACOBUS HOWELL, Cambro-Britannus, Regius Hiſtoriographus, (in Angliâ primus) qui poſt varias peregrinationes tandem naturæ curſum peregit, ſatur annorum & famæ, domi foriſque huc uſque erraticus, hic fixus 1666. This monument was taken down in 1683, when the Temple-Church was repaired. T.

HUARTE (JOHN) lived in the ſixteenth Century, and gained great fame by a work he publiſhed in the Spaniſh tongue; which has been tranſlated into ſeveral languages, and borne ſeveral impreſſions [A]. He therein treats of the examination of ſuch genius's as are fit for the ſtudy of the Sciences, and lays down many things which may make one believe, that he did not follow the common road of Phyſicians; but was able to make a great many new diſcoveries, by his profound meditations, and a very cloſe application to the ſtudy of the Antients. However, it would not be prudent for any perſon to truſt, either his maxims or all the authorities he alledges; for he is not to be truſted on either of theſe heads (a); and his hypotheſes are frequently chimerical, eſpecially when he pretends to teach the formalities which muſt be obſerved by thoſe who would get children of a virtuous turn of mind. There are, in this part of the book, a great many particulars repugnant to modeſty, and which Gabriel Chappuis has tranſlated in too groſs a manner. He deſerves cenſure for publiſhing, as a genuine and authentic piece, a pretended letter of Lentulus the Proconſul, from Jeruſalem to the Roman Senate; wherein a portrait is given of CHRIST JESUS, a deſcription of his ſhape and ſtature, the colour of his hair, the qualities of his beard &c. A criticiſm has been made of Huarte's work [B]. He was thought to be a Spaniard, which

(a) See Apologie de Coſtar, pag. 213, 214.

[A] He gained great fame by a work he publiſhed in the Spaniſh tongue; which has been tranſlated into ſeveral languages, and borne ſeveral impreſſions.] It was tranſlated into Italian by Camillo Camilli, and this verſion was dedicated by Nicolo Manaſſi, to Frederic Penaſius, Profeſſor of Philoſophy in Bologna (1). The Dedication is dated from Venice, the firſt of March 1582. The edition I make uſe of is of Venice, preſſo Aldo 1590 in 8vo. The book in queſtion was tranſlated into French by Gabriel Chappuis anno 1580. The title of this verſion is as follows, Anacraſe ou parfait Jugement &c. i. e. Anacriſis or perfect Judgment and Examination of ſuch Genius's as are fit for acquiring the ſciences, and were born ſuch: wherein by marvellous and uſeful ſecrets, drawn from true Philoſophy both natural and divine, is ſhewn the difference between the gifts and abilities found in men, and for what kind of ſtudy the genius of every man is adapted; in ſuch a manner that whoever ſhall read this book attentively, will diſcover the properties of his own genius, and be able to make choice of that ſcience, in which he will make the greateſt improvement (2). There is a better French verſion than this, I mean that printed at Amſterdam, for John Ravelein, in 1672, and the tranſlator's name is Francis Savinien d'Alquie. He has taken in the additions which John Huarte had inſerted in the laſt edition of his book. Theſe are conſiderable both as to quality and quantity: but the tranſlators in queſtion could not inſert them in their reſpective places, and ſo were forced to throw part of them at the beginning, and the reſt at the end of the work. I know only by the Bodleian catalogue the Latin verſion of this book, by Æſch. Major, printed anno 1622 in 8vo. [I have the following edition of this work, the title of which runs thus, EXAMEN DE INGENIOS PARA LAS SCIENCIAS. Donde ſe mueſtra la differencia de habilidades que ay en los hombres, y el genere de letras que a cada uno reſponde en particular. Es obra donde el que leyere con attencion hallara la manera de ſu ingenio, y ſabra eſcoyer la ſciencia en que mas ha de aprouechar: y ſi por ventura la vuiere ya profeſſado, entendera ſi atinó a la que pedia ſu habilidad natural. Compueſta por el Doctor Juan Huarte, natural de ſant Juan del pie del Puerto. EN LEYDA Con Licencia, por Juan Pats. MDXCI. It is in 12mo, a handſome letter, and dedicated A la muy magnifica y illuſtre ſennora Donna Penelope Riche. The writer of it ſubſcribes D. C. I likewiſe have Gabriel Chappuis's French verſion of the Examen de ingenios, but printed at Paris, in 1619. There are two prefaces to my Spaniſh edition of the Examen &c. abovementioned; but only the ſecond is tranſlated by Gabriel Chappuis, and prefixed to his French verſion. We alſo have an Engliſh tranſlation of it.] Addit. by the Tranſl.

(1) He had been Profeſſor at Padua.

(2) See Du Verdier, Biblioth. Françoiſe, pag. 432. The title is a little altered in the edition I make uſe of, which is that of Roan, printed in 1588, 12mo.

[B] A criticiſm has been made of Huarte's work.] It is intitled the L'Examen de l'Examen des Eſprits. i. e. The Examination of Genius's examined. The author of this criticiſm was Jourdain Guibelet. Here follows a paſſage from Sorel (3). "The Spaniſh author "of the Trial or Examination of Genius's (4) has been "followed by ſome authors (4), and condemned by "others. I ſhall paſs over thoſe things which he was "accuſed of, viz. of aſcribing ſo much power or "efficacy to corporeal qualities, that the ſoul ſeems to "be dependent on them; and that this would prevent "one from believing it to be immaterial and immortal, "as it really is. But he has defended himſelf ſufficiently on this head, by ſhewing, that the ſoul acts "only on man according to the diſpoſition of the organs; nevertheleſs it is thought, that he has ſtill "ſubjected too much this ſpiritual ſubſtance to groſs "and corporeal parts; and that the compariſons which "he has drawn from brutes, and even the moſt imperfect of them, ſuch as inſects, reflect a diſhonour on "ſo excellent an animal as man; that it is alſo ridiculous to aſcribe aridity or dryneſs to ants and ſuch "inſects, becauſe they are prudent or wiſe, and to "draw a conſequence from thence, viz. that prudence or wiſdom muſt neceſſarily be found in dry "conſtitutions; for by what art has he been able to "diſcover, that there is leſs moiſtneſs than dryneſs in "the brain of flies which ſeem to be very moiſt? Farther, how has he obſerved the difference between "the brain of the bees, from that of common flies, "the former of which are looked upon as wiſe, and "the latter as fooliſh? No great difference, in caſe of "a diſſection, will be found in their brain; and when "he affirms that the brain of the one is moiſt and thoſe "of the other dry, it is becauſe he ſaw that the one were "prudent and the other imprudent, and did not judge "of their prudence or imprudence from their dryneſs "or humidity... Some object likewiſe to the author "of the Examination of Genius's, that he has not "juſtly ſettled the conſtitutions or temperatures for each "faculty of the ſoul; and that he ſhould not have "aſcribed to dryneſs or aridity the judgment or underſtanding only, but likewiſe memory; and that "theſe two faculties are not incompatible. Thus ſeveral of his propoſitions are found fault with, which "prompted a French Phyſician to draw up a criticiſm "of his Examination, wherein he ſtrongly refutes the "greateſt part of his doctrine, which he treats as he "pleaſes, in a book of the ſame ſize with the other (5)." Sorel afterwards makes ſome remarks againſt the doctrine of the author of the Examination of Genius's, among which is the following. "Some writers have ſought "out methods in order for putting the natural faculties in a good ſtate or condition. To form the better judgment of them, they are not contented with "obſerving men in themſelves, by their external "marks; but have even carried their enquiries ſo far "as the cauſes, viz. to the time and place of their "birth, and above all to the parents who begat them, "who are the true ſources of conſtitution, and have "a very great influence with regard to the forming of "their humour. This being allowed, in order to make "their doctrine the more acceptable, they have pretended at the ſame time to preſcribe remedies for "the bad qualities which they diſcovered, or to adminiſter help towards the attaining of good. And in "order to enquire out the perfection of man in his "moſt diſtant origin, they have endeavoured to make "their birth as propitious as poſſible; and direct their "parents to employ all the precautions imaginable, in "order that they may come into the world with ſuch "qualities as may be deſired. Some naturaliſts have

(3) Sorel, de la Perfection de l'Homme, pag. 327.

(4) Anthony Zara, who wrote a work of the Anatomy of Genius's and Sciences, Peter Charron, and others, revive the doctrine of this Spaniard, almoſt without the leaſt reſtriction, Ibid. pag. 335.

(5) Sorel, de la Perfection de l'Homme, pag. 327, 328.

which was a miſtake, he being a native of the French Navarré (b).

(b) At St. John de Pied de Port. See du Verdier, Biblioth. Françoiſe, pag. 432.

" enquired what conſtitution and age a man and wo" man ought to be of, in order for marriage; and in " what manner they ought to conduct themſelves, as " what aliments it will be proper for them to take, in " order for their procreating ſound and healthy chil" dren. The author of the Examination of Genius's
" has added to this, the manner of begetting them
" of ſuch a conſtitution, as ſhall give them a diſpo-
" ſition for acquiring arts and ſciences. Both the one
" and the other declare, that in marrying perſons,
" great care ought to be taken, viz. to joyn a man
" of a hot complexion to a woman who is cooler, and " who has the moiſtneſs he wants, in order for the " forming a perfect conſtitution. But it would be " difficult to make ſuch enquiries, becauſe a great " many other things are required in order for the " making an agreeable match, which are principally " regarded. It is generally thought, that with regard " to corporeal qualities it is enough that thoſe who " marry are free from any bodily infirmity or defor-
" mity. With regard to the manner in which mar" ried perſons ought to live, and of the times fit for " procreation, and other obſervations preſcribed in " order for the getting of boys or girls; and even for " cauſing them to be brought into the world with a
" complexion or diſpoſition fit for certain profeſſions,
" though theſe do not always ſucceed ſo exactly as
" one could deſire, they yet cannot but be attended
" with happy conſequences. Some men, though leſs
" circumſpect than others, do yet enjoy all theſe ad" vantages without all this care; but that was owing to
(6) Ibid. pag. 335, 336. " the great vigour of their conſtitutions (6)."

It cannot be doubted but that John Huarte has laid down ſome general maxims which are very juſt and true, as for inſtance, that it is of advantage to devote every individual to the employments for which nature has formed him; that ſome perſons would have made a figure in the Law had they not been made Phyſicians; and that great inconveniences flow from the little regard that is had to the natural diſpoſition in the choice of employments; but it would be extremely difficult to prevent this diſorder. The expedient which our author propoſed to Philip II of Spain, would not be attended, in practice, with all the advantages which might be expected from it. As I obſerve, ſays he (7), that the mind of man is ſo ſhort and limited, that it is ſcarce ſufficient to one thing; I was ever of opinion that it is impoſſible for any perſon to attain a perfect ſkill in two arts, and that he muſt neceſſarily be ignorant of one of them; which made Plato ſay in his book concerning Laws, Nemo ærarius ſimul & lignarius faber fit; duas enim artes, aut ſtudia duo, diligenter exercere humana natura non poteſt. i. e. " No man can be a good Copper-
" ſmith and Carpenter at one and the ſame time; it
" being impoſſible for human nature to excell in two
" arts or ſtudies." It is therefore my opinion, that wiſe and learned men ought to be appointed to judge of the genius and capacity of children from their infancy; and in order to oblige them to apply themſelves to that ſcience for which they are beſt qualified, without leaving it to their own fancy; for fear leſt they ſhould make ſuch a choice, as might be not ſo advantageous, or even prejudicial to them. Were this done, your Majeſty would have the ableſt artiſts, and the fineſt works in the world in your own Kingdom; and perſons who unite moſt happily art with nature. I could alſo wiſh that the like method might be taken in your Univerſities; and that as they do not permit the ſtudents to paſs from one faculty to another, till they are well ſkilled in the Latin tongue; ſo they alſo would appoint perſons to examine, if a ſtudent who would apply himſelf to Logic, to Philoſophy, Phyſic, Divinity and the Laws, has the genius requiſite for ſucceeding in thoſe ſeveral ſciences; for beſides that it is doing great prejudice to the public, for a man to exerciſe an art of which he is ignorant; ſo it is a great preſumption for a man to labour and rack his brain about a thing, which it will be impoſſible for him ever to effect or complete with honour. What our author ſays in another place, would be ſtill more perplexed and dubious in practice. " In a well regulated commonwealth or " government there ought to be match-makers, who " ſhould know by rules of art, the qualities requiſite in
" two perſons who would marry for their reciprocal " advantage. Hippocrates and Galen made ſome at" tempts in the affair; and have given rules to diſtin-
" guiſh a fruitful from a barren woman; and betwixt
" a man who has abilities for procreation and another
" who is otherwiſe. But they have writ little on this
" ſubject, and not ſo diſtinctly as they ought, at leaſt
" as is neceſſary for the preſent occaſion (8)."

(7) Huarte, Epiſt. Dedicat.

(8) Huarte, Examen des Eſprits, chap. 15. folio 207, verſo. I make uſe of Chappuis's verſion.

☞HUDIBRAS, a celebrated Engliſh Poem, the author of which, Mr. SAMUEL BUTLER, was born in the pariſh of Strenſham, in the county of Worceſter, and baptized there the 13th of February 1612 (a). His father, named Samuel Butler, was a perſon of a competent eſtate near three hundred pounds per annum, but moſt of it in leaſe-lands [A] held of Sir Thomas Ruſſel, grandfather to Sir Francis Ruſſel, Baronet, Lord of the manor of Strenſham beforementioned (b). Finding that his ſon had an early inclination to learning, he made ſhift to have him educated (c) [B] in the College-ſchool at Worceſter, under Mr. Henry Bright (d); where, having paſt through the ſeveral claſſes, and becoming an excellent ſchool-ſcholar (e), he went for ſome little time to Cambridge [C]; (or, according to others, to Oxford) (f), but was never matriculated,

(a) I am aſſured by Charles Longueville Eſq; that Butler was born about the year 1600.

(b) Wood. Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 452. 2d edit.

(c) Butler's Life prefixed to his Hudibras, pag. v. London 1710, 16°.

(d) Wood, ut ſupra.

(e) Butler's Life, ut ſupra.

(f) I am aſſured by Mr. Longueville that Butler never reſided in Oxford.

[A] His father . . . . . was a perſon of a competent eſtate . . . but moſt of it in Leaſe-lands.] Thus ſpeaks our Oxford Antiquary; and the author of the Life of Samuel Butler, prefixed to his Hudibras, ſays " that Butler's
" father, who had the ſame Chriſtian name, was an
" honeſt country farmer, who had ſome ſmall eſtate
(1) Butler's Life prefixed to Hudibras, pag. v. London 1710, 16°. " of his own, but rented a much greater of the " Lord of the Manor where he lived (1)." The laſt mentioned Life-writer ſays, ſince moſt men have a curioſity to have ſome account of ſuch (2) anonymous authors, whoſe compoſitions have been eminent for wit or learning; I have been deſired to oblige them with ſuch obſervations as I could receive from thoſe who had the happineſs to be acquainted with him, (Butler); and alſo to rectify the MISTAKES of the Oxford Antiquary, in his Athenæ Oxonienſis concerning him (3). This Biographer wrote this about the year 1710, which was but thirty years after Butler's death; conſequently many of that Poet's friends might be ſtill living, whereby he very poſſibly was enabled to get the moſt exact informations concerning him; but whether we have moſt reaſon to give credit to Mr. Wood, or the Life-writer in queſtion, ſhall be conſidered in the courſe of this article.

(2) I don't know why he uſes the epithet anonymous on this occaſion, ſince Butler was well known to be the author of Hudibras.

(3) Idem, pag. iv.

[B] His father . . . made ſhift to have him educated.] Thus ſays the anonymous Life-writer, who, by the expreſſion made ſhift, ſeems to hint as though Butler's father was in narrow circumſtances, which does not appear from Mr. Wood (4).

(4) Mr. Longueville tells me that his father was in narrow circumſtances.

[C] He went for ſome little time to Cambridge.] I ſhould rather give credit to the Oxford Antiquary on this occaſion, who informs us that he continued ſome years in Cambridge (5). It will be beſt to tranſcribe the whole paſſage. From (the School at Worceſter) he went, as his brother NOW LIVING affirms, to the Univerſity of Cambridge; yet others of the neighbourhood ſay to Oxon (6), but whether true I cannot tell. It is certain that one Samuel Butler was elected from Weſtminſter School, a ſtudent of Chriſt Church, ann. 1623, but making little ſtay there he was not matriculated, and

(5) This is confirmed by Mr. Longueville who believes he was not matriculated.

(6) This has been proved a falſity.

ſo

culated, his father not being able to defray the expence of an academical educati-
(b) See the note [B]. on (h). As he continued some years in Cambridge, though he was not matriculated, I don't see why the anonymous Life-writer should express himself as if it was a misfortune to Butler, not to have been instructed in a regular, academical way [D]. Our Poet re-
(i) Mr. Longueville Esq; never heard of Butler's living with this Mr. Jefferys, but believes he might. turned soon to his native country, and was clerk to one Mr. (i) Jefferys of Earls-Croom [E], an eminent Justice of the Peace in that county, with whom he lived some years in an easy and no ways contemptible station. Here, by the indulgence of a kind master, he had sufficient leisure to apply himself to whatsoever learning his inclinations led him, which was chiefly History and Poetry; joining to these, for his diversion, Music and Painting (k), in the last of which arts we find, by our Oxford Antiquary, that he had made a great progress. Some Paintings by Mr. Butler remained in Mr. Jefferys's family [F]. The affinity between the arts of Poetry and Painting is so great [G], that those who excell in one of them, frequently apply themselves to, or at least, have a great inclination for the other. Mr. Butler was afterwards recommended to that great encourager of learning, Elizabeth Countess of Kent [H], where he had not only the opportunity to consult all kinds of learned books, but also to converse with that living library of learning Mr. Selden (l) [I]. Our author lived likewise some time with Sir so consequently the place of his nativity and age are not remaining on record; otherwise had he been made a member of the University, it would have been known whether he was the same, who was afterwards the famed author of Hudibras. After Samuel Butler had continued in Cambridge six or seven years, but in what college or hall his BROTHER knows not &c. (7). As Wood tells us, that Butler's brother, then living, affirmed that he went to Cambridge, I believe we may prefer his authority to that of the other persons in the neighbourhood, who declared that he was sent to Oxon; or at least if he did go thither, it is highly probable he made but a very short stay, and went soon after to Cambridge (*).

(k) Butler's Life, ut supra, pag. v, vi.

(l) Idem, pag. vii.

(7) Wood's Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 452. 2d edit.

(*) This matter is fully settled by Mr. Longueville as the reader may have observed in citation (f) of the text.

[D] Why the anonymous Life-writer should express himself as though it were a misfortune to Butler not to have been instructed in a regular academical way.] The Life-writer in question, after expatiating on the great poetical merit of Butler, and applauding his works says, "the author of this celebrated poem (Butler) was "of this last composition; for although he had not "the happiness of an academical education, as some "affirm; it may be perceived, throughout his whole "poem, that he had read much, and was very well "accomplished in the most useful parts of human "learning (8)." As our Oxford Antiquary declares expressly, that Butler resided some years at Cambridge, the anonymous Life-writer in question need not have discovered a sort of regret at our Poet's being deprived of the necessary helps to improve his genius, though he were not entred in any of the colleges. For as he had a good foundation of classical learning, and was master of a great deal of wit, his company must necessarily have been agreeable to many of the brightest men of the University, who no doubt took a pleasure in directing him in the course of his studies. It is indeed certain, that the regular and periodical instructions of a learned and ingenious man may be of great service to a young student; but then, on the other side, it is well known that a youth of good sense and genius, who has got a tolerable foundation of learning, is able to make a vast progress in his studies, with no other assistance than that of books; and especially if he has an opportunity of conversing sometimes with learned and ingenious men. But such as are born great Poets, have least occasion to be taught the mechanical part of their art. "With regard to "Poets, says an ingenious French writer, the princi-"ples of the practice of their art may so easily be "understood and put in execution, that they do not "even want the assistance of a master to direct them "in the study of those principles. A man, born "with a genius, may, in two months, teach himself "all the rules relating to French Poetry. He even "is soon able to go back to the source of those rules, "and to judge of the importance of each, from the "importance of the principles on which it is founded. "And the world never thought it a glory to that man "who had taught the elements of Poetry to one who "afterwards became a very great Poet. No mention "has been made of those who instructed Virgil and "Horace in the mechanical rules of their art. We "our selves do not know who taught Moliere and "Corneille (though alive not many years since) the "cæsura and measure of our verses. It was not be-

(8) Life of Butler, prefixed to Hudibras, pag. ii.

"lieved that those instructors had so much share in "the reputation of their pupils, as to deserve to have "their names enquired after or remembred (9)."

(9) Reflexions Critique sur la Poëtie & la Peinture, vol. 2. pag. 23, 24. Paris, 1733, 12mo.

[E] Was made Clerk to one Mr. Jefferys of Earls-Croom.] This circumstance is not related by Mr. Wood, who, on the contrary, seems to hint, as though he had been taken into the service of Eliz. Countess of Kent (10), immediately after his coming from Cambridge (11). However, as the anonymous Life-writer mentions the person and the place, this incident may probably be true.

(10) Ath. Oxon. idem, ut supra.

(11) Mr. Longueville, as I before observed, does not remember to have heard of our Poet's living with this Mr. Jefferys.

[F] Some Paintings of Mr. Butler remained in Mr. Jefferys's family.] This we are told by the anonymous author of his Life. "I have seen, says he, some pic-"tures, said to be of his drawing, which remained in "that family. This I mention, not for the excellency "of them, but to satisfy the reader of his early in-"clinations to that noble art; for which also he was "afterwards entirely beloved by Mr. Samuel Cooper, "one of the most eminent Painters of his time (12)." Though this Life-writer says, he does not mention Mr. Butler's paintings for the excellency of them, yet, if Mr. Wood is to be credited, he had made a very great progress in that delightful art. Mr. Butler, says he, at length became so noted for the former (painting), that he was entirely beloved by Samuel Cooper, the Prince of Limners of his age (13). It is very probable, that the great progress Butler had made in Painting, very much contributed to strengthen the affection, which so great an artist as Mr. Cooper had for him.

(12) Butler's Life, ut supra, pag. vi. edit. London 1710.

(13) Ath. Oxon. ibid. ut supra.

[G] The affinity between the arts of Poetry and Painting is so great.] This has been observed by the most ingenious writers, both antient and modern. The author of a late agreeable Essay, makes the following reflections on this subject. "Almost all the parts of Poetry "are found in Painting . . . The nearer the Poet ap-"proaches to the Painter, the more perfect he is; and "the more perfect the Painter, the more he imitates "the Poet, in drawing the manners and passions with "life and spirit. The Painter is to animate a form, "and the Poet to lend a form to sentiment and dicti-"on: One is to give life to beautiful proportion, "and the other strength and figure to sublime thought. "The Painter, like Prometheus, lights up a spirit in "the body, while the Poet seeks a body, to maintain "and support that spirit; which is one of Homer's "greatest praises; for, by the fire of his great genius, "he has given form to almost all things, and made "them appear, as it were, alive (14)."

(14) Of the Sister Arts; an Essay. By Hildebrand Jacob Esq; pag. 4. London 1734, 8vo.

[H] Mr. Butler was . . . recommended . . . to Elizabeth Countess of Kent.] This the Life-writer declares, in which he agrees with Wood; except that the latter tells us, that he was taken into the Countess's service (15). (16) We find by the Oxford Antiquary, that our Poet made great improvements during his abode with the Countess. In this family, says he, living several years, he did, for his diversion, exercise his parts in Painting and Music (17).

(15) Wood, idem ibid. ut supra.

(16) Mr. Longueville believes he lived with that Countess, but in what quality he knows not.

(17) Idem, ibid.

[I] To converse also with . . . Mr. Selden.] This is confirmed by Mr. Wood. "Great Selden, says he, "who was much conversant in the family of that "Countess, (of Kent) had an esteem for, and would "often employ him to write Letters (18) beyond sea, "and translate for him (19)."

(18) I am told by Charles Longueville Esq; that our Poet was Selden's Amanuensis.

(19) Idem, ibid.

Sir Samuel Luke, who was of an antient family in Bedfordſhire, but, to his diſhonour, an eminent Commander under Oliver Cromwell; and, it is ſaid, Butler then compoſed his Loyal Poem (m). It is very reaſonably ſuppoſed that fate, more than choice, threw him into this family [K]. As Sir Samuel Luke is generally ſuppoſed to be ſhadowed under the character of Hudibras, it is very probable Mr. Butler might have received ſome diſguſt in that Knight's family. At riper years he ſtudied the Common Law, but did not practiſe it. After the Reſtoration of King Charles II, the perſons at the helm minding money more than merit, our Poet found a famous maxim of Juvenal verified but too exactly in himſelf (n) [L]. Being endued with that innate modeſty which rarely finds promotion in Courts, he was made Secretary to Richard Earl of Carbury, Lord Preſident of the Principality of Wales, and the Marches thereof, who appointed him Steward of Ludlow-Caſtle, upon the revival of the Court there (o). About this time he married one Mrs. Herbert, a Gentlewoman of a very good family, but not a (p) widow, as our Oxford Antiquary relates. She had a competent fortune, but the greateſt part of it was loſt, by being put out on ill ſecurities, whereby it was of little advantage to him (q) [M]. Mr. Butler is ſaid to have been Secretary to George Villiers Duke of Buckingham, when he was Chancellor of the Univerſity of Cambridge (r), but whether that be true or not, it is certain, ſays the author whom I quote, that the Duke had a great kindneſs for, and was afterwards a benefactor to him (s). This aſſertion of the anonymous Life-writer, viz. that the Duke aſſiſted Mr. Butler, is abſolutely denied by a late ingenious (t) writer [N]. He had promiſes of places and employments, of great value and credit, from Edmund Earl of Clarendon, when he was Lord High Chancellor of England, eſpecially for this cauſe, that his Majeſty had a reſpect for him, and the more for his Poem called Hudibras (u). No man was a more generous (w) friend to him, than that Mecænas of all learned and witty men, Charles Lord Buckhurſt, the late Earl of Dorſet and Middleſex [O], who being himſelf an excellent Poet, knew how to ſet a juſt value upon the ingenious

(m) Idem, ibid.

(n) Ath. Oxon. ibid. ut ſupra.

(o) Ibid.

(p) Mr. Longueville is of opinion that ſhe was not a widow.

(q) Butler's Life, prefixed to Hudibras, pag. viii.

(r) Wood, Ath. Oxon. ut ſupra.

(s) Butler's Life, pag. vii, viii.

(t) I am informed by Charles Longueville Eſq; that Butler never received any favours from Villiers Duke of Buckingham.

(u) Athen. Oxon. vol. 2 col. 452, 453. edit. ut ſupra.

(w) I believe we are to except Mr. William Longueville of the Temple, father to Charles Longueville Eſq; ſo often mentioned in this article; ſeveral perſons having aſſured me, that that Gentleman was infinitely the beſt friend Butler ever had.

[K] Fate, more than choice.] Though fate, more than choice, ſays the anonymous Life-writer, ſeems to have placed him in the ſervice of a Knight ſo notorious, both in his perſon and politicks; yet by the rule of contraries, we may obſerve throughout his whole Poem, that he was moſt orthodox, both in his religion and loyalty. And I am the more induced to believe he wrote it about that time, becauſe he had then the opportunity to converſe with thoſe living characters of rebellion, nonſenſe and hypocriſy, which he ſo livelily and pathetically expoſes throughout the whole work (20). This conjecture, that our Poet wrote his Hudibras during his abode with Sir Samuel Luke, is not altogether improbable; for as Sir Samuel was ſo great a ſtickler in the Oliverian cauſe, and doubtleſs had a large portion of the then modiſh cant and enthuſiaſm; himſelf, as well as his whole family, muſt appear in a very drole light to a man of Butler's burleſque temper and principles; they all muſt have ſeemed as ſo many anticks in his eye, and this, conſequently, muſt raiſe his poetic fire. One reaſon why Butler is ſuppoſed to have ridiculed Sir Samuel Luke, under the character of Hudibras, is from an imperfect verſe, at the latter end of Canto I, Part I, of Hudibras.

(20) Butler's Life, prefixed to Hudibras, pag. vii.

'Tis ſung, there is a valiant Mamaluke
In foreign land, yclyp'd — —
To whom we have been oft compar'd
For perſon, parts, addreſs, and beard, &c.

Now it is ſuppoſed that this chaſm is to be filled with the words Sir Samuel Luke. What, I think, ſtrengthens this conjecture, is, that the line before it is of ten ſyllables, and the meaſure of the verſe generally uſed in this Poem, is of eight; at the ſame time that the words Sir (21) Samuel Luke, make the correſponding verſe full ten ſyllables.

(21) Whilſt this ſheet was at preſs, I was aſſured by Mr. Longueville that Sir Samuel Luke is not the perſon ridiculed under the name of HUDIBRAS.

[L] Our Poet found a famous maxim of Juvenal verified but too exactly in himſelf.] It is this:

Haud facilè emergunt, quorum virtutibus obſtat
Res anguſta domi:

That is,

" Rarely they riſe by virtue's aid, who lie
" Plung'd in the depth of helpleſs poverty.

DRYDEN.

But ſome will perhaps not think his fate ſo very hard, he having the not altogether uncommon felicity of being almoſt worſhipped after his death, though ſo greatly neglected whilſt living.

[M] His wife's fortune . . . was of little advantage to him.] The Oxford Antiquary ſays the very reverſe of this (22). He did not practice the Law, but lived on the jointure of a widow that he had married (23).

(22) Mr. Longueville believes he did not reap much benefit by his wife's fortune.

(23) Ath. Oxon. ibid. ut ſupra.

[N] This laſt aſſertion that the Duke aſſiſted Mr. Butler, is abſolutely denied by a late ingenious writer.] It is Major Richardſon Pack, who gives us the following relation. Mr. Wycherley had always laid hold of any opportunity which offered, to repreſent to his Grace how well Mr. Butler had deſerved of the Royal Family, by writing his inimitable Hudibras; and that it was a reproach to the Court, that a perſon of his loyalty and wit ſhould ſuffer in obſcurity, and under the wants he did. The Duke ſeemed always to hearken to him with attention enough: and, after ſome time, undertook to recommend his pretenſions to his Majeſty. Mr. Wycherley, in hopes to keep him ſteady to his word, obtained of his Grace to name a day, when he might introduce that modeſt and unfortunate Poet to his new patron. At laſt an appointment was made, and the place of meeting was agreed to be the Roe-Buck. Mr. Butler and his friend attended accordingly; the Duke too joined them. But as the D—il would have it, the door of the room where they ſat was open; and his Grace, who had ſeated himſelf near it, obſerving a pimp of his acquaintance (the creature too was a Knight) trip by with a brace of Ladies, immediately quitted his engagement to follow another kind of buſineſs, at which he was more ready than in doing good offices to men of deſert; though no one was better qualified, than he, both in regard to his fortune and underſtanding, to protect them; and from that hour to the day of his death, poor Butler never found the leaſt effect of his promiſe (24). If this ſtory may be depended upon, it ſeems quite to invalidate what is aſſerted by Mr. Wood and the anonymous Life-writer on his authority, viz. that Butler was Secretary to the above-mentioned Duke of Buckingham. It alſo ſeems to contradict the report which prevailed, viz. that the Duke of Buckingham, author of the Rehearſal, had therein, as it was then ſaid, the aſſiſtance of Dr. Thomas Sprat, his Chaplain, Martin Clifford and Samuel Butler, alias Hudibras, in the compoſing thereof (25). Though our Poet does not ſtand in need of any reputation but that which ariſes from his famous Poem, it yet would be ſome addition to it, could this circumſtance be proved. But however it be, the bare report ſhews the high opinion the public entertained of Butler's genius (26).

(24) The poſthumous Works of W. Wycherley Eſq; publiſhed by Mr. Theobald, pag. 6 and 7. of the Memoirs, London 1728, 8vo.

(25) Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 804. edit. ut ſupra.

(26) Mr. Longueville is of opinion that Butler was not perſonally known to the Duke of Buckingham in queſtion.

[O] But none was a more generous friend to him . . . than Charles . . . . the late Earl of Dorſet.] An eminent Engliſh Poet, in a Dedication to the preſent Duke of Dorſet, where he gives a character of his noble father, ſays, Butler owed it to him (the late Earl) that the Court taſted his Hudibras (27).

(27) Prior's Poems, vol. 1. London 1721, 12mo.

ingenious performances of others, and has taken care to relieve and ſupply the neceſſities of thoſe whoſe modeſty would prompt them to conceal themſelves; of which Mr. Butler was a ſignal inſtance. In fine, the integrity of our Poet's life, the acuteneſs of his wit, and eaſineſs of his converſation, had rendred him vaſtly acceptable to all men; and yet he prudently avoided a multiplicity of acquaintance, and wiſely choſe ſuch only, whom his diſcerning judgment prompted him to converſe with (x). According to our Oxford Antiquary, Mr. Butler was a boon and witty companion, eſpecially among thoſe with whom he was very well acquainted. Having lived to the age of threeſcore and eight, he died of a conſumption in the year (y) 1680, and was interred, at the charge of his good friend Mr. L——vil (z) of the Temple in the Churchyard of St. Paul's Covent-Garden at the Weſt-end of the ſaid yard, on the North-ſide under the Church wall (aa). He was buried, at his own requeſt, ſix foot deep in the ground. It is univerſally ſaid, that he had ſtruggled with numberleſs difficulties. The ingratitude of the court and age towards him has been ſet in a very ſtrong light by a famous Engliſh Satyriſt [P]. For many years he had no funeral monument, till at laſt Alderman Barber, late Lord Mayor of the City of London, generouſly paid the tribute due to Mr. Butler's memory, by erecting, at his own expence, a monument to him, among the Poets in Weſtminſter-Abbey. As his buſt was at firſt placed very low, it was ſmeared and defaced by boys and idle people; upon which the Gentleman abovementioned had it beautified, and fixed out of reach, in the place where it now ſtands. I ſhall give the inſcription on his monument [Q]. Many pieces are aſcribed to him beſides his Hudibras [R], ſome of which being very obſcene and trifling, would not do honour either to his genius or his morals. Our author's Hudibras gave him the great fame he has acquired [S], and was frequently read by King Charles II, whom, ſays a writer, the judicious part of mankind will readily acknowledge to be a ſovereign judge; and who was ſo great an admirer of it,

(x) Butler's Life, pag. viii, ix.

(y) I am aſſured by Mr. Longueville that here is a double error, Butler dying of old age, and not of a conſumption; and not at ſixty eight years of age, but at fourſcore, or thereabouts.

(z) The perſon here meant is Mr. William Longueville. I can't conceive why the writer in queſtion did not put his name at length.

(aa) Butler's Life, pag. x. and Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 453.

[P] The ingratitude of the Court . . . towards him, has been ſet in a very ſtrong light, by a famous Engliſh Satyriſt.] It is Oldham. A reader of taſte and humanity cannot but be pleaſed with the noble indignation which fired him on this occaſion.

On BUTLER who can think without juſt rage,
The glory, and the ſcandal of the age?
Fair ſtood his hopes, when firſt he came to town,
Met every where with welcomes of renown;
Courted, and lov'd by all; with wonder read,
And promiſes of Princely favour fed:
But what reward for all had he at laſt,
After a life in dull expectance paſt?
The wretch at ſumming up his miſpent days,
Found nothing left, but poverty, and praiſe;
Of all his gains by verſe he could not ſave,
Enough to purchaſe flannel, and a grave:
Reduc'd to want, he in due time fell ſick,
Was fain to die, and be interr'd on tick (28):
And well might bleſs the fever that was ſent,
To rid him hence, and his worſe fate prevent (29).

(28) As Butler was buried at the expence of Mr. W. Longueville, we muſt ſuppoſe that Oldham employed the expreſſion, upon tick, as being ſtrong and poetical; and to ſet the ingratitude our Poet met with in a ſtill more odious light.

(29) Poems and Tranſlations, by J. Oldham, pag. 173, 174. London 1683, 8vo. We find that this Miſcellany was printed but three years after Butler's death.

Let a young Poet of genius, in unhappy circumſtances, but liſten (if poſſible) attentively to theſe lines, in the height of his poetic fever, and there is no doubt but they will contribute to cool it, and reſtore him to his ſenſes again. If not, it is a thouſand to one but miſery and rags will be his portion.

[Q] I ſhall give the Inſcription, hereunder.] It is copied exactly from the monument itſelf.

M. S.
Samuelis Butleri qui Strenſhamiæ in agro Vigornienſi natus (30) 1612 obiit Londini 1680.
Vir doctus imprimis, acer, integer;
Operibus ingenii, non item præmiis felix; Satyrici apud nos carminis artifex egregius:
Quo ſimulatæ religioni Larvam detraxit, & perduellium ſcelera liberrime exagitavit:
Scriptorum in ſuo genere primus & poſtremus.
Ne cui vivo deerant fere omnia
Deeſſet etiam mortuo tumulus,
Hoc tandem poſito marmore curavit
Joannes Barber civis Londinenſis. 1721.

(30) This muſt be an error, as I obſerved, Butler being born about the year 1600. See the beginning of the text in the margin.

[R] Some pieces are aſcribed to him beſides his Hudibras.] Theſe, according to Wood, are, Two Letters, one from J. Audland, a Quaker, to William Prynne; the other William Prynne's Anſwer . . . The Aſſembly-Man, ſaid to be writ by Abraham Cowley, . . . and Hudibras alias Butler. Mola Aſinaria, or the unreaſonable and inſupportable burden now preſſed upon the ſhoulders of this groaning Nation. Aſcribed to W. Prynne. But theſe, ſays Wood, were written by Samuel Butler, author of the much-celebrated Hudibras (31). Not long ſince, theſe and ſeveral other pieces were publiſhed in one volume in 12mo, 1730. But few of them, I believe, were written by our Poet (32). A late writer ſays, "In juſtice to the public, it is thought "proper . . . . to declare, that all the manuſcripts "Mr. Butler left behind him, are now in the cuſtody "of Mr. Longville (33), (among which, the moſt "conſiderable is one intitled, the Hiſtory of Learning, "written after the manner of Hudibras), and that not "one line of thoſe poems lately publiſhed under his "name is genuine (34)." The following lines which are aſcribed to Butler, and are ſaid to have been given by him to Mr. Aubrey, have all the characteriſtics of our Poet's wit and genius.

(31) Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 452, and 640.

(32) I have been ſince told by Mr. Longueville that part of thoſe remains are ſpurious. This Gentleman is poſſeſſed of all our Poet's genuine remains, which are very numerous, both in proſe and verſe, and among the reſt, of a Poem intitled, The Hiſtory of Learning.

No Jeſuit e'er took in hand,
To plant a church in barren land:
Nor ever thought it worth the while,
A Sweed or Ruſs to reconcile.
For where there is no ſtore of wealth,
Souls are not worth the charge of health;
Spain in America had two deſigns,
To ſell their Goſpel for their mines.
For had the Mexicans been poor,
No Spaniard twice had landed on their ſhore.
'Twas gold the Catholic religion planted,
Which, had they wanted gold, they ſtill had wanted (35).

(33) This Gentleman's true name is Longueville, as I always write it.

(34) Poetical Regiſter, vol. 2. pag. 21. London 1723 in 8vo.

(35) Butler's Life, prefixed to Hudibras, pag. xiv.

The author from whom I borrow theſe verſes, had ſaid a little before, "the golden remains of Mr. But-"ler are in the cuſtody of Mr. L - - vil (Longueville); "but I have not the happineſs to be very well ac-"quainted with him, nor intereſt to procure them." It may be obſerved of works publiſhed after the deceaſe of an author, that many of them, ſo far from adding to his reputation, are often a draw-back upon it.

[S] But . . . Hudibras . . . gave him the great fame he has acquired.] We find that the whole was not publiſhed together. The firſt part, ſays Wood, came out in 1663, and was not only taken into his Majeſty's hands, and read by him with great delight, but alſo by all courtiers, loyal ſcholars, and gentlemen, to the great profit of the Author and Bookſeller. Afterwards came out a ſecond part, and both printed together with ſeveral additions and annotations. And at length, a third and laſt part, but without annotations, as by the copy printed in 1678 appears (36). In the latter editions there are annotations to this part alſo. In 1682 was publiſhed, in 8*vo*, Butler's Ghoſt, or Hudibras, the fourth part; with reflections on theſe times (37). This laſt is a ſpurious piece.

(36) Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 453.

(37) Idem, ibid.

it, that he would often pleaſantly quote it in converſation (bb). We are told that ſome verſes, for reaſons of State, were omitted in the firſt impreſſion (cc). There have been many editions of it, but none I believe equal to the merits of the work. Mr. Hogarth, whoſe genius ſeems very much allied to that of Butler, has etched a ſeries of copper plates, containing the adventures of Hudibras and Ralph his Squire, with all the pleaſantry and humour requiſite to the ſubject. There have been many imitations of this delightful Poem [T], ſuch as the ſecond part of Hudibras: afterwards came out the Dutch [U], Scotch, and Iriſh Hudibras; Butler's Ghoſt [W]; Mercurius Menippeus; the Loyal Satyriſt, or, Hudibras in Proſe; the Occaſional Hypocrite, and ſome others of the ſame nature, all which, Virgil Traveſty excepted [X], deſerve to be condemned to the moſt ſervile offices. Some vain attempts have been made to tranſlate Hudibras into Latin, but with little ſucceſs (dd) [Y]; and indeed, as the ſubject, and the ſeveral parts of it are humorous, and relate entirely to England and Engliſh cuſtoms, I preſume it will be ſcarce poſſible for Hudibras to appear to very great advantage in a tranſlation [Z]. It is pity we have not a complete commentary on that Poem (ee), it being certain that many paſſages in it loſe conſiderably of their beauty, force and vivacity, from our not being well enough acquainted with them; not to mention, that a writer of genius might make ſuch obſervations on the contrivance, the conduct, the machinery, the ſimiles &c. of it, as would give the generality of readers a better idea of the beauties of that Poem. Our author

(bb) Preface to Hudibras, pag. iii. edit. ut ſupra.

(cc) Butler's Life prefixed to Hudibras, pag. xiii.

(dd) Butler's Life prefixed to Hudibras, pag. xii.

(ee) An attempt has been made this way, in the Grubſtreet Journal, by an ingenious writer who ſigns himſelf M. J. from whom I have borrowed ſeveral particulars. See Num. 39, 41, 45 and 63 of that paper.

[T] There have been many imitations of this delightful Poem.] No ſooner does ſome original beauty appear in the world, but ſhe is immediately ap'd by the inferior fry. The moment after the famous Captain Lemuel Gulliver came abroad, many claimed kindred to him; ſtarted up like ſo many muſhrooms; and fatigued the public with their ſtupid adventures. The celebrated Macheath was attended by a long train of inſipid Ballad-Operas; nor could even honeſt Robinſon Cruſoe eſcape the mimicks. We may conſider theſe as ſo many ill-favour'd, aukward creatures, who are appointed by Apollo as foils to theſe original beauties, and to give the world a ſtronger idea of their perfections. I would call ſuch imitations echos, were not the reſemblance too remote; an echo giving, at leaſt, an imperfect idea of the original ſound; whereas theſe pieces are generally the very counter-part of thoſe they pretend to imitate. And therefore I am afraid they can hardly come under the denomination of even Ghoſts or Shadows .... Several reaſons, I believe, might be given, why imitations, or ſequels of fine original pieces, ſeldom or never reach the beauties of the latter. In the firſt place, writers of great genius think it beneath them to be copiſts. As theſe have a fund of invention of their own, they conſequently do not care to borrow from others. Again, the writer who ſtrikes out ſome pieces of a new kind, is generaliy ſo filled with the idea, that he conſiders it in all the lights in which it can appear to any advantage. "How often, ſays a writer, the imitation of Hudi-"bras has been attempted, and with how little ſuc-"ceſs, I leave the reader to judge: In the year 1663, "there came out a ſpurious book, called, the ſecond "part of Hudibras; which is reflected upon by our "author, under the character of Whachum, towards "the latter end of his ſecond part (38)." I ſuppoſe the lines hinted at here, are theſe.

(38) Butler's Life prefixed to Hudibras, pag. xi, xii.

Quoth he, where am I,
Alive, or dead; or which way came I
Through ſo immenſe a ſpace ſo ſoon?
But now I thought myſelf i'the moon;
And that a monſter with huge whiſkers,
More formidable than a Switzer's,
My body through and through had drill'd,
And Whachum by my ſide had kill'd:
Had croſs-examin'd both our hoſe,
And plunder'd all we had to loſe;
Look, there he is, I ſee him now,
And feel the place I am run through (39).

(39) Hudibras, Part 2. Canto 3. ver. 1129 to 1140, inclusive.

[U] Afterwards came out the Dutch Hudibras.] This is ſneered at by Oldham, in his ſlaſhing verſes againſt a Printer, who had groſly maimed a piece of his.

(40) Very poſſibly Edward How--d Eſq; the dramatic Poet, is hinted at on this occaſion. He being, at that time, the butt of moſt of the wits.

May'ſt thou print H—— (40) or ſome duller aſs,
Jordan, or him that wrote Dutch Hudibras (41).

(41) Poems and Tranſlations, by J. Oldham, pag. 133. edit. ut ſupra.

[W] Butler's Ghoſt.] The complete title of this piece is, Butler's Ghoſt, or Hudibras. The Fourth Part. With Reflections upon theſe Times.

[X] All which, Virgil Traveſty excepted.] Methinks the Life-writer ſhould not have reckoned that piece among the imitations of Hudibras; the original of Scarron naturally ſuggeſting to a witty Engliſh tranſlator the expreſſions in which Mr. Cotton has cloathed his Traveſty.

[Y] Some attempts have been made to tranſlate it into Latin, but with little ſucceſs.] Theſe, as they neceſſarily muſt, fall ſhort of the ſprightlineſs and vivacity of the original. It is ſaid that ſome ſimilies were tranſlated by the learned Dr. Harmer, once Greek Profeſſor at Oxford, one of which is the following.

So learned Talicotius, from
The brawny part of porter's b--, &c. (42).

(42) Hudibras, Part 1. Canto 1. Line 281, &c.

Sic adſcititios naſos de clune toroſi
Vectoris, doctâ ſecuit, Talicotius arte:
Qui potuêre parem durando æquare parentem
At poſtquam fato clunis computruit, ipſum
Una ſympathicum cœpit tabeſcere roſtrum (43).

(43) Butler's Life prefixed to Hudibras, pag. xii.

I am told that a Gentleman of Southampton has tranſlated a great part of Hudibras into Latin, with great wit and ſprightlineſs.

[Z] It will be ſcarce poſſible for Hudibras to appear to very great advantage in a tranſlation.] An ingenious foreigner makes ſome reflections on this ſubject, in a letter to a friend. "There is one Engliſh poem, "eſpecially, which I ſhould deſpair of ever making "you underſtand, the title whereof is Hudibras. The "ſubject of it is the civil-war in the time of the grand "rebellion; and the principles and practice of the "Puritans are therein ridiculed. It is Don Quixot, "it is our Satyre Merippée blended together. I never "met with ſo much wit in one ſingle book, as in this, "which at the ſame time is the moſt difficult to be "tranſlated. Who would believe that a work which "paints in ſuch lively and natural colours the ſeveral "foibles and follies of mankind, and where we meet "with more ſentiments than words, ſhould baffle the "endeavours of the ableſt tranſlator? But the reaſon "of this is, almoſt every part of it alludes to particular "incidents. The clergy are there made the principal "object of ridicule, which is underſtood but by few "among the laity. To explain this, a commentary "would be requiſite, and humour, when explained, "is no longer humour (44)." Some of theſe reflections ſeem very juſt, but others, I believe, are not ſo. He ſays, that the ſubject of Hudibras is, the civil-war in the time of the grand rebellion. It is certainly not the civil-war itſelf, but the ridicule of it; none of the tranſactions thereof being mentioned, except, occaſionally; and a ſeries of low incidents, of a quite different nature, are told, which banter the Roundheads, who engaged in that war. His enquiry concerning the difficulty of tranſlating that poem, will, poſſibly, be found author juſt borrowed the hint of his Hudibras from the admirable Don Quixot of Cervantes, but in all other reſpects he is perfectly an original; the ſentiments and diction being entirely new. The Poem of Hudibras ſeems to be of the ſame kind with the Margites of Homer, which, according to Ariſtotle, bore the ſame relation to comedy, as the Iliad and Odyſſey to Tragedy. In Homer's time, the various States of Greece were in danger of being enſlaved by an Aſiatic Monarch. Now nothing could be of greater advantage, at this juncture, than to ſhew the dangers that would enſue to the Grecians from their being at variance; and, on the contrary, the great advantages which would reſult from their union. The former is proved by the calamities which aroſe from the quarrel of Agamemnon and Achilles; the latter from their reconciliation. Such was the deſign of the Iliad. In Virgil's time, the form of government being quite changed, his aim was, to reconcile the minds of the Romans to a very amiable Prince, againſt whom nothing could be objected, but the manner by which he had raiſed himſelf to Empire. For this purpoſe, the Poet exhibits the entire ſubverſion of a great people, and their voluntary ſubmiſſion to a new Prince, from whom Auguſtus was proud of being thought to deſcend. He therefore repreſents him as poſſeſſed of all the virtues that adorn a Monarch; makes him the darling of his ſubjects; and, after ſtruggling with many difficulties, brings him off victorious over all his enemies. This was the deſign of the Æneid. With regard to Hudibras, the deſign of it is as follows. As the time in which the author of it lived was famous, as is generally thought, for hypocriſy, and a pretended zeal for religion and liberty, which had ſubverted the laws and religion of England, and thrown all things into anarchy and confuſion; at ſuch a juncture, nothing could be of greater ſervice to our Poet's views and thoſe of all the Cavaliers, than to pull off the vizor, and paint the perſons who had concealed themſelves behind it in the moſt ridiculous colours, in order to render them as contemptible as poſſible; and therefore he did not cenſure them in a ſerious way, but with humour and pleaſantry, which is well known to be a much more ſucceſsful method. For this purpoſe, our Poet ſuppoſes, that the almoſt impracticable maxims of the Puritans with regard to the very ſtrict diſtribution of juſtice, had turned the brain of his Knight, in the ſame manner as the poring over books of Chivalry had quite diſtracted Don Quixot. Sir Hudibras therefore ſets out upon his rambles, in order to reſtore to every man his rights and privileges; and even bears themſelves, who were carrying to a fair, not for their own profit but for that of the perſons who were dragging them to it; he alſo ſuppoſing, that theſe animals had been arbitrarily deprived of the liberty they were born to, without being firſt duly tried, according to Law, and by their Peers. As the entire caſt of the Poem is perfectly humorous, conſequently the ſeveral adventures of the doughty Knight and his ridiculous Squire, muſt proceed, and end in the ſame ſtrain. The conſtruction and caſt of the whole is ſo new, that it is diſtinguiſhed by the title of the Hudibraſtic way of writing. Some have called it a burleſque Poem, others a mock-Heroic, and others again a mock-Epic (ff), which name I ſhould rather chooſe, were the meaſure of the verſe the ſame with that of an epic Poem; for in moſt other reſpects it agrees with that ſpecies. An ingenious writer whom I have already cited, obſerves, that "the Hudibraſtic (gg) is to differ from the Epic, "as comedy does from tragedy. It muſt be narrative like the epic; it muſt, like that "ſpecies of Poem, have its fable, its variety of characters, and its proper ſtyle; but all "theſe in ſuch a manner, as to move, not terror or compaſſion, as in tragedy; but "laughter, as in comedy. The Fable muſt be formed by the narration of one, entire, "ridiculous action: the characters muſt be ſuch as either occur in low life, or are in "their own nature odd and ridiculous; and theſe in as great a variety as poſſible; and "the ſtyle or language muſt be contrived ſo as to heighten the ridiculouſneſs of the re-"preſentation (hh)." This writer is afterwards more particular with regard to the action, the characters and language [AA]. Perhaps Hudibras cannot be looked upon as a perfect (ff) The Dunciad, I believe, may be conſidered, in all reſpects, as a perfect mock-epic Poem.

(44) Voltaire's Letters concerning the Engliſh Nation, pag. 212, 213. London 1733, 8vo.

(gg) Perhaps he had better expreſſed himſelf thus: A Poem written in the manner of Hudibras.

(hh) Grubſtreet Journal, Num. 39.

ſound not very juſt. He ſhould have ſaid that a tranſlation of this Poem would be difficult, becauſe it paints in ſuch lively and natural colours the ſeveral foibles and follies of mankind, and has . . . . more ſentiments than words: and not, merely, becauſe almoſt every part of it alludes to particular incidents. He afterwards tells his friend, that the Clergy are there made the principal object of ridicule. I believe he ſhould have ſaid, the Puritanical Preachers, otherwiſe a reader who ſhould be unacquainted with Hudibras, and the hiſtory of the times it alludes to, might ſuppoſe this ſpoken of the Epiſcopal Clergy, or that of all religions. Though I have taken theſe liberties with the author of the Letters concerning the Engliſh Nation, it is with pleaſure I acknowledge, that I have received infinite ſatisfaction from his writings, which have all the fire and enthuſiaſm of the great Poet.

[AA] The author is afterwards more particular, &c.] He begins with obſerving, that the action of Hudibras, is the Knight's ſetting out on a ſeries of ridiculous attempts, to gain the heart of a perverſe widow with whom he is in love. It begins with a revival of his paſſion, which had ſlept for ſome time; and concludes with his utter diſappointment. The whole is carried on in ſuch a manner, as renders the principal actors of it ſufficiently ridiculous (45). I believe this ingenious writer is miſtaken in his account of the action of this poem: Hudibras (methinks) not ſallying forth, to gain the heart of a widow, but upon martial feats of a new kind, as we are told in the beginning of the poem:

(45) Ibid. Num. 39.

And out he rode a colonelling (46).

(46) Hudibras, Part 1. Canto 1. Line 15.

As to his adventure with the widow, it is only brought in by way of epiſode. The author proceeds to the Characters. There is, ſays he, the greateſt variety imaginable of odd and low characters. The Knight and 'Squire are exceedingly odd; and at the ſame time entirely different. The ſeveral perſons who compoſe the bear-baiting mob are admirably well drawn, and keep up their own low characters whenever they are introduced. The Widow, the Aſtrologer, his Man, the Lawyer, fect mock-epic Poem, becauſe of its ending abruptly (methinks) with the two epiſtles of the Knight and the Widow. I fancy the ingenious writer juſt cited muſt be miſtaken, when he ſays, " Although perhaps he (Butler) never read Ariſtotle, or any other critical " writer, yet nature and good ſenſe taught him to write in ſuch a manner, that I ſhall " not fear to enter upon his examination, by ſuch rules as we find in that Prince of " criticiſm (ii). As our Poet was ſo extenſive in his reading (which is manifeſt from his admirable Hudibras,) I don't doubt but he had ſtudied the famous critics of antiquity, though he very probably had too much ſenſe and taſte, to loſe his time in ſome of the inſipid ones among the moderns. Our author's Poem has been frequently cited and applauded by the greateſt writers his cotemporaries, and others who have wrote ſince. Mr. Addiſon calls his Poem the incomparable Hudibras (kk), and the famous Earl of Rochester [BB] pays the greateſt deference to his taſte and judgment. Mr. Prior ſpeaks alſo very advantageouſly of our Poet [CC], giving him the title of conſummate Maſter in Poetry, in the humorous lines quoted below; and, at the ſame time, writes with the utmoſt are all excellent in their kind, and conſiſtent (47). He afterwards obſerves in the 63d paper, that Hudibras " has that variety of diſtinct characters, which is eſſential to a poem of the epic kind. And .... that " there is a great, if not a greater, variety, than in " any other poem extant. They are all low and ridiculous, whereby this kind of poem is diſtinguiſhed " from the epic." He then ſpeaks of the diction. " The language, in Hudibras, contributes very much " to the ridiculouſneſs of the repreſentation, by the " odd, and often new words the author makes uſe " of; by the meaſure of his verſe, and by the very " rhymes . . . As to the double rhymes in Hudibras," though ſome have looked upon them as a blemiſh, it is generally the reverſe; " they heightning the ridicule that was otherwiſe in the repreſentation, of " which many inſtances might be produced (48)." A very great Engliſh writer (Mr. Addiſon) is of a different opinion, he conſidering the double rhymes as one ſpecies of falſe wit. " I muſt ſubjoin, ſays he, " the double rhymes, which are uſed in doggrel " Poetry, and generally applauded by ignorant readers. If the thought of the couplet in ſuch compoſitions is good, the rhymes add little to it; and if " bad, it will not be in the power of the rhyme to " recommend it. I am afraid that great numbers of " thoſe who admire the incomparable Hudibras, do it " more on account of theſe doggrel rhymes than of the " parts that really deſerve admiration. I am ſure I " have heard the

(ii) Idem, ibid.

(kk) Spectator, vol. 1. Num. 60.

(47) Grubſtreet Journal, ibid. ut ſupra.

(48) Ibid.

" Pulpit drum eccleſiaſtic,
" Was beat with fiſt inſtead of a ſtick.

" And

" There was an antient ſage Philoſopher
" Who had read Alexander Roſs over.

" more frequently quoted, than the fineſt pieces of wit " in the whole poem (49)." This excellent author is certainly in the right when he ſays, that double rhymes cannot recommend a bad thought; however, I believe it ſometimes very much heightens the ridicule of an humorous one. The ſame admirable author explodes double rhymes in the viſion where he fancies himſelf in the region of falſe wit. Speaking of a quarter of the Temple of the Goddeſs of Dulneſs, called the great magazine of Rebus's; and of a cluſter of people who were laughing very heartily, and diverting themſelves with crambo, there, ſays he, I heard ſeveral double rhymes as I paſſed by them, which raiſed a great deal of mirth (50). Mr. Dryden has alſo given his opinion of the verſification of Hudibras, in his Epiſtle Dedicatory to the late Earl of Dorſet. " The ſort of verſe which is called burleſque " conſiſting of eight ſyllables, or four feet, is that " which our excellent Hudibras has choſen. I ought " to have mentioned him before, when I ſpoke of " Donne; but by a ſlip of an old man's memory he " was forgotten .... His ſatyr is of the Varronian " kind, though unmixed with proſe. The choice of " his numbers is ſuitable enough to his deſign, as he " has managed it: but in any other hand the ſhortneſs of his verſe, and the quick returns of rhyme " had debaſed the dignity of ſtyle. And beſides, the " double rhyme, (a neceſſary companion of burleſque " writing) is not ſo proper for manly ſatyr, for it " turns earneſt too much to jeſt, and gives us a boyiſh " kind of pleaſure. It tickles aukwardly with a kind of " pain to the beſt ſort of readers; we are pleaſed ungratefully, and if I may ſay ſo, againſt our liking. We " thank him not for giving us that unſeaſonable delight, when we know he could have given us a better, and more ſolid. He might have left that taſk " to others, who not being able to put in thought, " can only make us grin with the excreſcence of a " word of two or three ſyllables in the cloſe. It is indeed below ſo great a maſter to make uſe of ſuch " a little inſtrument. But his good ſenſe is perpetually " ſhining through all he writes: it affords us not the " time of finding faults. We paſs through the levity " of his rhyme, and are immediately carried into ſome " admirable uſeful thought. After all, he has choſen " this kind of verſe; and has written the beſt in it: " and had he taken another, he would always have " excelled. As we ſay of a Court favourite, that " whatever his office be, he ſtill makes it uppermoſt " and moſt beneficial to himſelf (51)." The author of Hudibras ſeems to have endeavoured, on a great many occaſions, to employ the moſt trite expreſſions poſſible, in order to heighten the ridicule of the objects he repreſents. The ſame motive, I preſume, which made him employ the loweſt images poſſible, made him uſe the loweſt expreſſions, which after all, he perhaps has done too often. An ingenious Engliſh writer has made ſome good remarks on this ſubject. When a pleaſant thought plays in the features, before it diſcovers itſelf in words, it raiſes too great an expectation, and loſes the advantage of giving ſurprize. Wit and humour are no leſs poorly recommended by a levity of phraſe, and that kind of language which may be diſtinguiſhed by the name of Cant. Ridicule is never more ſtrong than when it is concealed in gravity. True humour lies in the thought, and ariſes from the repreſentation of images in odd circumſtances and uncommon lights. A pleaſant thought ſtrikes us by the force of its natural beauty; and the mirth of it is generally rather palled, than heightened by that ridiculous phraſeology, which is ſo much in faſhion among the pretenders to humour and pleaſantry. This tribe of men are like our mountebanks; they make a man a wit, by putting him in a fantaſtical habit . . . Our little burleſque authors, who are the delight of ordinary readers, generally abound in theſe pert phraſes which have more vivacity than wit (52). He, in another place, cenſures ſome of our Poets, for their indiſcretion in imitating Hudibras's doggrel expreſſions in their ſerious compoſitions, by throwing out the ſigns of our ſubſtantives, which are eſſential to the Engliſh language (53).

(51) Dryden's Juvenal, in Dedication to Lord Dorſet, London 1726, 12mo.

(52) Spectator, vol. 8. num. 616.

(53) Spectator, vol. 2. Num. 136.

(49) Spectator, vol. 1. Num. 60. ad finem.

(50) Idem, vol. 1. Num. 63.

[BB] Has been applauded . . . by the famous Earl of Rocheſter.] It is where he concludes a ſatyr (in which he ridicules ſeveral eminent Poets) and names thoſe perſons whoſe approbation he values.

I loath the rabble, 'tis enough for me,
If - - - - - - - - - - -
Godolphin, BUTLER, Buckhurſt, Buckingham,
And ſome few more, whom I omit to name,
Approve my ſenſe, I count their cenſure fame (54).

(54) The Odes and Satyrs of Horace, tranſlated by the moſt eminent Hands, pag. 164 London 1715, 12mo.

[CC] Mr. Prior alſo ſpeaks very advantageouſly of our Poet.] It is in his humorous Poem entitled Alma, or the Progreſs of the Mind, at the opening of the ſecond Canto.

But

moſt modeſty of himſelf. Mr. Dryden calls it the excellent Hudibras, and ſays farther, The worth of this (Butler's) Poem is too well known to need any commendation, and he is above my cenſure (ll); he alſo has four lines concerning him [DD]. The reflections he afterwards makes on the verſification of that Poem I have inſerted elſewhere (mm). I ſhall give below the character of Hudibras from an ingenious French writer [EE]. Among other particulars for which Hudibras has been very much admired, are the parodies of the poetical machinery [FF]. Some are of opinion, that the parody of noble compoſitions is injurious to them, and ſhews a contempt that is highly indecent. But, as an ingenious writer obſerves very juſtly, "Parody and burleſque alluſion may move "laughter in thoſe who have the higheſt veneration for the writings alluded to, and "who at the ſame time admire the wit of the perſon who makes the alluſion (nn) [GG]. This Poem is admired by all perſons of wit and taſte; and indeed, the whole caſt of it is (ll) Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication, pag. c. London 1726, 12mo.

(mm) In the note [AA] after the referring figures (50).

(nn) Hibernicus's Letters, vol. 1. pag. 79. London 1729, 8vo.

But ſhall we take the Muſe abroad,
To drop her idly on the road?
And leave our ſubject in the middle,
As BUTLER did his bear and fiddle?
Yet he, CONSUMMATE MASTER, knew
When to recede, and where purſue:
His noble negligencies teach,
What others toils deſpair to reach.
He, perfect dancer, climbs the rope,
And balances your fear and hope:
If after ſome diſtinguiſh'd leap,
He drops his pole, and ſeems to ſlip;
Strait gathering all his active ſtrength,
He riſes higher half his length.
With wonder you approve his ſlight,
And owe your pleaſure to your fright.
But like poor ANDREW, I advance,
Falſe mimic of my maſter's dance;
Around the cord awhile I ſprawl,
And thence, tho' low, in earneſt fall (55).

(55) Prior's Poems, vol. 2. pag. 46. edit. ut ſupra.

By the way, Prior ſeems to have borrowed part of this thought from Dryden, where ſpeaking of Virgil, he ſays. That Poet "pretends ſometimes to trip, but it is only "to make you think him in danger of a fall, when he "is moſt ſecure. Like a ſkilful dancer on the ropes (if "you will pardon the meanneſs of the ſimilitude) who "ſlips willingly, and makes a ſeeming ſtumble, that you "may think him in great hazard of breaking his "neck, while at the ſame time he is only giving "you a proof of his dexterity (56)."

(56) Preface to Dryden's Tranſlation of Du Freſnoy's Art of Painting, pag. liii, liv. London 1716, 8vo.

[DD] Dryden ... alſo has four lines concerning him.]

Unpity'd Hudibras, your champion friend,
Has ſhewn how far your charities extend,
This laſting verſe ſhall on his tomb be read,
He ſham'd you living, and upbraids you dead (57).

(57) Hind and Panther, in Dryden's Miſcellanies, vol. 4. pag. 213. 5th edit. London 1727, 12mo. The Hind (or Church of Rome) is ſuppoſed to object the above lines to the Panther (the Church of England) as a proof of her hardheartedneſs, even to her greateſt friends and benefactors.

[EE] I ſhall give the character of Hudibras from an ingenious French writer.] With regard to burleſque the Engliſh have a Poet whoſe reputation is equal to that of Scarron among the French; I mean the author of Hudibras, a comical hiſtory, in verſe, written in the time of Oliver Cromwell. It is ſaid to be a delicate ſatyr on that kind of interregnum; and that it is levelled particularly at the conduct of the Preſbyterians, whom the author repreſents as a ſenſeleſs ſett of people, promoters of anarchy, and compleat hypocrites. Hudibras, the hero of this Poem, is a holy Don Quixot of that ſect, and the redreſſer of all the imaginary wrongs that are done to his Dulcinea. The Knight has his Roſinante, his burleſque adventures and his Sancho; but the Squire of the Engliſh Poet is of an oppoſite character to that of the Spaniſh Sancho; for whereas the latter is a plain unaffected peaſant, the Engliſh Squire is a taylor by trade, a tartuff or finiſhed hypocrite by birth; and ſo great a dogmatic Divine, that

He could deep myſteries unriddle,
As eaſily as thread a needle,

(58) Diſſertation ſur la Poëſie Angloiſe, in the Journal Litteraire, tom. 9. pag. 165, 166. a la Haye, 1717, 12mo.

As it is ſaid in the Poem. The author of Hudibras is preferable to Scarron, becauſe he has one fixed mark or object; and that, by a ſurprizing effort of imagination, he has found the art of leading his readers to it, by diverting them (58).

[FF] His parodies of the poetical machinery.] I ſhall mention but one, and that is the deſcription of Fame, from Virgil. And that the reader may be more ſenſible of the humour in the parody, it may not be improper for him to contraſt it with the ſerious deſcription of Fame, as tranſlated by Dryden. Nothing can be more whimſical than the figure and dreſs of Fame in Hudibras; and the advices ſhe is ſaid to bring are equally pleaſant. The giving her two trumpets makes a pretty diſtinction... Mr. Addiſon has alſo taken notice of the beauty with which Butler ridicules one ſpecies of falſe wit uſed formerly, viz. of making an echo talk ſenſibly, and give rational anſwers. It is where Bruin is deſcribed bewailing the loſs of his bear to a ſolitary echo, who, as the abovementioned author obſerves, "is "of great uſe to the Poet in ſeveral diſtichs, as ſhe "does not only repeat after him, but helps out his "verſe, and furniſhes him with rhymes (59)." Nothing can poſſibly be more humorous than this parody.

(59) Spectator, vol. 1. num. 59.

Quoth he, O whither, wicked Bruin,
Art thou fled to my — Echo, Ruin?
I thought th' hadſt ſcorn'd to budge a ſtep
For Fear. (Quoth Echo) Marry Guep.
. . . . . .
Have theſe bones rattled, and this head
So often in thy quarrel bled?
Nor did I ever winch, or grudge it
For thy dear ſake——(Quoth ſhe, Mum Budget).
Think'ſt thou 'twill not be laid i'th' diſh
Thou turned'ſt back? — Quoth Eccho — Piſh.
To run from thoſe th' hadſt overcome
Thus cowardly? —Quoth Echo—Mum (60).

(60) Hudibras, Part 1. Canto 3. beginning at line 199.

One of theſe Echo's is introduced in the famous Paſtor Fido of Guarini.

[GG] Parody ... may move laughter, in thoſe who have the higheſt veneration for the writings alluded to, and for the alluſion.] This paſſage is extracted from a piece, of which laughter is the ſubject; wherein the author combats the opinion of Mr. Hobbes, viz. that laughter is nothing elſe but ſudden glory, ariſing from ſome ſudden conception of ſome eminency in our ſelves, by compariſon with the infirmity of others, or with our own formerly. One of the arguments he employs, to prove that laughter often ariſes without any imagined ſuperiority of our ſelves, is from the parody and burleſque alluſion... "Many a profound admirer, "ſays he, of the machinery in Homer and Virgil, has "laughed heartily at the interpoſition of Pallas in "Hudibras, to ſave the bold Talgol from the Knight's "piſtol, preſented to his ſkull:

"But Pallas came in ſhape of ruſt,
"And 'twixt the ſpring and hammer thruſt
"Her Gorgon ſhield, which made the cock
"Stand ſtiff, as 'twere transform'd to ſtock.

"And few who read this, imagine themſelves ſuperior "to Homer or Butler; we indeed generally imagine "ourſelves ſuperior in ſenſe to the valorous Knight, "but not in this point of firing ruſty piſtols. And "pray, would any mortal have laughed, had the Poet "told, in a ſimple, unadorned manner, that his Knight "attempted to ſhoot Talgol, but his piſtol was ſo "ruſty that it would not give fire? And yet this "would have given us the ſame ground of ſudden "glory from our ſuperiority over the doughty Knight.. "Again, to what do we compare ourſelves, or imagine ourſelves ſuperior, when we laugh at the fantaſtical imitation of the poetical imagery, and ſimilitudes of the morning?

is ſo very whimſical, and the ſeveral parts of it are drawn with ſo much pleaſantry, that it muſt neceſſarily delight all ſuch; the author of it having hit upon that point, which is ever ſure of diverting multitudes [HH]; and this point is humour; but as his verſification is often not very muſical, it conſequently muſt diſtaſte many readers of a delicate ear, who are pleaſed with ſuch numbers only as are harmonious and flowing. If we conſider the pleaſure which ariſes from the peruſal of a ſerious epic Poem, ſuch as Homer and Milton; and that which the peruſal of a mock Poem, ſuch as Hudibras, gives to a reader who has a taſte both for ſerious and humorous compoſitions, thoſe pleaſures muſt be found very different. The peruſal of the former inſpires the ſoul with ſolemn tranſports; raiſes it to ſuch an extaſy, that it ſeems to quit its terreſtrial part, and wing its way to the ſkies; whilſt the reading of the latter fills us with a joy that only wantons round the heart, and plays upon the face. Theſe different pleaſures ſeem to reſemble ſuch as would ariſe from a ſprightly ſong, ſung by a delightful voice, and accompanied by a fine violin; and the Te Deum of Mr. Handel, himſelf touching the organ, and accompanied by the fineſt voices and inſtruments. Hudibras is the idol of the high-church party (if party may be mentioned on this occaſion) as a late writer has obſerved [II]. And we may all remember, in the late reign (oo), how frequently and with what emphaſis four lines of Hudibras uſed to be repeated by the diſaffected, at the time when people were required to take an oath to the Government [KK]. The generality of Diſſenters conſider, as it is natural for them to do, this Poem in a very odious light. Mr. Fenton, in his beautiful Epiſtle to Mr. Southerne, where he alludes to the times which are the ſubject of Hudibras, ſuppoſes very pleaſantly, that when the Theatres were ſhut up, comedy appeared under another dreſs, and in another place, the Conventicle (oo) I write this in 1737.

" The ſun, long ſince, had in the lap,
" Of Thetis taken out his nap;
" And like a lobſter boil'd, the morn
" From black to red began to turn (61)."

(61) Hibernicus's Letters, pag. 79, 80. London 1729, 8vo.

He afterwards obſerves, " that there are innume-
" rable inſtances of laughter, where no perſon is ridi-
" culed, and where he who laughs does not compare
" himſelf to any thing whatſoever. What relation,
" ſays he, to our ſelves or to our affairs has that ſimile
" in Hudibras,

" Inſtead of trumpet and of drum,
" Which makes the warrior's ſtomach come,
" And whets men's valour, ſharp like beer
" By thunder turn'd to vinegar?

" The laughter is not here raiſed againſt either valour
" or martial muſic, but merely by the wild reſemblance
" of a mean event (62)." To ſhew that a reader may have the higheſt veneration for a noble, ſerious author, and at the ſame time admire the wit of one who had parodied finely upon his images, I may add the famous ſimile in Mr. Addiſon's Campaign, in which the Duke of Marlborough's calmneſs and preſence of mind, in the midſt of all the horror of battle, are compared to an angels who

(62) Idem, pag. 84, &c.

Rides in the whirlwind, and directs the ſtorm; and the parody made on it by our great Poet, where he repreſents Mr. LUN, in the Dunciad, in one of his theatrical flights. On this occaſion, I believe, there are very few but admire the nobleneſs of the original ſimile, and the wit of the Poet who has ſo finely burleſqued it. It is very poſſible that a fine writer, ſo far from being chagrined at a witty parody that ſhould be made on any part of his compoſitions, would himſelf be very much delighted with it. As Mr. de Scudery, in his commendatory verſes prefixed to Scarron's famous Traveſty, ſays of Virgil, that he would ſplit his ſides with laughing, were he to ſee his Æneid in ſo comical a diſguiſe.

Quel eſt ce déguiſement?
O quelle metamorphoſe,
O Dieu, la plaiſante choſe!
Le rire m'a ſuffoqué:
Et dans ce plaiſir extreme,
Virgile riroit lui même,
De ſe voir ſi bien maſqué (63).

(63) From the commendatory verſes prefixed to, Les Oeuvres de Monſieur Scarron, tom. 1. Amſterdam 1699.

[HH] Hit upon that point which is always ſure to divert multitudes.] This is humour, as the writer who is the boaſt of Ireland obſerves, in a paper where he makes ſome reflections on the celebrated Beggar's Opera. " Although, ſays he, an evil taſte be apt to prevail
" both here (Dublin) and in London, yet there is a " point, which whoſoever can rightly touch, will never " fail of pleaſing a very great majority; ſo great, that
" the diſlikers, out of dulneſs or affectation will be
" ſilent, and forced to fall in with the herd: the point
" I mean, is what we call humour, which in its per" fection is allowed to be much preferable to wit, if
" it be not rather the moſt uſeful and agreeable ſpecies
" of it (64)." After juſtly obſerving, that it is not peculiar to the Engliſh nation, and that very few have a taſte for, or can judge of the excellencies of Poetry and Eloquence, he ſays, that a taſte for humour is in ſome manner fixed to the very nature of man, and generally obvious to the vulgar, except upon ſubjects too refined, and ſuperior to their underſtanding... And as this taſte of humour is purely natural, ſo is humour itſelf; neither is it a talent confined to men of wit or learning; for we obſerve it ſometimes among common ſervants, and the meaneſt of the people, while the very owners are ignorant of the gift they poſſeſs (65). Speaking afterwards of critics, (the heavy part of them he muſt mean) " I " know very well, ſays he, that this happy talent is " contemptibly treated by critics, under the name of
" low humour or low Comedy; but I know likewiſe,
" that the Spaniards and Italians, who are allowed
" to have the moſt wit of any nation in Europe, do
" moſt excell in it, and do moſt eſteem it (66).

(64) The Intelligencer, Num. 3. pag. 15, 16. London 1729, 8vo.

(65) Idem, ibid.

(66) Idem, ibid.

[II] This Poem... is the idol of the High-Church party, as a late writer has obſerved.] " Hudibras,
" ſays he, which is a daily High-Church entertainment,
" and a pocket and travelling High-church companion,
" muſt neceſſarily have a very conſiderable effect, and
" cannot fail forming in men that humour and vein of " ridicule upon Diſſenters, which runs through that
" work (67)."

(67) A Diſcourſe concerning Ridicule and Irony in Writing, pag. 42. London 1729, 8vo.

[KK] Four lines of Hudibras uſed to be repeated by the diſaffected.]

He that impoſes an oath, makes it;
Not he that for convenience takes it;
Then how can any man be ſaid
To break an oath he never made (68)?

(68) Hudibras, Canto 2. Part 2 ver. 377, to 380, inclusive.

I believe theſe are the lines hinted at by Mr. Addiſon, in a famous political paper of his writing, where he ſpeaks of ſome who did not ſcruple to ridicule and make a jeſt of an oath. " A poor conceit, ſays he, of their " own, or a quotation out of Hudibras, ſhall make " them treat with levity an obligation wherein their " ſafety and welfare are concerned both as to this " world and the next. Raillery of this nature is enough " to make the hearer tremble (69), We may obſerve, that Mr. Butler puts the four lines abovementioned in the mouth of his Hudibras, whom, it is well known, he every where repreſents as a wrongheaded knave.

(69) Freeholder, num. 6. pag. 30. London 1716, 12mo.

ticle being her ſtage. As the Reformation which ſucceeded the death of King Charles I, was ſo very preciſe and ſevere, it was natural for a Poet of Mr. Fenton's airy genius to ſneer at it [LL]. Some Roman Catholics have introduced Hudibras, in the idle jokes they levelled againſt the Church of England writers; and one among the reſt rallies very impertinently a famous Engliſh Divine as follows: Sure the Doctor erred in his vocation: had he quitted all ſerious matters, and dedicated himſelf wholly to drollery and romance, with two or three years under Hudibras, he might have been a maſter in the faculty; the Stage might have been a gainer by it, and the Church of England would have been no loſer (pp). A noble author of our country has endeavoured to fix the rule and meaſure of ridicule [MM].

(pp) Preface to Stilling fleet againſt Stilling-fleet.

Whilſt I was compiling this life, I made all the enquiries poſſible concerning our Poet; and was told many particulars which were injurious to him. However, I afterwards had the great ſatisfaction to find they were only flying falſe reports; and indeed it was ſcarce poſſible but ſuch muſt be raiſed againſt a man, who had gained the greateſt reputation poſſible by ſatyrizing a party, and exhibiting it in the moſt ridiculous, and at the ſame time, moſt odious light. I was told that King Charles II gave Butler a handſome employment in the Cuſtom-houſe, but have ſince found that this was not true [NN]. I alſo was falſely informed that the abovementioned Monarch had beſtowed three thouſand pounds on our Poet, as a reward for his Hudibras; but that Butler ſoon ſpent it, and afterwards ſatyrized the royal benefactor [OO]. I was favoured with ſome particulars from a venerable Gentleman, whoſe dramatic pieces afford the moſt agreeable entertainment [PP]. It was ſome time before I could get an opportunity of [LL] It was natural for a Poet of Mr. Fenton's airy genius to ſneer at it.] The verſes are theſe.

An age moſt odious and accurſt enſued,
Diſcoloured with a pious Monarch's blood:
Whoſe fall when firſt the Tragic Virgin ſaw,
She fled, and left her province to the Law.
Her merry ſiſter ſtill purſued the game,
Her garb was altered, but her gifts the ſame.
She firſt reformed the muſcles of her face,
And learnt the ſolemn ſcrew for ſigns of grace;
Then circumcis'd her locks, and formed her tone.
By humming to a Tabor and a Drone;
Her eyes ſhe diſciplin'd preciſely right,
Both when to wink, and how to turn the white;
Thus baniſhed from the ſtage, ſhe gravely next
Aſſumed a cloak, and quibbled o'er a text.....
But when by miracles of mercy ſhewn,
Much ſuffering Charles regained his father's throne,
When peace and plenty overflowed the land,
She ſtrait pull'd off her ſattin cap and band:
Bade Wycherly be bold in her defence,
With pointed wit and energy of ſenſe:
Etheridge and Sidley joined him in her cauſe,
And all deſerved, and all received applauſe (70).

(70) Fenton's Poems, pag. 71, 72. London 1717, 8vo.

[MM] A noble author ... has endeavoured to fix the rule and meaſure of ridicule.] "How comes it to paſs, "that we appear ſuch cowards in reaſoning, and are "ſo afraid to ſtand the teſt of ridicule?——O! ſay "we, the ſubjects are too grave——Perhaps ſo; but "let us ſee firſt whether they are really grave or no: "for in the manner we may conceive them, they may "peradventure be very grave and weighty in our imagination; but very ridiculous and impertinent in "their own nature. Gravity is of the very eſſence of "impoſture. It does not only make us miſtake other "things, but is apt perpetually almoſt to miſtake itſelf. For even in common behaviour, how hard is "it for the grave character to keep long out of the limits of the formal one? We can never be too "grave, if we can be aſſured we are really what we "ſuppoſe. And we can never too much honour or "revere any thing for grave, if we are aſſured the "thing is grave, as we apprehend it. The main "point is to know always true gravity from the falſe: "and this can only be, by carrying the rule conſtantly "with us, and freely applying it not only to the things "about us, but to ourſelves. For if unhappily we "loſe the meaſure in ourſelves, we ſhall ſoon loſe it in "every thing elſe beſides. Now what rule or meaſure is there in the world, except in the conſidering "of the real temper of things, to find which are truly "ſerious, and which ridiculous? And how can this "be done, unleſs by applying the ridicule to ſee whether it will bear? But if we fear to apply this "rule in any thing, what ſecurity can we have againſt "the impoſture of formality in all things? We have "allowed ourſelves to be formaliſts in one point; and "the ſame formality may rule us as it pleaſes in all "others (71)."

(71) Lord Shaftſbury's Characteriſticks, vol. 1. pag. 11, 12. London 1727, 8vo, 4th edit.

[NN] King Charles II ... did not give Butler .... an employment in the Cuſtom-houſe.] I firſt applied myſelf to a worthy Gentleman, my friend (72), who, in the concluſion of his letter dated 14 July 1735, ſays, "I have aſked ſeveral Gentlemen if they ever heard "that the author of Hudibras was an Officer of the "Cuſtoms, but none remember any ſuch particular."

(72) Mr. Sc. Lazenby, Land-Waiter in the Port of London.

[OO] That the Monarch beſtowed .... three thouſand pounds on our Poet, as a reward for his Hudibras.] The perſon who informed me of this, declared, that the late Reverend Mr. Goſling, Sub-Dean of St. Paul's, had aſſured him, that the circumſtances relating to the recompence beſtowed by the King, and the ingratitude of our Poet, were fact. But being reſolved not to take things upon truſt, I wrote to the ſon, a Clergyman alſo, of the abovementioned reverend Gentleman, and he was pleaſed to favour me with the following anſwer.

"Sir,

"Your letter needed no apology, for I ſhould be "proud to give any aſſiſtance to a Gentleman, who is "ſo deſirous to do juſtice to perhaps the beſt natured "Prince and the moſt humorous Poet, England has to "boaſt of.

"With regard to the ſtory you mention, as related "by my father, I can hardly believe he told it; I am "ſure I never heard it from him.

"I have heard him ſay, that King Charles ordered "Butler a ſum of money (I believe it might be three "thouſand pounds) but the order being written in "figures, ſomebody through whoſe hands it paſſed, "by cutting off a cypher reduced it to three hundred, "which the Poet diſdained to accept of, and from "that time choſe to live in obſcurity.

"This I have heard him often tell, for he was fond "of talking of King Charles's days, and as fond of "quoting Hudibras, which occaſioned his frequent repeating of this ſtory.

"As to the place in the Cuſtom-houſe, I cannot ſay "that I remember any thing about it.

"I heartily wiſh ſucceſs to your deſign, and am "Canterbury July Yours, &c.
"21, 1735, William Goſling.

"P. S. I ought to tell you, that my father was not "acquainted perſonally with Butler, but told his "ſtory as what was the report at Court."

[PP] A ... Gentleman ... whoſe dramatic pieces &c.] This is the ingenious T. Southerne Eſq; author of Oroonoko &c. who, on my deſiring a Gentleman (73), to write to him, he being then in Cheſhire, in order to get ſome particulars relating to Butler cleared up, if poſſible, was ſo kind as to write the following anſwer.

(73) Tho. Ledard Eſq; author of the Naval Hiſtory, &c.

"Sir,

of ſeeing the ſo often mentioned Charles Longueville Eſq;, who, at his coming to town, was ſo kind as to ſolve all my difficulties; and, as I read over this Life of our Poet, was pleaſed to make the corrections which the reader has ſeen in the courſe of it; and to favour me with the particulars mentioned below [QQ], which will be a ſufficient anſwer to the many aſperſions that have been caſt on Butler's memory, and tranſmit it to poſterity in the faireſt light. I never met, in the courſe of my reading, but with one perſon who preſumed to cenſure Butler as a writer [RR]. I muſt take notice of ſome miſtakes of the learned Father Niceron [SS].

" Sir,

" I ſhould be glad to give you any certain information " relating to Hudibras Butler, but cannot any from my " ſelf, but can direct you to a Gentleman, whoſe father " was Mr. Butler's greateſt friend, ſupported him in " his age, and buried him at his own charge in Co- " vent-Garden Church-yard, the North ſide of the " Church. The Gentleman I ſpeak of is Charles " Longueville Eſq; a Member of Parliament, who lives " in Norfolk Street in the Strand, and knows more of " him than any perſon elſe. He has Butler's picture, " a half length, which he values much. As for my " ſelf, I never heard of Butler's extravagance in con- " founding ſo large a bounty of the King's as three " thouſand pounds, nor that the King's bounty was " in any compariſon of that ſum; I never heard that " he had a handſome place in the Cuſtom-houſe, nor " of his profuſeneſs that obliged him to ſell it and " ſpend the money ariſing from the ſale, nor that he " wrote a ſevere Poem againſt the King and his Miſ- " treſſes (74). I hope the perſons concerned to write " the character of ſo great a man, in his way, will " not defame him to poſterity, by giving any account " in print like what you have heard without the ful- " leſt proof, which you are moſt likely to have from " the abovementioned Charles Longueville Eſq; in " Norfolk Street ... I am

" Sir
" July 23, 1735, from Yours, &c.
" Woodcote. Thomas Southerne.

" P. S. Butler did not die in a garret."

(74) This, among other particulars, I had been told, but it proves a falſity. The circumſtance I ſuppoſe which gave riſe to ſuch a report was, there is inſerted in the remains aſcribed to Butler, an obſcene Poem, which is wrote with great virulence againſt King Charles II, his miſtreſſes &c.

[QQ] Charles Longueville Eſq; ... was pleaſed to favour me with the particulars mentioned below.] King Charles II, who was a prodigious admirer of Hudibras, and ſometimes ſaw the author of it, never ordered him* but one gratuity, and that was three hundred pounds, which had this compliment paid to it, that it paſt all the offices without any fee, at the ſollicitation of Mr. William Longueville of the Temple (75); Lord Danby being at that time High-Treaſurer. Mr. Butler never had any employment in the Cuſtom-houſe, or elſewhere. He was a very modeſt man, and did not ſhine in converſation till he had taken a chearful glaſs, but was no drinker. He ſaw but little company, except what he was in ſome meaſure forced into; his Hudibras having gained him ſuch reputation, that moſt perſons of diſtinction at that time were extremely deſirous of his company, and yet not one of them contributed to the advancement of his fortune. The greateſt part of the remains aſcribed to Butler are ſpurious, and among the reſt the Poem againſt King Charles II, his Miſtreſſes, &c. Our Poet was not profuſe in his diſpoſition; his circumſtances indeed having always been ſo narrow, that he never had an opportunity of being ſo. He lived for ſome years in Roſe Street Covent-Garden, and probably died there. Mr. W. Longueville would fain have buried Butler in Weſtminſter Abbey; and ſpoke in that view to ſome of thoſe wealthy perſons, who had admired him ſo much in his life-time; offering to pay his part, but none of them would contribute; upon which Mr. Longueville buried him with the greateſt privacy, (but at the ſame time very decently) in Covent-Garden Church-yard, at his own expence; himſelf and ſeven or eight perſons more following the corps to the grave. Charles Longueville Eſq; has a half length of our Poet, which was given his father by the late Earl of Rocheſter (76), for whom Butler ſat to Sir Peter Lely. He is drawn in a night gown and peruke; and his countenance, which is pale, ſeems thoughtful, aud no way expreſſive of the gaiety that appears in all his compoſitions. A proof of the great honour and honeſty of our Poet is this; that upon his being ordered the three hundred pounds abovementioned by the King, he called to mind that he owed more than that ſum to different perſons from whom he had borrowed monies, or otherwiſe contracted debts; for which reaſon he intreated Mr. Longueville to pay away the whole gratuity, who accordingly did ſo, and Butler did not receive a ſhilling of it. But notwithſtanding the many diſappointments our Poet met with, Mr. Longueville is firmly perſuaded that he never was reduced to any thing like want and beggary, and that he did not die in any perſon's debt.

* How great the ſervice! how trifling the recompence!

(75) This Gentleman was father to Mr. Longueville, to whom I am obliged for ſo many particulars.

(76) Dr. Mead has alſo a picture of Butler, drawn by Mr. Zouſt. The ingenious Mr. Wood, Painter in Blooomſbury Square, (a very great admirer of Hudibras) has ſeveral ſketches, repreſenting ſome of the principal incidents in that Poem, drawn with the utmoſt nature, vivacity and humour, by that great Hiſtory Painter Mr. Cook, an Engliſhman, who ſeems to have been as well acquainted with the Poem as the author himſelf.

[RR] ... but one perſon who preſumed to cenſure Butler as a writer.] This is the anonymous author of a Seſſion of the Poets, who does not expreſs himſelf either wittily or genteely on this occaſion. His lines are theſe.

Then Hudibras boldly demanded the Bays,
But Apollo bade him not be ſo fierce;
And adviſed him to lay aſide making his Plays,
Since he already began to write worſe and worſe (77).

(77) Dryden's Miſcellanies, vol. 2. pag. 92. 5th edit. London 1727, 12mo.

As this author inſinuates that Butler attempted to write Dramatic Pieces, I conſulted Mr. Longueville upon that ſubject, who told me that he believed our Poet never had any ſuch deſign.

[SS] Some miſtakes of Father Niceron.] Beſides two or three errors he was led into by Wood, and the anonymous author of Butler's life, Father Niceron ſhould not have barely ſaid that Butler was buried in London, in the Church-yard of St. Paul's (78), but ought to have added Covent-Garden, otherwiſe his readers may ſuppoſe it to be the cathedral of St. Paul's. He ſays afterwards, that to the Poem of Hudibras is annexed two epiſtles in verſe; the one from Hudibras to his wife, and the other from Hudibras's wife to her huſband (79). Now this is an error; the woman in queſtion not being Hudibras's wife, but his miſtreſs. What miſled Father Niceron, or the perſon he copied, I ſuppoſe, was the titles of thoſe epiſtles, viz. An heroical Epiſtle of Hudibras to his Lady &c. which a tranſlator who had not read the epiſtles in queſtion, might naturally ſuppoſe to mean wife.

(78) Memoires pour ſervir à l'hiſtoire des Hommes illuſtres &c. tom. 9. pag. 270. Paris 1729, 12mo.

(79) Idem, ibid.

I.

(a) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 940. 2d edit. London 1721.
(b) Idem, ibid.
(c) Antonii Hall Præfat. ad Joan. Hudſoni Editionem Flavii Joſephi, Oxon. 1720, fol. 2 vol.
(d) Ibid.
(e) Ibid.

☞HUDSON (Dr. JOHN), was ſon of Mr. James Hudſon (a), and born at Widehope (b) or Wedehop (c) near Cockermouth in Cumberland in the year 1662 [A]. He was educated in Grammar-learning by Mr. Jerom Hechſtetter (d), and in 1676 he came a poor ſerving child in Queen's College in Oxford, and applied himſelf, under the tuition of Mr. Thomas Croſthwait, to the ſtudy of Philoſophy, in which he made a vaſt progreſs, as well as in polite Literature (e). July the 4th 1681 he took the degree of Bachelor of Arts (f), and on the 12th of February 1684 that of Maſter of Arts (g), and afterwards that of Doctor of Divinity. In the beginning of 1684 he was elected a Fellow

(f) Wood, Faſti Oxon. vol. 2. col. 217.

(g) Idem, ibid. col. 225.

(1) Athen. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 940.
(2) In Præfat. ad Joh. Hudſoni Edit. Flav. Joſephi.

[A] Born ... in 1662.] Mr. Wood informs us (1), that he was fourteen years of age, when he was entered into Queen's College in the beginning of the year 1676. Dr. Hall obſerves (2), that he was born ſoon after the Reſtoration, paulo poſt inſtauratam apud Britannos Monarchiam; and that he was about fifty ſeven years old, when he died on the 27th of November 1719.

Fellow of Univerſity College, where he became an eminent tutor (b), and celebrated for his extenſive learning, which from evident in his works [B]. In July 1701, upon the death of Dr. Thomas Hyde, he ſucceeded him in the place of Keeper of the Bodleian Library

(b) Idem, Ath. Oxon. ubi ſupra.

[B] His works.] They are as follow. I. M. Vellei Paterculi quæ ſuperſunt, cum variis Lectionibus optimarum Editionum, doctorum virorum conjecturis & caſtigationibus, & Indice locupletiſſimo. Oxon, 1693, in 8vo. This book was publiſhed at the charge of Arthur Charlet, D. D. Maſter of Univerſity College, to be given to his ſcholars and friends, at New-Year's-Day 1692 (3). To this edition are prefixed Mr. Henry Dodwell's Annales Velleiani; but Mr. Hudſon thought proper to omit them in the ſecond edition of Paterculus at Oxford 1711 in 8vo, becauſe thoſe Annales had been printed ſeparately in 1698; and he has ſubſtituted in the room of them two Chronological Tables, one by Mr. Dodwell, and the other by Cellarius. The notes likewiſe in the firſt edition are inlarged in the ſecond. II. Thucydidis de Bello Peloponneſiaco Libri VIII. Oxon, 1696, in Folio. This edition is a very beautiful one, and well diſpoſed. The Latin verſion of Æmilius Portus is printed in two columns at the bottom of the page, with ſome ſhort notes. There is one great advantage in this edition, that we find the years of the Peloponneſian war, of the Olympiads, and the foundation of Rome, marked at the top of every page. Mr. Dodwell was the author of this, who publiſhed in 1702 at Oxford, the reaſons of that Chronology in his Annales Thucydidei. III. Geographiæ Veteris Scriptores Græci minores Græce & Latine, cum diſſertationibus & annotationibus Henrici Dodwelli: accedunt Geographica Arabica cum Notis. Oxon, 1698, in 8vo. This volume begins with the Periplus of Hanno the Carthaginian, which Iſaac Voſſius conſidered as the moſt antient remain, that has eſcaped the injury of time. But Mr. Dodwell has propoſed very ſtrong reaſons why it cannot juſtly pretend to ſo great antiquity; and ſhewn, that Hanno did not write the Periplus mentioned by the antients, but ſome Greek, who was a friend to the Carthaginians; and that the Periplus, which we have extant, is very different from that cited by Pomponius Mela, Pliny, Solinus, &c. Next follows the Periplus of Scylax, which has likewiſe been eſteemed very antient, and vindicated in point of antiquity from the exceptions of the two Voſſius's by Gronovius. But Mr. Dodwell has ſhewn, that this Scylax is not the antient one quoted by Herodotus, but another, who was contemporary with Polybius; and that what he borrowed from other writers, might make a ſhew of antiquity, by which means the learned may have been led into miſtakes about his age. After this follows an Epitome of Agatharchides concerning the Red-Sea, which piece Mr. Dodwell ſhews to have been written in the beginning of the reign of Ptolemy Alexander, King of Egypt, to whom this author was Tutor and Library-Keeper. The next piece is a Periplus of the Red-Sea, commonly aſcribed to Arrian, though falſly, as was ſuſpected by Salmaſius, Voſſius, and Hardouin; who imagined, that the author of it lived in the time of Auguſtus. Mr. Dodwell agrees with them, that Arrian could not be the author of this piece, but differs from them in all other reſpects; firſt demonſtrating that it was written after Trajan and Hadrian, and conſequently not by Arrian; and then offering very probable reaſons, that the writer lived under the Emperors Marcus and Verus. Then follows a Periplus of the Euxine-Sea, which bears the name of Arrian, and was undoubtedly written by him in the time of Adrian, as the inſcription ſhews. But it appearing that Arrian was Prefect of Cappadocia, when he drew up this account of the people bordering on the Euxine-Sea for the Emperor Hadrian, Mr. Dodwell concludes, that it was written about the year of Chriſt 137. In the next place we have another piece of Arrian taken out of his Indica, which contains the voyage of Nearchus by the command of Alexander the Great. This Mr. Dodwell ſuppoſes to have been finiſhed by Arrian after his Expedition of Alexander, and before the Geography of Ptolemy was known to the world. Dr. Hudſon having a manuſcript of Arrian in the Bodleian-Library, has given us from thence ſeveral emendations of the text; and tells us, that the reſt of Arrian's works might receive much light and improvement from that antient copy. Next follows the Periplus of Marcianus Heracleota, firſt publiſhed by Hœſchelius, with ſeveral other pieces of the ſame kind. But this had not the good fortune to be reprinted or tranſlated, till Dr. Hudſon beſtowed his pains upon it; who has by conjecture corrected a great number of paſſages, and annexed to it the fragments of Artemidorus and Menippus. In the laſt he gives us a Periplus of the Euxine Sea, which we owe to Iſaac Voſſius; but neither he, nor any one elſe, has yet been able to recover the author's name. His age likewiſe, as well as that of Marcianus Heracleota, is very uncertain. The ſecond volume of Dr. Hudſon's edition of the Geographiæ Veteris Scriptores Græci minores was publiſhed at Oxford 1703 in 8vo, with a Latin verſion and notes; to which are prefixed ſix diſſertations by Mr. Dodwell. The firſt Geographer in this volume is Dicæarchus, who has partly in verſe, and partly in proſe, given us the ſtate of Greece in his time, with a deſcription of mount Pelion. Mr. Dodwell thinks, that Dicæarchus wrote the Poetical part towards the latter end of the CXVIth Olympiad, and the Proſe about the end of the CXVIIth Olympiad. With regard to the fragment concerning mount Pelion, he ſuppoſes it to be written by Dicæarchus after the ſecond year of the CXXIſt Olympiad. The next Geographical writer, whoſe fragments Dr. Hudſon has preſented us with, is Iſidorus Characenus, whoſe tract de Manſionibus Parthicis, was publiſhed by Hœſchelius in his Collection; and afterwards, when it was enlarged by the Paris edition, it was communicated by Fabricius to our Editor. Mr. Dodwell is of opinion, that this Iſidorus wrote after the year 36, and before the year 162; that Pliny's Iſidorus Characenus was a quite different perſon from this Iſidorus; that he only wrote a Periplus, whilſt the other wrote a Periegeſis; that the latter very probably lived nearer the time of Lucian than that of Pliny, and that Solinus was more modern than our Geographer. The next Geographical writer is Scymnus of the iſland of Chios, whoſe deſcription of the world is written in verſe, and tranſlated into Latin by Paulus Vindingius. This piece was falſly aſcribed to Marcianus of Heraclea, and publiſhed under his name by Hœſchelius in 1600. Dr. Hudſon has added ſeveral fragments of Scymnus collected and tranſlated by Lucas Holſtenius. Mr. Dodwell tells us, that we have two ſufficient marks of the time, wherein Scymnus lived, taken from the ſucceſſion of the Kings of Pergamos and Bithynia, ſince he dedicates his works to Nicomedes, King of Bithynia; and he aſſerts, that Scymnus was born in Varro's 610th year, and could not poſſibly write either before the 625th, or after the 679th year. Then follows Plutarch's little tract concerning Rivers, which was firſt publiſhed in Greek only by Sigiſmundus Gelenius at Baſil, in 1533. A more beautiful and correct edition was publiſhed at Tholouſe in 1615, by Philip James Mauſſacus, who tranſlated it into Latin, and illuſtrated it with a great many notes. Dr. Hudſon has reviſed this tranſlation, which he carefully collated with the verſion of Natalis Comes, and Hadrian Turnebus. Mr. Dodwell obſerves, that the learned are divided in their opinions about the author of this treatiſe. Some aſcribe it to Parthenius, others to Antonius Liberalis, others to Plutarch, but not the Chæronenſian; whilſt Mauſſacus alone attributes it to that Plutarch. Mr. Dodwell is perſuaded, that it belongs not to Parthenius, nor to Antonius, but to one, whoſe real name was Plutarch; though who he was, is very uncertain. Agathemerus follows next, whoſe piece Godefridus Vendelinus had deſigned to have publiſhed, but was prevented by death. His copy fell into the hands of Tenullius, who publiſhed it at Amſterdam. 1671, with a Latin verſion and notes. After this Gronovius rendered it more compleat by making ſome few alterations in the text, but a great many in the Latin tranſlation, much for the better. Dr. Hudſon follows this edition of Gronovius. Mr. Dodwell remarks, that Agathemerus had conſulted Ptolemy's Geography, and conſequently wrote after Ptolemy; though he was not much later than that writer, ſince he mentions Spain and Gaul, which were names but lately in uſe among

(3) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 941.

Library in the Univerſity of Oxford; which place he held till his death. In 1712 he was appointed Principal of St. Mary Hall in that Univerſity, at the ſollicitation of Dr. John Radcliffe, the Phyſician (i). His health declined a conſiderable time before his death; but at laſt being ſeized with a dropſy, it proved fatal to him on the 27th of November 1719, being then about fifty ſeven years of age. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Robert Harriſon, by whom he had a daughter, who married July the 29th 1731 Mr. John Boyce, ſon of Sir John Boyce of the city of Oxford (l). Dr. Hudſon held a correſpondence with the moſt eminent learned men of his age; particularly

(i) Hall, ubi ſupra.

(k) Idem, ibid.

(l) See a Pamphlet intitled, The Contract violated, or the Haſty Marriage, printed at London 1734, in 8vo.

the Greeks, when Agathemerus wrote his treatiſe. Mr. Dodwell further obſerves, that our Geographer was more modern than Marcianus Heracleota, and that he wrote in the interval between Septimius Severus, and Gallienus, ſince he mentions Babylon's being in poſſeſſion of the Romans, which was not reduced into a Roman Province till the time of Severus in the year of Chriſt 201; and by conſequenee our author was later than him. The laſt piece of Geography contained in this volume is the Epitome of Strabo, never printed but once before, which was at Baſil in 1533, to which Dr. Hudſon has added the Latin verſion of Jerom Gemuſæus, corrected in a great many places. And that we may the better compare this Epitome with the original, our author has all along taken notice of the paſſages in Strabo, which correſpond with the words of the epitomizer. Mr. Dodwell tells us, that the author of this epitome was of later date than Ptolemy, Arrian, and Marcian, and that he did not imitate Marcian in his manner of epitomizing, ſince the titles of Marcian's Abridgments were always Ἐπιτομαὶ, whilſt that of this author is Χρηστομαθία, a term not known in Marcian's days. He remarks, that the epitomizer of Strabo lived when the Sclavonians were in poſſeſſion of Macedonia, Greece, Epirus, and Peloponneſus; which he proves from the words of that writer: Καὶ νῦν ὃ πᾶσαν Ἤπειρον καὶ Ἑλλάδα σχεδὸν, καὶ Πελοπόννησον, καὶ Μακεδονίαν, Σκύθαι Σκλάβοι νέμονται: From which words Mr. Dodwell remarks, that we may gather two marks of the time, wherein this epitomizer lived, viz. that he was not older than the time, when the Sclavonians became maſters of the countries, which he mentions, nor later than the age, in which they loſt that empire. Mr. Dodwell concludes, that they were not intire maſters of thoſe Provinces till the time of Baſil the Bulgarian Prince, between the years 976 and 996; and that it was about that time the epitomizer lived. The third volume of our author's edition of the Geographiæ Veteris Scriptores Græci minores, was printed at Oxford, 1712, in 8vo, and contains eleven pieces; the firſt of which is a Latin extract of the Navigation of the Boſphorus Thracius, written in Greek by Dionyſius Byzantinus. The ſecond is a Deſcription of the Euxine Sea, falſely aſcribed to Arrian. The third is a Deſcription of the World and of the Nations by an anonymous Latin author, who lived under Conſtans and Conſtantinus. The fourth piece contains various readings on an anonymous Latin Geographer of Ravenna. The fifth contains the ſituation of places in Arabia by Ptolemy, corrected by an antient manuſcript. Mr. John Greaves, Profeſſor of Aſtronomy in the Univerſity of Oxford, had fitted this piece for the preſs. The ſixth is the Deſcription of Choraſmia and Mawaralnahra, or of the countries on the north ſide of the river Oxus, taken from the Tables of Abulfeda Iſmael, Prince of Hamah in Syria. He wrote that work in Arabic in the year 1221; and Mr. Greaves publiſhed it at London in Arabic and Latin, in the year 1650. The ſeventh is a Deſcription of Arabia Felix, and the adjacent Seas, by the ſame author. The eighth contains two Tables of the Longitude and Latitude of the ſouthern places of Africa and Aſia, from the Canary Iſlands to China. The firſt is of Naſſir-Eddin, a famous Perſian, and the ſecond of Ulug-Beig, a Tartar or Tatar, as the eaſtern nations pronounce it, who was grand-ſon to Tamerlane. Mr. Greaves had alſo publiſhed them. The ninth piece is an extract of the Perſian Syntaxis of George Chryſococca, containing a Catalogue of the Longitudes and Latitudes of the principal cities, particularly of Arabia. The tenth is ſuch another Index of remarkable cities by Ptolemy, taken from a manuſcript, and collated with others. The eleventh piece is concerning the conſtellations of the two Hemiſpheres by the ſame author, with the degrees of Longitude and Latitude reviſed by Dr. Edmund Halley. Theſe tables are only in Greek. The fourth volume was printed at Oxford, 1712, in 8vo. It contains a poſthumous Diſſertation of Mr. Dodwell upon Dionyſius the Geographer, wherein he aſſerts, in oppoſition to the common opinion, that this Dionyſius is not the ſame with him, who is mentioned by Pliny, and was contemporary with Auguſtus, and born at Charax-Spaſinis, a city of Suſiana, the country of Iſidorus abovementioned; but another of Corinth, and who lived after Caracalla. This diſſertation contains alſo ſeveral remarks upon Dionyſius. Then follows Dionyſius in Greek and Latin, with Euſtathius's Commentary ſubjoined. There are four Maps in this edition; the firſt of Africa; the ſecond of Europe; the third of Greece, and the neighbouring parts of Italy, and thoſe of leſſer Aſia; and the fourth of Aſia. Dr. Halley has ſet down in them the degrees of Longitude and Latitude, which had been omitted in the maps of the former edition of Dionyſius of Oxford. Next follow, 1. The Deſcription of the Earth by Rufus Feſtus Avienus, in 1393 Hexameter verſes. 2. That of Priſcian, in 1087 verſes. 3. The Deſcription of the Sea-Coaſts by the ſame Rufus Feſtus Avienus abovementioned, in Iambic verſes, whereof we have only 705. Under the text of theſe Poems are placed the various readings of the manuſcripts and of the editions, with the conjectures and remarks of ſeveral authors. There are likewiſe under Avienus's two poems the conjectures and corrections of our author and Dr. Hody. Theſe Latin Geographers are followed by the Greek Paraphraſe of Dionyſius, and ſome Scholia never publiſhed before, and ſome ſmall fragments relating to Geography. Laſtly there are corrections, various readings, and remarks by Dr. Hudſon and other learned men, particularly by Holſtenius, on Dionyſius and Euſtathius. IV. Dionyſii Halicarnaſſenſis Opera omnia Græce & Latine cum Annotationibus. Oxon, 2 Tomes in Folio, 1704. Dr. Hudſon's Preface to the firſt Tome is addreſſed to Laurentius Alexander Zacigni, Keeper of the Vatican Library, and to James Perizonius, Profeſſor of Rhetoric, Hiſtory, and Greek at Leyden; in which he returns his acknowledgments to thoſe learned men for their aſſiſtance, and particularly to Zacigni, who had communicated to him the collation of Dionyſius with a copy in the Vatican-Library. The Doctor has made uſe of ſeveral editions of that author, and kept cloſe to the Greek copy of Sylburgius with reſpect to the Greek text, and at the bottom of each page ſet down the various readings of the Vatican Manuſcript, collated partly by Joſephus de Juliis, and partly by J. Theodorus Calliergus. Among theſe various readings he has interſperſed, where it was neceſſary, ſeveral notes of Sylburgius, Portus, Stephens, Caſaubon, Valeſius, and others, with ſome remarks of his own. As to the Latin verſion, he thought fit to make uſe of Portus's, which he has corrected in ſeveral places, and divided into ſections for the greater eaſe of thoſe, who are not very well verſed in Greek. In the Urſinian fragments he has followed the verſion of Stephens, and in the Peireſcian that of Valeſius. To theſe he has added an Appendix by Sylburgius de Legibus veterum Romanorum; becauſe by it the mutilated paſſage of Dionyſius, pag. 689, may in ſome meaſure be applied. Laſtly he has at the end of the ſecond volume given us Mr. Dodwell's Chronology for the clearing up the ſeries and times of the Hiſtory down to the days of Auguſtus; which will be of very great uſe for Livy's Hiſtory likewiſe; and Mr. Dodwell has added the Chronology on the pages of the Hiſtory. To the firſt volume are prefixed the teſtimonies larly Muratori, Salvini, and Bianchini, in Italy; Boivin, Kuſter, and Michael Lequien, the editor of Damaſcenus, in France; Godfrey Olearius, John Burchard Menckenius, John Chriſtopher Wolfius, Henry Lewis Schurtzfleiſch, John George Eccard, and John Albert Fabricius, in Germany; Eric Benzelius in Sweden; Frederic Roſtgard in Denmark; James Perizonius, Hadrian Reland and John Le Clerc in Holland; beſides his intimacy with all the great men of his own country (m). Dr. Anthony Hall tells us (n), that he was a man of great probity, an agreeable countenance, and moderate ſtature, and enjoyed a very vigorous conſtitution till he broke it with his intenſe application to his ſtudies.

(m) Hall, ubi ſupra.

(n) Ibid.

teſtimonies concerning Dionyſius and his Antiquities by Strabo, Plutarch, Euſebius, and others. In the Preface to the ſecond Tome, addreſſed to Michael Lequien, he makes his acknowledgments to that Gentleman for collating the works of Dionyſius with ſeveral manuſcripts, and communicating the ſame to him. In the ſecond Tome the Doctor has ranged all Dionyſius's works relating to Rhetoric and Criticiſm in the ſame order, that they are in the edition of Sylburgius; but that the true diſpoſition of them may be diſtinguiſhed from the vulgar one, he has given us a catalogue of the works, both theſe that are extant, and thoſe that are loſt. With regard to the Greek text he has generally followed the edition of Sylburgius, which he has corrected in many places, as well as the Latin verſions. V. Dionyſii Longini de ſublimitate Libellus, cum Præfatione de Vitâ & Scriptis Longini, notis, indicibus, variis Lectionibus. Oxon, 1710, in 4to, 1718 in 8vo. This edition is a very beautiful one. The notes are very ſhort, as all thoſe of Dr. Hudſon are. VI. Mœris Atticiſta de Vocibus Atticis & Hellenicis. Gregorius Martinus de Græcarum Literarum pronuntiatione. Oxon, 1712, in 8vo. This piece of Mœris, whom ſome manuſcripts call Eumærides, though well known by means of Photius, and by being cited by a great many learned men, had never been printed till now. The letter of Gregory Martinus was added only to make the volume of a reaſonable ſize. Martinus in this Letter defends the modern pronunciation of the Greek language with great learning and ſpirit. VII. Fabularum Æſopicarum Collectio quotquot Græcè reperiuntur. Accedit Interpretatio Latina. Oxon, 1718, in 8vo. Dr. Hudſon publiſhed this edition of Eſop's Fables for the uſe of thoſe, who begin to learn the Greek tongue. VIII. Flavii Joſephi Opera quæ reperiri potuerunt omnia. Ad Codd. MSS. diligenter recenſuit, novâ Verſione donavit, & notis illuſtravit Joannes Hudſon. Oxon, 1720, in two volumes folio. This edition is the moſt exact of any which had ever been publiſhed of that author. The Doctor died while it was in the preſs; and Dr. Anthony Hall, who married his widow, took the care of printing the laſt ſheets. T.

☞HUET (PETER DANIEL), a very learned French writer [A] in the XVIIth Century, was ſon of Daniel Huet, Eſq; and Iſabella Pillon de Bertouville, and was born

[A] A very learned French writer.] His works are as follow. I. De Interpretatione Libri duo. Paris, 1661, in 4to. Stadæ, 1680, in 12mo. Hague, 1683, in 8vo, with his Treatiſe concerning the original of Romances, tranſlated into Latin. This book is written in the form of a Dialogue between Iſaac Caſaubon, Fronto Ducæus the Jeſuit, and Thuanus. Monſieur de Segrais tells us (1), that nothing can be added to this treatiſe either with reſpect to beauty of ſtile, ſtrength of reaſoning, or variety of learning, which was very extraordinary in a perſon ſo young as Monſieur Huet then was. II. Origenis Commentaria in ſacram Scripturam, Græce Latinè, cum Latinâ Interpretatione, Notis, & Obſervationibus Petri Danielis Huetii. Roan, 1668, two volumes in folio. Cologne, 1685, three volumes in Folio. III. L'Origine des Romans. Paris, 1670, in 12mo. London, 1672, in 12mo, tranſlated into Engliſh. Amſterdam, 1679, in 16mo, tranſlated into Low Dutch by Mr. Broekhuiſen, Hague, 1683, in 8vo, tranſlated into Latin by Mr. Piron, and ſubjoined to his book de Interpretatione. Paris, 1685, 1693, 1709, in 12mo, with an addition of a Letter concerning Honoré d'Urfe, author of Aſtrea the Romance. In 1715 there was publiſhed at London in 12mo an Engliſh tranſlation under the following title: The Hiſtory of Romances; an Enquiry into their Original; Inſtructions for compoſing them; an Account of the moſt eminent Authors; with Characters and curious Obſervations upon the beſt Performances of that Kind. Written in Latin by Huetius: made Engliſh by Mr. Stephen Lewis. This tranſlator is miſtaken in aſſerting, that Monſieur Huet wrote this piece in Latin; ſo that it is evident that he never ſaw the original. IV. Diſcours prononcé a l'Academie Françoiſe. Paris, 1674, in 4to. V. Animadverſiones in Manilium & Scaligeri Notas, publiſhed at the end of Monſieur de la Faye's Manilius ad uſum Delphini. Paris, 1679, in 4to. The deſign of Monſieur in his notes is to ſhew, that Joſeph Scaliger ought not to have conſidered his edition of Manilius as an accurate or conſiderable performance. VI. Demonſtratio Evangelica. Paris, 1679, and 1687, in Folio. Amſterdam, 1680, in 8vo, in two volumes, publiſhed by Chriſtopher Sandius. Amſterdam, 1694, in 4to. Paris, 1690, in Folio, recognita, caſtigata, & amplificata. Leipſic, 1694, 1704, and 1722, in 4to. To ſupport the title of this work he ſhews, that religion is founded upon moral demonſtrations, depending on certain experience, and the unanimous conſent of mankind. He diſpoſes the principles after the method of Geometricians in definitions, poſtulata, and axioms. He endeavours to prove, that they are no leſs certain than Geometrical demonſtrations; from whence he concludes, that ſince the Chriſtian religion has as much or more certainty than what the human mind believes to be moſt certain, namely Geometry; it is a prodigious inſtance of infatuation to deſpiſe it, and a ſtrange obſtinacy to contradict it. Theſe principles being laid down, the author infers his demonſtrations, which conſiſt in ten propoſitions, which amount to this: That the books of the Old and New Teſtament are true: that thoſe of the Old Teſtament contain ſeveral Prophecies of the Meſſiah: that thoſe prophecies are accompliſhed in the Meſſiah: that the books of the New relate facts and miracles, which cannot reaſonably be doubted, and which prove invincibly the truth of the Chriſtian Religion. To evince the genuineneſs of the books of the Old Teſtament, he examines the authority and antiquity of every book in particular. He ſhews that the Pentateuch was written by Moſes, and anſwers the objections of Spinoſa. He aſſerts, that all the antient Deities of the Phœnicians, Egyptians, Perſians, Indians, Northern and Weſtern nations, and even of ſome of the Americans, Greeks, and Italians, were only Moſes in ſeveral diſguiſes: for inſtance, that the Adonis of the Phœnicians, the Mercury, Oſiris, Serapis, Anubis, and other Deities of the Egyptians, the Zoroaſter of the Perſians, the Deities of the Weſtern nations, Apollo, Priapus, Æſculapius, Prometheus, and other Gods of the Greeks, Janus, Faunus, Vertumnus of the Latins; in ſhort all the fabulous Deities are only Moſes, whoſe Hiſtory has been diſguiſed. He treats of the antient Greek verſions of the books of the Old Teſtament, of the Hebrew language, of the Canon of the ſacred books of the Old Teſtament, and of every thing relating to the critical knowledge and antiquity of thoſe books. He vindicates the truth of the Hiſtory of the New Teſtament. But the moſt conſiderable part of this work is that, in which he ſhews that the Prophecies of the Meſſiah contained in the Old Teſtament are accompliſhed in the perſon of Chriſt. To the edition of 1690 he prefixed a Preface in anſwer to ſome born at Caen in Normandy February the 8th 1630. He loſt his father at the age of eighteen months, and his mother four years after; and was delivered to his guardians, who were very negligent of him, and put him out to board in the city, where though he had but little aſſiſtance and bad examples before him, he paſſed through his courſe of humanity-ſtudies before he was thirteen years of age. In the proſecution of his philoſophical ſtudies he happened upon an excellent Profeſſor, Father Mambrun, a Jeſuit, who after Plato's example directed him to begin with learning a little Geometry. Our author went farther in it than he deſired, and contracted ſuch a reliſh for Geometry, that he made it his chief ſtudy, and in a manner ſlighted the writings which his maſter read to him. He went through all the other parts of the Mathematics, and maintained public theſes at Caen, a thing never before done in that city. Having paſſed through his claſſes, it was his buſineſs to ſtudy the Law, and to take his degrees in it. But two books publiſhed objections againſt this work. His opinion, that Moſes is to be found in the greateſt part of the Deities of the Phœnicians, Egyptians, Greeks, &c. had met with moſt oppoſition. He affirms, that this was not impertinent to his ſubject, ſince proving the antiquity of Moſes was proving at the ſame time the antiquity of the books of which he was author. Now nothing ſhews this antiquity more clearly, than to prove that what the antients eſteemed moſt antient and venerable, their Gods and Heroes, were nothing elſe but Moſes. It is allowed, that this would be of great advantage; but the evidence of theſe arguments is not ſo readily admitted. If Monſieur Huet had given them as conjectures, or well imagined co-incidences, they might have paſſed; but they will not be received as demonſtrations. Beſides, this was not believed to be his intention; and all that he alledges in juſtification of himſelf, proves only, that he might urge ſuch kind of arguments, ſince ſeveral writers had done ſo before him. Artapanus maintained that Mercury and Muſæus were Moſes; Voſſius the Elder and Bochart have affirmed the ſame of Bacchus; Juſtin Martyr of Mnevis an Egyptian God; Bochart of Typhon. Voſſius aſſerted that Hercules is the copy of Joſua; Bochart, that Saturn and his three ſons, Jupiter, Neptune, and Pluto, were formed upon Noah and his ſons; Apollo Pythius upon Phut; Mercury, upon Chanaam or Jethro, the father-in-law of Moſes; Bacchus, upon Nimrod; Prometheus, upon Magog; Apis, Serapis, and Mnevis, upon Joſeph; Ilithus, upon Lilith; Silenus, upon Shiloh, who is the Meſſiah. Some have conjectured that Zoroaſter was the ſame with Moſes; that Ham is Miſraim, or Japhet, or Ehus, or Aſſuerus, or Nimrod. A learned man has likewiſe affirmed, that Jabel and Jubal are Mercury and Apollo; that Ada and Zilla the wives of Lamech, are Juno and Latona; that Naomi is Venus; that Tabalcain is Vulcan; and that Mercury Triſmegiſtus is the eternal word. Monſieur Huet having defended his opinion by authority, endeavours to ſupport it by reaſon; and taking Zoroaſter for an inſtance, ſhews ſeveral great co-incidences between the life of Moſes and what is related of Zoroaſter. The names of their fathers reſemble each other very much. Both of them are ſaid to have ſmiled as ſoon as they were born. Both of them wrote five books of the origin of things; and prohibited idolatry under ſevere penalties. Their Kings endeavoured to deſtroy them; but God preſerved them by ſending venomous flies againſt their perſecutors. They avoided this danger by flight, and paſſed over rivers dryſhod. Both of them being baniſhed their country retired to a mountain, which appeared to them covered with a celeſtial fire; and they could not look upon God, who was ſurrounded with the flames. They received from him the book of their laws, which greatly reſembled each other. They returned from the mountain covered with a radiant light. They were ſupported in the deſert with miraculous food, and at laſt diſappeared without any perſon's diſcovering the manner of their death. If we add to this, that ſeveral eminent writers have aſſerted, that there never was ſuch a perſon as Zoroaſter, Monſieur Huet thinks it cannot reaſonably be denied, that Zoroaſter is Moſes himſelf. It muſt be owned, that this inſtance has ſome probability attending it; but the greateſt part of his other inſtances are not favoured by ſuch co-incidences. He aſſerts for example, that Janus is Moſes, becauſe Albricus, who wrote concerning the images of the Gods, ſays that he was commonly painted with rays about him, holding a ſtaff in his hand, with which he ſtruck a rock, whence proceeded water. This is not at all convincing. But what follows is leſs ſo. When we ſee, ſays Monſieur Huet, Venus in the hymns aſcribed to Orpheus, dancing with her Nymphs upon the ſhore of Syria, who brings incenſe from a place near the waters of Egypt; do not we immediately perceive Miriam the ſiſter of Moſes dancing and ſinging with her companions in Syria, near the country where the incenſe grew upon the ſhore of Syria, which ſhe had juſt paſſed over? Do not we perceive in this Miriam and her companions the origin of the Fable of the Muſes, who took their name from that of Moſes famous for his ſongs, whom the Greeks called Μουσαῖος or Μῶσος, and whoſe ſiſter ought to be called Μοῦσα, and her companions Μοῦσαι. But nothing gave ſo much offence as his aſſerting that Priapus was the ſame with Moſes. Priapus idem ac Moſes. He vindicates himſelf from the raillery which this expoſed him to, by ſaying, that we ought to fall likewiſe upon Artapanus, who affirmed that Moſes is Mercury, the God of thieves, a thief himſelf, and the pander of criminal love. That we ought to reproach Bochart, who ſaid that Moſes is Typhon, an impious and barbarous monſter, and an enemy to the Gods; and the Shiloh or the Meſſiah is Silenus, that ridiculous Deity, who is always reeling with drunkenneſs. Priapus and all other Heathen Gods are repreſentations of Heroes, or of things natural. He repreſented the vivifying power of the ſun, and fecundity of nature. He is, according to ſome, the ſymbol of the ſun; according to others, the God Pan, or Bacchus, Apollo, Mercury, Typhon, whom learned men have thought to be Moſes. Would they therefore have made any difficulty of ſaying the ſame of Priapus? Add to this, that the ſame obſcenity, which appears in the images of Priapus, is to be met with likewiſe in theſe of Pan, Orus, Oſiris, Mercury, Marſyas, and Terminus. Our author in his Commentarius de Rebus ad eum pertinentibus owns, that this work of his met with better ſucceſs among foreigners than among the French, many of whom conſidered it as a book full of learning, but void of proofs; which occaſioned ſeveral perſons to ſay, that he had demonſtrated nothing but his extenſive reading. Others leſs equitable borrowed from it, and at the ſame time attacked it, in order to cover their own plagiariſm. Monſ. Huet complains particularly of Monſ. Ferrand and Fraſſen, eſpecially the latter, whom Monſ. de Harlay, Archbiſhop of Paris obliged to give him ſatisfaction. Monſieur Simon had a deſign to make an abridgment of this work; but Monſieur Huet being informed, that it was to alter it as he thought proper, deſired him to excuſe himſelf that trouble. The firſt edition of 1679 is moſt ſought after, becauſe there are ſome paſſages in it, which are not to be found in the editions of Paris in 1687 and 1690. VII. Cenſura Philoſophiæ Carteſianæ. Paris 1689 in 12mo, Helmſtad 1690 in 12mo, publiſhed by Henry Meibomius. Friſiæ (perhaps Franeker) 1690 in 12mo. Hanover 1690. Campis 1690 in 12mo. Paris 1694 with additions. When Monſieur Huet wrote this book, ſays Monſ. Themiſeul in his Letters, he was greatly piqu'd againſt the Carteſians, as appears by the eighth chapter of this work. He was diſpleaſed that thoſe Philoſophers infinitely preferred thoſe who cultivate their reaſon, to thoſe who only cultivate their memory, and require, that men ſhould endeavour more to know themſelves than to know what was done in former ages. "What, ſays he, becauſe we are men of learning, ſhall we become the "ſubject of the raillery of the Carteſians? VIII. Quæſtiones Alnetanæ de Concordiâ Rationis & Fidei. Caen 1690 in 4to. Leipſic 1692 in 4to. Leipſic 1701 and 1709 liſhed at that time interrupted his application to that courſe of ſtudy, and diverted it to another. Theſe two books were Des Cartes's Principles, and Bochart's Sacred Geography. He admired Des Cartes at firſt, and adhered to his Philoſophy for ſeveral years. Bochart's Geography made a great impreſſion on him by its vaſt extent of learning; and being full of Hebrew and Greek, he reſolved to make himſelf a maſter of theſe languages; for which purpoſe he applied himſelf to them with great vigour, and contracted an intimacy with Monſieur Bochart, who aſſiſted him in his ſtudies. At the age of twenty years and one day the cuſtom of Normandy delivered him from the tuition of his guardians, who had been very ſparing in their allowance to him. His ſtrongeſt paſſion, and that which he firſt gratified, after he became maſter of himſelf, was to ſee Paris, not ſo much out of curioſity, as to furniſh himſelf with books, and introduce himſelf into the acquaintance of learned men. Two years after Chriſtina Queen of Sweden having invited

(1) Preface de Virgile, num. 22.

1709 in 4to. This is written in the form of a dialogue after the manner of Cicero's Tuſculan Queſtions. It is divided into three parts: lays down general principles concerning the certainty of reaſon and faith, the uſe of reaſon in points of faith, and of faith in points not diſcoverable by reaſon; and he propoſes methods of reconciling them. He endeavours to ſhew, that thoſe things which appear moſt oppoſite to our reaſon, though propoſed by religion to our belief, are not more extraordinary than many things, believed by the Pagans in their religion. For this purpoſe he compares the doctrines and practice of Chriſtianity with the ſentiments of the Philoſophers, the fables of thePoets, and the practice of the people, in which conſiſted their divinity, and which were the foundation of their religion. IX. De la Situation du Paradis Terreſter. Paris 1691 in 12mo. Leipſic 1694 in 16mo, tranſlated into Latin by John George Pritius, a Divine and Miniſter of Francfort. Leipſic 1694 in 4to, in Latin, with his Demonſtratio Evangelica. Amſterdam 1698 in 12mo, in Latin, with the Diſſertatio de Navigationibus Salomonis. Amſterdam 1698 in folio, in Latin, in the Critici ſacri. Amſterdam 1701 in 12mo. Amſterdam 1716 in 12mo, tranſlated into Low Dutch. In this treatiſe our author places the terreſtrial paradiſe upon the canal formed by the Tygris and Euphrates after they have joined near Apamea, between the place where they join and that where they ſeparate in order to fall into the Perſian Gulf, on the Eaſtern ſide of the South branch of the great circuit, which this river makes towards the Weſt, which is marked in the maps of Ptolomy near Aracca about 32 degrees 39 minutes North latitude, and 80 degrees ten minutes longitude. X. Nouveaux Memoires pour ſervir à l'Hiſtoire du Carteſianiſme. Paris 1692 in 8vo. Amſterdam 1698 in 12mo, with additions. The firſt edition appeared under the name of M. G. de l'A. that is, Monſieur Gilles de l'Aulnay, a man of character, who had conferences at his houſe at Paris, and who lent his name to this book. The ſecond edition was publiſhed under the name of M. G. de l'Academie Françoiſe, through a miſtake of the Bookſeller in Holland, who miſtook the initial letters in the firſt edition. XI. Statuts Synodaux pour le Dioceſe d'Avranches, lûs & publiez dans le Synode tenue à Avranches l'an 1693. XII. Trois Supplémens aux dits Statuts Synodaux, lûs & publiez dans les Synodes tenus à Avranches dans les annees 1695, 1696, 1698. Caen. in 8vo. XIII. Carmina Latina & Græca. Deventer 1668 in 8vo. Amſterdam 1672 in 16mo, publiſhed by Mr. Hogerſius. Utrecht 1664 in 8vo and 1700 in 16mo, publiſhed by Mr. Grævius. Paris 1709 in 12mo, the fifth edition publiſhed by the Abbé d'Olivet, who likewiſe publiſhed a new edition at Paris 1729 in 12mo. XIV. De Navigationibus Salomonis. Amſterdam 1698 in 8vo. It is reprinted with the Critici Sacri; and tranſlated into French, and publiſhed by Mr. Bruzen de la Martiniere in a collection intitled, Traitez Geographiques & Hiſtoriques pour faciliter l'Intelligence de l'Ecriture ſainte par divers Auteurs celebres. Hague 1730, two volumes in 12mo. In this treatiſe he enquires, how Hiram King of Tyre could ſend his ſhips from Tyre, which lies upon the Mediterranean Sea, to Ezion-geber upon the Red Sea; and obſerves, that there was a canal made by art from the Nile into the Red Sea. He proves this from the teſtimony of the Arabians, who aſſert that there was a canal from the time of Abraham. Strabo ſays that Seſoſtris cauſed it to be made; and Herodotus tells us, that it was done by Nechius, the grandſon of Seſoſtris. Some authors affirm, that this work was left unfiniſhed; but perhaps a ſmall canal might be opened, and the great one never have been finiſhed. He then examines into the ſituation of Ophir and Tharſis. He imagines Ophir to be the South coaſt of Africa, called by the Arabians Zanguebar, and particularly Sophala upon the ſame coaſt. Tharſis he ſuppoſes to be the Weſtern coaſt of Africa and Spain towards the mouth of Bœtis. XV. Notæ in Anthologiam Epigrammatum Græcorum. Utrecht 1700 in 16mo, publiſhed at the end of Grævius's edition of our author's Poems. XVI. Les Origines de la Ville de Caen & des Lieux circonvoiſins. Roan 1702 in 4to. The ſecond edition printed in the ſame city in 1706 in 8vo is greatly enlarged. XVII. Lettre à Monſr. Perrault ſur le Parallele des Anciens & des Modernes, du 10 Octobre 1692, inſerted in the third part of the Pieces fugitives without the author's knowledge. In this letter he attacks Monſieur Perrault with great vigour and force of reaſoning. XVIII. Examen du ſentiment de Longin ſur ce paſſage de la Geneſe, Et Dieu dit, que la Lumiere ſoit faite, & la Lumiere fut faite, par Mr. Huet, ancien Eveque d'Avranches: inſerted in the tenth tome, art. 3. of Monſieur Le Clerc's Bibliotheque Choiſie. We ſhall give an account of the occaſion of this piece. Monſieur Huet in his Demonſtratio Evangelica had maintained, that this paſſage of Moſes, God ſaid, let there be light, and there was light, was perfectly ſimple, and not ſublime and figurative, as Longinus in his treatiſe Of the Sublime had aſſerted. In 1682 Meſſieurs de Port Royal gave a French tranſlation of Geneſis, with an Expoſition of the Literal and Spiritual Senſe thereof, drawn from the holy Fathers and Eccleſiaſtical Authors; and in the Preface, after having produced the authority of Longinus to ſhew, that there is the ſublime and grand in the ſtyle of that Hiſtory, which being tempered with a divine ſimplicity, is every where ſtamped with the character of truth, they report the opinion of this able Rhetorician upon the paſſage abovementioned, to which they add the remark, or, to uſe their own words, the wiſe reflection made thereupon by Monſieur Boileau in the preface to his tranſlation of Longinus printed with his works in 1674. All this gave occaſion to Monſieur Boileau to make an addition to the preface to that tranſlation, wherein he expreſſes his ſurprize, that Monſieur Huet ſhould diſown the ſublime in this paſſage, and congratulates himſelf upon the ſuffrage of Meſſieurs de Port Royal, who had made a very different judgment from that Prelate. Monſieur Huet having read that paſſage of Monſieur Boileau's, thought it concerned him to defend his opinion, and wrote a letter of ſome length to the Duke of Montauſier, the Dauphin's Governor. It is not to be doubted, but that the Duke ſoon communicated this piece to Monſieur Boileau; yet it is not probable that he was convinced by Monſieur Huet's arguments; ſince in all the following editions of his works, he never altered that paſſage in his preface, which had occaſioned Monſieur Huet's complaint. Neither did he make any anſwer to that diſſertation, probably becauſe it was not made public. For Monſ. Le Clerc having inſerted it in 1706 in his Bibliotheque Curieuſe with ſeveral judicious remarks in confirmation of Monſieur Huet's opinion; Monſieur Boileau wrote an anſwer. XIX. Lettre a M. Foucault Conſeiller d'Etat ſur l'Origine de la Poeſie Françoiſe, du 16 Mars 1706, inſerted in the Memoires de Trevoux in 1711. XX. Lettre de M. Morin de l'Academie des Inſcriptions à M. Huet (that is, of Monſieur Huet himſelf) touchant le Livre de M. Tolandus Anglois, intitulé, Adeiſidæmon, & Origines Judaicæ: inſerted in the Memoires de Trevoux for September 1709, and in the collection, which the Abbé invited Monſieur Bochart to her court, Monſieur Huet accompanied him, and ſet out on the journey in April 1652. Monſieur Bochart did not meet with the reception which he expected. For the Queen's health being infirm, and too much ſtudy having injured it, Monſieur Bourdelot her Phyſician, an artful courtier, who had ſtudied her temper as well as conſtitution, prevailed on her to break off all converſation with the men of letters, in hopes to govern her alone himſelf. Monſieur Bochart was the ſufferer on this account; for Monſieur Huet's youth prevented him from appearing formidable to the Phyſician. He often viſited the Queen, who would have engaged him in her ſervice; but he being ſenſible of her mutable temper thought proper to return to France at the end of three months; the chief fruit of his journey being a copy of a manuſcript of Origen, which he tranſcribed at Stockholm, and the acquaintance which he had contracted with the learned men in Sweden and Holland, through which he had paſſed. Upon Tilladet publiſhed of Monſieur Huet's works under the title of Diſſertations ſur diverſes matieres de la Religion & de Philologie, Paris 1612, two volumes in 12mo. Hague 1714 two volumes in 12mo. XXI. Hiſtoire de Commerce & de la Navigation des Anciens. Paris 1716 in 12mo. Bruſſels 1717 in 12mo. This has been tranſlated into Engliſh. XXII. Commentarius de Rebus ad eum pertinentibus. Amſterdam 1718 in 12mo. XXIII. Traité Philoſophique de la Foibleſſe de l'Eſprit humain. Amſterdam 1723 in 8vo. It is a ſceptical piece, and unworthy of our author. Father Caſtel the Jeſuit has undertaken to ſhew in the Memoires de Trevoux for June 1725 p. 989, that this treatiſe was not written by our author. But the Abbé Olivet has proved the contrary in a pamphlet publiſhed at Paris 1726 in 12mo, under the title of Apologie. This treatiſe has been tranſlated into Engliſh, and publiſhed in 8vo. XXIV. Huetiana, ou Penſées diverſes de M. Huet. Paris 1722 in 12mo. XXV. Diane de Caſtro; ou le faux Yncas. Paris 1728 in 12mo. This romance was written when he was very young. XXVI. In the ſecond volume of Father Deſmolet's Memoires de Litterature there is printed a Latin preface to our author's Traité de la Foibleſſe de l'Eſprit humain. He left behind him a Latin tranſlation of Longus's Loves of Daphnis and Chloe; an Anſwer to Monſieur Regis with regard to Des Cartes's Metaphyſics; his Notes upon the Vulgate Tranſlation of the Bible; and collection of between five and ſix hundred letters in Latin and French, written to learned men. We ſhall give the reader ſome written to Dr. Thomas Gale, and communicated to us by the learned Roger Gale Eſq; the Doctor's ſon.

" Clariſſ. ornatiſſimoq; Viro Thomæ Galæo,
" S. P. D. Petr. Dan. Huetius.

" Jamblichum tuum accepi, Vir doctiſſime, cum & " ejus jam compos eſſem; nam ſtatim atq; ad me perlatum eſt eum labore tuo excultum, & doctrinæ tuæ " monumentis inſignem prodiiſſe, nihil mihi ad eum " comparandum reliqui feci, cum propter ſcriptoris " ſingularem eruditionem, per quam me plurimum " profeciſſe memineram, cum nondum Græcè extaret, " tum propter accuratam tuam Interpretationem & Annotationes non vulgaris ſaporis, quas adjeciſſe te acceperam. Præclarè enimvero meritus es de re literariâ & literatis omnibus nobili hac Lucubratione, " nominiſq; tui famæ egregiè conſuluiſti. Ego vero " pro tam ſplendido munere gratias ago tibi habeoq; " quam poſſum maximas. At futurum ſperaveram, " ut omnes Jamblichi reliquias colligeres, & in unum " Corpus digereres. Id profecto & Rei Dignitas & " Auctoris præſtantia, & reliquorum ejus operum " Commendatio poſtulabat; nos verò id à te nunc expectamus. Atq; utinam diligentiam tuam quoq; " conferres in excolendum Porphyrium, hominem excellentis ingenii & doctrinæ. Nihil profecto literarum bono, cui natus es, vel gloriæ tuæ utilius præſtare quires; nihil eximiæ tuæ eruditioni expromendæ commodius poſſes reperire. Quamobrem te " magnoperè hortor, ut hanc Spartam ornandam ſuſcipias. Hoc ſi feceris, nullis omnino officiis deero, " ſi quæ à me ad præclarum hoc inſtitutum promovendum poterunt proficiſci. Et verò ſunt mihi ad manum nonnulla, quibus non parum locupletari poſſet " hæc Editio. Digna quoq; res eſſet ſtudiis tuis ſparſa " Procli monumenta recomponere, viri magni, qui " clariſſimas diſciplinas animo pervagatus eſt, & acutis " commentationibus illuſtravit. Harum collectionem " nos quoq; juvare, & collatis ſymbolis amplificare " poſſemus. Ac ſæpenumero ſum miratus neglectos " jacuiſſe hactenus tam locupletes & luculentos Auctores, neq; inter tot eruditos homines, qui Veterum " emendandis & edendis ſcriptis induſtriam ſuam commodârunt, extitiſſe quenquam, qui ad hæc excutiendâ & publicanda animum appelleret. Nempe " uni tibi Laborem hunc deſtinabat Deus, ut qui " alios doctrinâ ſuperes, idem auctores eruditione cæteris præſtantiores curis tuis perpolires. Cæterum " ſapere tibi Demonſtrationem meam Evangelicam per " mihi gratum perq; jucundum eſt, cum ipſum te norim " quam limati ſis & ſubacti Ingenii Judiciiq; Miſeram " exemplaria Libri hujus ad clariſſimos viros Pearſonum, Voſſium, Bernardum, & Belkium; quæ an ad " vos pervenerint, nullus ſcio. Ex te velim intelligant noſtræ adverſum eos obſervantiæ ſignificationem " hanc me dediſſe. Vale, præſtantimne Galæe, & " me ama. Vale. VI Cal. Septembr. MDCLXXIX. " Lutet."

" Cl. eruditiſſimoq; Viro Thomæ Galæo,
" S. T. P. P. D. Huetius.

" Quanti intereſt literariæ Reipublicæ exire in lucem " publicam quæ a Simplicio in Jamblichum diſputata " ſunt, præſertim ſi labor tuus acceſſerit & diligentia, " præclare intelligo; neq; operæ ulli vel labori parcendum mihi eſſe duco, quoad ejus compos fieres. " Verum ſcito Romæ perpaucos eſſe, qui Græca Exemplaria verſare, pauciores qui deſcribere conſueverint. Eſurientes quidam Græculi operam olim " ſuam ad id locabant; qui quæſtûs, quoniam exilis " erat, neq; ἄλφιτα ſatis largiter ſuppeditabat, egeſtate " coacti ad alias artes animum ſtudiumq; converterunt. " Eſt equidem nunc illic Petrus Poſſinus, Græcarum " Literarum apprimè ſciens, mihiq; amicus. Verum " ab homine ætatis jam affectæ ſuis ſtudiis intento, " ſuiſq; meritis percelebri, hanc operam nec poſtulare " æquum eſt, nec expectare. Si quid tamen vel precibus aliunde efficere potero, vel auctoritate, vel " etiam pretio, non patiar officium ullum erga te " meum deſiderari. De colligendis & componendis " atq; etiam exornandis Porphyrii Operibus ſerio te cogitare vehementèr ſanè lætor. Præclarum enimverò " Conſilium, nobis utile, & tibi perquam honorificum; quo & eos, qui ſeveriores ſectantur diſciplinas, & qui amœniores, tibi devincias. Ecquod " enim Doctrinæ genus, quam Literarum partem " non attigit Vir ille maximus? Macte igitur eſto " hoc animo, doctiſſime Galæe, & in eam curam cogitationemq; incumbe, hanc uni tibi Palmam eſſe " repoſitam, quam Eruditorum omnium plauſus excipiet, immortalis Gloria conſequetur. Fertur iſthic " apud vos prodiiſſe ante hos quatuordecim annos Diſſertatio de Paradiſo terreſtri, Anglico ſermone ſcripta. " Velim ex te ſcire quid ſit illud Operis; unde ſi " quidquam diſcere nos poſſe putes, peto abs te ut " Librum ad me mittas: dabo operam ut ſtatim tibi " pretium renumeretur. Vale IV Eid. Jan. MDCLXXX. " de Sangermano.

" Clariſſ. doctiſſimoq; Viro Thomæ Galæo,
" S. P. D. P. D. Huetius.

" Literas tuas ad XIII Cal. Martias tertio circitèr " quartoq; poſtquam ſcriptæ erant menſe, vix tandem " accepi. Lutetiâ enim profectus IV Cal. Maii Alnetum veni, quæ Abbatia mea eſt in Neuſtriâ inferiore, non longè Cadomo diſtans; atq; illuc poſt " longos & diuturnos circuitus ægrè tandem pervenerunt Literæ tuæ. Ad eas ſic habeto: Scribam ad " Petrum Poſſinum, det operam, ut Simplicium illum, " quem poſtulas, vel per ſe, vel per amicos in Biblio-
" thecâ

Upon his return to his own country he reſumed his ſtudies with more vigour than ever, in order to publiſh his manuſcript of Origen. Two Academies, one of which had been eſtabliſhed during his abſence for polite Literature, and of which he had been elected a member without his knowledge; and another, which he founded himſelf for Natural Philoſophy, ſerved to divert him in his fatigue, or rather made him change his labour from time to time. Sixteen years after his return from Sweden his edition of Origen appeared. Theſe ſixteen years he ſpent without any employment but his ſtudies, though he went every year for a month or two to Paris. During this interval he had ſeveral advantageous offers, which he refuſed. Queen Chriſtina, who upon her abdication of the Crown of Sweden had retired to Rome, invited him thither in 1659. But the treatment of Monſieur Bochart, who had met with ſuch neglect from her in Sweden after he had been ſent for with ſuch aſſurances of favour, deterred him from accepting her invitation. He tells us likewiſe,

" thecâ Vaticanâ, aliiſq; quæ Romæ ſunt, conqui-
" rat. Sed quoniam homo ſenio eſt confectus, & ho-
" rarum ſuarum perparcus, auctor tibi ſum, ut literas
" meas mittas ad Nazarium tuum, negotiumq; ipſi
" des uti Poſſinum conveniat, redditiſq; meis Literis
" paratum ſe dicat, quæcunq; vel ſuaſerit vel juſſerit
" exequi; ſe modo auctoritate ſuâ, ope, concilio, of" ficiis adjuvet. Quod facturum libenter virum hu-
" maniſſimum ſpero, atq; etiam recipio. Hoc tibi ſi
" probabitur, Literas ad Poſſinum ſtatim à me habe-
" bis. Libellum Anglicum de Paradiſo Terreſtri una
" cum Literis tuis accepi. Habeo gratiam; referam
" etiam, ſi potero; majorem tamen habuiſſem, ſi pre-
" tium à me repræſentari paſſus eſſes. Nam quo pro-
" motior eſt Liberalitas tua, eo parcius hic mihi
" utendum eſt. Procli Diſſertationes in Parmenidem
" ſi quando nanciſcar, tibi redimam. Verum rarò
" venales proſtant Libri hujuſmodi calamo exarati.
" Si uſpiam occurrat, atq; ejus deſcribendi facultatem impetraverimus, non male nobiſcum agetur.
" Vale. Id. Sept. MDCLXXX. Alneto ad Adonem
" fluvium."

" Cl. doctiſſimoq; Viro Tho. Galæo, S. P. D.
" P. D. Huetius.

" Eram Lutetiæ, cum mihi redditæ ſunt ante aliquot
" menſes poſtremæ Literæ tuæ, quibus velle te ſigni-
" ficares, ut Romam ad Petrum Poſſinum ſcriberem
" de Simplicio, adituq; ad Bibliothecam Vaticanam
" hominibus tuis patefaciendo. Feciſſim illico, niſi
" ad me perlatum fuiſſet de humaniſſimi hujus viri
" obitu; quod etſi non certò & affirmatè dicebatur,
" mihi tamen expectandum eſſe duxi, quoad certius
" aliquid acciperem. Id ipſum verò ad te ſcribere
" diſtuli, quod & Lutetiæ Valetudine ſatis diu ten-
" tatus ſum, ſic ut Lectione & ſcriptione mihi à Medi-
" cis interdiceretur, & poſt reſtitutam ſanitatem ſta-
" tim huc me contuli, confirmandi mei causâ. Cum
" ergo de Poſſini vitâ incertus ſum, ne nunc quidem
" ad eum ſcribo, ne fruſtra ſcribam. Quod ſi res
" adhuc intregra eſt, & perſeveras in propoſito ſcribam
" ad eminentiſſimum Cardinalem Eſtræum, qui Literis
" Literatiſq; impensè favet, literarum omnium ipſe
" peritiſſimus, ut Nazarium tuum auctoritate ſuâ ad-
" juvet, ad ea conficienda quæ ipſi demandaſti. Id
" tibi ſi probari intellexero, ſtatim a me Literas ad
" eum accipies. Utar ad id Mabillonii noſtri operâ
" quoad ex te ſciam, quo eas ad te recta deſtinari,
" quoq; modo inſcribi jubeas. Tu tuas ad me mittes
" Lutetiam, apud Andræam Pralard Bibliopolum,
" Viâ Jacobæâ, qui eas quocunq; loco futurus ſim,
" diligenter curabit. Ita nullius interpoſitione egebi-
" mus. De ſtudiis & Lucubrationibus tuis valde velim
" ex te cognoſcere. Vale. Cal. Septemb. MDCLXXXI.
" Alneto."

" Præſtantiſſimo Viro Thomæ Galæo, S. P. D.
" Petr. Dan. Huetius, Epiſcopus Sueſſio-
" nenſis deſignatus.

" Accepi Literas tuas, eruditiſſime Galæe, ſingularis
" adverſum me benevolentiæ ſignificatione plenas, qui" bus novâ dignitate auctum me gratularis. Etſi ve-
" ro perhonorificum mihi eſt hoc de me maximi Regis
" judicium, qui tanto muneri nec imparem nec inde-
" corem fore me cenſuit; probari tamen abs te non " exigua mihi eſt honoris acceſſio. Quanquam ſi non " ineptus mei æſtimator eſſe velim, ſuſpicari fortaſſe
" debeam nos id tam ab exiſtimatione tuâ quam ab
" amicitiâ proficiſci. Etſi vero nova ac priori longe
" diſſimilis vivendi ratio jam inde mihi ineunda eſt,
" nunquam tamen à me impetratum iri ſentio, ut ci-
" tharâ carentem ſenectam, hoc eſt, ut Literarum noſtra-
" rum expertem, agere poſſim. Nam in quarum ſinu
" natus & eductus ſum, quæ nobis jucundiſſimæ &
" individuæ comites ita adhæſerunt, ut rebus afflictis
" ſolatio, lætis & florentibus oblectationi ſemper fue-
" rint, quarum muneris eſt quod ſpiro & placeo;
" ſi modo placeo; eas affectâ jam ætate aſpernari,
" illiberale eſſe duco. Quamobrem nihil eſt cur du-" bites, quin eodem animo accipiam excellentis doc-
" trinæ tuæ fœtus, iiſq; evolvendis par ſtudium ad-
" hibeam ac feci olim, cum nullæ curæ otium noſ-
" trum interpellarent. Libellus Originis de Oratione,
" quem ad me miſeras, intra ipſius Angliæ fines à
" prædonibus interceptus eſt. Si quando promiſſum
" de edendis Originis opuſculis exolvere potero, non
" parum ex Labore hoc tuo ad noſtram Editionem
" accedet ornamenti. Nondum puto in Galliam per" latum fuiſſe Spenceri librum de Legibus Ebræorum.
" Magnum aliquid & a ſingulari Auctoris eruditione,
" & ab argumenti hujus dignitate expectamus. Tu
" vero, Vir eximie, in nobis amandis perge: id pro-
" fecto, ſi non virtute, at noſtro ærga te cultu & ob-
" ſervantiâ promeremur. Vale. Lutetiæ Pariſ. VI Eid.
" Aprilis MDCLXXXVI.

" Ornatiſſimo & eruditiſſimo Viro Thomæ
" Galæo, S. T. P. Petrus Daniel Hue-
" tius, Epiſcop. Sueſſion. deſignatus.

" Jam diu ſum in ære tuo, doctiſſime Galæe, cum ob
" egregium illud Munus, quo nos proſecutus es, lu-
" culentum Librum de Piſcibus a Mabillonio tuo nobis
" nomine redditum, de quo maximas habeo ti-
" bi agoq; gratias; tum multò magis ob tuam in
" retinendâ noſtrâ neceſſitudine conſtantiam & fidem.
" Nos verò huic minimè deſumus; & quamvis non " patitur moles Negotiorum, quibus in adminiſtrandâ
" ampliſſimâ Diœceſi non premimur modo, ſed planè
" obruimur, ut frequenti literarum commercio bene-
" volentiam tuam colere, noſtramq; tibi teſtificari poſ-
" ſimus; viget tamen ea apud nos magnâ excellentis
" tuæ eruditionis admiratione conjuncta. Subit in-
" terdum invidere Juſtello noſtro, qui eandem tecum
" urbem habitat, & ſedens adverſus identidem te aſ-
" pectat & audit. Verum quoniam ita terrâ mariq;
" disjuncti ſumus, ut mutuo colloquio aſpectuq; frui
" nobis non liceat, at animorum certè conjunctione
" noſtri deſiderium ſolemur. Vale Lutet. Pariſiorum
" X Cal. Martias MDCLXXXVII.

" Eximio Viro Thomæ Galæo, S. P. D. Pe-
" trus Daniel Huetius, Epiſcopus Sueſ-
" ſionenſis deſignatus.

" De Manilio edendo nunquam equidem cogitavi, Vi-
" rorum omnium optime & humaniſſime; & ſi cogi-
" tâſſem, nunc mihi variis occupationibus & gravibus
" curis implicito hujuſmodi cogitatio omnino eſſet ab-
" jicienda. Liceatne verò hæc ſtudia perſequi, cui reſ-
" pirare non licet? Et nunc quod in hoc ſeceſſu poſ-
" ſum otioſus videri, non ita ſane eſt; nobiſcum
" attulimus negotia noſtra. Meminiſti Horatianum
" illud, Poſt equitem ſedet atra Cura. His negotiis
" alia ſuccreſcunt indies, nec literas noſtras reſpicere,
" nedum retractare ſinunt. Cur autem Manilii Editi-
" onem ſuſcepiſſe vel dictus ſim vel creditus, duo viden" tur effeciſſe; & quod notæ quædam noſtræ ad cal-
" cem Delfinianæ Editionis adjectæ ſunt octo abhinc
" annis; & quod Auctoris hujus Codicem quendam
" MS. miſit ad me nuper Voſſius. At notas expreſſe-
" runt a me Faii Editoris flagitationes aſſiduæ: Codi-likewiſe, that he received an offer from Sweden to take upon him the education of the young King, who in 1660 ſucceeded Charles Guſtavus, ſucceſſor of Chriſtina, but that he excuſed himſelf. However, this fact is fully refuted by the authors of the Acta Litteraria of Sweden. Ten years after Monſieur Boſſuet being appointed by the King Preceptor to the Dauphin in the room of the Preſident de Perigny, who died in 1670, his Majeſty choſe Monſieur Huet for his collegue with the title of Sub-Preceptor to the Prince, which he had long before deſigned to honour him with, but had been diſſuaded from it by Monſieur de Montauſier, though otherwiſe a friend to our author, at the deſire of Monſieur de Perigny, who was jealous of the merit of a collegue of ſo great a character. He came to court in 1670, and continued there till 1680, when the Dauphin married. His employment taking up a conſiderable part of his life, he ſtole ſeveral hours from ſleep to compleat his Demonſtratio Evangelica, which was begun and ended amidſt the embaraſsment of a court. He refuſed for a long time the ſollicitations of ſeveral members of the French Academy, who would have engaged him to deſire a place in that illuſtrious body; but at laſt he conſented, and was admitted there in 1674. Though the firſt idea of the Commentators for the uſe of the Dauphin was ſtarted by the Duke de Montauſier; yet it was Monſieur Huet, who formed the plan, and directed the execution of it, as far as the capacity of the perſons employed in that work would permit. While he was engaged in writing his Demonſtratio Evangelica, the ſentiments of piety, which he had from his earlieſt years, prompted him to enter into holy Orders, which he did at forty ſix years of age. In 1678 he was preſented by the King to the Abbey of Aunay in Normandy, which was ſo agreeable to him, that he retired there every ſummer, after he
" cem

" cem verò hunc pervolutare ſivit otium, quod ætate
" hac proximâ præſtiterunt nobis aquæ Borbonienſes,
" ad quas Valetudinis causâ me contuli. Etſi vero il-
" luſtrandi Manilii nullum omnino cepi conſilium,
" quod ſi tamen perficere poſſis, ut ſtudioſus aliquis
" Codicis Oxonienſis cum Editione Scaligeranâ conten-
" dendi Laborem in ſe volet recipere, & variantes Lecti-
" ones ad te tranſmittere, quas mecum deinde commu-
" nices, rem mihi feceris longè gratiſſimam. Por-
" phyrii Editionem περὶ ἐμψύχων ἀποχῆς benè tibi ver-
" tere cupio. Doctus & plenus bonæ frugis Libellus, ut
" alia omnia magni illius Viri, cujus utinam univer-
" ſas ſcriptionis in unum aliquando corpus poſſis colli-
" gere. Poteris quidem, ſi voles, voles autem, ſi me
" audias; nam qui pro dignitate operis rectè exequi
" poſſit, præter te nemo homo eſt. Lutetiæ recudi-
" tur Demonſtratio noſtra Evangelica. Illuc poſt ſe-
" meſtrem abſentiam revolare cogito. Et verò conti-
" nui Imbres, qui totum hunc fœdarunt Septembrem,
" ex amœno hoc feceſſu me invitum extrudunt. Tu
" bene vale. IV Non. Octobris. MDCLXXXVII. ex
" Alneto."

" Ornatiſſimo Viro Thomæ Galæo, S. P. D.
" Petrus Daniel Huetius Epiſcop. Sueſſ.
" deſignatus.

" Literas tuas ad VII Cal. Quintil. datas Idibus Octo-
" bris accepi in Alnetano noſtro, quæ eſt Abbatia
" Neuſtriæ inferioris. Tum autem me comparabam
" ad reditum pro more meo. Sic enim annis ab hinc
" aliquot vitæ tempora partiri ſoleo, ut Vere & Æſtate
" ruſticus ſim, hyeme urbanus, Lutetiamq; repetam.
" Nihil autem mihi magis præter ſpem potuit con-
" tingere, quam variantes Lectiones Maniliani Codi-
" cis Mertonenſis, tuo amicorumq; tuorum ſtudio ex-
" cerptas, accipere. Nam quid tantum de te prome-
" ritus ſum, omnium quotquot ſunt hominum op-
" time & benigniſſime, ut tantum Laborem ſubire,
" totq; bonarum horarum jacturam meâ causâ facere
" velles? Equidem ſi te ex ſcriptis duntaxat tuis noſ-
" ſem, primarium te gentis eruditæ ſine cunctatione
" ac fortaſsè etiam primum principemq; ponerem.
" Nunc cum ad ſingularem illam doctrinam huma-
" nitas inuſitata & expromta Liberalitas acceſſerint,
" nihil a me dici poteſt tam magnificè quin Virtus
" tua exuperet. Quamvis igitur gratias habeo tibi
" agereq; immortales debeo, referre certè neque poſ-
" ſum, neq; poſſe unquam ſpero. Cæterum quod ais,
" geminam tibi videri hujus operis Editionem pro-
" diiſſe, in eo facilè tibi aſſentior; nam & in aliis
" idem deprehenſum eſt à me, maximè verò in Jo-
" ſephi ἀρχαιολογίᾳ, quod & clariſſimum Bernardum
" monui. Cuinam verò diſcrepantia hæc Maniliani
" Aſtronomici accepta referenda ſit, an Auctori ipſi, an
" alteri, ſtatuere ſanè promptum non eſt, ei præſertim,
" cui perſpecta ſit infinita Criticorum licentia. Nam ne
" recedamus ab hoc opere, ſi quis Scaligeri Editiones cum
" priſcis, vel ipſas etiam inter ſe contulerit, Manilium
" pene quærat in Manilio, ea fuit hominis Confidentia.
" Gratiſſimum mihi fuit eximium Ariſtarchi Libellum,
" nativo ornatu excultum, & inſigni fragmento Pappi
" cinctum prodire. Atq; utinam idem ſtudium in re-
" liquis Mathematicis a Commandino Latinè editis,
" longeque etiam pluribus, qui latent in forulis Biblio-
" thecarum, ponat aliquando doctiſſimus Walliſius.
" Multos in iiſdem argumentis verſatos jam olim pa-
" raverant Prælo, qui Regiæ huic Bibliothecæ tum
" præfecti erant; quidam etiam typis ſunt excuſi, ſed
" nondum venæunt. Interpretandorum eorum curam
" demandaverat illuſtriſſimus Colbertus Henrico Valeſio,
" Viro cætera doctiſſimo, at Mathematicarum Diſci-
" plinarum imperito. Hinc maxima ſuccrevit Erro-
" rum Seges, qui vel primo intuitu incurrunt in ocu-
" los. Plurimos facilè reperias ſcientiæ hujus, plurí-
" mos Græcæ Linguæ gnaros; perpaucos utriuſq;
" ac ferè nullos; pauciores etiam qui veterum Mathe-
" maticorum Libros verſaverint. Fugerat me penitus
" inſigne illud, quod indicaſti, Bedæ teſtimonium de
" Purpurâ veſtrate Britannicâ, ex quo liquido cognoſci-
" tur, neq; unquam intercediſſe omnino Purpuræ uſum,
" contra ac multi putant, & hanc quæ nuper apud
" vos reperta eſt, illam ipſam eſſe, quæ Bedæ tempo-
" ribus erat in pretio. Perge verò excellenti tuâ Eru-
" ditione doctiores nos facere. Ego quidem libenter
" tibi μαθητεύω. Vale. Lutet. Paris. Cal. Decemb.
" MDCLXXXVIII."

" Viro ampliſſimo D. D. Petro Danieli
" Huetio Abrincotenſium Epiſcopo Thomas
" Galæ, S. P. D.

" Nobilis Vir Robertus Boyle ὁ μακαρίτης, libris eru-
" ditis Philoſophiam, vitâ ſanctiſſimâ Religionem plu-
" rimum promovit. Idem legavit ſtipendia, quo eruditus
" quiſpiam inſtrueretur ad bellum contra Atheos geren-
" dum, quâ ſcriptis, quâ concionibus, per omnem poſte-
" ritatem. Non eſt diſſimulandum multa apud nos effer-
" buiſſe Atheorum Examina: otio ſuo aſſiduè abutuntur in " traducendo Moyſe. Julianus Simplicius, aliiq; rectè,
" aiunt, pronunciavere totam κοσμογονίαν Moyſaicam ex
" ſacris Ægyptiorum fabulis deſumptam fuiſſe. In " tempore igitur, S. Antiſtes, edidiſſe videris elegan-
" tem de Paradiſo libellum. Multi eum legunt &
" laudant: ut idem faciant plures, curabo ut noſtro
" ſermonem publicum prodeat. Hoc meum conſilium
" oro in bonam accipias partem, veniamq; impertias
" quod te inconſulto rem iſtam aggreſſus ſim. Emiſi hoc
" anno duo Volumina Hiſtoricorum, qui res Anglica-
" nas olim Latinè tradiderunt. Ubi primum claude-
" tur Janua, hos ad te, venerande Præſul, mittam,
" obſervantiæ meæ teſtes. Emendavi ad MSS. vete-
" res Iamblichi libros, quos prius evulgavit Arcerius.
" Iſti cum verſione meâ exibunt, vere appetente. E-
" juſdem Iamblichi opuſculum περὶ κοινῆς Μαθηματικῆς
" tuo beneficio jampridem nactus ſum. In eo inter-

he had left the court, and wrote a great many of his works there. In 1685 he was nominated to the Biſhopric of Soiſſons. But before the bulls for his inſtitution were expedited, the Abbé de Sillery having been nominated to the See of Avranches, they exchanged Biſhoprics with conſent of the King; though by reaſon of the differences between the court of France and that of Rome they could not be conſecrated till 1692. This delay was no great uneaſineſs to Monſieur Huet, who had more reliſh for a private and ſtudious life than that of a Biſhop, and accordingly reſigned his Biſhopric of Avranches in 1699, and was preſented by the King to the Abbey of Fontenay near the gates of Caen. His love to his native place determined them to fix there, for which purpoſe he improved the houſe and gardens belonging to the Abbot. But ſeveral law-ſuits coming upon him, he removed to Paris, and lodged among the Jeſuits in the Maiſon Profeſſe, whom he had made heirs to his Library, reſerving to himſelf the uſe of it during life. Here he lived the laſt twenty years of his life, dividing his time between devotion and ſtudy. He employed himſelf chiefly in writing notes on the vulgate tranſlation; and read over for that purpoſe the Hebrew text four and twenty times, comparing it with the other Oriental texts. He ſpent every day two or three hours in this work from 1681 to 1712. A ſevere diſtemper, which attacked him that year, and confined him to his bed for near ſix months, weakened extremely his body and memory, but not the vivacity of his genius. However when he had recovered his ſtrength, he applied himſelf to the writing of his life, which he did in a very elegant manner, though not with the ſame order and exactneſs as his other works, his memory being then decayed, and afterwatds more and more declining, ſo that he was not any longer capable of a continued work, but only committed to writing detached thoughts, which are publiſhed under the title of Huetiana. It is remarkable that two or three hours before his death he recovered all the vigour of his genius and memory. He employed theſe moments in acts of piety, and died January the 26th 1721, aged ninety one years. He had a ſtrong conſtitution, which was never altered by his intenſe ſtudy; he had a lively genius and ſolid judgment, and an eaſy affable temper, and was a man of a very agreeable converſation and ſtrict probity (a).

(a) See his Commentar. de Rebus ad eum pertinentibus; his Eloge by the Abbé Olivet, prefixed to the Huetiana, and to his Traité Philoſophique de la Foibleſſe de l'Eſprit humain; and Memoires de Trevoux, Avril 1721.

" pretando nolui tempus perdere. Lacunis ubiq; ſcatet
" oſcitantia Librarii, quo apud vos uſus ſum. Mol-
" liora tempora video mihi expectanda, ut hic Libel-
" lus ſanitati ſuæ reſtituatur. Deus O. M. Orbi
" Chriſtiano pacem, tibi, O Galliarum Lux & Orna-
" mentum, vitam ad multos annos concedat. Vale.
" Dub. Lond. Kal. Novembres Anno MDCXCII."

" Præſtantiſſimo Viro T. Gale, S. P. D.
" Petrus Daniel Huetius Epiſcopus Abrin-
" cenſis.

" Dici non poteſt quam mihi jucundæ fuerunt Lite-
" ræ tuæ. Nam cum propter inſignem Eruditionem,
" quâ paucos hac ætate pares habes, neminem ſupe-
" riorem, carus ſis omnibus, mihiq; adeo ipſi, multò
" mihi carior es certè ob eximiam bonitatem, mo-
" deſtiam, liberalitatem, cæteraſque Dotes, quas in te
" jampridem expertus ſum, atque earum prædicandi
" nullum finem facio, quotieſcunque in eruditiſſimæ
" gentis tuæ mentionem incido. Quamobrem ſic ve-
" lim exiſtimes eſſe me virtutum tuarum non admira-
" torem modo ſummum, ſed etiam aſſiduum Præco-
" nem. Quo mihi gravior accidit diuturna illa litera-
" rum intermiſſio, quæ ex ferali hoc orta bello, ſua-
" viſſimum nobis ademit tuæ conſuetudinis fructum. An
" enim ad te perventuræ ſint Literæ iſtæ, ne ſatis qui-
" dem certus ſum, nedum editos à me libellos in lu-
" cem, ad te, ad Juſtellum, ad Bernardum tuto poſſim
" tranſmittere. Miror itaque penetrare ad vos po-
" tuiſſe Diſſertationem noſtram *de Situ Paradiſi ter-
" reſtris*; cum vix duo Exemplaria, perfractis clauſtris
" ad hujus regni aditus oppoſitis, in Hollandiam eva-
" ſerint, etſi benè multa per Germaniam illuc cu-
" randa fidis hominibus tradideram. Quæ ſi perve-
" niſſent ad deſtinatum finem, pars aliqua ad vos itura
" erat; ſed ea demum intercederunt. Gratiſſimum
" autem mihi eſt atque etiam honorificum operâ tuâ
" libellum hunc in veſtram Linguam transferri; nam
" quod deſit ab Auctore, vel ad Elegantiam & Orna-
" tum, vel ad Doctrinæ Copiam, largiter ſarcietur ab
" Interprete. Ejus quidem Latinè vertendi Laborem
" viri aliquot noſtrates in ſe receperunt. De Scripto-
" ribus Anglicanæ Hiſtoriæ a te editis aliquid ex li" terariis Ephemeridibus cognoveram. Libros iſtos in " Galliam nuſpiam extare puto. De Jamblicho ſalivam
" mihi moviſti. Valde mendoſa eſt Arceriana editio,
" nec multo ſanior Interpretatio. Scriptor tibi fami-
" liaris, à me non alienus certè; in quo exornando
" quicquid collocatum à te erit temporis & laboris,
" tibi honori, nobis emolumento erit. Vale, eruditi-
" ſſime, & quod mihi longe pluris eſt, optime Vir.
" Lutet. Paris. XV Kal. Febr. MDCXCIII." T.

HUGUES (JAMES) a Divine and Canon, born at Liſle in Flanders, printed at Rome in 1655, a work of a very ſingular kind, conſidering the wild chimæras it abounds with [A]. He dedicated it to Pope Alexander VII, and interſperſed his epiſtle dedicatory with many ridiculous applications.

☞HUMPHREY

[A] He . . . printed . . . a work of a very ſingular kind, conſidering the wild chimæras it abounds with.] Here follows the title of it: Vera Hiſtoria Romana, ſeu Origo Latii vel Italiæ ac Romanæ Urbis è tenebris longæ vetuſtatis in lucem producta. Liber primus qui primordia Europæ ac Latii primævi Annales demonſtrat atque Urbis conditæ. Romæ, typis Franciſci Monetæ, M. DCLV. i. e. " A true Roman Hiſtory, or the " Origin of Latium or Italy, and of the city of Rome, " brought to Light out of the Darkneſs of diſtant " Antiquity. Book I, containing a relation of the " beginnings or firſt peopling of Europe, the annals " of old Latium, and of the building the city of Rome." It contains 284 pages in 4to (1). The following paſſage from the Memoirs of Trevoux, may ſerve as a ſpecimen of this whimſical book. According to James Hugues, " there never were ſuch men as Janus, Æneas, " or Romulus. Whatever has been related of them, is " taken from the predictions of I know not what Sy- " bil, who, in her Prophecies relating to St. Peter, " had given to this Saint, the name of thoſe heroes; " and who, agreeable to the ſtyle and genius of Pro- " phetic writings, had employed the paſt tenſe inſtead " of the future. This author's book of the origin of " Rome, is full of chimæra's no leſs extraordinary " than that juſt now related (2)."

(1) Konig obſerves that this work was printed at Rome in the year 1655, folio. I don't know that edition.

(2) Father Tournemine, in a Memoir inſerted in the Journal de Trevoux, for Feb. 1704, pag. 335, 336. Trevoux edit.

☞HUGHES (JOHN), an ingenious and polite writer in the eighteenth Century, was ſon of a worthy Citizen of London by Anne the daughter of Iſaac Burges Eſq; a Gentleman of an antient family and good eſtate in Wiltſhire, and was born at Marlborough in the ſaid county on the 29th of January 1677, but educated in London, and received the rudiments of learning at private ſchools. In the earlieſt years of his youth he applied himſelf with ardour to the purſuit of the ſiſter-arts, Poetry, Drawing, and Muſic; in each of which, by turns, he made a conſiderable progreſs; but, for the moſt part, followed theſe and other ſtudies of humanity, only as agreeable amuſements, under frequent confinement from indiſpoſition, and a continual valetudinary ſtate of health. He had for ſome time an employment in the office of Ordnance, and was Secretary to two or three Commiſſions under the Great Seal for purchaſing lands for the better ſecuring the Docks and Harbours at Portſmouth, Chatham, and Harwich. In the year 1717 the Lord Chancellor Cowper, to whom Mr. Hughes was then but lately known, was pleaſed of his own accord, and without any previous ſollicitation to make him Secretary for the Commiſſions of the Peace, and to diſtinguiſh him with ſingular marks of his eſteem [A]; and upon his Lordſhip's reſigning the Great Seal, he was, at his particular recommendation, and with the ready concurrence of his ſucceſſor, continued in the ſame employment under the Earl of Macclesfield. He held the ſaid place to the time of his death, which happened on the 17th of February 1719, the very night, in which his Tragedy, intitled, The Siege of Damaſcus, was firſt acted at the Theatre Royal in Drury Lane. He was then forty two years of age. His body was privately interred in the vault under the chancel of St. Andrew's Church in Holbourn. His writings have gained him an eſtabliſhed reputation [B]. He was happy in the acquaintance and friendſhip of ſeveral of

[A] Diſtinguiſh him with ſingular marks of his eſteem.] Mr. Hughes, as a teſtimony of gratitude to his noble patron and friend, gave his Lordſhip a few weeks before he died, his picture drawn by Sir Godfrey Kneller, which he himſelf had received as a preſent from that admirable painter. The value his Lordſhip ſet upon it will beſt appear from the letter, which he wrote to Mr. Hughes upon this occaſion.

" 24 January, 1719-20.

" Sir,

" I thank you for the moſt acceptable preſent of " your picture, and aſſure you, that none of this age " can ſet an higher value upon it than I do, and ſhall, " while I live; though I am ſenſible poſterity will " outdo me in that particular. I am, with the great- " eſt eſteem and ſincerity,

" Sir,

" Your moſt affectionate and " obliged humble Servant,

" COWPER."

[B] His writings have gained him an eſtabliſhed reputation.] We ſhall firſt give an account of his Poems and Dramatic works, and then proceed to his tranſlations and writings in proſe. The Triumph of Peace was his firſt Poem of any length, that appeared in public. It was written on occaſion of the Peace of Reſwick, and printed in the year 1697. The Court of Neptune was written upon King William's return from Holland, two years after the Peace, in 1699. The Houſe of Naſſau, a Pindaric Ode, printed in 1702, was occaſioned by the death of King William. The Tranſlation of the Third Ode of the Third Book of Horace, and the Paraphraſe of the Twenty ſecond Ode of the Firſt Book, were both written when he was very young; and the latter of them was his firſt Poetical Eſſay that appeared in print. The Paraphraſe on the ſixteenth Ode of the ſecond Book of the ſame author, printed in the ſixth volume of Dryden's Miſcellanies, was written in 1702. The ſix Cantata's, ſet by Dr. Pepuſch, were deſigned as an Eſſay, (which was the firſt in its kind) for compoſitions in Engliſh after the manner of the Italians. They were written before the introducing Italian Operas on the Engliſh ſtage, though not publiſhed till afterwards. The ſucceſs, which they met with, encouraged our author to write occaſionally ſeveral others in the ſame manner. As his Odes for Muſic, Cantata's, and Songs, are allowed by the teſtimony of the beſt Judges to be extremely well adapted to that art, they have likewiſe had the advantage to be ſet by the beſt maſters. The Tenth Book of Lucan was tranſlated by Mr. Hughes long before Mr. Row undertook that author. The occaſion of it was this. Mr. Tonſon Senior ſollicited a tranſlation of Lucan by ſeveral hands. Mr. Hughes performed his part; but others failing in their promiſes, the deſign was dropped; and Mr. Rowe was afterwards prevailed upon to undertake the whole, which he performed with great ſucceſs. In 1709 Mr. Hughes obliged the public with an elegant Tranſlation of Moliere's Miſantrope. This has been ſince reprinted with the other Plays of that admirable author tranſlated by Mr. Ozell; but no notice is taken by what hand it was tranſlated, and Mr. Hughes's judicious preface is there omitted. In 1711 Sir Richard Steele and Mr. Clayton had concerts of muſic in York-Buildings; on which occaſion they ſent Mr. Hughes the following letter:

" Dear Sir,

" Mr. Clayton and I deſire you, as ſoon as you can " conveniently, to alter this Poem (1) for Muſic, pre- " ſerving as many of Dryden's words and verſes as " you can. It is to be performed by a voice well " ſkilled in recitative; but you underſtand all theſe " matters much better than " Your affectionate humble Servant,

R. STEELE."

(1) Alexander's Feaſt: or the Power of Muſic: An Ode for St. Cecilia's Day.

According to their requeſt, he made ſeveral alterations in it; but it appears from a letter from Mr. Hughes to Sir Richard Steele, that Mr. Clayton's compoſition did not ſatisfy the Connoiſſeurs in muſick. The Opera of Calypſo and Telemachus was performed at the King's Theatre in the Hay-Market in the year 1712. We ſhall take notice of one circumſtance concerning this Opera, as it relates to the hiſtory of muſic in England, and diſcovers the great partiality ſhewn at that time to Operas performed in Italian. After many ſuch had been encouraged by large ſubſcriptions, this originally written and ſet in Engliſh after the Italian manner (though not at firſt) was prepared with the uſual expence of ſcenes and decorations; and being much crouded and applauded at the rehearſals, a ſubſcription was obtained for it as uſual. This alarmed the whole Italian band, who had intereſt enough (the late Duke of Shrewſbury being then Lord Chamberlain) to procure an order the day before the performing this Opera, to take off the ſubſcription for it, and to open the Houſe at the loweſt prices or not at all. This was deſigned to ſink it, but failed of its end. It was however performed, though under ſo great diſcouragement, and was revived ſome years ago at the Theatre in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields. Mr. Addiſon in the Spectator (2) ſpeaking of the juſt applauſe given this Opera by Signior Nicolini, (who, he ſays, was the greateſt performer in Dramatic muſic, that perhaps ever appeared upon a ſtage) has theſe words: " The town is highly obliged " to that excellent artiſt for having ſhewn us the Ita- " lian

(2) Vol. 6. num. 405. for Saturday June 14, 1712.

of the greateſt men and fineſt genius's of the age, particularly Earl Cowper, Dr. Benjamin Hoadley, now Biſhop of Wincheſter, the late Lord Chief Baron Gilbert, Sir Godfrey Kneller, Mr. Congreve, Mr. Addiſon, Sir Richard Steele, Mr. Southerne, Mr. Rowe, &c. (a). Sir Richard Steele, immediately after the death of Mr. Hughes, drew his character in a very juſt and pathetic manner in a paper publiſhed by him, and intitled, The Theatre (b); wherein he ſays, that our author, "could hardly ever be ſaid "to have enjoyed health; but was in the beſt of his days a Valetudinarian. If thoſe "who are ſparing of giving praiſe to any virtue, without extenuation of it, ſhould ſay, "that his youth was chaſtiſed into the ſeverity, and preſerved in the innocence, for "which he was conſpicuous, from the infirmity of his conſtitution; they will be under "a new difficulty, when they hear that he had none of thoſe faults, to which an ill "ſtate of health ordinarily ſubjects the reſt of mankind. His incapacity for mere frolic "diverſions

(a) Mr. Duncombe's Account of the Life and Writings of John Hughes Eſq; prefixed to the firſt volume of his Poems on ſeveral Occaſions; with ſome ſelect Eſſays in Proſe. London 1735, in 12mo.

(b) Num. 15. from Tueſday Feb. 16. to Saturday Feb. 20, 1719-20.

"lian muſic in its perfection, as well as for that gene"rous approbation he lately gave to an Opera of our "own country, in which the compoſer endeavoured to "do juſtice to the beauty of the words by following
"that noble example, which has been ſet him by the "greateſt foreign maſters in that art." The Ode to the Creator of the World, occaſioned by the Fragments of Orpheus, was printed in 1713, at the particular inſtance of Mr. Addiſon, and is mentioned with applauſe in the Spectator. This and The Ecſtacy, publiſhed ſince the death of the author, are eſteemed two of the nobleſt Odes in our Language. In the latter there is a fine compliment to Sir Iſaac Newton. The Tragedy of Cato was firſt acted in the ſame year, 1713. We take notice of this particular, becauſe we are informed by a late writer (3), that it being then brought upon the ſtage was in a great meaſure owing to Mr. Hughes. We ſhall give the writer's own words. "It has been often "ſaid by very good judges, that Cato was no proper ſub-
"ject for a Dramatic Poem. That the character of a
"Stoic Philoſopher is inconſiſtent with the hurry and "tumult of action and paſſion, which are the ſoul of "Tragedy. That the ingenious author miſcarried in
"the plan of his work, but ſupported it by the dig"nity, the purity, the beauty, and juſtneſs of the ſen-
"timents. This was ſo much the opinion of Mr.
"Maynwaring (4), who was generally allowed to be "the beſt critic of our time, that he was againſt bring"ing the Play upon the ſtage, and it lay by unfi-
"niſhed many years. That it was play'd at laſt, was
"owing to Mr. Hughes. He had read the four acts
"which were finiſhed, and rightly thought it would "be of ſervice to the public to have it repreſented at
"the latter end of Queen Anne's reign, when the old
"Engliſh ſpirit of liberty was as likely to be loſt, as "it had ever been ſince the conqueſt. He endeavoured
"to bring Mr. Addiſon into his opinion, which he "did ſo far as to procure his conſent, that it ſhould
"be acted, if Mr. Hughes would write the laſt act;
"and he offered him the ſcenary for his aſſiſtance,
"excuſing his not finiſhing it himſelf on account of "ſome other avocations. He preſt Mr. Hughes to "do it ſo earneſtly, that he was prevailed on, and ſet
"about it. But a week after ſeeing Mr. Addiſon again,
"with an intention to communicate to him what he "had thought of it, he was agreeably ſurprized at his
"producing ſome papers, where near half of the act
"was written by the author himſelf, who took fire at
"the hint, that it would be ſerviceable, and upon a
"ſecond reflection went through with the fifth act;
"not that he was diffident of Mr. Hughes's ability,
"but knowing that no man could have ſo perfect a
"notion of his deſign as himſelf, who had been ſo long
"and ſo carefully thinking of it. I was told this by "Mr. Hughes; and I tell it to ſhew, that it was not "for the love-ſcenes that Mr. Addiſon conſented to "have his Tragedy acted, but to ſupport the old
"Roman and Engliſh public ſpirit, which was then
"ſo near being ſuppreſſed by faction and bigottry."
The Siege of Damaſcus was acted at the Theatre Royal in Drury Lane in the year 1719 with great applauſe. Mr. Hughes drew up the dedication of it to Earl Cowper but ten days before he died. It is indeed ſurpriſing, that he ſhould be able to form a piece ſo finely turned, and with ſo much ſpirit at ſuch an hour, when he had death in view, and was too weak to tranſcribe it himſelf. It is generally allowed, that the characters in this Play are finely varied and diſtinguiſhed; that the ſentiments are juſt, and well adapted to the characters; that it abounds with beautiful deſcriptions, apt alluſions to the manners and opinions of the times, where the ſcene is laid, and with noble morals; that the diction is pure, unaffected, and ſublime, without any meteors of ſtyle, or ambitious ornaments; and that the plot is conducted in a ſimple and clear manner. Mr. Duncombe (5) obſerves, that the only objection which he had ever heard, related to the plan of it. "There does not appear (ſay ſome, who are eſteemed
"perſons of very good taſte and judgment) a ſufficient
"ground and foundation for the diſtreſs in the fourth "and fifth acts. For what is Phocyas's crime? The "city of Damaſcus is beſieged, and fiercely attacked
"by the Saracens. There is little or no proſpect of "relief. It muſt therefore probably fall into their "hands in a ſhort time, be ſacked and plundered, and
"the garriſon and citizens enſlaved. At this dange"rous juncture Phocyas aſſiſts the enemy to take it in "a few days ſooner. But upon what terms? That all "who lay down their arms, ſhall be ſpared, and li"berty granted to every citizen, that ſhall chooſe it,
"to leave the city, and carry off with him a mule's
"burden of his goods; the Chiefs to have ſix mules,
"and the Governor ten; with arms for their defence
"againſt the Mountain-Robbers, (Act IV. Scene I.) in"ſomuch that Daran ſays, (Act V. Scene I.) The land
"wears not the face of war, but trade; and looks as "if its merchants were ſending forth their loaded cara-
"vans to all the neighbouring countries. What is there in "all this, that a virtuous man might not have done
"for the good of his country? If Phocyas is guilty,
"his guilt muſt conſiſt in this only, that he performed
"the ſame action from a ſenſe of his own wrongs,
"and to preſerve the idol of his ſoul from violation or "death, which he might have performed laudably upon
"better principles. But this (ſay they) ſeems not a ſuf-
"ficient ground for thoſe ſtrong and ſtinging reproaches
"he caſts upon himſelf, nor for Eudocia's rejecting him
"with ſo much ſeverity. It would have been more ra"tional (conſidering the frailty of human nature, and
"the violent temptations he lay under) if he had been,
"at laſt, prevailed upon to profeſs himſelf a Mahome-
"tan; for then his remorſe and ſelf-condemnation would "have been natural, his puniſhment juſt, and the cha"racter of Eudocia placed in a moſt amiable light."
Mr. Duncombe (6) owns himſelf at a loſs for an anſwer to this objection; and therefore thinks himſelf obliged to acquaint the reader, in order to do juſtice to the author's judgment, that he had formed the play according to the plan here recommended. But when it was offered to the managers of Drury-Lane Play-Houſe in the year 1718, they refuſed to act it, unleſs he would alter the character of Phocyas, pretending that he could not be an hero, if he changed his religion, and that the audience would not bear the ſight of him after it, in how lively a manner ſoever his remorſe and repentance might be deſcribed. "But ſurely, ſays Mr.
"Duncombe, when in the agony of his ſoul, and diſ-
"tracted with paſſion, he is at laſt prevailed upon,
"though with the utmoſt reluctance and horror, to
"kiſs the Alcoran, he rather appears an object of "pity than of deteſtation. How tenderly and reaſon-
"ably paſſionate is the ſcene here referred to, as it
"ſtands in the original draught of the play, and
"what ſcope does it give a maſterly actor to diſplay
"his ſkill!" However the author, who was then in a very languiſhing condition, finding, that if he did not comply, his relations would probably loſe the benefit of the Play, he conſented, though with reluctance, to new model the character of Phocyas. He wrote, when he was but nineteen years old, a Tragedy, intitled,

(3) Mr. Oldmixon in his Eſſay on Criticiſm, printed in 1728 in 8vo, pag. 6.

(4) Arthur Maynwaring, Eſq; Author of the Medley, &c.

(5) Account of the Life and Writings of John Hughes Eſq; prefixed to the firſt volume of his Poems on ſeveral Occaſions, pag. 26. edit. London 1735. in 12mo.

(6) Ibid. pag. 27, 28.

" diverſions never made him peeviſh or ſour to thoſe, whom he ſaw in them; but his " humanity was ſuch, that he could partake and ſhare thoſe pleaſures he beheld others " enjoy, without repining that he himſelf could not join in them. No, he made a true " uſe of an ill conſtitution, and formed his mind to the living under it, with as much " ſatisfaction as it could admit of. His intervals of eaſe were employed in drawing, " deſigning, or elſe in Muſic or Poetry; for he had not only a taſte, but an ability of " performance to a great excellence in thoſe arts, which entertain the mind within the " rules of the ſevereſt morality and the ſtricteſt dictates of religion." His brother, Mr. JABEZ HUGHES, who had a place in the Stamp-Office, and died at London January 17, $173\frac{1}{2}$, aged forty ſix, was a man of a very good genius and conſiderable learning, and publiſhed a Tranſlation of Claudian's Rape of Proſerpine, the ſecond edition of which was printed at London 1723 in 12mo under the following title: The Rape of Proſerpine from Claudian. In three Books. With the Epiſode of Sixtus and Erichtho from Lucan's Pharſalia, Book VI. Tranſlated by Mr. Jabez Hughes. The ſecond edition, corrected and enlarged with notes. A collection of original Poems and Tranſlations, with ſome occaſional letters on important ſubjects, was prepared for the preſs by this Gentleman a little before his death, and is expected to be ſoon publiſhed.

intitled, AMALASONT, Queen of the Goths, which diſplays a ſertile genius, and a maſterly invention; but as it was never deſigned by him for the preſs, nor reviſed and corrected in his riper age, the diction in general was too much neglected. Mr. Duncombe tells us (7), that he has " attempted to correct the ſtyle, " and altered ſome incidents, which were thought not " likely to ſucceed. This may be preſented to the " view of the public, when it can be brought on the " ſtage without having too much injuſtice done it in " the performance." The ſame Gentleman collected our author's Poems, and publiſhed them at London, in 1735, in two volumes in 12mo, under the following title: Poems on ſeveral Occaſions. With ſome ſelect Eſſays in Proſe. In two Volumes. By John Hughes, Eſq; Adorned with Sculptures. We ſhall now take a view of Mr. Hughes's Tranſlations and Writings in Proſe. The Advices from Parnaſſus, and the Political Touchſtone of Trajano Boccalini, tranſlated by ſeveral hands, were printed in Folio in 1706. This tranſlation was reviſed and corrected, and the preface to it was written by Mr. Hughes. His tranſlation of Monſieur de Fontenelle's Dialogues of the Dead, with two original Dialogues, were publiſhed in 1708. The greateſt part of it had lain by him above ſix years. He afterwards tranſlated Monſieur de Fontenelle's Diſcourſe concerning the Antients and Moderns, which is printed with his Converſations with a Lady on the Plurality of Worlds, tranſlated by Mr. Glanville. The Hiſtory of the Revolutions in Portugal, written by the Abbé de Vertot, and tranſlated by Mr. Hughes, was printed for S. Buckley in 1712, without the name of the tranſlator. The tranſlation of the Letters of Abelard and Heloiſe was ſo well received by the public, that there have been five editions of it in the compaſs of a few years; though it has been but lately known by what hand it was performed. He wrote the Preface to the Compleat Hiſtory of England, printed at London in 1706 in 3 vol. in Folio, and reprinted in 1719 (8). In the Tatler he wrote, vol. II. No. 64, A Letter, ſigned Joſiah Couplet. No. 73. A Letter againſt Gameſters, ſigned William Truſty. Mr. Tickell alludes to this Letter in a copy of verſes addreſſed to the Spectator, Vol. VII. No. 532.

From felon Gameſters the raw 'Squire is free,
And Britain owes her reſcu'd Oaks to thee.

No. 113, The Inventory of a Beau. In the Spectator he wrote, Vol. I. No. 33, A Letter on the Art of improving Beauty. No. 53, A ſecond Letter on the ſame ſubject. No. 66, Two Letters concerning fine Breeding. Vol. II. No. 91, The Hiſtory of Honoria, or the Rival Mother. No. 104, A Letter on Riding-Habits for Ladies. No. 141, Remarks on a Comedy intitled, The Lancaſhire Witches. Vol. III. No. 210, On the Immortality of the Soul. No. 220, A Letter concerning Expedients for Wit. No. 230, All, except the laſt Letter. No. 231, A Letter on the Awe of appearing before public Aſſemblies. No. 237, On Divine Providence. Vol. IV. No. 252, A Letter on the Eloquence of Tears and Fainting-Fits. No. 302, The Character of Emilia. No. 311, A Letter from the Father of a great Fortune. Vol. V. No. 375, A Picture of Virtue in Diſtreſs. Vol. VII. No. 525, On Conjugal Love. No. 537, On the Dignity of Human Nature. No. 541, Rules for Pronunciation and Action, chiefly collected from Cicero. No. 554, On the Improvement of the Genius, illuſtrated in the Characters of Lord Bacon, Mr. Boyle, Sir Iſaac Newton, and Leonardo da Vinci. Mr. Duncombe (9) obſerves, that he has not been able to learn what papers in the Guardian were written by Mr. Hughes beſides No. 37. Vol. I, which contains Remarks on the Tragedy of Othello. Our author is ſuppoſed to have written the whole, or at leaſt a conſiderable part of the Lay-Monaſtry; conſiſting of Eſſays, Diſcourſes, &c. publiſhed ſingly under the title of the Lay-Monk. Being the Sequel of the Spectators: the ſecond edition of which was printed at London 1714 in 12mo. It contains forty papers, the firſt of which is dated Monday November 16, 1713, and the laſt February 15, $171\frac{3}{4}$. Mr. Hughes publiſhed, in the year 1715, a very accurate edition of the works of Mr. Edmund Spenſer, in ſix Volumes in 12mo. To this edition are prefixed the Life of Mr. Spenſer; an Eſſay on Allegorical Poetry; Remarks on the Fairy-Queen, on the Shepherd's Calendar, and the other writings of Spenſer; and a Gloſſary explaining the old and obſcure words; all written by Mr. Hughes. Charon, or The Ferry-Boat, A Viſion, firſt appeared in the year 1718. This, and Mr. Walſh's Æſculapius, or Hoſpital of Fools (10), are perhaps the two fineſt Dialogues in our Language, as well as the moſt lively imitations of Lucian.

T.

(7) Ibid. pag. 29.

(8) See The Life of Dr. White Kennet Biſhop of Peterborough, pag. 33. edit. London 1730 in fol.

(9) Ubi ſupra, pag. 36.

(10) This Dialogue is printed for J. Pemberton at the end of a Miſcellany of Poems and Tranſlations in 1714.

☞HUMPHREY (LAURENCE), a learned Engliſh writer in the ſixteenth Century, was born at Newport Pagnell in Buckinghamſhire, about the year 1527 [A], and educated in the Greek and Latin Languages at Cambridge, and in 1547 became Demy of Magdalen College in Oxford (a). In 1549 he took the degree of Bachelor of Arts (b), and was choſen perpetual Fellow of his College (c). In 1552 he took the degree of Maſter of Arts (d). About that time he was made Greek Reader of his College, and entered into holy Orders. In June 1555 he had leave to travel abroad [B], and went to Zurich,

(a) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 241. 2d edit. London 1721.

(b) Idem, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 73.

(c) Idem, Ath. Oxon. ubi ſupra.

(d) Idem, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 77.

[A] Born ... about the year 1527.] It appears from his epitaph (1) that he was 63 years old, when he died February the 1ſt, $158\frac{8}{9}0$.

[B] In June 1555 he had leave to travel abroad.] The Preſident, Vice-Preſident, Dean, &c. of his College gave leave to him (2), who in the opinion of all " was much commended for his life and converſation, as " alſo for the excellency of his learning and wit, that " he might freely for the cauſe of ſtudy travel into " parts beyond ſea for one year, conditionally that he " contain himſelf from thoſe places, that are ſuſpected " to be heretical or favourers of hereſy; and that alſo " he refrain from the company of thoſe, who are or " were authors of hereſy or heretical opinions, &c.

(1) See Wood, Hiſt. & Antiq. Univ. Oxon. lib. 1. pag. 208, 209.

(2) Reg. Act. Coll. Magd. fol. 2. a.

Zurich, and aſſociated himſelf with the Engliſh exiles there, who had fled their country on the account of Religion. After the death of Queen Mary he returned to England, and was reſtored to his Fellowſhip in Magdalen College, from which he had been expelled, becauſe he did not return after his time of leave was expired (e). In 1560 he was appointed the Queen's Profeſſor of Divinity at Oxford (f); and December the 11th 1561 elected Preſident of his College (g). June the 10th 1562 he took the degree of Bachelor of Divinity, and July the 10th the ſame year that of Doctor (h). In 1570 he was made Dean of Glouceſter upon the promotion of Dr. Thomas Cooper to the See of Lincoln; and in 1580 removed to the Deanery of Wincheſter in the place of Dr. John Watſon, which was the higheſt preferment, which he enjoyed, on account, as it was thought, of his not conſenting altogether to the ceremonies of the Church of England (i) [C]. He publiſhed ſeveral works [D]; and was a man of extenſive learning, and a profound Divine. He ſpent the greateſt part of his time in a ſtudious and retired manner, and died February the 1ſt $15\frac{89}{90}$, aged ſixty three years, and was interred at the upper end of the Inner-Chapel of Magdalen College, where a monument was erected to his memory [E]. He married in the beginning of Queen Elizabeth's reign Joan, the daughter of Andrew Inkfordby of Ipſwich in Suffolk, by whom he had ſeven ſons and five daughters. She died Auguſt the 27th 1611, aged ſeventy four years, and was interred in the Chancel of Steple-Barton Church in Oxfordſhire; over whoſe grave her eldeſt daughter Juſtina, wife of Caſpar Dormer of the ſaid place Eſq; erected a fair monument (k).

(e) Idem, Ath. Oxon. col. 241.

(f) Idem, Hiſt. & Antiquitat. Univerſ. Oxon. lib. 2. pag. 37.

(g) Idem, ibid. pag. 191.

(b) Idem, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 91.

(i) Idem, Ath. Oxon. col. 242.

(k) Idem, col. 243.

[C] Not conſenting altogether to the ceremonies of the Church of England.] Mr. Wood tells us (3), that our author "from the city of Zurich and the correſpondence, "that he had at Geneva, brought back at his return "to England ſo much of the Calvinian both in doc- "trine and diſcipline, that the beſt that could be ſaid "of him was, that he was a moderate and conſcien- "tious Nonconformiſt." However Gabriel Harvey L. L. D. who was his contemporary, and knew him, obſerves (4), that he and Dr. William Fulke of Cambridge, whom he ſtiles Standard-bearers for a long time of the Nonconformiſts, did grow conformable in the end, as they grew riper in experience and ſager in judgment.

(3) Athen. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 242.

(4) Pierce's Supererogation: or a new Praiſe of the old Aſſe. A preparative to certain larger Diſcourſes, intitled, Naſhe's Fame, pag. 92. edit. London 1593 in 4to.

[D] He publiſhed ſeveral works.] They are as follow. I. Epiſtola de Græcis Literis, & Homeri Lectione & imitatione, ad Præſidem & Socios Coll. B. Mar. Magd. Oxon. prefixed to a book of Hadrian Junius, intitled Copiæ-Cornu, printed at Baſil 1558 in folio. II. De Religionis conſervatione & reformatione, deq; primatu Regum. Baſil 1559 in 8vo. III. De ratione interpretandi Auctores. Baſil 1559 8vo. IV. Obadias Propheta, Hebraicè & Latinè, & Philo de Judice Græcè & Latinè: printed at the end of the preceding tract. V. Optimates, ſive de Nobilitate, ejuſque antiqua Origine, Naturâ, Officiis, Diſciplinâ, &c. Libri tres, Baſil 1560 in 8vo. This was tranſlated into Engliſh by an anonymous perſon, and printed at London 1563 in 8vo. VI. Philo Judæus de Nobilitate, interprete Laurentio Humfredo: ſubjoined to the preceding tract. VII. Oratio Woodſtochiæ habita ad illuſt. Reginam Elizabetham 31 Auguſti 1572. London 1572 in 4to. VIII. Johannis Juelli, Angli, Epiſcopi Sariſburienſis, Vita & Mors, ejuſque veræ doctrinæ Defenſio, &c. London 1573 in 4to. IX. Oratio in Aulâ Woodſtochianâ habita ad illuſtr. Reginam Elizabetham anno 1575. in 4to. X. De Fermento vitando: Concio in Matt. 16. Marc. 8. Luc. 12. Jeſus dixit illis, Videte & cavete a fermento Phariſæorum. London 1582 in 8vo. Rupell. 1585 in 8vo. XI. Jeſuitiſmi pars prima; ſive praxis Romanæ Curiæ contra Reſpublicas & Principes. London 1582 in 8vo. XII. Jeſuitiſmi Pars ſecunda: Puritano-Papiſmi ſeu Doctrinæ Jeſuiticæ aliquot rationibus ab Edm. Campiano comprehenſæ, & a Joanne Duræo defenſæ, Confutatio. London 1584 in 8vo. XIII. Apologetica epiſtola ad Academiæ Oxonienſis Cancellarium. Rupel. 1585 in 8vo. XIV. Seven Sermons againſt Treaſon, on 1 Sam. c. xxvi. 8, 9, 10, 11, &c. London 1588 in 8vo. XV. Concio in die Cinerum, in 8vo. XVI. He alſo reviſed and corrected Joannis Shepreve ſumma & Synopſis Novi Teſtamenti diſtichis ducentis ſexaginta comprehenſa, firſt printed at Straſburg about the year 1556 in 8vo, and publiſhed it at Oxford 1586 in 8vo. XVII. He likewiſe wrote, in conjunction with Robert Crowley, a book againſt that of Miles Hoggeard, publiſhed under the reign of Queen Mary againſt the Proteſtants.

[E] Where a monument was erected to his memory.] The epitaph on it is as follows.

M. S.

Laurentio Humfredo S. S. Theologiæ in hac Academiâ Doctori & Profeſſori Regio per annos 28. P. M. hujus Collegii Præſidi, Juſtina Dormeria filia natu maxima, Patri ſuo venerabili æviterni obſequii ergo, H. M. mærens poſuit. Obiit Kal. Februarii anno ſalutis 1589 ætatis ſuæ.

Tumulum recentem, ſta, (moræ precium eſt) lege
Novè ad ſepultum heic quenquam cave creduas.
Humfredus Alpha Theologûm ſubtus ſitu'ſt,
Studio, labore, lectione, acumine,
Varro alter, Helluo literarum maximus.
Pietatis orbis Chriſtianus teſtis eſt,
Venta hoic Decano, Magdalena Præſidi
Perhoſpitali debuit. Sat, Hoſpes, i. T.

HUNGARY (MARY Queen of), the ſiſter of the Emperor Charles the Fifth, was married in the year 1521 to Lewis King of Hungary, who was unfortunately killed in the battle of Mohacks in the year 1526. His widow was made Governeſs of the Low-Countries in the year 1531, and acquitted herſelf of that employment with great courage and prudence [A]. She continued in that employment till Charles the Fifth's abdication, when ſhe accompanied him into Spain, where ſhe died October the 18th 1558. She was very

[A] She acquitted herſelf of that employment with great courage and prudence.] Read Brantome; he tells you, that "this Queen of Hungary was a great help to "the Emperor, and that ſhe ſerved him ſo well, that "one cannot tell what would have become of him, had "it not been for her. And indeed he left all the "affairs of his government entirely to her care, ſo that "even when the Emperor himſelf was in Flanders, "he ſuffered her to manage all the public buſineſs of "the Low-Countries; the Council was held at her "Palace, and ſhe preſided in it. It is true that ſhe, "who was very prudent and wiſe, depended on his "adviſe, and gave him an account of all that paſ- "ſed in the Council, when he was abſent, in which "he took a great delight. She carried on great and "ſucceſsful wars, ſometimes by her Generals, and "ſometimes in Perſon, being always on horſeback, "like a brave Amazon (1)." What Brantome ſays (2) of the Oration ſhe delivered the day of the Emperor's abdication, is very curious. We have here an inſtance which proves that the women are capable of governing.

(1) Brantome. Dames Galantes, tom. 2. pag. 91.

(2) Ibid. pag. 95.

very fond of pomp and ſplendor [B], and took a great delight in hunting [C]. It is reported that ſhe endeavoured to have the puniſhment of the Reformed mitigated [D]. She underſtood Latin (a). There aroſe a perſonal hatred between her and Henry the ſecond King of France, which occaſioned a great devaſtation; for they did by turns ſet each other's country-ſeats on fire. Mary was the firſt that began to practiſe that kind of hoſtility, in order to be revenged of the French for ſome ſongs they had made againſt her reputation [E]. Henry found means to be even with her [F]. He

(a) See the remark [H].

[B] She was very fond of pomp and ſplendor.] Brantome aſſerts (3) that when Philip II went to take poſſeſſion of the Low-Countries, he was received in the moſt ſtately manner imaginable; "but eſpecially, adds "he, the Queen of Hungary made him the moſt ſplen- "did reception in her Palaces of Bains and Marimont, "going far beyond what was done by any other per- "ſon." He gives us afterwards an account "of the "repreſentation of a ſiege, with which this Queen "entertained the Emperor and all his Court, at his "beautiful Palace of Marimont." He obſerves in another book (4), "that ſhe entertained the Emperor "Charles and his whole Court at her Palace called "Bains, when his ſon King Philip paſſed from Spain "into Flanders to viſit her: the ſtatelineſs of which "entertainment was ſo wonderful and great, that no- "thing was mentioned at that time but las fieſtas, the "entertainments of Bains; thus the Spaniards uſed to "ſpeak. And indeed I remember, that whatever "great entertainment was given during the journey "to Bayonne, as running at the ring, tournaments, "maſquerades, and other expenſive entertainments, "nothing came up to las fieſtas of Bains, according "to ſome old Spaniſh Gentlemen, who had ſeen thoſe "entertainments."

(3) Memoirs, tom. 2. in the Elogy of Henry II, pag. 23.

(4) Memoires des Dames Galantes, tom. 2. pag. 92.

[C] . . . . and took a very great delight in hunting.] She followed her huſband every where, and even when he went a hunting, "which exerciſe ſhe loved en- "tirely; ſo that when ſhe was Governeſs of the Low- "Countries for her brother the Emperor Charles V, "ſhe uſed often to leave her agreeable palaces of "Mechlin and Bruſſels, to go and live in the country "at Marimont, and in her other palaces ſituated near "the foreſts, where from morning till night ſhe took "the diverſion of hunting: whence the Flemiſh uſed "to call her the Huntreſs, and uſed to draw her like "Diana. She raiſed the ſame inclination in her niece, "Margaret of Auſtria, Ducheſs of Parma, who has "alſo been Governeſs of the Low-Countries. She had "inherited a fondneſs for this laborious exerciſe of "hunting from her grand-mother by her father's ſide, "namely, Mary Ducheſs of Burgundy, conſort to the "Emperor Maximilian I. This Princeſs being a hunt- "ing (which diverſion ſhe uſed to take almoſt every "day) fell from her horſe and died, to the great grief "of the Flemiſh, and the Emperor her Conſort, who "loſt alſo his ſecond wife Blanch Sforza by the ſame "accident (5)." This ſeems to be a tranſlation of the following words from Famianus Strada. Capiebatur venandi ſtudio ſummopere Gubernatrix, plane ut Venatricem vulgo appellarent, habituque venatricis expingerent: neptem videlicet Mariæ Burgundiæ, quæ ab inſectandis feris nunquam deſtitit, donec inter venandum equo excuſſa vitam amiſit (†), fato non tam ſuo, quàm Maximiliani mariti, cujus & uxor altera, Blanca Sfortia, in venatione equo decidit, obiitque (‡). Ejuſmodi autem ſtudium arripuit tam avide, in eumque laborem duravit adeo membra decennis nondum puella (6), ut amitam per ſaltus campoſque ſequeretur impavida (7). The ſenſe of the end of this paſſage is, that "the Princeſs "Margaret became ſo fond of hunting, and harden- "ed her body ſo in that exerciſe, that being not yet "ten years old, ſhe could follow her aunt through "fields and woods, without fearing the leaſt dan- "ger."

(5) Hilarion de Coſte, Elog. des Dames Illuſtres, tom. 2. pag. 561.

(†) 1482.

(‡) 1496.

(6) That is to ſay, Margaret, Charles V's natural daughter.

(7) Strada, de Bello Belgic. lib. 1. pag. m. 45.

[D] It is reported, that ſhe endeavoured to have the puniſhment of the Reformed mitigated.] When the Court of Spain, in order to ſatisfy the diſcontented in the Low-Countries, promiſed them in the year 1566, that the exerciſe of the Inquiſition ſhould be ſuppreſſed, it was added, that the imperial laws, which condemned Hereticks to death, ſhould be mitigated, as they had been in the year 1550 at the Queen of Hungary's requeſt. Immo ſic Cæſarem facturum fuiſſe ſi viveret, quando ipſe ob ſimiles difficultates anno milleſimo quengenteſimo quinquageſimoque, poſtulante Mariâ Hungariæ Reginâ ejus ſorore, eaſdem pœnas quas ante ſtatuerat, emendare ac lenire non inutile aut indecorum arbitratus eſt (8). i. e. "Nay, the Emperor would have done "the ſame had he been alive, ſince the like troubles "happening in the year 1550, he himſelf did not think "it uſeleſs or diſgraceful to amend and mitigate, at "his ſiſter the Queen of Hungary's requeſt, the laws "he had made before concerning the puniſhments of "the Hereticks."

(8) From Strada, Decad. 1. lib. 5. pag. 217.

[E] She ſet Henry II's Country Seats on fire . . . . in order to be revenged on the French for ſome ſongs they had made againſt her reputation.] Here follows what Brantome relates upon this ſubject (9). "I have heard it "reported, that the chief reaſon for which the Queen "of Hungary kindled her noble fire about Picardy, "and in other parts of France, was the impudence "of ſome bold ſlanderers, who uſed to talk of "her amours, and to ſing aloud every where a ſong "intitled Au Barbanſon de la Reine d'Hongrie, (to the "Queen of Hungary's Barbanſon). This was how- "ever a ruſtic ſong, which plainly appeared to be "made by ſome ſilly country fellow." It appears from thence that the people are doomed to be puniſhed not only for their Sovereign's faults (10), but even for thoſe of a great many other perſons. I ſhall now quote a paſſage in which ſome particulars ſeem to be omitted. "There was a very great hatred between "Henry II, and the Queen of Hungary, the occaſion of "which I am not acquainted with: I know only that "the French ſoldiers hadmade ſome ſongs upon her and "Barbanſon, the moſt handſome Lord at her court (11)." It was an eaſy matter to ſupply what is wanting in this account; it was but obſerving, that this Queen cauſed ſeveral places in Picardy to be burnt without ſparing even the Royal Palace of Folembrai. Thus one ſees what this perſonal hatred was grounded upon on both ſides. Mary imagined, no doubt, that Henry approved of thoſe ſongs, and hated him for it heartily; Henry on the other hand took the burning of his own Country-Seat for a perſonal affront. I do not know what we ought to think of this Princeſs's amours; I only remember that Brantome aſſerts (12), "ſhe "was very beautiful and agreeable, and very lovely, "though ſhe ſhewed herſelf ſomewhat manly: but "ſhe was never the worſe for it in love affairs, nor in "war, which ſhe choſe for her exerciſe."

(9) Dames Galantes, tom. 2. pag. 388.

(10) Quicquid delirant Reges plectuntur Achivi. Horat. Epiſt. 2. lib. 1. ver. 14. i. e. "The peo- "ple ſuffer "when the "Prince offends. Creech.

(11) Mezeray, Hiſt. de France, tom. 2. pag. 1090.

(12) Dames Galantes, tom. 2. pag. 90.

If you have a mind to know when ſhe committed thoſe exceſſes in Picardy, read the following paſſage. "Whilſt the Emperor her brother was beſieging "Mentz, ſhe came into Picardy with the Count de "Rœux, to prevent the King from going to the aſ- "ſiſtance of the beſieged, laid all waſte before her, ſet "fire to every thing, burnt Noyon, Neſle, Chauny, "Roye, Folembray, a Royal Palace built by King "Francis I, deſtroyed ſeven or eight hundred villages, "and beſieged Hedin, which ſhe took (13)."

(13) Hilarion de Coſte, Eloges des Dames Illuſtres, tom v. pag. 567. He puts in the margin. "Hence "came this com- "mon ſaying; "She acted the "mad woman "in Bray, ſhe "has been Mary "at Bourg, "when the "French burnt "that city." But it is not an eaſy matter to gueſs at the meaning of this marginal note; one cannot make any ſenſe of it; it ſhould be perhaps Marrie (ſorry) inſtead of Marie (Mary).

[F] . . . . Henry found means to be even with her.] After he had taken Marenburg and Dinant, and laid Bouvines even with the ground, the inhabitants of which had been, ſome hanged, and the reſt put to the ſword, he croſſed the Sambre, and laid the whole country of Hainault waſte. "He burnt Mariemont, "a Country-Seat built by the Queen of Hungary, and "the pretty city of Bains (14), with the ſtately Pa- "lace which ſhe had built there, and adorned with "an immenſe number of pictures, antient ſtatues, and "other ingraved and carved works. The old city of "Bavets, concerning the antiquity and greatneſs of "which the old chronicles relate a thouſand ſto- "ries, underwent the ſame deſolation. The burn- "ings and devaſtations were very much againſt "Henry II's temper, but he thought he was in ho- "nour

(14) It ſhould be Binche.

He wiſhed moſt paſſionately to take her priſoner [G]. Eraſmus dedicated a book to this Princeſs, in which the Printers committed maliciouſly a very ſtrange blunder [H]. Father Hilarion de Coſte has been guilty of ſome little chronological errors [I], and Moreri has not followed his account accurately in every reſpect.

" nour obliged thus to revenge himſelf for the burning " of his palace of Folembray, and becauſe in that " ſame place the Flemiſh had expoſed during two days " a picture of his father the great King Francis, to " the inſults of the ſoldiers (15)." Let us add to this authority of Mezeray a paſſage from Brantome, which contains more particulars. " She was the firſt that " kindled thoſe great fires in France, and ſhe burnt " beautiful houſes and caſtles, particularly Folembray, " a fine and pleaſant Palace, which our Kings had " built for the pleaſure and diverſion of hunting; at " which the King was ſo much vexed and exaſpe- " rated, that he was ſoon even with her, and to re- " venge himſelf he burnt her beautiful Palace of Bains, " which was reckoned a wonder of the world, ex- " ceeding (if I may ſay ſo, and as I heard thoſe ſay, " who ſaw it in its perfection) the ſeven wonders of " the world ſo famous amongſt the antients (16)." There was in that Queen's room, a tapeſtry all waved with gold, ſilver, and ſilk, in which were repreſented very naturally Charles V's conqueſts, and all his expeditions (17). " In a word (18), there was nothing in " that Palace but what was excellent and precious; " but this poor Palace loſt all its ſplendor ſome time " after; for it was entirely plundered, deſtroyed, " and pulled down. I have been told that when " the Princeſs heard this, ſhe was ſo much concern- " ed, vexed, and exaſperated, that ſhe was a great " while before ſhe recovered herſelf, and as ſhe once " paſſed by the ruins of it, ſhe looked upon it with " ſadneſs; and with tears in her eyes ſwore that " France ſhould repent it, and feel the conſequences " of thoſe burnings, and that ſhe would never be ſa- " tisfied, till that beautiful Palace of Fontain-bleau, " which men did ſo much admire, was levelled with " the ground, ſo that not one ſtone ſhould be left upon " another. And indeed ſhe did fully ſatisfy her paſſion " upon that poor Province of Picardy (19), which felt " her rage and her flames: and I think that if a " truce had not been concluded, her vengeance would " have been exceſſive. For ſhe had an hard and proud " heart, which was not eaſily mollified; and ſhe " was reckoned to be a little too cruel, both by her " own party and by ours. But ſuch is the natural " temper of the women, and even of them that are " diſtinguiſhed by their rank, they are too ready to " revenge themſelves, when they are injured. It is " ſaid, that the Emperor loved her the better for it." Some Hiſtorians relate, that Henry II cauſed an inſcription to be ingraved on a ſtone, in which this Queen was ſtiled a mad-woman, and ordered to remember Folembray. Bincium Mariæ Hungariæ Reginæ olim deliciæ, Henrici ſecundi Galliarum Regis odium expertæ. Feruntque repertum inibi ſaxum, quod Henricus villæ ſuæ à Maria vaſtatæ ultor inciderat in hæc verba: Inſana Regina, Folembræum memoria repete (20). i. e. " Binch, formerly Mary Queen of Hungary's delight, " experienced the anger of Henry II, King of France. " It is reported that a ſtone was found there, on " which Henry, in order to be revenged of Mary " who had burnt his Palace, cauſed theſe words to be " ingraved, Diſtracted Queen, remember Folembray."

[G] . . . he wiſhed . . . to take her priſoner.] Brantome acquaints us with this particular (21). " I have " been told, theſe are his own words, that the late " King Henry II, wiſhed nothing more earneſtly, " than to have it in his power, to take the Queen of " Hungary priſoner, not with a deſign to uſe her ill, " though ſhe gave him ſufficient reaſon for it, by ſet- " ting all on fire, but that he might have the glory " to keep that Queen priſoner, and ſee what would " be her behaviour and conſtancy in priſon, and " whether ſhe would be as haughty and proud as ſhe was " at the head of her armies: for there is nothing ſo " ſtout and haughty as a great Lady, when ſhe has " a mind to it, and has ſuch a courage as this had, " who was extremely pleaſed with the name which " the Spaniſh ſoldiers gave her, who as they uſed to " call her brother the Emperor, el Padre de los Soldados (the Father of the Soldiers) ſo they called her " la Madre (their Mother), as formerly in the days of " the old Romans, Victoria or Victorina was called " in her armies the Mother of the Camp (22)."

[H] Eraſmus dedicated a book to her, in which the Printers committed maliciouſly a very ſtrange blunder.] The book which Eraſmus dedicated to her in the year 1529 is intitled, Vidua Chriſtiana (the Chriſtian Widow). The author obſerves of her, that ſhe took a gread delight in the reading of Latin books. Cæſaris germana Maria Latinos codices habebat in deliciis, cui nuper ſcripſi Viduam Chriſtianam. Id efflagitarat à me quidam Eccleſiaſtes illi chariſſimus. Scena rerum humanarum invertitur, monachi literas neſciunt, & fœminæ libris indulgent (23). i. e. " Mary, the Emperor's " ſiſter, was extremely fond of Latin books; I have " lately dedicated my Chriſtian Widow to her; being " deſired to do it by a Miniſter who was very much " in favour with her. The world is turned upſide " down: the Monks cannot read, and the women " pore upon books." She was at that time in Auſtria, whence ſhe retired ſoon after into Moravia (24), not thinking herſelf ſafe at Vienna, becauſe of Soliman's invaſion. But to mention now the malicious error of the Printers, I muſt obſerve that they were vexed becauſe they had not received from the author the preſents they expected. Whereupon the hardeſt drinker among them undertook to revenge them all, and found an infallible method to perform his deſign: a method which vexed Eraſmus to ſuch a degree, that he would have given three hundred golden crowns to have prevented it; but it is ſuch an error of the preſs as cannot be tranſlated into any language. We muſt therefore preſent our readers with the original only. Nuper cum inter imprimendum excuſores aliquot conqueſti fuiſſent me ſibi xenia nondum perſolviſſe, exortus eſt inter eos quidam cæteris vinolentior, qui profiteretur ſe pœnas à me exacturum, ni darem: atque id profectò veterator tam egregiè effecit, ut aureis nummis trecentis redimere eam ignominiam voluiſſem. Cùm enim in Vidua mea, quam Sereniſſimæ Hungariæ Reginæ dedicaveram, ad laudem cujuſdam ſanctiſſimæ fœminæ inter alia liberalitatem illius in pauperes referrem, hæc verba ſubjunxi: Atque mente illâ uſum ſemper fuiſſe, quæ talem fœminam deceret. Unde ſceleſtus ille animad-vertens ſibi vindictæ occaſionem oblatam eſſe, ex mente illa mentula fecit. Itaque volumina mille fuere impreſſa (25).

[I] Father Hilarion de Coſte has been guilty of ſome chronological errors.] I. He aſſerts (26), that our Mary Queen of Hungary was born at Bruſſels September the 13*th* 1513. This is falſe and impoſſible, ſince the Archduke her father died in the year 1506. They have put 1503 and not 1513 in Moreri's Dictionary. II. This Prince's nuptials were not celebrated at Buda in the year 1521, to the great ſatisfaction of Uladiſlaus (27) King of Hungary; for Uladiſlaus died in the year 1516. III. Queen Mary did not continue conſtantly at Lintz in Auſtria (28) during the years 1527, 1528, 1529, and 1530, I have quoted (29) Eraſmus, who aſſerts that he retired into Moravia in the year 1529. IV. She was not Governeſs of the Low-Countries twenty eight years (30) but only twenty four (31), namely from the year 1531, to the year 1555. The author, whom I refute, contradicts himſelf, and owns in page 569, that this government did not laſt above twenty five years: but he commits in that very paſſage ſeveral blunders. V. He ſuppoſes that the Queen of Hungary reſigned that government into her brother's hands in 1557. It was October the 25th, 1555. VI. He ſuppoſes that Margaret of Auſtria Governeſs of the Low Countries died in the year 1532, whereas ſhe died in the year 1530. He ſuppoſes in this Margaret's elogy (32) that ſhe was born January the 10th 1480, and died Dec. 1, 1531, at the age of fifty one (33). Is this knowing how to reckon? VII. He aſſerts that the Queen of Hungary began to govern the Low-Countries in the year 1532, whereas it was the preceding year. VIII. He ſays that when ſhe reſigned that government to her brother; ſhe made a long ſpeech to the people. The aſſembly before which Charles V abdicated his Kingdoms ought not to be called thus.

(15) Mezeray, Hiſt. de France, tom. 2. pag. 1090, under the year 1554. See alſo Lewis Guicciardini Deſcript. du Pais Bas, pag. m. 468.

(16) Brantome, Dames Galantes, tom. 2. pag. 92.

(17) Ibid. pag. 93.

(18) Ibid. pag. 94.

(19) Brantome ſeems to be guilty here of an anachroniſm; for this Queen had laid Picardy waſte before her beautiful palace of Binche was burnt. And beſides we do not find that any truce was concluded during Mary's adminiſtration after the year 1554. And ſhe was no more Governeſs when the truce was concluded Feb. 5, 1556.

(20) Famian. Strada, Dec. 1. lib. 9. pag. 577. ad ann. 1578.

(21) Dames Galantes, tom. 2. pag. 306.

(22) Brantome is in the right. Hic puerulus a Victoria Cæſar eſt appellatus, quum illa Mater Caſtrorum ab exercitu nuncupata eſſet. i. e. " Victoria " called this little boy Cæſar, " as ſhe herſelf " was called the " Mother of the " Camp by the " Army." Treb. Pollio in triginta Tyrannis, num. 24. See alſo num. 30.

(23) Eraſm. Ep. 31. lib. 19. pag. 846. See alſo Epiſt. 20. lib. 26. pag. 1432.

(24) Idem, Ep. 21. lib. 26. pag. 1434.

(25) Idem, Epiſt. 68. lib. 30. pag. 1956. dated from Friburg Jan. 9, 1535. This Letter was publiſhed by Merula with the Life of Eraſmus, in the year 1607.

(26) Hilar. de Coſte, Eloge des Dames Illuſtres, tom. 2. pag. 559.

(27) Ibid. pag. 560.

(28) Ibid. pag. 565.

(29) In the remark [H] quotation (24).

(30) Hilar. de Coſte, Eloges des Dames Illuſtres, tom. 2. pag. 566.

(31) Brantome, Dames Galantes, tom. 2. pag. 91. ſays, about 22 or 23 years.

(32) Pag. 313. of the 2d volume.

(33) Ibid. pag. 319.

ſpect [K]. I omit mentioning the ſcandalous report concerning Charles V's amours with this Queen of Hungary [L], who was, they ſay, Don Juan of Auſtria's mother.

[K] ... Moreri has not followed his account accurately in every reſpect.] Hilarion de Coſte had obſerved, that the Queen of Hungary died, as ſhe was in her return to the Low-Countries, where ſhe deſired to end her days, becauſe ſhe was very much beloved and eſteemed by the inhabitants of thoſe countries (34). Moreri inſtead of keeping within the ſame bounds, aſſerts that ſhe died, at the ſame time when ſhe had juſt taken again upon her the government of the Low-Countries. He has been more exact in tranſcribing one of the blunders of that Minim: he aſſerts with him that this Queen governed the Low-Countries twenty five years till the year 1557, when ſhe went into Spain. I have already obſerved, that ſhe governed thoſe Countries only from the year 1531, till October the 25th 1555; and I add, that ſhe went into Spain in the year 1556. Moreri ought not to have ſaid, that ſhe was ſtill very young when ſhe married Lewis Jagellon, King of Hungary; for ſhe was eighteen years old when her nuptials were celebrated: one would not give her that age, if one were to judge of it by Moreri's expreſſions; for it is well known that the daughters and ſiſters of Kings are ſometimes married before they are ten years old.

(34) Tom. 2. pag. 570.

[L] I omit mentioning the ſcandalous report concerning Charles V's amours with the Queen of Hungary.] See above, the end of the remark [A] of the article of Don Juan of AUSTRIA, and add to it the following words of Gabriel Naudé, The ſame Emperor ... hid all thoſe misfortunes under the cloak of piety and religion, confining himſelf in a monaſtery, where he had alſo an opportunity to repent of the ſin he had committed by begetting a baſtard child, who was alſo his nephew (35). The Sieur Lewis de Mai juſtly cenſures that writer's boldneſs in aſſerting ſuch a thing. See the pages 765, 766 of his Remarques ſur les Coups d'Etat.

(35) Naudé, Coups d'Eſtat, chap. 4. pag. mihi 617.

HUNGARY (ISABELLA, Queen of), the ſiſter of Sigiſmund Auguſtus King of Poland, was a Princeſs of very great merit. In the year 1539 ſhe married John Zapoliha Vaivod of Tranſilvania, who had been elected King of Hungary in the year 1526, and who contended vigorouſly for that crown with Ferdinand of Auſtria the Emperor Charles V's brother. She was delivered of a ſon July the 7th 1540. Her huſband was ſo overjoyed at it, that he drank immoderately at an entertainment, and this occaſioned his death, which happened the 21ſt day of the ſame month [A]. Iſabella, not finding herſelf in a condition to keep for her ſon a crown which Ferdinand endeavoured to wreſt from him, implored the protection of the Ottoman Porte, from whence ſhe received ſuch powerful ſuccours, that Ferdinand's army, which was beſieging Buda, was entirely routed. Soliman came himſelf into Hungary to bring Ferdinand to reaſonable terms. He uſed Iſabella's child very kindly [B], and if he refuſed to ſee her, it was for ſuch reaſons as were very obliging to her [C]. But his ill deſigns ſoon broke out; for he made himſelf maſter of Buda, and forced Iſabella to retire to Lippa (a). This was a terrible vexation to this Princeſs, who was not a little fond of reigning. The

(a) Sept. the 3d 1541.

[A] Her huſband drank immoderately ... which occaſioned his death &c.] He was gone into Tranſilvania to ſuppreſs a rebellion which Ferdinand's party had raiſed there. Stephen Mailats the moſt obſtinate of thoſe rebels, had taken ſhelter "in the caſtle of Fo-"garats, to wait for the ſupply which Ferdinand ſent "him under the conduct of Nadaſdy. The King be-"ſieged him there and took him after a long ſiege. In "the mean time there arrived a meſſenger, who ac-"quainted him with the birth of a ſon, that God "gave him. As ſuch news is always very acceptable "to thoſe that have no children, eſpecially to per-"ſons who begin to grow old, it is eaſy to imagine "that John was very well pleaſed with this news: and "indeed he indulged himſelf in ſome exceſs, drink-"ing after the Hungarian manner, which increaſed "his diſtemper, ſo that he died at Saſſebes, a few "days after his ſon's birth, in the 53d year of his "age (1).

(1) Diſcours Hiſtorique & Politique ſur les Cauſes de la Guerre d'Hungrie, printed with other curious pieces at Cologne 1666, in 12mo, pag. 237, 238. See alſo Hilarion de Coſte, Eloges des Dames Illuſtres, tom. 1. pag. 629.

[B] Soliman ... uſed Iſabella's child very kindly.] I ſhall again tranſcribe the words of the author, whom I have quoted in the foregoing remark. "Soliman "ſent preſents to the young King ... and deſired the "Queen to let him ſee her ſon, giving her his word "that it was only with a deſign to make his own chil-"dren love the child the more. At the ſame time the "Deputies had orders to tell her, that if he did not "go and wait upon her, it was only for fear leſt his "viſit ſhould expoſe her reputation. The Queen re-"turned thanks to the Grand Signior; and as ſhe "ſcrupled to ſend her ſon, George Martinuſias told "her that ſhe could not refuſe it. Being therefore "conſtrained by neceſſity, ſhe put the infant into a "cradle becoming ſuch a child, and having com-"manded its nurſe, ſome other matrons, and ſeveral "Hungarian Lords to accompany it, ſhe ſent it to the "camp. Soliman deſigning to do honour to that "child had it received by a troop of horſe, ſaw it "and careſſed it himſelf, and had it careſſed by his "own children (2)." Hilarion de Coſte gives a very particular account of all this in his elogy of our Queen Iſabella (3). Soliman, ſays he, ſent to the young King "three horſes exceedingly beautiful, the har-"neſs of which was trimmed with gold, and adorned "with pearls and precious ſtones; as alſo very rich "plumes and Brocado garments. He ſent alſo golden "chains and rich robes made after the Turkiſh faſhion "to the chief Lords and Barons of Iſabella's court ... "The Queen put her ſon in a coach that was gilt "and very ſtately, with his nurſe, and ſome La-"dies, who had dreſſed him very fine, that Soliman "might like him the better ... The Ottoman Prince "ſent a troop of horſe very well equipped, and ſome "companies of Janizaries to receive him in the moſt "honourable manner. As ſoon as theſe troops had "ſaluted the young King of Hungary, they put him "in the middle of themſelves, and in this pompous "manner conducted him to their Emperor, who, the "moment he ſaw this little Prince, ſhewed him great "love, and received him very kindly both as a vaſſal "of the Ottoman houſe, and as a ſon of John King of "Pannonia, whom he had very much beloved and "eſteemed; having protected him againſt the attempts "of Ferdinand King of Bohemia, and of the Empe-"ror Charles V. He commanded his children, Ba-"jazet and Selim, who were then in the camp, to do "the ſame. Theſe were the ſons of the beautiful Roſe "or Roxelana." This author pretends (4) that Soliman would know "whether this child was a boy or a "girl, for there was a report ſpread through the "Turkiſh army, that it was a girl, and that this "was the reaſon why Iſabella Jagellon had it educated "ſecretly."

(2) Diſcours Hiſtorique & Politique, &c. pag. 242.

(3) Eloges des Dames Illuſtres, tom. 1. pag. 631, &c.

(4) Hilar. de Coſte, Eloges des Dames Illuſtres, tom. 1. pag. 632.

[C] Soliman refuſed to ſee her ... for ſuch reaſons as were very obliging to her.] I have already obſerved, that he ſent this Princeſs word, that if he did not wait upon her, it was only for fear leſt his viſit ſhould expoſe her reputation. This was certainly a very obliging diſcretion: for it is certain that there would have been a great many ſlanders diſperſed abroad, had there been an interview between Soliman and this Queen. Hilarion de Coſte makes the Grand Signior's Deputies al-

The hopes she had that the Kingdom of Hungary would be restored to her son, as soon as he would be of age, those hopes, I say, grounded on Soliman's promise, were but a very indifferent comfort to her. She behaved with great strength of mind under this heavy trial; and comforted herself as well as she could with the title of Queen-Regent of Transilvania, which Soliman suffered her to bear; but as he left George Martinusias to assist her, she met with a thousand vexations during her Regency. For she had only the name of a Regent, all the authority being lodged with this Monk George (b). She was forced at last to break openly with him, the consequences of which ruined her authority entirely; for her adversary, being supported by Ferdinand, sent for a powerful army, which was commanded by a very cunning Italian (c), who managed matters with so much artifice, that he engaged this Queen to yield Transilvania to King Ferdinand in the year 1551, after which she retired to Cassovia. It was on her journey thither that she carved some Latin words on a tree, which have been mentioned by the Historians [D]. She was not a woman that could lead a quiet life; she did not continue long at Cassovia; she went into Silesia, and thence she retired into Poland with her mother Bonna Sforza, and her brother Sigismund Augustus. She kept up a correspondence with the great Lords in Transilvania, in order, if possible, to have the country restored to her. She applied again to Soliman for his protection, and made use of so many artifices, that at last she entered again into Transilvania in the year 1556. She kept it till her death, and engrossed the whole power as much as she could, without giving her son John Sigismund any share in the administration [E]. The bigots in vain endeavour to excuse such a conduct.

(b) Thus they used to call George Martinusius.

(c) John Baptist Castaldo, Marquis of Cassano, who had been educated in the family of Francis d'Avalos, Marquis of Pescara. Hilarion de Coste, Eloges des Dames, tom. 1. pag. 644. Delectus est Joan. Baptista Castaldus Piadenæ Comes, & ob res recenter egregie gestas (nam in bello Germanico castrorum præfecti summa cum laude munus obiverat) Cassani Marchio à Cæsare creatus. Thuan. lib. 9. pag. 180.

ledge other excuses, which are not in the least probable. "They (5) said also to this Princess, that Soliman had not less regard and esteem for her, than "for the King her son, both on account of her own "merit, and because she was the daughter of Sigis-"mund King of Poland, whom he called his father; "and that if his religion had suffered him to wait "upon her, he would not have failed to do it; and "that therefore he could not give her leave to come "into his tents, and desired her to send only her son "with his nurses (6)." If it was inconsistent with Soliman's religion to receive Isabella in his tents, would that same religion have suffered him to receive there the young Prince's nurse with the Ladies who attended him (7)?

(5) That is to say, Soliman's Deputies or Envoys, who had carried presents to the young King.

(6) Hilar. de Coste, Eloges des Dames, tom. 1. pag. 632.

(7) Ibid. pag. 633.

[D] She carved some Latin words on a tree, which have been mentioned by the Historians.] Thuanus in his account of this particular observes that she was learned (8). Quæ (Regina) statim, ne privata in eo regno, cui summo cum imperio præfuisset, diutius viveret, convasatis rebus suis per monteis asperos Cassoviam versus iter direxit. Cum propter angustias viarum inter silvas de curru descendere cogeretur, cum auriga currum traduceret, ipsa retro in Daciam respiciens, pristini culminis, è quo decidera, memor altum corde suspirium duxisse dicitur, & cum aliud non posset litterata femina, inscripto arbore nomine, hæc addidisse, SIC FATA VOLUNT, eoque relicto justi doloris monumento, rursus currum conscendit, institutum iter persequitur (9). i. e. "As "this Queen could not bear the thought of living in "a private condition where she had enjoyed the sove-"reign power, she took all that was hers with her, "and set out for Cassovia over steep mountains. The "road being very narrow through the woods, she was "obliged to step out of her coach; and whilst the "coachman drove it through the wood, she looked "behind her towards Transilvania, and calling to mind "the high station from which she was fallen, she fetched "a deep sigh from her heart, they say, and having "carved her name on a tree, she added these words "to it; THUS FATE DECREED IT; which was all "that this learned woman could do on this occasion, "and having thus left a memorial of her well-grounded "grief, she stept into her coach again, and continued "her journey." Hilarion de Coste deserves to be transcribed, because of the particular account he gives us (10). "As this virtuous but unfortunate Princess... "was going to Cassovia through the heavy and diffi-"cult roads of that country; she was obliged in a very "bad place to step out of her coach, and to walk on "foot. As the coachman was endeavouring to get "the coach clear from that place which was near a "wood, this Heroine who was not less learned than "magnanimous, cast her eyes towards Transilvania "which she left, and calling to mind the honours she "had received there, and the condition she had been "in, and which was now altered, she could not for-"bear fetching a deep sigh, and carved on the bark "of a tree these three words to express her grief, "and shew her skill in the Latin tongue. SIC FATA "VOLUERUNT; i. e. Thus fate decreed it, according "to what Thuanus and several other (11) Historians re-"late. Martin Fumée Sieur de Genille relates it "thus: he observes that Queen Isabella passing over "the mountains which separate Transilvania from "Hungary, and coming down a very steep and dan-"gerous side of those mountains, that road being so "bad that her coach could not pass through it, she "was obliged to walk on foot down hill with the La-"dies that attended her, not without much trouble and "inconveniency, both because the road was very "difficult, and because of a very heavy rain which "happened to fall and wet her to the skin (12). The "poor Queen of Hungary complained all the way of "her ill fate, which persecuted her not only in things "of importance, but even in mere trifles, and ascrib-"ing this bad luck she had in her passage over that "high and steep mountain to the obstinate malice of "her destiny, she took a knife, and in order to allay "her affliction and excessive grief, she wrote with the "point of that knife, on the bark of a large tree un-"der which she sheltered and rested herself during the "rain, these Latin words, Sic fata volunt, and under "them Isabella Regina. i. e. Thus fate decreed it; "Isabella Queen." We have reasons to think that she did not carve that inscription without a disposition to murmur against Divine Providence; for she began the oration she made, when she abdicated the crown, with the most bitter complaints against fate. Though inconstant fortune, said she (13), according to her cruel changings, altering and confounding all the affairs of this world, has perplexed mine to that degree, that at this time my son and I are obliged to leave this Kingdom, &c. This was abusing God's Providence, and charging it with cruelty, as the Heathens used to do in their misfortunes.

(8) She understood Italian, Hilar. de Coste, Eloges des Dames, tom. 1. pag. 644. asserts, that he harangued in that language, to persuade her son to resign the crown.

(9) Thuan. lib. 9. pag. 182. col. 2. ad ann. 1551.

(10) Eloges des Dames Illustres, tom. 1. pag. 648.

(11) Natalis Comes, P. Matthieu, Artus Thomas.

(12) We transcribe this period in the wretched condition in which Hilarion de Coste left it.

(13) Hilarion de Coste, Eloges des Dames Illustres, tom. 1. pag. 645. Thuanus, lib. 9. pag. 182. makes her speak thus to her son: Quando tua aut mea potius fortuna non tulit ut regno paterno legibus jure gentium tibi delato uti frui posses, fatorum INIQUITATEM quæ nulla vi nostra aut humana industria corrigi potest, æquo animo feramus necesse est.

Cum complexa sui corpus miserabile gnati,
Atque Deos atque astra vocat crudelia mater (14).

"——— His lifeless limbs embraced
\- - - - - - - - -
"Accusing all the Gods and every star."
Dryden.

(14) Virg. Eclog. 5. ver. 23.

It is probable that our Princess designed to leave on the bark of that tree a memorial of the injustice she imagined Heaven did her, and to let all the passengers know, that she was bold enough to complain of it.

[E] She engrossed the whole power ... without giving her son ... any share in the administration.] This may be proved by the remonstrance which Henry II caused to be made to this Princess. John James of Cambray Dean of Bourges, that Prince's Embassador, assured her, on his journey to Constantinople, that France would give her all the assistance she could wish (15); "which obliged her to send Christopher Bathori (16) "Embassador into France .... to thank the most "Christian conduct [F]. She died at Alba-Julia, or Weiſſemburg September the 15th 1558 (d).

(15) Hilar. de Coste, Eloges des Dames Illustres, tom. 1. pag. 657.

(16) The father of the brave and unfortunate Sigismund Bathori Prince of Transilvania. Ibid.

(d) I have extracted the particulars I relate here, from Hilarion de Coſte, Eloges des Dames Illuſtres, tom. 1. pag. 622, &c.

" Chriſtian King for her favour and good will." Bathori was very well received by Henry II, " who ſent " him back with Peter Martinez into Tranſilvania, " where they aſſured Queen Iſabella by his moſt " Chriſtian Majeſty's order, that he would make an " alliance with her by marrying one of his daughters " with her only ſon John Sigiſmund, who was then " ſeventeen years old, on condition that ſhe ſhould educate him in a grand manner, and not ſuffer ſo many " women, and men of a mean extraction to come near " him, who are not proper to be educated with Princes, " and that ſhe would acquaint him with ſtate-affairs. " Petrowitz, and moſt of the Lords of the Queen's " council gave their approbation to the moſt Chriſtian " King's advice, even in her Majeſty's preſence, and " boldly told the French Embaſſador that they had already repreſented this to the Queen their miſtreſs, " who from that time began to miſtruſt that Embaſſy, " and imagined that theſe Lords had adviſed the " King of France to this." She conſulted her mother, who made her the following anſwer: " Daughter, " keep always the power in your own hands, and do not " ſuffer your ſon to have ſo much authority; for you will " loſe it all, as ſoon as you ſhall have married your " ſon with the daughter of ſo powerful a Prince as the " King of France is. Iſabella having followed this " bad advice of her mother Bonna, did not make an " alliance with the French King; and after that " ſhe always hated thoſe, who adviſed her to let the " King her ſon ſee the armies, to acquaint him with " the affairs of the Kingdom, and to ſend him to " Waradin. She gave the command of all her armies to Michael Balaſſa, a haughty man, at which " her ſubjects were not very well pleaſed, for they wiſhed " that ſhe would chooſe a General of a more meek " and gentle temper than that man was (17)."

(17) Hilar. de Coſte, Eloges des Dames Illuſtres, tom. 1. pag. 658.

[F] . . . The bigots do in vain endeavour to excuſe ſuch a conduct.] As there is no paſſion but they endeavour to vindicate at the expence of religion, they made uſe of this admirable cloak to hide our Iſabella's ambition. Here follow the words of a Minim, who quotes Florimond de Remond. " The authors who " wrote this virtuous Princeſs's defence, obſerve that ſhe " did not much like the great Lords of Hungary and " Tranſilvania. Petrowitz was in a particular manner odious to her, becauſe he profeſſed Luther's " hereſy, and becauſe under a fair pretence of acquainting him with the affairs of his Kingdom, " he endeavoured to eſtrange him from his mother, " that he might the eaſier make him forſake the antient and true religion, and admit the new and falſe " one. Which he did after his mother's death (18)." Father Maimbourg aſſerts (19), that John Sigiſmund did not dare declare for the Hereticks during his mother's life, but that it was not only for that reaſon, but alſo becauſe Soliman had written to the Queen, that ſhe muſt not ſuffer new ſects to creep into the Kingdom, leſt they ſhould diſturb the tranquillity of it, by dividing the people upon ſo nice a ſubject as religion is . . . (20). But the Queen dying ſoon after, and Selim, who did not much mind the trouble occaſioned by religion, ſucceeding his father Soliman, who died of an apoplectic fit at the ſiege of Ziget, the Lutherans, the Calviniſts, and the Arians entered again into Tranſilvania, and being ſupported by Petrowitz's favour, they took more liberties there, than they had ever done before (21).

(18) Ibid.

(19) Maimbourg, Hiſt. de l'Arianiſme, tom. 3. pag. 345. of the Dutch edit.

(20) Ibid. under the year 1555.

(21) Ibid. under the year 1560.

HUNGERUS (WOLFGANG) a Civilian of the ſixteenth Century, was born at Waſſerburg (a) in Bavaria. He was Profeſſor of the Civil Law in the Univerſity of Ingolſtat, Chancellor of Friſingen, and Aſſeſſor of the Imperial Chamber at Spire (b). He drew up an Apology for the Emperors Frederic Barbaroſſa, and Lewis of Bavaria, but being a good Catholic, he thought it more adviſeable to ſuppreſs it [A], than to publiſh it in ſuch an age as that he lived in. He died of a diſtemper with which he was afflicted for many years (c), whereby the world was deprived of many uſeful works they might have expected from ſo learned a man. We are told that he died in 1555 (d). The notes which he had wrote on the Cæſars of Cuſpinian, were publiſhed at Baſil in 1561; and they rectify and clear up many things which had been advanced either falſely or confuſedly in that hiſtory of the Emperors, and in ſome other books. We find in the Epitome of Geſner's Bibliotheca, a Wolfgang Hungarus, different from our Hungerus; but (a) Hence comes the Latin firname Aquiburgenſis, aſſumed by him.

(b) See the dedication to the Cæſars of Cuſpinian, Baſil edit. 1561.

(c) Ibid.

(d) Konig, in Bibliotb. pag. 418.

[A] He drew up an apology for the Emperors . . . but judged it moſt adviſeable to ſuppreſs it.] As he threw all the blame on the Popes, there is no doubt but the Proteſtants would have taken advantage from his book. But however this be, let us copy his own words. Nos certe pro utriſque optimis imperatoribus Baioario & Ænobardo elucubrata Apologia integra, luce ipſa clarius oſtendimus, & fabulam illam de Ludovico Baioario vanam, falſam & tralatitiam eſſe: & Ænobardum non tam de verbis quam rebus ipſis contendiſſe, atque in ſumma longe alias fuiſſe ſummis Pontificibus in hos Imperatores odiorum cauſas: & quæcumque tandem eæ fuerint, ſaltem negocia ipſa controverſa à Pontificiis ea animorum impotentia, faſtu & acerbitate tractata, ut horundem Imperatorum ubique major modeſtia, manſuetudo, humanitas, adeoque innocentia, pietas & juſticia eluceat: utcumque inſignis ille Theologus Albertus Pighius Campenſis, Pontificiorum Hector Li. 5. ca. 14. & 15. Eccleſiaſticæ hierarchiæ, cauſam hujus Ludovici ita propoſuerit atque explicarit, ut univerſam eam damnaret. Sed voluiſſe ipſum eo in argumento ac præſertim libr. 6. Romanorum Pontificum auribus aliquid dare, jampridem etiam Catholicum veritatis amantiſſimum Theologum, virum Eccleſiaſticum, doctrina & vitæ ſanctimonia, nuper dum viveret, cum primis ſpectatum, ſcio pronuntiaſſe: & ubi neceſſe ſit, ipſius cenſuram autographam ea de re in medium proferre poſſum. Neque vero noſtro ex capite iſti apologiæ noſtræ hoc glorioſe arrogamus, ſed potius concordi ex calculo amicorum aliquot, tam eccleſiaſticorum quam laicorum qui Catholica in religione juxta nobiſcum verſantur, & Eccleſiæ ſtatum ac fœdis & perniciоſis abuſuum & vitiorum monſtris repurgatum, ſartumque & tectum (ut aiunt) jampridem pio zelo, ſed hactenus fruſtra optant, ac ſuper ea apologia ipſis exhibita conſulti, etiam ſcripto ſua ſinguli candide & libere expoſuerunt judicia. Attamen & ſponte noſtra, & præcellentis cujuſdam amici benevolo monitu, hoc tempore domi retinere eandem quam in publicum edere maluimus (1). i. e. " In an apology " written purpoſely by way of vindication of thoſe " excellent Emperors, Lewis of Bavaria and Frederic " Barbaroſſa, I have ſhewn as clear as the ſun, that " the ſtory relating to Lewis abovementioned, is idle, " falſe, and trifling; and that Frederic Barbaroſſa " did not contend ſo much about words as things; " laſtly, that the hatred which the Popes entertained " againſt thoſe two Emperors aroſe from quite different " cauſes; and that whatever theſe were, the controverſy was carried on by the Papal advocates with " ſo much paſſion, pride and rancour, that in every " part of it we may perceive, on the ſide of the " abovementioned Emperors, much more modeſty, " meekneſs, humanity, and therefore more innocence, " piety and juſtice: nevertheleſs that celebrated Divine, " Albertus Pighius of Campen, the Champion of the " Romaniſts, in book v, chap. 14 and 15 of his Eccleſiaſtical Hierarchy, has laid down and explained " the caſe of this Emperor Lewis in ſuch a manner, " as but this is a miſtake, which ſhews that the ſmalleſt change of the letters in proper names multiplies writers improperly. We find, in the Epitome juſt mentioned, the titles of ſome other works of this Civilian [B].

(1) Hungarus. Annotat. in Cæſares Cuſpiniani, pag. m. 186. col. 2.

" as quite to condemn it. But I was told long ſince " by a Catholic Divine, a man famous for his erudi- " tion and piety, and whoſe opinion I can produce in " writing, in caſe this were required, that Pighius, " in every part of this argument, and eſpecially in the " ſixth book, was deſirous of flattering the Roman " Pontiffs. Neither do I pretend on my own judg- " ment to arrogate ſo much with regard to my apo- " logy, but rather in that ſome of my friends, both " of the Clergy and Laity, who profeſs the Catholic " Religion as I do, who have for a long time, but " hitherto in vain, earneſtly wiſhed that the Church, " being purged from many ſhameful abuſes and horrid " vices, may be entirely reformed; theſe perſons, " I ſay, being conſulted with regard to this apology, " candidly and freely gave their reſpective opinions of " it in writing. Nevertheleſs of my own choice, and " by the advice of a moſt excellent friend, I choſe to " keep it by me rather than publiſh it at this time." (2) Epitome Geſneri, pag. m. 824.

[B] The titles of ſome other works of this Civilian.] It appears that he corrected and publiſhed Bartholomæum Bologninum ſuper Authent. habita. C. ne filius pro patre; and that he tranſlated from the Spaniſh and Italian into the German language. Excitatorium Aulicorum de officio Aulici ut gratiam Principis conſequatur & conſervet (2). This tranſlation, which was printed at Straſburg in 8vo, anno 1582, is doubtleſs that of a book of Guevara (3). We ſee in Draudius's Bibliotheca Claſſica (4); Wolffg. HUNGERI Linguæ Germanicæ Vindicatio contra exoticas quaſdam, quæ complurium vocum & dictionum mere Germanicarum, Etymologias ex ſua petere conati ſunt (5), Straſburg 1586, 8vo.

(3) See the remark [G] of the article GUEVARA, citation (19).

(4) Pag. 1377. edit. Francof. 1625.

(5) This word makes a ſoleciſm in this place.

HUNNIUS (ÆGIDIUS or GILES) born in a village of Wirtemberg December the 21ſt 1550, was one of the moſt famous Divines of the Augſburg Confeſſion. He went through his Theological ſtudies at Tubingen under James Andreas, the younger Brentius, and two other Profeſſors; and acquired ſo much erudition during the eight years he ſpent in that Univerſity, that he was thought capable of being a Profeſſor of Divinity in Marpurg, at twenty ſix years of age. He fully anſwered the advantageous opinion which had been entertained of his learning; for having read ſome Lectures and preached ſome Sermons at Marpurg (a), the Landgrave being reſolved to retain him, recommended him in a very honourable manner to the Duke of Wirtemberg, in order that Hunnius might be admitted to his Doctor's degree of Divinity. Hunnius returned to Tubingen, and there took his Doctor's degree a few months after his marriage July the 16th 1576. During the firſt ſix years of his Profeſſorſhip he did not publiſh any books againſt the Calviniſts; but otherwiſe he was perpetually at war with them [A], and did not ſpare them in his Academical diſputations. At laſt he publiſhed books againſt them [B] in 1514; and gained ſo much reputation, that in 1592 he was invited into Saxony there to reform the Electorate. He was appointed chief Profeſſor of Divinity at Wittemberg, principal Miniſter of the Church of the Caſtle, and Member of the Eccleſiaſtical Senate. He applied himſelf with extraordinary vigilance to detect ſuch as were not true Lutherans [C]; and as he was very ſucceſsful in clearing the country of them, he was invited to act the ſame part in Sileſia [D]. He was made Superintendant of the Church of Wittemberg in 1595; and the ſame year he was engaged in a mighty controverſy with Samuel Huberus, concerning Election and Predeſtination [E]. He was

(a) In 1576.

[A] He was perpetually at war with the Calviniſts.] What follows is ſaid of this in his funeral oration (1). Quas autem & quàm ſerias, quamque frequentes velitationes in Haſſia tàm Caſellis, quàm Marpurgi, jam cum clancularíis, jam cum apertis hoſtibus, quos Sacramentarios Lutherani vocant, ſubire coactus fuerit; quæ & quam gravia certamina, ob ſanctiſſimum Religionis Chriſtianæ articulum, de perſonâ Chriſti, ejuſque ad dextram Dei ſedentis adoranda majeſtate ſuſtinuerit: id Deo, rerum omnium inſpectori ac judici, notum eſt: neque fugit id multos pios & cordatos homines. i. e. " In " what ſtrong, as well as frequent conteſts he was " forced to engage in Heſſe, as well at Caſſel as at " Marpurg, one moment againſt ſecret enemies, and " another againſt open ones, who are called Sacramen- " tarians by the Lutherans, what mighty combats he " ſuſtained, on account of that moſt holy article of the " Chriſtian Religion, concerning the perſon of Chriſt, " and his adorable majeſty ſitting at the right hand of " God: theſe things, I ſay, are known to God, " who ſees and judges all things; nor are they un- " known to many pious and judicious men."

(1) Apud Melchior Adam. in Vit. Theolog. pag. 727.

[B]... He publiſhed books againſt them.] We find by the ſame orator, that our Hunnius did not confine his exploits merely to the Sacramentarian war; he alſo attacking the followers of the Lutheran Illyricus. In publicum poſtea ſcriptis ſuis progreſſus ſub annum octogeſimum quartum Danæum imprimis, Urſinum, Pezelium, Grabium, & alios oppugnavit, editis libellis de perſonâ Chriſti, ejuſque ad dextram DEI ſedentis divina majeſtate: de altarium abrogatione. Poſtea & Flacianorum coborti bellum ſacrum indixit, edito libello de ſubſtantia peccati originis (2). i. e. " He after- " wards, about the year 1584, publiſhed ſome pieces " with relation to the perſon of Chriſt, and his divine " majeſty ſitting at the right hand of God; and con- " cerning the taking away of altars; in which he " chiefly attacked Danæus, with Urſinus, Pezelius, " Grabius &c. He afterwards proclaimed a holy war " againſt the Flacians, in a treatiſe relating to the " Subſtance of Original Sin."

(2) Apud eundem. ibid.

[C] He applied himſelf to detect ſuch as were not true Lutherans.] This was a ſort of Inquiſition, which deprived many people of their employments, and drove them from their country; for whenever a perſon refuſed to ſign the formulary propoſed by Hunnius and his collegues, he was looked upon as a Calviniſt, and found no mercy. Contzen the Jeſuit (3) makes himſelf merry in deſcribing this Inquiſition, and obſerves that Hunnius wrote an apology for it. Quin & Ægidius Saxonicam viſitationem contra Calviniſtas defendit, Refutationem enim ſcripſit Calviniſtici libelli, quo viſitatio illa exagitata fuit (4). The cruelties exerciſed at that time on perſons ſuſpected of being Calviniſts, as related by Hoſpinian, ſtrike the reader with horror (5).

(3) Contzen, in Jubilo Jubilorum, ad ann. 1592, 1593.

(4) Idem, ibid. pag. 304.

(5) Hiſtoriæ Sacramentariæ, Parte altera, pag. 674, & ſeq.

[D] To act the ſame part in Sileſia.] This we are told by Melchior Adamus. Fridericus IV Lignicenſium & Brigenſium in Sileſia Dux, Hunnii potiſſimum opera ac ſtudio uſus, Eccleſiarum Lignicenſium per Sileſiam reformationem ſuſcepit atque perfecit; ejecto inde Leonhardo Krentzhemio, Lignicenſium tunc Superintendente; cui Calviniſmi crimen impingebatur (6). i. e. " Frederic IV, " Duke of Lignitz and Brieg in Sileſia, began and " perfected, chiefly by the aſſiſtance of Hunnius, a " reformation of the Churches of Lignitz in Sileſia; " and ejected Leonard Krentzhemius, at that time Su- " perintendant of Lignitz, who was charged with the " crime of Calviniſm."

(6) Melch. Adam, in Vitis Theolog. pag. 729.

[E] He was engaged in a mighty controverſy with Samuel Huberus, concerning election and predeſtination.] This was one of the chief opponents of Gretſer and Tanner the Jeſuits, in the Conference held at Ratiſbon [F] 1602 (b), and died April 4, of the following year (c). He wrote a great number

(b) This Conference, according to moſt authors, was held in 1601. (c) Extracted from Melchior Adam, in Vitis Theolog. pag. 723, & ſeq. He has given an Extract of Hunnius's Funeral Oration, ſpoke by Leonard Hutterus.

This man had been Miniſter of a village near Berne; and having examined the acts of the conference of Mombeliard (7), four articles in Beza's doctrine had appeared to him not very conformable to the Scriptures: I. That Chriſt Jeſus did not die for all men. II. That moſt men are excluded from the promiſes of grace. III. That the only cauſe why the reprobate are damned is, merely from the will of God, who created them, purpoſely to ſhew in them the power of his anger. IV. That no one can tell whether baptiſm regenerates children. He had the courage to contradict theſe four articles, but he was expelled for his boldneſs; Muſculus and Gryneus having ſucceſsfully attempted his expulſion. He had retired to the territory of Wirtemberg, and got a Church there; after having embraced the Augſburg Confeſſion. Having made himſelf known to the Elector of Saxony by ſome books he publiſhed, he was invited to Wirtemberg, to be Divinity Profeſſor there. The earneſtneſs with which he refuted the Swiſs Proteſtants on the article of predeſtination, carried him into another extream; he teaching publicly, that God has elected all men to eternal life. Hunnius and his collegues admoniſhed him of his error; but as he did not leave it, he was expelled. He went to Ratiſbon, had conferences with ſome Divines; perſiſted obſtinately in his errors, and publiſhed ſome books at Spires to maintain them. This was the fourteenth ſchiſm which divided the Lutheran Church (8). Such was the man our Hunnius had to deal with. He had the good fortune to be victorious on this occaſion, he prevailing ſo far as to get his enemy removed; but he was a little ſuſpected of heterodoxy, and therefore was obliged to write in his own juſtification. Read the following words of Calixtus. Poſt annum ſuperioris ſæculi octogeſimum Ægidius Hunnius, niſi fallor, primus vel certe inter primos præcipuus, priſcam & ante Auguſtinum in primitiva Eccleſia receptam ſententiam revocavit, & in Eccleſias Scholaſque noſtras reduxit; non tamen ſine difficultate, contradictione & inſimulatione Pelagianiſmi (9). Read likewiſe the following paſſage. Fortem ſe & fidum purioris doctrinæ hyperaſpiſten, adverſus inanes Huberi φλυαρίας eo tempore præſtitit Hunnius, dum partim monendo, partim ſcribendo, errantem Huberum in viam revocare ſtuduit: quod ipſa res loquitur, & monumenta hac de controverſia bene multa edita, cum primis verò ille tractatus Hunnii de providentiâ & prædeſtinatione filiorum Dei, ſatis luculenter teſtatur. Diſſidio autem illo Huberi remotione ſopito, prodiit anno nonageſimo ſeptimo epiſtola: qua variorum errorum, de cœnâ Domini, de baptiſmo, de libero arbitrio, de perſonâ Chriſti, de æternâ prædeſtinatione fuit inſimulatus. Hanc igitur Hunnius eodem anno refutavit, ut & eos qui in Anhaltinis eccleſiis altaria, imagines, organa muſica, hoſtias, & alias ceremonias abrogarant (10). i. e. "Hunnius "then proved himſelf to be a brave and faithful de- "fender of the purer doctrine, in oppoſition to the "idle cavils of Huberus, whilſt he uſed his endeavours, "both by admonition and by writing, to bring back "the miſtaken Huberus into the paths of truth: this "is manifeſt from the thing itſelf; and the many "pieces he publiſhed with regard to this controverſy, "ſhew this evidently, particularly Hunnius's treatiſe "relating to providence, and the predeſtination of the ſons "of God. But an end being put to theſe conteſts by "the removal of Huberus, an epiſtle was publiſhed in "1597, wherein he was charged with various errors "relating to the Lord's Supper, Baptiſm, Free-will, "the perſon of Chriſt, and Eternal Predeſtination. "Hunnius refuted this the ſame year; as likewiſe "thoſe of the Churches in Anhalt, who had taken "away altars, images, organs, hoſtiæ or ſacrifices, "or other ceremonies." I add theſe laſt words to ſhew, that Hunnius was not againſt altars, images, and ſeveral Romiſh ceremonies, which the other Lutherans abhorred.

(7) Between Theodore Beza and John Andreas.

(8) Extracted from Micrælius Syntagm. Hiſt. Eccleſ. pag. 871.

(9) Calixtus, Conſider. Doct. Reformat.

(10) Hutterus, apud Melchior Adam, in Vitis Theolog. pag. 729.

[F] He was one of the chief opponents .... in the conference held at Ratiſbon.] I am perſuaded that moſt of my readers will be very glad to be freed from the trouble of conſulting another book, in order to get a general idea of this conference; and for this reaſon I ſhall here ſet down what Peter Matthew relates concerning it (11). "Maximilian Count Palatine of the "Rhine, Duke of Bavaria, and Philip Lewis likewiſe "Palatine of the Rhine, Count of Veldents and Spon- "hem, couſins and united by blood, but ſeparated "and very oppoſite in the union of minds, which is "religion; reſolved in order to re-unite themſelves "in the ſame belief, and bring their ſubjects to the "ſame confeſſion and profeſſion of faith, to aſſemble "at Ratiſbon, the ableſt and moſt famous German "Divines in Germany of both religions; that they, "by an amicable conference, might clear up the dif- "ficulties that occaſioned this wretched ſchiſm. They "diſputed only on the following theſis; Whether the "holy Scriptures be a ſufficient rule with regard to "things neceſſary to ſalvation. The Roman Catho- "lic diſputants were four Divinity-Profeſſors of the "Univerſity of Paris (12), and one of them was a "Jeſuit. On the ſide of the Proteſtants were fifteen "Divines of the Palatinate of the Rhine, and of the "Dukedoms of Saxony, Brandenburg and Wittem- "berg ... The Preſidents were the two Princes; and "Gretſer the Jeſuit, and Heilbrun the Proteſtant Mi- "niſter, were the ſpectators .... (13). The confe- "rence took up fourteen ſeſſions, in which the power "of the Judge was for a long time diſcourſed on "with great vehemence, but not with great clearneſs, "ſince that verbal diſpute was followed by long apo- "logies in writing." I here inſert the following marginal note of Peter Matthieu. On this diſputation at Ratiſbon, ſays he, abſtracted from the acts and regiſters of the Seſſions, day by day, there is extant a book intitled Analyſis Dialectica Colloquii Ratiſbonenſis anno 1601 de norma & judice omnium controverſiarum fidei Chriſtianæ habiti.

(11) Matthieu, Hiſt. de la Paix, lib. 4. ad ann. 1601. pag. m. 134.

(12) Matthieu is miſtaken. Cayet, Hiſt. de la Paix, pag. 260. is as much in an error in ſaying, that the Duke of Bavaria's Divines were Hunger and Tanner, Doctors in the Faculty of Paris, and Gretſer a Jeſuit. Now Tanner had been a Jeſuit from eighteen years of age; and conſequently was not a Doctor in the Faculty of Paris.

(13) Matthieu, Hiſt. de la Paix, liv. 4. pag. 135.

The Hiſtorian's reflection on theſe verbal diſputations is pleaſant enough. "When I conſider, ſays "he (14), the little benefit that has accrued from thoſe "diſputations in different parts of Europe, and that "the holy ſcripture is a field which every man thinks "he has a right to combat in; I cannot forbear "wiſhing that there were ſome ſevere prohibition "againſt this vulgar treatment of it; and it would "be well were it taught, like Epicurus's atoms, Py- "thagoras's numbers, Plato's ideas, Ariſtotle's Ente- "lectia, and the figures of the Cabaliſts; that none, "except thoſe who were capable of underſtanding it, "might attain to the knowledge of it. But whilſt "every one pretends to be ſkilled in it, it ſo happens "that the faithful, like the bee, from the ſame "flower, gather honey; the diſobedient, like the "ſpider, draw poiſon; and many grow diſtracted about "the beaſt of the Revelations."

(14) Ibid. pag. 136.

To this paſſage I will add the following words of Mr. Baillet. "This conference was like thoſe bat- "tles, in which the victory is not determined from "the number of the ſlain. Each ſide boaſted their "having gained the advantage, both parties drew "up relations of it, and books in Latin as well as "German, to the number of twenty. Among theſe "pieces I met with one in the vulgar tongue relating to "the triumph of the Jeſuits, printed at Tubingen, a "Lutheran city, in the year 1603 in 4to, and one in "Latin written by Hunnius, and publiſhed at Wit- "temberg in Saxony, the ſame year and the ſame "ſize, with the following title, Epiſtola conſolatoria "cum not. .... Hunnius endeavoured to revenge the "cauſe of his party by an Anti-Tanner ... and by the "Anti-Gretſer (15)." He had read the hiſtorical relation drawn up by Father Tanner, but was not ſatisfied with a relation which was not favourable enough to his party. To prevent the effects he feared would accrue from the reading of it, he compoſed a counter-relation of it, that is, a hiſtory of the conference at Ratiſbon, after his manner, which was publiſhed, in 1602, at Wittemberg in Saxony. Peter Tanner did not think it adviſeable to leave this piece unanſwered; and not contented

(15) Baillet. Art. 21. des Anti.

number of books, and got many children [G]. Some of his ſons have got a name by their works [H]; but one of them turned Roman Catholic [I]. Hunnius did not diſcover greater paſſion and animoſity in any of his works, than in that which he intitled, Calvinus tented with reprinting his relation both in Latin and German at Munich in Bavaria; he alſo publiſhed ſome reflections on that of Hunnius, entitled, Examen Narrationis quam hiſtoricæ Relationis nomine inſignitam de Colloquio Ratiſbonenſi edidit Ægidius Hunnius Prædicans, at Munich 1602 in 4*to. It was againſt this laſt work that Hunnius wrote his* Anti-Tanner, which he printed the ſame year at Wittemberg. Father Tanner publiſhed a reply, in which he drew up a defence of his firſt confutation . . . . and ſome remarks on the death of the ſame author (16). It was publiſhed at Munich in the year 1603, in 4to, and intitled Apologeticus pro compendiaria relatione de Colloquio Ratiſbonenſi 1601 adverſus Anti-Tannerum, cum Appendice de morte Ægidii Hunnii. Baillet obſerves, that Father Gretſer could not forbear making reflections on Hunnius's Anti-Gretſer: They were printed at Ingolſtad ſome time after, and ſince inſerted among ſome other of his works, with the following title, Admonitio de Anti-Gretſero (17). This Jeſuit publiſhed ſome other piece againſt the ſame antagoniſt. Labyrinthus Cretico-Hunnianus, hoc eſt, Diſputatio de Hunnio Prædicante, genioque Lutherano ſemetipſum contradictionibus implicante & jugulante in aliquot articulis fidei 1602, & Reſponſum ad Theſes Hunnianas, de Colloquio Pontificiis jucundo (18), una cum ſex digreſſionibus contra ejuſdem Hunnii calumnias, 1602 (19). It is to be obſerved, that the two Bibliothecarii of the Jeſuits aſcribed to Father Tanner, a book intitled Labirinthus Critico- (20) Hunnianus, printed at Munich in 1612. Might not one conclude that that there is ſome error here (21)? Would two Jeſuits have made uſe of the ſame title, in writing againſt the ſame adverſary?

(16) Ibid. Art. 37. num. 1.

(17) Ibid. Art. 21.

(18) This is an error of the preſs for ixeundo. Father Southwell has retained the word jucundo.

(19) Alegambe, Bibliotb. Script. Societ. Jeſu, pag. 200.

(20) An error of the preſs, doubtleſs for Cretico.

(21) See Baillet, Art. 21. of the Anti.

[G] He wrote a great number of books, and got many children.] An edition has been publiſhed of his works in five volumes. Primus varios tractatus de articulis fidei, alter polemica, tertius & quartus commentaria in Matthæum, Johannem, & omnes pene Epiſtolas Canonicas, quintus diſputationes & orationes varias continet. Edidit etiam vernacula lingua poſtillam Evangelicam & Epiſtolicam. Homilias in VI Prophetas, Threnos & Catechiſmum, confeſſionem de perſona Chriſti & id genus alia (22). With regard to his conjugal fruitfulneſs, we are aſſured, in his Funeral Oration, that heaven indulged him the bleſſing promiſed to the faithful by the Pſalmiſt. Inde divinæ benedictionis veſtigia, tum in re familiari, tum in eo potiſſimum deprehendit: quod juxta promiſſionem Pſalmi, Vidit filios ac filias, ſicut plantationes olivarum, in circuitu menſæ ſuæ (23).

(22) Micræüus, Syntagm Hiſt. Eccleſ. pag. 760.

(23) Apud Melchior. Adam. in Vitis Theol. pag. 730.

His wife, like a fair fertile vine,
Her lovely fruit ſhall bring;
His children, like young olive plants,
About his table ſpring (24).

(24) Pſalm 128.

TATE and BRADY's Verſion.

[H] Some of his ſons have got a name by their works.] NICHOLAS HUNNIUS, Profeſſor in Wittemberg, and afterwards Superintendant at Lubec, has publiſhed, Epitome credendorum: Examen errorum Photinianorum: Capiſtrum Lancellotto impactum: Neceſſaria defenſio de Papa Antichriſto: Refutatio Weigelianæ Theologiæ: Apoſtaſia Eccleſiæ Romanæ: Pellis ovina papiſtica: Innocentia Lutheranorum: Fundamentalis diſſenſus Lutheranorum & Calvinianorum: Neceſſaria Admonitio contra theoſophos (25), novellos Prophetas, nomine miniſterii Lubecenſis, Hamburgenſis, & Lunæburgenſis, and ſome other treatiſes. He died in 1643, aged 58: and GILES HUNNIUS, his brother, died the year before, Superintendant General of Altemburg (26).

(25) See Mollerus, Iſagoge ad Hiſtor. Cherſoneſi Cimbricæ, Part 3. pag. 469.

(26) Extracted from Micræüus, Syntag. Hiſt. Eccleſiaſt. pag. 760, 761.

[I] One of them turned Roman Catholic.] This was HELFRICUS ULRICUS HUNNIUS, a Civilian. He publiſhed at Colen in 1633, a book wherein he pretended to ſhew, that even by the confeſſion of ſome learned Proteſtants, we are bound to reſtore to the church of Rome the temporalities of the church, of which it was diſpoſſeſſed during Luther's reformation. Voetius hath been reproached with having ſtolen from this book the authorities and arguments employed by him againſt the Canons of Utrecht. Iteratò noto, pellucentem illum centonem, magnam partem conſarcinatum eſſe ex duodecim conſiliis Lutheranorum . . . . ſimul editis per Helfricum Ulricum Hunnium J. C. filium Ægidii Hunnii, celebris quondam Theologiæ Doctoris & Profeſſoris in Academia Witebergenſi, qui pellectus offa Antichriſtiana, cum turpiſſime defeciſſet ad Pontificios, atque ſecundum fatum Apoſtatarum, negligeretur ab iis, qui exemplo diaboli Matth. iv. 9. plurimos ſectatores ſibi colligere ſolent, per myſticam illam vocem: Hæc tibi dabo: Coloniæ Agrippinæ anno 1633 evulgavit duodecim illa Reſponſa, ſeu, ut ipſe pariter vocat, Præjudicia, inſcripta Abbati Fuldenſi, eum in finem, ut evinci poſſet, Lutheranos (per errorem ſummum iis conjungit Calviniſtas, quum neque Matthæus Weſenbecius, neque Hieronymus Treutlerus, prout fingit Hunnius, unquam vixerint in communione eorum, qui Calviniſtæ audiunt) eſſe αὐτοκαταχρίτους, atque dictante propria conſcientia, debere reſtituere bona Eccleſiaſtica, à ſe invaſa, occupata, direpta, ac prophanata, ut loquitur famelicus Apoſtata in titulo. Verum eſſe quod dico, quivis cognoſcet, ſi inſtituerit Conſilium Theologicum comparare cum hiſce Reſponſis; ubi aut Hunnius, aut ejus Typographus erravit in citandis authoribus, maxime juris Canonici textibus, pariter (reſpicio primam editionem) errant Architecti hujus, Κατ' ἀντίφρασιν, Conſilii Theologici; quod adeo impudens, ut pag. 25. ſpeciatim in hunc Hunnii tractatum digitum intendat (27). i. e. "I once again take notice, that the greateſt part of this tinſel compilation was borrowed from the twelve Councils of the Lutherans . . publiſhed together by Helfricus Ulricus Hunnius, a Civilian, ſon of Giles Hunnius, formerly a famous Divinity Profeſſor, in the Univerſity of Wirtemberg; who being enſnared by the bait of Antichriſt, ſcandalouſly turned Papiſt; and being (as is the fate of Apoſtates) neglected by them, who, after the Devil's example, Matth. iv. 9, uſed to win over the greateſt number of proſelytes by the myſtical words following, all theſe things will I give unto thee; publiſhed in Colen in the year 1633, theſe twelve anſwers, or as he calls them, Prejudices, inſcribed to the Abbot of Fuld, in this view, viz. to ſhew that the Lutherans (through an egregious miſtake he joyns the Calviniſts to them, though neither Matthew Weſenbecius nor Jerom Treutlerus, as Hunnius pretends, ever lived in the communion of thoſe who are called Calviniſts) that the Lutherans, I ſay, are ſelf-condemned, and, from the impulſes of their own conſciences, ought to reſtore the Church-poſſeſſions by them invaded, poſſeſſed, plundered and prophaned, to ſpeak after the title-page of this hungry apoſtate. Any perſon may prove the truth of theſe aſſertions, who ſhall compare the theological council with theſe anſwers; for in all places where Hunnius or his printer has committed any miſtake in citing of authors, particularly in the texts of the canon law, there alſo (I ſpeak of the firſt edition) the compilers of this pretended theological council miſtake with them; which is ſo very impudent, that page 25 he points in particular at this tract of Hunnius." Baillet, whom nothing can eſcape, was not ignorant that this man had changed his religion, but he did not know that it was a ſon of the author of the Anti-Gretſer. His words are theſe. "When the Proteſtants, who alledge againſt us the Anti-Hunnius, and the Reſolutio Anti-Hunniana, of Valentin Bullen a Lutheran, ſtill reckon Hunnius among thoſe of their communion; they either give us occaſion to believe that they have confounded Nicholas Hunnius a Lutheran, who died in 1643, with Helfricus Ulricus Hunnius a German Civilian, converted from the Lutheran Church to that of Rome, and who was contemporary with the other Hunnius; or they were deſirous of concealing his converſion; whether they did not believe it to be ſincere, or ſuppoſed it to be of ſhort continuance. However this be, Valentinus Bullen printed, in oppoſition to him, his Anti-Hunnius, at Leichen, in the year 1633 in 8vo, with this title Reſolutio Anti-Hunniana ſeu Reſponſio ad calumnioſam Reſolutionem tertiam præjudicialium Quæſtionum H. Ulr. Hunnii. He declares in this work that he is firmly perſuaded he did not diſſemble in any manner when he

(27) Martinus Schoockius, Exercitat. variar. pag. 52. edit. in 4to.

Calvinus Judaizans [K]. Calvin was there accuſed of ſo many heretical crimes [L], that he might have been afraid of being treated like Servetus, had he lain at Hunnius's mercy.

Some

" renounced the Lutheran principles; and he ſhews " plainly enough that he had read his book of the " twelve unanſwerable arguments of the Catholic Reli- " gion, printed at Colen in 12mo, 1632 (28)." Our Ulric Hunnius publiſhed at Gieſſen, a treatiſe de Tranſactione in 1615; four books variarum Reſolutionum Juris Civilis, at Francfort in 1620; and a diſpute de Homicidio & ejus pœna, at Marpurg in the year 1625.

(28) Baillet, Art. 79. of the Anti.

[K] He entitled... one of his books Calvinus Judaizans.] The complete title runs thus: Ægidii Hunnii Calvinus Judaizans, hoc eſt, Judaicæ gloſſæ & corruptelæ quibus Joannes Calvinus illuſtriora Scripturæ Sacræ loca, & teſtimonia de glorioſa Trinitate, Deitate Chriſti, & Spiritus Sancti, cum primis autem vaticinia Prophetarum de adventu Meſſiæ, nativitate ejus, paſſione, reſurrectione, aſcenſione ad cœlos, & ſeſſione ad dexteram Dei, deteſtandum in modum corrumpere non abhorruit. I am not ſatisfied with the informations I have hitherto received with regard to the hiſtory of this work, and the conſequences with which it was attended; but I believe I may venture to affirm, and hope Mr. Baillet (29) will not be diſpleaſedat it, that this book was not publiſhed in 1575. Hunnius was then but twenty five years of age; and had he diſtinguiſhed himſelf at that age by ſuch a work, the author of his funeral oration would not have failed taking notice of it, and would not have ſaid that Hunnius began to write againſt the Calviniſts about 1584. The Jeſuit Contzen (30) fixes the year 1593, as the date of the impreſſion of the Calvinus Judaizans, and I believe he is in the right for ſo doing. The circumſtance which puzzles me is, to find in Pareus's life, that Giles Hunnius diſturbed the peace of the Church in 1595, by accuſing the Calviniſts, and particularly John Calvin, of judaizing. I will give the paſſage at ſome length, becauſe the reader will herein find ſome touches of our Hunnius's character, according to his adverſaries. Repertus eſt anno deinceps 1595 turbulentus quidam Gracchus, qui pacem Eccleſiæ livido calamo inquietare paravit, ægre ferens, Evangelicorum Principum animos à tribunitiis Ecebolorum concionibus abhorrere, unionemque ac concordiam Chriſtianam ſerio meditari: quam proinde non alia fabrica melius ſe diſrumpere poſſe ſperavit, quam ſi immani iſto convitio gravaret Eccleſias Reformatas, criminatus eas Judaizare: ac CALVINUM primipilarem Eccleſiarum Reformatarum Doctorem, Judaicis gloſſis pleraque oracula Veteris Teſtamenti detemerare. Accuſatio hæc tametſi non communem cauſam Eccleſiarum Orthodoxarum tangeret, proprieque eam ſpectaret, cujus Epiſcopus fuiſſet Calvinus, tamen quia per illius latus cæteræ omnes in capite CHRISTO unitæ petebantur, propudioſis iſtis calumniis CLYPEUM veritatis Catholicæ de ſacroſancta Trinitate oppoſuit, Eccleſiaſque Orthodoxas, & CALVINUM Electum DEI organum fortiſſime aſſeruit: adeoque in fumos diſſipavit Judaica & Arianica illa cymbala (31). i. e. " In the year 1595 there ſtarted up a ſeditious " fellow, Gracchus like, who prepared to infeſt the " peace and tranquillity of the Church by his envious " pen; he being diſpleaſed that the Proteſtant Princes " ſhould be greatly diſguſted at the factious Sermons " of the Ecebolians, and ſerioûſly meditated an union " and concord between Chriſtians. Now he imagined " that the way to bring this about moſt effectually, " would be, to load the Calviniſtical Churches with " the horrid reproach of judaizing; and to accuſe Cal- " vin, the chief Captain of the reformed Churches, of " adulterating the greateſt part of the oracles of the " Old Teſtament by Jewiſh gloſſes. Although this " accuſation did not affect the common cauſe of the " orthodox Churches, and had that chiefly in view " whereof Calvin was Biſhop; nevertheleſs ſince all " the reſt, joyned or united in Chriſt as their head, " were levelled at through his ſides; he oppoſed to " theſe ſhameful calumnies, the buckler of Catholic " truth with regard to the moſt holy Trinity, and cou- " rageouſly defended the orthodox Churches, and " Calvin, the inſtrument appointed by the Almighty; " and in this manner he invalidated the accuſation of " Judaiſm and Arianiſm." Would not any perſon who read his concluſion imagine that an end had been entirely put to this conteſt by Pareus's anſwer? But it was quite otherwiſe; for Hunnius replied, and his adverſary did the ſame. Hutterus informs us that Hunnius, in 1598, publiſhed two books againſt Pareus, who had writ in favour of Calvin. Duobus libris D. Pareo reſpondit, qui Calvini patrocinium ſuſceperat (32). Pareus returned, to the charge, and printed a book at Neuſtadt in the year 1599 in 8vo, intitled, Orthodoxus Calvinus oppoſitus Pſeudo Calvino Judaizanti: which work was reprinted forty two years after in Geneva (33). This I learn from Baillet, which thereby plunges me into a freſh perplexity; for I infer from the preface to the Calvinus Orthodoxus (34), that Pareus compoſed and publiſhed it 1594. He ſays (35) that Calvin had been dead thirty years; and that this apology would have been publiſhed at Francfort during the time of the ſpring-fair, had not the impreſſion been delayed by perſons in power (36). He adds (37), they have changed their mind, and approved of my publiſhing this work. This ſhews plainly that the Calvinus Orthodoxus was printed in 1594; and nevertheleſs the author informs us, towards the cloſe of the book, that Samuel Huberus had been baniſhed from Wittemberg, which, according to Melchior Adam (38), was not till 1595.

(29) See Art. 66. num. 1. of the Anti.

(30) In Jubilo Jubilorum, pag. 307.

(31) Philippus Paræus, in Vita Davidis Paræi, pag. m. 51.

(32) Apud Melchior Adam. pag. 729.

(33) Baillet, Art. 66. num. 1. of the Anti.

(34) This is the title of the book in the Geneva edition 1641.

(35) Præfat. pag. 4.

(36) Ibid. pag. 14.

(37) Ibid. pag. 15.

(38) In Vita Hunnii, pag. 729.

[L] Calvin was there accuſed of ſo many heretical crimes.] Here follows the ſummary of his Calvinus Judaizans, according to Pareus (39). In ipſo libri titulo Calvinum ex Ariano Judæum, vel certe ex Arianizante Judaizantem facit, & amariſſimè paſſim infectatur, quod mera ambitione, ſtudio perverſo, ludo aleatorio, verſutia veteratoria, temeritate deſultoria, Scripturas ſacras à ſenſu proprio ad peregrinum inflectat, quòd eaſdem tetris corruptelis, gloſſis impiis, proditoriis eluſionibus, & plenis Judaicæ perfidiæ nequitiæque ſtrophis, ad ſuam & aliorum perniciem horribiliter alò detorqueat: quòd teſtimonia de Deo uno & trino ſtropharum ſuarum ſpinis intricet: quòd Scripturæ locis æternam Deitatem Chriſti confirmantibus caliginem Judaicam offendere non reformidet: quòd illuſtriſſima vaticinia Prophetarum de Meſſia Judaicis perverſionibus involvat; in fraudem Chriſtianæ religionis adulteret: & ad perfidiam Judaicæ infidelitatis, Arianæque impietatis retundendam ſtrophis nefariis hebetet, inutiliaque reddat: quod Evangeliſtarum, Apoſtolorumque ſacroſanctas explicationes nequiter eludat: ipſos Apoſtolos ſub ferulam cenſoriam revocet; flagellet: quòd Scriptorum Eccleſiaſticorum, veterum & recentium, pias interpretationes altiſſimè deſpiciat & irrideat, ipſoſque ſexagenarios de ponte præcipitet, &c. Paſſim etiam non acerbis modo ſarcaſmis ſurdo illudit, ſed & conviciatur virulentiſſimè, appellitans acutum Diaboli inſtrumentum, Cenſorem, Ariſtarchum, Dictatorem, Apoſtolo Paulo doctiorem, αὐτοδιδακτον Scripturæ interpretem, Doctorem ſupercilioſum, præſtigiarum Judaicarum architectum, colubrum, Angelum & Spiritum tenebrarum ex abyſſi puteo emergentem, & quæ alia hujus generis infinita ſunt maledicentiæ ejus emblemata, vel potius convicia, lectu ſanè & auditu horrenda. i. e. " He makes Calvin, in the " title of the book itſelf, a Jew from an Arian, or a " Judaizer from an Arianizer; and reproaches him in " the moſt bitter terms every where, as a man who " merely from ambition, a perverſe inclination, game- " ſter-like, with wicked craft, and inconſtant raſhneſs, " wreſts the holy Scriptures from its natural ſenſe to " one that is foreign to it; as a man who, by dark " corruption, impious gloſſes, treacherous mockings, " and quirks full of Jewiſh perfidy and wickedneſs, " horribly perverts the meaning of them to his own " deſtruction and that of others; as a man, who per- " plexes with his knotty devices the proofs of the one- " three God; as a man, who is not afraid of ſpread- " ing a Jewiſh gloom over thoſe paſſages in Scripture " which confirm the eternal Divinity of Chriſt; as a " man who darkens by Judaical perverſions the moſt " glorious Prophecies relating to the Meſſiah; vitiates " them to the detriment of the Chriſtian Religion; " and, to leſſen the perfidy of Jewiſh infidelity, and " Arian impiety, blunts the edge of them by wicked " quirks, and makes them uſeleſs; as a man, who " wickedly

(39) Paræus, in Præfat. Calvini Orthodoxi, pag. 9.

Some particulars want to be rectified in the remark where I ſpeak of the Calvinus Judaizans [M].

" wickedly eludes the ſacred explications of the Evan" geliſts and Apoſtles, and preſumes to cenſure and de-
" fame the Apoſtles themſelves: in a word, as a man,
" who greatly deſpiſes, and laughs at the pious in" terpretations made both by antient and modern Eccle-
" ſiaſtical writers; and is for rejecting them as obſolete.
" He not only throws out the moſt bitter taunts againſt
" him, on all occaſions, but calumniates him in the " moſt harſh and virulent manner, calling him the " Devil's ſharp inſtrument, a Cenſor, an Ariſtarchus,
" a Dictator, more learned than Paul the Apoſtle;
" a ſelf-inſtructed Interpreter of the Scriptures; a ſu-
" percilious Doctor, an Architect or Framer of " Jewiſh incantations; a Serpent, an Angel and Spi" rit of darkneſs riſing from the infernal abyſs; and
" a numberleſs multitude of ſuch vile names, ſhock-
" ing to read as well as hear." It is to be obſerved he declares, that if he does not plainly ſhew Calvin's Judaiſm, he deſires never to be believed upon any occaſion (40). One cannot forbear aſking the following queſtion: Was he perſuaded, or was he not, of the truth of what he advanced? Chriſtian charity obliges us to think he was, for otherwiſe we muſt look upon him as the worſt wretch that ever lived. Let us therefore conclude that he ſpoke as he believed; and conclude from thence, that in hot conſtitutions, like his, zeal is a kind of drunkenneſs, which ſo diſtracts the mind, that all objects appear double and falſe.

(40) Hac lege diſerte ſe adſtrinxit (pag. 6.) ut niſi Calvinum judaizantem ad oculum demonſtret, nolit ſibi ulla unquam in re poſtbac fidem adhiberi. Idem, ibid. pag. 16.

Eumenidum veluti demens vidit agmina Pentheus,
Et ſolem geminum, & duplices ſe oſtendere Thebas (41).

" Like Pentheus, when diſtracted with his fear,
" He ſaw two ſuns, and double Thebes appear."
Dryden.

(41) Virgil. Æn. lib. 4. ver. 469.

The Prieſteſs of Bacchus, who fell violently on her own ſon, miſtaking him for a wild boar (42), whilſt he beheld, without any faith, or rather with contempt, the ceremonies of the feſtival, is an image of the vertigo or giddineſs with which the train of zealots are ſeized. Pareus aſcribes all theſe ſtrange flights of Hunnius to the Devil; it is the Devil, ſays he (43), employed Hunnius, as a writer every way qualified to compoſe ſo ſlanderous a book. En vero tandem, Chriſtiane Lector, extremæ improbitatis Satanæ exemplum. Quaſi enim hactenus Neſtorianiſmis, Arianiſmis, Turciſmis, Paganiſmis, Atheiſmis, & id genus impuriſſimis ſputis ſuis Eccleſias noſtras parum conſpurcarit: nuper eaſdem etiam JUDAISMI ſtercoribus petulantiſſimè conſpergere eſt aggreſſus, conflato per idoneum artificem libello mendaci juxta & maledico, qui titulo CALVINI JUDAIZANTIS circumfertur. i. e. " Behold, O Chriſtian
" reader, an example of the extreme wickedneſs of " Satan: as though he had not enough defiled our " Churches with Neſtorianiſm, Arianiſm, Turciſm,
" Paganiſm, Atheiſm, and ſuch like impurities: he
" not long ſince, moſt impudently endeavoured to fling
" Jewiſh filth at it; by means of a lying and calum-
" niating book, now handed about, and entitled
" CALVIN TURNED JEW, being compoſed by an ar-
" tificer, who was every way qualified for the buſineſs."
The deſign, according to Pareus, was to extirpate the Calviniſts, in order that the Ubiquitarian Doctors might be highly eſteemed. Hinc Pſeudo-Calvinus Judaizans, cujus hoc eſt argumentum & ſcopus. Calvinus eſt Judaizans, Arianizans: ergo & Calviniſtorum Eccleſiæ (quas vocant) ſunt tales: exſtirpandæ; ergo ceſſabunt Ubiquitati faceſſere negotium; ergo ſtabit Ubiquitas: ergo in pretio erunt Ubiquitarii Doctores. Hæc eſt Satanæ Dialectica (44). i. e. " Hence the falſe
" Calvin judaizing, the ſcope and argument of which is
" as follows: Calvin judaizes and Arianizes; therefore
" the Calviniſtical Churches, as they are called, are
" ſuch; therefore they ought to be extirpated; there" fore they will diſturb Ubiquity no longer; Ubi-
" quity will therefore ſtand; the Ubiquitarian Doctors
" will therefore be held in eſteem. This is Satan's lo-
" gic."

(42) Ille aper in noſtris errat qui maximus agris,
Ille mihi ferien-dus aper. Ovid. Metam. lib. 3. ſub finem.

(43) Paræus, in Præfat. Calvini Orthodoxi, pag. 3.

(44) Idem in Calvino Orthodox. pag. 344.

[M] Some particulars in the remark [K] want to be rectified.] The reader muſt expunge, in the remark [K], the two paſſages where I ſuppoſe that Lipenius is not miſtaken, in placing, under the year 1594, the edition of Hunnius's Anti-Paræus. I now am of opinion, that Baillet was not miſtaken in ſaying, that this date in Lipenius ought to be corrected; for I have a copy of the Anti-Pareus, the title of which declares that it was printed at Francfort ex officina Paltheniana, in the year 1598; the prolegomena whereof are ſubſcribed Ægidius Hunnius, and dated March 20, 1598. The title of the book, as I have given it from Baillet, is imperfect, and expreſſed in ſuch a manner as renders it obſcure; but here follows the complete title. Anti-Pareus: hoc eſt invicta Refutatio venenati ſcripti à D. Davide Pareo, Heidelbergenſi Theologo, editi in defenſionem ſtrophorum & corruptelarum quibus Johannes Calvinus illuſtriſſima Scripturæ Teſtimonia de myſterio Trinitatis necnon oracula prophetarum de CHRISTO deteſtandum in modum corrupit. Scriptus per Ægidium Hunnium. Hunnius declares, that as he was enough employed with other matters, he ſhould not ſo much as caſt his eye on Pareus's book, had not the advice of friends, and the vanity with which his adverſaries was ſwelled by his ſilence, made him reſolve to anſwer it (45): ſuch is the excuſe he makes for not replying ſooner. Now it being certain that the book which he refutes is that which David Pareus has entitled Calvinus Orthodoxus; it follows that this work of Pareus was not firſt publiſhed in 1599, and is not a reply, as Baillet ſuppoſes. Let us now poſitively affirm that it was publiſhed either in 1594 or 1595.

(45) Hunnius, in Prolegomenis ad Anti-Pareum.

It is to be obſerved that Hunnius complains, that Pareus accuſes him of having aſſerted that Calvin was an Arian. He affirms that he had declared the very contrary; and had only ſhewn, that the ſenſe which Calvin gives to many paſſages of the Bible is favourable to the Arians. I will now cite a diſtinction he employs. I will take it for granted, ſays he, that Calvin had no deſign to favour either the Arian or Jewiſh principles; but the ſpirit (46) which ſuggeſted thoſe falſe gloſſes to him had a tendency that way. Eſto autem, Calvinus ipſe ſtrophis ſuis non hoc ſibi habuerit propoſitum ut Judæorum Arianorumve cauſam proveheret, ſed tantum ut Interpretationis novitate & inſolentia ſibi præ cæteris doctoribus, veteribus & recentioribus, famam nominis conciliaret: Tamen Spiritus, qui has ei gloſſas & eluſiones ſuggerebat, hunc ſibi ſcopum præfixum habuit abſque controverſia, ut nimirum ambiguis & lubricis hiſce ſtrophis unum poſt alterum de Trinitate Teſtimonium, aut de Meſſia oraculum redderet incertum, atque ſic hominum animos paulatim à petra certitudinis dejectos in dubitationum fluctus conjiceret (47). i. e. " Let us
" ſuppoſe that Calvin did not deſign, by his quirks
" and devices, to favour the Jews or Arians; but on" ly, by the infrequency and novelty of his interpre" tations, to gain himſelf a reputation ſuperior to that
" of other Doctors antient or modern: Nevertheleſs
" the ſpirit, which ſuggeſted to him thoſe gloſſes and " impoſitions, had, without doubt, the following
" view, viz. by theſe ambiguous and dangerous ſub-
" tilties, to enervate and render doubtful, ſucceſſively,
" the evidence or teſtimonies concerning the Trinity,
" and the prophecies with regard to the Meſſiah; and
" in this manner to plunge the minds of men, by in-" ſenſible degrees, from the rock of certainty, into
" the ocean of doubt." Here follows another paſſage, wherein he ſays that the Devil exhibits the utmoſt efforts of his malice in Pareus's book. His expreſſions are very groſs on this occaſion. Cum igitur hoc Parei ſcriptum ita comparatum ſit, ut in eo Satanas, non dicam diabolicæ ſuæ malitiæ veſtigia quædam oſtendat, ſed impurum ſuum podicem (ſalva venia) denudatum lectoribus conſpiciendum exhibeat, dubitavi, fateor, eſſetne quicquam operæ impendendum tam flagitioſi ſcripti Refutationi: donec vel tandem & inimicorum inſultis gloriationibus, & imprimis amicorum crebris admonitionibus excitatus, hunc quoque laborem, quamlibet moleſtum, ad vindicandam gloriam Dei, & ſacro-ſanctam veritatem ipſius, ſuſcipiendum mihi & exantlandum eſſe duxi (48). i. e. " Since then this book of Pareus is written
" in ſuch a manner, that the Devil ſhews therein, not " only ſome tracts of his diabolical malice, but (if I
" may uſe the expreſſion) exhibits his filthy breech to
" the

(46) i. e. the Devil.

(47) Hunnius, in Prolegomenis ad Anti Pareum, p. 30. I ſet down the page, though the Prolegomena are not marked.

(48) Idem, ibid. pag. 3.

HUTTEN (ULRIC DE) a Gentleman of Franconia, was born at Steckelberg (a) in 1488. He firſt went through his ſtudies in Fulde, then at Colen, after at Frankfort on the Oder, where he took his Maſter of Arts degree in the year 1506, being the firſt promotion made in that newly-opened Univerſity. Having a genius for Poetry, he firſt ſet up, as an author, in that ſpecies of writing, by publiſhing a piece in the year 1513 [A], intitled, Vir bonus. The year following Prince Albert of Brandenburg having made his firſt entry into Mentz, whereof he was Archbiſhop, gave Hutten an occaſion of compoſing a ſecond Poem; he writing a large panegyric, in verſe, in his honour, wherein he included (what coſt him no little pains) an encomium on all Germany. He had a couſin, JOHN DE HUTTEN by name, who was Court-Marſhal to Ulric Duke of Wirtemberg, and was killed by this Duke in the foreſt of Beblingen, in the year 1515. Our Poet, waiting for an opportunity of ſhewing his reſentment againſt this Prince, ſword in hand, publiſhed ſeveral pieces againſt him (b). He was at that time in Italy [B], where he had given many proofs of his courage [C] in the war which the Emperor Maximilian ſuſtained during nine years in that county. At his return to Germany (c), Conrad Peutinger recommended him in ſuch ſtrong terms to the Emperor, that this Prince beſtowed the poetical Crown on him [D]. From that time Hutten had himſelf drawn in armour, with a crown of laurel on his head, and took vaſt delight in being repreſented in that manner. He went not long after to the Elector of Mentz's court, and there wrote a dialogue intitled, Aula, in the year 1518. Hutten went, a little after, to the diet of Auſburg with the Elector his maſter, who was there honoured with a Cardinal's hat. In this diet articles had been exhibited againſt the Duke of Wirtemberg, on which occaſion the murther of the Marſhal of his Court was not forgot. Theſe complaints had not produced any very great effect; but at laſt this Prince having ſeized upon the Imperial City of Reuthingen, in January 1519, a league was formed againſt him in Suabia, and thoſe who formed it did not lay down their arms till they had driven him out of all his dominions, to which he did not return till fifteen years after. Our Hutten ſerved in that war. Believing that the cauſe in which Luther had embarked was a very good one, he joined in it with great warmth; and publiſhed Pope Leo X's bull againſt Luther in the year 1520, with interlineary and marginal gloſſes (d), in which that Pope was made an object of the ſtrongeſt ridicule. The freedom with which he wrote againſt the irregularities and diſorders of the Court of Rome [E], exaſperated Leo in (a) It was the ſeat of the family; it ſtill exiſts, and makes a figure.

(b) See the liſt of them in the remark [B].

(c) In 1517.

(d) They are in vol. 2. of Luther's Works, pag. 53, & ſeq.

" the reader's view; I will confeſs that I was in " ſome doubt with myſelf whether ſo ſcandalous a " piece merited a refutation; till at length, excited " by the ſilly vaunts of my opponents, and particularly " by the repeated admonitions of my friends, I thought " it incumbent on me to attempt and go through with " this enterprize, how arduous ſoever it might be, " to vindicate God's glory and his holy truth."

[A] Publiſhing a piece in the year 1513.] He therefore was five and twenty when he firſt ſet out as an author. Moreri then muſt have miſtook, and was not able to copy Melchior Adam juſtly, when he ſays that Hutten, when but eighteen years of age, publiſhed ſeveral works in verſe.

[B] He was at that time in Italy] I have followed the Chronology of Melchior Adam my author; but I ought to inform my readers in this place, that I doubt whether it be juſt. I do not believe that all the pieces which relate to John Hutten's death, were publiſhed before Ulric Hutten's return to Germany. I find in Geſner's Bibliotheca, that the collection of all theſe writings was printed in the ſeat or caſtle of Steckelberg in the year 1519, in 4to. It contained Ulrichi Hutteni ſuper interfectione propinqui ſui Joannis Hutteni equitis à Wirtinbergienſi Duce Ulricho Deploratio, heroicis verſibus. Ad Ludovicum Huttenum ſuper interemptione filii conſolatoria Oratio. In Ulrichum Wirtenbergienſem Orationes quinque invectivæ. In eundem Dialogus, cui titulus Phalariſmus. Apologia pro Phalariſmo, & aliquot ad amicos Epiſtolæ. Ad Franciſcum Galliarum regem Epiſtola, ne cauſam Wirtenbergienſis tueatur exhortatoria. Inſeruntur etiam Epiſtolæ aliquot ad Amicos. I alſo find Melchior Adam quoting a ſpeech of Ulric Hutten againſt the Duke of Wirtemberg, which was wrote but in 1519, that is, two years after the author's return from Italy into Germany. Have I not therefore juſt reaſon to doubt of Melchior Adam's accuracy? The circumſtances he relates from this ſpeech are of too ſingular a nature not to be taken notice of in this place. We are there informed that the body of John Hutten was dug up pretty near the foreſt in which he had been killed; yet it was dug up, I ſay, whilſt the confederates were making war on Ulrich Duke of Wirtemberg. The murder had been perpetrated four years, and yet the corps was not rotted, but bled when it was touched, and the face was ſtill to be known; from all which Hutten infers that his couſin was innocent. Rem admirandam, & cujus prope nullius fides capax ſit, vidiſſes. Quartum jam annum defoſſum corpus non conſumptum, non putrefactum, totam adhuc faciem cognoſcibilem: quin etiam ſanguine commaduit attactum. En igitur innocentiæ teſtimonium! Depoſuimus Eſlingæ, inde ad patriam ſepulturam devecturi (1).

(1) Hutten, in Orat. contra Wirtemb. apud Melchior. Adam. in Vita Juriſconſult. pag. 17.

[C] . . . . . where he had given many proofs of his courage] Thoſe he gave in war were no doubt inferior to thoſe he gave in a rencounter. He was gone from Rome to Viterbo, at a time that an Embaſſador of France had ſtopt at the laſt mentioned city. Now a general quarrel happened to ariſe, in which Hutten, forſaken by his comrades, was attacked by five Frenchmen at once, and himſelf put them all to flight, tho' he had received ſome wounds. He wrote an epigram on that occaſion, which may be ſeen in Melchior Adam, in quinque Gallos à ſe profligatos, on his putting five Frenchmen to flight.

[D] The Emperor Maximilian beſtowed the Poetical crown on him.] He acknowledges himſelf obliged, for that honour, to the good offices of Peutinger, and returns thanks for it in one of his works (2). He even ſays that the crown in queſtion had been made in Peutinger's houſe by Conſtantia his daughter, whoſe virtue and beauty he applauds exceedingly. Illam aio coronam, illam lauream quam tu ante domi tuæ, accurate contexente & adorante filia tua Conſtantia, omnium quæ iſtic ſunt puellarum & forma & moribus præſtantiſſima, apparaveras. This circumſtance, for a Poet who loved the fair-ſex as dearly as Hutten did, could not but ſuggeſt new words and a great many thoughts; and it is a hundred to one but a great many epigrams were wrote on the charming Conſtantia Peutinger.

(2) Præfat. ad Principes German. ut bellum Turcis inferant, apud Melch. Adam. in Vitis Juriſconſult. pag. 15.

[E] He wrote againſt the irregularities and diſorders of the church of Rome.] Hutten publiſhed, among other works, an Hiſtorical Treatiſe in the German language, concerning the diſobedience with which the Popes had behaved perpetually towards the Emperors. At the end of it we find, that Maximilian I having been impoſed on by Leo X, ſpoke as follows. This in the higheſt degree; and induced him to command the Elector of Mentz to ſend him to Rome bound hand and foot. Hutten then withdrew from this Court [F], and went to that of the Emperor Charles V in the Netherlands; but did not continue long in it, being told that his life would be in danger. It is ſome way probable that he withdrew then to the fortreſs of Ebernburg; for it was thence he wrote in 1520 his complaint to the Emperor, to the Electors of Mentz and Saxony, and to all the States of Germany againſt the attempts which the Pope's emiſſaries made againſt him. It was from the ſame place that he wrote to Luther in May 1521 (e), and publiſhed ſeveral pieces in favour of the Reformation. We don't know the exact time when he left this caſtle; but it is certain that in January 1523 he had left Baſil [G], where he had flattered himſelf with the hopes of meeting with a ſecure aſylum; but inſtead of it he had been expoſed to great dangers. Eraſmus having politely refuſed a viſit from Hutten, for fear of heightning the ſuſpicions that were entertained againſt him, as well as for fear of ſomething elſe which he afterwards owned [H], was ſoon after ſeverely attacked in a public manner, by Ulric de Hutten. Eraſmus anſwered it [I]; and there is no doubt but Hutten would have made a reply, had he not been ſnatched away by death, he dying in an iſland of the Lake of Zurich Auguſt the 29th 1523 [K]. He was a man of little ſtature;

(e) This Letter is in Luther's Works, edit. Witt. pag. 102.

Pope has already cheated me in a baſe manner, and I may truly ſay that no Pope ever kept his word with me; but I hope, with the grace of God, that this will be the laſt. Cochleus ſays (3), that before Luther's name was ſpread, Ulric de Hutten had publiſhed ſeveral pieces againſt the oppreſſions which Germany ſuffered by means of the Popes; and that he wrote, in 1519, a ſmall tract entitled Trias Romana, the invention whereof was exceedingly pretty, and which brought a prodigious odium upon the court of Rome.

(3) Act. & Script. Lutheri, ad ann. 1519.

[F] Hutten withdrew from the Elector of Mentz's court.] I do not find, in Hutten's Life, that he was ever ſeized by order of the Elector of Mentz, as Moreri affirms; all I find is, that he baniſhed him from his court, excluſus itaque aula & urbe Moguntina (4); and that he forbid all perſons to ſell or read his works upon pain of excommunication.

(4) Melch. in Vitis Juriſconſult. pag. 19.

[G] In January 1523, he had left Baſil.] This appears from the following words of a Letter of Oecolampadius (5); Sunt hic ex ſacerdotibus & theologis, qui de me peſſime loqui cupiant, nec deſiſtunt ubi clam conveniunt. Tantum machinati ut Hutteno non fuerit diutius tutum hic agere, unde & nudius tertius hinc diſceſſit, quorſum autem neſcio. i. e. "Some Miniſters and Di-
" vines, in this place, deſire that I ſhould be ex" tremely ill ſpoken of, and do not fail to do this in " their ſecret meetings. They went ſo far in their " machinations, that Hutten was not ſafe any longer
" here, for which reaſon he left us three days ſince;
" but whither he is retired I cannot ſay."

(5) Dated at Baſil the 21ſt of Jan. 1523. Book 4. Epiſt. pag. 968. apud Melch. Adam. pag. 21.

[H] Eraſmus having politely refuſed a viſit from Hutten, for fear of . . . ſomething which he afterwards owned.] Writing to Melanchthon in September 1524, (6), he tells him, that he would gladly have received Hutten's viſit, without much valuing what the world might ſay of it; and that the motive of his refuſing Hutten's viſit, was not merely from the apprehenſion he was under of making himſelf odious; but that there was another motive, viz. that he ſhould then have been under a neceſſity, of taking into his houſe that boaſter, oppreſſed with poverty and the (*) itch, who only ſought for a neſt to lay himſelf in, and to borrow money of every one he met with. Thus we find that Eraſmus was more ſway'd, on this occaſion, by intereſt than by fame. Quod Hutteni colloquium deprecabar non invidiæ metus tantum in cauſa fuit: erat aliud quiddam quod tamen in Spongia non attigi. Ille egens & omnibus rebus deſtitutus quærebat nidum aliquem ubi moraretur. Erat mihi glorioſus ille miles cum ſua ſcabie (7) in ædes recipiendus, ſimulque recipiendus ille chorus titulo Evangelicorum, ſed titulo duntaxat. Sletſtadii mulctavit omnes amicos ſuos aliqua pecunia. A Zuinglio improbè petiit, quod ipſe Zuinglius mihi ſuis literis perſcripſit. Jam amarulentiam & glorias hominis nemo quamvis patiens ferre poterat. i. e. "The " reaſon why I avoided a conference with Hutten, was " not only for fear that my reputation would ſuffer by
" it; there indeed was another which I have not " mentioned in my Sponge. As Hutten was poor, and " in want of every thing, and ſought only a neſt
" where he might dwell in, I muſt have taken this
" braggadocio, with his (†) itch, into my houſe; and " have taken him under the name of one of the Evan-
" gelics, though but in name only. He borrowed " money from all his acquaintance in Schleſtad; and
" ſaucily importuned Zuinglius for ſome, as he in" formed me by letter. The moſt patient perſon living
" could not bear with the bitterneſs and vaunting of
" this man." It appears by this, that Eraſmus was not afraid of our Hutten, becauſe he was a zealous Lutheran, but becauſe he was a plundered officer, who wanted to take up his winter-quarters at Eraſmus's. There is no doubt but that Hutten's viſits, and his borrowing money on thoſe occaſions, were diſpleaſing to many profeſſed Proteſtants.

(6) It is the 113th Letter of book 19. p. 949.

(*) Probably Pox is meant here.

(7) It is very probable that by the word Scabies, he means the Itch here.

(†) Or rather Pox.

[I] Eraſmus anſwered it.] This anſwer is inſcribed to Zuinglius, and is entitled Spongia Eraſmi adverſus aſpergines Hutteni. Eraſmus there confeſſes ingenuouſly, that he deſired Hutten might be told not to come and ſee him, unleſs ſome important reaſon obliged him to it; but he ſhews that his intreaty was ſo much ſoftned, and afterwards made ſo many propoſals to this friend, that any reaſonable man would have been ſatisfied with them. The worſt circumſtance is, he told Mark Laurinus, Dean of Bruges, in a letter, that had Hutten made him a viſit, he would not have refuſed to converſe with him. Fuit hic Huttenus paucorum dierum hoſpes: interim nec ille me adiit, nec ego illum; & tamen ſi me conveniſſet, non repuliſſem hominem à colloquio (8). He adds that the reaſon which prevented their ſeeing one another, was, Hutten could not be without a ſtove, and Eraſmus could not bear one. We ſee, by this example, that the moſt honeſt people are apt not to expreſs always, in their letters, things as they know them to be. Hutten was highly exaſperated at Eraſmus, and reproached him, in very diſobliging terms, on a thouſand accounts. Eraſmus made the beſt juſtification in his power. After Hutten's death, one Otho Brunfels, a Phyſician, anſwered Eraſmus in his name.

(8) Eraſm. Ep. 6. lib. 23.

[K] He died in an Iſland of the Lake of Zurich.] He alſo was interred there, and ſome years after a Gentleman of Franconia cauſed the following diſtich to be engraved on his Sepulchre.

Hic eques auratus jacet, oratorque diſertus
Huttenus, vates carmine & enſe potens (9).

(9) Geſner. in Bibliotb. folio 342.

" Hutten, a Knight and Orator lies here,
" For his bright pen and ſword alike renown'd.

The moſt unhappy circumſtance is, he died of the foul diſeaſe. Had Varillas related this firſt (10), I ſhould not be concerned about it; but I find this incident in Geſner's Bibliotheca. After this, who would not deplore the odd character of the man? Hutten, wandring from place to place on account of his religion; Hutten perſecuted for his ſtrong zeal, carries the foul diſeaſe about him whitherſoever he goes, and at laſt dies of it. What a ſtrange medley is this! He had publiſhed, in 1519, a Latin book concerning Guaicum and the venereal Diſeaſe. He at that time could treat of it as a maſter; for in all probability he did not get this diſtemper ſince his abjuration of the Popiſh religion. By the way Varillas makes a wrong computation. He ſays that Hutten eſpouſed the intereſt of Luther five years before he died, and two years after the Diet of Auſburg, where he had oppoſed the ſtature; of a weak and ſickly conſtitution, but extremely brave, and a little too paſſionate [L]. A collection of all his Poems was publiſhed at Frankfort in 1538 (f). He is thought to have wrote many libels [M].

(10) Hiſt. de l'Hereſie, liv. 4.

(f) Extracted from his Life, in Melchior Adam, in Vitis Juriſconſultor Germaniæ, pag. 13, & ſeq.

Part of his library fell into the hands of a Phyſician, who, as it is ſaid, ſold ſome books belonging to it, to Frobenius. See the beginning of book 2. of Joachim Camerarius's Letters.

The conjecture which was mentioned in the preceding editions, viz. that John de Hutten was ſuſpected to have had too great a ſhare in the Ducheſs of Wirtemberg's good graces, is falſe. It was the Duke who loved that Gentleman's wife (g). The Duke has been introduced in a dialogue, as follows: Nobilem juvenem, meum comitem, cum ejus uxorem puellam venuſtam deperirem, obtruncavi (h). i. e. "Being diſtractedly in love with "the beautiful young wife of my companion, a noble youth, I killed him."

(g) See tom. 4. Obſervationum Selectarum ad Rem Literariam ſpectantium, printed at Hall 1701, pag. 169, 170.

(h) Ulr. Hutenus in Phalariſmo, folio Aiij.

league which the court of Rome intended to form againſt the Turks. This Diet was held in 1518, and Hutten muſt conſequently have turned Lutheran in 1520; now he lived but three years after this. Varillas's remark, that he was obliged to live chaſtely, becauſe he had taken holy orders, is perhaps not altogether falſe, for we find the following words in Melanchthon's life. Interceſſerat Hutteno cum Croto Rubiano ſingularis uſus à prima adoleſcentia, quo autore vel certe adjutore reliquit ille contubernium Fuldanum, in quod pene puer magis diſciplinæ quam religionis cauſſa datus eſſet. i. e. "Crotus Rubianus was of great ſervice to Hutten "from his childhood; for by his counſel, or help, he "quitted the Abbey of Fulde, wherein he had been "placed, more on a religious account than on that of "literature, when almoſt a boy."

(11) Biblioth. folio 342.

[L] He was ... a little too paſſionate.] Geſner (11) obſerves that Hutten, at the beginning of the reformation, ſaid and wrote many things with great freedom and boldneſs againſt the Roman Catholics, as well as againſt Princes and the magiſtrates of the cities. He joined with ſo much fury with Capnio againſt the Monks, that after having attacked that faction with his pen, he fell upon it with his ſword. Litigantes Monachos cum Capnione varie exagitavit, & illam factionem tum quidem vehementiſſimis ſcriptis, ſed aliquando poſt armis quoque expeditis adortus eſt (12). He acquainted Luther with the double war which he carried on againſt the Clergy. Hutten literas ad me dedit ingenti ſpiritu æſtuantes in Romanum Pontificem, ſcribens ſe jam & literis & armis in tyrannidem ſacerdotalem ruere, motus quod pontifex ſicas & venenum ei intentarit, ac Epiſcopo Moguntino mandarit, captum ac vinctum Romam mittere (13). i. e. "I received a letter from Hutten filled with rage againſt the Roman "Pontiff, declaring he would attack, both with his "pen and ſword, the tyranny of the Clergy; he "being exaſperated againſt the Pope for threatning "him with daggers and poiſon, and commanding the "Biſhop of Mentz to ſend him bound to Rome." Since Luther did not approve of this man's violent temper (14), we are not to wonder that it gave Melanchthon ſome uneaſineſs. He loved Hutten for his genius and learning, but he dreaded his pride and paſſion, and his innovating temper. Ut virum magni facere & admirari propter doctrinæ eruditionem & præſtantiam ingenii, ſic ab illius natura vehemente & excelſo animo, & voluntate ad novas res propenſa .... nonnihil timere Philippum Melanchthonem licuit animadvertere. Camerarius (15) who informs us of this, adds, that Ulric Hutten was vaſtly impatient; and that his air and diſcourſe ſhewed him to be of a cruel diſpoſition. He applies to him what was ſaid of Demoſthenes; viz. that Hutten would have turned all Europe topſy turvy, had his power equalled his deſigns and enterprizes. Judge of his temper from the following ſpecimen. Being told that the Carthuſians had wiped their backſides with the prints repreſenting his face, he fined them two thouſand piſtoles. Huttenus Carthuſianos, quia imagine ſua pro anitergiis uſi ſunt, in duobus millibus aureorum nummûm multavit (16). This was making them pay exceedingly dear for the little regard they had ſhewn to the laurel, which crowned the head of the print in queſtion. Varillas (17) ſays, that Luther had it placed in the front of his books. I related elſewere (18) the menaces which Ulric Hutten vented againſt the Pope's Nuncio; and after this I can very eaſily believe that he wrote thus to the Elector of Mentz: If you burn my books, I will burn your cities (19).

(12) Camerar. in Vita Melanchth.

(13) Luther. tom. 1. Epiſt. pag. 282 and 285.

(14) Quid Huttenus petat vides, nollem vi & cæde pro Evangelio certari: ita ſcripſi ad hominem. Idem, tom. 1. Epiſt. pag. 332.

(15) In Vita Melanchth.

(16) Nicol. Gerbelius, Epiſt. ad Jo. Schwebelium; apud Melchior Adam.

(17) Hiſt. de Hereſie, lib. 4.

(18) In citation (18) of the article ALEXANDER JEROM.

(19) Palavicin. Hiſt. Concil. Trident. lib. 1. cap. 25. num. 1.

(20) Melch. Adam. in Vitis Juriſconſult.

(21) Epitome Geſneri.

[M] He is thought to have writ many libels.] Of the following among others; Dialogus Philalethis civis Utopienſis. Oratio ad Chriſtum pro Julio ſecundo Ligure pontifice (20) Bullicida (21): Prædones: Momus; Carolus: Pietatis & Superſtitionis Pugna: Conciliabulum Theologiſtarum adverſus bonarum literarum ſtudioſos. Apophthegmata Vadiſci & Paſquilli de depravato Eccleſiæ ſtatu. Huttenus Captivus, Huttenus illuſtris, authore S. Abydeno Corallo Germano (22). A burleſque ſatyr, entitled Nemo, had been aſcribed to Eraſmus; but Hutten was author of it (23); he himſelf declaring this, and being angry that the glory of it had been given to another. Some perſons affirm that he is author of Epiſtolæ obſcurorum virorum (24). This fiction would be more tolerable than another which is aſcribed to him, viz. that he himſelf drew up the letter, which he publiſhed under the name of the Univerſities of Paris, Oxford and Prague (25). Had he lived thirty five years longer (26), he would have overflowed Europe with a deluge of books and libels.

(22) Geſner, in Biblioth. who takes the Abydenus Corallus to be a ſuppoſititious name.

(23) See Eraſmus's Letters, pag. 543 and 575.

(24) See the remark [F] of the article HOCHSTRATUS.

(25) See Father Labbe, de Script. Eccleſ. tom. 1. pag. 922.

(26) Melchior Adam and Moreri date his birth to the year 1488, and his death to 1523, and yet they ſay he lived 36 years.

☞ The above article being very imperfect, it will be neceſſary to add a ſupplement to it.

HUTTEN (ULRIC DE) was born the 20th or 21ſt of April 1488; was ſent to the Abbey of Fulde at eleven years of age; and took his Maſter of Arts degree at eighteen, at Frankfort on the Oder. In 1509 he was at the ſiege of Padua, in the Emperor Maximilian's army; and he owned that it was the want of money which forced him to make that campaign. He returned ſoon into Germany, and there began to apply himſelf anew to his ſtudies, contrary to his father's inclination [A]. He went to various places [B]. The correſpondence he held with Eraſmus was of great advantage to him.

[A] He began to apply himſelf again to his ſtudies, contrary to his father's inclinations.] This old man not having the leaſt taſte or eſteem for polite literature, thought it unworthy the purſuit of perſons of exalted birth; and being angry at his ſon on that account, he therefore would not give him the ſupplies he wanted; which very probably was the cauſe of his being reduced to the neceſſity that had forced him to ſerve under the Emperor in Italy. Our Hutten's father would have been glad, as his ſon was ſo fond of learning, that he had applied himſelf to the civil law, ſince that might raiſe him in the world; but Hutten had no inclination for that kind of ſtudy. However, finding there was no other way of getting himſelf reconciled to his father, he went to Pavia in April 1511, which city being beſieged and taken by the Swiſs, he was taken priſoner, plundered of all he had; but was afterwards releaſed, and then went to Bologna in July (1).

(1) Hommes Illuſtres du P. Niceron. tom. 15. pag. 245, 246.

[B] He went to various places.] From Bologna he travelled to Bohemia and Moravia; and waiting on the him [C]. It was in 1516 that Hutten was honoured with the poetical Crown; and returning to his own country, he did not meet with ſo kind a reception from his friends as he expected [D]. He was in France in the year 1518; from whence he went to Mentz, and engaged in the ſervice of the Elector Albert. Hutten did not once come to an engagement in the war againſt the Duke of Wirtemberg; however, the tumult of a camp and the noiſe of arms ſoon gave him a diſtaſte for a military life, ſo that he could not forbear panting after his ſtudies and a retirement [E]. In 1519, his patron the Elector of Mentz permitted him to go and ſpend ſome months in the Caſtle of Steckelberg; but in 1520 Leo X obliged the Elector to diſmiſs Hutten, that Pope being exaſperated againſt him, for republiſhing an old book intitled, De unitate Eccleſiæ conſervanda, & ſchiſmate quod fuit inter Henricum IV Imp. & Gregorium VII Pont. Max. &c. Hutten then withdrew to Brabant, and made ſome ſtay in the Court of the Emperor Charles V, but was forced to leave it ſoon, upon which he retired to Ebernburg [F]. Hutten did not begin to declare openly for Luther till after he had left the Elector of Mentz's Court; but he had wrote to him before from Mentz, and his firſt letter to Luther is dated June the 4th 1520. Varillas had made ſome falſe aſſertions with regard to our Hutten [G]. During his abode in Ebernburg, he performed a very generous action with regard to his family [H]. It was Francis de Sickingen, Luther's great protector, to whom the Caſtle of Ebernberg belonged, that had given an aſylum to Hutten ever ſince his retiring to that place; and it is probable that he had accompanied his patron in the expedition wherein he was killed in May 1523. Hutten was now obliged to ſeek ſome other ſhelter, and to wander up and down during the ſhort time he had to live. He then withdrew to Baſil, but not being allowed to continue there, he went to Mildehauſen, and died in an iſland called Uffnort [I]. His Panegyriſts declare that it is a mere calumny to ſay that he died of the foul diſeaſe; but it is nevertheleſs probable that he fell a victim to it [K]. Some think very juſtly that he was never in holy orders.

the Biſhop of Olmutz in a very poor condition, that Prelate, who was a great Mecænas, gave our Hutten a gracious reception; preſented him with a horſe; and gave him money to purſue his journey. Hutten travelled to Vienna, and there ſaw Joachim Vadianus, to whom he then gave the Poems which Vadianus publiſhed afterwards. It is probable that it was from this city that Hutten returned a third time into Italy; and it appears by one of his letters dated from Bologna the 31ſt of July 1516, that he was then ſtudying the law (2).

(2) Ibid. pag. 246, 247.

[C] The correſpondence he held with Eraſmus was of great advantage to him.] It obtained him particularly a very kind reception from all the Literati in Italy whom he viſited, and eſpecially at Venice, from Batt. Egnatius, Ang. Contareni, And. Aſulanus, &c. (3).

(3) Ibid. pag. 247, 248.

[D] He did not meet with . . . a . . . kind reception from his friends.] As theſe were told that Hutten had devoted all the time, during which he pretended to ſtudy the civil law, to polite literature, his family and friends reproached him grievouſly on that account. This gave him ſome uneaſineſs at firſt, but he afterwards only laughed at their clamours (4).

(4) Ibid. pag. 248, 249.

[E] He could not forbear panting after his ſtudies.] This we find by a letter of his to Frederic Piſcator, dated the 21ſt of May 1519. He there diſcovers an inclination for matrimony, and expreſſes himſelf in a ſingular way on that occaſion. He informs his correſpondent, that he wants a wife who may take care of him; and that what advantageous things ſoever ſome people might tell him of a ſingle life, he found himſelf not qualified for it, and did not like to lie alone. That he wanted a partner in whoſe company he might unbend his mind, joke and tattle with, and ſooth his cares. That his wife muſt be beautiful, young, well educated, merry, modeſt and patient. That he did not require much money with ſuch a one; and did not ſo much regard her birth, becauſe ſhe would be ſufficiently ennobled by marrying him. Opus, ſays he to Piſcator, uxore eſt, quæ me curet. Noſti mores; non facile ſolus eſſe poſſum, ne noctu quidem. Faceſſant mihi enim prædicare quidam cælibatus bona, & ſolitudinis commoda; non videor eſſe capax. Me quidem habere oportet, ubi curas & ipſa ubi acriora etiam ſtudia remittam, quicum ludam, quo jocos conferam, amæniores & leviuſculas fabulas miſceam, ubi ſolicitudinis aciem obtundam, curarum æſtus mitigem. Da mihi uxorem, & ut ſcias qualem, da venuſtam, adoleſcentulam, probe educatam, hilarem, verecundam, patientem; ſatis habeat, non multum. Divitias non quæro enim. Et ad genus quod pertinet, ſatis nobilem futuram puto, quæcumque Hutteno nupſerit (5).

(5) Ibid. pag. 250, 251.

[F] He retired to Ebernburg.] Meeting with the famous Hochſtratus in his journey thither, he drew his ſword, and running up to him, ſwore he would kill him for what he had done againſt Reuchlin and Luther; but Hochſtratus throwing himſelf at his feet, conjured him ſo earneſtly to ſpare his life that Hutten let him go, after ſtriking him ſeveral times with the flat of his ſword (6).

(6) Ibid. pag. 253.

[G] Varillas has made ſome falſe aſſertions.] He ſays that Hutten declared publicly for Luther five years before his death, and two years after the Diet of Augſburg; and that he there oppoſed the league which the Court of Rome would have formed againſt the Turks. This Diet was held in the year 1518. Hutten muſt therefore have turned Lutheran in 1520; and he lived but three years after this. Beſides, it is an abſolute falſhood to aſſert that he oppoſed the League againſt the Turks; ſo far from it he made a ſpeech, which is ſtill extant, to excite the Princes of the Empire to unite together againſt thoſe infidels. The only oppoſition he made was, to the tenths which the Pope intended to raiſe on that occaſion, he fearing they would be employed in other uſes (7).

(7) Ibid. pag. 253, 254.

[H] He performed a very generous action with regard to his family.] Being the eldeſt ſon, and ſucceeding to the whole eſtate of his father and mother by their death, he gave it up all to his brothers; and even, to prevent their being involved in the misfortunes and diſgraces which he expected, by the ſuſpicions that might be entertained againſt them, he conjured them not to remit him any money, nor to hold the leaſt correſpondence with him. It was now that he devoted himſelf wholly to the Lutheran party, to advance which he laboured inceſſantly and with indefatigable zeal, both by his writings and actions (8).

(8) Ibid. pag. 254, 255.

[I] He went to Mildehauſen and died &c.] He concealed himſelf for ſome time in the monaſtery of the Auſtin Friars at Mildehauſen; but being diſcovered, he fled by night to Zurich, where, as he probably did not think himſelf more ſecure, he ſecluded himſelf in an iſland of the neighbouring lake, called Uffnort, and there died.

[K] It is probable that he fell a victim to the foul diſeaſe.] We don't find that he was married, and yet it appears, by his Letters mentioned above (9), that he could not live without a woman. Hence we may preſume that he uſed to go abroad in queſt of pleaſures which he had not at home; and that he even was not very cautious in the choice of thoſe women he frequented, ſince as early as 1518 he had got the infamous diſtemper, of which Geſner declares he died; as appears by his letter to Pirckheymer, dated

(9) Remark [E] citation (5) above.

(a) See Bayle's article of ULRIC DE HUTTEN, citation (b).

orders [L]. The date of the impreſſion of one of his books, ſhews an error of Melchior Adam, and of Bayle after him [M]. Hutten had a conſiderable ſhare in the famous book intitled, Epiſtolæ obſcurorum virorum [N]. We ſhall here relate the particulars of the murther of John de Hutten, couſin to our Ulric [O] (a). We will likewiſe the abovmentioned year, and by the dedication of his book, De Ligni Guaiaci in Morbi Gallici curatione viribus, i. e. "Of curing the Pox by Guaiacum wood", where he obſerves, that having been grievouſly afflicted with the diſtemper which is the ſubject of his book, he recovered his health wholly by the uſe of this remedy (10).

(10) Niceron, Hommes Illuſtres, vol. 15. pag. 257, 258.

[L] Some think very juſtly that he was never in holy orders.] Varillas declared he was, from an inference which he drew (11); but it ſeems to be altogether falſe, for Hutten could not have taken holy orders except in Fulde, which he yet did not, ſince he was placed in that Abbey to ſtudy, and not to be made a Monk, Diſciplinæ magis quam religionis cauſa, ſays Joachim Camerarius (12); ſince he did not make any vow there; and ſince although the Abbot of this monaſtery would have perſuaded Hutten to ſtay with him, he yet muſt have left his cloyſter at about fifteen or ſixteen years of age, when he was not old enough to be admitted into holy orders. Not to mention that this particular is ſpoken of by no author except Varillas (13).

(11) See remark [K], towards the end, of Bayle's article of HUTTEN.

(12) In Vita Melanchth. pag. 93.

(13) Niceron, Hommes illuſtres, vol. 15. pag. 258, 259.

[M] Melchior Adam and Bayle have committed an error.] Theſe ſay that the firſt book Hutten publiſhed was his Vir bonus in 1513, and conſequently that he was twenty five years of age before he ſet up for an author (14). But this is a miſtake, Hutten having publiſhed a treatiſe on the art of verſification two years before; Ars verſificandi, Wittembergæ 1511 in 4to; ſo that he began to appear publickly as an author at twenty three years of age. This piece has borne a great many impreſſions.

(14) See the text of Bayle's article of HUTTEN, after the letter [A] See alſo the remark [A].

[N] Hutten had a conſiderable ſhare in the Epiſtolæ obſcurorum virorum.] Theſe Letters were written on occaſion of the Controverſies which Reuchlin had with the Divines of Colen, occaſioned by one Pfefferkorn a converted Jew, who, upon pretence that the books which the Jews had relating to their Religion kept them from turning Chriſtians, obtained an edict from the Emperor, by which they were all ordered to be burnt. In theſe Epiſtles the ignorance and preſumption of the Friars and Divines who lived in thoſe barbarous times, are painted in the moſt natural colours. Moſt of them are addreſſed to Ortuinus Gratius, becauſe he had wrote an apology for the Divines of Colen in oppoſition to Reuchlin. It is a whimſical Satyr on the barbarous ſtyle of the Scholaſtic Divines, which is there imitated, but very much heightened, to make it ſtill more ridiculous. The peruſal of this work is ſaid to have had a ſurprizing effect on Eraſmus (15). Ortuinus Gratius having been chiefly attacked in thoſe letters, he thought it not adviſeable to let them go unanſwered; and therefore he publiſhed the following piece; Lamentationes obſcurorum virorum, non prohibitæ per ſedem Apoſtolicam. Coloniæ 1518, in 8vo. This volume contains alſo, beſides the brief of Pope Leo X againſt the Epiſtolæ obſcurorum virorum, and Eraſmus's letter to John Cæſarius; the following piece; Epiſtola apologetica Ortuini Gratii, ob primam à parvulo educationem Daventrienſis cognominati, Agrippinenſis quoque Academiæ Philoſophi, Chriſtique Sacerdotis, ad obſcuram Reuchliniſtarum cohortem, citra bonorum indignationem miſſa. The other authors of theſe Epiſtles, beſides Hutten, are ſaid to be Reuchlin, Herman de Neuwenar, &c. Hutten ſeems to own himſelf one of the authors of them, ſince he ſpeaks, in his letter to Pirckheymer, of the Lamentationes publiſhed againſt the Epiſtolæ obſcurorum virorum, as of a work written againſt him. We do not know exactly the time when thoſe Epiſtles firſt appeared in print, the year not being ſet down in the firſt edition; but it is certain that they muſt have been printed before the year 1517, ſince there is extant a brief of Pope Leo X, dated from Rome the 15th of March of that year, which forbids the reading or keeping them upon pain of excommunication. This is one reaſon; but a ſtronger is, that the ſecond edition of them was printed in 1516. The two parts which compoſe this work were publiſhed at different times. The firſt part appear'd under the following title: Epiſtolæ obſcurorum virorum ad Magiſtrum Ortuinum Gratium Daventrienſem, Coloniæ Latinas Literas profitentem. At the end of the book are the following words: In Venetia impreſſum in impreſſoria Aldi Manutii, anno quo ſupra. Etiam caviſatum eſt, ut in aliis, ne quis audeat poſt nos impreſſare per decennium, per illuſtriſſimum Principem Venetiarum: all this may probably be fictitious, and the book may have been printed in Germany. Beſides, there is no date, as is pretended in the laſt mentioned Latin words, and to which the reader is referred. The ſecond part which appeared afterwards, has the title above, together with theſe words: Non illæ quidem veteres & prius viſæ; ſed & novæ & illis prioribus elegantia, argutiis, lepore ac venuſtate longè ſuperiores. At the end are the following words; Quinta Luna obſcuros viros edidit. Lector ſolve nodum, & ridebis amplius. Impreſſum Romanæ curiæ. This firſt edition is in 4to. There have been many editions of this work: Editio ſecunda cum multis aliis Epiſtolis annexis, quæ in prima impreſſura non habentur. Venetiis (that is probably in Germany) 1516, 4to. It. Cum dialogo mire feſtivo, 1556, in 8vo. It. Cum variis additionibus ejuſdem argumenti. Francofurti 1581 and 1643, in 8°. But the moſt beautitul edition is that of London 1701, in 8°. It is ſurprizing that notes have not been added to it, ſince they are ſo very much wanted (16).

(15) See the remark [Z] of the article ERASMUS.

(16) Niceron's Hommes Illuſtres, tom. 15. pag. 271, & ſeq. and tom. 25. pag. 141.

[O] We ſhall here give the particulars of the murther of John de Hutten.] Lewis de Hutten, father of this John, was very intimate with Ulric Duke of Wirtemberg; and relying on the friendſhip which that Prince had for him, he intruſted him with John de Hutten, one of his four ſons, to be as his companion. The young man behaved exceedingly well, and won the Duke's friendſhip, inſomuch that he truſted him with the moſt important ſecrets, and revealed all his deſigns to him. Some time after John married the daughter of a General of that Duke's cavalry; when Lewis de Hutten, his father, being deſirous of ſettling the affairs of his family, ordered his ſon to come to him: and as the Duke could not refuſe to permit him, he told him that he muſt confer with him on certain matters before he went away, and for that purpoſe took him into the country, upon pretence that they ſhould be leſs interrupted there. But now the Duke carrying him into the foreſt of Beblingburg, he fell upon Hutten and killed him, and probably had cauſed ruffians to lie in wait for him. Be this as it will, Hutten's body was found, wounded mortally in ſeven places. This murther made a great noiſe, and the occaſion of it was long unknown; but at laſt Ulric de Hutten diſcovered the whole affair, firmly reſolved to do this, becauſe the Duke had afterwards ſaid, in juſtification of this cruel action, that John de Hutten was a perjured wretch; that he deſerved death, and conſequently that he had juſtly puniſhed him. Here follows what we are told concerning this matter. The Duke of Wirtemberg was fallen diſtractedly in love with John de Hutten's wife, and by the aſſiduity and warmth of his addreſſes, had at laſt diſpoſed her to grant what he ſo ardently wiſhed for. The only affair now was, to get an opportunity of meeting together privately, which was the more difficult, becauſe the huſband, knowing the Duke's deſigns, kept a very watchful eye over his wife. But theſe obſtacles, ſo far from extinguiſhing the Duke's flame, only heightened it the more, and prompted him to behave in a moſt extraordinary manner. He threw himſelf at John de Hutten's feet; and, with tears in his eyes, begged that he would permit him to love his wife. The huſband, in extreme ſurprize, conjured the Duke not to requeſt ſo ignominious a favour, nor to do an action ſo unworthy a man of his rank. Nevertheleſs fearing, as it really happened, that the paſſion which this Prince had for his wife would make him incur his hatred, he informed his friends of the dilemma he was in, wrote to his father about it, and uſed all the arts poſſible to diſengage himſelf from the Duke's ſervice, who likewiſe give an account of ſome of Hutten's works [P] (b).

(b) All theſe particulars are extracted from Ulric de Hutten's Life, written by James Burchard, and publiſhed at Wolfenbuttel in the year 1717, in 12mo, and from tom. 15. of Niceron's Hommes Illuſtres.

who had juſt before offered him a conſiderable employment in their neighbourhood. Hutten's relations did not yet know that the Duke had ingratiated himſelf into the wife's favour: notwithſtanding which they were determined to get him out of the Duke's hands, but unhappily they delayed their reſolution too long; for the Duke whoſe flame raged daily with greater violence was reſolved not to let Hutten go, as this would have defeated all his hopes, and yet was determined to get rid of an Argus; which was the motive that prompted him to commit the murther abovementioned. The Duke, after John de Hutten's death, was indulged in all his criminal wiſhes by the widow, whom he made his concubine (*).

(*) See the laſt paragraph of Bayle's text of the article ULRIC DE HUTTEN.

Our Ulric de Hutten, at the time of this murther, was at the Baths of Ems in Germany, and not in Italy as Bayle aſſerts (17). It was thither that the news was ſent him of it by Marquard de Hatsſteyn, Canon of Mentz, a relation of his. The five orations which our Ulric de Hutten wrote againſt the Duke of Wirtemberg were compoſed at different times. The three firſt a little after John de Hutten's death, the fourth ſeventeen months after, and the fifth in 1519, after that the Princes who had made a league againſt the Duke in queſtion had driven him out of his country (18). The ſtyle of all thoſe orations is energetic; the author did not ſpare invectives, and has employed many odious expreſſions with the utmoſt ſtrength and fire; the whole ſpeaks a man who is exaſperated at the affront he has received, and which it is not in his power to revenge (19).

(17) See his text of the article ULRIC DE HUTTEN, before the letter [B].

(18) All this clears up the doubts that Mr. Bayle entertained with regard to the times in which theſe ſeveral Orations were written. See the remark [B] of his article ULRIC DE HUTTEN.

[P] We ſhall give an account of ſome of our Hutten's works.] Thoſe who deſire to ſee an ample catalogue of them may read Father Niceron's Hommes illuſtres (20). A ſingular circumſtance in Hutten's book De Guaiaci Medicina, & morbo Gallico liber, firſt printed in 1519, is, that although it is dedicated to Albert Elector of Mentz, a ſpiritual Prince, yet Hutten is not aſhamed to declare, that after having himſelf been long a martyr to the diſeaſe, he there treats of, the pox, he had been cured only by Guaiacum (21). In the two dialogues entitled Febris, Hutten feigns a diſcourſe between himſelf and the ſeaver with which he had been long tormented, and therefore intreats it to go and annoy thoſe, who may be in better circumſtances to maintain it. Hutten's ſervant is afterwards introduced, and joyns in the converſation. Theſe dialogues are very ingenious, and extremely ſatyrical, particularly againſt the Prelates and Monks, whom Hutten inveighs ſharply againſt in all his writings (22). The piece entitled Phalariſmus, one of the five ſatyrs written againſt the Duke of Wirtemberg (23), conſiſts of a dialogue, the interlocutors whereof are Charon, Mercury, the Tyrant, i. e. Duke Ulric, and Phalaris. The author feigns that the Duke, by permiſſion from Jupiter, goes down into Hell, in order to have an interview with Phalaris, and that meeting him in the infernal regions he receives the moſt horrid counſels from him, all which he promiſes to put in execution at his return to the earth (24). Beſides the two dialogues intitled Febris, Hutten wrote three more, all which were printed together in Mentz, in the year 1520, in 4to, with this title, Dialogi, Fortuna, Febris I, II, Trias Romana ſeu Vadiſcus, Inſpicientes. We have ſpoke of the ſecond and third of theſe dialogues juſt above. The firſt of them intitled Fortuna is very ingenious, as indeed all Hutten's are, which Thuanus declares are not inferior to thoſe of Lucian. The author therein ſuppoſes himſelf to be diſcourſing with fortune, concerning ſeveral things which had befallen him, and of the wiſhes he had formed in order to attain a happy life. The fourth dialogue intitled Trias Romana, (25) or Vadiſcus, is a ſtrong ſatyr againſt the Court of Rome. It is intitled, Vadiſcus, from the author's feigning that he was told all he related in that dialogue by one Vadiſcus, who, in his return from Rome, had paſſed by Mentz, where he had diſcourſed with him; and he intitled it Trias Romana, becauſe he always reduces every particular he advances to three points. Thus he begins as follows: Tria Urbis Romæ dignitatem tuentur, authoritas Pontificis, Reliquiæ Sanctorum, & Merx Indulgentiarum. i. e. "Three things keep up the au" thority of the City of Rome, the authority of the " Pontiff, the relics of Saints, and the trade of In-
" dulgences." The reader may judge by this ſpecimen of the ſtyle of the reſt of the piece. The fifth dialogue is intitled, Inſpicientes, from the two principal interlocutors in it, who are the Sun and Phaeton. Theſe diſcourſe together, and afterwards with the nuncio Cajetan, on the affairs of Germany, and the tranſactions there in 1618 (26). The letters mentioned by Bayle (27), wrote by the Univerſities of Paris, Oxford and Prague, were not, as ſome (28) have objected, forged by Hutten; but being found by him at Bopart, a caſtle on the Rhine in the Archbiſhopric of Triers, he publiſhed them in ſome time after. The ſubject of theſe ſix letters relates to the ſchiſm that was then in the church; and they were written by the three Univerſities abovementioned to one another, to the Romans, to Pope Urban, and to the Emperor Winceſlaus (29). Beſides Otho Brunfels the Phyſician, who defended Hutten againſt Eraſmus (30), another perſon wrote a piece in his favour intitled, De Eraſmi Spongia judicium Eraſmi Alberi, adeoque, quatenus illi conveniat cum M. Lutheri Doctrina. 8vo (31). It is to be obſerved that there was publiſhed at Frankfort in 1538, a collection of all Hutten's Latin Poetical pieces in one volume in 12mo (32). The ſeveral Libels, which Bayle (33) is in doubt, whether or no they were wrote by our Hutten, were in all probability compoſed by him. Thoſe who deſire a more particular account of them may read Father Niceron's Hommes Illuſtres.

(19) Niceron's Hommes Illuſtres, vol. 15. pag. 278, & ſeq.

(20) Tom. 15.

(21) Ibid. pag. 277.

(22) Ibid. pag. 277, 278.

(23) See Bayle's article of ULRIC DE HUTTEN, remark [B].

(24) Hommes Illuſtres, vol. 15. pag. 283.

(25) See remark [E] of Bayle's article of ULRIC DE HUTTEN.

(26) Niceron's Hommes Illuſtres, tom. 15. pag. 285, 286.

(27) Remark [M] citation (25) of his article of ULRIC DE HUTTEN.

(28) Conrad Geſner, who has been followed by Pallavicino, Boiſſart, &c.

(29) Niceron's Hommes Illuſtres, tom. 15. pag. 287, 288.

(30) See the end of the remark [I] of Bayle's article of ULRIC DE HUTTEN.

(31) Hommes Illuſtres, vol. 5. pag. 295.

(32) Ibid. pag. 299, 300.

(33) See the remark [E] of his article of ULRIC DE HUTTEN.

HUTTERUS (LEONARD) Profeſſor of Divinity at Wittemberg, was born in 1562 at Ulm, where his father was Miniſter. He was ſo well inſtructed in the Sciences, and made ſo great a progreſs in them, that Hutterus, when but three and thirty, was preferred to a Profeſſorſhip of Divinity in one of the moſt famous Univerſities (a). He diſcharged the ſeveral duties of his employment in ſuch a manner, as got him the character of a laborious man, and as extremely well qualified to teach others (b). He diſcovered an ardent zeal for Orthodoxy, being a moſt rigid Lutheran. This zeal appears in every part of his writings [A]; and if we reflect but ever ſo little on his aſſertions with (a) That of Wittemberg.

(b) Extracted from Spizelius in Templo Honoris reſerato, pag. 32, & ſeq.

[A] This zeal appears in every part of his writings.] See particularly his work intitled, Concordia concors, ſive de origine, & progreſſu formulæ Concordiæ Eccleſiarum Auguſtanæ confeſſionis liber unus, Rudolpho Hoſpiniano oppoſitus. It is in folio, and was printed at Wittemberg in 1614 (1). See alſo his Diſpute pro formula Concordiæ (2); his Collegium Theologicum de articulis confeſſionis Auguſtanæ, & libro Chriſtianæ concordiæ (3); his Irenicum vere Chriſtianum, ſive de Synodo & unione Evangelicorum non fucata concilianda Tractatus Theologicus; his Sadeel Elenchomenus, hoc eſt Tractatio pro majeſtate humanæ naturæ Chriſti. He wrote with great warmth againſt Popery. See his Diſputes de Sacrificio Romanenſium Miſſatico, ejuſque horrenda abominatione: de Tranſubſtantione & Proceſſionibus Pontificiis, pro aſſerendo integro Sacramento Cœnæ Dominicæ contra Jeſuitas. See likewiſe Refutatio duorum Librorum Rob. Bellarmini de Miſſa: Triumphus de regno Pontificio: Ilias malorum regni Pontificio-Romani, ſive Hiſtorica Diſſertatio injuſtiſſimo Pontificis Romani in Eccleſia Dei dominatu: Actio in Jacobum Gretſerum de Imperatorum, Regum, ac Principum Chriſtianorum in ſedem Apoſtolico-Romanam munificentia pro Nicolao Clemangis (4). I omit the title of ſeveral other of his works, both in German and Latin. His Calviniſta Aulico-Politicus, printed at Wittemberg in 1615, ſhall be cited in the following remark.

(1) See the remark [E] of the article HOSPINIAN.

(2) Printed at Wittemberg in 1605.

(3) Idem, 1610.

(4) Extracted from Spizelius, in Templo Honoris reſerato, pag. 37, 38.

with reſpect to the martyrs of the Geneva Confeſſion [B], it muſt be confeſſed that he ran into extremes. This turn of mind expoſed him to many vexatious diſputes, in which he was very much ſlandered [C]. He died in 1616. He muſt not be confounded with him who publiſhed a Polyglot Bible [D].

[B] His aſſertions with reſpect to the martyrs of the Geneva confeſſion.] The Elector of Brandenburg had alledged in his edict for toleration, among other particulars, the vexations and puniſhments which the common enemy had made the Calviniſts ſuffer; but to oppoſe this our Hutterus obſerved, that the Arians, the Anabaptiſts and Antitrinitarians might, in order to obtain toleration, make uſe of the like maxim. He aſſerted that the Calviniſts had not ſuffered death, for believing that the blood of Jeſus Chriſt would ſave them, but for refuſing to obey the Pope whom they called Antichriſt. Scripſerat quondam in Edicto Sereniſſimus Elector Brandeburgicus, non excludendos eſſe à Chriſtiana communione Reformatos, qui idem ſentiunt in fundamento fidei, in Evangelio cum Lutheranis laborant, certant, luctantur, eoque nomine à communi hoſte innumeros cruciatus ſuſtinuerunt, ſuſtinentque quique etiam ſanguinem pro confeſſione illa largiſſimè profuderunt. Cornua illi obvertere auſus Hutterus in Aulico-Politico cap. 2. pag. 176. &c. ubi regerit, à Papiſtis etiam Anabaptiſtas, Arianos, Antitrinitarios, alioſque ſupplicio affectos eſſe; cauſam ſupplicii noſtrorum non fuiſſe, quòd crediderint, ſe per Chriſtum ſervatum iri, ſed quòd Romanum Pontificem non agnoverint Paſtorem univerſalem, ſed Antichriſtum, ejuſque jugum detrectaverint ferre (5). The Swiſs divine, whoſe words I borrow on this occaſion, makes this judicious remark, viz. that this method of branding the martyrdom of the Calviniſts may be employed with equal ſucceſs againſt the Lutheran martyrs. He ſays that, after obſerving that a Divine of Straſburg employs the ſame cavil of Hutterus. Gemella his effutivit Dannenhawerus, Argentinenſis Theologus, Colleg. Decalog. p. 394, ubi Reformatorum Martyrium larvatum vocare, & cum Judæorum, Ethnicorum, Arianorum ſub Athalaricho Gothorum Principe religionis cauſa occiſorum Martyrio comparare non erubuit. Certè μωδοκία talis etiam Lutheranæ Eccleſiæ Martyrii veri palmas laudemque præcideret (6). i. e. "One Dannenhawerus a Straſburg "Divine, publiſhed two pieces, wherein he is not "aſhamed to call the martydom of the Reformed or "Calviniſts, maſked; and to compare it to the martyrdom of the Jews, Pagans, and Arians put to "death, for their religion, under the Gothic Monarch "Athalaric. It is certain that ſuch a deceitful conſtruction would likewiſe deprive the Lutheran Church "of the glory of true martyrdom." Can we enough admire the effects of a headſtrong temper or prepoſſeſſion? And is it not a deplorable circumſtance, that a Popiſh Miſſionary can object to Proteſtants, that the martyrdom of their brethren is looked upon, by ſome Lutheran Doctors, as a falſe martyrdom? See one of the remarks (7) of the article WESTPHALUS (Joachim). It is to be obſerved that Pappus calls thoſe calumniators, who accuſe the Lutherans of conſidering the Calviniſt martyrs as the martyrs of the Devil, Nullo modo eos habemus pro martyribus Diaboli; quemadmodum accuſamur (8).

(5) Heideggerus, Diſſert. Selectar. tom. 2. pag. 352.

(8) Heideggerus, ibid.

(7) The remark [H].

(8) Joh. Pappus, Epit. Hiſt. Eccleſ. pag. m. 49.

[C] His turn of mind expoſed him to many vexatious diſputes, in which he was very much ſlandered.] He is put in parallel, in his elogium, with the Prophets and Apoſtles who were perſecuted for the truth; and it is affirmed that he anſwered calumny only by ſilence and contempt. I ſhall not diſpute about theſe matters becauſe they are not enough known to me; but I ſhall ſay in general, that ſome Doctors are ſo very paſſionate, ſo moroſe, and allow ſo little toleration to others, that they create themſelves enemies, not becauſe they maintain orthodox principles, but becauſe of their rude way of maintaining them. Their adverſaries take their revenge of them by perſonal reproaches; they publiſh the moſt vexatious truths relating to them; prove them guilty of many ſhameful things, and bring them into ſuch a dilemma that they cannot juſtify themſelves. How do they act then? They make a great merit of their patience, and compare themſelves to the Prophets, the Apoſtles, and even to Chriſt himſelf. When, ſay theſe, perſecuted as they were for the truth, we do not open our mouths when the enemies of the truth revile us. Moliere ſhould introduce this in ſome ſcene of his Tartuffe; for it is to be particularly obſerved, that this ſort of people are never ſilent, when they have any ſlander to publiſh againſt their neighbour, or when they can alledge any thing plauſible for their juſtification. However this be, the panegyriſt of our Hutterus beſtows the following fine elogium on him. Sicuti verò ſummis quibuſque Viris non omnia omninò ex animi fluxêre ſententiâ, ſed cruces, calumniæ, & perſecutiones variæ illos exercuerunt, ita Hutterus certiſſimo hoc fidelium Dei ſervorum charactere neutiquam caruit, quippe quo ab omnipotente Deo, Prophetæ, Apoſtoli, & ſinceri Eccleſiæ Doctores olim ſunt ſignati... Idem prorſus noſtro fatum; quod æquo & patienti pertulit animo, magiſque de abſtergendis calumniis, ſuis anteceſſoribus impactis, quam famæ & exiſtimationis propriæ vindicatione fuit ſollicitus, haud ignorans, omnes injurias oblivione melius, quam commemoratione ſanari, & inimicorum calumnias contemptu potius quam lingua eſſe vindicandas (2). i. e. "But as all great men have not been "ſucceſsful in all their deſires, but have been exerciſed "by croſſes, calumnies and perſecutions; ſo Hutterus "was not, in any manner without the moſt evident "characteriſtic of the faithful ſervants of God, as "being that, with which the Prophets, Apoſtles, and "true Doctors of the Church were antiently ſealed by "the Almighty... This was entirely the fate of our "Doctor, to which he ſubmitted with an equal and "patient mind; he being more ſollicitous to blot out "the aſperſions caſt on his predeceſſors, than to vindicate his own fame and reputation, well knowing "that all injuries are treated better by being forgot "than remembered, and the calumnies of enemies are "to be reſented rather with contempt than the tongue."

(9) Spizelius, in Templo Honoris reſerato, pag. 35.

[D] He muſt not be confounded with him who publiſhed a Polyglot Bible.] His name was ELIAS HUTTERUS. He firſt publiſhed a Bible in four languages, in Hebrew, Greek, Latin and German, at Hamburg, in the year 1597: but afterwards added to it the Italian, French, Sclavonian and Saxon. His New Teſtament was printed in the year 1600 in twelve languages, viz. in Syriac, Hebrew, Greek, Latin, German, Bohemian, Italian, Spaniſh, French, Engliſh, Daniſh and Poliſh. He reduced into four the edition of 1603, viz. Hebrew, Greek, Latin and German. This Polyglot Bible is extremely ſcarce. There is a collection of letters with regard to the judgment of learned men concerning this work (10).

(10) Extracted from Hottinger, Bibliotb. Quadripartita, lib. 1. cap 2. pag. 141, 142.

HUYBERT (PETER DE) Lord of Burg, Krayeſtein &c. gained very great reputation by the conſiderable ſervices he did to the Republic of the United Provinces in the Low-Countries, and particularly to the Province of Zealand. His family is very ancient, and has produced ſeveral eminent perſons [A]. He was born at Middleburg Auguſt

[A] His family is very antient, and has produced ſeveral eminent perſons.] He was deſcended from CORNELIUS DE HUYBERT, and Jean Van Haemſtede. The family of Haemſtede was deſcended from Witte (of Holland) Lord of Haemſtede, natural ſon of Floris V, Count of Holland and Zealand, Lord of Frieſland, &c. by a daughter of the Lord of Heuſden (*). This maiden had been kind to Floris only becauſe he had promiſed to marry her. JACOB and HERMAN DE HUYBERT Cornelius's ſons commanded the fleet, which conducted the Archduke Philip and the Queen his conſort into Spain in the year 1506. Theſe two illuſtrious perſons were on board the ſhip commanded by theſe two brothers. The Fleet, which was very large,

(*) John the 7th.

Auguſt the 1ſt 1622, and was choſen one of the Counſellors (*) of that city March 24, 1646. He acquitted himſelf of that function with ſo much wiſdom and ability, that the Province of Zealand ſent him Deputy to the Aſſembly of the States General, and afterwards to the firſt Conferences (a) that were held between the King of Spain's Deputies and thoſe of the United Provinces, after a long and bloody war, which was glorioufly finiſhed at Munſter January the 30th 1648, having been continued during fourſcore years. He was ſent Embaſſador Extraordinary to the King of Sweden, to the King of Poland, and to the Elector of Brandenburg, during that famous war, in which the Swedes made themſelves maſters of Poland, and gained ſo many victories over the King of Denmark, that they forced him to yield them three noble Provinces beyond the Sond. In March 1659 he was choſen Secretary of State to the Province of Zealand, and in May following he was appointed Plenipotentiary for the treaty of peace which was concluded between Sweden and Denmark (b), through the mediation of France, England and the United Provinces, in the year 1660. His Principals were ſo well ſatisfied with the ability and integrity with which he had acquitted himſelf of thoſe great employments, that in March 1664 he was raiſed to the high poſt of Counſellor-Penſionary of Zealand. The commiſſion for that poſt charges the Penſionary, amongſt other things, to defend and aſſert at all times, and on all occaſions, the rights and preeminence of the State, and the Laws and Privileges of the country; which renders that poſt very dangerous and difficult; and yet he performed the functions of it during twenty three years and an half, with the approbation of all the world, and to the ſatisfaction of his Principals; who when they ſent him Deputy to the Council of State of the United Provinces, September the 27th 1687, declared expreſly in his commiſſion, that they were very well pleaſed with his long and faithful ſervices, and would always remember them with gratitude. We muſt not omit to obſerve that he was choſen Plenipotentiary for the United Provinces in the year 1665, for the treaty of Breda (c). He died at the Hague January the 7th 1697. It was obſerved of him, that he adhered conſtantly to the Religion eſtabliſhed by the Laws of the State. He was a ſtrenuous aſſertor of it on every occaſion, and would never ſuffer the leaſt alteration in it, either with regard to doctrine or to diſcipline (d). I ſhall mention his three ſons in the remark [B]. They had him interred in a chapel of the Church of Burg in Zealand, and cauſed an epitaph to be ingraved on his tomb (e). The reader will find it below [C].

(*) That is to ſay one of the Magiſtrates, not much unlike our Alderman.

(a) The Conferences held at Mechlin in the years 1652, and 1653.

(b) The King of Sweden had begun the war again, and had conquered all Denmark except the city of Copenhagen.

(c) This treaty which was concluded by the mediation of Sweden, put an end to the war between Charles II King of England and the United Provinces.

(d) Taken from Memoirs communicated to the Bookſeller.

(e) He had herſelf ordered this tomb to be made, and beſides that he contributed a great ſum of money towards repairing the church in which he lies buried, he had the direction of the building of that edifice, which is reckoned to be done with a good taſte for Architecture.

We

large, went through a great ſtorm in the Channel; ſeveral ſhips were caſt away in the Archduke's ſight, who yet would not ſuffer the fleet to put into any harbour of England, becauſe of ſome affairs which had happened between him and the King of England. But when the two brothers HUYBERT had repreſented to him the great danger they were in, and that it was abſolutely neceſſary to ſhelter themſelves in the harbour of Weymouth (†), he and his conſort ſubmitted to this advice, and abandoned themſelves to the prudence and conduct of the two brothers. It was on this occaſion the Archduke gave him this motto for his Coat of Arms, WAECKT HUYBERTS, that is to ſay, WATCH HUYBERTS. The Emperor Maximilian, and the Archduke Charles, in order to teſtify their gratitude for this great ſervice done to the King of Caſtile, ſon of the former and father of the latter, did on March 13, 1513, confer on the three bothers JOHN, Jacob, and Herman DE HUYBERT, and their deſcendants, the privilege of wearing a ſword, with leave to every one of them, to ſuffer their ſervants alſo to wear it, which in thoſe days was a very particular mark of honour and diſtinction. December 19, 1512, Margaret, Archduchеſs of Auſtria, then Governeſs of the Low-Countries, ſent John and Herman de Huybert to Henry VIII, King of England, for ſome negotiations which ſhe was pleaſed to truſt them with. The Emperor Charles V being at Zierickſee lodged at LIEVEN JACOBSON DE HUYBERT's houſe, who was then Burgomaſter of the city, and Dike-Grave (‡) of the land of Schowen. The three brothers ſettled in the ſame city of Zierickſee, and built each of them a houſe there, and theſe three houſes are ſtill the largeſt and moſt conſiderable buildings at Zierickſee (1).

Juan Chriſtoval Calvet de Eſtrella ſpeaks of this family with praiſe: y no poco nombrados, ſays he (2), eran los Huybertos de Cirixea per ſu valor y riqueza. i. e. "The Huyberts of Zierickſee were very famous for "their courage and riches."

The author of the ſupplement to the Abbot Urſperg's Chronicle, mentions the perſon who conducted the Archduke Philip into Spain; but the name he gives him differs from that which is given him in the Memoirs I have quoted. However it be, here follows what that author ſays. Carolus Quintus rediit in Hiſpanias, Johannes Cornelius nauta navigatione decem dierum ab Anglico littore vehit. Hic nauta regem Philippum illuſtriſſimi Auguſti patrem, ultima navigatione, in ſumma tempeſtate in Hiſpanias vexerat, & reginam Danorum una cum Principe Ultrajectino in Daniam vexerat. Vir dives & peritiſſimus rei nauticæ (3). i. e. "Charles "the Fifth returned into Spain. John Cornelius (α), "Captain of a man of war, conducted him thither in "ten days ſailing from the coaſt of England. This "ſame Captain had conducted King Philip, the moſt "illuſtrious Emperor's father, in his laſt voyage into "Spain, during which they met with a very great "ſtorm; he had alſo conducted the Queen of Denmark, with the Prince of Utrecht, into Denmark, "he was a rich man, and a very experienced mariner."

§ (α) John Cornelius.] I ſuppoſe the author of that Chronicle miſtook John for Jacob; and imagined that Corneliſz, which ſignifies Cornelius's Son, was one of this Huybert's Chriſtian names. Add. Rem.]

[B] I ſhall mention his three ſons.] The eldeſt is ANTHONY DE HUYBERT, Lord of Kreuningen, Counſellor in the High-Court of Juſtice. The ſecond is JOHN DE HUYBERT, Lord of Nootgauw. He entered into the army; and his conduct and courage raiſed him to the poſt of Lieutenant General of the horſe (4). The third, DAVID DE HUYBERT, has been Counſellor in the Council of Flanders, and is now one of the Directors of the Eaſt-India Company (5).

[C] His ſons . . . cauſed an Epitaph to be ingraved on his tomb, which the reader will find hereunder.] It contains a ſhort account of his life, and his character expreſſed in the moſt noble manner.

D. M.
Viri Nobiliſs. & Ampliſſimi
P E T R I. D E. H U Y B E R T.
DOMINI. DE. BURG. ET CRAYSTEIN.
antiqua. & multis. imaginibus. clara. familia.
Zeelandica. oriundi.
Natus. eſt. Middelburgi. propter. ingenii. præſtantiam.
oris. facundiam. &. induſtriam. ſingularem. invigilandi. bono. publico. in. Senatum. illius. urbis.
cum. vix. adoleviſſet. eſt. cooptatus. omnium. expectationi.

(†) Mr. Bayle ſays Weimuyon, which is either a miſtake of his, or an error of the preſs.

(‡) That is, Superintendant of the Moles.

(1) Taken from Memoirs communicated to the Bookſeller.

(2) In the Account of Don Philip Prince of Spain's Journey through the Low-Countries, in the year 1548, printed at Antwerp in the year 1552, in folio, pag. 263.

(3) Paralipomene, ad Abbat. Urſpergenſ. apud Anton. Mathæum, Veter. Ævi Analect. p. 249.

(4) His Britannic Majeſty (King William) raiſed him to that poſt after the peace of Ryſwick.

(5) Taken from the abovementioned Memoirs.

☞ We ſhall add a ſhort ſupplement to this article which has been communicated to us by that great man's grandſon PETER ANTHONY DE HUYBERT (*) Lord of Kreuningen, &c. This ſupplement is extracted from Luicius's Dutch Dictionary. When Peter de Huybert was ſent Deputy from the Province of Zealand to the Council of State of the United Provinces in the year 1687, it was for the remainder of his life, (which was a particular mark of diſtinction, and a proof of the great eſteem the Province of Zealand had for him) and indeed the States of that Province reſolved, that as a reward for the pains and labours he underwent a long while for the ſervice of his country, he ſhould enjoy all his life time the ſame ſalary, and be free from houſe-rent, as when he was Penſionary, and ſhould have the ſame privileges and immunities; and that it would be acceptable to the States, that he ſhould be preſent in their aſſemblies, whenever he happened to be in the Province during their meetings. He juſtly deſerved ſuch a reward, ſince he had acted the part of a true patriot, and boldly aſſiſted his country with his good advice in the moſt critical junctures [A], as

(*) He has been Secretary to the city of Amſterdam, and is now Droſſaart of Muyden, and Baljaw of Naarden and Groviland &c. N. B. a Droſſaart and a Baljaw is a kind of Governor, as we might ſay a Lord Lieutenant of a County, but with a greater power and for life.

pectationi. cum. ſatisfeciſſet. poſt. Pacem. Monaſterienſem. ad. conventum. Mechlinenſem. controverſiis. non. deciſis. inter. Hiſpanos. &. Batavos. componendis. dein. ad. Reges. Sueciæ. Poloniæ. Daniæ. &. Elect. Brandeb. miſſus. fuit. publice. graviſſimis. de. rebus. iiſque. confectis. ex. ſententia. Reip. redux. a. Præpot. Ordd. Zeeland. perſpecta. ejus. fide. &. prudentia. delectus. fuit. ut. iis. eſſet. a. ſecretis. poſt. advocatus. perpetuus. Reip. Zeeland. eſt. factus. ſummo. omnium. conſenſu. dehinc. ab. Unitis. Belgis. Ablegatus. fuit. ad. Pacificationem. Bredanam. tandem. ne. tantæ. prudentiæ. fructum. ſoli. caperent. Zelandi. paſſi. ſunt. eum. adſcribi. Conſilio. communi. Ordd. Sociatorum. ſeptem. populorum. ut. omnium. utilitatibus. ſerviret. ad. has. dignitates. illum. evexit. non. ambitio. populi. &. potentium. ſed. teſtata. cunctis. incredibilis. vigilantia. in. obeundis. ſtationis. ſuæ. muniis. ſumma. conſilii. præſentia. in. celeriter. inveniendis. quæ. tempora. Reip. exigebant. mira. dexteritas. in. efficiendis. quæ. in. rem. ſapienter. conſuluerat. ſingularis. ſagacitas. in. arduis. &. impeditiſſimis. negotiis. explicandis. &. ingens. robur. animi. in. iis. libere. oppugnandis. qui. recte. ſententia. de. Rep. cujus. ſæpe. auctor. fuit. adverſabantur. partes. nec. ſecit. nec. fovit. in. omni. varietate. rerum. &. Reip. viciſſitudinibus. ſtatum. &. dignitatem. ſuam. tenuit. illibatam. ſatur. vitæ. defletus. bonis. omnibus. &. valde. deſideratus. O. D. VII. Januar. An. Ch. CIↃ. IↃC. XCVII. ætat. LXXV. mœſtiſſimi. liberi. P. C.

" The Epitaph of that moſt noble and great man, " PETER DE HUYBERT, Lord of Burg and " Krayeſteyn, deſcended of an antient and very noble " family in Zealand. He was born at Middelburg; " and for his eminent genius, great eloquence, and " ſingular care in watching for the public good, he " was admitted a member of the City Council, when " he was hardly of age: and having fully anſwered " the expectations of his country, he was ſent, af- " ter the peace of Munſter, to the congreſs that was " held at Mechlin, to ſettle the differences that were " not yet determined, between the Spaniards and the " Dutch. He was afterwards ſent to the Kings of " Sweden, Poland, and Denmark, and to the Elector " of Brandenburg, upon very important affairs; which " having finiſhed to the ſatisfaction of the Common- " wealth, he was appointed by the States of Zealand " their Secretary, for they were fully perſuaded of his " faithfulneſs and wiſdom: ſome time after he was " unanimouſly choſen Counſellor-Penſionary; he was " afterwards ſent by the United Provinces to the " congreſs that was held at Breda for a treaty of " peace. Laſtly, that the Zealanders might not " alone reap the benefit of his great wiſdom, they " ſuffered him to be ſent a Deputy to the Council of " State of the ſeven United Provinces, that he might " be ſerviceable to all. He was not raiſed to theſe " high dignities by the people's fondneſs, nor by the " power of the great; but by his incredible care in " acquitting himſelf of the duties of his functions, of " which all were fully perſuaded; by his great pre- " ſence of mind in quickly adviſing what was neceſ- " ſary to be done for the public good in every cir- " cumſtance; by his wonderful ability in executing " what he had prudently adviſed; by his exquiſite " ſagacity in explaining the moſt difficult and intri- " cate affairs; and by his great courage and ſtrength " of mind in oppoſing thoſe who refuſed to follow " the good advices he had often firſt propoſed for " the welfare of the Commonwealth. He never " raiſed nor encouraged parties in the State, and in " all the changes and revolutions of the Common- " wealth, he always kept his dignity and character " without blemiſh. He died full of days, lamented " by all true patriots, and very much regretted, Ja- " nuary the 7th 1697. This epitaph his moſt mourn- " ful children made for their moſt beloved father."

[A] He boldly aſſiſted his country with his good advice in the moſt critical junctures.] We ſhall give two inſtances of it, as we find them in the Memoirs that have been communicated to us. The firſt is as follows: " In the year 1675 the States of Guelderland " offered the Prince of Orange (†) the ſovereignty of " their Provinces, with the title of Duke of Guelder- " land, and Earl of Zutphen, upon certain conditi- " ons. The Prince thought it proper to conſult the " other Provinces before he accepted that offer. He " wrote therefore to the States of Holland, and al- " moſt in the ſame words to thoſe of Zealand and " Utrecht; the latter adviſed the Prince immediately " to accept the offer of thoſe of Guelderland. The " Prince ſent about the ſame time a letter written " with his own hand to the Counſellor-Penſionary, " which is ſtill kept in Peter de Huybert's family. " This great man had always been of the Prince's " party, and had often endeavoured to perſuade the " Counſellor-Penſionary De Wit to yield ſome things " to the Prince, which could not have been denied " him without expoſing the State to the danger of be- " ing forced by the populace to yield him things of " much greater conſequence. But yet he was of " opinion that if they ſhould adviſe the Prince to " accept the Sovereignty offered him by thoſe of " Guelderland, it would be paving the way to make " him obtain the Sovereignty of Zealand alſo. " The Prince being acquainted with this opinion of " Peter Huybert, deſired him to call the States of " Zealand together, but not to give his own opinion " upon this affair, but to leave the members full li- " berty to give their votes. De Huybert convened " the States accordingly; but as the members were of " different opinions, they could not come ſo ſoon to a " final reſolution. At laſt, however, it was reſolved, four " votes againſt two, that the Prince ſhould be diſſuaded " from accepting the offer of the States of Guelderland; " and that notice ſhould be given him of this reſolu- " tion, in a letter containing the advices of the mem- " bers, with the arguments alledged to ſupport them: " the letter was written to him according to a model, " which the Counſellor-Penſionary had drawn up, at " the requeſt of the States. The Prince, who being " the firſt and only Nobleman in Zealand, had very " great credit there, ſhewed his diſcontent in a long " letter, wrote March the 18th in the ſame year; " after he had refuſed the offer of Guelderland, and " declared that he would not accept it, when he " knew how ſome of the chief cities of Holland had " expreſſed themſelves upon this affair." Here follows another inſtance of our Huybert's patriotiſm. " In the year 1684 there were great commotions in " Zealand about the levying of ſixteen thouſand " men: the Prince went thither to engage the Zeal- " anders to ſuffer it. Four of the ſix cities declared " for the raiſing of thoſe ſoldiers, and the Prince de- " ſired that the Counſellor-Penſionary ſhould declare " the reſolution of the States according to that maas we ſhall relate in the Remark below.

(†) William, afterwards King of England.

" But he proteſted that this was againſt his oath, " againſt his commiſſion, and againſt the union of " the cities *. Whereupon the Prince himſelf took the " votes, and the next day he delivered to the States a " writing drawn up by way of apology, in which " it was aſſerted, that the cities had agreed to deter- " mine this affair of raiſing ſoldiers, by a majority " of votes: and thus this affair ended. All the cities " kept ſilent, except Middelberg, which proteſted, " and ſoon after Zeirickſee diſapproved her Depu- " ties conduct in this affair. As Huybert by ſuch " behaviour gained a bad reputation at the Stadt- " holder's court, he was prevailed upon to reſign his " poſt of Counſellor-Penſionary in the year 1687; " but was fully rewarded for it, as we have ſeen in " the text of this ſupplement.

(*) Becauſe this was one of thoſe affairs which cannot be determined but by an unanimous conſent.

We ſhall obſerve here that there is now but one branch of the males of this family extant; namely, that of Anthony de Huybert, mentioned by Mr. Bayle: he died in the year 1702, leaving one ſon behind him, PETER ANTHONY DE HUYBERT ſtill living, who communicated this ſupplement to us; he has ſeveral ſons.

☞HUYGENS (CHRISTIAN) one of the greateſt Mathematicians and Aſtronomers of the ſeventeenth Century [A], was ſon of Conſtantine Huygens Lord of Zuylichem, who had ſerved three ſucceſſive Princes of Orange in the quality of Secretary. His mother's name was Suſannah van Baerle. He was born at the Hague in Holland April the 14th 1629. His inclination to the Mathematics appeared very early. His application to the Latin and Greek Languages did not prevent him from making a ſurprizing

[A] One of the greateſt Mathematicians and Aſtronomers of the ſeventeenth century.] This appears from his writings which are as follow. I. Theoremata de Quadraturâ Hyperboles, Ellipſis, & Circuli, ex dato portionum Gravitatis Centro. Quibus ſubjuncta eſt Ἐξέτασις Cyclometriæ Cl. V. Gregorii a S. Vincentio editæ anno 1647. Cum aſſertione hujus Ἐξετάσεως. Leyden 1651 in 4to. It is likewiſe inſerted among his Opera Varia, printed at Leyden 1724. This is the firſt work which our author publiſhed, and ſhewed what might be expected from him afterwards. II. De Circuli magnitudine inventa. Accedunt Problematum quorundam illuſtrium conſtructiones. Leyden 1654 in 4to. Reprinted in his Opera Varia p. 351. III. De Saturni Lunâ obſervatio nova. Hague 1656 in 4to. Reprinted in his Opera Varia p. 523. IV. Ad Cl. V. Franciſc. Xaverium Ainſcom S. J. Epiſtola, quâ diluuntur ea, quibus Ἐξέτασις Cyclometriæ Gregorii a S. Vincentio impugnata fuit. Hague 1656 in 4to. Reprinted in his Opera Varia p. 341. V. De Ratiociniis in Ludo Aleæ: publiſhed at the end of Francis Schooten's book, intitled, Exercitationum Mathematicarum Libri quinq; Leyden 1657 in 4to. Reprinted in his Opera Varia. Our author had written this in Low Dutch, and Schooten, who had been his Maſter in Mathematics, tranſlated it into Latin, in order to ſhew the uſefulneſs of Algebra. Huygens is the firſt, who treated of this ſubject, which has ſince been handled by Monſieur Sauveur, Bernoulli, and Montmort in a more exact manner. VI. Brevis Inſtitutio de uſu Horologiorum ad inveniendas Longitudines. He wrote this in Low Dutch, and it was printed in that Language in 1657. It is printed in Latin in his Opera Varia p. 193. VII. Horologium. Hague 1658 in 4to. Huygens had exhibited in the preceding work a model of a new invented Pendulum; but as ſome perſons envious of his reputation were deſirous to deprive him of the honour of the invention, he wrote this book to explain the conſtruction of it, and to ſhew, that it was very different from the Pendulum of Aſtronomers invented by Galileo, It is reprinted in his Opera Varia p. 1. VIII. Syſtema Saturnium, ſive de Cauſis mirandorum Saturni Phænomenon, & comite ejus Planetâ novo. Hague 1659 in 4to. Reprinted in his Opera Varia p. 553. Galileo had endeavoured to explain ſome of the ſurprizing Phænomena of the Planet Saturn. He had at firſt perceived two ſtars, which attended it; and ſome time after he was amazed to find them diſappear. Huygens being very deſirous to account for theſe changes, perfected the Teleſcopes, and made himſelf glaſſes, by which he might view objects at the greateſt diſtance. He applied himſelf then to obſerve all the Phaſes and Appearances of Saturn, and drew up a Journal of all the different aſpects of that Planet, which vary extremely. He diſcovered the two Satellites, which attend it, and after a long courſe of obſervations perceived that the Planet was ſurrounded with a ſolid and permanent ring, which never changes its ſituation, though Saturn turns upon its center in the ſpace of leſs than ſixteen days. He diſcovered alſo a third Satellite of Jupiter, which till then had eſcaped the obſervation of the Aſtronomers. This new ſyſtem gained him the eſteem of the moſt eminent perſons in that ſcience. IX. Syſtema Saturnium; cum aſſertione Syſtematis ſui. Hague 1659 in 4to. Reprinted in his Opera Varia p. 619. This tract is deſigned as an anſwer to a piece, which had attacked his ſyſtem under this title; Euſtachii de Divinis Septempedani in Syſtema Saturnium Chriſtiani Hugenii. Hague 1660 in 4to. X. Lettre du 5 Février 1665 ſur les Horloges à Pendule. Inſerted in the Journal des Sçavans for February the 23d 1665. XI. Lettre du 26 Février 1665 ſur le même ſujet. Inſerted in the ſame Journal for March the 16th 1665, and in Latin in his Opera Varia p. 213. XII. Relation d'une Obſervation faite dans la Bibliotheque du Roy à Paris le 12 May 1664 d'un Halo, ou Couronne à l'entour du Soleil, avec un diſcours de la cauſe de ces Meteores & de ceiles de Parelies. Paris 1667 in 4to. Our author read the diſcourſe, which accompanied this relation, in an aſſembly of learned men in the King's library at Paris. It is printed in Latin among his Opuſcula Poſthuma. XIII. Examen du Livre de M. Gregory, intitulé: Vera Circuli & Hyperboles Quadratura. Inſerted in the Journal des Sçavans of July the 2d 1668. Printed in Latin in his Opera Varia p. 463. XIV. Lettre à l'Auteur du Journal des Sçavans touchant la Réponſe que M. Gregory a faite a l'examen du Livre, intitulé: Vera Circuli & Hyperboles Quadratura. Inſerted in the Journal des Sçavans of November the 12th 1688, Printed in Latin in his Opera Varia p. 472. Our author in his Examen had aſſerted, that there were ſeveral miſtakes in the demonſtration, which Mr. James Gregory thought he had given of the impoſſibility of the Analytical Quadrature of the Circle; and Mr. Gregory publiſhed an anſwer to his exceptions in the Philoſophical Tranſactions. This engaged Mr. Huygens to write this letter, to which Mr. Gregory wrote a reply printed in the ſame Tranſactions. His book and his two replies are inſerted among the Opera Varia of our author. XV. Obſervation de Saturne fait à la Bibliotheque du Roy. Inſerted in the Journal des Sçavans of February the 11th 1669. Printed in Latin in his Opera Varia p. 637. XVI. Lettre ſur le mouvement, qui eſt produit par le rencontre des corps. Inſerted in the Journal des Sçavans of March the 18th 1699. Printed in Latin among his Opera Poſthuma. XVII. Lettre touchant la Lunette Catoptrique de M. Newton. Inſerted in the Journal des Sçavans for February the 29th 1672. Printed in Latin in his Opera Varia p. 757. XVIII. Lettre touchant les Phænomenes de l'eau purgée d'air. Inſerted in the ſame Journal for July 1672: and printed in Latin among his Opera Varia p. 769. XIX. Lettre touchant la Figure de la Planete de Saturne. Inſerted in the ſame Journal for December the 12th 1672, and printed in Latin among his Opera Varia p. 638. XX. Lettre touchant une nouvelle maniere de Barometre qu'il à inventée. Inſerted in the ſame Journal for the ſame day; and printed in Latin among his Opera Varia p. 276. XXI. Horologium Oſcillatorium; ſive de Motu Pendularum ad Horologia aptato, Demonſtrationes Geometricæ. Paris 1673 in folio, and reprinted among his Opera Varia p. 27. This book contains the five following ſurprizing progreſs at nine years of age in Muſic, Arithmetic, and Geography, in which he was inſtructed by his father. At thirteen years of age he was put upon the ſtudy of Mechanics, for which he appeared to have a peculiar genius. Two years after, viz. in 1644, he had the aſſiſtance of a maſter of Mathematics, under whom he made a vaſt proficiency in a ſhort ſpace of time. The year following he went to ſtudy Law in the Univerſity of Leyden under the learned Civilian Vinnius; but this ſtudy did not engage him ſo fully, but that he continued that of Mathematics under Profeſſor Schooten. He left this Univerſity at the end of one year, and went to Breda, where an Univerſity had juſt been erected, the direction of which had been given to his father. He ſtaid in that city in 1646 and the two following years. After his return to the Hague in 1649 he went to Holſtein and Denmark in the retinue of Henry Count of Naſſau; and was extremely deſirous of going to Sweden, in order to ſee Des Cartes; but the ſhort ſtay of the lowing diſcourſes; 1. Deſcriptio Horologii Oſcillatorii. 2. De Deſcenſu gravium, & motu eorum in Cycloide. 3. De Evolutione & Dimenſione Linearum Curvarum. 4. De Centro Oſcillationis ſeu Agitationis. 5. Horologii ſecundi conſtructio, & Theoremata de vi centrifugâ. XXII. Lettre touchant une nouvelle Invention d'Horloges très-juſtes & très portatives. Inſerted in the Journal des Sçavans for Auguſt the 15th 1678, and printed in Latin among his Opera Varia p. 764. XXIV. Nouvelle Invention d'un Niveau à Lunette, qui porte la preuve avec ſoi, & que l'on verifie & rectifie d'un ſeul Endroit. Inſerted in the ſame Journal for January the 29th 1680, and printed among his Opera Varia p. 254. XXV. Demonſtration de la juſteſſe de ce Niveau. Inſerted in the ſame Journal of February the 26th 1680, and printed in Latin among his Opera Varia p. 258. XXVI. Réponſe à une Remarque faite par M. l'Abbé de Catelan contre ſa propoſition 4e. du Traité des Centres du Balancement. Inſerted in the ſame Journal for June the 29th, 1682, and printed in Latin among his Opera Varia, p. 222. The Abbé de Catelan's remark, which gave occaſion to this anſwer, was publiſhed in the firſt Journal of the ſame year. The Abbé replied to Mr. Huygens in two pieces, one inſerted in the Journal of July the 20th following, and the other in that of September the 14th: and in that of Sept. 7th, the ſame year he publiſhed Objection contre le mouvement Cycloide des Pendules. Several learned Mathematicians intereſted themſelves in this diſpute; and Mr. Bernoulli of Baſil ſeeing that Mr. Huygens had made no reply to the Abbé de Catelan, publiſhed one for him in a letter inſerted in the Journal of April the 24th 1684. XXVII. Réponſe à la Replique de M. l'Abbé Catelan touchant les Centres d'agitation. Inſerted in the Journal des Sçavans of July the 3d 1684, and printed in Latin among his Opera Varia p. 231. It does not appear that the Abbé de Catelan replied to Mr. Huygens; but he anſwered Mr. Bernoulli in a piece inſerted in the Journal of September the 11th 1684. Mr. Bernoulli was not ſilent, but publiſhed a reply in the Acta Eruditorum of Leipſic for the year 1686, p. 356. Six years after this the Marquis de l'Hoſpital having ſeen this piece of Mr. Bernoulli, wrote to Mr. Huygens upon that ſubject. His letter is publiſhed in the Hiſtoire des Ouvrages des Sçavans for June 1690, p. 440. XXVIII. Remarques de M. Huygens ſur la Lettre de M. le Marquis de l'Hoſpital & ſur l'Ecrit de M. Bernoulli. Inſerted in the ſame work, p. 449; and printed in Latin among his Opera Varia, p. 246. Theſe are all the pieces which have been publiſhed upon this diſpute. They are all printed in Latin among Mr. Huygens's Opera Varia. XXIX. Solution du Problême proposé par M. de Leibnits: Trouver une Signe de Deſcente, dans laquelle le Corps peſant deſcende uniformement, & approche également de l'Horiſon en tems égaux. Publiſhed in the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres of October 1687, p. 1110, and printed in Latin among his Opera Varia, p. 290. XXX. Aſtroſcopia compendiaria, Tubi Optici molimine liberata. Hague 1684 in 4to. Reprinted among his Opera Varia p. 261. XXXI. Traité de la Lumiere, où ſont expliquees les Cauſes de ce qui arrive dans la Reflexion & dans la Refraction, & particulierement dans l'étrange Réfraction du Criſtal d'Iſlande, avec un Diſcours de la Cauſe de la Peſanteur. Leyden 1690 in 4to, and printed in Latin among his Opera reliqua, Tom. I. p. 1. XXXII. Lettre touchant le Cycle Harmonique. Inſerted in the Hiſtoire des Ouvrages des Savans of October 1691, p. 78, and reprinted in Latin among his Opera Varia p. 745. XXXIII. Solutio Problematis de Lineâ Catenariâ; publiſhed in the Acta Eruditorum for the year 1691, p. 281, and reprinted among his Opera Varia p. 292. XXXIV. Conſtruction d'un Problême de Geometrie: Trouver une Ligne égale à une partie donnée de la Ligne Logarithmique; publiſhed in the Hiſtoire des Ouvrages des Savans for February 1693, p. 244; and printed in Latin among his Opera Varia, p. 507. XXXV. De Problemate Bernoulliano in Actis Lipſienſibus anni 1693. propoſito. Publiſhed in the Acta Eruditorum of the ſame year, p. 475, and reprinted among his Opera Varia, p. 516. XXXVI. Conſtructio Univerſalis Problematis à Joanne Bernoullio propoſita. Publiſhed in the Acta Eruditorum of the year 1694, p. 338, and reprinted among his Opera Varia p. 518. XXXVII. Epiſtola ad G. G. Leibnitium, upon the ſame ſubject; inſerted in the ſame place. XXXVIII. Remarque ſur le Livre de la Manœuvre des Vaiſſeaux de M. Renau. Inſerted in the Bibliotheque Univerſelle, Tom. 25, p. 195, and in the Journal des Sçavans for May the 9th 1695, and printed in Latin among his Opera Varia p. 292. Mr. Renau having anſwered this remark in the Journal of the 16th and 23d of May 1695, Mr. Huygens publiſhed, XXXIX, Replique à la Réponſe de M. Renau; inſerted in the Hiſtoire des Ouvrages des Sçavans for April 1694, p. 355, and reprinted in Latin among his Opera Varia p. 305. XL. ΚΟΣΜΟΘΕΩΡΟΣ, ſive de Terris Cœleſtibus eorumque ornatu conjecturæ, ad Conſtantinum Fratrem, Gulielmo III. Magnæ Britanniæ Regi a Secretis. Hague 1698 in 4to, and reprinted among his Opera Varia p. 641, and tranſlated into French under the title of Nouveau Traité de la Pluralité des Mondes par feu M. Huygens, traduit du Latin en François par M. D. Paris 1702 in 12mo. The tranſlator of this book is Monſieur du Four, who has prefixed to it a very learned and ingenious preface. The Journaliſts of Trevoux had no reaſon to doubt whether this work was Mr. Huygens's; ſince it is inconteſtably his, and he had even printed the firſt ſheet during his life, but was prevented by death from proceeding any further. He endeavours to ſhew in it, that it is probable, that the Planets are inhabited. XLI. In the collection publiſhed under the title of Divers Ouvrages de Mathematique & de Phyſique par Meſſieurs de l'Academie Royale des Sciences, printed at Paris 1693 in fol. there are ſome pieces of our author, which have been reprinted among his Opera Varia. XLII. Opuſcula Poſthuma, quæ continent Dioptricam, Commentarios de Vitris figurandis, Diſſertationem de Coronâ & Parheliis, Tractatum de Motu & de Vi centrifugâ, Deſcriptionem Automati Planetarii. Leyden 1703 in 4to. Mr. Huygens had left by will to the Univerſity of Leyden his Mathematical writings, and requeſted Meſſieurs de Volder and Fullenius, the former of whom was Profeſſor of Philoſophy and Mathematics at Leyden, and the other at Franeker, to examine theſe works, and publiſh what they ſhould think proper. This is what they have done in this volume. Mr. Huygens had written in Low Dutch the ſecond of the tracts, which it contains, and which relates to the art of forming and poliſhing Teleſcope-glaſſes, to which he had greatly applied himſelf; but Dr. Boerhaave, Profeſſor of Phyſic at Leyden, had taken the pains to tranſlate it into Latin. XLIII. Opera Varia. Leyden 1724 in 4to. This collection, which contains the greateſt part of the pieces, which Mr. Huygens had publiſhed ſeparately, is divided into four parts; the firſt of which contains the pieces relating the Count in Denmark would not permit him. He travelled into France in 1655, and took the degree of Doctor of Law at Angers. He returned to that Kingdom in 1660, and from thence paſſed over to England the year following. He took a third journey to France in 1663. His merit became ſo conſpicuous in that Kingdom, that Monſieur Colbert reſolved to fix him at Paris by ſettling a conſiderable penſion upon him. Mr. Huygens conſented to it, and reſided at Paris from 1666 to 1681. But his health, which had obliged him in 1670 and 1675 to viſit his native air, at laſt forced him to leave France intirely, and return to Holland. He died at the Hague June the 8th 1695, aged ſixty ſix years. He had been choſen a Fellow of the Royal Society at London in 1663, and a Member of the Royal Academy of Sciences at Paris during his reſidence in that city. His whole life was ſpent in curious and uſeful reſearches. He loved a quiet and ſtudious manner of life. He frequently retired into the country, in order to prevent interruption; but he did not at all contract that ſour and moroſe temper and behaviour, which are commonly the effects of ſolitude and retirement (a).

(a) See his Life prefixed to his Opera Varia, and Baſnage de Bauval's Hiſt. des Ouvrages des Savans, tom. 11. Août, 1695, Art. 9. 2d edit. 1698.

lating to Mechanics; the ſecond, thoſe relating to Geometry; the third, thoſe relating to Aſtronomy; and the fourth, thoſe, which could not be ranged under any of theſe titles. Mr. Graveſande had the care of this edition, in which he has inſerted ſeveral additions to the pieces contained in it, collected from our author's manuſcripts. The pieces, which were originally in French or Low Dutch, were tranſlated into Latin by John Ooſterdyk Schacht, ſon of a Profeſſor of Phyſic at Leyden. XLIV. Opera Reliqua. Amſterdam 1728 in 4to, two Tomes. This new collection was publiſhed alſo by Mr. Graveſande. The firſt Tome contains the Treatiſes of Light and Gravity, which the Bookſellers procured to be tranſlated into Latin; but that tranſlation not being exact, it was carefully reviſed by the tranſlator of the other works of Mr. Huygens. The ſecond Tome contains his Poſthumous Works, which had been publiſhed in 1703, but with ſome corrections and additions. XLV. In the Philoſophical Tranſactions we have the following pieces of his. 1. An Obſervation of Saturn the 17th of Auguſt 1668. Numb. 45, p. 900. 2. A Summary Account of the Laws of Motion: Numb. 46. p, 925. 3. Inſtructions concerning the uſe of Pendulum Watches for finding the Longitude at Sea, together with a Method of a Journal for ſuch Watches: Numb. 47. p. 937. 4. Obſervation of an Halo or Circle about the Sun at Paris May the 12th 1667, together with a Diſcourſe concerning the Cauſe of theſe Meteors; as alſo that of Parhelia or Mock-Suns: Numb. 60. p. 1065. 5. Some Communications confirming the preſent appearance of the Ring about Saturn; by Huygens and Hooke: Numb. 65. p. 2093. 6. Concerning the Obſervation of Saturn ſhortly to be without the Anſæ or Arms: Numb. 78. p. 3026. 7. An Attempt to render the Cauſe of that odd Phænomenon of the Quickſilver's remaining ſuſpended far above the uſual Height in the Torricellian Experiment: Numb. 86. p. 5027. 8. Some Letters exchanged between Monſieur Sluſius and Huygens about a conſiderable Optic Problem of Alhazen: Numb. 97. p. 6119. 9. A Continuation of the Optic Problem of Alhazen: Numb. 98. p. 6140. 10. Thoughts concerning Mr. Hooke's Obſervations for proving the Motion of the Earth, mentioned Numb. 101: Numb. 105. p. 89. 11. Concerning a new Invention of his of very exact and portative Watches: Numb. 112. p. 272. 12. Some Experiments made in the Air-pump upon Plants: together with a way of taking exhauſted Receivers away from off the ſaid Engine: by Huygens and Papin: Numb. 120. p. 477. 13. A Continuation of the Experiments made in the Air-pump by Huygens and Papin: Numb. 121. p. 492. XLVI. In the regiſter of the manuſcripts of the Royal Academy of Sciences at Paris there is a Manuſcript Treatiſe of the Load-ſtone, written by our author. XLVII. In the hands of William Jones Eſq; F. R. S. is an original letter of Mr. Huygens dated at the Hague Auguſt the 18th 1662, Concerning the Weight of the Air at a given Height, with a Rule to find that Height; and likewiſe the Weight of the Air at any place being given, to find the Height of that Place. XLVIII. In the Regiſter Books of the Royal Society there are a great many pieces of our author never yet publiſhed. T.

☞ HYDE (EDWARD), Earl of Clarendon, and Lord High Chancellor of England, was ſon of Henry Hyde of Pyrton in Wiltſhire [A], by Mary, daughter and heir of Edward Langford of Trobridge in the ſame county. He was born at Dinton near Hindon in Wiltſhire on the 16th of February 1608 (a). In Lent Term 1622 he became a ſtudent of Magdalen Hall in the Univerſity of Oxford (b). February the 14th 1625 he took the degree of Bachelor of Arts (c); but failing of a Fellowſhip of Exeter College, for which he ſtood (d), he removed to the Middle Temple, where he ſtudied the Laws for ſeveral years (e). In 1633 he was one of the chief managers of the Maſque preſented by the Gentlemen of the Inns of Court to their Majeſties at Whitehall on Candlemaſs Day [B]. In the Parliament, which began at Weſtminſter April the 10th 1640, he ſerved as Burgeſs for Wotton-Baſſet in Wiltſhire [C]. But that Parliament being ſoon after

(a) Lives of all the Lords Chancellors, Lords Keepers, and Lords Commiſſioners of the Great Seal of England. By an impartial Hand, vol. 1. in the Life of Edward Earl of Clarendon, pag. 1. edit. London 1708 in 8vo.
(b) Wood, Ath. Oxon vol. 2. col. 533. 2d edit. London 1721.
(c) Idem, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 231.
(d) Idem, Ath. Oxon. ubi ſupra.
(e) Idem, ibid. and Life of the Lord Chancellor Hyde, prefixed to A Collection of ſeveral valuable pieces of the Right Honourable Edward Earl of Clarendon, pag. 2. edit. London 1727 in 8vo.

(1) Life of the Lord Chancellor Hyde, pag. 1, 2. prefixed to A Collection of ſeveral Pieces of the Right Hon. Edward Earl of Clarendon, edit. London 1727 in 8vo.
(2) Ibid. But Mr. Wood, Ath. Ox. vol. 2. col. 532. and the author of The Lives of the Lords Chancellors, &c. in the Life of Edward Earl of Clarendon, vol. 1. pag. 1. aſſert, that Mr. Henry Hyde, was third ſon of Mr. Laurence Hyde.

[A] Son of Henry Hyde of Pyrton in Wiltſhire.] This Gentleman was deſcended of an antient family, originally of Cheſhire (1), and was ſecond (2) ſon of Laurence Hyde of Guſſage St. Michael in Dorſetſhire; whoſe fourth ſon was Sir Alexander Hyde of Saliſbury, father of Dr. Hyde Biſhop of Saliſbury; Sir Robert Hyde, Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas; Sir Henry Hyde, beheaded under Cromwell, and eight other ſons, all remarkable men, and raiſed by the Chancellor (3).

[B] In 1633 he was one of the chief managers of the Maſque preſented by the Gentlemen of the Inns of Court to their Majeſties at Whitehall on Candlemaſs Day.] Mr. Whitelocke tells us (4), that this Maſque was held "the "more ſeaſonable, becauſe it would manifeſt the "difference of their opinion from Mr. Prynne's new learn-"ing, and ſerve to confute his Hiſtriomaſtix againſt "Interludes." The managers choſen for the Middle Temple were Mr. Hyde and Mr. BulſtrodeWhitelocke; for the Inner Temple Sir Edward Herbert and Mr. Selden; for Lincolns-Inn Mr. Noy the Attorney General and Mr. Gerling; and for Grays-Inn Sir John Finch and another Gentleman.

[C] Served as Burgeſs for Wotton-Baſſet in Wiltſhire.] In this Parliament Mr. Hyde diſtinguiſhed himſelf upon the following occaſion. The King in a meſſage to the Houſe of Commons had acquainted them, that as he heard the ſhip-money was unwillingly ſubmitted to by the people, he would for the future releaſe it in ſuch a manner as the Parliament ſhould adviſe, if they would grant him twelve ſubſidies to be paid in three years. This occaſioned great debates that day and the next, when Mr. Hamden ſeeing the matter ripe for the queſtion, deſired it might be put, "whether the Houſe ſhould comply with the propo-"ſition made by the King, as it was contained in the "meſſage?" Hereupon Serjeant Glanville, the Speaker, (for the Houſe was then in a Committee) endeavoured in

(3) Life of the Lord Chancellor Hyde, ubi ſupra.
(4) Memorials of the Engliſh Affairs, pag. 19. edit. London 1732.

after diſſolved, he was choſen for Saltaſh in Cornwall in the long Parliament, which began November the 3d the ſame year. His abilities began now to be very much taken notice of, and he was employed in ſeveral Committees to examine into divers grievances [D]; but at laſt being diſſatisfied with the proceedings in the Parliament, he retired to his Majeſty, and was made Chancellor of the Exchequer, a Privy Counſellor, and Knight (f). The Parliament were ſo highly incenſed at Sir Edward's leaving them, that in a pathetical ſpeech to perſuade them to comply with the King, and ſo reconcile him to Parliaments for ever. No ſpeech ever united the inclinations of a popular Council more to the Speaker than this did; and if the queſtion had been preſently put, it was believed, that few would have oppoſed it. But after a ſhort ſilence, the other ſide recovering new courage, called again with ſome earneſtneſs, that Mr. Hamden's queſtion ſhould be put, which being like to meet with a concurrence, Mr. Hyde being very ſollicitous to keep things in ſome tolerable calmneſs, then ſtood up, and giving his reaſons for his diſlike to that queſtion, propoſed, "that to the end every man might freely "give his Yea or No, the queſtion might be put only "upon giving the King a ſupply; and if this was "carried, another might be put upon the manner and "proportion; if not, it would have the ſame effect "with the other propoſed by Mr. Hamden." This, after it had been ſome time oppoſed and diverted by other propoſitions, which were anſwered by Mr. Hyde, would, as it was generally believed, have been put and carried in the affirmative, though poſitively oppoſed by Herbert the Sollicitor General, if Sir H. Vane the Secretary had not ſtood up, and aſſured them as from his Majeſty, that if they ſhould paſs a vote for a ſupply, and not in the proportion propoſed in his Majeſty's meſſage, it would not be accepted by him; and therefore deſired, that the queſtion might be laid aſide. This being again urged by the Sollicitor General, and it being near five in the afternoon, it was readily conſented to, that the Houſe ſhould adjourn to the next morning, at which they were ſuddenly diſſolved; and within an hour after Mr. Hyde met Mr. St. John, who was ſeldom known to ſmile, but then had a moſt chearful aſpect, and obſerving Mr. Hyde melancholy, aſked him, What troubled him? who anſwered, "the "ſame, he believed, that troubled moſt good men, "that in a time of ſo much confuſion ſo wiſe a Par-"liament ſhould be ſo imprudently diſſolved." Mr. St. John replied ſomewhat warmly, "that all was "well; that things muſt grow worſe before they "would grow better; and that that Parliament would "never have done what was requiſite (5)."

(f) Lives of the Lords Chancellors, &c. pag. 38. and Wood, Ath. Oxon. col. 533.

(5) Hiſtory of the Rebellion, B 2.

[D] Employed in ſeveral Committees to examine into divers grievances.] Being appointed in April 1641, Chairman of the Committee which took into conſideration the ſtate of the court of York, of which the Earl of Strafford had been for ſome years Preſident; he reported the caſe to the houſe; upon which it was reſolved, that the commiſſions and inſtructions, whereby the Preſident and Council in the north exerciſed a juriſdiction, were illegal both in creation and execution; and that it was unprofitable to his Majeſty, and inconvenient and grievous to his ſubjects in theſe parts. Mr. Hyde being choſen hereupon to manage the conference with the Lords touching the ſame court, made a very eloquent ſpeech, which was printed in Ruſhworth's Collections (6). But though he was zealous for the redreſſing of the grievances of the nation, yet he was on the other hand as watchful for the ſecurity of the eſtabliſhed church; and a ſhort bill being brought in to take away the Biſhops vote in Parliament, and to leave them out of all commiſſions of the peace, or any thing that had relation to temporal affairs, he was very earneſt for throwing it out, and ſaid, "that from the "time that Parliaments begun, Biſhops had always "been a part of it. That if they were taken out, "there was no body left to repreſent the clergy; "which would introduce another piece of injuſtice, "which no other part of the Kingdom could com-"plain of, who being all repreſented in Parliament, "were bound to ſubmit to whatever was enacted "there, becauſe it was, upon the matter, with their "own conſent; whereas if the bill was carried, there "was no body left to repreſent the clergy, and yet "they muſt be bound by their determination." When he had done, the Lord Falkland, who always ſat next to him, which was ſo much obſerved, that if they came not in together, as they uſually did, every body left the place for him, who was abſent, ſtood up, and declared, that he was of another opinion; and that he never thought, that the conſtitution of the Kingdom would be violated by the paſſing that act; and that he had heard many of the Clergy proteſt, that they would not own themſelves repreſented by the Biſhops; but if that could be made appear, it was to be preſumed, that the Houſe of Peers, among whom they ſate and had their votes, would throw it out; and ſo facetiouſly anſwering ſome other particulars, he concluded for paſſing the act (7). Mr. Hyde was averſe to the ſevere proceedings againſt the Earl of Strafford; but though thoſe Lords and Commoners who were ſuppoſed to favour that Nobleman, were branded with the name of Straffordians and betrayers of their country, and a liſt of them was poſted up at the corner of the wall of Sir William Brouncker's houſe in the Old-Palace-Yard, Weſtminſter, yet ſuch was the prudence of Mr. Hyde in this affair, that he was not included amongſt them (8). When the Commons had drawn up a remonſtrance of all the grievances ſince the beginning of the King's reign, and Mr. Hamden moved for an order for the immediate printing of it, Mr. Hyde oppoſed that motion with ſo much vigour, that he was committed to the Tower, where continuing ſome days, he afterwards reſumed his place in the Houſe (9). The Commons having prepared a charge againſt the Lord Chief Baron Davenport, Baron Weſton, and Baron Trevor, Mr. Hyde was ſent up with the impeachment to the Lords, to whom he made an excellent ſpeech; which begins thus: "My Lords, There "cannot be a greater inſtance of a ſick and languiſh-"ing Commonwealth, than the buſineſs of this day. "Good God! how have the guilty theſe late years "been puniſhed, when the judges themſelves have "been ſuch delinquents! It is no marvel, that an ir-"regular, extravagant, arbitrary power, like a tor-"rent, hath broken in upon us, when our banks "and our bulwarks, the laws, were in the cuſtody of "ſuch perſons. Men, who had left their innocence, "could not preſerve their courage; nor could we look "that they, who had ſo viſibly undone us, them-"ſelves ſhould have the virtue or credit to reſcue us "from the oppreſſion of other men. It was ſaid by "one, who always ſpoke excellently, that the twelve "Judges were like the twelve lions under the throne of "Solomon; under the throne in obedience, but yet "lions. Your Lordſhips ſhall this day hear of ſix, "who (be they what they will elſe) were no lions; "who upon vulgar fear delivered up their precious "forts they were truſted with, almoſt without aſſault, "and in a tame eaſy trance of flattery and ſervitude, "loſt and forfeited (ſhamefully forfeited) that reputa-"tion, awe, and reverence, which the wiſdom, cou-"[illegible], and gravity of their venerable predeceſſors had "contracted and faſtened to the places they now hold, "and even rendered that ſtudy and profeſſion, which "in all ages hath been, and I hope, now ſhall be "of an honourable eſtimation, ſo contemptible and "vile, that had not this bleſſed day come, all men "would have had that quarrel to the law itſelf, which "Marius had to the Greek tongue, who thought it a "mockery to learn that language, the maſters where-"of lived in bondage under others. And I appeal "to theſe unhappy Gentlemen themſelves, with what "a ſtrange negligence, ſcorn, and indignation, the "faces of all men, even of the meaneſt, have been "directed towards them, ſince (to call it no worſe) "that fatal declenſion of their underſtanding in thoſe "judgments, of which they ſtand here charged before "your Lordſhips." He concludes thus: "If the ex-"cellent, envied conſtitution of this Kingdom hath "been of late diſtempered, your Lordſhips ſee the "cauſes. If the ſweet harmony between the King's "protection and the ſubjects obedience hath unluckily

(6) Vol. 1. Part 2.

(7) Hiſtory of the Rebellion, lib. 3.

(8) Lives of the Lord Chancellors, &c. pag. 19.

(9) Hiſtory of the Rebellion, B. 4.

that in their inſtructions to their General, the Earl of Eſſex, they excepted him, with a few others, from any grace or favour from them (g). In January 1643 he ſate as a member of the Parliament aſſembled at Oxford; and in November 1644 he was one of the King's Commiſſioners at the treaty of Uxbridge. Not long after this treaty, the King ſending the Prince of Wales into the Weſt to have the Superintendency of the affairs in thoſe parts, Sir Edward Hyde, and the Lords Capel, Hopton, and Colepepper were appointed to attend his Highneſs, and to be of his Council (b). Upon the declining of the King's cauſe, he, with the Lords Capel and Colepepper, ſailed from Pendennis Caſtle in Cornwall to Scilly, and thence to Jerſey, and afterwards in 1648 to France (i); where, after the death of King Charles I, he was ſworn of the Privy Council to Charles II. In November 1649, he and the Lord Cottington were ſent Embaſſadors extraordinary into Spain. In 1657 he was conſtituted Lord High Chancellor of England. Upon the death of Cromwell, and the diviſions in England, General Monk being ſuppoſed to have a favourable view to the King, his Majeſty's friends in England began to entertain ſome hopes of a change; and the year before the Reſtoration, the Lord Chancellor was indefatigable in writing letters, declarations, &c. to forward it [E], eſpecially during thoſe ſix months in which the King was abſent from Bruſſels. But while theſe things were agitating, the Duke of York falling in love with Mrs. Anne Hyde, the Lord Chancellor's eldeſt daughter, reſolved to marry her, which, with all imaginable ſecrecy both from the King and Chancellor, he performed [F]. Upon the Reſtoration the Chancellor reviſited his native country; and, as he had been the greateſt ſharer of his maſter's ſufferings, he had a ſhare proportionable of his glory. October the 27th 1660 he was choſen Chancellor of the Univerſity of Oxford, and ſoon after created Baron of Hindon in Wiltſhire, Viſcount Cornbury in Oxfordſhire, and Earl of Clarendon in Wiltſhire; and, on the death of Henry Lord Falkland, Lord Lieutenant of Oxfordſhire. In the Convention he made a ſpeech by the King's order, deſiring a bill of oblivion might be brought in, as the beſt method to engage his Majeſty to his ſubjects [G]. He took care likewiſe neither to load the King's prerogative, nor encroach upon the liberties of the people; and therefore would not ſet aſide the Petition of Right, nor endeavour to raiſe the Star-Chamber or High-Commiſſion Courts again, when it was in his power; nor did he attempt to repeal the bill for triennial Parliaments; though at the ſame time he took care to repeal all things extorted by the long Parliament from King Charles I, and to ſettle the militia affairs. But other acts relating to the prerogative he did not touch upon, as tonnage, poundage, ſhip-money, &c. And when he might have obtained two millions for the ſtanding revenue, he aſked but 1200000 l. per ann. which he thought would ſtill put the King upon neceſſity of having recourſe to his Parliaments (k). This juſt conduct is ſaid to be occaſioned by a domeſtic accident [H]. In 1662 he is ſaid to have oppoſed the propoſal for the King's marriage with the Infanta of Portugal [I], and the ſale of Dunkirk.

(g) Memorials of the Engliſh Affairs. By Bulſtrode Whitelocke Eſq; pag. 62. edit. London 1732.

(b) Lives of the Lords Chancellors, &c. pag. 46.

(i) Ibid. pag. 46-70.

(k) Life of the Lord Chancellor Hyde, pag. 28, 29.

" ly ſuffered interruption; if the royal juſtice and " honour of the beſt of Kings have been miſtaken " by his people; if the duty and affection of the " moſt faithful and loyal nation have been ſuſpected " by their gracious Sovereign; if by theſe miſrepre- " ſentations and theſe miſunderſtandings the King " and people have been robbed of the delight and " comfort of each other, and the bleſſed peace of this " Iſland been ſhaken and frightned into tumults and " commotions, into the poverty, though not into the " rage of war, as a people prepared for deſtruction and " deſolation; theſe are the men actively or paſſively, " by doing or not doing, have brought this upon us: " Miſera Servitus falſo Pax vocatur; ubi judicia deſi- " ciunt, incipit Bellum."

[E] Indefatigable in writing letters, declarations, &c. to forward it.] A great many of his letters [illegible] hat purpoſe are printed in the Appendix to Vita [illegible] is Barwick, S. P. T. printed at London, 1721, in 8vo.

[F] Which with all imaginable ſecrecy both from the King and Chancellor he performed.] It was done ſo ſecretly, that after the Reſtoration, when the Lady's pregnancy appeared, the Duke was attacked by ſeveral of his friends in private with ſo much vigour and reſentment, that he was brought under the ſtrongeſt temptations to diſown the obligation. But the King, though much ſurprized at the affair, very generouſly preſerved the honour of an excellent ſervant, who had not been at firſt privy to it, and aſſured him, that this accident ſhould not leſſen the eſteem and favour he had for him (10).

(10) Echard's Hiſtory of England, ad ann. 1660, B. 1. c. 1.

[G] In the convention he made a ſpeech by the King's order, deſiring a bill of oblivion might be brought in, as the beſt method to engage his Majeſty to his ſubjects.] The Chancellor was charged with adviſing the King, that not only clemency, but ſignal favour ſhould be ſhewn towards thoſe, who had oppoſed his father and himſelf; and at the ſame time a neglect of thoſe, who had adhered to the Royal Cauſe; and this upon the following maxim, " that to make his enemies friends, " would ſecure them to him; and the Loyaliſts had " given ſuch proofs of unchanged fidelity, that for- " getfulneſs, and even perſecution itſelf, could never " alter their dictates of honour and conſcience, and " therefore might ſafely be put off with the ſatiſ- " faction of having done their duty (11)." This the Chancellor ſolemnly denied to the laſt.

(11) Life of the Lord Chancellor Hyde, pag. 26, 27. and Echard, ubi ſupra.

[H] This juſt conduct is ſaid to have been occaſioned by a domeſtic accident.] Biſhop Burnet informs us (12), that " when he firſt began to grow eminent in his " profeſſion of the Law, he went down to viſit his " father in Wiltſhire; who one day, as they were " walking in the fields together, obſerved to him, that " men of his profeſſion were apt to ſtretch the prero- " gative too far, and injure liberty; but charged him, " if ever he came to any eminence in his profeſſion, " never to ſacrifice the laws and liberty of his country " to his own intereſt, or the will of his Prince. He " repeated this twice, and immediately fell into a fit " of Apoplexy, of which he died in a few hours; " and this advice had ſo laſting an influence on " him, that he ever after obſerved and purſued " it."

(12) Hiſtory of his own Time, vol. 1. B. 2.

(13) Ibid.

[I] He is ſaid to have oppoſed the propoſal for the King's marriage with the Infanta of Portugal.] This is aſſerted by Biſhop Burnet (13), Archdeacon Echard (14), Coke in his Detection, and other writers. But they are contradicted by the late Lord Lanſdown (15), who obſerves that " the King was newly reſtored to " dominions waſted and impoveriſhed by a long rui- " nous civil-war. The higheſt bidder in ready money " to ſupply the neceſſities of ſtate was the alliance " moſt likely to prevail. Whatever Portugal propoſed " to give, Spain offered as much; but the perform- " ance of promiſe on that ſide was ſuſpected; Portugal

(14) Hiſtory of England.

(15) Vindication of General Monk, Duke of Albemarle, from ſome Calumnies of Dr. Burnet, and ſome miſtakes of Dr. Echard, in relation to the Sale of Dunkirk, and the Portugal Match.

Dunkirk [K]. The year following he had articles of high-treaſon exhibited againſt him by the Earl of Briſtol, but they were rejected by the Houſe of Lords [L]. In 1664

" was thought the ſureſt bargin, and had the prefe" rence. The King had a very ample portion with " the Infanta; but being at the ſame time engaged
" in honour to ſtand by his brother-in-law againſt
" Spain, he was ſoon reduced to ſeek for expedi-
" ents to anſwer the demands of that ſervice. The " readieſt that offered was the ſale of Dunkirk; an " act of neceſſity, not choice in the Earl of Claren-
" don." His Lordſhip, to prove that the Chancellor propoſed this marriage, quotes a long paſſage from the Memoirs of Portugal, written by the Sieur d'Ablancourt, Reſident from France at the Court of Portugal, when this marriage propoſal was made, in which France itſelf, ſays his Lordſhip, was too much intereſted not to be well informed. Thomas Burnet, Eſq; in his Remarks upon the Right Honourable the Lord Lanſdowne's Letter to the author of the Reflections Hiſtorical and Political, &c. as far as relates to Biſhop Burnet, has made ſome obſervations on his Lordſhip's tract above quoted. And Mr. Thomas Carte (16) citing a relation of Dr. Hough, the preſent Biſhop of Worceſter, from the Duke of Ormonde's mouth, and Sir Robert Southwell, affirms, that the King's reſolution to marry the Infanta, " was taken without the knowledge,
" either of the Duke of Ormonde, or the Lord Chan" cellor Clarendon. The King firſt communicated
" it to the Chancellor, and told him at the ſame time,
" that he had agreed to the match. The Chancellor
" ſaid, he hoped his Majeſty was not determined, for
" there were ſeveral things deſerved to be maturely
" conſidered in that affair, which he was ready to " offer, if his Majeſty had not prevented it by telling " him, that he was abſolutely determined. The " Chancellor acquainting the Duke of Ormonde and
" the Earl of Southampton with the matter, it was " agreed among them, that he ſhould deſire the King,
" to grant them all three an audience together. This " was granted: they attended him in the room which " was called Tom Chiffinch's Cloſet, where the rarities
" ſtood; and gave him their reaſons againſt the " match. The Chancellor opened the ſubject, and " particularly urged, not only what the Spaniards had
" objected as to the barrenneſs of the Lady propoſed,
" but the accounts and reaſons, which he had from " other hands to believe, that the Infanta would never " prove with child. That if it proved ſo in the event,
" it would be a great infelicity to the whole King" dom; and this was a conſideration ſo very impor" tant, that the Portugal Miniſter ought to be talked
" to plainly on the ſubject, and the matter ſeriouſly
" examined. The King replied, that he was ſatisfied,
" that accuſation came originally from the malice of
" the Spaniards, and was without foundation; and
" in fine, told them, he had proceeded ſo far in the " matter, that it was now too late for him to retreat,
" and he muſt go on with the treaty. During this
" audience, upon their remonſtrating againſt his mar-
" rying a Roman Catholic wife, the King aſked,
" Where is there a Proteſtant fit for me to marry? It
" was ſaid, his Majeſty could be at no loſs in that " point, for there were Ladies enough in Germany of " that religion, and of families fit for the alliance of " any Prince. Cods fiſh, ſays the King, they are all
" foggy, and I cannot like any one of them for a wife.
" Upon this anſwer, which excluded at once all " Proteſtants that could be propoſed, the Duke of Or" monde was clearly convinced, that the reſolution was " taken for the King to marry none but a Roman " Catholic. It was a point indeed, which his mo" ther, and thoſe of that religion, which were in the " ſecret of the change he had made in his, had ex" tremely at heart, and thought of the utmoſt conſe-
" quence, as well to fix him theirs, as to advance the
" cauſe of Catholicity."

(16) Hiſtory of the Life of James Duke of Ormonde, vol. 2. B. 6. pag. 254.

[K] And the ſale of Dunkirk.] Biſhop Burnet (17) and Archdeacon Echard abſolutely acquit the Chancellor of having any hand in that ſale. But the Lord Lanſdowne (18) cites the Letters and Negotiations of Count d'Eſtrades, who was the ſole manager on the part of France for the treaty of Dunkirk, to ſhew, that the firſt motion came from the Chancellor in a Letter dated at Hampton-Court June 29, 1662, and ſigned Clarendon. There is good reaſon to think the Queen-Mother, when ſhe came over into England, was charged with this affair of Dunkirk as well as that of the Portugal match: and though the King did not immediately agree to the ſale, yet being ſoon after reduced to great ſtreights for want of money, unable to bear the expence of the garriſon of that place out of the revenue of the civil-liſt, and unwilling to apply to Parliament for a ſupply, leſt it ſhould fall into the hands of a power, which the late troubles had taught him to dread, he reſolved to take that party, and obliged the Earl of Clarendon to enter into a treaty with the Mareſchal d'Eſtrades for that purpoſe. The Chancellor in this point acted Miniſterially, it being his general maxim, as well as that of his friend the Duke of Ormonde, to offer their advice freely to the King; but when his Majeſty had once taken a reſolution, however contrary it were to their ſentiments, they preſently acquieſced, uſed great caution in avoiding all reflections on his meaſures, for fear of making bad worſe, and ſtill continued in their reſpective poſts to diſcharge their duty, and obey thoſe commands which they wiſhed had never been given (*).

(*) This remark was communicated to us by Mr. Tho. Carte.

[L] The year following he had articles of high treaſon exhibited againſt him by the Earl of Briſtol; but they were rejected by the Houſe of Lords.] The ſubſtance of the whole accuſation was as follows: " That the Chancellor being in place of higheſt
" truſt and confidence with his Majeſty, and having
" arrogated a ſupreme direction in all things, had,
" with a traiterous intent to draw contempt upon his
" Majeſty's perſon, and to alienate the affections of " his ſubjects, abuſed the ſaid truſt in manner follow" ing. 1. He had endeavoured to alienate the hearts
" of his Majeſty's ſubjects, by artificially inſinuating
" to his creatures and dependents, that his Majeſty
" was inclined to popery, and deſigned to alter the " eſtabliſhed Religion. 2. He had ſaid to ſeveral
" perſons of his Majeſty's privy-council, That his Ma-
" jeſty was dangerouſly corrupted in his religion, and in- " clined to Popery: That perſons of that religion had ſuch
" acceſs and ſuch credit with him, that unleſs there were
" a careful eye had upon it, the proteſtant religion would
" be overthrown in this kingdom. 3. Upon his Ma-
" jeſty's admitting Sir Henry Bennet to be Secretary
" of State in the place of Sir Edward Nicholas, he
" ſaid, That his Majeſty had given ten thouſand pounds
" to remove a zealous proteſtant, that he might bring
" into that high place a concealed papiſt. 4. In purſu-
" ance of the ſame traiterous deſign, ſeveral friends
" and dependents of his have ſaid aloud, That were it
" not for my Lord Chancellor's ſtanding in the gap, popery
" would be introduced into this kingdom. 4. That he " had perſuaded the King, contrary to his reaſons, to " allow his name to be uſed to the Pope and ſeveral
" Cardinals in the ſollicitations of a Cardinal's cap
" for the Lord Aubigney, great Almoner to the Queen:
" In order to effect which he had employ'd Mr.
" Richard Bealing, a known papiſt; and had like-
" wiſe applied himſelf to ſeveral popiſh prieſts and Je-
" ſuits for the ſame purpoſe, promiſing great favour
" to the papiſts here, in caſe it ſhould be effected. 6.
" That he had likewiſe promiſed to ſeveral Papiſts,
" he would do his endeavour, and ſaid, he hoped to
" compaſs the taking away all penal laws againſt them;
" to the end they might preſume and grow vain upon
" his patronage, and by their publiſhing their hopes
" of toleration, encreaſe the ſcandal deſigned by him
" to be raiſed upon his Majeſty throughout the king" dom. 7. That being intruſted with the treaty be" twixt his Majeſty and his royal conſort the Queen,
" he concluded it upon articles ſcandalous and dange" rous to the proteſtant religion. Moreover he brought " the King and Queen together without any ſettled
" agreement about the performance of the marriage
" rites, whereby the Queen refuſing to be married by
" a proteſtant prieſt, in caſe of her being with child,
" either the ſucceſſion ſhould be made uncertain for " want of the due rites of matrimony, or elſe his Ma-
" jeſty be expoſed to a ſuſpicion of having been mar" ried

(17) Hiſtory of his own Times, vol. 1. B. 2.

(18) Vindication of General Monk, &c.

1664 he oppoſed the war with Holland. In Auguſt 1667 he was removed from his poſt of Lord Chancellor [M], and in November following impeached of high treaſon, and other

" ried in his own dominions by a Romiſh prieſt. 8. " That having endeavoured to alienate the hearts of " the King's ſubjects upon the ſcore of religion, he endeavoured to make uſe of all his ſcandals and jealouſies to raiſe to himſelf a popular applauſe of being " the zealous upholder of the proteſtant religion, &c. " 9. That he farther endeavoured to alienate the hearts " of the King's ſubjects, by venting in his own diſcourſe " and thoſe of his emiſſaries opprobrious ſcandals againſt his Majeſty's perſon and courſe of life, ſuch as " are not fit to be mentioned, unleſs neceſſity ſhall " require it. 10. That he endeavoured to alienate " the affections of the Duke of York from his Majeſty, by ſuggeſting to him, That his Majeſty intended to legitimate the Duke of Monmouth. 11. That " he had perſuaded the King, againſt the advice of " the Lord General, to withdraw the Engliſh garriſons " out of Scotland, and demoliſh all the forts built " there, at ſo vaſt a charge to this kingdom; and all " without expecting the advice of the Parliament of " England. 12. That he endeavoured to alienate " his Majeſty's affections and eſteem from the preſent " Parliament, by telling him, That there was never ſo " weak and inconſiderable a Houſe of Lords, nor never ſo " weak and heady a Houſe of Commons; and particularly, That it was better to ſell Dunkirk, than to be " at their mercy for want of money. 13. That contrary to a known law made laſt ſeſſion, by which " money was given and applied for maintaining of " Dunkirk, he adviſed and effected the ſale of the " ſame to the French King. 14. That he had, contrary to law, inriched himſelf and his Treaſurers " by the ſale of offices. 15. That he had converted " to his own uſe vaſt ſums of publick money raiſed " in Ireland by way of ſubſidy, private and publick " benevolences, and otherwiſe given and intended to " defray the charge of the Government in that kingdom. 16. That having arrogated to himſelf a ſupreme direction of all his Majeſty's affairs, he had " prevailed to have his Majeſty's cuſtoms farmed at a " lower rate than others offered; and that by perſons " with ſome of whom he went a ſhare, and other " parts of money reſulting from his Majeſty's revenue." This heavy charge, filled with inſinuations and aggravations, appeared rather to have been a perſonal quarrel, than any ſerious concern for publick truth and juſtice. The Words concerning the King's private inclinations, here charged as ſpoken by him, were generally thought to have been the real expreſſions or ſuggeſtions of the Lord Chancellor; but ſurely it was not altogether without a cauſe. They may be thought the effect of an indecent freedom, but can hardly be imagined to have proceeded from any want of integrity or loyalty. And indeed there appears a perverſe turn in the articles, firſt to repreſent the Chancellor as jealous of popery, and complaining of the King's inclination to it by chooſing new Miniſters popiſhly affected; and yet after all to make the Chancellor himſelf the inſtrument of thoſe very deſigns laid for popery, and the profeſſed promoter of them. This is ſomewhat ſurprizing; and what has ſince made the deſign'd revenge more apparent, is that the articles ſhould tax the Chancellor with ſaying, that Sir Henry Bennet was a concealed papiſt, when the Earl of Briſtol himſelf, the accuſer, was the ſame, and had been privy to all that the King had done at Fontarabia at the Pyrenean Treaty. And indeed the Houſe of Lords ſeemed ſenſible of the Malice of the accuſation, as ſoon as the articles were exhibited and read before them. Upon which, after a ſhort conſideration, they made the following order: " That a copy of the articles or charge " of high-treaſon exhibited this day by the Earl of " Briſtol againſt the Lord Chancellor, be delivered to " the Lord Chief Juſtice; who, with all the reſt of " the Judges, are to conſider, Whether the ſaid charge " hath been brought in regularly and legally; and whether it may be proceeded on, and how; and whether " there be any treaſon in it or no; and make report " thereof to this Houſe on Monday next, if they " can, or elſe as ſoon after as poſſibly they can." Upon this important occaſion all the Judges met at Sergeant's Inn, and the Earl of Briſtol repaired to them, deſiring to ſee their order; which being read, he told them, that he came out of reſpect to know of them, whether they were informed how it came into the Houſe of Peers, whether as a charge or not. But one of the Judges, who had been preſent when it was delivered in, ſaying, that they were tied up by their order, the Earl took ſome exception at the manner of his expreſſion, as if his addreſs were unneceſſary at that time; and taking it as a rebuke upon him, departed. But according to their order, which ſuppoſed it to be a charge of high treaſon, and not mentioning miſdemeanors, upon conſideration they unanimouſly agreed on this enſuing anſwer, which the Lord Chief Juſtice Foſter delivered into the Houſe of Lords: " We conceive, " that a charge of high treaſon cannot, by the laws " and ſtatutes of this realm, be originally exhibited " by one Peer againſt another unto the Houſe of Peers; " and that therefore a charge of high treaſon by the " Earl of Briſtol againſt the Lord Chancellor, mentioned in the order of reference to us of the 10th " of this inſtant July, hath not been regularly and legally brought in; and if the matters alledged in " the ſaid charge were admitted to be true, altho' " alledged to be traiterouſly done, yet there is no treaſon in it." Upon the reading of this anſwer the Earl of Briſtol took exceptions at it; and ſome of the Lords, who were friends to the Chancellor inſert'd, " that if it was not regularly and legally brought in, " it was a libel, and ought to be condemned, and the " author of it cenſured." To ſatisfy the Houſe, one of the Judges, upon conference with his brethren, did the next day deliver the reaſons of the opinion of the Judges in their anſwer; when the Earl of Briſtol, a little to extenuate the matter, ſaid, that the articles were not intended by him as a charge, but as an information. Hereupon their Lordſhips, upon a fair debate of the queſtion, did unanimouſly reſolve to declare their concurrence with the opinion of the Judges (19). We may obſerve here, that there had been a long courſe of friendſhip both in adverſity and proſperity between the Chancellor and Earl of Briſtol; but they gradually falling into different meaſures upon the account of religion or politics, and the Chancellor refuſing a ſmall boon, as the Earl took it to be, which was ſaid to be the paſſing a patent in favour of a Court Lady, the latter thought himſelf ſo diſobliged, that letting looſe his fiery temper, he reſolved upon nothing but revenge (20).

(19) Lives of the Lords Chancellors, pag. 208, & ſeqq. and Echard's Hiſtory of England, ad ann. 1663, B. 1. cap. 1.

(20) Lives of the Lords Chancellors, pag. 207, 208.

[M] Removed from the Poſt of Lord Chancellor.] The great ſeal was taken from him on the 31ſt of Auguſt 1667, and given to Sir Orlando Bridgman, with the title of Lord Keeper. Mr. Echard obſerves (21), that it has been often admired, that the King ſhould not only conſent to diſcard, but ſoon after baniſh a friend, who had been as honeſt and faithful to him as the beſt, and perhaps more uſeful and ſerviceable than any that he had ever employ'd; which ſurely could never have been brought to bear without numerous enviers and enemies. To ſhew how theſe were raiſed, we are to remember, that during the height of his grandeur, which continued two years without any rivalſhip, as well as the reſt of his Miniſtry, he manifeſted an inflexible ſteadineſs to the conſtitution of the Church of England, in equal oppoſition to the Papiſts on one ſide, and the Diſſenters on the other; ſo that none of theſe could be ever reconciled to him or his proceedings. Yet he ſeemed forward in the beginning to do ſo much towards the making of a coalition of all parties, that the Cavaliers and ſtrict Churchmen thought themſelves too groſsly neglected; and many of them, upon that account, though unjuſtly, entertained inſuperable prejudices againſt him, and joined with the greateſt of his enemies. His authority was once ſo great and prevailing, that even when it was much diminiſhed, the unpopular acts, miſcarriages, or misfortunes were generally charged upon him. Beſides, his perſonal behaviour was attended with a ſort of a gravity and haughtineſs, which ſtruck a very diſagreeable awe into a Court filled with licentious perſons of both ſexes. He often took liberty to give ſuch reproofs to theſe perſons of mirth and gallantry, as were very unacceptable to them; and ſometimes other crimes and misdemeanors by the House of Commons [N]; upon which in the beginning thought it his duty to advise the King himself in such a manner, that they took advantage of him, and as he passed in Court, would often say to his Majesty, There goes your Schoolmaster! The chief of these was the Duke of Buckingham, who had a surprizing talent of ridicule and buffoonry; and that he might make way to his ruin, he often acted and mimicked the Chancellor in the presence of the King, walking stately with a pair of bellows before him for the purse, and Colonel Titus carrying a fire-shovel on his shoulder for the mace, with which sort of banter and farce the King was too much delighted and captivated. These, with some more serious of the popish party, assisted by the sollicitations of the ladies of pleasure, made such daily impressions upon the mind of the King, that he at last gave way, and became pleased, and willing to part both from his person and services. It is generally believed, that the King had some particular and private resentments against him, as checking of those, who were too forward in loading the crown with prerogative and revenue, and such like proceedings. And more particularly we are told, that he had countermined the King in a grand design, which he had to be divorced from the Queen, under these pretences: "That she "had been pre-ingaged to another person; or that "she was uncapable of having children." The person designed to supply her place was Mrs. Stuart, a beautiful young Lady, who was related to the King, and had some office under the Queen. The Chancellor, to prevent this, sent for the Duke of Richmond, who was of the same name, and seeming to be sorry, that a person of his worth and relation to his Majesty should receive no marks of his favour, advised him to marry this Lady, as the most likely means to advance himself. The young Nobleman, liking the person, followed the advice, made immediate application to the Lady, who was ignorant of the King's intentions, and in a few days married her. The King thus disappointed, and soon after informed how the match was brought about, banished the Duke with his new Duchess from Court, and reserved his resentment against the Chancellor to a more convenient opportunity. However this might be, in a letter to the Earl of Sandwich from the Lord Arlington, who never was a friend to the Chancellor, we find these words: "His Majesty hath taken the seals from the Lord "Chancellor, and given them to my Lord Bridgman "with a great deal of satisfaction to the world and "to himself; and he hopes, that rectifying some "other important things before the Parliament, he "may expect they will deliver him out of the straits "he is so unhappily fallen into." As to the private reasons of the King's abandoning the Chancellor, his Majesty wrote an obliging letter to the Duke of Ormonde, then in Ireland, to give him satisfaction in that matter, as knowing him to be his intimate friend. Mr. Echard observes, that this letter was never yet published, nor would a copy of it be granted; but that he had more than once been told the substance of it by those who had read it; and the principal reason there given by the King was, The Chancellor's insupportable Temper. Mr. Thomas Carte in his History of the Life of James Duke of Ormonde, printed at London 1736 in fol. has given a particular account of the reasons of the disgrace of the Chancellor, from which we shall borrow some passages. He observes (22), that his enemies had found means by a swarm of libels, and by an infinite number of little emissaries, to possess the people with a notion, that he was the cause of the late miscarriages in affairs; tho' he had never intermeddled in any part of the management of the Dutch war, to which he had ever been averse. His lease of Worcester-house, wherein he had lived ever since the restoration, expiring this year, and the owner of it resolving to make it the place of his own habitation, he had taken a very unhappy resolution of building an house on a piece of ground, which the King had given him near St. James's. There he erected a magnificent pile at a much greater expence than he imagined or intended, which almost ruined him in his fortune, by loading him with an heavy debt, and at the same time raised the envy of the world, who were willing enough to suppose it built by money corruptly gotten. He had removed thither in April before the affront put upon the nation at Chatham; and the clamours and fury of the populace raised on that occasion, were all levelled at him, whom they were misled to think the author of all the calamities of the kingdom; so that he was in continual apprehensions, that they would pull down his house, and that he should fall a sacrifice to the fury of a misguided and inraged multitude. In this situation he was still intrepid, supported by the clearness of his conscience, and well satisfied, that he had done nothing that he ought to be ashamed of himself, or his friends for him. To this undeserved misfortune of popular odium some natural ones were added; the Dukes of Cambridge and Kendal, sons of the Duke of York, and the Lady Clarendon died within a few days of one another. He lost on May 16th his chief friend the Earl of Southampton, upon whose death the treasury was put into the hands of the Duke of Albemarle, Lord Ashley, Sir. T. Clifton, Sir W. Coventry, and Sir John Duncombe, none of them well affected to the Chancellor. Mr. Carte proceeds to remark, "That the Chancellor was cer-"tainly a Minister of as great probity, disinterested-"ness, and integrity, as hath been known in any "age: his whole conduct, and his letters to the Duke "of Ormonde (to a Friend, towards whom he had "no reserve) are an irrefragable proof of this part "of his character. But he seems to have fallen into "that very mistake, which he remarks in Arch-"bishop Laud, of imagining, that a man's own in-"tegrity will support him in all times and all cir-"cumstances of affairs, in the measures which he takes "for the public good. He was passionate, and tho' "solemn and cool in debate, did not bear an unrea-"sonable contradiction with that temper, which selfish, "artful, and designing men always take care to pre-"serve. He was not without the pride of conscious "virtue; and knowing well the just reasons upon "which he gave his advice on any occasion, when "he found it rejected, he thought himself the less "concerned to prevent the ill consequences of mea-"sures taken by others counsels in opposition to his "own, which were dictated purely by his zeal for "the King's service, and his regard to the good "of the kingdom. From the time that the Lord "Arlington was made Secretary of State, he was apt "upon occasion to complain, that he had no credit at "Court, which disobliged the King; and to clear "himself of having an hand in certain resolutions, "which perhaps would otherwise not have been ap-"proved in the event; and yet his dislike thereof "was still represented as the reason of their miscar-"riage, and served the advisers for an excuse. He "always gave the King prudent and honest advice; "but if it was over-ruled, (as was too often the case,) "he did not care to intermeddle, but left it to wiser "men (as he stiled them) to follow their own mea-"sures, and to perform what they had confidently "undertaken for the King's service. This manner of "conduct made him neglect his interest (of which "few Ministers have ever had a greater share, and yet "founded upon Virtue) in the House of Commons, "till at last it was utterly ruined." Mr. Carte afterward tells us (23), that the Duke of Buckingham undertook, that the Parliament should do the King's business, if his Majesty would but sacrifice the Chancellor to their resentments. That the King was weary of a Minister, of whom from his early youth he had learned to stand in awe, and who still seemed to keep up an authority over him, by the remonstrances which he made to him on all occasions with great freedom and little ceremony. And that the Chancellor was thought to have promoted the marriage of the Duke of Richmond with Mrs. Stewart, in order to prevent the King from procuring a divorce from the Queen, and marrying that Lady. "Whether he actually "encouraged the Duke of Richmond's marriage, doth "not appear, says Mr. Carte; but I find, that he "was so strongly possess'd of the King's inclination "to a Divorce, that even after his disgrace he was "persuaded, the Duke of Buckingham had under-"taken to carry that matter through the Parliament. "It is certain too, that the King considered him as "the chief promoter of that marriage, and resented "it in the highest degree. Thus affected towards the "Chancellor, he easily closed with the Duke of Buck-"ingham, to give him up to the malice of his ene-"mies."

(21) Hiſtory of England, ad ann. 1667, B. 1. c. 3.

(22) Vol. 2. B. 6. pag. 349.

(23) Pag. 351, 352.

[N] Impeach'd of high treason by the House of Commons.] ginning of December he retired into France, leaving a petition to the Houſe of Lords [O]. Whereupon a bill was paſſed for baniſhing him from the King's dominions. He reſided at Roüen in Normandy, where he continued ſeven years to the time of his death. In 1668 his life was attempted at Evreux near that city [P]. He died at Roüen December the 9th 1674, and his body was brought to England and interred in Weſtminſter-Abbey. Beſides his Hiſtory of the Rebellion [Q] he mons.] When the articles were exhibited to the Houſe, Lawrence Hyde, Eſq; afterwards Earl of Rocheſter, being the Lord Clarendon's ſecond ſon, roſe up and ſaid, "That every particular of the charge againſt his father was groundleſs; and he was ſo fully ſatisfied thereof, that he humbly propoſed to the Houſe, that before it was received, his accuſers might pitch on any one article, which ever they pleaſed, and ſupport it by proofs; and if they did ſo, his father was ready to acknowledge himſelf guilty of the whole charge." The violence of the Earl of Clarendon's enemies hindered this propoſal from being accepted: ſo that on the 12th of November Mr. Edward Seymour carried up the impeachment of the Earl to the bar of the Houſe of Lords, and deſired, that he might be committed to ſafe cuſtody, till the Commons ſhould make good their charge. But the Lords, diſſatisfied at this general way of proceeding, ſent to the Commons on the 15th of November, to deſire a conference in the Painted Chamber; where they informed them, that they had not confined the Earl, nor ſequeſter'd him from Parliament, it being againſt the Petition of Right ſo to do, till particular Treaſon was charged againſt him. This occaſioned warm debates in the Houſe of Commons, who were ſo highly enraged, as to reſolve, "that the Lords not having comply'd with the deſire of the Commons in committing the Earl of Clarendon, and ſequeſtering him from Parliament upon the impeachment from that Houſe, was an obſtruction to the public juſtice of the kingdom, and a precedent of evil and dangerous conſequence." And upon this they appointed a Committee to draw up a declaration to vindicate their proceedings. During theſe diviſions and debates, the Earl finding the ſtorm to bear very hard upon him from all quarters, and eſpecially from the Court, thought it moſt adviſeable to withdraw himſelf, and retire to Normandy.

[O] Leaving a petition to the Houſe of Lords.] The Lords received it on the 3d of December, and ſent two of the Judges to acquaint the Commons of it, and deſired a conference; where the Duke of Buckingham, who was plainly aimed at in the petition, delivered it to the Commons, and with his uſual way of inſult and ridicule ſaid, "The Lords have commanded me to deliver to you this ſcandalous and ſeditious paper ſent from the Earl of Clarendon. They bid me to preſent it to you, and deſire you in a convenient time to ſend it to them again; for it has a ſtyle, which they are in love with, and therefore deſire to keep it." When the petition was read in the Houſe of Commons, it occaſioned very warm ſpeeches, and was voted by them, to be ſcandalous, malicious, and a reproach to the juſtice of the nation, and that it ſhould be burnt by the hands of the common hangman.

[P] In 1668 his life was attempted at Evreux near that city.] In the Bodleian library at Oxford there is an original letter from Mr. Oliver Long to Sir William Coventry, Secretary of State, dated at Evreux in Normandy April the 26th 1668; in which is the following paſſage. "As I was travelling from Roüen towards Orleans, it was my fortune April the 23d N. S. to overtake the Earl of Clarendon (then in his unhappy and unmerited exile) who was going towards Bourbon, but took up his lodging at a private Hotel in a ſmall walled town, called Evreux, ſome leagues from Roüen. I, as moſt Engliſh Gentlemen did to ſo valuable a patriot, went to pay him a viſit near ſupper-time, when he was, as uſual, very civil to me. Before ſupper was done, twenty or thirty Engliſh ſea-men and more came, and demanded entrance at the great gate, which being ſtrongly barred, kept them out for ſome time; but in a ſhort ſpace they brake it, and preſently drove all they found, by their advantage of numbers, into the Earl's chamber; where by the aſſiſtance of but three ſwords and piſtols we kept them out for half an hour, in which diſpute many of us were wounded by their ſwords and piſtols, whereof they had many. To conclude, they broke the windows and doors, and under the conduct of one Howard, an Iriſhman (who has three brothers, as I am told, in the King of England's ſervice) and an Enſign in the company of canoneers, they quickly found the Earl in his bed, not able to ſtand by the violence of the gout, where, after they had given him many blows with their ſwords and ſtaves, mixed with horrible curſes and oaths, they dragged him on the ground into the middle of the yard, where they encompaſſed him around with their ſwords, and after they had told him in their own language, how he had ſold the Kingdom, and robbed them of their pay; Howard commanded them all, as one man, to run their ſwords through his body. But what difference aroſe among themſelves before they could agree, God above, who alone ſent this ſpirit of diſſention, only knows. In this interval their Lieutenant, one Swaine, came and diſarmed them; ſixteen of the ring-leaders were put into priſon, and many of thoſe things they had rifled from him found again, which were reſtored and of great value. Monſieur la Fonde, a great man, belonging to the King of France's bed-chamber, ſent to conduct the Earl on his way hither, was ſo deſperately wounded in the head, that there were but little hopes of his life. Many of theſe aſſaſſins were grievouſly wounded; and this heinous action is ſo much reſented by all here, that many of theſe criminals will meet with an uſage equal to their merit. Had we been ſufficiently provided with fire-arms, we had infallibly done ourſelves juſtice on them; but we fear not but the Law will ſupply our defect." We ſhall add here an extract from a manuſcript communicated to us by the learned Richard Rawlinſon, LL. D. and F. R. S. and intitled Remarks made in a Journey from Exeter 24 Febr. 1667 to Naples and Leghorn, ending 24 March 1672: By John Brocking. The paſſage is as follows. "The 8th of April 1667. N. S. I paid a viſit to the Earl of Clarendon Hyde, quondam Lord Chancellor of England, who was fled hither [Roüen in Normandy] incognito, to avoid the penalties of ſeveral accuſations, that might have followed on his remaining at home. And chiefly incenſed were the ſeamen; for while I was here, there was a Captain of a ſhip in port, that came to ſee him, who deſired the Captain to ſend him a piece of Engliſh ſalt beef, which he promiſed to ſend him the next day without fail; but as he was putting it over-board, the ſeamen declared, that if that went over for his Lordſhip, they would immediately throw the Captain into the ſea after it. So the Captain was forced to excuſe his promiſe, and deſired my Lord to have patience mixed in his ſalad; elſe he might chance to get a ſtomach, and want what would ſatisfy it; at leaſt that which he intended ſhould. My Lord received me (in company with Mr. Wilkins) very civilly, entertaining us in diſcourſe near an hour. He is a fair, ruddy, fat, middle ſtatured, handſome man, about 60 years old, mighty affable, (though whence this ſhould proceeed, I will not judge). He told us, he was to go hence to Orleans, and thence to Bourbon, to make uſe of thoſe waters. He ſeemed much troubled with the gout, had only five or ſix attendants, and one Gentleman afforded him by the King of France for his ſafe conduct through his dominions."

[Q] His Hiſtory of the Rebellion.] The firſt volume of this work was printed at Oxford in fol. 1702; the ſecond in 1703; and the third in 1704. It has been reprinted ſeveral times ſince in ſix volumes in 8vo. A French tranſlation of it was printed at the Hague in 1704 and 1709 in 12mo. Dr. Henry Felton (24) ſtiles our author "the nobleſt and moſt impartial Hiſtorian this nation hath produced. The

(24) Diſſertation on reading the Claſſicks and forming a juſt ſtyle, pag. 220. 4th edit. London 1730.

he wrote ſeveral other works [R].

" compaſſion and reſentment of his thoughts, the no" ble openneſs and freedom of his reflections, the glo" rious debt he pays to friendſhip, and the veil he " kindly draws over the ſorrows and reproach of his " country are ſo admirably and well expreſſed in ſuch
" lively colours, that we are ſtruck with ſympathy,
" and do feel by reading, that he wrote from his heart
" under the deepeſt ſenſe and moſt preſent impreſſion
" of the evils he bewaileth. I have met with none,
" that may compare with him in the weight and ſo-
" lemnity of his ſtyle, in the ſtrength and clearneſs
" of diction, in the beauty and majeſty of expreſſion,
" and that noble negligence of phraſe, which maketh
" his words wait every where upon his ſubject, with a
" readineſs and propriety that art and ſtudy are almoſt
" ſtrangers to." The author of the Critical and Philoſophical Enquiry into the Cauſes of Prodigies and Miracles, as related by Hiſtorians. With an Eſſay towards reſtoring a Method and Purity in Hiſtory; tells us (25) Ralegh and Hyde " are the only two, whom our na" tion has yet produced of an Hiſtoric genius. The " firſt excelling in grandeur and majeſty of thought,
" equal to the ſubject he undertook: and the latter,
" for his comprehenſive knowledge of mankind, will
" for ever bear the unrivall'd title of the Chancellor of " Human Nature. It is the great Hyde, and he alone,
" that in the knowledge of mankind is always clear,
" deep, eaſy and perfect. I make no ſcruple to con-
" feſs, that in the Hiſtory of the Grand Rebellion there
" are more offences againſt the truth of compoſition
" than in all the beſt Greek and Roman Hiſtorians
" put together; and think it no difficulty to prove,
" that in that ſingle work there are more and far " greater excellencies than in the whole body of an-
" tient Hiſtory. It is indeed the only one of Engliſh
" Hiſtory we can glory in; the French boaſt a great " number of conſiderable writers of their own Hiſtory:
" but to them we may anſwer as the lioneſs in the fable
" did to an ignoble beaſt, who ſet an unreaſonable
" value on the fruitfulneſs of her womb: It is true,
" I bear but one, but that one is a lion." With regard to the Charge of this Hiſtory's being interpolated we ſhall refer to the article of ATTERBURY (FRANCIS *), and only add here a memorandum written by the late Thomas Sclater Bacon Eſq; in a folio copy of that Hiſtory now in the poſſeſſion of —— Gill Eſq;

" Eaſter Sunday 1731, Dover-Street.
" Dr. Terry of Chriſt Church in Oxford told my " Lord Oxford, Lord Duplin, Thomas Harley, Mr.
" Wotton, and me, that he was employed at Weſt-
" minſter-School by Biſhop Sprat about 1693 to read
" the MS. of the Hiſtory of the Earl of Clarendon,
" the firſt volume writ by the Earl in a bad hand,
" but all the volumes were fairly writ by his Secre" tary. The manuſcript was carried to Oxford, when " the Biſhop, Dr. Aldrich, Mr. Smallridge, Atter-
" bury, Stratford prepared it for the preſs, and did not " alter any thing, only particles and parentheſes; and
" the Earl of Rocheſter added about fourteen lines of the " King's eſcape from the Spaniards to Breda, out of " his father's MS. and there was omitted by the family
" about the Queen's government, where there is a
" text, Woe to woman, &c. He had given an ac" count of the Queen's aſking at a Play, who that
" fat man was, pointing to Hyde: the King ſaid, it
" was he that did all the miſchief." There muſt be ſome miſtakes in this memorandum or in Biſhop Atterbury's Vindication of Biſhop Smallridge, Dr. Aldrich, and himſelf from the ſcandalous Reflections of Oldmixon, relating to the publication of Lord Clarendon's Hiſtory; ſince the Biſhop declares in that piece, that himſelf and Biſhop Smallridge were not any ways concerned in preparing that Hiſtory for the preſs, nor ever ſaw it till it was in print.

(25) Part 1. pag. 60, 61, 62. edit. London 1727, in 12mo.

(*) Vol. 2. pag. 445, 446.

[R] He wrote ſeveral other works.] Several Speeches in Parliament, during his Chancellorſhip, from the Reſtoration to the year 1667. They are in number at leaſt ten, and were printed in folio papers. A full Anſwer to an infamous and traiterous Pamphlet, intitled, " A Declaration of the Commons of England in Par" liament aſſembled, expreſſing the reaſons and grounds
" of paſſing their late reſolutions touching no farther
" addreſs or application to be made to the King." London 1648 in 4to. The Difference and Diſparity between the Eſtates and Conditions of George Duke of Buckingham and Robert Earl of Eſſex. Printed in the Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, London 1672 in 8vo. This piece was written when he was young, and before he had entered on the ſtage of buſineſs. Animadverſions on a Book intitled, Fanaticiſm fanatically imputed to the Catholick Church by D. Stillingfleet, and the Imputation refuted and retorted by S. C. By a Perſon of Honour. London 1674 in 8vo. It was printed twice that year. The Imprimatur is dated November the 29th 1673. A Letter to the Duke of York; and another to the Dutcheſs of York, upon occaſion of her embracing the Roman Catholic Religion. A brief View and Survey of the dangerous and pernicious Errors to the Church and State in Mr. Hobbes's Book, intitled Leviathan. Oxford 1676 in 4to. The Imprimatur by Dr. Ralph Bathurſt, Vice-Chancellor of Oxford, is dated July the 1ſt 1676. The Dedication to his Majeſty is dated at Moulins May the 10th 1673. He made likewiſe Alterations and Additions to a Book, intitled, " A Collection of the " Orders heretofore uſed in Chancery." London 1661 in 8vo, done by and with the advice and aſſiſtance of Sir Harbottle Grimſtone Bart. Maſter of the Rolls. His Hiſtory of the Rebellion and Civil Wars in Ireland was printed at London 1726 in folio. His Eſſays were printed there in one volume in fol. T.

☞HYDE (Dr. THOMAS), one of the moſt learned Writers of the ſeventeenth Century, was ſon of Mr. Ralph Hyde, a Miniſter of Billingſley near Bridgnorth in Shropſhire, and deſcended from the Hydes of Norbury in Cheſhire. He was born at Billingſley June the 29th 1636; and having from his youth a ſtrong inclination to the Oriental Languages, began the ſtudy of them under his father; and afterwards in 1652 being admitted a ſtudent in King's College in Cambridge, he became acquainted there with Mr. Abraham Wheelock, who being an admirable Linguiſt, encouraged and promoted him in his ſtudies of the Eaſtern Learning (a). After he had continued a little more than a year in that College, Mr. Wheelock ſent him to London, and appointed him one of the correctors of the Polyglot Bible, then about to be publiſhed by Dr. Brian Walton, afterwards Biſhop of Cheſter, he being the ſole cauſe and contriver of that excellent work. Mr. Hyde, beſides his attendance in the correction of it, he ſet forth the Perſian Pentateuch, and aſſiſted in correcting the Arabic, Syriac, and Samaritan Languages in that work, and in collating various copies [A]. In 1658 he went to the Univerſity

(a) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 973. 2d edit. London 1721.

[A] He ſet forth the Perſian Pentateuch, and aſſiſted in correcting the Arabic, Syriac, and Samaritan languages in that work, and in collating various copies.] He tranſcribed the Perſian Pentateuch out of the Hebrew characters, in which it was firſt printed at Conſtantinople, into the proper Perſian characters, which by Archbiſhop Uſher was then judged impoſſible to have been done by a native Perſian, becauſe one Hebrew letter frequently anſwered to divers Perſian letters, which were difficult to be known. He tranſlated it likewiſe into Latin. What he did further in the Polyglot, is ſpecified in the Preface of it by Dr. Walton in theſe words. Nec prætereundus eſt D. Thomas Hyde, ſummæ ſpei juvenis, qui in Linguis Orientalibus ſupra ætatem

Univerſity of Oxford, and was admitted a Student of Queen's College, where he was ſoon after made Hebrew Reader. In the beginning of April 1659, Richard Cromwell, then Chancellor of the Univerſity, ſent his letters to the members thereof, which ſay, that "he is of full ſtanding ſince his admiſſion into the Univerſity of Cambridge for the "degree of Maſter of Arts; that he hath given ſuch public teſtimony of his more than "ordinary abilities and learning in the Oriental Languages, &c." Whereupon the Delegates of the Univerſity ordered on the 12th of the ſame month, that "he ſhould ac-"cumulate the degree of Maſter of Arts by reading only a lecture in ſome of thoſe Lan-"guages, and that he ſhould have ſuch fees remitted to him as belong to the Univer-"ſity, &c." This order being confirmed by the Convocation on the ſame day, he was admitted Maſter of Arts the next (b), and ſoon after made ſecond Keeper of the Bodleian Library in the room of Henry Stubbe ejected. In 1665 he publiſhed a Latin tranſlation of Ulug-Beig's Obſervations concerning the Longitude and Latitude of the fixed Stars, with notes [B]; and in December the ſame year was elected Head-keeper of the Bodleian Library upon the reſignation of Dr. Thomas Lockey (c). In October 1666 he was collated to the Prebend of Yatminſter ſecunda in the Church of Saliſbury, upon the death of Dr. John Wall (d). In 1674 he publiſhed a Catalogue of the printed Books in the Bodleian Library [C]. December the 14th 1678 he had the Archdeaconry of Glouceſter, vacant by the death of John Gregory, conferred on him by Dr. John Prichett, Biſhop of that See, whoſe wife was nearly related to the firſt wife of our author (e). April the 3d 1682 he was admitted Doctor of Divinity (f). December the 22d 1691, he was elected Arabic Profeſſor upon the death of Dr. Edward Pocock (g). He publiſhed ſeveral works beſides thoſe already mentioned [D]. He

(b) Wood, Ath. Ox. vol. 2. 974. and Faſti Oxon. vol. 2. col. 126.

(c) Wood, Ath. Oxon. col. 974.

(d) Le Neve, Faſti Eccleſ. Anglicanæ.

(e) Wood, Ath. Oxon. col. 974.

(f) Idem, Faſti Oxon. vol. 2. col. 219.

(g) Idem, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 974.

ætatem magnos progreſſus fecit, quorum ſpecimina dedit tum in Arabibus, Syriacis, Perſicis, &c. corrigendis, tum in Pentateucho Perſico characteribus Perſicis deſcribendo, qui antea ſolis Hebraicis extitit, ejuſque verſionem Latinam concinnando.

[B] In 1665 he publiſhed a Latin Tranſlation of Ulug Beig's Obſervations concerning the Longitude and Latitude of the fixed Stars, with Notes.] It was printed in 4to under this title: Verſio Latina e Linguâ Perſicâ, Commentarii in Obſervationes Ulugh-Beigi de Tabulis Longitudinis & Latitudinis Stellarum fixarum. This is a ſmall part of an Aſtronomical work of Ulug Beig. To this Dr. Hyde has added Mohamedes Tizinus's Tables of the Declenſion and Aſcenſion of the Fixed Stars.

[C] In 1674 he publiſhed a catalogue of the printed books in the Bodleian library.] It was printed at Oxford in folio under the following title: Catalogus impreſſorum Librorum Bibliothecæ Bodleianæ in Academiâ Oxonienſi: Curâ & Operâ Thomæ Hyde è Coll. Reginæ Oxon. Protobibliothecarii. The Imprimatur is dated November the 26th, 1674. The Dedication to Archbiſhop Sheldon is dated November the 25th 1674.

[D] He publiſhed ſeveral works beſides thoſe already mentioned.] He publiſhed Quatuor Evangelia & Acta Apoſtolorum Linguâ Malaicâ, Characteribus Europæis, at Oxford, 1677, in 4to. His Epiſtola de Menſuris & Ponderibus Serum ſive Sinenſium, &c. was printed at the end of Dr. Edward Bernard's book, intitled, De Menſuris & Ponderibus antiquis Libri tres, Oxford, 1688, in 8vo. In 1690 he publiſhed at Oxford in 4to, Annotatiunculæ in Tractatum Alberti Bobovii Turcarum Imp. Mohammedis IV. olim Interpretis primarii de Turcarum Liturgiâ, peregrinatione Meccanâ, Circumciſione, ægrotorum viſitatione, &c. Subjungitur Caſtigatio in Angelum a Sancto Joſepho, Carmelitarum diſcalceatorum in Perſide præfectum olim generalem. In 1691 he publiſhed at Oxford in 4to, Itinera Mundi, ſic dicta nempe Coſmographia, autore Abrahamo Peritſol; cum verſione & notis Thomæ Hyde. At the end of this book he has reprinted the two pieces abovementioned, viz. Tractatus Alberti Bobovii de Turcarum Liturgiâ, &c. and Caſtigatio in Angelum a Sancto Joſepho. In 1694 he publiſhed at Oxford in 8vo, De Ludis Orientalibus Libri duo, &c. The firſt book is divided into two parts; the firſt of which parts contains Mandragorias, ſeu Hiſtoria Shahiludii, &c. in Latin; and the ſecond part Hiſt. Shahiludii, &c. in Hebrew and Latin. This Hiſtoria Shahiludii had been publiſhed by itſelf at Oxford, 1689, in 8vo. The ſecond book contains Hiſtoria Nerdiludii, hoc eſt dicere, Trunculorum, &c. He wrote likewiſe In Hiſtoriam Plantarum Oxonienſium Annotationes Nominum ſingularum Plantarum Linguâ Arabicâ & Perſicâ & Turcicâ, publiſhed by Jacob Bobart in his Hiſtoria Plantarum, at Oxford, 1699, in 4to. Mr. Wood tells us (1), that in 1694, he had ready for the preſs Hiſtoriæ Ægypti naturalis curioſæ de Animalibus, Plantis, &c. Compendium, Arabicè & Latinè, cum Iconibus & Notis, in 8vo. Chinnuch ſeu Catechiſmus Eccleſiæ Anglicanæ Hebraicè verſus, cum Notis, in 8vo. Hiſtoria Religionis Veterum Perſarum eorumque Magorum, cum Zoroaſtris Vitâ & præceptis, ejuſque de Chriſti Vaticinium. Una cum Specimine veteris Linguæ & Scripturæ Perſicæ jam poſtliminio reſtituendæ. This was printed at Oxford in 1700 in 4to, under the following title: Hiſtoria Religionis Veterum Perſarum eorumque Magorum. Ubi etiam nova Abrahami, & Mithræ, & Veſtæ, & Manethis Hiſtoria, &c. atque Angelorum Officia & Præfecturæ ex Veterum Perſarum ſententiâ. Item Perſarum annus antiquiſſimus tangitur, is τῦ Gjemſhîd detegitur, verus τῦ Yeſdegherd de novâ proditur, is τῦ Melicſhâh, is τῦ Selgjûk & τῦ Chorzemſhâd notatur, & is τῆς Katâ & τῆς Oigbûr explicatur. Zoroaſtris vita ejuſque & aliorum vaticinia de Meſſiah è Perſarum aliorumque monumentis eruuntur: Primitivæ opiniones de Deo & de Hominum Origine reſerantur; originale Orientalis Sibyllæ Myſterium recluditur, atque Magorum Liber Sad-dor (Zoroaſtris præcepta ſeu Religionis Canones continens) è Perſico traductus exhibetur. Dantur Veterum Perſarum Scripturæ & Linguæ (ut hæ jam primò Europæ producantur & litterato Orbi poſtliminio reddantur) Specimina. De Perſiæ ejuſdemque Linguæ Nominibus, deque hujus Dialectis & à moderna differentiis ſtrictim agitur. Auctor eſt Thomas Hyde, S. T. D. Ling. Hebraicæ in Univerſitate Oxon. Profeſſor Regius, & Ling. Arabicæ Profeſſ. Laudianus. Præmiſſo Capitum Elencho; accedunt Icones, & Appendix variarum Diſſertationum. This work is dedicated to John Lord Somers, Baron of Eveſham. It is divided into thirty five chapters; to which is ſubjoined a large appendix containing ſeveral diſſertations. It appears from the title, that Dr. Hyde's deſign is not to give us a plan of the religion of the modern Perſians, which is to be found in the Koran, the Mahometan being the eſtabliſhed religion in Perſia now. In the firſt chapter he diſtinguiſhes the Perſians into antient and modern. The antient Perſians had a religion intirely different from that of the modern, and it has been ſtill preſerved among ſome of their deſcendants. The modern Perſians are a mixture of ſeveral different nations, Saracens, Tartars, Parthians, Medes, old Perſians become Mahometans, and women of Georgia and other countries tranſplanted into Perſia, who have formed a language compounded of thoſe of all theſe different nations. Our author, before he enters into particulars, gives us in this firſt chapter a general idea of the religion of theſe antient Perſians. There are ſome ſtill who profeſs it, both in Perſia and India, and lived ſeparately from the reſt as much as poſſible, and eat only with thoſe of their own religion, in order to preſerve their purity. This religion has paſſed through three different ſtates. The

(1) Athen. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 975.

He died in the middle of February $170\frac{2}{3}$.

firſt was a ſtate of purity; thoſe, who profeſſed it, worſhipped only the true God, of whom they had very juſt notions, which they had received from their anceſtors Shem and Elam. The ſecond ſtate is that, in which Sabaiſm was mixed with the knowledge and worſhip of the true God. They did not indeed worſhip the ſun and the planets; but they had too much reverence for thoſe ſtars, and fell into ſuperſtition in that reſpect. Abraham oppoſed, with the utmoſt vigour, all kinds of falſe worſhip, and all the ſuperſtitions of his age; and as the Perſians highly revere that Patriarch, and acknowledge that they received their religion from him, Dr. Hyde is perſuaded, that Abraham reduced them from their errors, and reſtored amongſt them the worſhip of the true God in all its purity. But they afterwards fell back into their former ſuperſtitions, though without loſing the knowledge of the true God, whoſe ſervice they were always ſo jealous of, that they abominated all adoration of images. The third ſtate of the religion of the antient Perſians is, when in imitation of the fire preſerved upon the altar in the temple of Jeruſalem, they kept likewiſe a perpetual fire upon an altar; which cuſtom was obſerved likewiſe by the Greeks and Romans. This gave occaſion to the common opinion, that the antient Perſians worſhipped fire; but our author endeavours to juſtify them from that imputation. He owns, that they regarded this fire as a thing ſacred, and paid to it a kind of ſervice, which he calls Pyrodulia; but he denies, that they ever paid to it a proper adoration, which he ſtiles Pyrolatria. We are not to be ſurprized, that practices have been imputed to theſe people, which they never obſerved. It is very difficult to know thoroughly their religion, ſince Zoroaſter their great Prophet has expreſly prohibited them to inſtruct ſtrangers in it, or in their language. However our author having deſired one of his friends, who lived in Perſia, to inform himſelf of the prieſts of that religion, concerning the worſhip paid by them to Mithra, which is the ſun; they anſwered, that they did not pay any divine worſhip to it, or to the moon, or to the ſtars; but only turned towards the ſun, when they prayed, becauſe the nature of it nearly reſembles that of fire. They regarded it likewiſe as the image of God; and ſome of them have ſaid, that God reſides in it, and others have imagined, that it will be the ſeat of the bleſſed. Theſe are the true grounds of their reſpect for the ſun: but this reſpect does not go ſo far as adoration, It is the ſame caſe with regard to fire: when they are aſked, whether they worſhip it, they conſtantly deny it, affirming, that they worſhip God alone. But as they had a great reſpect for their ſacred fire, if any one of them was obliged to take an oath, he uſed to do it before this fire burning upon an altar; as the Jews did before the altar at Jeruſalem, upon which there was fire. It was likewiſe the cuſtom of the Pagan Arabians, who when they ſuſpected, that the perſon, who was about to ſwear, would take a falſe oath, they privately caſt ſalt into the fire, in order to ſtrike a terror upon him by the crackling noiſe, which it made. As the Jews burnt their ſacrifices in the ſacred fire, the Perſians did the ſame, imagining that the ſacrifices would not pollute the fire like other prophane things; but if any perſon threw filth, or ſpit into it, it was a crime worthy of death. The Kings of Perſia, and other wealthy perſons, ſometimes caſt into the fire pearls, ſpices and precious oils, in order to nouriſh the flames more delicately, and this they called Fire-Feaſts. But they did this to the honour of God, and referred to him ultimately all that they did with reſpect to the fire, or by means of it. But this was not the only element, which they ſhewed their reverence to; for they reſpected the air, water, and earth, and conſidered them as the principles of all things. They had and ſtill have Curators of theſe four elements, who are employed to take care of the waters, the rivers, and fountains, to prevent as much as poſſible the air from being infected with any ſtink, the fire from being polluted with any filth, or the earth with any dead body. It is out of regard to the earth, that they do not bury their dead; and for fear of infecting the air, they keep crows and vultures, to devour the corpſes, which have no other tombs than the entrails of theſe birds of prey. It was for the ſame reaſon, that Numa appointed, that the Veſtals ſhould take care of the four elements; ſo that the word Veſta is ſometimes uſed for fire, and ſometimes for the earth. The Veſtals were alſo obliged to look after the fountain of the Muſes near their Temple. The Perſians abominate all noxious animals, and on the contrary have a prodigious eſteem for a dog and a cock. Zoroaſter expreſly commands them to maintain dogs; and they are ſo fond of cocks, becauſe they are a kind of living clocks, that they would expoſe themſelves to the ſevereſt pains rather than cut off the head of one of theſe animals. Hence it is, that Ariſtophanes calls a cock the bird of Perſia or Media; and there are ſuch a vaſt number of them in thoſe countries that our travellers ſcarce eat any thing elſe; and from hence that uſeful bird has been propagated over the whole world. In the ſecond chapter our author mentions how the Perſians boaſt of having received their religion from Abraham, which gives him occaſion to repreſent the hiſtory of the life of that Patriarch, to examine into his true ſentiments with regard to religion, and to compare them with thoſe of the Perſians. He explains in a quite new manner divers Chaldee words, the true ſignification of which was before unknown. He ſhews, that Abraham became famous over the whole world, and that God's command to him to offer up his ſon, which the Pagans imagined to have been executed, led them to think, that in order to obtain ſome ſignal favour from heaven, the ſureſt way was to offer up one of their children to God. The Indian idolaters ſtiled their chief prieſt Brahma or Brahama, which is nothing elſe but the name of Abraham. This Patriarch, according to the Jews and Eaſtern people, whoſe opinion our author does not diſapprove of, lived in the time of Nimrod, who was the Ninus of the Pagans, and was the ſon of Cuſh. The latter lived in the territory of Babylon; but Chaldea being too ſmall for his deſcendants, they removed into the neighbouring country, and ſettled there. This country was called at firſt from their father's name the land of Cuſh, and afterwards the land of Havilah, and it had the name of Arabia from Yaarab, the ſon of Joktan; who dwelt in that country, and poſſeſſed it. From this remark and ſome others Dr. Hyde concludes, that it is a miſtake to underſtand Ethiopia to be the land of Cuſh mentioned in ſcripture; ſince the word is not taken in that ſenſe in any part of the Bible, but always ſignifies the territory of Babylon, or Arabia. There are ſeveral other curious obſervations in this chapter. Some authors are of opinion, that Abraham was educated from his birth in the true religion, which was that of Eber, one of his anceſtors; but Dr. Hyde thinks the common notion more probable, viz that Abraham was at firſt an idolater, but afterwards converted to the knowledge of the true God, by the particular interpoſition of heaven. It is impoſſible to ſay at what age he was converted. The opinion of the Perſians, who aſſert, that he was then fifteen years of age, or that of Cedrenus, who tells us that he was twenty four years old, is not diſapproved by our author; who makes a great many other curious remarks upon Abraham, and upon his father Terah, his country, actions, &c. In the third chapter Dr. Hyde examines more particularly into the religion of the Perſians, and ſhews in what it agreed and what it ſtill agrees in with that of Abraham. He treats alſo of the Sabaites and their religion. The Perſians knew the hiſtory of the creation of the world, having learned it from the Jews, or from Zoroaſter; and they kept it more pure than any other nation. As Moſes has ſaid nothing of the creation of good or bad angels, the Perſians have likewiſe omitted it. Our author is of opinion, that though angels are created beings, and conſequently not ſo antient as their Creator, yet it is not to be doubted, but that they exiſted an infinite time before the creation of the world, and are ſo antient, that it is impoſſible for the mind of man to form a juſt idea of their duration; "for it is not, ſays he, pious or fit to imagine, that God was at any time without miniſters; "and we ought to believe, that he had always angels "ready to ſerve, and diſpoſed at all times to execute "his HYPERIUS (ANDREW (GERARD) a celebrated Miniſter and Profeſſor of Divinity, was born at Ypres in Flanders May the 16th 1511. It is from his native place he

" his commands." Quamvis Angeli ſint Creaturæ, adeoque non antiquitate æquales ſint cum ſuo Creatore; nullum tamen eſt dubium quin extiterint infinito tempore ante Creationem mundi, & ſint tantæ antiquitatis, quæ ſit ultra humanæ mentis vires conceptionemque rite conſiderare aut perpendere; quod piè credendum eſt, cum non ſit pium aut decorum imaginari Deum ullo unquam tempore fuiſſe Miniſtris deſtitutum, ſed ſemper habuiſſe Angelos miniſtrantes, qui ad nutum ipſius divinum juſſa præſtare conſtanter omni tempore parati fuerint (2). Our author ſuppoſes likewiſe, that the apoſtate angels tranſgreſſed before the creation of the world, though not long before it. He thinks, that as the Perſians were deſcended from Shem, they received alſo from him the knowledge of the true God, though they fell afterwards into a kind of Sabaiſm, like the reſt of the world. They were recovered from their errors by Abraham; upon which account they gave the name of that Patriarch to their religion, calling it the Religion of Abraham. He conquered Chedorlaomer, King of Perſia; and it is probable, that this Prince and his allies, embraced the religion of the conqueror; and that this example was followed by the ſubjects of theſe Princes, as the people generally follow the religion of their governors. With regard to the Sabaites, the Doctor informs us, that this is not the name of a particular nation, as that of the Sabeans, who were called ſo from Saba, a city in Arabia Felix. It is the name of a ſect diſperſed over ſeveral nations, who worſhipped ſtars and idols. The Arabians have not ſucceeded in the origin of this name, ſince they imagined, that the word Sabaa ſignified to change one's religion. The word Sabaite comes from the Hebrew צבא, Saba, which ſignifies troops or an army or hoſt; and the name of Sabaites was given to thoſe, who worſhipped the hoſt of heaven, that is, the ſtars. There were two kinds of Sabaites, one of whom worſhipped the ſtars, and the other idols. The former were of two kinds; viz. the Greek Sabaites, who chiefly addreſſed their devotion to the planets; and the Indian Sabaites, who addreſſed it to the fixed ſtars. The Doctor corrects here ſeveral profane writers, who have ſpoken very differently and confuſedly of the religion of the Perſians, and rectifies their accounts by diſtinguiſhing the times. He agrees with Herodotus and Strabo, that there was a time, when the Perſians had neither temples nor altars. It was when they addreſſed their prayers only to the planets or to God, to procure their propitious influences. But when they began to build certain places, in which to keep the ſacred fire, and which the Doctor calls Pyrea, they began likewiſe to have altars, upon which they ſometimes offered ſacrifices. It is not abſolutely true, what thoſe Authors have written, that the Perſians had no Images, ſince Giemſhid, one of their Kings, is accuſed of idolatry, and ſince towards the end of their Empire they worſhiped Venus in Temples appointed for that purpoſe, where that Goddeſs had her Prieſts and Prieſteſſes. Herodotus relates, that there was a law at Babylon, which ordered, that the women ſhould come once in their lives to the Temple of Venus, and proſtitute themſelves to the firſt paſſenger who would have any commerce with them; and that they could not refuſe this. The richer ſort went in a chariot with a magnificent equipage. When they were once come to the Temple, they were obliged not to return, till ſome paſſenger had pity on them. Thoſe who were handſome, continues Herodotus, returned ſoon, but ſome ordinary women ſtay'd ſeveral years before they received their paſſport. Dr. Hyde obſerves, that he had not read any where, that the Perſians had any other ſtatues but that of Venus. The fourth chapter is deſigned to prove againſt the Greek and Latin Writers, that the ſervice paid to Mithra, or the Sun, was not a divine adoration, properly ſo called. The fifth chapter contains a kind of digreſſion upon the modern Sabaiſm, and the idolatry of the Nations, who made Idols under the influences of the Planets. In the ſixth chapter we ſee the care which the antient Perſians took of the water and fire; for though they endeavoured to preſerve the purity of all the four elements, yet they took a more particular care of the water and fire, ſince theſe two elements were moſt obnoxious to pollution. They believed, that there was an Angel eſpecially appointed to guard the water, and called him Ardiſûr, or Arduiſûr. They celebrated his praiſes, and deſired him to continue in his office. The ſeventh chapter treats of the Goddeſs Veſta, adored by the Greeks and Romans. The eighth chapter treats of the Goddeſs Veſta of the Perſians, and the care which the Magi, their Prieſts, took to preſerve the fire. Theſe Prieſts were obliged to be married, becauſe among thoſe people it was meritorious with regard both to this world and that which is to come, to increaſe the number of the faithful by propagating the ſpecies. The Doctor is of opinion, that the Perſians uſed to maintain the ſacred fire long before the reformation of their religion by Zoroaſter. Hence it follows, that before his time they had likewiſe covered places in the form of Temples, ſince they could not otherwiſe have preſerved the fire. Zoroaſter only augmented the number, as our Author proves. There is ſtill extant a Perſian book, intitled, Gjâvidân Chrad, i. e. The Eternal Wiſdom, which is older than all the writings of Zoroaſter, and aſcribed to one of their Kings named Hûſhang. This book proves evidently, that the people of thoſe times worſhiped the only true God. The ſame appears from ſome other books cited by the Doctor. The ninth chapter treats of the two principles of all things, according to the notions of the Perſians; of the names given to them; and of their opinions with regard to the Deity and the creation of all things. They eſtabliſhed two principles; the firſt of theſe which is ſingle and eternal, the Author and Principle of all good, is God, whom they called Yezàd, Izàd, or Izid, that is, He who ought to be pray'd to. They called him likewiſe Ormùzd, or Hormùz, or Hormizda, and by joining a more modern name, Hormizda Choda, that is, O great God, or, O ſupreme God. It is from this word, that the Greeks formed that of Oromaſdes. Beſides this Principle they laid down another created one, which they ſuppoſed to be the Principle of Evil, and called it Ahâriman, Ahreman, Ahrîman, and ſometimes in poetry Ahrimanân; whence the Greeks, who wrote the Hiſtory of Perſia, took their Ἀρειμάνιος. This word is compounded of two others, which are ſynonymous, and ſignify impure, polluted; ſo that theſe two words being joined ſignify very impure, and very much polluted. In their antient books, to ſhew the abhorrence which they had to the Demon, whom they called by this name, they wrote it in an inverted manner, thus: uvuıuvqy. With reſpect to the Creation, the Perſians taught with the ſcriptures, that it was performed in ſix ſpaces of time. But they pretend, that they are not ſimple days, and that by a day we are to underſtand the ſpace of ſeveral days. Here is the manner in which they divide theſe ſix periods of time, and the names which they give to them. They called the firſt Mid-yûzeram, containing the ſpace of forty five days, in which God created the Heavens. The ſecond was called Mid-yûſham, containing ſixty days, employed in creating the waters. The third was called Pîtiſhahim, and comprehends ſeventy five days, in which the earth was created. The fourth was called Jyaſeram, and contains thirty days, in which the trees were produced. The fifth was called Midiyârim, and comprehends eighty days, during which all the creatures were made. An Author cited by the Doctor tells us, that in this fifth period God created the beaſts and Birds, namely an hundred and ſeventy two kinds of beaſts, and an hundred and ten kinds of birds. The ſixth period was called Hamſpitámidîm, and contains ſeventy five days, in which Man was created. All theſe periods together make three hundred and ſixty five days, which form one year. According to the Perſians, the creation began about May, and ended in the ſame Month; ſo that Adam, when he roſe from the hands of God, ſaw the whole earth covered with fruits. Zoroaſter appointed, that for each of theſe ſix periods employed in the Creation, there ſhould be obſerved five feſtival days. In the ninth chapter our Author treats of the origin of mankind, of the deluge, of divers imaginary terreſtrial Paradiſes, of Moſes

(2) Pag. 82, 83.

he took the name under which he is known (a). His father, who was a Civilian, and had already ſent him to ſtudy in ſeveral places, finding his end drawing near in the year 1528

(a) The City of Ypres hae been called Hyperæ by ſeveral authors. Beza calls it thus in Iconibus, and ſays, Andreas Gerardus a Patria Hyperius fuit cognominatus.

and Solomon; and ſhews, that the religion of the ancient Perſians agrees in many points with that of the Jews, and was derived from it. Thoſe people believed, that Adam and Eve were the ſtock, from whence mankind deſcended, though ſome among them gave our firſt parents different names. They believed an univerſal deluge, which covered the whole earth. But all were not of this opinion; ſome denied the deluge; others ſaid, that it was not univerſal, and that it did not riſe above the top of a mountain near Hulvan, a City upon the frontiers of Aſſyria and Perſia. The Perſians have ſpoken of divers terreſtrial Paradiſes, and ſometimes given different names to the ſame place. This was occaſioned becauſe the true ſituation of the Garden of Eden was uncertain. Some fixed it at Jeruſalem, others at other places. The Perſians had ſome knowledge of Moſes, whom they ſtiled the ruddy Shepherd, who holds a ſtaff; becauſe he was a ſhepherd when he lived with Jethro his father-in-law; and becauſe he performed all his miracles in Egypt and the Wilderneſs by means of his rod. They had knowledge alſo of Solomon, whom they called Gjem, which is likewiſe the name of one of their Kings. The eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth chapters contain the names and attributes, which they gave to God, to Angels, and to the Devil. In the ſeven following chapters the Doctor treats of the year, and the different epochas of the antient Perſians and other Nations, and of the names of the Angels, whom they imagined to preſide over every month of the year. The antient Perſian year was Solar, and not Lunar; but as it conſiſted only of twelve months of thirty days each, it did not anſwer exactly to the time in which the ſun paſſes through the ecliptic; by which means the beginning of their year anſwered ſucceſſively to all the degrees of the ſigns of the zodiac, and ran through all the ſeaſons, till after a revolution of 1460 years it returned to the ſame point, where it had begun. King Giemſhid leaving this manner of eſtimating time for civil purpoſes, eſtabliſhed another for religion, in order that in a certain period of time the ſame feſtivals might come together at the ſame ſeaſon of the year. For this purpoſe he ordered, that at the end of 120 years there ſhould be an intercalation of a whole Month, which ſhould receive its name from the month after which it was intercalated. Yeſdegherd eſtabliſhed another epocha; and ordered the years to be computed from the beginning of his reign, and fixed the beginning of the year at March, from which it was very different when that Prince began his reign. He aboliſhed the names of the Angels, which the months bore, and gave them natural names, taken from the ſeaſon prevailing in each month. He altered alſo the names of the days, and gave them ſuch as were taken from ſome remarkable event; calling one, for inſtance, abundance of riches, another by a name which expreſſed ſome great rejoycing upon it, another from the revenge which he had taken of ſome of his enemies, from ſome battle, or other ſingular event. He aboliſhed in conſequence of this all the feaſts and divine ſervice obſerved on certain days; ſo that in his Calendar there was no feſtival but that of the new year. But Yeſdegherd reigning but twenty years, the Perſians, who had not forgotten their ceremonies, returned after his death to their old method of computation, reſtoring to the months and days the names which they had before the reign of that Prince. It is a miſtake therefore of ſeveral Eaſtern and European Writers to call this ancient epocha the epocha of Yeſdegherd, ſince on the contrary that epocha was aboliſhed by that Prince, who eſtabliſhed another, which continued no longer than his reign. It appears, that the ancient Perſians did not know the diſtinction of the year into weeks, but that they divided it only into twelve equal parts; and all the days of the months had their particular names, as thoſe of the weeks have with us. Dr. Hyde gives us alſo an explanation of the epocha's of the Tartars and Chineſe; and in the nineteenth and twentieth chapters he mentions the different offices aſcribed to the Angels by the Perſians; and obſerves, that the ancient and modern Perſians, as well as the Mahometans, imagined, that every man has two Angels attending him, one good, the other bad. In the twenty firſt and twenty ſecond chapters he treats of the Legiſlators of the ancient Perſians, of the ſtate of their primitive and orthodox Church, of the hereſies, ſects, and heretics among them, and particularly of Manes, Mazdek, and ſome others. After Abraham, their oldeſt Legiſlator was Zoroaſter, who lived in the time of Darius, the ſon of Hyſtaſpes, and aſſuming the character of a Prophet, after ſome difficulty procured the King to approve his religion, who eſtabliſhed it in his dominions. It was the ancient religion purged from Sabaiſm, with the addition of ſome particular rites and ceremonies. This religion is retained by many of the Perſians to this day. The works of Zoroaſter, which contain divers precepts relating to doctrine and manners, are in the ſame eſteem with them, as the Bible with Chriſtians. However if we judge by the Book, a tranſlation of which is ſubjoined to our Author's work, among ſeveral good rules of morality there are a great number of ſuperſtitious and trifling things. The religion of Zoroaſter did not always continue in the ſame ſtate; it ſuffer'd ſeveral changes, as particularly under the reign of Alexander the Great, who conquered Perſia, and under ſome other Princes. King Ardeſhîr Babecân, who reigned two hundred years after Chriſt, called together a kind of Council, in order to conſult the Prieſts of his dominions upon ſeveral important points of religion, and by this means cleared it from ſeveral errors, with which it had been before in a manner diſfigured. This reformation was brought about by the aſſiſtance of a certain Legiſlator named Erdaviráph. But it did not long continue; for Manes propagated his monſtrous notions over Perſia, where he was born. In the twenty third chapter Dr. Hyde gives us an account of the life of Darius Hyſtaſpes; and in the twenty fourth that of Zoroaſter. He obſerves, that his true name is Zerduſht, that of Zoroaſter being invented by the Greeks, who, in order to accommodate foreign names to their own language, have generally diſfigured them in ſuch a manner, that it is almoſt impoſſible to gueſs at the true name. They have likewiſe often given the ſame name to different perſons, on account of ſome reſemblance; and this has happened upon the preſent occaſion; ſo that there are almoſt as many Zoroaſters as there were Hercules's. But the Perſians ſpeak only of one, and agree about the age in which he lived, though they differ about his country. Some relate, that he came from China, and others from Europe, by which perhaps they mean Paleſtine, which is not far diſtant from it. The moſt certain opinion is, that he was born in Perſia, but that his father being poor, he became ſervant to the Prophet Eſdras, and ſeeing his maſter working divers miracles, he was induced to attempt the ſame, or, at leaſt, to pretend it, in order to eſtabliſh a new religion, or to reform that, which was already eſtabliſhed. Monſieur Bernard (3) remarks in his account of our Author's Book, that he does not find that Eſdras ever worked any miracles; but that if Zoroaſter really was a ſervant of his, we may aſſert with greater probability, that he learned of that Prophet all the miracles which Moſes and the other Prophets performed. Dr. Hyde gives a long account of the artifices made uſe of by Zoroaſter to attain his end. He ſpent but four or five years in digeſting and propagating his doctrines; and then was killed together with eighty other Prieſts. But it is probable, that before he undertook his reformation, he wrote and prepared a conſiderable number of books, which he publiſhed afterwards. Our Author rejects what the Greeks have written concerning his Death. He employs his twenty fifth chapter in explaining the general name of Zend or Zendaveſtâ, which Zoroaſter gave to his work. The word Zend in Arabic, and that of Eſbta Hebræo-

(3) Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, Mars 1701, pag. 252.

1528 ordered his wife to ſend him to Paris, that he might continue his ſtudies there. This was done accordingly. Hyperius ſtudied Philoſophy three years following in the College

Hebræo-Chaldaick, and ſignifies Fire; ſo that we may tranſlate the word Zendaveſtâ, an Inſtrument to ſtrike fire with; Zoroaſter intimating by this, that the deſign of his works was to kindle the fire of zeal and piety in the hearts of men. In the twenty ſixth chapter the Doctor treats particularly of Zoroaſter's books, and of the language and character in which they are written. The original of Zendaveſta was written upon twelve ſkins in the Perſian language, but in ancient characters, not underſtood by all the modern Perſians. All his works are in proſe; ſo that whatever is in verſe, and aſcribed to him, is abſolutely ſpurious. It is true, that ſome Perſian Prieſts have tranſlated into verſe a ſmall part of their Legiſlator's writings, becauſe the people did not underſtand the language of the original; but they did not begin to do it till two hundred years ago, and the ancient Perſians never undertook any thing of that kind. In the twenty ſeventh chapter our Author treats of the nature of fire, the manner of keeping it among the Perſians, the ſignal uſed to call them to the public aſſemblies, their manner of behaving in their Temples, their uſe of rods in divine ſervice, their daily repeating of their prayers in a low voice, and their ſilence. In the city of Nuſſari in India, the followers of Zoroaſter aſſemble at the ſound of a little bell; but at Iſpahan, the capital of Perſia, they know the proper times of aſſembling without any ſignal, or by only making uſe of a large piece of wood, which they ſtrike; and this they do to avoid offending the Mahometans, who will not permit the uſe of bells, becauſe they were invented by the Chriſtians. When the Perſians pray, they place themſelves at a ſmall diſtance from the fire, which burns in their great Temples, for fear of polluting it with their breath; but in ſmall Temples there is only a lamp. For the greater precaution, they cover their mouth with a ſquare piece of linnen called Panâm. They pray with a low voice, and only murmur between their teeth. The Prieſt advances nearer to the fire; he has alſo his mouth covered, and a cap with ears on his head, and is covered with an Albe, holding in one hand a book, and in the other ſeveral white rods. He chants likewiſe the prayers, and recites the office taken from the book Zend. Sometimes in the warmth of devotion he ſtands upon one foot, in imitation of their great Prophet. After prayers follow the offerings. Every perſon who is able caſts into the fire precious ointments, ſpices, pearls, or at leaſt corn or fleſh. In the twenty eighth chapter our Author treats of the Prieſthood and Hierarchy of the Magi, at the time when their church was in its flouriſhing ſtate, and even at preſent. He tells us, that this Hierarchy was not much different from that, which ſubſiſts now in thoſe Chriſtian Churches, in which the ſeveral ſacred orders are diſtinguiſhed. The Clergy were formerly very rich, but they are in very different circumſtances now under the oppreſſion of the Mahometans. The revenue of the Prieſts conſiſts chiefly of this, that upon the 24th of April all the inhabitants of a Pariſh extinguiſh the fire in their houſes, and go to light it again by the fire of their Prieſt, paying him each of them for this purpoſe about ſix ſhillings and three pence. They likewiſe pay tythes. In the twenty ninth and thirtieth chapters the Author treats further of the fire; mentions the names given it by the Perſians; and ſpeaks of the Temples built to preſerve it in, of the manner in which the Magi behave in them, of the reproachful names given by the Mahometans to the followers of Zoroaſter, of thoſe given to each other; of their Prieſthood, their ſeveral ſacred orders, and the particular names given them, and of the habits of the Prieſts. In the thirty firſt chapter he diſcourſes of the Perſian Magi in general, and particularly of thoſe who came to worſhip Chriſt immediately after his birth. The Perſians by the word Mogh mean their Wiſe Men and Prieſts. The Chaldeans have taken from this their word Mag, and the Greeks adding their termination have changed it into Μάγος, which ſignifies, not a Magician, but a Philoſopher, or Wiſe Man. Such where thoſe who came to Bethlehem, and not Kings, as is commonly ſaid without any foundation. Dr. Hyde thinks after Petavius, that they came from Perſia, and not from Arabia, which they only paſſed through, or, to ſpeak more exactly, from the Country of the Parthians, where there was the ſame religion and Magi as in Perſia, and where the ſeat of the Empire was at the birth of Chriſt. The Prince, who ſent theſe Magi, permitted them to come, was the ſame Phraates, the ſon of Orodes, who ſent his four ſons to Rome to be educated there, who did homage to Auguſtus, and reſtored to the Romans the enſigns, which his father Orodes had taken from Craſſus. The Goſpel, according to Dr. Hyde, and divers learned Writers, informs us, that the birth of Chriſt was revealed to the Perſians. They had this advantage over many other Nations, as well that the Chriſtian Revelation might be immediately known in the moſt diſtant places, as becauſe the Perſians were the only people, except the Jews, who had preſerved the knowledge and worſhip of the true God, though mixed with ſome ſuperſtitions. What the Prophet Iſaiah foretold concerning Cyrus two hundred years before the birth of that Prince, is a ſufficient proof of the particular regard which God had for the Perſians. But whence could theſe Magi learn, that a Meſſiah was to be born among the Jews? Daniel and ſome other Prophets had been in their Country. Beſides we find ſome Predictions in the writings of their pretended Prophet Zoroaſter, who was ſometimes inſpired by God, as Balaam had been before. Add to this, that the prophecies of the Old Teſtament were not unknown to them. In the thirty ſecond chapter our Author ſhews the original of all the fabulous ſtories relating to the Sibyls and the books aſcribed to them; and in the thirty third chapter he gives a ſhort account of the religion of the ancient Perſians. He ſhews, that they conſtantly believed one God, almighty and eternal, poſſeſſed of all perfections which Chriſtians aſcribe to him. They believe an univerſal reſurrection both of the good and bad, and a laſt judgment, in which every one will receive according to his works; the good a life of eternal Happineſs, and the vicious an eternity of miſery; God having prepared for the former a Paradiſe of Chryſtal, and for the latter an Abyſs to plunge them into. They believe, that they offend God every day, but they proteſt, that they repent of all their ſins, both of mind and body, by their thoughts, words, and actions. They believe, that God has given the government of cities and provinces to Planets and Angels. That they are ſent for the good or puniſhment of mankind, when he thinks proper. That every man has his good and evil Angel, the former of whom inclines him to virtue, and the latter to evil. That the Devil is an irreconcileable enemy to Mankind. That God favours certain perſons with an infuſed Light, which qualifies them to govern other men, and to become ſkilful in arts and ſciences. The good likewiſe receive ſuch a light. But Dr. Hyde is of opinion, that this ſignifies only natural light or reaſon. The Perſians believe, that in the life to come the vicious will be tormented with different kinds of puniſhment; but inſtead of fire they ſpeak of darkneſs, and a black ſtinking river, the waters of which are cold as ſnow; and ſuppoſe them to be formed of tears ſhed for the dead, and which ſerve only to enhance their puniſhment. They have not all the ſame notions concerning the place of happineſs; ſome have fixed it in the ſun, with the Manicheans and other heretics; others have imagined, that after the reſurrection the bleſſed will live upon the earth, which ſhall be renewed, after having paſſed through a conflagration. They ſpeak likewiſe of a bridge built upon the abyſs, over which the ſouls ſeparated from the bodies are to paſs into the ſeat of immortality; and they mention ſeveral other ſtrange things related by our author. In the thirty fourth chapter he treats of the marriage of the Perſians; of their baptiſms and ablutions; and of their funeral rites. In the laſt chapter he treats of the names of Perſia and the Perſians; and of their antient and modern language, and its different dialects, that is, of the language of the Perſians, Medes, and other people of Aſia. To theſe thirty five chapters is ſubjoined a Latin tranſlation of a book uſed

College of Calvi; and after he had taken a little journey to Ypres, he returned to Paris in the year 1532, and ſtudied Divinity there till the year 1535. He went afterwards to Louvain, and then he travelled through ſeveral Provinces of the Low-Countries and of Germany; which rendered ineffectual the pains his friends had taken to procure him a living without his knowledge; for as ſoon as it was repreſented to Carondilet Archbiſhop of Palermo and Chancellor to the Emperor, that he had travelled in Germany, this rendered him ſo much ſuſpected of hereſy, that he was obliged to think of a ſanctuary. He went into England, and lived above four years with an Engliſh Nobleman, who was a lover of learning [A]. He croſſed the ſea again in 1541, and deſigned to viſit the Univerſity of Straſburg, and particularly to ſee Bucer, who made that Univerſity very famous. But as he paſſed through the country of Heſſe, he met at Marpurg with a Profeſſor of Divinity, named Geldenhaur, who was one of his friends, and who in order to keep him there, gave him hopes of ſome employment in the Univerſity of that city. He ſettled there, and ſoon after ſucceeded his friend, who died in January 1542. He continued two years in that employment without marrying. But thinking that he could not live any longer comfortably without a wife, eſpecially becauſe he was not very well in health (a reaſon which would have hindred a great many other perſons from entering into the marriage ſtate) in the year 1544 he married (b) a widow, by whom he got ſix ſons and four daughters. He died at Marpurg February the 1ſt 1564, having acquitted himſelf by the Magi, intitled Sad der, containing the laws and precepts of Zoroaſter. It was written above two hundred years ago in verſe in the modern Perſian language by one of their Prieſts, the ſon of Melichſáh, a man of great learning and ſkill in the old Perſian, and in the antient books written in that language. In the fourth Porta or chapter the author exhorts ſinners not to deſpair of the mercy of God, ſince he is ready to give much, and to receive but little. He mentions upon this occaſion, that while Zoroaſter was converſing familiarly with God, that Prophet ſaw a man, whoſe whole body was in hell, except his right foot. He aſked who he was, and God anſwered, that it was a Prince who had reigned over thirty three cities, and done no good during his life, having given up himſelf to oppreſſion, injuſtice, and violence, and made his people ſuffer a thouſand evils. But that having one day met with a ſheep bound, at ſuch a diſtance from his food that it could not reach it, he thruſt it towards the ſheep with his foot; which for this reaſon was exempted from the torments of hell, to which the reſt of his body was expoſed. In the twenty fifth Porta the author diſſuades from faſting; and teaches, that the true faſt conſiſts in abſtinence from ſin. In the ſixty ſeventh he places lying among the worſt of ſins. The Appendix of Dr. Hyde contains ſeveral curious obſervations. Mr. Wood tells us (4) that 1694 Dr. Hyde deſigned to publiſh the following books, if he ſhould live to finiſh them, having already done ſomething towards all of them, viz. I. Grammatica pro Linguâ Perſica; in 4to. II. Lexicon Perſico-Latinum; in a thick 4to. III. Lexicon Turcico-Latinum; in a thick 4to. IV. Nomenclator Mogolo-Tataricum, cum Grammaticâ ejuſdem Linguæ. V. Diſſertatio de Tartariâ. Item Hiſtoria Chartiludii; & Diſſertatio de Numerorum Notis, earundemque origine & combinandi ratione, doctrinâ novâ; in 8vo. VI. Curioſa Chinenſia & Selanenſia; in 8vo. VII. Hiſtoria Gemmarum Arabicè & Latinè, cum Notis; in 8vo. VIII. Hiſtoria Tamerlanis Arabicè & Latinè cum Notis; in 4to. IX. Liber Buſtân Perſicè & Latinè cum Notis: Liber elegantiſſimus, autore Scheia Shadi; in 4to. X. Divini Poetæ Hâphix Opus Perſicè & Latinè, cum Notis; in 4to. XI. Abulfedæ Geographia Arabicè & Latinè, cum Notis; in 4to. XII. Liber Bâhariſtân eloquentiſſimo Stylo conſcriptus, meri ingenii Specimina continens, Librum Guliſtân æquans, ſi non ſuperans, Perſicè & Latinè, cum Notis; in 4to. XIII. Maimonidis Liber More Nevochim tranſcriptus ex characteribus Hebraicis quibus a Maimonide ſcriptum eſt, in proprios Arabicos, cum novâ Verſione & Notis, Arabicè & Latine; in a thick 4to. XIV. Hiſtoria Regum Perſicæ ex ipſorum monumentis & autoribus extracta; in 4to. XV. Annotationes in difficiliora Loca Biblica ex Literaturâ Orientali; in a thick 4to. XVI. Periplus Marium Mediterranei & Archipelagi Turcicè & Latinè cum circulo ventorum in variis Linguis, Arabicâ, Perſicâ, Chinenſi, &c. in 8vo. XVII. Zoroaſtris Perſo-Medi Opera omnia Mathematico-medico-phyſico-Theologica Perſicè & Latinè; in folio. XVIII. Liber Erdaviraph-name Perſicè & Latine; in 4to. XIX. Lexicon Hebraicum emendatum ex MSS. Lexicis Rabbi Pinchon, R. Jonæ, & R. Jeſaiæ, atque ex collatione cum Linguis Arabicâ & Perſicâ & aliis Linguis Orientalibus; in 4to. XX. Cœlum Orientale Arabico-Perſicum, atq; Occidentale Græco-Latinum, una cum Saphii Figurationibus Stellarum duplici ſitu, prout in Cœlo, & prout in Globo apparent, cum earum nominibus ſecundum harum gentium doctrinam; in 4to. XXI. Commentarius in Pentateuchum Arabicè, auctor Manſûr Syro-Arabe ex Scripturâ Gerſhumi in Arabicam tranſcriptus & Latinitate donatus; in 4to. XXII. Urbium Armeniæ Nomenclaturæ ex eorum Geographia excerptæ, &c. XXIII. Varia Chinenſia, ſcil. eorum Idololatria, Opiniones de Deo & de Paradiſo atque de Gehennâ, & de Gradibus & modis ſupplicii; de eorum Literaturâ & Libris & Chartâ, & de imprimendi modo atque antiquitate &c. omnia excerpta ex ore & ſcriptis nativi Chinenſis Shin Fo-burg; in 8vo. XXIV. Varia Selanenſia, ubi inſulæ Selan (vulgo Batavis Ceylon) Hiſtorica quædam & vocabularium genuinis eorum Characteribus exaratum cum eorum Alphabeto & aliis rebus; in 8vo. XXV. Bantamenſe Alphabetum à Legato ſcriptum cum Literarum poteſtate & numerorum notis; in 8vo. XXVI. Notæ Arithmeticæ variarum Gentium, ubi talium Notarum Origo & combinandi ratio docetur; in 8vo. XXVII. Dialogi Arabico-Perſico-Turcici, Latinè verſi; in 8vo. XXVIII. Liber de Turcarum opinionibus in rebus religioſis, Turcicè & Latinè; in 8vo. XXIX. Utilia, menſalia, ſcil. quid in Converſatione Convivali decorum eſt, Arabicè & Latinè; in 8vo. XXX. Rivolæ Lexicon Armeniacum cum Linguis Orientalibus (ſcil. Arabicâ, Perſicâ, & Turcicâ) collatum & in margine notatum; in 4to. XXXI. Evangelium Lucæ & Acta Apoſtolorum Linguâ & Charactere Malaico; in 4to. He alſo tranſlated into Engliſh the letters of ſeveral Eaſtern Kings and Princes ſent to King Charles II, King James II, and King William III. T.

(b) Animum ad matrimonium adjecit, quod non putaret ſe commode ſine uxore, maxime cum non ita firma valetudine eſſet, vitam tranſigere poſſe. Melchior Adam. in Vitis Theolog. pag. 393.

(4) Athen. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 975, 976.

[A] He lived with an Engliſh Nobleman, who was a lover of learning.] It was the ſon of the Lord William Montjoy, whom Eraſmus, who was infinitely beholden to him, has ſo much commended. In Carolum Montjoium, Guillelmi filium, Baronem incidit (Hyperius) quem Eraſmus Roterodamus ampliſſimè in ſcriptis ſuis ac ſæpè commendat. Is amicè cum Hyperio multis ac variis de rebus collocutus cum ingenium ejus perſpexiſſet, oblato liberali ſtipendio, domum ſuam eum invitavit, ubi annos quatuor amplius ſuaviſſimè Hyperius cum Montjoio vixit in otio literario (1). i. e. "He met with my Lord "Charles Baron Montjoy the ſon of William, on "whom Eraſmus has often beſtowed great praiſes in "his writings. This Lord having converſed with "Hyperius in a friendly manner upon ſeveral ſub-"jects, and obſerving his great genius, invited him to "his own houſe, and offered him a handſome ſalary; "ſo that Hyperius lived above four years with him, "and was at leiſure to apply himſelf to literature." Obſerve, that they have put Monticius inſtead of Montjoius in Paul Freher's Theatre (2); and that though Eraſmus dedicated his Livy to Montjoy the ſon, and alſo commended him in ſome other places, yet what is here aſſerted of the great and numerous commendations can properly relate only to the father. The ſon was ſtill very young when Eraſmus died (3).

(1) Melch. Adam, in Vitæ Hyperii, pag. 392. Vitar. Theolog.

(2) Pag. 198.

(3) Vide Eraſmi, Epiſt. 16. lib. 26. & Epiſt. 15. lib. 28.

himſelf with great application of the functions of a Divinity Profeſſor above twenty two years. He wrote a great many books [B], ſome of which have been copied by a Doctor of Louvain [C]. He laboured chiefly to teach the Students in Divinity a method to preach well. He had a very clear head; and beſides his knowledge in the Languages, in Hiſtory, in Philoſophy, and in Divinity, he had alſo a particular talent of teaching well. He had begun very ſoon to exerciſe himſelf that way; for whilſt he ſtudied at Paris, he uſed to teach the other ſcholars in private. He was very modeſt at entertainments; meek and civil in converſation; and he loved to be ſometimes at a well regulated entertainment, and was delighted with an agreeable converſation, as much as he hated thoſe enormous bumpers, which gueſts are ſometimes obliged to drink [D], and thoſe ſilly jokes, which do but too much prevail in our converſations. In a word, he was a man who had a true wit and good ſenſe, and who added that good quality to his virtue and zeal. They who deſire to ſee a more particular account of him may read the authors to whom I refer (c). Verheiden's account of him differs a little from Melchior Adam's [E]. I can hardly believe that Hyperius had been a Monk [F]. Some of the books he wrote were publiſhed after (c) Wigandus Orthius, in Oratione funebri Hyperii. Melch. Adam. in Vita Hyperii, which is only an Extract of the Funeral Oration. Verheiden, Præſtant. aliquot Theolog. Effig. pag. 95.

[B] He wrote a great many books.] If we may credit Verheiden, the works of Hyperius which have been publiſhed, would make up ſeven volumes in folio. There are ſome written upon the human ſciences, as Rhetoric, Logic, Arithmetic, Geometry, Coſmography, Aſtronomy, Optics, Natural Philoſophy, &c. The others are either Commentaries upon ſome parts of the holy Scripture, or Theological tracts. That intitled De recte formando Theologiæ ſtudio. i. e. "Of "the true Method of ſtudying Divinity;" and that De formandis Concionibus ſacris; i. e. "Of making Ser- "mons?" have been ſo much liked by a Doctor of Louvain, that he has inſerted them almoſt word for word in the books he publiſhed upon the ſame ſubjects at Antwerp in the year 1565. Hyperius was ſtill but a young ſtudent when he delivered an oration at Paris (4), which has ſince been printed, and which contains the elogy of his friends (5).

(4) Quem (Joachimum Ringolbergium) & exquiſita quæ extat Oratione ad Senatum Pariſienſem laudavit Hyperius.

(5) Teiſſier, pag. 14. Catalogi Auctorum, ſpeaks of it as though it were Ringelberg's Life, but it is no ſuch thing.

[C] Some of which have been copied by a Doctor of Louvain.] Valerius Andreas confeſſes it. Quicquid boni habent ejuſdem (Hyperii) de formandis ſacris concionibus Libri duo, deque recte formando ſtudio Theologico Libri IV, id in ſuos ſimilis argumenti libros tranſtulit Laurentius à Villavicentio ex Ord. Auguſtiano Doctor Theol. Lovanienſis (6). i. e. "All that "is good for any thing in Hyperius's two books of the "manner of making ſermons, and in his four books of "the beſt method of ſtudying Divinity, has been tranſ- "ſcribed by Laurence a Villavicentio, a Monk of the "order of St. Auſtin, and a Doctor of Divinity of the "Univerſity of Louvain in the books he wrote upon "the ſame ſubjects." This Doctor was a Spaniſh Monk of the order of St. Auguſtin. His name was Laurence de Villavicenza. He is often quoted as a notorious plagiary. I have not met with any author that obſerved this plagiariſm before the learned Raynolds. He mentions it in the fourth chapter of the firſt book of his treatiſe De Idololatria Romana, printed at Oxford in the year 1596, and he obſerves that this Monk altered in Hyperius's book all that was inconſiſtent with the doctrines of the Church of Rome. Some time after Keckerman (7) mentioned the ſame plagiariſm, acknowledging that Raynolds had already obſerved it. Voetius (8) ſpoke of it quoting Keckerman, in a diſputation which was held in the year 1655; but he pretends that the work which the Spaniſh Monk pirated, was the manner of teaching Divinity. Now this treatiſe contains but three books, whereas the work which Raynold Keckerman and the Bibliographer of the Low Countries pretend was tranſcribed by the Spaniſh Monk, contains four books, and is uſually quoted under this title: De Ratione Studii Theologici. i. e. "The "Method of ſtudying Divinity." It is certain that this laſt work is not the ſame with the Methodus Theologiæ, i. e. "The Manner of teaching Divinity," which Hyperius alſo wrote. Voetius has not been accurate enough. Monſieur Colomies (9) does alſo mention this plagiariſm, and quotes Raynolds. Placcius (10) who ſpeaks of it, does it only on the credit of one of his friends, who wrote to him, that Simon Oomius mentioned it in the ſecond preface prefixed to a Dutch book: and he pretends as well as Konig (11) that this plunder relates to the book intitled Methodus Theologiæ. A modern author (12) quotes not only Keckerman and Colomies upon this plagiariſm of Villavicenza, but alſo John Heilfeld cap. 25. Sphingis Theologico-Philoſophicæ. It is to be obſerved that none of theſe authors, except Valerius Andreas, mention the double plagiariſm of the Spaniſh Monk, they ſpeak only of that which relates to the book intitled, De Studio Theologico. But on the other hand Nicholas Antonio does not only aſſert that Villavicenza tranſcribed all that was good in two of Hyperius's books, but he aſcribes to him the ſame conduct with regard to two other books publiſhed by Proteſtant writers; the one is De Phraſibus ſacræ Scripturæ; i. e. "Of the Phraſes uſed in the holy Scrip- "ture;" the other is Tabulæ compendioſæ in Evangelia & Epiſtolas. i. e. "Short Indexes to the Goſpels "and Epiſtles." Obſerve that he has added to his own miſtakes thoſe of Valerius Andreas. He pretends (13), like him, that Hyperius had been a Dominican; and he commits himſelf the following blunders; 1. He gives Hyperius the name of Hiſperius; 2. he ſuppoſes that the treatiſe De formando Studio Theologico contains but three books; 3. He aſſerts that the treatiſe De formandis ſacris Concionibus contains three books, whereas it contains but two.

(6) Val. And. Bibl. Belg. pag. 49.

(7) In Præcognit. Logic.

(8) Diſp. Select. vol. 3. pag. 687.

(9) Gall. Orient. pag. 10.

(10) De Pſeudonymis, pag. 273.

(11) Biblioth. pag. 420. See alſo pag. 846, where he quotes Rivetus, tom. 2. Operum, pag. 1095 (it ſhould be 1065) qui vocat Villavicentium Hyperi interpolatorem & expilatorem; i. e. "who ſtiles Vil- "lavicenza the "interpolator "and plunderer "of Hyperius."

(12) Joh. Albertus Faber, Decade Decadum, num. 36. Lipſiæ 1689.

(13) Nic. Anton. Biblioth. Hiſpan. tom. 2. pag. 9.

[D] He hated thoſe enormous bumpers, which gueſts are ſometimes obliged to drink.] Here follows what is obſerved in his funeral oration (14). In colloquiis & converſationibus humanus & æquus, & quemadmodum immania illa in conviviis hominum pocula, & ſcurriles in colloquiis nugas ex animo fuit averſatus, ita moderatis conviviis, jucundiſque amicorum confabulationibus nonnunquam interfuit.

(14) Apud Melchior Adam. in Vitis Theolog. pag. 397.

[E] Verheiden's account of him differs a little from Melchior Adam's.] Verheiden has given us but a ſhort elogium of him; but we meet in Melchior Adam with a much fuller account in a chronological order. The latter does not make Hyperius travel into Spain; he ſuppoſes that he only viſited thoſe provinces of Italy, which are between the Alps and Bologna; and that he travelled thither whilſt he was upon his ſtudies at Paris, and before he took a journey to Louvain. Verheiden on the contrary pretends that Hyperius travelled into Spain and Italy, after he had ſtudied at Paris and at Louvain. He ſuppoſes that he firſt taught Philoſophy at Marpurg, and then Divinity. Melchior Adam does not mention the Profeſſorſhip of Philoſophy.

[F] I can hardly believe that Hyperius had been a Monk.] There is not a word of it in the extract from his funeral oration; whence we may be certain that Wigandus Orthius did not ſay it; for this is a particular, which honeſt Melchior Adam would not have omitted, though he had given us but a very ſhort extract, and not a long account containing a thouſand trifling circumſtances. Yet I would not depend upon this argument only; I have enquired for Wigandus Orthius's oration, and have found it at laſt; but I could not meet in it with the leaſt hint that could make me ſuſpect, that Hyperius was ever a Monk; whence I infer that he never was one. Let it not be objected that I argue here by a negative argument. I do not pretend to vindicate that way of arguing (15); but I dare to aſſert that it is very good on this occaſion, both becauſe the perſon who delivered the funeral oration on Hyperius's death could not but know whether or not he had been a Monk, and becauſe if he had known he had been one, he would certainly have told it, and was obliged to do it. Such particulars were not omitted with regard to Muſculus, Marlorat, Peter Martyr, Zanchius, and ſeveral other ſupporters of the new reformation, who

THE blunders of Moreri and Valerius Andreas.

(15) Mr. de Launoi wrote ſome books to prove that a negative argument is good. Monſieur Thiers, amongſt others, refuted his opinion.

after his death [G], by the care of his ſon Laurence Hyperius, or of John Mylius (d).

(d) Verheiden, Præſtant. aliquot Theolog. Effig. pag. 95.

who had left their convents; and there was perhaps never a man leſs capable to omit ſuch a particular, than Orthius, who thought it his duty to obſerve in a funeral oration, that Hyperius went to wait for his clothes at Marpurg, becauſe he knew, that he would live cheaper there, than in any place on the banks of the Rhine. Sciebat enim minoris ſe apud Cattos interea poſſe vivere, quam uſpiam ad Rheni ripas. He relates a thouſand particulars as important as that is, which have all been faithfully tranſcribed by Melchior Adam. I cannot therefore but think, that Moreri was in the wrong to aſſert, that Hyperius became a Monk of the order of St. Dominick, and diſtinguiſhed himſelf by his learning; but that he baſely apoſtatiſed afterwards. He tranſcribed this from Valerius Andreas, who had already publiſhed that falſity. This Bibliographer of the Low-Countries, who was alſo miſtaken in placing Hyperius's death under the year 1560, is inexcuſable for omitting to obſerve that Hyperius had been a Miniſter. Moreri, who has obſerved it (16), is to be blamed for omitting to mention his Profeſſorſhip of Divinity. His inaccuracy appears alſo in this expreſſion, he fell into Luther's errors, which he taught. To what purpoſe is this laſt remark expreſt thus in a looſe manner? Was it not enough to have ſtiled Hyperius a Proteſtant Miniſter in the firſt line of his article? Was not this hinting ſufficiently that he had taught the doctrines of the Proteſtants? But further, it is not true that Hyperius followed Luther's reformation. The Index of prohibited books (17) might have ſet Moreri right in this particular.

(16) He did not ſpell the name of the city right, calling it Marburge.

(17) We read there in pag. 16. of the edition in folio 1667. Andreas Hyperius, ſeu Hyperius, Theologus Calvino Zwinglianus, Profeſſor Marpurgenſis. Konig, pag. 420. of his Bibliotheca calls him a Reformed Divine, which in the ſtyle of the Proteſtants of Germany is the ſame as a Calviniſt Divine.

[G] Some of his books . . . were publiſhed after his death.] Conſult Geſner's epitome, you will ſee there, that ſeveral of Hyperius's works were printed in his life-time. I do not think therefore that he can be quoted as an inſtance of that ſingular modeſty, which makes an author put off till after his death the publiſhing of his writings, that he may not hear his own praiſes. Let them take ſome notice of this, who read in Saldenus (19) the paſſage which I ſhall now tranſcribe. Cujus (contemptus famæ vel gloriæ propriæ) illuſtre exemplum antehac præbuit Theologus ſua ætate celeberrimus Andreas Hyperius, de quo teſtis eſt Juſtus Vultejus (20), quod ideo poſt mortem demum in lucem prodire ſua voluerit, quia gloriam ſibi nullam, nec vulgi applauſus iis captabat. Hos enim (inquit) ſi tanti faciendos eſſe putaſſet, utique vivo ei frui illis licuiſſet. i. e. "Andrew Hyperius, one of the moſt eminent "Divines of his time, gave a noble inſtance of this "contempt of fame and glory; for Juſtus Vultejus "teſtifies, that he would not have his books publiſhed "till after his death, becauſe he aimed at no glory by "them, and endeavoured to gain the public applauſe. "For, adds he, if he had had any value for it he might "have enjoyed it in his life-time."

(19) De Libris & eorum Lectione, pag. 47.

(20) Vultej. in Dedic. Oper. Hyperii præfix.

HYPSIPYLE the daughter of Thoas King of the Iſle of Lemnos, ſaved her father's life when the women of that iſland made a general ſlaughter of all the men that were there (a). She did not ſave him openly, but was obliged to make the other women believe that ſhe had killed him, and upon this ſuppoſition they choſe her for their Queen (b). The Argonauts landed ſome time after in the iſland of Lemnos, and were received with all the marks of the moſt intimate friendſhip, for the women of that iſland had not ſlain the men out of any hatred for the male ſex [A], but rather out of ſuch a revenge as ſhews, that they were very fond of the ſweet pleaſures of love. The Argonauts, after the fatigues they had ſuffered at ſea, refreſhed themſelves as much as they pleaſed in the arms of theſe widows: nor did Hypſipyle forget to take care of her ſelf; ſhe choſe their chief for her partner, and was ſoon pregnant of twins. If her fate differed from Dido's in this particular [B], it was like her's in another, for Jaſon did not prove leſs inconſtant than

(a) Apollodorus, lib. 1.

(b) His mihi pro meritis (ut falſi criminis aſtu Parta fides) regno & ſolio confidere patris Supplicium datur. Hypſipyle apud Statium, Theb. lib. 5. ver. 320.

[A] The women of the iſland of Lemnos had not ſlain the men out of any hatred for the male ſex.] They were determined to that ſlaughter becauſe the men did not lie any more with them, and diverted themſelves only with the ſlaves they had taken in Thrace (1). They did this becauſe their wives ſtunk ſo much that they could not come near them without the utmoſt diſguſt (2). This ſtink was an effect of Venus's anger; either becauſe this Goddeſs was exaſperated againſt them for neglecting to ſacrifice to her during ſeveral years (3), or becauſe ſhe had taken an averſion to the iſle of Lemnos, having been ſurprized there with Mars (4), for it was in that iſland the Gods ſaw her lying with him. Others (5) aſſert, that Medea being jealous of Hypſipyle had caſt certain drugs into the iſle of Lemnos, which cauſed the women to ſtink thus. It is added that during ſeveral ages they uſed to ſtink ſo much on a certain day every year, that their huſbands, and even their very children could not endure to be near them. The authors are not agreed whether it was their mouth or their armpits that ſtunk ſo. Euſtathius (6) aſſerts the firſt opinion, and Dion Chryſoſtomus (7) the ſecond. Here follows ſome verſes of Statius in which Hypſipyle repreſents the diſmal condition of that iſland during the interregnum of love.

(1) Apollodorus, lib. 1.

(2) Idem, ibid.

(3) In inſula Lemno mulieres Veneri ſacra aliquot annos non fecerant. Hygin. cap. 15. See alſo Apollodorus, lib. 1. Stat. Theb. lib. 5. and the Scholiaſt in Euripidem in Hecub.

(4) Lactantius in Statium, lib. 5. Thebaid.

(5) Myrtitus Leſbius, lib. 1. Leſbiacorum. apud Scholiaſt. Apollon. in lib. 1. Argonaut.

(6) In Iliad. lib. 1.

(7) Oratione 32.

(8) Statius, Thebaid. lib. 5. ver. 70.

Protinus a Lemno teneri fugiſtis amores,
Motus Hymen, verſæque faces, & frigida juſti
Cura Tori: nullæ redeunt in gaudia noctes,
Nullus in amplexu ſopor eſt; odia aſpera ubique
Et furor, & medio recubat diſcordia lecto (8).

i. e. "Tender Cupids you are fled immediately from "Lemnos: Hymen is removed, his torches are extinguiſhed, the marriage bed is forſaken; no longer "do the nights afford us joyful pleaſures; no longer "do we ſleep in the arms of our huſbands; the bed "affords now nothing but bitter hatred, anger, and "quarrels."

This interregnum was ſo inſufferable, that the women reſolved upon the ſlaughter I have mentioned.

[B] Her fate differed from Dido's in this particular.] For poor Dido's amours with Æneas proved fruitleſs, which grieved her very much. I have obſerved in another place (9) the difference there is between her taſte and that of the women of this time. The latter being forſaken by their lovers at the beginning of the campaign, are overjoyed when the pleaſures they taſted during the winter, are not attended with generation. I quote this inſtance, without pretending to exclude thoſe that relate to perſons of another profeſſion. I quote it, I ſay, becauſe in my opinion the ſtay of the Argonauts in the iſle of Lemnos, may very well be compared to the ſoldiers continuing a long while in winter quarters.

(9) In the article GARNACHE, remark [B].

Let us obſerve that Hypſipyle ſolemnly declares in the work of a Latin Poet, that it was very much againſt her will ſhe married the lovely Jaſon.

Cinerem furiaſque meorum
Teſtor, ut externas non ſponte aut crimine tædas
Attigerim, (ſcit cura Deûm) etſi blandus Iaſon
Virginibus dare vincla novis (10).

(10) Statius, lib. 5. ver. 454.

i. e. "I call to witneſs the aſhes and furies of my an"ceſtors, that it is not of my own accord nor by any "crime, that I conſent to marry a foreigner; (the "Gods know it). Though lovely Jaſon knows "how to captivate young virgins."

But a Greek Poet repreſents her ſo much in love with him, that the moment ſhe ſaw him, ſhe offered him her Kingdom.

'E;

than Æneas [C]. See in the ſupplement to Moreri's Dictionary what became of Hypſipyle, when her ſubjects found out that ſhe had not killed her father.

Εἰ δέ κεν αὖθι
Ναιετάειν ἐθέλοις, ἡ τοὶ ἄδοι, ἦτ' ἂν ἐπίτια
Πατρὸς ἐμοῖο Θόαντος ἔχοις γήρας (11).

(11) Apollonius, lib. 5. ver. 827.

i. e. "Stay here, let it be acceptable to you; and for "your reward, you ſhall have my father's Kingdom," Valerius Flaccus, alſo repreſents her deeply ſmitten with this Hero's charms, and ready to marry him the firſt time ſhe ſees him.

Unius hæret
Alloquio, & blandos paulatim colligit ignes,
Jam non dura thoris, Veneri nec iniqua reverſæ (12).

(12) Val. Flaccus, lib. 2. ver. 353.

i. e. "She ſpeaks with one only; and inſenſibly ſuffers "the fire of love to kindle in her boſom; ſhe is no "longer averſe to the marriage-bed, nor does ſhe de-"cline the pleaſures that return to her."

[C] Jaſon did not prove leſs inconſtant than Æneas.] He forſook her and her two children and continued his voyage; ſo that ſhe is one of thoſe Heroines, whoſe ſad complaints and tender ſighs upon their being forſaken by the lovers to whom they refuſed nothing, are related by Ovid, Ariadne, Hypſipyle's grandmother (13), had met with the ſame fate. See in Ovid her complaint againſt Theſeus. I make a reflexion upon this ſubject. The Mythological authors and the writers of modern romances followed very different roads. The former keep too much to the Hiſtory, the latter recede too much from it. I ſay this only with regard to the deſcription they give us of men's morals as to their characters of heroes. In Mythology the Heroines are not only too amorous, but alſo too free of their favours: the Heroes are not conſtant; they get their Heroines with child, or they do their beſt endeavours for it, and then they forſake them. This favours too much of Hiſtory, and is of a bad example for either ſex (14); it is better to chooſe the oppoſite extreme, as is done in our romances: it is better, I ſay, to ſuppoſe, even againſt all probability, that ſuch Heroes and Heroines as never commit the leaſt fault.

(13) Thoas, Hypſipyle's father, was the ſon of Barchus and Ariadne.

(14) We may apply to thoſe accounts this ſentence of Horace, Ode 7. lib. 3. Hiſtorias peccare docentes. i. e. "Tales that are "bawds to vice." Creech.

I.

JACCETIUS (FRANCIS CATANEUS) was born in Florence the 16th of November 1466. He was the diſciple of Marſilius Ficinus; and improved ſo happily by the inſtructions of this great maſter, that he became one of the ableſt Platoniſts of his time, and an exceeding good Orator. He ſucceeded the abovementioned Ficinus in his Profeſſorſhip of Philoſophy; he looking upon Jaccetius as perfectly well qualified for it, and even concluding that nature had brought him into the world for that purpoſe. He publiſhed a great many books [A]; died in Florence in the year 1522; was buried in the church of Santa Croce or Holy Croſs in the ſepulchre of his anceſtors, and left thirteen ſons [B]. Benedetto Varchi made his funeral Oration, and his life was written very elegantly by Euphroſynus Lapinus (a). Diacceto, which is his true Italian name, has been changed a numberleſs multitude of ways by thoſe writers who ſpeak of him or his poſterity [C]. We have another FRANCIS CATANEUS JACCETIUS who wrote books [D]; but I am of opinion that he is known only under the name of DIACETTIUS, or DIACETIUS. I fancy that Count de Chateauvilain, who married one of the maids of honour to Catherine de Medicis, deſcended from our Francis Jaccetius [E]. This young Lady was called Mademoiſelle d'Atri, and has been very well and very ill ſpoken of (b).

(a) Ex Michaele Pocciantio, de Scriptor. Florentinis, pag. 67, 68.

(b) See the Notes on the Confeſſion Catholique de Sanci, pag. 459, & ſeq. edit. of 1699.

[A] He publiſhed a great many books.] Here follow the titles of ſome of them; De Pulchro libri tres. De Amore libri tres. Paraphraſis in Politicum & Theagenem Platonis, & in Ariſtotelem de Cœlo & Meteoris. Enarratio in Platonis Sympoſium. Oratio in funere Laurentii Medices. Epiſtolæ variæ, &c. An edition was made, at Baſil, of his works, in the year 1563, in folio. It is mentioned in the epitome of Geſner's Bibliotheca, under Franciſcus Cataneus Jaccetius. The Bodleian Catalogue, and Konig ſpeak of it only under the word Cataneus. Ghilini calls this author only Franciſco Catanio (1). He has admirably well paraphraſed what Pocciantius ſays of him, and has not added any other incident.

(1) Ghilini, Teatro, tom. 2. pag. 88.

[B] He left thirteen ſons.] I doubt not but one of them is the perſon whom I mention in the article MACHIAVEL (2), and whoſe fatal end is thus deſcribed by Pierius Valerianus: Jacobus Jacettus juvenis & Græce, & Latinè egregiè peritus, pangendi carminis auctor non illepidus, Florentinam cathedram obtinebat; ſed infelici ſuo fidere conjurationis in Julii Cardinalis Medices cædem certo die patrandam conſcius fuit; quæ patefacta, captus ipſe, & tam nefandi ſceleris convictus Senatus Florentini judicio ſecuri percuſſus eſt (3). i. e. "James Jaccettus, a young man exceedingly well "verſed in the Greek and Latin tongues, and a good "Poet, obtained a Profeſſor's chair in Florence; but "through his ill fate, he joined in a plot in order to "murder Cardinal Julius of Medicis, on a certain day. "The conſpiracy being diſcovered, Jaccettus was ſeized, "and being found guilty of ſo horrid a crime, was be-"headed, purſuant to the ſentence of the Senate of "Florence." Paul Jovius, who beſtows no other title upon him than that of Poet (4), deſerves cenſure. I am of opinion that brother Angelius de Cataneis Diacetius (5), who after having gone thro' the ſeveral dignities of the order of Dominicans, was made Biſhop of Fieſoli in 1566, was one of the thirteen ſons of our Jaccetius. He died the 5th of May 1574, at fourſcore and one years of age (6). He is called in his epitaph (7) Angelus Cataneus Diacetius.

(2) At the remark [C].

(3) Pierius Valerian. de Litterator. Infelicit. lib. 2. pag. 77.

(4) See remark [C] of the article MACHIAVEL.

(5) He is thus named in tom. 3. pag. 340. of Ughellis Italia Sacra.

(6) Idem, ibid.

(7) Ughelli gives it, ibid.

[C] Diacceto, which is his true Italian name, has been changed a numberleſs multitude of ways by thoſe writers who ſpoke of him or his poſterity.] See the remark [C] of the article MACHIAVEL, and obſerve that the reaſon why I make Diacceto his true name, is becauſe I met with this word in the ſubſcription of a letter (8), which the grand-ſon of our Jaccetius wrote to the Varchi the 9th of September 1561, upon ſending him two copies of a work of his grandfather's (9). He had received four of them from Venice. The edition pleaſed him as to the types, but he found it incorrect. Michael Pocciantius is not altogether accurate, he ſpelling our author's name thus: Franciſcus Cathaneus Diacetius (10). I am to obſerve that the author of the notes of the Confeſſion of Sancy informs me (11), that Carolus Zenobii de Ghiaceto unus ex Decemviris Baliæ Florentinæ civitatis, ſigned in the quality of J.... ſon of Coſmo de Medicis, in a contract made at Florence in 1453, which he ſaw among the Archives of Lorrain. This ſhews that this family was not antiently called Diacceto. It is very probable that Diacceto was made by joining the name and the article together. I have ſpoke elſewhere (12) of the life of one Paul Ghiacetti.

(8) Bulifone has inſerted it in pag. 199. of his Lettere Storiche, Politiche, ed Erudite, printed at Pozzoli in 1685.

(9) That intitled, De Amore.

(10) Mich. Pocciant. de Script. Florent. pag. 67.

(11) Pag. 461. of the edit. of 1699.

(12) In the remark of the article FONTIUS.

[D] We have another FRANCIS CATANEUS JACCETIUS who wrote books.] Michael Pocciantius calls him Franciſcus Cathaneus Diacettius, and ſays that he was a Canon in the cathedral of Florence, Apoſtolical Prothonotary, Doctor of the Civil Law, and Biſhop of Fieſoli; and that he wrote in Italian, among other works, the life of Chriſt, of the bleſſed Virgin, of St. Dominick, and of ſome Biſhops of Fieſoli; ſeveral ſermons, and the Epiſtles and Goſpels for all the year (13). Ughelli calls him Franciſcus Cataneus Diacetius; and ſays that he ſucceeded Angelus de Cataneis Diacetius his uncle, in the Biſhoprick of Fieſoli, in the year 1570; had a ſeat among the Fathers of the Council of Trent; wrote ſome tracts entitled De Authoritate Papæ & Conſilii, de Superſtitione Artis Magicæ, &c. that he diſcharged all the duties of a worthy prelate, and died the 4th of November 1595 (14).

(13) Pocciant. de Script. Florent. pag. 71.

(14) Ughelli, Italia Sacra, tom. 3. pag. 340.

[E] Count de Chateauvilain . . . . deſcended from our Francis Jaccetius.] Mezerai ſpeaking of the exploits of the King's troops againſt the League, obſerves, that Sanci made himſelf maſter of Châteauvilain in Champagne in the year 1589, at the ſollicitation of the Lord of the place. It was, adds he (15), a Florentine named Lewis Dijacetti, who, like many of his countrymen, had acquired great riches by farming the impoſts of the King.

(15) Mezerai, Hiſt. de France, tom. 3. pag. 784. edit. of 1685.

☞ JACOB (HENRY), a very learned Engliſh writer in the ſeventeenth Century, was ſon of Mr. Henry Jacob [A] a Miniſter in Kent, by Sarah ſiſter of John Dumaresque of the Iſle of Jerſey Gentleman. He was born in the Dioceſe of London about the

[A] Mr. Henry Jacob.] This Mr. Jacob was a native of Kent, and entered a Commoner or Batler in St. Mary's-Hall, in the Univerſity of Oxford, in 1579, at ſixteen years of age (1), where he took the degree of Bachelor of Arts, December 16, 1583 (2), and that of Maſter of Arts July 8, 1586 (3). Entering into holy orders he became Precentor of Corpus Chriſti College, and was afterwards beneficed in Kent, particularly

(1) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 464.

(2) Idem, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 124.

(3) Idem, ibid. col. 132.

the year 1609, and in his younger years ſent by his relations to be educated abroad, and ſtudied at Leyden under Thomas Erpenius, and made a prodigious progreſs in Philological and Oriental learning. At about the age of two and twenty years he returned to England, and by Mr. William Bedwell, who was eminent for his ſkill in the Arabic Language, he was recommended in the ſtrongeſt terms to William Earl of Pembroke, Chancellor of the Univerſity of Oxford, who wrote letters to that Univerſity in his behalf [B], that he might be created Bachelor of Arts (a), as he was on the 20th of January $162\frac{8}{9}$ (b). The year following, by the intereſt of Mr. Selden, Mr. Henry Briggs, and Mr. Peter Turner he was elected Probationer Fellow of Merton College in Oxford (c). "But then, ſays Mr. Wood (d), he not having ſo much Logic and Philoſophy to carry "him through the ſevere exerciſes of that Society, the Warden and Fellows tacitly aſ- "ſigned him Philological Lecturer. This being done, he was called away to follow "law-ſuits concerning his patrimony; which being concluded he fell into a dangerous "ſickneſs, and by the ſudden loſs of his Patron of Pembroke, his life was in jeopardy." Biſhop Laud being ſoon after choſen Chancellor of the Univerſity, a way was found out from the ſtatutes of Merton College to make Mr. Jacob Socius Grammaticalis, that is, Reader of Philology to the Juniors, a place which had been diſuſed for about an hundred years. So that being made compleat Fellow, he ſpent ſome time in 1636 with Mr. Selden (e) [C]; and Auguſt the 13th the ſame year he was created Maſter of Arts (f). June the 14th 1641 he was elected Superior Bedell of Divinity (g). The ſame year Sir Nath. Brent, Warden of the College, being his enemy, endeavours were uſed to eject him out of his Fellowſhip, as appears from a letter of Mr. Peter Turner to Mr. Selden [D]. November the 1ſt 1642 he was created Bachelor of Phyſic (h). "But his head, ſays Mr. Wood (i), being always overbuſy about critical notions, (which

(a) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 158, 159. 2d edit. London 1721.

(b) Idem, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 246.

(c) Idem, Ath. Oxon. ubi ſupra.

(d) Ibid.

(e) Ibid.

(f) Idem, Faſti Oxon. vol. 2. col. 268, 269.

(g) Idem, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 159.

(h) Idem, Faſti Oxon. vol. 2. col. 20.

(i) Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 159.

particularly at Cheriton, as Mr. Wood was informed; though upon ſearch into that Pariſh Regiſter, wherein are the names of all the Rectors of that church ſet down ſince 1591, that of Henry Jacob occurs not, he having been perhaps Rector before that time. He was a perſon exceedingly well read in theological authors, but a moſt zealous Puritan, or, as his ſon Henry uſed to ſay, the firſt Independent in England (4). He wrote the following works. A Treatiſe of the Sufferings and Victory of Chriſt in the work of our Redemption, &c. written againſt certain errors in thoſe points publickly preached in London, 1597. London, 1598, in 8vo. The points, which he endeavours to confute, were, 1. That Chriſt ſuffered for us the wrath of God, which we may well term the pains of Hell. 2. That Chriſt after his death on the croſs went not into Hell in his ſoul. Of the Church and Miniſtry of England, written in two Treatiſes againſt the Reaſons and Objections of Mr. Francis Johnſon. Middleburg, 1599, in 4to. Our author and Mr. Johnſon, who was a Browniſt, and lived in Holland, had ſeveral diſputes at Amſterdam about the Church of England's being a true church. Defence of a Treatiſe touching the Sufferings and Victory of Chriſt in the work of our Redemtion. 1600 in 4to. Reaſons taken out of God's word and the beſt Human Teſtimonies, proving a neceſſity of reforming our Churches of England, &c. 1604, in 4to. A Poſition againſt vain-glorious, and that which is falſely called learned preaching. 1604, in 8vo. The divine Beginning and Inſtitution of Chriſt's true, viſible, and material Church. Leyden, 1610, in 8vo. Plain and clear Expoſition of the ſecond Commandment, 1610, in 8vo. Declaration and opening of certain points, with a ſound Confirmation of ſome others, in a Treatiſe, intitled, The Divine Beginning, &c. Middleburg, 1611. He wrote and publiſhed likewiſe ſeveral pieces, as the Counter-Poiſon, &c. which being printed privately, or beyond the ſeas, are rarely to be met with. He began to gather a congregation in the city of London in 1616, and died in 1621 (5).

(4) Idem, Oxon. vol. 1. col. 465.

(5) Idem, ibid.

[B] Who wrote letters to that Univerſity in his behalf.] Theſe letters are dated November 24, 1628; in which the Chancellor ſays, that "Henry Jacob, a "young ſcholar, had beſtowed divers years in the "Low-Countries in the ſtudy of good literature, and "had his education principally under one Erpenius, a "famous ſcholar, eſpecially in the Oriental languages; "in which learning he profited under him beyond the "ordinary meaſures of his age, &c."

[C] He ſpent ſome time in 1636 with Mr. Selden.] He was Amanuenſis to that great man, as appears from theſe words of Mr. Selden: Ubi Amanuenſis mihi in Codice Regio tunc porrigendo operam præſtitit mihi vir doctiſſimus Henricus Jacobus, &c (6). "At this time, "it is ſaid, he taught, or at leaſt improved Selden "in the Hebrew language, and added ſeveral things "which Selden finding to be very excellent, let them "ſtand (7)."

(6) Vindic. Maris clauſi, pag. 53. edit. Londini 1653.

(7) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 159.

[D] As appears from a letter of Mr. Peter Turner to Mr. Selden.] This Letter, which we copied from the original, is addreſſed to his worthy honoured friend Mr. Selden, and is as follows.

"Sir,

"Out of that affection, which naturally inclines "men to preſerve their own benefactors, I preſume "upon your ready aſſiſtance for the preſerving Mr. "Jacob in that fellowſhip, which by your procure- "ment my Lord of Canterbury conferred upon him. "If ſome means for prevention be not timely uſed, he "is likely the 10th of January to be pronounced non "Socius. The main quarrel to him, (and that not diſ- "ſembled neither) is, that he was brought in by my "Lord's Grace, irregularly and unſtatutably, ſay "they, though I know the contrarye, and am able "to demonſtrate it before indifferent judges, ſuch as "he is not likely to find our Warden or any of his "creatures. Another exception is, that the Squire "Bedell's office is not compatible with his fellowſhip; "which will eaſily be anſwered by the practice both "of our owne College and of other Colleges in both "Univerſityes. So will alſo ſome other exceptions, "which they have againſt him upon the by, be eaſily "blowne away, if they were to be ſkanned before in- "different judges. At another time there were ſome "remedies to be found againſt theſe proceedings, by "appealing to the Viſitors. But our Viſitor now be- "ing under hatches, and his juriſdiction ſuſpended, "we know not where to ſeek for remedie. If the "ſuſpenſion were intended by the Lords to extend "onely to that juriſdiction, which eſſentially is in- "herent in the Archbiſhoprick (as this power of Vi- "ſitor is not) then there is ſtill a power in my Lord's "Grace, though a fruſtraneous one, ſince he does "not make uſe of it. If it were intended that this "juriſdiction likewiſe ſhould be involved in the gene- "ral ſuſpenſion, another quære will riſe where it is "lodged all this while, whether in the ſame perſons, "&c. whence they have committed the exequution of "the ordinary juriſdiction; or in nubibus, to be ex- "tracted thence upon occaſion, and placed where the "Parliament pleaſeth. If in the ſame perſons, then "Mr. Warden by this means is his own Viſitor, and "a man that ſhould appeal from him to himſelf, "were like to find much remedie. If in nubibus, and "yet to be diſpoſed of by Parliament, I doubt "whether they will have leiſure at ſuch a time to "take ſo petty a buſineſs into their conſideration. "Then againe, it is to be feared, leſt the ſame con- "ſideration, which made them take the Archbiſhop's

" (which made him ſometimes a little better than crazed) he neglected his duty ſo much, " that he was ſuſpended once, if not twice, from his place, and had his Bedell's ſtaff " taken from him." At laſt, when the Parliament Viſitors ſate in 1648 he loſt it altogether, and was ejected from his Fellowſhip; ſo that being deſtitute of a maintenance, he retired to London, where Mr. Selden contributed to his ſupport. But the benefactions of his friends not being ſufficient, he ſold that little land which he had at Godmerſham in Kent, and died before it was ſpent. He wrote many things, but publiſhed nothing himſelf [E]. Having broken his health by his intenſe application to his ſtudies, he retired, by the advice of his friends, ſome weeks before his death to Canterbury in September 1652, where he was entertained by Dr. William Jacob, an eminent Phyſician of that city, though not related to him. But ſoon after a tumour breaking out in one of his legs, he died there November the 5th 1652, about the year of his age forty four, and was interred the next day in the pariſh church of All-Saints in that city (k). " Soon " after (k) Ibid. col. 159, 161.

" juriſdiction out of his hands, will ſway them to " place it in ſuch hands, as are moſt likely to make " uſe of it againſt my Lord, to overthrowe all his " acts. If they ſhould thinke of a Clergie-man, the " Archbiſhop of Yorke is as likely a man as another; " and our Warden hath already (though very ignorantly) intitled him to the Viſitorſhip of our College; with which opinion it is likely he hath poſſeſſed his friends in the Lords Houſe (as my Lords of Northumberland and Eſſex) and they probably " may cauſe it to be ſuggeſted to the Houſe. If they " ſhould think of a Lay-Lord, our Chancellor having " the neareſt relation to the Univerſity, may in likelyhood be thought of before any other; whoſe affection though for my own particular I have no reaſon " to diſtruſt, yet I cannot be confident upon his judgment. Beſides that our Warden preſumes upon a " great intereſt in him; which (whatever it be) he is " likely to improve to the beſt advantage, through " the opportunity of his friends aſſiduous about " my Lord, Sir B. Rudyard and Mr. Oldſworth. " Theſe conſiderations and doubts drive me to wiſh, " that this ſame juriſdiction might prove a waſt or " ſtray, and ſo fall into the King's hands. I ſhould " hope it might without much difficulty be obtained " of him to intereſt himſelf in the buiſineſs ſo farre, " as to lay his injunction upon our College, that " in the interim, untill the Parliament have leyſure " to examine my Lord's acts, orders, and injunctions " made in our College, they ſhall all ſtand good, and " all acts done or ſuffered in the College, contrary to " them, ſhould be void. Thus as briefly as I could I " have repreſented to you my feares, my doubts, my " wiſhes. Out of them, (which I cannot do) your " judgment will raiſe ſome ſettled reſolution, what " is to be done in this buiſineſs; unto which I ſhall " as readily ſubſcribe, as I doe ſincerely

" Your friend, devoted
" Merte. Coll. " to ſerve and honour you,
" 30°. X^bris 1641. " Pet. Turner.

[E] He wrote many things, but publiſhed nothing himſelf.] They are as follow. I. Oratio inauguralis ſub Aditu Prælectionis Philologicæ publicè habita apud Collegium Oxonio-Merton. 4 Aug. 1635. II. Græca & Latina Poemata. III. Deſcription of Oakley-Hole near Wells, ann. 1632. Written in Engliſh verſe. IV. Annotationes in eam partem Orationis inauguralis, in quâ dicitur, " Oratione ſolutâ ſcripſit Ariſtæus Proconne- " ſius." Theſe four pieces were publiſhed at Oxford during the author's life, in 1652 in 4to, by his intimate friend Mr. Henry Birkhead, Fellow of All-Souls College. V. Etymotechnia Catholica, containing four Diatriba's concerning the original of letters. The firſt de Ordine Alphabeti; the ſecond de tranſitu Alphabeti; the third de numero, figurâ, poteſtate & diviſione Literarum; and the fourth intitled Geographiſtor Etymotechnus. VI. Grammatica Ebræa. This Grammar is drawn up in a new method. VII. ΣΒΩ vel Oſiris inventus; de Coptiacis Originibus Commentatio. VIII. Geographumena: in which are many Aſſyrian and Egyptian Antiquities diſcovered. IX. Pancarpia, opus ex Artibus & Linguis miſcell. This piece is imperfect. X. Excogitata Philoſophica; nempe de novâ ratione circa Monoptoſyllogiſmum dialecticum, pridem ſemi circulariter figuratum, natalia ventorum conceptacula, &c. XI. Magnetologia, in Lib. 3. agentibus de triplici motu magnetico Lapidali, Cæleſti, & Animali, &c. XII. Libri Ebræo-Rabbinici in Bibliothecâ Bodleianâ recenſiti, ann. 1629. Mr. Wood had a copy of this written by the hand of Dr. Gerard Langbaine. It was the firſt work, which Mr. Jacob performed after he was ſettled at Oxford, at the deſire of his Patron William Earl of Pembroke, the Hebrew books abovementioned being the ſame which the Earl had obtained out of Italy from the Baroccian Library. XIII. Beſides the manuſcripts, which we have given an account of, Mr. Jacob left a great many others, ſeveral of which he lent to Dr. Peter Turner, who after his ejectment from the Univerſity of Oxford in 1648, retiring to the houſe of his ſiſter, the widow of Mr. Watts, a Brewer in Southwark, and dying there in January 165½, his papers came into the hands of his nephew William Watts, afterwards Reſidentiary of Hereford, who having a ſon of Brazen-Noſe College in Oxford, into whoſe poſſeſſion they came, he communicated ſeveral of them to Moſes Pengry, Fellow of that College, one of which was intitled, De Mari Rubro; and another De Hiſtoriâ Beli & Draconis. Copies of theſe tracts were communicated by Mr. Pengry to Mr. Richard Reeve, then Maſter of the School adjoining to Magdalen College. Mr. Wood informs us likewiſe (8), that " our Author being ejected in 1648 " from Merton College, and ſo conſequently from his " chamber, wherein he had left a trunk full of books, " as well written as printed, left Oxon; and taking " no care, nor appointing any friend for its ſecurity, " his chamber-door, before a year was expired, was " broke open for a new comer, who finding the trunk " there, did let it remain in its place for a time. At " length, when no man inquired after it, as the then " poſſeſſor thereof pretended, he ſecured it for his " own uſe, broke it open, and therein diſcovered a " choice treaſure of books. One of them being a " manuſcript, and fit for the preſs, he diſguiſed and " altered it with another ſtyle, and at length, after " he had learned Hebrew and the oriental languages " to blind the world, and had converſed openly with " thoſe moſt excellent in them, as Pocock and Bo- " gan of Corpus Chriſti College, or any Grecian or " Jew, that came accidentally to the Univerſity, he " publiſhed it under this title: Delphi Phœnicizantes, " ſive Tractatus, in quo Græcos, quicquid Delphis celebre erat (ſeu Pythonis & Apollinis Hiſtoriam, ſeu " Pæanica Certamina, & Præmia, &c.) e Joſuæ " Hiſtoriâ ſcriptiſq; ſacris effluxiſſe rationibus haud " inconcinnis oſtenditur, &c. Oxford 1655, in 8vo. " To which is added, Diatriba de Noe in Italiam ad- " ventu, ejuſq; Nominibus Ethnicis, and a little tract " De origine Druidum: which three things are much " commended by foreign Authors, particularly by " Spizelius in his book De doctrinâ Sinenſium." The perſon, whom Mr. Wood means in this paſſage, and who publiſhed the Delphi Phœnicizantes in his own name, was Dr. Edmund Dickenſon, afterwards an eminent Phyſician at London. Mr. Jacob put notes to moſt of the printed books in his ſtudy, and particularly to Salmaſius's Exercitationes Plinianæ in Solinum; which book coming into the hands of Mr. Henry Birkhead, Fellow of All Souls College, " he tranſ- " crib'd the ſaid notes, and entering them into ano- " ther copy of his own, deleted thoſe of Jacob with " aqua fortis, and ſold the copy itſelf to an Oxford " Bookſeller; ſuch, ſays Mr. Wood (9), was his for- " did avarice." T.

(8) Ibid. col. 160.

(9) Ibid.

(l) Ibid. col. 161.

" after, ſays Mr. Wood (l), in a bright moon-ſhining night, the reſemblance of Henry " Jacob came into the bed-chamber of the Doctor, who being aſleep, the reſem- " blance laid his cold hand upon his face. Whereupon the Doctor awaking, looked up " and ſaw Henry Jacob ſtaring upon him, with his beard turned up, as he uſed to wear " it living: whereat being ſtrangely ſurpriſed, he ſtirred himſelf, thinking that it might " be a dream; but ſtill the reſemblance ſtood ſtill; ſo that the Doctor having not cou- " rage to ſpeak to it, turned on the other ſide, and lay in a cold ſweat. After ſome " time he looked again, and ſaw him ſitting on a little table near to his bed; but before " morning he vaniſhed. Another night the maid going out of the houſe, ſaw the ſaid " reſemblance ſtanding on a wood-pile, and was thereupon much affrighted. Theſe " ſtories the Doctor did confidently aver to be true, not only to Dr. Peter Moulin Pre- " bendary of Canterbury, but to others of note, among whom, if I am not miſtaken, " Dr. Meric Caſaubon was one."

(a) The Life and Death of the venerable Dr. Jackſon, Dean of Peterborough, and Preſident of Corpus Chriſti in Oxford, prefixed to A Collection of his Works, London 1653 in fol. This Life was written by Mr. Edmund Vaughan Fellow of Corpus Chriſti College.

☞ JACKSON (THOMAS), a very learned Engliſh Divine in the ſeventeenth Century, was deſcended of a very worthy family in the Biſhopric of Durham (a), and was born at Witton on the river Weer in Durham, December the 21ſt 1579 (b). He was at firſt deſigned by his parents to be a Merchant in Newcaſtle, where many of his relations and friends lived in great wealth and proſperity; but that temptation could not divert him from his inclination to learning (c). At the inſtance therefore of Ralph Lord Evre, Baron of Malton and Wilton he was ſent to the Univerſity of Oxford [A], and became a ſtudent of Queen's College under the tuition of Mr. Richard Crakanthorp in Midſummer Term 1595, and was admitted ſcholar of Corpus Chriſti College March the 24th 1596 (d) [B]. July the 23d 1599 he took the degree of Bachelor of Arts (e), and July the 9th 1603 that of Maſter (f). May the 10th 1606 he was choſen Probationer Fellow of his College (g). June the 26th 1622 he took the degree of Doctor of Divinity (h). He read a Lecture of Divinity in his College every Sunday morning, and another day of the week at Pembroke College, then newly erected, at the deſire of the Maſter and Fellows there. He was choſen Vice-Preſident of his College for many years together, who by his place was to moderate the diſputations in Divinity (i). In 1624 he left the College for a Living in the Biſhopric of Durham, to which he was preſented by the Preſident and Fellows of his College; and from thence ſoon after he removed to the Vicarage of Newcaſtle upon Tine (k), where he diſcharged his duty in a moſt exemplary manner [C], and was much followed and admired, ſays Mr. Wood (l), for his excellent way of preaching, which was then puritanical. In 1630 (m) he was elected Preſident of Corpus Chriſti College [D], partly by the intereſt of Dr. Neile Biſhop of Durham, who had before taken

(b) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 633. 2d edit. London 1721.

(c) Life, ubi ſupra.

(d) Wood, ubi ſupra.

(e) Idem, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 156.

(f) Idem, ibid. col. 165.

(g) Wood, Ath. Oxon. ubi ſupra.

(h) Idem, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 223.

(i) Life, ubi ſupra.

(k) Ibid. and Wood, Ath. Oxon. ubi ſupra.

(l) Ibid.

(m) Idem, Hiſt. & Antiq. Univ. Oxon. lib. 2. pag. 232.

[A] At the inſtance of Ralph Lord Evre, Baron of Malton and Wilton, he was ſent to the Univerſity of Oxford.] Our Author in the dedication to that Nobleman of his treatiſe, intitled, The eternal Truth of Scriptures, and Chriſtian Belief thereon wholly depending, manifeſted by its own Light, printed at London 1613 in 4to. has theſe words: " That love and duty, " which I owe unto your honourable family and per- " ſon, as in many other reſpects, ſo chiefly in this, " that being ingaged unto a more gainful, but not ſo " good a courſe of life, and well nigh rooted in ano- " ther ſoil, I was by your Lordſhip's favourable ad- " vice and countenance tranſplanted to this famous " nurſery of good learning."

[B] Was admitted ſcholar of Corpus Chriſti College March 24th 1596.] The Author of his Life (1) tells us, that although he had no notice of the vacancy of the place, till the day before the election, yet he anſwer'd with ſo much readineſs and applauſe, that he gained the admiration, as well as the ſuffrages of the Electors, and was choſen with full conſent, though they had received letters of favour from great men for another ſcholar. He had not been long admitted into this place, before he had like to have loſt his life by an accident. For walking out with others of the younger company to waſh himſelf, he was in imminent danger of being drowned. It was a long and almoſt incredible ſpace of time, wherein he lay under water, before a boat could be procured, which was ſent for, rather to take out his body, before it floated, for a decent funeral, than out of hopes of recovery of life. The Boatman diſcerning where he was by the bubbling of the water (the laſt ſign of a Man expiring) thruſt down his hook at that very moment, which at the firſt trial lighted under his arm, and brought him up into the boat. All the parts of his body were ſwollen to a vaſt proportion; and though by holding his head downward they let forth the water, yet no hopes of life appeared. They brought him therefore to the land, and lapped him up in the gowns of his fellow-ſtudents. After ſome warmth and former means renewed, they perceived that life was yet in him, convey'd him to the College, and commended him to the ſkill of Dr. Channel, an eminent Phyſician of the ſame houſe; where with much care, time, and difficulty he recovered to the equal joy and wonder of the whole ſociety. His grateful acknowledgments to the Fiſherman and his ſervant, who took him up, knew no limits, being a conſtant revenue to them while he lived.

(1) Prefixed to his Works.

[C] Removed to the Vicarage of Newcaſtle upon Tine, where he diſcharged his duty in a moſt exemplary manner.] He ſhewed himſelf to be very ſtudious, humble, courteous, and charitable. When he went out, what money he had, he uſually gave to the poor, who at length flock'd ſo to him, that his ſervant took care, that he had not too much in his pocket. At a certain time Dr. Henderſon, the Phyſician of that town, his neighbour and intimate friend, having made a purchaſe, ſitting melancholy by him, and fetching a ſigh, Dr. Jackſon aſked the reaſon. He ſaid, that he had a payment to make, and wanted money. Dr. Jackſon told him, that he would furniſh him; and calling for his ſervant, informed him of the Phyſician's need, and aſked what money he had. The man ſtepping back ſilent, the Doctor bade him ſpeak. The man ſaid, forty ſhillings. The Doctor ordered him to fetch it, for Dr. Henderſon ſhould have it all. Upon this the Phyſician turned his ſadneſs into laughter; and Dr. Jackſon demanding the reaſon, he anſwer'd, that he had occaſion for four or five hundred pounds. Dr. Jackſon replied, that he thought forty ſhillings a great ſum, and that he ſhould have it, and more alſo, if he had it (2).

(2) Life, ubi ſupra.

[D] Elected Preſident of Corpus Chriſti College.] The Author of his life tells us, that he was choſen in his abſence, at ſo great a diſtance, ſo unexpectedly, without any ſuit or petition upon his part, that he knew nothing of the vacancy of the place, but by the ſame letters, that informed him, that it was conferr'd upon himſelf. A preferment of ſo good account, that it hath been much deſired and eagerly ſought after by many eminent men, but never before went ſo far to be accepted of. But Mr.

taken him off, ſays Mr. Wood, from his preciſe way, and made him his Chaplain; but more by the endeavours of Biſhop Laud. Upon this he left his Vicarage, was appointed Chaplain in ordinary to his Majeſty (n), and June 18, 1635, Prebendary of Wincheſter (o), and was preſented to the Vicarage of Witney in Oxfordſhire, which, after he had been at much pains and expence to clear the title of the Rectory to all ſucceeding Miniſters, he freely beſtowed on Mr. Thomas White, then Proctor of the Univerſity, and Chaplain of Corpus Chriſti College (p). In 1638 he was promoted to the Deanery of Peterborough in the room of Dr. John Towers, advanced to the Epiſcopal See (q). He publiſhed a great many works [E]. He died September the 21ſt 1640, and was interred in the Inner Chapel of Corpus Chriſti College. Mr. Wood tells us (r), that he was furniſhed with all learned Languages, Arts, and Sciences, eſpecially Metaphyſics, which he conſidered as a neceſſary handmaid to Divinity; and that he was alſo profoundly read in the Fathers. He had a ſtrong judgment. He wrote excellently concerning the divine attributes, and with vigour againſt the Church of Rome. Mr. Barnabas Oley (s) declares, that (n) Idem, Ath. Oxon. ubi ſupra.

(o) Le Neve, Faſti Eccleſ. Anglic. pag. 529.

(p) Life, ubi ſupra.

(q) Le Neve, ubi ſupra, pag. 241.

(r) Athen. Oxon. ubi ſupra.

(s) Life of Mr. George Herbert, edit. London 1652. It is not pag'd.

Mr. Wood, as we have obſerved in the text of this article, aſſerts, that Biſhop Neile and Biſhop Laud made uſe of their intereſt to procure this place for him. He governed in a moſt obliging manner the fellows, ſcholars, ſervants, and tenants. No man departed from him melancholy, except in this particular, that by ſome miſdemeanor or wilful error they had created trouble, or given offence to him. He uſed the friends as well as the memory of his predeceſſors fairly. He was a lover and maker of peace. He ſilenced and compoſed all differences, diſpleaſure, and animoſities by a prudent impartiality, and the example of his own ſweet diſpoſition. It was a new and peculiar art of diſcipline, but ſucceſsfully practiſed by him, that thoſe under his authority were kept within bounds and order, not ſo much out of fear of the penalty, as out of love to the Governor. He took notice of that which was good in the worſt men, and made that an occaſion to commend them for the good's ſake; and living himſelf, tanquam nemini ignoſceret, as if he were ſo ſevere, that he could forgive no man, yet he reſerved large pardons for the imperfections of others. He willingly admitted, and was much delighted in, the acquaintance and familiarity of hopeful young Divines, adviſing them what books to read. This was one of the ſpecial advices and directions which he commended to young men; Hear the dictates of your own conſcience. Quod dubitas, ne feceris; making this comment upon that of the ſon of Sirach, In all thy matters truſt (or believe) thy own ſoul, and bear it not down by impetuous and contradictious luſts (3).

(3) Ibid.

[E] He publiſh'd a great many works.] They are as follow: I. The eternal Truth of Scriptures, and Chriſtian Belief, thereon wholly depending, manifeſted by its own Light. London 1613 in 4to. This is the firſt Book of his Comments on the Creed. II. How far the Miniſtry of Men is neceſſary for planting true Chriſtian Faith, and retaining the unity of it planted, London 1614, in 4to. This is the ſecond Book of his Comments on the Creed. III. Blaſphemous Poſitions of Jeſuits and other later Romaniſts concerning the authority of their Church. London 1614, in 4to. This is the third Book of his Comments on the Creed. The Dedication to William Lord Biſhop of Durham is dated at Corpus Chriſti College March 25th 1614. IV. Juſtifying Faith: Or, the Faith, by which the Juſt do live. A Treatiſe containing a Deſcription of the Nature, Properties, and Conditions of Chriſtian Faith. London 1615 and 1631, in 4to. This is the fourth book of his Comments on the Creed. V. A Diſcovery of Miſperſuaſions, breeding Preſumption and Hypocriſy, and Means how Faith may be planted in Unbelievers. Printed with the preceding Treatiſe. VI. A Treatiſe concerning the Original of Unbelief, Miſbelief, and Miſperſuaſions concerning the Verity, Unity, and Attributes of the Deity, &c. London 1625, in 4to. This is the fifth Book of his Comments on the Creed. VII. A Treatiſe of the Divine Eſſence and Attributes. London 1628, in 4to the firſt Part. The ſecond Part was printed there in 1629 in 4to. Theſe two parts make the ſixth Book of his Comments on the Creed. The firſt part is dedicated to William Earl of Pembroke in an Epiſtle, wherein, as Mr. Prynne ſays (4), "the Author profeſ- "ſeth himſelf an Arminian, and Patron of their Tenets. "And from chap. 8. to the 20th he profeſſedly main- "tains a mutability in God's eternal Decrees of Election "and Reprobation, depending upon the Actions and Wills "of Men, Univerſal Grace and Redemption, with "other Arminian Errors. This Book, though pub- "licly complained of, was never called in by the Biſhop "[Laud,] but the ſecond Part thereof was printed "with Licenſe Ann. 1629, and the Author of it ad- "vanced to the Preſidentſhip of Corpus Chriſti Col- "lege in Oxford by this Biſhop, yea by him deſigned "to be Doctor of the Chair (though he miſſed that "preferment) to poiſon the Univerſity of Oxford with "his Arminian dregs." VIII. The Knowledge of Jeſus Chriſt. This is the ſeventh Book of his Comments on the Creed. A larger title of it runs thus: Chriſt exerciſing his everlaſting Prieſthood, &c. Or, a Treatiſe of the Knowledge of Chriſt, which conſiſts in the true Eſtimate or experimental Valuation of his Death, Reſurrection, and Exerciſe of his everlaſting ſacerdotal function, &c. London 1624, in 4to. IX. Humiliation of the Son of God by his becoming the Son of Man, &c. London 1626 and 1636 in 4to. This is the eighth Book of his Comments on the Creed. X. Treatiſe of the Conſecration of the Son of God to the everlaſting Prieſthood, &c. London 1628 and 1633, in 4to, Oxford 1638 in 4to. This is the ninth Book of his Comment on the Creed. XI. A Treatiſe of that Knowledge of Chriſt, which conſiſts in the true Eſtimate or experimental Valuation of his Death, Reſurrection, and Exerciſe of his everlaſting Sacerdotal Function in the Heavenly Sanctuary, where he now ſitteth at the Right Hand of God the Father. London 1654, in folio. This is the tenth Book of his Comments on the Creed. XII. MARAN AΘA. Dominus veniet. Of Chriſt's Seſſion at the Right Hand of God, and Exaltation thereby. Of his being made Lord and Chriſt. Of his coming to judge the Quick and the Dead. Of the Reſurrection of the Body; and Life everlaſting both in Joy and Torments. London 1657, in folio. This is the eleventh Book of his Comments on the Creed. This with the tenth Book, and a preface concerning them and their Author, were publiſhed by Barnabas Oley, M. A. of Cambridge, who had before publiſhed the ſecond edition of the three firſt Books at London 1653, in folio, with a large Preface written by the Editor, and a life of our author written by Mr. Edmund Vaughan, Fellow of Corpus Chriſti College. To this eleventh Book are ſubjoin'd divers Sermons, proper Attendants upon the precedent Tracts. XIII. Treatiſe of the Holy Catholic Faith and Church, in three Books. London 1627, in 4to. This is the twelfth Book of his Comments on the Creed. XIV. A Treatiſe of Chriſtian Obedience. XV. A Treatiſe of the primæval State of the firſt Man. Of the manner how Sin found entrance into, and is propagated in the world. Of the Nature of Sin. Of our firſt ſervitude to it. Of that poor Remnant of Free-Will left in the Sons of Adam, with directions to uſe it aright, and how we are to be ſet free by the Son of God. Of Mortification. Of the right Uſe of Reaſon, or Rules of Art for determining Doubts in Divinity, &c. London 1654, in folio. XVI. A Diſcourſe of the Limitation of the two Propoſitions in the thirteenth Verſe of the eighth Chapter to the Romans. XVII. A Vindication of himſelf, or a ſerious Anſwer to Mr. Henry Burton's Exceptions taken againſt a paſſage in his Treatiſe of the Divine Eſſence and Attributes. XVIII. A Paraphraſe on the eleven firſt Chapters of Exodus, with uſeful Annotations, Obſervations, and Parallels. XIX. Salvation only from God's Grace, or an Expoſition of Rom. ix. 16. XX. God's juſt hardening of Pharaoh, when he had filled up that he " had not read ſo hearty and vigorous a champion againſt Rome, ſo convincing " and demonſtrative as Dr. Jackſon." He was a man of a blameleſs life, ſtudious, humble, courteous, charitable, and pious; and was extremely beloved by all, except the rigid Calviniſts, who conſidered him in an odious light as an Arminian [F]. There was another Divine of both his names, who was educated in the Univerſity of Cambridge, afterwards Miniſter of Wye in Kent, and at length Prebendary of Canterbury, and Doctor of Divinity. He publiſhed ſeveral Sermons, and was a ſevere enemy to the Arminians, and was a witneſs againſt Archbiſhop Laud upon his trial (t).

(4) Canterbury's Doom, pag. 166, 167.

(t) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 636.

the Meaſure of his Iniquity. Or, an Expoſition of Rom. ix. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24. Theſe five laſt Treatiſes were printed in his Second Part of the Knowledge of Jeſus Chriſt, abovementioned, at London 1654, in folio. XXI. Several Sermons. Theſe works of his, with ſome others not before printed, were publiſhed together at London 1672, in three volumes in folio. He wrote likewiſe An Hiſtorical Narrative licenſed by Dr. Edward Martin, domeſtic Chaplain to Biſhop Laud, without that Prelate's Privity; for which he was diſmiſſed the Biſhop's ſervice (2), and the book called in, and ſuppreſſed. But Mr. Prynne, an implacable enemy to Biſhop Laud, ſays (3), " that the ſaid " Hiſtorical Narration, which was the vileſt Im- " poſture that ever was thruſt upon our Church, was " licenſed by the ſaid Martin with Laud's privity; " and that the calling of it in was the act of Archbiſhop " Abbot upon Prynne's complaint, and the public " ſcandal it gave, much againſt Laud's Will, who " ever ſince connived at the ſale of them."

(2) See Prynne's Canterbury's Doom, pag. 508.

(3) Ibid. pag. 510.

(F) Extremely beloved by all except the rigid Puritans, who conſidered him in an odious light as an Arminian.] Mr. Prynne ſpeaks thus of him (4): Dr. Jackſon of Oxon is a man of great abilities, and of a plauſible, affable, courteous deportment, till of late he hath been tranſported beyond himſelf with metaphyſical contemplations, to his own infamy and his renowned Mother's ſhame; I mean, the Univerſity of Oxford, who grieves for his defection, from whoſe Dugs he never ſuck'd his poiſonous doctrines. In another place (5), that " he was con- " vented in the laſt Parliament (6), yea openly accuſed " in the laſt Convocation for his heretical Arminian " books, which have been cenſured by Mr. Henry " Burton in his Seven Vials, and particularly anſwered " by the acute and learned Dr. Twiſſe." Mr. Burton took offence at our Author's Treatiſe of the Divine Eſſence and Attributes, and in the Epiſtle before his book intitled Iſrael's Faſt, printed in 1628, has the following paſſage: Theſe Neutralizers, or Popiſh Arminians, or Arminian Papiſts, or what you will, under the name of the Church of England, dare vent any Arminian Hereſy: As in a book lately printed, and by authority too, there is this moſt blaſphemous Arminian Hereſy; That there is a goodneſs objective in the creature, which in order of nature is precedent to the act or exerciſe of God's will: Thus by neceſſary conſequence making the Creature a God, having a ſelf-being, independent, but only upon God's bare Preſcience, upon which, and not upon that ſupreme Cauſe of Cauſes, God's will, he hangeth the being and well-being of all the creatures. Dr. Jackſon wrote a Vindication of himſelf, printed in the Appendix to the tenth Book of his Comments on the Creed, wherein he denies that he ever wrote the propoſition abovementioned, but owns the following one contained in his Treatiſe of the Divine Eſſence and Attributes, chap. 13. part. 3. p. 149. in 4to. " As there is a " logical poſſibility preſuppoſed to be the working of " the Almighty Power; ſo there is a goodneſs ob- " jective precedent in order of nature to the act or " exerciſe of his will." He aſſerts in his Vindication, that " all things are not good only becauſe God " willeth, but God willeth ſome things becauſe they " are good;" and that " if the acts and injunctions of " God's will were the only rule of Goodneſs, and " had not eternal Goodneſs rather for their rule, it " would be hard to avoid the Stoical error, that all " ſins are equal, beſides a kind of fatality in human " affairs worſe than Stoical. The Turks acknowledge " God's will to be a rule of goodneſs, as ſovereign, " as the Author of the forementioned Epiſtle doth; " to be ſuch a Cauſe of Cauſes, as he would have it: " But being ignorant, or not conſidering, that there is " an immutable goodneſs precedent to the act or " exerciſe of God's will; a goodneſs whereof his " will, however conſidered, is no cauſe, for it is co- " eternal to his will, to his wiſdom, and eſſence; " they fall into groſly abſurd errors. And conſe- " quently unto this their ignorance, or to the com- " mon error, that all things are good only becauſe God " willeth them, they ſometimes highly commend, and " ſometimes deeply diſcommend the ſelf ſame practices " for quality and circumſtances with as great vehe- " mency of zeal and ſpirit, and with as fair proteſta- " tions of obedience in all things to God's will, as " any other men do. . . . . Whoſoever he be, whe- " ther Jew, Turk, or Chriſtian, which thinks, that " all events are ſo irreſiſtibly decreed by God, that " none can fall out otherwiſe than they do, muſt of " neceſſity grant, either that there is no moral evil " under the ſun, or that God's will, which is the " Cauſe of Cauſes, is the only cauſe of ſuch evil.

(4) In his Anti-Arminianiſm: or the Church of England's old Antitheſis &c. pag. 270. edit. 1630.

(5) Appendix to Anti-Arminianiſme.

(6) In 1628.

T.

☞ JAMES (Dr. THOMAS), a very learned Engliſh Divine in the ſeventeenth Century, was born in the Iſle of Wight (a) at Newport (b) about the year 1571 [A]. He was educated in Grammar learning at Wickham ſchool near Wincheſter, from whence he went to New College in Oxford, of which he became perpetual Fellow in 1593 (c). May the 3d 1595 he took the degree of Bachelor of Arts (d); and February the 3d $159\frac{8}{9}$ that of Maſter of Arts (e). About the year 1599 or 1600, being recommended to Mr. (afterwards Sir) Thomas Bodley by his great learning and knowledge of books, he was deſigned by him the firſt Keeper of the public Library at Oxford then founding; and this office was confirmed to him by the Univerſity in 1602 (f). May the 16th 1614 he accumulated the degrees in Divinity (g); and having about that time the Subdeanery of Wells conferred upon him freely without his ſeeking by the Biſhop of that See, and the Rectory of Mongeham in Kent, with other ſpiritual preferments by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury without aſking (h), he reſigned in 1620 the place of Library Keeper (i), being about that time a Juſtice of Peace (k), and betook himſelf more intenſely to his ſtudies, the fruits of which are ſeveral valuable works [B]. He was a Member of the Convocation

(a) Fuller's Worthies in Hampſhire.

(b) Wood, Hiſt. & Antiq. Univ. Oxon. lib. 2. pag. 144.

(c) Idem, ibid.

(d) Idem, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 149. 2d edit. London 1721.

(e) Idem, ibid. col. 154.

(f) Idem, Ath. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 537.

(g) Idem, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 197.

(h) Idem, Ath. Oxon. ubi ſupra.

(i) Idem, Hiſt. & Antiq. Univ. Oxon. lib. 2. pag. 53.

(k) Idem, pag. 144.

[A] Born about the year 1571.] Mr. Woods tells us (1), that he was about fifty eight years of age, when he died, which was in Auguſt 1629.

(1) Athen. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 540.

[B] Several valuable works. His writings are as follow. I. Philobiblion Richardi Dunelmenſis, publiſhed by our author, who collated ſeveral manuſcripts of it, at Oxford 1599 in 4to, with a dedication to Sir Thomas Bodley. To this is ſubjoined an Appendix de Manuſcriptis Oxonienſibus. II. Ecloga Oxonio-Cantabrigienſis. London 1600 in 4to. This contains a catalogue of all the manuſcripts in each College-Library in the Univerſity of Oxford, but not thoſe in the public Library; and in each College Library in Cambridge, and in the public one there. Mr. Wood obſerves (2), that in

(2) Ibid. col. 538.

Convocation held with the Parliament at Oxford in the firſt year of King Charles I's reign, wherein he made a motion, that ſome perſons might be commiſſioned to peruſe the manuſcripts of the writings of the antient Fathers in all public and private Libraries in England, in order to detect the forgeries of foreign Popiſh editions (l). He was prodigiouſly well verſed in the Fathers and Schoolmen, and ſo univerſal a ſcholar, that he was eſteemed by ſome a living Library. His deſigns were always for the public benefit of Learning and the Engliſh Church; which being known to Camden, he ſaith of him (m), he is a learned man, and a true lover of books, wholly dedicated to learning, who is now laboriouſly ſearching the Libraries of England, and purpoſeth that for the public good, which will be to the great benefit of Students. In a letter to Mr. Calendrine dated at Oxford May the 23d 1624 (n) he obſerves, that if the Univerſity of Cambridge would ſet up and forward a project like Dr. Goad's, "he dared undertake more good to be done "for (l) Idem, ibid. & Ath. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 537.

(m) Britannia, in Comit. Monmouth. edit. 1607.

(n) Collection of Letters, at the end of Archbiſhop Uſher's Life by Dr. Rich. Parr, Num. 66. pag. 307.

in making of this catalogue "he had liberty given to "him by each College in Oxford to peruſe their ma- "nuſcripts, and from that ſociety, which he perceived "was careleſs of them, he borrowed and took away "what he pleaſed, and put them forthwith into the "public Library. Several ſuch manuſcripts were taken "from Baliol College, and ſome from Merton, and do "yet bear in their reſpective fronts the names of the "donors of them to thoſe houſes." Joſeph Scaliger in a letter to Richard Thomſon dated Decemb. 16, 1600, highly commends this cataloge. His words are as follow. Catalogus ille ſcriptorum Oxonienſium & Cantabrigienſium Librorum mirificè me affecit; præſertim quum videam, multa in illis monumenta eſſe, quibus res Gallicæ & regni Francorum illuſtrari poſſint; & præterea non minorem numerum eorum, quibus Tyrannis Pontificia manifeſto deprehendi poſſit; tum quæ doceant, quando cloacæ illæ & colluvies monachorum ſeſe in Europam effuderint, ut Loiolitæ hodie & Capuccini. Habetis quoque Originem in Celſum, alioſque eximios Græcos nondum editos, quos parum vexari ab iis puto, qui in Collegiis degunt. A me certè non rarò reviſerentur, ſi ibi adeſſem. III. Cyprianus redivivus, hoc eſt, elenchus eorum, quæ in opuſculo Cypriani de Unitate Eccleſiæ ſunt vel addita, vel detracta, vel lapſu Typographi, vel alio quovis modo ſuppoſita, &c. Printed with the Ecloga. IV. Spicilegium D. Auguſtini, hoc eſt, Libri de fide ad Petr. Diaconum, cum antiquiſſimis duobus Manuſcriptis & poſtremis ac ultimis Editionibus excuſis, tam Baſilienſi quam Pariſienſi diligens Collatio, ac Caſtigatio, &c. Printed with the Ecloga. V. Bellum Papale, ſeu Concordia diſcors Sixti V & Clementis VIII. circa Hieronymianam Editionem. London 1600 in 4to and 1678 in 8vo. VI. Catalogus Librorum in Bibliothecâ Bodleianâ. Oxford 1605 in a large octavo, or rather a ſmall quarto. Reprinted with many additions in a thick 4to, 1620. To which was added an Appendix in 1636. In this catalogue is inſerted a catalogue of all the manuſcripts which were then in the Bodleian Library. VII. Concordantiæ ſanctorum Patrum, i. e. vera & pia Libri Canticorum per Patres univerſos, tam Græcos, quam Latinos Expoſitio, &c. Oxford 1607 in 4to. VIII. Apology for John Wicliffe, ſhewing his Conformity with the now Church of England, &c. Oxford 1608 in 4to. To this is added The Life of John Wicliff. IX. A Treatiſe of the Corruption of Scripture, Councels, and Fathers, by the Prelats, Paſtors, and Pillars of the Church of Rome, for maintenance of Popery and Irreligion. By Thomas James, Student in Divinitie and chief Keeper of the Publique Librarie in the Univerſitie of Oxford, of the hon^ble foundation of Sir Thomas Bodley Knt. Together with a ſufficient Anſwere unto James Gretſer & Antonie Poſſevine Jeſuites, and the unknown author of the Grounds of the Old Religion, and the New. Divided into five Parts. London 1611 in 4to, and 1688 in 8vo. It is dedicated to Dr. George Abbot, Archbiſhop of Canterbury. The firſt Part ſhews the Baſtardie of the falſe Fathers; the ſecond, the Corruption of the true Fathers; the third, the Varietie and Contrarietie of the Popiſh Bibles, commonly called the Vulgar Bibles in Latine; the fourth, the open and ſecret wrongs done unto Fathers, antient, middle-aged, or modern Writers, by the Papiſts, chiefly in their Indices Expurgatorii; the fifth, particular Remedies againſt theſe ſeveral Diſeaſes, when and how to be applied, together with the uſe, profit, and commoditie of the antient Manuſcripts. In the Advertiſement to the Chriſtian Reader he obſerves, that there are 187 different Treatiſes, which are ſhrewdly ſuſpected, if not plainly convicted of forgery by the Papiſts themſelves. "I follow herein, ſays he, the "judgment of their beſt learned writers, moſt eſteemed "in their times, ſuch as Bellarmine and Baronius Car- "dinals, Poſſevin and Gretſer Jeſuites, Sixtus Senen- "ſis of the order of the Preachers, Angelus Roccha "an Eremite, Pamelius a Monk, and ſundry others." He remarks, that the ſpecial motives of publiſhing of this treatiſe were three. "The firſt, ſays he, becauſe "it is a matter of faith, to appoint what is Scripture, "and what is not; which Pope Sixtus taking upon "him to determine, ſitting in Chayre, hath foulely "erred; ſo that it appears by this, that their conclu- "ſion is falſe, that the Pope cannot erre in matter of "faith. The ſecond, becauſe the Papiſts are ready "to oppoſe and object ſtill unto us our different tranſla- "tions of the Bibles, when there may bee very good "reaſon given out of the Originals for both readings, "little conſidering their own groſſe errors and palpa- "ble abſurdities in the ſetting forth of their two Bi- "bles, authorized by two Popes within two yeares; "which to reconcile is a matter altogether unpoſſible, "and to indure, likewiſe intolerable. I underſtand "by our Divines of Doway, that they meane to have "a bout with us, for the Corrections of the Biſhop's "Bible. I would they would be pleaſed, firſt to an- "ſwere for themſelves and their two Popes, and then "let them object what they can againſt us for changing "and altering ſome fewe words in the Bible, and they "ſhall be anſwered with reaſon. Another motive that "hath provoked me to the writing of this argument "hath been a pretended Anſwere of James Gretſer un- "to my Bellum Papale. It was fitte his reaſons ſhould "be anſwered, tho' his ſcurrilous jeſts and reproachful "ſpeeches deſerve no better anſwere than that of Salo- "mon's fool." In the Appendix to the Reader he tells us, that ſince the printing of this book he had been informed of a dangerous practice in Rome. "In the "Vatican Library, ſays he, there are certaine men "maintained only to tranſcribe Acts of the Councels, "or Copies of the Father's workes. Theſe men, ap- "pointed for this buſineſs, doe, as I am credibly in- "formed, in tranſcribing bookes imitate the letter of "the auntient copies, as neere as can bee expreſſed. "And it is to be feared, that in copying out of bookes "they doe adde and take away, alter and change the "words, according to the pleaſure of their Lord the "Pope. And ſo theſe tranſcripts may within a few "yeares, by reaſon of their counterfaiting the aun- "tient hands, be avouched for very old manuſcripts, "deluding the world with a ſhewe of antiquitie: the "danger is the greater, becauſe there may bee an "Index Expurgatorius (for ought we know) for purg- "ing the manuſcripts as well as the printed bookes. "This practiſe of theres I heard of ſome two or three "years agoe; but I had forgotten of whom, and "therefore did forbeare to mention it, till ſuch time "as by God's will I lighted upon the Gentleman "againe, who was at Rome in the Vatican, and ſaw "it with his eyes, and will teſtifie it upon his oath, if "need be." X. The Jeſuits Downfall threatned againſt them by the Secular Prieſts for their wicked Lives, accurſed Manners, heretical Doctrine, and more than Machiavillian Policy. Oxford 1612 in 4to. To this is added The Life of Father Parſons an Engliſh Jeſuit. XI. Filius Papæ Papalis, &c. London 1621, tranſlated from Latin into Engliſh by William Craſhaw. Our author's name is not put to it. XII. Index generalis ſanctorum

" for the profit of Learning and true Religion, than by building ten Colleges. I have " of late, continues he, given myſelf to the reading only of manuſcripts; and in them " I find ſo many and ſo pregnant teſtimonies, either fully for our Religion, or againſt " the Papiſts, that it is to be wondered at." And in another letter to Biſhop Uſher dated at Oxford February the 15th 1624 (o) he writes thus: " Not only the Rabbins, " but the Thalmud in ſix volumes at Rome hath felt the ſmart of the Popiſh Indices. " Would God, we were but half as diligent to reſtore, as they to aboliſh and put out " the truth. I have reſtored 300 citations, and reſcued them from corruption in thirty " quires of paper. Mr. Briggs will ſatisfy you in this point, and ſundry other projects " of mine, if they miſcarry not for want of maintenance: it would deſerve a Prince's " purſe. If I was in Germany, the Eſtates would defray all charges. Cannot our " Eſtates ſupply what is wanting? If every Churchman, that hath an 100 l. per ann. and " upward, will lay down but a ſhilling for every hundred toward theſe public works, I " will undertake the reprinting of the Fathers, and ſetting forth of five or ſix orthodox " writers, comparing of books printed with printed or written; collating of Popiſh " tranſlations in Greek; and generally whatſoever ſhall concern books, or the purity of " them. I will take upon me to be a Magiſter S. Palatii in England, if I ſhall be " thereunto lawfully required." He died at his houſe in Hollywell in the North Suburb of Oxford in Auguſt 1629, aged about fifty eight years, and was interred in New College Chapel (p).

(o) Ibid. Num. 77. pag. 320.

(p) Wood, Hiſt. & Antiq. pag. 145. and Athen. Oxon. col. 540.

ſanctorum patrum, ad ſingulos verſus cap. 5. ſecundum Matthæum, &c. London 1624 in 8vo. XIII. Notæ ad Georgium Wicelium de Methodo Concordiæ Eccleſiaſticæ, cum Catalogo authorum qui ſcripſerunt contra ſqualores Eccleſiæ Romanæ. London 1625 in 8vo. XIV. Vindiciæ Gregorianæ, ſeu reſtitutus innumeris pene locis Gregorius Magnus, ex variis manuſcriptis, ut magno labore, ita ſingulari fide collatis. Geneva 1625. XV. Manuduction or Introduction unto Divinity, containing a Confutation of Papiſts by Papiſts throughout the important Articles of our Religion, &c. Oxford 1625 in 4to. XVI. Humble and earneſt requeſt to the Church of England for and in the behalf of Books touching Religion. Printed in one ſheet in 8vo. 1625. XVII. Explanation, or enlarging of the Ten Articles in his Supplication lately exhibited to the Clergy of England, for the reſtoring to integrity Authors corrupted by Papiſts. Oxford 1625 in 4to. XVIII. Specimen corruptelarum Pontificiorum in Cypriano, Ambroſio, Gregorio Magno & authore Operis imperfecti, & in jure Canonico. London 1626 in 4to. XIX. Index librorum prohibitorum a Pontificiis. Oxford 1627 in 8vo. XX. Admonitio ad Theologos Proteſtantes de Libris Pontificiorum cautè legendis. MS. XXI. Enchiridion Theologicum. MS. XXII. Liber de ſuſpicionibus & conjecturis. MS. " Theſe three manuſcripts, ſays Mr. " Wood (*), I ſaw formerly in the Lambeth Library " under D. 1, 2, 3; but whether printed I know " not: perhaps the Enchiridion is." Dr. James likewiſe tranſlated from French into Engliſh, The Moral Philoſophy of the Stoics. London 1598 in 8vo, and publiſhed Two ſhort Treatiſes againſt the Order of the begging Friars, written by John Wicliff; and a book intitled, Fiſcus Papalis: ſive Catalogus indulgentiarum & reliquiarum ſeptem principalium Eccleſiarum urbis Romæ, ex vetere MS. deſcriptus. London 1617 in 4to. The Latin out of the Manuſcript is ſet down in one column, and the Engliſh in another. Some were of opinion, that this book was not publiſhed by Dr. James but by William Craſhaw of Cambridge. There are ſeveral letters of our author publiſhed in the Collection of three hundred Letters written between Archbiſhop Uſher and moſt of the eminenteſt Perſons for Piety and Learning in his time, ſubjoined to Dr. Richard Parr's Life of that Prelate. In his letter to him dated at Oxford January 28, 1623, he writes thus: " I have traced the " ſteps afar off about the Succeſſion and Viſibility of the " Church, wherein your Lordſhip hath gone a far " journey. I do but glean where you have reaped a " plentiful harveſt. Nevertheleſs, if my poor and " weak labours may any ways ſtead your Lordſhip, " I would be glad to contribute my pains... I am " not ſo far gone in years as in ſickneſſes; yet my body " is not ſo weak, but my mind is as ſtrong, and my " zeal great to ſee ſomewhat acted againſt the Papiſts " in matters of forgery and corruption, which are " matters of fact, whereto my ſtudies have always " aimed, and ſhall during life, if God will. I find " infinite corruption in the Fathers works, eſpecially " of the Roman print. In the Canon Law and Decretals I can convince them of ſhameleſs forgeries by " the Parchments. But that which hath amazed or " amuſed the world, and made it turn or continue " Popiſh, hath been the want of Cenſurers of the Fathers works, which made our Magdeburgians and " ſome of our beſt learned, to lance the Fathers, and " not to ſpare them, whereas they are but Pſeudo-Fathers indeed. But the notedeſt cozenage, which " is rife and moſt beguiling in theſe days, is a ſecret " Index Expurgatorius, and therefore the more dangerous; that is, the reprinting of books, not making " mention of any caſtigation or purgation of them, " and yet both leaving and adding, and otherwiſe infinitely depraving them, as is to be ſeen in hundreds " of books of the middle-age and later writers. I inſtance in Sixtus Senenſis, and Alphonſus de Caſtro, " and Antoninus's Summs. There are about five hundred " baſtard treatiſes, and about a thouſand places in the " true authors, which are corrupted, that I have diligently noted; and will ſhortly vindicate them out " of the manuſcripts; for hitherto they be but conjectures of the learned. For this purpoſe I have " gotten together the flower of our young Divines, " who voluntarily will join with me in the ſearch. " Some fruits of their labours, if your Lordſhip deſires, I will ſend up. And might I be but ſo " happy as to have other twelve thus beſtowed, four " in tranſcribing orthodox writers, whereof we have " plenty, that for the ſubſtantial points have maintained " our religion, (40 or 50 pounds would ſerve) four to " compare old prints with the new; four other to " compare the Greek tranſlations by the Papiſts, as " Vedelius hath done with Ignatius, wherein he has " been ſomewhat helped by my pains; I would not " doubt but to drive the Papiſts out of all their ſtarting holes. But alas! my Lord, I have not encouragement from our Biſhops. Preferment I ſeek " none at their hands; only 40 or 60 pounds per annum for others, and their Lordſhips letters to encourage others, is that I ſeek, which being gained, " the cauſe is gained, notwithſtanding their brags in " their late books. H.

(*) Athen. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 539.

☞ JAMES (RICHARD), nephew of the preceding, was born at Newport in the Iſle of Wight (a), and admitted a ſcholar of Corpus Chriſti College in Oxford from that of Exeter September the 23d 1608, aged about ſixteen years (b). October the 12th 1611 he took the degree of Bachelor of Arts (c), and January the 24th 1615 that of Maſter (d). September the 13th 1615 he became Probationer Fellow of Corpus Chriſti College (e). About that time he entered into holy Orders (f). January the 28th 1623, his uncle Dr. Thomas James wrote thus of him in a letter from Oxford to Biſhop Uſher:

(a) Wood, Hiſt. & Antiq. Univ. Oxon. lib. 2. pag. 240.

(b) Idem, Ath. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 615. 2d edit. London 1721.

(c) Idem, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 118.

(d) Idem, col. 197.

(e) Idem, Ath. Oxon. ubi ſupra.

(f) Idem, ibid.

Uſher (g): "A kinſman of mine is at this preſent, by my direction, writing Becket's "Life, wherein it ſhall be plainly ſhewed, both out of his own writings and thoſe of "his time, that he was not, as he is eſteemed, an Arch Saint, but an Arch-Rebel, and "that the Papiſts have not been a little deceived in him. This kinſman of mine, as "well as my ſelf, ſhall be right glad to do any ſervice to your Lordſhip in this kind. "He is of ſtrength, and well both able and learned to effectuate ſomewhat in this kind; "critically ſeen both in Hebrew, Greek, and Latin; knowing well the languages both "French, Spaniſh, and Italian, immenſe and beyond all other men, eſpecially in read- "ing of the manuſcripts; of an extraordinary ſtyle in penning; ſuch a one as I dare "balance with any Prieſt or Jeſuit in the world of his age, and ſuch a one as I could "wiſh your Lordſhip had about you. But Paupertas inimica bonis eſt moribus, and both "fatherleſs and motherleſs, and almoſt (but for my ſelf) I may ſay (the more is the "pity) friendleſs." July the 7th 1624 he took the degree of Bachelor of Divinity (h). He publiſhed ſome pieces, and left a great number of curious manuſcripts behind him [A]. Mr. Wood obſerves (i), "that though humorous, he was of a far better judg- "ment than his uncle Dr. Thomas James; and had he lived to his age, would have ſur- "paſſed him in publiſhed books. He was eſteemed to be a perſon well verſed in moſt "parts of learning. He was noted by all thoſe that knew him to be a very good Gre- "cian, Poet, an excellent Critic, Antiquary, Divine, and admirably well ſkilled in "the Saxon and Gothic Languages. But as for his ſkill in preaching, it was not, ex- "cept by the graver ſort, approved by any in the Univerſity. For of three Ser- "mons delivered to the Academians, one concerning the Obſervation of Lent, was "without a Text, according to the moſt antient manner; another againſt a Text; and "a third beſide it; ſhewing himſelf thereby a humorous perſon." He had travelled very much abroad, and was in Ruſſia in 1619. He aſſiſted Mr. Selden in the edition of the Marmora Arundeliana, that great man ſtyling him in the preface to his book, Vir multijugæ Lectionis ſtudiique indefatigabilis. He was very ſerviceable likewiſe to Sir Robert Cotton, and Sir Thomas Cotton, in diſpoſing and ſettling of their noble Library. His intimacy with the former of thoſe Gentlemen, who was no friend to the Prerogative, occaſioned him to be cloſely confined by order of the Houſe of Lords in the year 1629, when Sir Robert was impriſoned for ſome matters uttered in the Parliament. Mr. Wood remarks,

(g) Collection of Letters, printed at the end of Dr. Richard Parr's Life of Archbiſhop Uſher, Lett. 62. pag. 303. edit. London 1686, in fol.

(h) Idem, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 228.

(i) Athen. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 615.

[A] He publiſhed ſome pieces, and left a great number of curious manuſcripts behind him.] He publiſhed ſeveral Latin ſermons, as, 1. Anti-Poſſevinus, ſive Concio habita ad Clerum in Acad. Oxon. an. 1625. in 2 Tim. iv. 13. Oxford 1625 in 4to. 2. Concio habita ad Clerum Oxon. de Eccleſiâ, in Matth. xvi. 18. Oxford 1633 in 4to. And ſeveral Engliſh ſermons, as, 1. Sermon concerning the Euchariſt, delivered on Eaſter-Day in Oxford, on Matth. xxvi. ver. 26, 27, 28. London 1629 in 4to. 2. Hiſtory of Preaching, or concerning the Apoſtles preaching and ours, on 1 Cor ix. 16. London 1630 in 4to. 3. Sermon concerning the obſervation of Lent-faſt. London 1630 in 4to. There is no text prefixed to this ſermon, but it is grounded on Luke iv. 2. 4. Sermon concerning the times of receiving the Sacrament, and of mutual Forgiveneſs, delivered in Corpus Chriſti College at the election of a Preſident on 1 Cor. xi. 25. London 1632 in 4to. 5. Apologetical Eſſay for the Righteouſneſs of a miſerable unhappy People, preached at St. Mary's in Oxford on Pſalm 37.25. London 1632 in 4to. He publiſhed alſo Poemata quædam in mortem clariſſimi Viri Roberti Cottoni & Thomæ Allen. Oxford 1633 in 4to. With theſe Poems he publiſhed Sir Thomas More's Epiſtle written from Abingdon in Berkſhire in 1519 to the Univerſity of Oxford for the cultivation of the Greek tongue, which had been for many years neglected among the members thereof. He likewiſe tranſlated into Engliſh Minutius Felix's Octavius, Oxford 1636 in 12mo. All the abovementioned pieces, except the tranſlation of the Octavius, he gave bound up in one volume to the Bodleian Library, with a copy of verſes of his compoſition written in a ſpare leaf before the firſt of them, beginning thus:

"Dear God, by whom in dark womb's ſhade
"I am to fear and wonder made, &c."

He wrote theſe verſes, when he was cloſely confined by order of the Houſe of Lords. He left behind him about 45 manuſcripts either of his own compoſition, or collected by him from various authors, all written by his own hand, which came firſt into the hands of his friend Dr. Thomas Greaves, and afterwards into the Bodleian Library. Thoſe of his own compoſition are, I. Decanonizatio Thomæ Cantuarienſis & ſuorum, in folio. This book, containing 760 pages, begins thus: Viam regiam mihi patefacit ad decanonizationem ficti & fucati Martyris, &c. and the beginning of the Epiſtle to the Reader is this, Amice Lector, rogatus ſum ſæpius, &c. II. Comment in Evangelia S. Johannis, in two parts in 4to. The beginning is, Poſtmodo ad textum ſacræ hiſtoriæ deveniam, ubi prius, &c. Both parts contain about twelve ſheets. III. Notæ in aliquot loca Bibliæ, in three ſheets in 4to. The beginning is, Videte ſub ficu. Paraphraſtes ſub umbroſâ ficu, &c. IV. Antiquitates Inſulæ Vectæ, in ſeventeen pages in 4to. The beginning is Angli Saxones Marciarum, &c. and of the epiſtle to the reader, Utrum moriar priuſquam hoc opus perficiam, Deus novit, &c. It is only a ſpecimen or a foundation for a greater work to be built upon. V. Epiſtolæ ad amicos ſuos doctos. The beginning of the firſt epiſtle, which was written to Dr. Sebaſt. Benefield of Corpus Chriſti College, is, Sancte Deus, &c. This manuſcript is a thick 4to, and contains epiſtles chiefly written to thoſe of his own College, epitaphs, and ſome Engliſh copies of verſes. VI. Epigrams in Latin and Engliſh, with other Poems. VII. Reaſons concerning the attempts on the Lives of great Perſonages, &c. Theſe reaſons which are ſix or more, have this beginning, Sir, if you pleaſe to learn my mind concerning the Attempts on the Lives of great Perſonages, &c. written in two ſheets in folio. VIII. Two Sermons: the firſt on James v. 14, the ſecond on John xii. 32. Both written in folio. IX. Iter Lancaſtrenſe. It is in Engliſh verſe, and was written in 1636, and hath this beginning. High Holt of Wood, &c. It contains two ſheets and an half. X. Gloſſarium Saxonicum-Anglicum. It is a long pocket-book. XI. Gloſſarium Sax. Angl. another part in 8vo. XII. A Ruſſian Dictionary, with the Engliſh to it. XIII. Obſervations made in his Travels through ſome parts of Wales, Scotland, on Shetland, Greenland, &c. In four ſheets in 4to. XIV. Obſervations made on the Countrey, with the Manners and Cuſtoms of Ruſſia or Ruſland, ann. 1619. In 8vo. It was intended to be tranſcribed, and to have other things added to it. Beſides theſe fourteen books Mr. Wood had another of Epigrams, chiefly in Latin, and ſome in Greek, in 8vo, dedicated to his Tutor Dr. Sebaſt. Benefield. His collections are in twenty four volumes in 4to and ſeven in folio, and contain for the moſt part notes from antient manuſcripts, and ſometimes from printed authors, relating to hiſtory and antiquity.

remarks (k), " that nothing was wanting to our author and his ſtudies but a Sine-Cure or " Prebendſhip, either of which, if conferred upon him, Hercules's labours would have " ſeemed a trifle." He died of a quartan fever in the houſe of Sir Thomas Cotton in Weſtminſter in the beginning of December 1638, and was interred on the ſeventh day of that month in St. Margaret's Church.

(k) Ibid. col. 616. and Hiſt. & Antiq. Univ. Oxon. lib. 2. pag. 240.

JANSENIUS (CORNELIUS) Biſhop of Ipres, was one of the moſt learned Divines of the ſeventeenth Century. He was born near Leerdam [A] in Holland in the year 1585. It has often been objected to him that his family was Proteſtant, and that himſelf had profeſſed that Religion for ſome time [B], but this is a falſity. He went and ſtudied at Louvain in 1602, and applied himſelf ſo cloſely to his books that he fell ſick (a), and therefore was adviſed to remove to another place for the benefit of the air. Accordingly Janſenius went to Paris, where he met with John du Verger de Hauranne (b), with whom he had contracted a very ſtrict friendſhip in Louvain. By the recommendation of this worthy friend he got to be Preceptor in a good family (c), and being a man of erudition, he ſoon got acquainted with ſome perſons of figure. Some time after he went to Bayonne, to meet his good friend who had retired thither. In this place they applied themſelves with ſo extraordinary a vigour to their ſtudies [C], and ingratiated themſelves ſo far into the eſteem of the Biſhop of Bayonne, that he procured Du Verger a Canonry in his Cathedral, and Janſenius the Headſhip of a College (d). The Prelate juſt mentioned having been raiſed to the Archiepiſcopal See of Tours [D], prevailed with Du Verger to go to Paris; when Janſenius being thus ſeparated from his friend, and being not ſure of the protection of the new Biſhop, left Bayonne and returned to Louvain, where he was appointed Principal of St. Pulcheria's College, which employment he diſliked, becauſe it did not give him leiſure to purſue his ſtudies according to his wiſhes; this likewiſe was the reaſon why he refuſed to teach Philoſophy (e). He took his Doctor's degree in Divinity with great reputation in the year 1617 (f), and was admitted as one of the ordinary Profeſſors; and he acquired ſo much eſteem, that the Univerſity ſent him twice into Spain [E], on affairs of conſequence. He was appointed by the

(a) Valer. And. Deſſelius, Biblioth. Belgic. pag. 154.

(b) He who made himſelf ſo famous, under the name of the Abbot of St. Cyran.

(c) Leydecker, ubi infra, citation (g) pag. 8.

(d) Ibid. citation (g) pag. 10.

(e) Ibid. pag. 12.

(f) Valer. And. Biblioth. Belg. pag. 154.

[A] He was born at Leerdam.] In a village called Accoy, as Mr. Leydecker obſerves. Fallunt, ſays he (1), operis poſtumi editores quando referunt eum natum eſſe Leerdami modico Bataviæ oppidulo, ſed tanti viri natalibus jam magno. Etenim ſciant ejus Aſſeclæ eum in Comitatu quidem Leerdamenſi natum, non tamen in oppido LEERDAMO (Lingerdamo aliàs, quòd ad Lingam fluvium ſit ſitum) ſed in quodam Pago, quod Urbeculæ ſubeſt, & ACCOY appellatur: ſic Nepotes & Conſanguinei, qui ibi adhuc degunt, teſtantur, ſuperſtite humili Domuncula, in qua primum lucem adſpexit. i. e. " The editors of his poſthumous works are miſtaken, " in ſaying that he was born at Leerdam, a little " town of Holland, but now great for having given " birth to ſo renowned a man. For let his followers " know, that the country of Leerdam indeed gave " birth to him, but not the town of Leerdam (or Lin- " gerdam becauſe it ſtands on the river Linga) but a " certain village, called ACCOY, lying under the " little town. This is what we are aſſured by his " poſterity and relations who ſtill live there; the " little houſe in which he was born is ſtill exiſting." We muſt not think there is any thing peculiar in Janſenius's calling himſelf Leerdamenſis (2); he giving himſelf that name, from the cuſtom which people have of aſſuming the name of the town in the territory where- of they were born. This may be proved by a numberleſs multitude of examples (3).

(1) Leydecker, de Vita & Morte Janſenii, pag. 2.

(2) Janſenius patria fuit Batavus, atque ut ipſe ſcribit, quaſi in honore id poneret, Leerdamenſis . . . Unde verò iſte error? an quod, &c. Idem, ibid. and pag. 3.

(3) See the remark [A] of the article CASTELLAN.

[B] It has been often objected to him, that he himſelf had profeſſed the Proteſtant religion for ſome time.] One Moſes du Bourg, a Jeſuit of Bourdeaux, publiſhed a little book (4) in 1658, wherein he aſſerts (5) that Cornelius Janſenius's father profeſſed the Calviniſtical Hereſy; but that his ſon, when come to maturity, declared himſelf a Roman Catholic. Father Labbe had publiſhed the ſame particular before (6); Princeps eorum extitit CORNELIUS JANSENIUS, qui gente Hollandus, patria Leerdamenſis, inter hæreticos educatus à puero, tum Lovanii, &c. i. e. " The principal of theſe " was CORNELIUS JANSENIUS, who being a Hol- " lander, born in Leerdam, was brought up among " the Heretics from a child; afterwards at Louvain, " &c." Father Hazart renewed the ſame calumny in a Flemiſh work intitled The Triumphs of the Popes of Rome, publiſhed by him at Antwerp in 1681. His father, ſays he, was a Calviniſt; and as to Janſenius himſelf, when grown up, he made an outward ſhow of being a Catholic (7). But being ſued for ſcandal, he alledged, among other reaſons, that he was not the inventor of that reproach, ſince he had publiſhed it after Moſes du Bourg (8). It has been proved indiſputably in the caſes I cite, that this reproach is abſolutely falſe. Here follows a paſſage of Mr. Leydecker, wherein are ſome particulars that are not in the factums or caſes. Parentes habuit honeſtos, Pontificiæ Religioni addictos, licet Evangelica lux Belgio affunderetur, quibuſque modicæ opes. Ut male Hazardus Jeſuita in Hiſtoriis eum Patre Calviniano natum retulerit, illum falſi poſtulantibus, qui id non ferrent, Nepotibus. Pater appellatus fuit vernaculo nomine JAN OTTIE (9), fabrili opere victum quæritans, Mater autem LYNTJE GYSBERTS, ceu referunt ſuperſtites, unde hic Filius CORNELIS JANSEN dictus eſt, antiquo vulgi in Belgio more, at Latina vel erudita terminatione, CORNELIUS JANSENIUS (10). i. e. " He ſprung from honeſt pa- " rents devoted to the Romiſh religion, notwithſtanding " the Goſpel had diffuſed its light over Holland, and " who poſſeſſed a ſmall eſtate. Therefore Hazart the " Jeſuit aſſerted a falſity, in declaring him to be a " Calviniſt; and accordingly was ſued for it in an " action of ſcandal by his relations, who highly re- " ſented that outrage. Janſenius's father was called " JAN OTTIE, in the language of the country, and " was by trade a Carpenter; his mother was named " LYNTJE GYSBERTS, as perſons now living de- " clare; whence this ſon, had the name of CORNE- " LIUS JANSEN, after the antient cuſtom of the vulgar " in Holland, but was called CORNELIUS JANSENIUS " in the Latin or learned termination."

(4) Intitled, Hiſtoire du Janſeniſme, contenant ſa Conception, ſa Naiſſance, ſon Accroiſſement, & ſon Agonie.

(5) See the Factums or Caſes of Janſenius's Relations, in tom. 8. pag. 317. of the Morale Pratique.

(6) In Præfatione Triumphi Catholicæ Veritatis, printed at Paris in the year 1651.

(7) See the Factums of Janſenius's Relations, pag. 307.

(8) Ibid. pag. 317.

(9) It is obſerved in the very beginning of the firſt caſe, that his name was John Otto Acquoy.

(10) Leydecker, de Vita Janſen. pag. 3.

[C] They applied themſelves with extraordinary vigour to their ſtudies.] " It was at Mr. d'Hauranne's, " who was afterwards biſhop of St. Cyran, that Jan- " ſenius ſpent the five or ſix years he ſtaid in Bay- " onne; applying himſelf ſo intenſely to the ſtudy of " the Fathers, and of St. Auſtin, that he not appear- " ing to be of a ſtrong conſtitution, Hauranne's mo- " ther uſed ſometimes to tell her ſon, that he would " prove the death of that worthy young Fleming, by " making him over-ſtudy himſelf (11).

(11) Factum pour les Parens de Janſenius, pag. 410.

[D] This prelate . . . . . having been raiſed to the Archiepiſcopal See of Tours.] This Archbiſhopric, according to Leydecker (12), was become vacant by the voluntary reſignation of Sebaſtian Galigai, the Marquis d'Ancre's brother-in-law (13); Vacante Cathedra per ſpontaneam Sebaſtiani Galigaji Florentini, infelicis Marchionis Ancræi fratris, ceſſionem.

(12) De Vita Janſenii, pag. 10.

(13) Or rather brother-inlaw; for Marquis d'Ancre's name was Concini, and his wife Galligai.

[E] The Univerſity ſent him twice into Spain.] His enemies have publiſhed a great many falſities on this occaſion. They have aſſerted, that he fled into Spain to eſcape the Inquiſition, who was going to ſeize him, for venting the King his Sovereign, Profeſſor of the holy Scriptures in the year 1630 in the Univerſity of Louvain; and five years after created by him Biſhop of Ypres. A book which Janſenius publiſhed againſt France [F], greatly contributed to his promotion to that See, venting his new doctrine in that country (14). This Father Hazart has advanced, after Moſes du Bourg, whom he copied. Here follows what is anſwered in the Factums (15).

(14) Factum, pag. 450.

(15) Pag. 451.

(16) That is of Moſes du Bourg.

" This ignorance (16) with regard to the affairs of " Janſenius, ſhews ſufficiently that this is mere ca- " lumny and fiction. He ſpeaks of his journey to " Spain, as though he had made but one; whereas " he undertook two (†), the one in 1624, and the " other in 1625. This circumſtance would have " puzzled this Jeſuit of Bourdeaux; for had he fixed " his tale to Janſenius's firſt journey, the falſity would " have been viſible; becauſe Janſenius would have " taken care not to have gone thither a ſecond time: " And had he fixed it to the ſecond journey, it would " have been viſible another way; it being infallibly " certain, that ſo unlucky an accident would have de- " feated all his negotiation, and he would have re- " turned in diſgrace to Louvain; inſtead of this it is " very certain that he returned with glory to it, " having obtained all that the Univerſity of Lou- " vain had requeſted of his Catholic Majeſty, to put a " ſtop to the enterprizes of the Jeſuits. In fine an " author, who deſerves ſo little credit on other ac- " counts, is altogether unworthy of credit with regard " to a particular that deſerves ſo little belief itſelf, " when he, in the ſame place, advances three other " palpable falſities againſt the ſame perſon; and this " the Jeſuit of Bourdeaux has done. The firſt falſity " is, that Janſenius's father was a Calviniſt, &c. The " falſity of this calumny is very evidently proved in " the firſt and third Factum. The ſecond falſity is, " that Janſenius at his return to Louvain, after the " long excurſion he had made in France, managed his " intrigues ſo well, that, under the notion of his being a " poor Dutch Catholic, he got a penſioner's place in a " College, where certain monies were beſtowed for the " maintenance of ſuch poor ſcholars. An impudent " falſhood which has been refuted by the public re- " cords (‡), ſince Janſenius, immediately at his " return to Louvain in 1617, took his Doctor's de- " gree in Divinity, and was appointed Preſident of " St. Pulcheria's College: Louvanium revocatus novo " Collegio D. Pulcheriæ præficitur. The third is an " infamous calumny, viz. that this honeſt penſioner uſed " to ſteal the College-money, to pay the boarding of two " nephews of the Abbot of St. Cyran. Now all theſe " are falſe aſſertions. 1. The Abbot had but one " nephew, not two, in Louvain. 2. Had Janſenius " been only a Penſioner, how could he have had the " diſpoſal of the College monies? 3. This pretended " theft is a horrid calumny, that is vented in many " of the Jeſuits libels, whereof they have been con- " victed in the ſixteenth Provincial Letter, beginning " thus, I will tell you, &c."

(†) Val. And. in Faſtis Academicis, pag. 393.

(‡) Faſti Acad. pag. 138.

It had been aſſerted a numberleſs multitude of times, that there is no fiction but what is grounded on ſome true incident. This may be ſaid with regard to that of Moſes du Bourg; for it appears by a Letter of Janſenius, that the Spaniſh Inquiſition lodged ſome informations againſt him after he was gone. Here follow the words of his Letter (17). " They write to " me from the other ſide the Pyrenees (Spain), that " the Inquiſition has been raiſed againſt a Doctor of " Louvain who has been in Spain, and that they ap- " plied themſelves to a Doctor of Salamanca, (the " principal Doctor of that Univerſity) at whoſe " houſe he lodged, and who is called Baſil de Leon, " to lodge an information againſt him, as being a " Dutchman, and conſequently a Heretic; but he " anſwered them ſo much to the advantage of this " Doctor, that they were quite put out of counte- " nance (18)." I ſhall conclude this remark with the following words of Valerius Andreas (19). Brevi quoque tempore eam de ſe opinionem apud Academicos omnes excitavit, ut præ Janſenio alius magis idoneus non fuerit judicatus, qui nomine ejuſdem Academiæ bis Legatus in Hiſpanias mitteretur. Ubi quâ prudentiâ ac dexteritate ſeſe geſſerit, tum apud Regem Catholicum, tum in Academia Salmanticenſi ac Valliſoletana, feliciſſimus utriuſque Legationis eventus docuit. i. e. " He " likewiſe, in a ſhort ſpace of time, gained ſo much " eſteem among all the members of the Univerſity, " that no perſon was thought ſo well qualified as Jan- " ſenius, to be ſent into Spain as Embaſſador from " the ſaid Univerſity; where, the happy ſucceſs of " both embaſſies proves with how great wiſdom and " dexterity he acted, as well with regard to the Ca- " tholic King, as to the Univerſities of Salamanca and " Valladolid." Conſult Leydecker (20) concerning the ſubject and ſucceſs of theſe two journies into Spain.

(17) Dated the 31ſt of December 1627.

(18) Factum, pag. 462, 463.

(19) Biblioth. Belg. pag. 154.

(20) Pag. 23, & ſeq.

[F] Janſenius publiſhed (21) a book againſt France.] (21) Anno 1635. The arguments in it are exceedingly ſtrong; and it is intitled Alexandri Patricii Armacani, Theologi, Mars Gallicus, ſeu de Juſtitia armorum & fœderum Regis Galliæ libri duo. It contains the moſt malicious and the moſt odious exclamations againſt the ſervices which France continually did the Proteſtants of Holland and Germany, to the great prejudice of the Romiſh religion. The Dutch are there treated as rebels, who owe the republican liberty they enjoy to an infamous uſurpation. They have anſwered that reproach an hundred times; and Leydecker did not forget to make a ſolid anſwer to it not long ſince (22). He informs us (23) that a report was ſpread, viz. that Janſenius being conſulted by the Duke d'Arſchot and the Archbiſhop of Malines, after the taking of Boiſleduc and Maeſtricht, adviſed them to ſhake off the Spaniſh yoke, and to form themſelves into Cantons after the manner of the Swiſs. It was diſcovered that he had given that counſel, and he was very uneaſy about it. Upon this Preſident Roſe ſuggeſted an expedient by which he might extricate himſelf, which was, that he ſhould write againſt France, and gave him the plan of the Mars Gallicus. Opportunè ſuam operam offerebat P. Roſæus, vir eruditiſſimus, Sanctioris Conſilii Præſes, cujus ante meminimus, ſuppeditato voluminis argumento, quo vel pœnitentiam ageret, vel famam falſi accuſaret. Iſtud autem erat Mars Gallicus, ſtylo quidem Janſenii ornandus, cujus tamen materia ipſius opus, eruditionem & ingenium excedebat (24). Leydecker alledges a letter of Fabio Chigi the Nuncio. Et ne mentiri viderentur, Literas produxêre Fabii Gighii, Nuntii Apoſtolici (qui deinde Alexander VII fuit) ad F. Barberinum, Cardinalem, datas Coloniæ 25 Martii, 1641, ubi hæc ſcripta, Cardinalis Richelius admodum ſtomachatur in Janſenium, quod cum Roſæo Martem Gallicum conſcripſerit. Nimirum hæ Literæ adhuc in Collegio S. Officii Romæ aſſervantur (25). i. e. " And that " they might not ſeem to tell an untruth, they ſhew- " ed the Letters of Fabio Chighi the Apoſtolical Nun- " cio (who was afterwards Alexander VII) to Cardinal " F. Barberini, dated at Colen the 25th of March " 1625, wherein was the following words; Cardinal " Richelieu is greatly offended at Janſenius for his " writing the Mars Gallicus in concert with Roſe. " Theſe letters are ſtill preſerved in the College of the " Holy Office at Rome." The Jeſuits did not fail to exaſperate the Court of France againſt Janſenius's followers, as being a man who had defamed the Nation and his Monarchs, from the firſt almoſt to the laſt. Leydecker cites a long paſſage which he ſuppoſes to be of Father Annat (26), but which, in all probability, is of Father Vavaſſeur (27). I will tranſcribe no more of that long paſſage than the circumſtance which relates to the ingratitude with which Janſenius was reproached. Ante omnia Janſenio exprobrat ingratum in Galliam animum, quæ ipſi valetudinem, quam recipere non poſſet in patria, concreto & pingui cœlo, reſtituerat puro & ſalubri; quæ victum, cum egeret, præbuerat, tum domeſtico Præceptori Lutetiæ Pariſiorum, tum ludi publici Magiſtro Bajonæ, quæ notitiâ Virorum illuſtrium atque doctorum animum fecerat ad majora, additumque & viam muniverat. Quin in Galliis, quod beneficii loco ſine dubio numeravit, magnam adeptus erat librorum Calvinianorum copiam, quorum de fontibus hauſit Auguſtini interpretationem, & invenerat homines à Calvini diſciplina non alienos, quibuſcum liberiores de Gratia ſermones contulerit (28). i. e. " He particular- " ly

(22) Leydecker, de Vita Janſenii, pag. 94, & ſeq.

(23) Pag. 92.

(24) Pag. 93.

(25) Ibid.

(26) Ibid. pag. 89.

(27) It is aſcribed to him pag. 31. of Sebaſtian Mabre-Cramoiſy's Catalogue, printed in the year 1678. The Janſenius Suſpectus was printed in the year 1630, by Sebaſtian and Gabriel Cramoiſy.

(28) Autor Libri cui titulus Janſenius Suſpectus, apud Leydeckerum, pag. 89.

See, but he did not enjoy it long, he dying the 6th of May 1638. He had ſpent above twenty years on a work in which he explained St. Auſtin's ſyſtem concerning the doctrine of Grace; and this book being publiſhed after his death, occaſioned great diſturbances in the Romiſh Church [G], and cut out a great deal of work for the Popes. Thoſe perſons who have aſſerted the ſame doctrine as Janſenius have been called Janſeniſts, and the Jeſuits have been their chief adverſaries. Perhaps the inſincerity and foul play that attends ſuch ſort of controverſies, was never ſo glaring as on this occaſion [H]. This Doctor had engaged in controverſy with the Proteſtants [I], and left them the field of battle.

" ly reproaches Janſenius with being ungrateful to " France, which by its pure and ſalubrious air had " reſtored him to the health he could not obtain from " the groſs and thick air of his native country; which " gave him a ſubſiſtence when he was in want, both " when he was a domeſtic-tutor in Paris, and maſter of " a public ſchool in Bayonne; which, by an acquain- " tance with learned and illuſtrious men, had formed " his mind to greater things, and ſtrengthened his in- " tereſt. Nay, in France (which he doubtleſs thought " a benefit) he got a great number of Calviniſtical " books, from which fountain he drew his interpreta- " tion of St. Auſtin; and met with perſons that were " not averſe to Calvin's doctrine, and with whom he " converſed more freely concerning Grace."

Let us admire in this place the viciſſitude of human things. Janſenius was rewarded with a mitre, for having confounded France upon her forming alliances with Proteſtant States; and at this time (29) the Court of Spain would no doubt beſtow a good Biſhopric on a Doctor of Louvain, who ſhould write a book in as ſtrong terms in juſtification of ſuch an alliance or league, as that book was which Janſenius wrote againſt France; ſo true it is, that men may arrive at the ſame ends by quite contrary ways; and that what is good at one time is very bad at another (30). The refutation of a book may deſerve the ſame recompence which the book itſelf had deſerved. What a pleaſant ſcene would it be for unexperienced people, to ſee a Profeſſor of Louvain raiſed to a Biſhopric, for ſolidly refuting our Janſenius's Mars Gallicus?

(29) I write this in 1695.

(30) See the remark [I] of the article HOTMAN.

Naudé (31) makes him author of the Admonitio (32) and Myſteria Politica, two pieces, ſays he, which produced wonderful effects in oppoſition to the deſigns of Lewis XIII; but I fancy he is miſtaken.

(31) Naudé, Coups d'Eſtat, chap. 4. pag. m. 610.

[G] This book . . . . occaſioned great diſturbances in the Romiſh church.] It has given birth to a numberleſs multitude of other books, ſome of which contain all that could be ſaid on both ſides upon the ſubject, by men of great acuteneſs, ſubtlety, and learning; but after all, a man is not a whit the wiſer than he was before, and this will ever be the fate of ſuch diſputes; the more they are handled, the more they will be perplexed; and the more they will give the reader occaſion to ſay, Feciſtis probe, incertior ſum multo quam dudum (33). i. e. " Admirably well, indeed, I now am " much more in doubt than I was before." Some author has ſaid, that the doctrine of Grace is an ocean which has neither ſhore nor bottom. He perhaps could have compared it more juſtly to the Faro of Meſſina, where people are always in danger of ſplitting upon one rock, by their endeavouring to ſhun another; Incidit in Syllam cupiens vitare Charybdim. The whole, in fine, is reducible to this. Did Adam ſin freely? If you anſwer, yes; then his fall, will it be replied, was not foreſeen: But if you anſwer no; then, will it be ſaid, he is not guilty. You may write a hundred books againſt either of theſe conſequences, and at laſt you muſt be forced to own, either that the infallible foreſeeing of a contingent event is a myſtery which it is impoſſible to conceive; or that the manner how a creature, who acts without liberty or neceſſity, ſins nevertheleſs, is quite incomprehenſible. I deſire no more: for to what purpoſe is it to write ſo many books, ſince you muſt be forced at laſt to own one of theſe two incomprehenſible myſteries?

(32) See the remark [F] of the article BOUCHER (John).

(33) Terent. Phormio, Act. 2. Scene 3.

[H] The inſincerity and foul play that attends ſuch ſort of controverſies, was never ſo glaring as on this occaſion.] Thoſe perſons who have a little penetration ſee manifeſtly, that, in the diſpute with regard to liberty, theſe two ſides only can be taken; the one is to aſſert, that all cauſes diſtinct from the ſoul, which concur with it, endue it with the power of acting or not acting; the other is to aſſert, that they determine the ſoul in ſuch a manner, to act, that it cannot do otherwiſe. The firſt opinion is that of the Moliniſts; and the ſecond that of the Thomiſts, the Janſeniſts and Proteſtants of the Geneva confeſſion. There we have three kinds of people who oppoſe Moliniſm; and who, in the main, muſt be of the ſame opinion on that head. Nevertheleſs the Thomiſts have aſſerted with all their might, that they were not Janſeniſts,; and the laſt mentioned have aſſerted with the ſame heat, that they were not Calviniſts, on the article of liberty. There are no artifices or ill-grounded diſtinctions but what have been made uſe of, to colour over this pretence; and all this in order to avoid the ill conſequences which they foreſaw would follow, in caſe any conformity ſhould be allowed either with the Janſeniſts or Calviniſts. On the other ſide, the Moliniſts have not omitted any kind of ſophiſtry, to ſhew that St. Auſtin did not teach Janſeniſm; as being unwilling to own that their tenets are contrary to thoſe of this great ſaint. In this manner the Thomiſts refuſing to own that there was any conformity between them and a ſet of people who were conſidered as Hereticks: and the Moliniſts too own their doctrine different from that of a Doctor whoſe opinions have been always looked upon as orthodox; both have play'd an hundred tricks, and conducted themſelves with the utmoſt inſincerity on thoſe occaſions.

[I] This Doctor had engag'd in controverſy with the Proteſtants.] The ſubſtance of this diſpute is ſaid to be as follows (34). The States-General publiſhed an edict in 1629, forbidding the publick exerciſe of the Romiſh Religion in Boiſleduc; and appropriated the eccleſiaſtical revenues of the mayoralty of that city to the ſervice of the Proteſtant Religion, which they appointed four miniſters to preach there. The laſt mentioned hearing that many horrid ſlanders, concerning their doctrine, were ſecretly ſpread, publiſhed a manifeſto, declaring that they taught nothing but the pure Goſpel; and intreating their adverſaries to propoſe whatever objections they might have to make in a publick manner. This was anſwered only by a piece (35) writ by Janſenius. Giſbert Voetius, one of the four miniſters who preached in Boiſleduc, wrote remarks on this work (36), which Janſenius refuted by a new work (37). The author of the remarks replied, he again refuting his adverſary in a large book he publiſhed anno 1635, and entitled Deſperata Cauſa Papatûs. Janſenius did not make any reply, but Libertus Fromondus, one of his friends, anſwered for him. This work (38) was printed at Antwerp anno 1636, and refuted by Martin Schoockius, Profeſſor in hiſtory and eloquence at Deventer, who entitled his anſwer, Deſperatiſſima Cauſa Papatus. It was printed anno 1638. There the diſpute ended, if we may believe Leydecker (39). I nevertheleſs find in Valerius Andreas's Bibliotheca, among Fromondus's works, a piece entitled Sycophanta: Epiſtola ad Giſbertum Voetium, printed in 1640. And ſince the firſt impreſſion of this article, I have ſeen a letter, in which this Utrecht Profeſſor is reproached with being miſtaken. Falleris, O Præclare, ſecus res habet . . . . Fromondus . . . . ultimo ictu proſtravit adverſarium, nunquam quod ſciam refutatus (40). i. e. " Illuſtrious man, thou art " miſtaken; the affair is otherwiſe——Fromondus—— " fell'd his adverſary with the laſt blow, and has ne- " ver been refuted that I know of."

(34) Leydecker, de Vita Janſenii, pag. 57, & ſeq.

(35) Intitled, Alexipharmacum, printed in the year 1630.

(36) Intitled, Philonius Romanus correctus.

(37) Intitled, Notarum Spongia, printed in the year 1631.

(38) Intitled, Cauſæ deſperatæ Gisb. Voetii adverſus Spongiam . . . Cornelii Janſenii Criſis oſtenſa.

(39) De Vita Janſenii, pag. 64.

(40) Epiſtola Chriſtiani Philereni ad Janum Palæologum, p. 5.

Janſenius had another war to maintain which may be called a Proteſtant one: for Theodore Simonis (41), a wavering Roman Catholick, who wanted a maſter, waited upon him at Louvain, to deſire him to clear up ſome doubts with reſpect to the Pope's infallibility, the worſhip of the Euchariſt, and ſome other points. Janſenius being puzzled with this man's objections, told him one day, that he would not diſpute any longer with him by word of mouth, but in writing; and that he ſaw plainly he had to do with a Roman Catholick who would ſoon go to Holland, and there boaſt that he had overcome him. Simonis, (41) He was born in Holſtein.

battle. He wrote ſome other books [K]. I did not aſſert that the Court of Rome iſſued out informations againſt this Biſhop's epitaph [L]. Conſult the work which Leydecker has lately publiſhed. It is an excellent work (g).

(g) It is intitled, De Hiſtoria Janſeniſmi Libri VI, quibus de Cornelii Janſenii Vita & Morte, nec non de ipſius & ſequacium Dogmatibus diſſeritur. Utrecht, 1695, 8vo.

nis, who could ſcarce prevail with himſelf to diſpute in writing, reſolved however at laſt to do it. But after both had wrote twice on the ſubject in queſtion, his lodgings were ſurrounded with ſoldiers, and himſelf threatned with the puniſhment due to Hereticks. Duke d'Arſchot's Secretary exclaimed aloud againſt him; and ſaid that there was wood enough in his maſter's forreſts to burn that Heretic. But as the perſon who examined Simonis, in the name of the Archbiſhop of Malines, declared that he had found him a good Catholic, and fully reſolved to perſevere in the Romiſh Communion, the priſoner was ſet at liberty, and Janſenius was forced to pay the expences of the ſoldiers, &c. Two years after Simonis turned Proteſtant, and publiſhed a book (42) intitled De Statu & Religione propria Papatus adverſus Janſenium (43). I have lately read, that this man having quitted the Lutheran Communion to go over to that of Rome, turned Lutheran again, and at laſt Socinian: He was Principal of the Socinian college of Kiſſelin in Lithuania (44); was well verſed in the Greek tongue; and was he who tranſlated Comenius's Janua Linguarum into that language.

(42) Printed at Leyden in 1636.

(43) See a very ample relation of all this affair in Leydecker, pag. 68, & ſeq.

(44) See Mollerus, Iſagoge ad Hiſtoriam Cherſoneſi Cimbricæ, Part 3. pag. 108.

[K] He wrote ſome other books.] An Oration de interioris hominis reformatione. Tetrateuchus ſive Commentarius in IV. Evangelia. Pentateuchus ſive Commentarius in V libros Moyſis. The anſwer of the Divines of Louvain, de vi obligandi conſcientias quam habent edicta regia ſuper re monetaria, and that of the Divines and Civilians, de Juramento quod publica auctoritate Magiſtratui deſignato imponi ſolet, were all written by Janſenius (45). Leydecker complains (46) that the harmony of the Goſpels, in Moreri's Dictionary, is aſcrib'd to our Janſenius, and ſays it was wrote by another Janſenius, biſhop of Ghent. I have not found this in Moreri. The miſtake which Arnauld (47) aſcribed to George Hornius, viz of his ſuppoſing that our Janſenius was biſhop of Ypres, and afterwards of Ghent, is corrected in Leydecker's edition (48).

(45) Extracted from Valer. Andreas, pag. 155.

(46) Pag. 2.

(47) Morale Pratique, tom. 3. pag. 130.

(48) In Notis ad Hiſt. Eccleſiaſt. Hornii, pag. 517.

[L] The court of Rome iſſued out informations againſt Janſenius.] The 10th of December 1655. "The "Biſhop of Ypres, Francis de Robes (49), of the family "of the Counts of Annap, cauſed the monument of Cor- "nelius Janſenius, his predeceſſor, to be taken away "privately in the night; on which monument was "engraved an elogium of his virtue and erudition, "and particularly of his book entitled, Auguſtinus, "declaring, that this faithful interpreter of the moſt "ſecret thoughts of St. Auſtin had employ'd on that "work a divine Genius, an indefatigable labour, and "his whole life-time; and that the Church would re- "ceive the benefit of it upon earth, as he did the re- "ward of it in Heaven: Words that were highly "injurious to the bulls of Pope Urban VIII. and "Innocent X. who had cenſur'd that work. The "Biſhop deſtroy'd this monument by the expreſs or- "ders of Pope Alexander VII. and with conſent of "Archduke Leopold, Governour of the Netherlands, "in ſpite of the reſiſtance of the Chapter, which "went ſuch lengths, that one of the principal Can- "nons had the courage to ſay, that it was not in "the Pope nor the King's power to ſuppreſs that "epitaph; ſo dear was Janſenius to this canon and "his collegues (50)." Conſult Leydecker (51), who relates all this more at large. I can ſcarce believe what he ſays (52), that father la Chaiſe the Jeſuit adviſed the breaking to pieces the ſtone on which Janſenius's epitaph was engraved, but that the Biſhop of Ypres only had it thrown by. I am of opinion, that Father la Chaiſe, in 1655, was not in a condition to have a concern in any ſuch counſels. I will add the following curious particular. "The laſt time that "the Moſt Chriſtian King was at Ypres, an hoſ- "pitular nun who had aſſiſted him (53) in his laſt "ſickneſs, and ſpoke of him as a ſaint, declared "with a flood of tears to ſome Lords of the Court, "that ſhe held Janſenius by the arm when he wrote "his laſt will; and ſhe conjured them at the ſame "time to intreat the King to cauſe a reparation to "be made, for the injury which had been done to "ſo holy a man, in taking away his tomb-ſtone (54)."

(49) Leydecker, pag. 133. calls him Johannes Robleſius.

(50) St. Romuald, Journal Chronologique & Hiſtorique, tom. 2. pag. 612.

(51) De Vita Janſenii, pag. 132, & ſeq.

(52) Pag. 135.

(53) Janſenius.

(54) Morale Pratique, tom. 8. pag. 462.

JAPAN. This is the name of a wide-extended country ſituated to the Eaſt of China, and divided into ſeveral iſlands. Such ample mention is made of it in Moreri's Dictionary (a), that I have but few particulars to obſerve. I will not even enumerate all his omiſſions, but only take notice of ſome of the articles of the Theology of thoſe Iſlanders. "The monarchy of Japan is divided into two Eſtates, the Eccleſiaſtical and the "Secular. The former is compoſed of the Bonzes, and the latter of the Nobility "and People. The name of Bonzes is common to all the Miniſters devoted to the "ſervice of the Gods whom the Japoneſe adore. They profeſs celibacy [A], and... "they have a Sovereign Pontiff called Iaco or Xaco, who is veſted with authority over "all the reſt; judges of matters relating to Religion; determines what is to be obſerved "concerning the worſhip of the Gods, and believed with reſpect to their nature. He "elects the Tundes who diſpoſe of matters of leſs importance, and are in ſome meaſure "like our Biſhops... (b). The Japoneſe have two ſorts of Deities. The firſt are the "Demons or Devils whom they worſhip under ſeveral ſhapes; not from the hopes of "receiving good from them, but out of fear of being hurt by them. The ſecond are the "Kings,

(a) Particularly in the edit. of 1699.

(b) Journal des Savans of July 18, 1689. pag. m. 492. in the Extract of Hiſt. de l'Egliſe de Japon. by Mr. l'Abbé de T.

[A] The Bonzes profeſs celibacy.] But then "they do "not always obſerve it very exactly. They abſtain "from fiſh and fleſh, ſhave their beard and hair, "and conceal their debaucheries under the appear- "ance of an auſtere life (1)." The greateſt profit they make is, the burying of the dead. The people, perſuaded that the ſouls of their relations may, in the life to come, fall into ſome neceſſity, ſpare no expence in order to procure them the comfort wich the Bonzes promiſe they ſhall meet with, upon condition that large alms are beſtowed. They alſo employ another artifice to inrich themſelves, viz, they borrow money from weak and credulous people, promiſing to repay them in the next world with large intereſt; and borrowing in this manner, they ſay among themſelves, that the term of years is worth the money (2). Thoſe who would be deſirous of drawing a parallel between the eaſt and weſt, would find it defective with reſpect to the article of thoſe debts payable in the other world; but then a celibacy not well obſerved, frauds concealed under the appearance of a rigid morality, the profit accruing from burials, ſuccours ſent to ſouls ſeparated from the body; all theſe things would furniſh a great number of Parallels. I am perſuaded that many people could not forbear, as they read the extracts of Couſin (3), to ſay inwardly to themſelves, 'Tis thus with us. It would be curious enough to ſee a relation of the weſtern parts of the world written by a Japoneſe or Chineze, who had lived ſeveral years in the capital cities of Europe. They would pay us in our own coin. The Miſſionaries who go into the Indies publiſh accounts of theſe countries, wherein they exhibit the falſities and frauds they have obſerved in the worſhip of thoſe idolatrous nations. They ridicule it, but whilſt they

(1) Journ. des Savans of July 18, 1689. pag. 492. Dutch edit.

(2) Ibid. pag. 493.

(3) Author of the Journal des Savans, cited above and below.

" Kings, Conquerors, and learned Men, whom they have ranked in the number of " the Gods, the chief whereof are Amida and Xaca [B]... There are ſaid to be ten or " twelve ſects or religions in Japan, and each is indulged the liberty of following that " which he pleaſes; which does not occaſion feuds or diviſions; and for this reaſon, ſay " they, becauſe minds or underſtandings are not united by way of relation or kindred " like bodies. Among theſe ſects there are three principal ones. The firſt does not " hope or expect a life after this; and acknowledge or know no other ſubſtance but " what ſtrikes the ſenſes... The ſecond, who believe the immortality of the ſoul and a " life to come, is followed by the worthieſt ſort of people, and is called the Sect of the " Men of the moſt high God. The third is that of the worſhippers of Xaca (c)." The Bonzes may be compared to our Monks (d). According to ſome authors (e), the moſt general diviſion that can be made of the ſects of the Japoneſe, is to divide them into ſuch as profeſſedly go no farther than bare appearances; and ſuch as ſearch for reality which does not ſtrike the ſenſes, and is by them called truth. Thoſe who adhere only to appearances, believe another life after this [C], for the eternal reward of good men, and the everlaſting puniſhment of the wicked. But ſuch as ſeek for the internal and inſenſible reality, reject the notion of heaven and hell, and teach doctrines which bear a great affinity to Spinoza's opinion [D]. They agree with the Epicureans in this particular, viz. that do this, ought they not to fear that it will be retorted upon them?

(c) Ibid. pag. 494.

(d) See the remark [B].

(e) See Poſſevin. Biblioth. Select. lib. 10. cap. 2. pag. m. 410. tom. 1.

Quid rides? mutato nomine de te
Fabula narratur (4).

(4) Horat. Sat. 1. lib. 1. ver. 69, 70.

That is,

" What, doſt thou laugh? and think that thou art free?
" Fool, change the name, the ſtory's told of thee?

CREECH.

Or that they ſhould meet with the juſt reproaches which all ſuch deſerve who wink at their own faults, but are eagle-ey'd at diſcovering thoſe of other people?

Cùm tua pervideas oculis mala lippus inunctis,
Cur in amicorum vitiis tam cernis acutum,
Quàm aut aquila, aut ſerpens Epidaurius? at tibi contrà
Evenit, inquirant vitia ut tua rurſùs & illi (5).

(5) Idem, Satyr. 3. lib. 1. ver. 25.

That is,

" When thou art blind and ſenſeleſs to thine own,
" How doſt thou ſee thy friend's diſeaſe ſo ſoon;
" That ſcarce a ſerpent can ſo quickly ſpy,
" Nor any eagle hath ſo good an eye?
" Well then, go on, purſue thy mean deſign,
" As thou doſt find their faults, ſo they will thine.

CREECH.

[B] The chiefs are .... Amida and Xaca.] " The former is repreſented under various monſtrous ſhapes. " In one of his Temples, at Iedo, he is carried on a " ſeven-headed horſe. The fineſt of his Temples is " near Meaco, and is five hundred foot long, and a " thouſand Idols of maſſy gold are in it. With re- " gard to Saca or Xaca, the Bonzes tell a thouſand " impertinent ſtories of him. They ſay that he was " born eight hundred times in different ſpecies, before " he was born of a woman; and that when he " was born of her, he iſſued through his mother's " ſides, through which he had gnawed with his teeth. " The truth is, Xaca was a Sophiſter, who perſuaded " people any thing he pleaſed. His mother, being " big of him, dreamt that a white elephant iſſued " through her mouth. Hence it is that white ele- " phants are held in veneration in India, China, Tun- " quin, Siam and Pegu. They are ſerved in gold " plate; and Noblemen of great diſtinction viſit them " in crouds, and pay them the ſame honour as to " Kings (6)." One of the three principal Sects of the Japoneſe is that of Xaça's worſhippers. " They form " a community, riſe at midnight to ſing hymns, " meet every evening to hear the diſcourſe which " their Superiour makes to them on ſome moral ſub- " ject, and then gives them ſome points to meditate " upon. He ſometimes repreſents to them a dying " man; and repeats the reproaches which the ſoul " and body make to one another in the expiring " moments. The meditation laſts an hour: and when " it is ended, every perſon gives the Superiour an ac- " count of the thoughts which came into his mind, " and the reſolutions he has formed (7)."

(6) Journal des Savans, of July 1689, pag. 495.

(7) Ibid. pag. 426.

[C] Thoſe who adhere only to appearances, believe another life after this.] Their opinion ſeems to be that of Amida, of Xaca and Fotoke. They ſay that at the four cardinal points of the world there are certain Countries, the inhabitants whereof are in a fulneſs of ſatisfaction, whereby they enjoy a ſupreme felicity; that all the laws of Japan were made by Fotoke; and that thoſe who obſerve them ſhall no ſooner leave this life, but they will go up into thoſe places; that they will be born again there; and that Fotoke will transform them, and give them thirty two forms or ſhapes, and fourſcore qualities, with which they ſhall live in perfect beatitude to all eternity, happy and contented with their condition. In omnem æternitatem vivent læti admodum, felices & ſua ſorte contenti (8). Women will not be admitted in thoſe Countries; but thoſe who ſhall be ſaved for having obſerved Fotoke's laws, will be transformed into men; for otherwiſe they would not receive the reward for the good life they led, becauſe (ſay theſe) they are in their own nature unclean, deteſtable, and execrable. Eo quod fœminæ ſint natura deteſtabiles, execrandæ & immundæ (9). With regard to the tranſgreſſors of Fotoke's laws, they ſhall go from this life, into certain infernal places, and there ſuffer ſix ſorts of never-ending puniſhments. Such is the general doctrine of thoſe who follow appearances. As to the other Sects, they argue as they pleaſe on this ſubject; but theſe agree in this center of unity, and their opinion is that of the ignorant and vulgar: Et quamvis de hiſce rebus unaquæque Japoniorum ſecta loquatur, ut vult, communi tamen conſenſu quicunque extrinſecam rerum faciem ſectantur, in hoc, quod diximus, conveniunt, & hanc opinionem rudes & vulgares homines amplectuntur (10). I borrow all this from Poſſevinus the Jeſuit (11), who did not think himſelf obliged to refute the doctrines of this Sect; for ſince, ſays he, they profeſs to adhere only to appearances, what they ſay has in reality no ſolidity nor truth; 'tis at moſt but a phantom, or exterior of truth. The Bonzes themſelves confeſs manifeſtly, that this whole ſyſtem of Camus and Fotoke was built, or rather invented for the ſake of the ignorant and weak minds: Nam (ut ipſimet Bonzii, qui ſuæ ſententiæ Magiſtri & Doctores ſunt, aperte fatentur) totam de CAMI & FOTOQUE diſciplinam propter rudes & inſcios rerum homines, captu, & ingenio imbecillos, eſſe compoſitam, vel potius conflictam, non quod aliquid eorum, quæ in ipſa docentur, verum ſit (12). However Poſſevin refutes the doctrine of this Sect in his 5th chapter (13).

(8) Poſſevin. ubi infra.

(9) Idem, ibid.

(10) Idem, ibid.

(11) Extracted from Poſſevin, Biblioth. Select. tom. 1. lib. 10. cap. 2. pag. m. 410, 411.

(12) Idem, ibid. pag. 411.

(13) Ibid. pag. 429, & ſeq.

[D] Such as ſeek for the internal and inſenſible reality, reject the notion of heaven and hell, and teach doctrines which bear a great affinity to Spinoza's opinion.] They neglect externals, they devote themſelves wholly to meditation, they reject all diſcipline that conſiſts in words, and adhere only to the exerciſe called by them SOKUZIN SOKUBUT, that is, the heart. They maintain that there is but one principle of all things, and that this principle is found every where; and that the heart of man, and the interior of other beings differ not from this common principle; and that all other beings return to this common principle when they are deſtroyed. It exiſts, adds they, to all eternity; it is one only principle, clear and luminous; it is incapable of increaſing or decreaſing, it has no ſhape; it does not reaſon, but that they diveſt God of the government of the world; as a circumſtance that would interfere with the ſupreme tranquillity, which, according to them, forms all his felicity. They even go farther than Epicurus, for they deprive God of reaſon and underſtanding. They doubtleſs are afraid that theſe qualities would diſturb his repoſe, ſince they find by experience that reaſoning is attended with ſome fatigue (f). The Chriſtian Religion which Francis Xavier, and ſeveral other Miſſionaries after him, preached to the Japoneſe, did not find any greater obſtacles than what the Bonzes raiſed againſt it; not ſo much by diſputes and arguments, as by the methods commonly employed by Eccleſiaſtics; I mean by having recourſe to the ſecular arm, and by force, exhorting the Kings and the People to maintain the old Religion, and perſecute the followers of the new (g). It muſt be confeſſed however, that theſe Japoneſe Prieſts had conferences with the Chriſtian Prieſts; and made ſuch objections to them as ſhewed they did not want ſenſe (h). They could not prevent the Chriſtian Religion from making a very great progreſs in a ſhort time; but they at laſt excited the Emperor to have recourſe to ſuch violent proceedings, as quite extirpated it in Japan, and very much ſwelled the martyrology [E]. Father

(f) Ibid. lib. 10. cap. 3. pag. 415.

(g) See Journal des Savans of July 1689, pag. 499.

(h) See Hiſtoire des Ouvrages des Savans, Sept. 1691, pag. 8, & ſeq. in the extract of Hiſtoire des Egliſe du Japan.

lives in idleneſs and a perfect repoſe. Figura carens, ratiocinationis expers, vitam agens otii, quietis, & tranquillitatis pleniſſimam (14). They teach that thoſe who, in this life, have known this principle extremely well, attain to the perfect glory of Fotoke and his ſucceſſors; and that ſuch as never arrive at this exalted pitch of knowledge, are born again ſeveral times, and migrate from place to place; but that they, in the other world ſhall be all abſorbed in this common principle of all things. They likewiſe aſſert that knowledge does not differ from ignorance; that good and evil are not two beings, and that the one is not diſtinct or ſeparate from the other (15). Poſſevin reduces this ſyſtem to theſe four points: I. That there is but one principle of all things; that this principle is ſupremely perfect; that it is wiſe, but underſtands nothing, and does not concern itſelf with the affairs of this world, inaſmuch as it lives in a perfect repoſe; and, like a man, who is ſtrongly attentive to one thing, and leaves or neglects all the reſt. II. That this principle is in all particular beings, and communicates its eſſence to them; ſo that they are the ſame thing with it, and return to it when they themſelves end. III. That the heart of man does not differ from this common principle of all beings; and that when men die, their hearts periſh and are conſumed; but that the firſt principle which before endued them with life, ſubſiſts ſtill in them; whence it follows that there is neither paradiſe nor hell, neither rewards nor puniſhments after this life. IV. That it is poſſible for man, in this world, to raiſe himſelf to the condition and ſupreme majeſty of the firſt principle, foraſmuch as by ſtrength of meditation he may know it perfectly, and ſo arrive to the ſupreme tranquillity which this principle enjoys in itſelf; that this is all the good which man can attain to; and that till he has attained it by a perfect meditation and knowledge, he is tormented with perpetual diſquiet; he often is toſt from one hell to another, and does not find reſt in any place. It is very certain that we here have a great number of particulars which Spinoza did not teach; but, on the other ſide, it is very certain, that he, like thoſe Japoneſe Prieſts, has taught that the firſt principle of all things, and all the beings of which the univerſe is formed, are but one and the ſame ſubſtance; that all things are God, and that God is all things; in ſuch a manner that God and all things that exiſt make but one and the ſame being. One cannot enough admire that ſo extravagant a notion, ſo full of abſurd contradictions, ſhould have got into the heads of ſo many people ſo diſtant one from the other, and ſo different in temper, education, cuſtom, and genius. Poſſevin (16) brings many arguments againſt the hypotheſis of theſe Bonzes, and refutes it chiefly by the contradictions it contains; and firſt he obſerves, that they have but very few doctrines concerning the nature of the firſt principle, that they do not ſay any thing upon it with perſpicuity, that they are not able to anſwer the queſtions or objections propoſed to them, nor confirm their opinions; and that their only refuge is to ſay, that it is to no purpoſe for men to enquire into the nature and power of the firſt principle (17). Omnia unico verbo putant ſe diſſolvere, dicentes hominum non intereſſe hujus principii vim, & naturam perſcrutari inquirendo aut diſputando: quod totum manifeſte conſtat, ex ignoratione profectum & natum (18). It is to be obſerved that part of his objections (19) combat alſo part of Spinoza's ſyſtem.

(14) Poſſevin. Bibliotb. Select. tom. 1. lib. 10. cap. 2. pag. 411.

(15) Extracted from Poſſevin. ibid.

(16) Poſſevin. Biblioth. tom. 1. pag. 412, 413.

(17) This is a groſs contradiction, which Poſſevin ſhould have objected to them; for ſince they ſay that the greateſt happineſs of man proceeds from the perfect knowledge he can acquire of the firſt principle, it concerns him to enquire into the nature of that firſt principle.

(18) Poſſevin. Biblioth. tom. 1. pag. 412.

(19) Ibid. pag. 419, 420.

[E] The violent proceedings of the Japoneſe very much ſwelled the martyrology.] Read the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of Japan, written by Francis Solier the Jeſuit, and the Hiſtory of the Church of Japan, by Abbé de T (20). "This Abbé admires the depth of God's "judgments; and wonders, he ſhould have permitted "the blood of ſo many martyrs to be ſhed, without "its having ſerved, as in the firſt ages of the Church, "as a fruitful ſeed for the forming or producing of "new Chriſtians (21)." Without preſuming to enquire into the reaſons the divine wiſdom may have, for permitting at one time what it does not permit at another; it may be ſaid that the Chriſtianity of the ſixteenth century had no right to hope for the ſame favour, and the ſame protection from God as the Chriſtianity of the three firſt centuries. The latter was a benign, gentle and patient religion, which recommended to ſubjects ſubmiſſion to their ſovereigns, and did not endeavour to raiſe itſelf to the throne by rebellions; but the Chriſtianity which was preached to the infidels of the ſixteenth century was far different; it was a bloody, murtherous religion, that had been uſed to ſlaughter for five or ſix hundred years. It had contracted a very long habit of maintaining and aggrandizing itſelf, by putting to the ſword, all that reſiſted it. Fires, executions, the dreadful tribunal of the inquiſition, cruſades, bulls exciting ſubjects to rebellion, ſeditious Preachers, conſpiracies, aſſaſſinations of Princes, were the ordinary methods employed againſt thoſe who refuſed ſubmiſſion to its orders. Could theſe Chriſtians promiſe themſelves the bleſſing which Heaven had granted the primitive Church, to the Goſpel of peace, of patience and gentleneſs? The beſt choice the Japoneſe had to make was, to become converts to the true God; but not having knowledge ſufficient to renounce their falſe religion, they then had no other choice to make but an active or paſſive perſecution. They could not preſerve their antient government nor their antient worſhip but by getting rid of the Chriſtians. Theſe, one time or other, would have deſtroyed both; they would have armed all their new converts; would have introduced into Japan the ſoldiers and cruel maxims of the Spaniards; and, by hanging and ſlaughtering in America, would have enſlaved all Japan. Thus, to conſider things only in a political view, it muſt be confeſſed, that the perſecution which the Chriſtians ſuffered in that country was a prudent means to prevent the overthrow of the monarchy and plundering of a ſtate. The ingenuous confeſſion of a Spaniard juſtifies the precautions which theſe infidels took. "It furniſhed the Bonzes with a ſpecious pretence for "exerciſing their hatred, and ſolliciting the extirpa"tion of the Chriſtians. Being aſked by the King of "Toſſa, how the King of Spain got poſſeſſion of ſo "great an extent of country in both hemiſpheres, he "anſwered too frankly, that he uſed to ſend Friars to "preach the Goſpel to foreign nations; and that after "having converted a conſiderable number of Heathens, "he uſed to ſend his forces, which, joining with the "new converts to Chriſtianity, by that means con"quered the country. The Chriſtians paid dear for "this indiſcreet confeſſion (22)."

(20) It was printed at Paris in 2 vol. 4to, in the year 1689.

(21) Journal des Savans of July 25, 1689. pag. m. 507.

(22) Hiſt. des Ouvrages des Savans, Sept. 1691, pag. 13, 14.

Father Poſſevin has cenſured very ſeverely the Laws eſtabliſhed by the Japoneſe Legiſlator [F].

[F] Father Poſſevin has cenſured . . the laws eſtabliſhed by the Japoneſe legiſlator.] The firſt fault he finds with them is, that they enjoin idolatry, and particularly the worſhip and adoration of Camus and Fotoke. He gives a very juſt deſcription of the enormity of idolatry, and places it in the higheſt rank of injuries that can be done to God. This he proves from the example of rebellion; for he ſays that the greateſt crime which can be committed againſt a ſovereign is, to diveſt him of his power, and beſtow it on another. Sicut nullum crimen in Regem ac Principem poteſt gravius admitti, quum eum è ſuo regno pellere, è regiæ dignitatis gradu dejicere, & alium in ſummum regiæ amplitudinis faſtigium evehere; ita ſumma eſt in Deum injuria, ſummum in eum ſceius admittitur, cùm divinus honor, & cultus, qui ipſi ſoli debitur, in alium transfertur, ipſi detrahitur, alii tribuitur (23). "As there cannot be a greater crime committed againſt a King or Prince than to drive him "from his Kingdom, to diveſt him of the regal dignity, and to raiſe another perſon to his throne; "ſo it is doing the higheſt injury to God, and acting "the moſt horrid wickedneſs againſt him, when the "divine honour and worſhip that are due to him only, "are taken from him and transferred to another." The ſecond fault in thoſe laws is, that whilſt they very ſeverely prohibit to the Bonzes the uſe of women, they allow them that of their own ſex. They prohibit them the former as a naſty and abominable thing, and approve the latter as honeſt and holy. In Bonziis omnem cum fœminis concubitum, ut rem fœdam, turpem, & deteſtabilem damnant: at uſum puerorum permittunt, imo in eiſdem Bonziis coitum cum pueris approbant, ut rem honeſtam & ſanctam (24). Poſſevin ſhews, on many accounts, the atrocious nature of Sodomy. The third fault is, that forbidding the killing of certain beaſts ſacred to Camus and Fotoke, they permit men to kill one another, and even to be their own murtherers. They ſuppoſe, not only that it is an action agreeable to thoſe Deities, but alſo the true way to Deification, and hence it is that very great numbers of the Japoneſe kill themſelves, either by plunging into the water, burning or burying themſelves alive, or leaping from the top of a rock. Many alſo rip up their bellies for very ſlight reaſons; and ſeveral mothers kill their own children. Poſſevin ſhews the wickedneſs of all ſuch proceedings (25). The laſt fault he cenſures is, that the laws of Japan declare, that by the bare invocation of NAMUAMIDABUT, or by crying FORENGUELIO, all kinds of ſins are expiated without there being any need of repentance. The Japoneſe, continues he, do not ſpeak either of ſatisfactory puniſhments or good works; they pretend that thoſe things are injurious to the merit of XACA and AMIDA, who have been afflicted enough for the crimes which men have committed, and have ſufficiently expiated them by their ſufferings. This doctrine opens the door to ſin; for as nothing can be eaſier than to throw out an invocation or a cry, men are ſure to avoid eaſily all the puniſhments they have reaſon to fear, after having abandoned themſelves to the greateſt crimes. Poſſevin (26) ſhews very evidently the enormity and horrour of this doctrine, and the pernicious effects which reſult from it.

No reader need fear he would be guilty of a miſtake, in condemning ſuch a doctrine; but ſhould he venture to pronounce, that Poſſevin has faithfully repreſented the doctrine of the Bonzes, he very poſſibly may form a raſh judgment; for, in ſhort, people muſt never be condemned on the teſtimony of their enemies; and enquiry ought to be made, whether their doctrine has been faithfully repreſented. Now it would not be a faithful repreſentation of it, to inſiſt on the letter of ſome law, without regarding the interpretations of the Doctors; for, by ſuch a method of proceeding, one might aſcribe a great number of abſurdities to the moſt rational religions. There are ſome harſh things in ſcripture, which it would be wrong to conſider as laws enacted by the Chriſtians; for theſe do not take them in the literal ſenſe, but explain and ſoften them by other paſſages, and agreeably to the analogy of the faith. It would be proper for us to be informed whether the Bonzes do not the ſame, with reſpect to ſome of the ordinances of the legiſlators. I could eaſily believe thoſe particulars that are related concerning the knaviſh tricks and hypocriſy of thoſe idolatrous Prieſts; but I think it probable, that they cover, with ſome exterior of ſeverity, their doctrine as well as their behaviour; and perhaps we ought to aſcribe only to ſome of them, what Poſſevin charges the whole body of their ſects with. Some Friars have declared, that very great villains have been ſaved by the bare invocation of the Bleſſed Virgin. The extravagance of thoſe who ſpeak of the treaſure of indulgences, and who ſay that the merits of Saints, and their works of ſupererogation ſupply the want of repentance in many perſons, would furniſh a Japoneſe traveller with very good chapters. Would it not be unjuſt, ſhould he relate all theſe particulars as articles of the Chriſtian faith? Once again, I ſhould be curious to know what anſwer the Bonzes would make to the following queſtion. Do you teach thoſe things which Poſſevin aſcribes to you? I alſo ſhould be glad to ſee a hiſtory written by them, concerning the ſettling of Chriſtianity in their iſland, and its extirpation. And in caſe ſuch Japoneze had writ it after having peruſed the hiſtory compoſed by Francis Solier and Abbé de T, it would ſtill be more curious to compare them.

(23) Poſſevin. Biblioth. Select. tom. 1. lib. 10. cap. 6. pag. 435. See, on this ſubject, Penſées diverſes ſur les Cometes, pag. 340, 390.

(24) Poſſevin. ibid.

(25) Poſſevin. ibid. pag. 436.

(26) Poſſevin. Biblioth. Select. tom. 1. lib. 10. cap. 6. pag. 437.

JARCHI or JARHI (SOLOMON) a famous Rabbi, lived in the twelfth Century [A]. His true name is Iſaaki (a). "And yet that pretended name of Jarhi made "ſome perſons imagine that he was of Lunel in Languedoc, but he was of Troyes in "Champagne, as R. Ghedalia, and moſt of the Jewiſh Chronologers aſſert . . . His "books are very much eſteemed amongſt the Jews [B], and we may ſay that he is their "grand

(a) Simon, Hiſt. Crit. du Vieux Teſtament, pag. m. 545.

[A] He lived in the twelfth century.] This is what Father Simon (1) ſuppoſes. Others place his death in the year 1105 (2). Some make him live in the thirteenth century, and pretend that he was contemporary with Maimonides (3). Others again ſuppoſe that he lived in the fourteenth century (4); for they aſſert that he was baniſhed from France with all the other Jews by King Philip ſurnamed le Bel: now this Monarch's edict againſt the Jews is dated July the 22d 1307 (5). Hoornbeeck ſuppoſes that this Rabbi was baniſhed from France at that time; he makes him a native of Lunel in Languedoc; and he obſerves that there were always a great many Jews in that city; which he proves thus. Unde in epiſtolis Gregorii, libr. 3. epiſtol. 21. Venantio Epiſcopo Lunenſi inſcripta ita incipit: multorum ad nos relatione pervenit, à Judæis in Lunenſi civitate de gentibus ad ſervitium Chriſtiana detineri mancipia (6). i. e. "Whence the twenty firſt "letter of the third book of Gregory's Letters, "which is written to Venantius Biſhop of Lunel, begins "thus: We have been told by a great many perſons, "that the Jews who live in the city of Lunel keep ſe-"veral Chriſtians as ſlaves." This is a very groſs blunder; for Lunel in Languedoc never was an Epiſcopal city. Pope Gregory means in this paſſage Luna a city of Tuſcany in Italy, the ruins of which are ſtill to be ſeen near the mouth of the river Magra. The Epiſcopal See of that city was removed to Sarzana by Pope Nicholas V (7).

[B] His books are very much eſteemed among the Jews.] "His commentaries on the Bibles of Venice and Baſil are extant. They have alſo printed with the "text of the Talmud his gloſſes or commentaries upon "that great work (8)." Monſieur Brun (9) relates, that he has ſeen ſeveral Jews "at Bourdeaux, who had "ſtill ſo great a reſpect for the memory of Solomon "Jarchi, the moſt illuſtrious of their Rabbies, by the "learned commentaries he wrote both upon the holy "Scripture,

(1) Simon, Hiſt. Crit. de Vieux Teſtament, pag. 545.

(2) See Konig, Biblioth. p. 423.

(3) Ibid. But obſerve that Konig, ibid. pag. 496. who after Hottinger places Maimonides in the 13th century, does not follow the common opinion, according to which he lived in the 12th.

(4) Hoornbeeck, contra Judæos, pag. 7.

(5) Mezeray, Abregé Chron. tom. 2. p. m. 799.

(6) Hoornbeeck, contra Judæos, pag. 7.

(7) See Miræus, Geog. Eccleſ. pag. 236.

(8) Simon, Hiſt. Crit. du Vieux Teſtament, pag. m. 545.

(9) Brun, Véritable Religion des Hollandois, pag. 224.

(b) Ibid. pag. 514. col. 2.
(c) I give the article of this ſame Rabbi under the word ISAACITES.

" grand author." They add ſometimes to the books they call the five volumes, the Commentaries of Raſci, who is their chief author upon the Bible, becauſe he is very well ſkilled in their ſyſtems of Divinity, and in their Tranſlations (b). Father Simon, who ſays all this, ought to have obſerved, that Rabbi Raſci is the ſame with Rabbi Jarchi or Iſaaki. He is alſo called Iſaacites. See the margin (c).

" Scripture, and upon the Talmud, that they aſſured
" me, ſays he, they were determined to take very
(10) He ſhould have ſaid Lunel. " ſoon a journey to Lunelle (10) near Niſmes, to ſee
" the place where this great man was born, and " whence he took his name (*), and that they would
" endeavour to ſettle there, which they hoped would
" be granted them."

(*) Jarcha ſignifies the Moon in Hebrew (and the Moon in French is la Lune) ſo that he was called Jarchi of Lunelle.

JARDINS (MARY CATHERINE DES) famous for her Romances [A], flouriſhed in the ſeventeenth Century. She was " born at Alençon, a little city of which " her father was Provoſt. As ſoon as ſhe was nineteen years of age ſhe began to con- " ſider how ſmall her eſtate was; and finding her ſelf poor, and having as much wit as " ambition, ſhe went to Paris with a deſign to mend her fortune. She was not entirely " diſappointed in her hopes; for ſhe ſoon gained a reputation by her genius; and the " men of wit were proud of her acquaintance. Monſieur de Ville-Dieu, a handſome " Gentleman, and in pretty good circumſtances, was one of the firſt that became ac- " quainted with Miſtreſs de Jardins; he eſteemed her, loved her, and married her, " though ſhe wanted beauty: but he died unfortunately ſoon after. The poor woman " retired for grief into a Convent; but when ſhe had eaſed her grief a little there, ſhe " left the place, and entered into the world again, and married to her ſecond huſband " Monſieur de la Châte, whom ſhe alſo buried. Being deeply afflicted at this new miſ- " fortune ſhe reſolved never to marry again, but to paſs the remainder of her days in " love-intrigues. She began therefore to hearken to the flattering addreſſes of her lovers, " and to anſwer them in little Poems and Letters, which are very ingenious and witty (a)."

(a) Richelet, Vie des Auteurs François, p. lviii. of the Hague edition, 1699.

The author, from whom I borrow this account, has omitted a great many particulars [B], and has not been accurate with regard to chronology; for he pretends that ſhe did not begin to hearken to the flatteries of her lovers, till after the death of her two huſbands; whereas ſeveral perſons have told me poſitively, that this epoch is very ill-placed, and that this woman's galantry was infinitely leſs than ever at the time he mentions. There has been in the Low-Countries one Miſtreſs DES JARDINS, whoſe name and picture have for ſome years following been prefixed to the Almanack; ſhe was contemporary with the perſon who is the ſubject of this article, and who died in the year 1683 (b).

(b) See the Mercure Galant, for November 1683, pag. 267.

JARRIGE

[A] She is famous for her romances.] The firſt, or one of the firſt ſhe wrote (1) was to contain ſeveral volumes in 8vo, according to the cuſtom of thoſe times. But ſhe did not carry it on ſo far as ſhe deſigned at firſt; and I have been told that ſhe dropt it, becauſe it was found out that ſhe deſigned to repreſent under fictitious names and with ſome alterations, the adventures of a great Lady, who married below her dignity. She was threatened with the reſentment of the perſons concerned, if ſhe dared to carry on the intrigue to the end of the romance; ſhe broke off therefore in the middle of her ſtory. However ſhe did not bury her talents; on the contrary, ſhe invented a new kind of romantick ſtories, of which ſhe publiſhed a great many, and ſhe ſucceeded very well that way; ſhe brought thoſe little ſtories of amorous adventures into faſhion, in which ſtories the good or bad ſucceſs of love appears very ſoon, and thus ſhe ſunk the reputation of thoſe long and tedious accounts of heroick adventures, which made the Printers of Caſſandra, Cleopatra, Cyrus, Clelia, &c. get ſo much money. The new taſte ſhe raiſed does ſtill ſubſiſt; and though that ſort of works pleaſe only when they are new, and ſoon become obſolete, yet the firſt romances ſhe wrote according to her new fancy, are ſtill read with pleaſure; as her Journal Amoreux, her Annales Galantes, her Galanteries Grenadines, and ſeveral others. She publiſhed in the year 1672 Les Exiles de la Cour d'Auguſte: i. e. " The per- " ſons baniſhed from Auguſtus's Court." An illuſtrious Lady (2) thought this romance very pretty. That intitled Les Deſordres de l'Amour (3). i. e. " The bad " conſequences of Love," and that other the title of which is Portrait des Foibleſſes humaines (4). i. e. " A " Deſcription of the Weakneſſes of Men," are not inferior to any of the former. The misfortune is that Miſtreſs des Jardins gave occaſion to an abuſe, which grows worſe and worſe every day. I mean that of aſcribing ſtories and amorous intrigues of one's own invention to the greateſt men of former ages, and of interſperſing them with ſome particulars, that have ſome foundation in hiſtory. This mixture of truths with fables creeps into a great many new books, ſpoils the taſte of young people, and is the reaſon why one dares not to believe even what is really true. See the remark [C] of the article NIDHARD.

(1) It was, I think, intitled, Alcidiane, or Alcidamie, I do do not remember it well.

(2) Madam de Sevigné. See the Lettres du Comte de Buſſi-Rabutin, Part 3. Let. CC. pag. m. 362.

(3) See the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, Sept. 1686. in the Catalogue des Livres Nouveaux, num. 1.

(4) See the ſame Nouvelles, for November 1685 Art. 1. and the Journal des Savans, for Nov. 19, 1685, pag. m. 494.

(5) See the Nouvelles de la Rep. des Lettres, for Oct. 1684, in the Catalog. num. 8.

[B] Monſieur Richelet . . . has omitted a great many particulars.] Since I obſerve this, it would be reaſonable for me to ſupply his defects. But it is not in my power to conſult the perſons who might acquaint me with thoſe particulars; it is therefore juſt to excuſe an omiſſion in me, for which Monſieur Richelet may juſtly be blamed; for as he lived at Paris, where he did not lead a ſedentary life, it was eaſy for him to enquire about the time when Miſtreſs Des Jardins left the country, and ſettled in the capital city of the Kingdom. It would not have coſt him more trouble to learn with whom ſhe was firſt acquainted there, what patrons ſhe got, what book ſhe publiſhed firſt, and when ſhe publiſhed it; in what year ſhe was married to her firſt huſband, when he died, at what time ſhe married again, when ſhe loſt her ſecond huſband; the chronological order in which her Romances were printed; the time of her death, and ſeveral other particulars of that kind, which he does not mention in the leaſt; and yet we read on the top of his pages, Vie des Auteurs François. i. e. " The Lives of the French Authors." Is not this impoſing moſt ſhamefully upon the readers by a ſham title? Ought an account to be called thus, when it wants the moſt material particulars? You will ſay, no doubt, that there are a great many readers, who do not mind thoſe omiſſions; but this is not clearing the writer. Theſe readers would not have been diſpleaſed had they met in his work with the particulars he has omitted; and a great many other readers would have been very glad to find them there. He did not therefore follow the beſt method; for it is much better to do what pleaſes a great many perſons, and diſpleaſes none, than to do that which ſome diſlike, though others do not diſlike it.

JARRIGE (PETER), born at Tulle in Limouſin, was one of the moſt famous Preachers amongſt the Jeſuits, but otherwiſe a diſhoneſt man [A]: he was ſo exaſperated againſt his whole Order, becauſe he was not promoted in it to the employments which he imagined he deſerved, that he reſolved to turn Proteſtant. He imparted his mind to a Miniſter (a), who procured him an opportunity to retire into Holland (b). He abjured the Roman Catholic Religion in the Conſiſtory of Rochelle on Chriſtmaſs-day in the year 1647. When he was arrived at Leyden, he preached to a very numerous congregation upon the motives of his converſion, and endeavoured afterwards to perſuade the world, that he had no longer the leaſt inclination for Popery. The States of Holland granted him a penſion (c). But "the Jeſuits cauſed information to be made "againſt him with the utmoſt ſeverity, and endeavoured as much as lay in their power "to defame him. They obliged the Judge of Rochelle to condemn him to be hanged "and afterwards burnt. But all that noiſe ſerved only to make the public know how "much they were vexed at this loſs, and to afford Jarrige, who was very paſſionate "and revengeful, a pretence to revenge himſelf upon them. He did it with a witneſs in a book, which he intitled Les Jeſuites mis ſur l'Echafant; i. e. The Jeſuites expoſed upon a Scaffold at the place of execution; he abuſed them ſo ſeverely in that book, that their ſociety never met with any thing that vexed them ſo much (d). He alſo publiſhed a particular anſwer to Father Beaufés, who had defamed him very much (e). His treating the Jeſuits thus, might have made the world imagine, that they would be for ever irreconcileable; and yet the Jeſuit Ponthelier (f), who was then at the Hague amongſt the attendants of an Embaſſador, had ſome hopes to reclaim that haughty ſpirit; he practiſed upon him ſo, that he perſuaded him to return into the Pale of the Church of Rome; which he did accordingly in the year 1650. Jarrige left Leyden, and went amongſt the Jeſuits of Antwerp, where he publiſhed his recantation immediately [B]; but (a) To Monſieur Vincent Miniſter of Rochelle.

(b) Hiſtoire de l'edit de Nantes, tom. 3. pag. 93.

(c) Jarrige, Retractation, pag. 101.

(d) Hiſt. de l'edit. de Nantes, tom. 3. pag. 93.

(e) In a book intitled, Les Impietez & Sacrileges de Pierre Jarrige, Retractat. de Jarrige, pag. 70.

(f) See the remark [C].

[A] He was a diſhoneſt man.] This appears moſt evidently by what he confeſſes himſelf in his recantation. I need not therefore to inſiſt upon an argument, which a very honeſt man urged one day before ſeveral perſons of the Reformed religion. He obſerved that a ſtudious man, like Jarrige, who was continually compoſing of Sermons, could not have remembered at Leiden that vaſt number of little ſtories, which he has related in his Jeſuites mis ſur l'Echaffant, and in his anſwer to James Beaufés; he could not, I ſay, have remembered them, had he not wrote them down, at the time he heard them, with the names and ſirnames of the perſons concerned, and with all the minute particulars of times and places. Now this betrays a wicked heart; this ſhews that he was a diſhoneſt man; for he would not have taken the trouble to keep ſuch a regiſter, had he not deſigned to prepare weapons to uſe them on occaſion againſt the Jeſuits, if he ſhould happen to fall out with them. This was therefore thinking of revenge, and providing means to make himſelf formidable, even before he knew whether he would ever have occaſion for them. There are ſome perſons, who keep all, even the moſt inconſiderable letters of their friends, and who are moſt careful to keep particularly thoſe letters of which they may take an advantage, in caſe they ſhould happen to fall out with their friends. They conſider the inconſtancy of our paſſions, and they love as tho' they were to hate one day (1), and take their meaſures accordingly. It is certain, that they who keep their friends letters, and remember their moſt free converſations, and greateſt ſecrets, with ſuch a deſign, are very wicked men. The perſon, whom I have mentioned in the beginning of this remark, made uſe of that compariſon. I do not pretend to vindicate his reflection: I relate it only as a matter of fact; the reader will judge of it as he pleaſes. I have, beſides this, wherewithall to ſupport the aſſertion in my text, as you will ſee in the following remark.

A REFLECTION on the conduct of thoſe who keep all their friends Letters.

(1) Ita amicum habeas, poſſe ut fieri inimicum putes; i. e. "Act with your "friend, as tho' "he might once "become your "enemy." Publius Syrus, apud Macrob. Saturn. lib 2. cap. 7.

[B] He publiſhed his recantation immediately.] He confeſſed (2), that a moſt bitter and violent paſſion made him retire from the Jeſuits; and that there was (3) not a word in the curſed and ſcandalous Sermon which he preached at Leyden, but what was, properly ſpeaking, a blaſphemy, which deſerved ſo much the more to be puniſhed on the day of God's judgment, as his heart diſowned his words. He acknowledged (4), that he had added to his firſt and impudent lye ſuch circumſtances as were both falſe and criminal, namely, that it was ſixteen years ſince God had laid in his mind the firſt foundations of that work, which he had begun to perform ſome months before in his own country, and which he happily finiſhed to his ſatisfaction in the territories of Holland. He confeſſed (5), that to compleat his wickedneſs he had ſlandered ſeveral innocent perſons, to revenge himſelf of two whom he thought guilty; that upon reading the ſentence by which he was condemned to death (6) for a religion which he abhorred in his heart . . . . his anger deprived him of his judgment, and without minding what he did, acted like mad dogs, who bite their own maſters without knowing them. Being therefore deprived of my right ſenſes, ſays he (7), I wrote a virulent and bitter libel againſt the Province of Guienne which I had left. . . . . I made uſe of all the artifices I was capable of to aſperſe their reputation. Rhetoric has the properties of thoſe multiplying glaſſes, which make the ſmalleſt objects appear very large, and repreſent a frog as big as an ox. It was an eaſy matter for me to find ſome ſlight foundations upon which I might build the moſt heinous crimes. I did not mind to tell the truth, if I could but find ſome probable arguments to ſupport the falſities I aſſerted. I had but a ſmall ground to work upon, but by the particulars which I induſtriouſly raiſed upon it, I made a mountain of a mole-hill. They who knew the trifling and inconſiderable ſtories that happened in that holy Province, will underſtand, much eaſier than any other readers, that a revengeful ſpirit rendered me very induſtrious in exaggerating the ſmalleſt things, and exceedingly artful to make them appear probable. The reverend father Ponthelier has cenſured me ſeverely, but yet with kindneſs, for theſe artifices, whilſt my paſſion was ſtill in its height; and he received no other anſwer from me but this; namely, that, ſince Father Rouſſeau and Father Beaufais had made uſe of a thouſand artifices and falſities to get me condemned to be burnt, it was but reaſonable that I ſhould alſo find ſome means to be revenged, and that upon a ſmall foundation I ſhould ground the moſt heinous charges, as they had raiſed theirs upon mere appearances. I added, that they had not barely wrote, as I did, but that they had really cauſed me to be hanged and afterwards burnt in effigy . . . . . (8). As a revengful man I choſe the blind ſide of my enemies, that I might more effectually diſperſe my ſlanders . . . . Whenever I met with the leaſt opportunity to cenſure them, I never failed to make my own conjectures paſs for proofs; and if it happened that any of them were ſuſpected, either with or without reaſons, by perſons of their own ſociety or by ſtrangers, I took thoſe bare ſuſpicions for real truths, and I generally endeavoured to make honeſt men paſs for very great criminals, who after a very ſtrict examination would have been found guilty only of ſome imprudent actions, or at moſt of ſome very ſlight faults. Whoever will examine my diſcourſe ſeriouſly and with an unbiaſs'd mind, will find, that in order to render my forgeries more acceptable to the reader and more probable, I generally prefix to them ſome reflections that are both plauſible and artful. I have ſaid too much to deſerve any

(2) Page 8.

(3) Pag. 11.

(4) Pag. 22.

(5) Pag. 69.

(6) The Provincial of the Jeſuits obtained from the Preſidial Court of la Rochelle a ſentence by which Jarrige was condemned to be hanged, and afterwards burnt. He carried me to the gallows, ſays Jarrige, pag. 72. of his Recantation, and from the gallows to the wood-pile. He cauſed the ſentence of the Preſidial Court to be printed; he had it explained, and laid open the grounds of the ſentence pronounced againſt me, and diſperſed it through all the Provinces; and he would have had my body treated after the ſame manner as he did my picture, had not God protected me in a country, where I was then only ſinning againſt him.

(7) Pag. 73.

(8) Pag. 77.

but it is not known what became of him ſince that time (α). A great many perſons believe that the Jeſuits impriſoned him for the remainder of his life [C]. This might be; but other reaſons may be given why ſuch a man ſhould have entirely diſappeared [D]. The Hiſtorian whom I have quoted will not, I am ſure, take it amiſs, if for any credit, and even the Heretics themſelves, though they may perhaps urge my ſlanders hereafter as good arguments, diſproved them in the Synod of Middelburg; and indeed a man cannot believe thoſe ſlanders, unleſs he be as blind and paſſionate as I was when I wrote that book. And if there has been any evil committed, the guilty have been baniſhed from the ſociety (of the Jeſuits), which as it has the proprieties of the great ocean, ſo it cannot keep any dead corps in its boſom. I was therefore unjuſt, to make an illuſtrious and religious ſociety anſwerable for the faults of thoſe, whom ſhe has caſt out as men unworthy to live with ſaints, and to cheriſh a ſpirit of devils amongſt ſaints. My anger and paſſion made me relate the evil, and conceal the remedies that were uſed againſt it. I have ſaid indeed what ſome had committed, but I have not added, that they were expelled immediately and without delay as ſo many infected men. I was writing a ſatyre to revenge myſelf, and not a panegyric to commend them. They who know the Jeſuits, will be perſuaded, that the crimes of regicides, of murthering children, of Sodomy, and ſuch other abominable actions, which I charged them with, are mere forgeries . . . . . (9). How often have I made uſe of captious reflections, againſt all the rules of ſound reaſoning, in order to draw general inferences from particular facts, and to charge the whole ſociety with ſuch crimes, as I could not have proved upon one ſingle perſon, had I been called upon to do it in a legal manner? What ſtories have I not forged, altered and falſified a thouſand ways, in order to ſting more cruelly, and to make deeper and more dangerous wounds? If I were to give in this place a particular account of all that I have ſaid, and refute every thing, and to mention the grounds of my accuſation, I ſhould tire you, dear reader, with a thouſand circumſtances, which would make my recantation abound with difficulties, and little edifying. Let it therefore be ſufficient for me to declare, that I retract all that I have ſaid in that pernicious book, both in the whole and in every part of it, except however what I have aſſerted of Father Rouſſeau, and of Father Beaufais, in my own vindication and defence. I deſire the equitable reader to place that book in the ſame rank with my declaration, and I intreat him by the tender mercies of our Lord JESUS CHRIST, not to read that declaration any more, becauſe it is heretical; and never to caſt his eyes upon that book, becauſe it is an abortive child, which an evil conſcience conceived, melancholy formed, and revenge brought forth.

(9) Pag. 79.

I leave my readers to judge, whether the Gentlemen of Port-Royal were in the right to aſſert, that Peter Jarrige did not publiſh a ſufficient recantation; and that he accuſes indeed himſelf of too much paſſion in his book againſt the Jeſuits, but that he does not retract poſitively any of the ſcandalous ſtories he had related. They who anſwered Father Maimbourg's Hiſtory of Calviniſm were ſure to make an advantage of this obſervation of the Gentlemen of Port-Royal (10).

(10) See the Apologie pour les Reformateurs. liv. c. 9. p. 154. and the Crit. General. Lettre 9. p. 137. 2d edit.

§ (α) It is not known what became of him.] Jarrige being reconciled to the church of Rome retired to Tulle in the Limouſin, where he lived as a ſecular prieſt, the Pope having given him leave to do it. He died there September the 26th, 1670 (*). ADD. REM.

(*) From the remarks printed at the end of the Paris edition of Mr. Bayle's Dictionary.

[C] A great many perſons believe, that the Jeſuits impriſoned him for the remainder of his life.] As he knew beforehand that people would ſay this, or even ſomething worſe of him, he took care to let the world know, that the Jeſuits received him very kindly; adding, that they who would not believe it, might come and ſee him. "I know very well, ſaid he, "that the Miniſters and the Gentlemen whom I have "left, will publiſh that I am dead, or in priſon; but "do me the favour to tell all thoſe that come to Ant-"werp, that they may viſit me in the College, and I "promiſe you, that I ſhall not only ſpeak with them "freely and with a perfect liberty, but, if they pleaſe, "I ſhall alſo accompany them through the whole city, "and take a journey with them into the Roman Ca-"tholic territories (11). Add to this the following paſſage from his recantation (12). "I know very "well that the Heretics, who judge of other people's "actions by their own, will ſpread a falſe report, as, "for inſtance, that I was poiſoned; or that I am ſhut "up in a dungeon, where I ſee the light only thro' "a little hole; that the reverend Father John Ponthe-"lier, who was the chief inſtrument God made uſe "of to help me out of the abyſs, has ſeduced me, "and drew me artfully from the United Provinces, "and from a ſafe ſanctuary, to deliver me up into "the hands of my enemies, or to a certain death. "But it is neceſſary for the converſion of all the apoſ-"tates of ſeveral orders, who are ſtill in the mire "of error, where they are detained only through the "fear of being puniſhed, that they ſhould know, all "theſe reports are falſe, and that I eſcaped the wolf's "clutches, to enter into the boſom of a merciful "ſhepherd, who takes a pride in carrying the loſt "ſheep on his ſhoulders. Indeed if I ſhould receive ſuch "a treatment as my crimes deſerve, an impriſomnent "of ten years would not be long enough to atone for "them. But ſince I returned freely into my Father's "boſom, without being forced to it, where ſin abound-"ed during two years, grace abounds much more at "preſent." He affected to let the public know all the ſecurities that had been given him. "I have received "from his Majeſty, ſays he (13), the fulleſt pardon "and abſolution that was ever granted, ſo that I do "no longer fear either Bourdeaux on account of my "book, or Rochelle on account of the ſentence of "death paſſed upon me. I have received, in the ſecond "place, letters of ſecurity, or letters of aſſurance from "our Holy Father the Pope, with full liberty to re-"tire into ſuch Catholic city as I ſhall chooſe, and "by theſe letters all Civil and Eccleſiaſtical Magi-"ſtrates are commanded to protect me, his Holineſs "being ſatisfied, if I do but wear a Prieſt's garment. "Thirdly, I have received from the Archduke Leo-"pold a paſs to travel freely over all his territories. "Fourthly, Francis Picolomini, General of the So-"ciety of Jeſus, has ſent me Letters-Patent to enter "again amongſt the Jeſuits, with whom I am now, "they having fully pardoned me my fault, without en-"joyning me any penance, or requiring any ſatiſ-"faction from me, but what I may make privately "of my own accord. The ſame has given me other "Letters-Patent to go into ſuch Kingdom or Province "of the world as I ſhall think fit; ſo that I have had "the liberty to chooſe any of the Society's Colleges: "All this is ſealed with the Great Seal of the Ge-"neral's Office, ſo that nothing can be more authen-"tic. And to compleat my happineſs, Father Pon-"thelier, who has been the chief author and promoter "of all theſe favours and wonders, has got leave to "live with me as long as he pleaſes; and I aſſure you, "that he will not forſake me, till I be entirely ſatiſ-"fied. And beſides all this, I have the liberty to be "either a ſecular Prieſt, or to continue in the So-"ciety of the Jeſuits (which is a thing that is never "granted to any perſon) and I expect definitive an-"ſwers from Rome."

(11) Lettre de Jarrige au Sieur G. M. Marchand. à Leide, dated from Antwerp, May 8, 1650. It was printed at Leyden the ſame year, with an anſwer to it, of which I ſhall ſpeak in the remark [F].

(12) Pag. 4.

(13) Lettre au Marchand de Leide.

[D] Other reaſons may by given why ſuch a man ſhould have entirely diſappeared.] By his own recantation he was convicted of being the greateſt villain upon earth. For he acknowledged there, that in order to revenge himſelf of two Jeſuits, he had defamed the whole Society by the charges of regicide, murdering of infants, Sodomy, and ſuch other abominable crimes (14). When a man publickly confeſſes himſelf guilty of calumny with regard to ſuch crimes, he has no other courſe to take, but to hide himſelf for the remainder of his days. If he has any principles of conſcience left, he ought to confine himſelf to ſome ſecret place, to do penance all his life-time. If he has no conſcience, yet is not paſt all ſhame, he ought to avoid all company, and after the example of Bellerophon, the very prints of mens feet.

(14) Retract. pag. 79.

Ἀλλ' ὅτε δὴ κακίῃσι ἀπήχθετο πᾶσι θεοῖσιν, for the Reader's inſtruction I ſhould correct his account a little [E]. In the Anſwers that were publiſhed to Jarrige's Recantation, it was aſſerted that his conduct had not been offenſive, than Jarrige's books, though perhaps it does not contain ſo many ſtories relating to particular perſons. This work was received with great applauſe; the Jeſuits obliged James Gretſerus to refute it, which gave riſe to ſeveral works pro and con.

Hom.

I have obſerved that Haſenmullerus does not relate ſo many ſtories as Jarrige does; but it is certain that in the chapter concerning the Vow of Chaſtity, he relates ſome that are very ſcandalous; and, with a deſign, no doubt, to make the public more ſtrongly condemn the lewd actions, which he accuſes the Jeſuites of, he expatiates upon ſeveral precautions, which he ſays the Jeſuites take in order to ſtrengthen themſelves againſt thoſe crimes. He aſſerts, that they take ſuch food as mortifies and enervates the fleſh; that they recommend watching, faſting, laſhing, and the wearing of an hair-cloth, to thoſe that confeſs their temptations to them. In cibis & potu variis utuntur herbis & pharmacis, quibus naturæ vim enervant, & ſobolem, ut ita dicam, intra viſcera propria occidunt μισάνθρωποι, & à Deo ordinatæ humanæ propagationis hoſtes. Si qui fratres in confeſſionibus conquiruntur de carnis infirmitate, flammis atque uſtione, eam ut extinguant, ordinant illis vigilias, jejunia, cilicia, & flagella quibus carnem ſuam doment, conſtigent, & in ſervitutem, ut loquuntur, ſpiritus redigant (23). i. e. "For their meat and drink "they uſe herbs and drugs, by which they enervate "the ſtrength of nature, and theſe man-haters, theſe "enemies to the propagation of mankind eſtabliſhed "by God himſelf, do, if I may ſay ſo, kill their "offspring in their own bowels. If any of the bre-"thren complain in their confeſſions of the weakneſs "of the fleſh, of their flames, and burning, they "command them, in order to extinguiſh that fire of "luſt, to watch, to faſt, to wear an hair-cloth, and to "laſh themſelves, that they may thereby ſubdue the "fleſh, and bring it into ſubjection to the ſpirit, as "they uſe to ſpeak." He adds, that there are ſome who labour to kindle and cheriſh in their ſoul a great hatred for the female ſex. Nonnullos vidi qui nihil voluerunt edere, quòd à muliere coctum ſciebant. Alios dicentes audivi, quoties de fœmina cogito, toties ſtomachus meus & bilis commoventur & conturbantur. Alius dicebat, tædet pudetque me quod à muliere ſum in hanc lucem editus; dignus certe cui vacca fuiſſet genetrix. Alii nihil prorſus boni in tota mulieris ſubſtantia eſſe dicunt, ſique ex illis quidam cæteros in harum calumniarum palæſtra vincere conantur, illi ad menticnem mulieris expuunt, & in tabula maledicos, & in ſexum fœmineum contumelioſos Mantuani verſus (quos tamen is non niſi de malis cecinit) deſcriptos ob oculos ponunt, ut ſic in ſeipſis majus in mulieres odium excitent (24). i. e. "I have "ſeen ſome, who would not eat of any thing which "they knew was dreſſed by a woman. I have heard "others ſay, whenever I think of a woman, my ſto-"mach riſes, and my blood is up: another ſaid, it "grieves me, and I am aſhamed that a woman "brought me into the world: he deſerved indeed to "have had a cow for his dam. Others again aſſert, "that there is no good at all in the whole ſubſtance of "a woman, and if there be ſome amongſt them who "pretend to excell above the reſt in theſe calumnies "againſt the fair ſex, they ſpit at the bare mention-"ing of a woman, and they keep ſome ſlanderous "verſes, injurious to the female ſex, compoſed by "Baptiſt Mantuanus (which yet he intended only a-"gainſt the bad women) engraved on a plate, conti-"nually before their eyes, that they may thus perpe-"tually ſtir up in themſelves an hatred for the wo-"men." It appears from this paſſage, that all ſorts of ſilly and extravagant notions can make their way to people's mind, under the auſpices of a miſtaken devotion. For can there be any thing more abſurd, and more worthy of a mad-man, than the diſcourſes of theſe people, My ſtomach turns, ſay they, my blood is up whenever I think of a woman. It grieves me, and I am aſhamed that I owe my birth to a woman. I ſpit when I bear a woman mentioned. I have not met in Haſenmullerus's work with a paſſage, which a modern author has quoted from it (25); he aſſerts that he read there, that a certain labourer, who worked in a Convent of the Jeſuits, could never careſs his wife, though

Ἦλοι ὃ καπποδόκον τὸ Ἀληΐον οἷος ἀλᾶτο,
Ὃν θυμὸν κατέδων, πάτον ἀνθρώπων ἀλεείνων (15).

That is,

"Being now odious to all the Gods, he wandered alone "through the plains of Aleii (in Cilicia) devouring "his own heart, and avoiding the very foot-ſteps of "men."

It is then a man muſt practiſe, what Balſac ſaid he would do for a much leſs conſiderable reaſon: I would go, ſaid he (16), and eat my very heart in the deſerts of Thebais; Ipſe cor meum edens, hominum veſtigia vitans.

[E] The Hiſtorian, whom I have quoted, will not take it amiſs . . . . . that I ſhould correct his account a little.] Jarrige "was a turbulent and ambitious "man, and his converſion was owing perhaps to the "anger he conceived when he was diſappointed in "his hopes of being raiſed to the higheſt dignities in "the Society, rather than to any real zeal for the "truth. He abjured the Roman Catholic religion in "the Conſiſtory of Rochelle, on Chriſtmas-day, "after which he retired into Holland. This was the "firſt wound of that kind the Society of the Jeſuits "received, not one perſon amongſt them having for-"ſaken the Roman Catholic religion before him. Or "at leaſt, if others had forſaken it, it did not make "any noiſe abroad, either becauſe the Jeſuits out of "prudence thought it not fit to blaze it out, or be-"cauſe the perſons were too inſignificant to complain "of their forſaking the Society . . . . . (17). Jarrige "diſappeared ſoon after his book had been publiſhed, "and the Jeſuits boaſted, that as he had left their So-"ciety only out of ſpite, he returned to it through re-"pentance, and had confined himſelf to one of their "Convents, in order to renounce the world, and to "make penance all his life time. But as he never "appeared any where ſince, it was thought on the "contrary, that the Jeſuits found means to have him "carried away, and that they revenged themſelves ſe-"cretly upon him for the vexation he gave them by "changing his religion. And indeed, it is not to be "imagined, that after they had made ſuch an out-"cry upon his forſaking them, they would make no "advantage of his return, nor carry him at leaſt "ſometimes through thoſe Provinces, in which his "apoſtacy was known, in order to check the joy, "which his converſion gave to the Reformed. And "beſides, we have had ſince that time other inſtances "of what they are capable of doing againſt thoſe, that "forſake them; it is well known, that they find "means to carry them off out of their ſafeſt retreats, "and that they make them atone, by long and heavy "puniſhments, for the crime they committed by "breaking their vows (18)." I ſhall make but three remarks upon this account.

The Iſt will be very ſhort; that author ſhould not have made uſe of the word perhaps, with regard to the motives of Jarrige's converſion. It is plain that it was owing only to ſpite. Monſieur Spanheim was fully perſuaded of it from the very firſt converſation he had with him (19); and Jarrige's whole recantation ſavours of nothing elſe.

My IId obſervation is, that this was not the firſt wound of that kind which the Society received, and the conſequences of which made a great noiſe. A Jeſuit named Elias Haſenmullerus left his Order in the XVIth Century, and turned Lutheran. He was a man who had very exactly obſerved all that could be ſaid for or againſt that Society; ſo that the Jeſuits did all that lay in their power to ſeize him, leſt he ſhould publiſh an hiſtory of them. He was ſo happy as to avoid the ſnares they had laid for him, by hiding himſelf now in one place and then in another. But at laſt, the better to ſecure himſelf againſt all their attempts, he retired to Wittemberg in the year 1587 (20), where he employed his time in putting the finiſhing-hand to an Hiſtory of the Jeſuits, which he deſigned to publiſh; but he died before he could ſend it to the preſs. His manuſcript was publiſhed ſometime after by Polycarpus Lyſerus (21). It is a very ſmart piece againſt the Jeſuits (22), and upon the whole more

(15) Homer. Iliad. lib. 6. ver. 200.

(16) Lettre 34. to Chapelain, lib. 5. See Cicero, Tuſcul. Quæſt. lib. 3. folio 263. D.

(17) Hiſt. de l'edit. de Nantes, tom. 3. pag. 93.

(18) Ibid. pag. 94.

(19) Jarrige, Retractation, pag. 7.

(23) Haſenmullerus, Hiſtoria Ordinis Jeſuitici, pag. 127. edit. Francof. 1605.

(24) Ibid. pag. 131.

(25) The author of the Polygamia triumphatrix. Here follows what we find there, pag. 130. Haſenm. Hiſtoria Jeſ c. 6. p. 99. ubi jocoſam ſed tamen veram hiſtoriam narrat de opifice quodam, qui apud Jeſuitas laborans, comedens, & bibens, uxori benevolentiam debitam non potuit reddere, ſed apud alios vel aquam bibens virum ſe valuit præſtare, eamque ob cauſam non voluit, ut amplius Jeſuitis inſerviret, uti & poſtea Landsbergenſes prohibuerint in Bavaria, ne amplius cerevisiam apud Jeſuitas emerent.

CONCERNING Haſenmullerus, an Ex-Jeſuit, and his Hiſtoria Ordinis Jeſuitici.

(20) Taken from the preface which Polycarpus Liſerus prefixed to Haſenmullerus's work.

(21) At Franckfort, in the year 1593. in 4to.

(22) Haſenmullerus, qui fuit Jeſuita, & ſcripſit Triumphum Papalem, habet multa bona. Scaliger, in Scaligeranis poſterioribus, pag. m. 105. It is not true that he is the author of the Triumphus Papalis, which is prefixed to his Hiſtoria Ordinis Jeſuitici. Maximilian Philo is the author of it. This blunder of Scaliger is alſo committed in the Oxford Catalogue.

been very edifying, whilſt he acted the Proteſtant [F]. Konig (g) calls him Jarrichius, and pretends that he publiſhed The Jeſuit upon the Scaffold in the year 1665 (h). There are three blunders here (*).

(g) Biblioth. Vetus & Nova, pag. 424.

(h) Jeſuitam... feràli pegmate conſtitutum. It ſhould have been Jeſuitas.

(*) I Jarrighius for Jarrigius; II The Jeſuit, inſtead of the Jeſuits; III. The year 1665, inſtead of 1650.

In the Oxford Catalogue they have miſtaken him for another Jeſuit, a work of whom is aſcribed to him, and whoſe name was Peter Jarric.

though they gave him abundantly to eat and drink; and yet when he worked at other peoples houſes, he could very well perform his nocturnal duty, though he drank nothing but water: wherefore his wife would not have him work any more in the Convent of the Jeſuits, and afterwards the Magiſtrates of Landeſberg (26) would not ſuffer any beer to be bought of them. If this beer had really that bad quality, the Magiſtrates did very well to prohibit it amongſt the lay-men, for the conjugal duty is ſo much a privileged caſe, that ſeveral Caſuiſts ſubmit even the Canon-Law to it; they pretend that when faſting renders a man uncapable to pay his wife what he owes her, he is ipſo facto excuſed from faſting. See the margin (27).

(26) A city in Bavaria.

(27) They are not obliged to faſt, who when they faſt cannot perform the conjugal duty. Emmanuel Sa. Aphoriſ. verbo Jejunium, num. 9. Tolet. Inſtruct. Sacerdot. lib. 6. cap. 4. Thomas, 2 ſecundæ Quæſt. 147. Art. 4. Du Moulin in the book of Traditions, pag. m. 343.

If the Jeſuit Haſenmullerus's converſion made a great noiſe, that of the Jeſuit Reihing made ſtill more noiſe (38). He is generally thought to have contributed to make the Duke of Newburg enter into the pale of the church of Rome. See the article REIHING. We have here then two remarkable converſions of Jeſuits, which happened before that of Peter Jarrige. I ſay nothing of Daniel Peirol, Paſtor of the church at Montauban, and Profeſſor in the Univerſity of that city. He had been a Jeſuit, and wrote ſomething againſt Father Coton. I met with this particular in page 21 of Giſbert Voetius's Confraternitas Mariana.

(28) He turned Lutheran about the year 1621.

My IIId obſervation is, that Jarrige was not carried away by force; he retired of his own accord, being perſuaded to it at the Jeſuit Ponthelier's inſtigation. This appears by the authentic pieces which have been printed; ſuch is the letter he wrote to a Merchant at Leyden, and more ſtill, his own recantation (29).

(29) See the remark [C] quotations (11), (12), and (13).

[F] His conduct was not very edifying, whilſt he acted the Proteſtant.] I have ſeen two anſwers to his recantation, the one was written by Ezekiel Daunois, of Compiegne, Miniſter of the Goſpel; the other by John Nicolai, of Luxemburg, a Member of the French church at Amſterdam. In the Preface to this ſecond anſwer, I read, that Peter Jarrige laboured in vain to be admitted a Miniſter before the four years tryal, which the Synod require of thoſe, who forſake Idolatry, was expired. This tryal, ſays the author to him, "made you burſt with anger, after the laſt denial "you met with at the Synod of Haerlem, in which "you were alſo accuſed (you know beſt in your own "conſcience, whether it was juſtly or not) of an action "as ſhameful as thoſe wickedneſſes, with which you "charge the Jeſuits of your Province, in order to ex-"poſe them on a ſcaffold. And though that affair "was not thoroughly examined at that time, becauſe "the witneſſes were abſent, yet the ſuſpicions that "were conceived againſt you have not been removed, "conſidering the great knowledge and experience you "ſeem to have in thoſe things in your book againſt "the Jeſuits." The letter which the Merchant of Leiden wrote to him will explain all this; we meet in it with the following words. "You may remem-"ber with what ſpirit you was acted upon, when you "returned from the Synod of Middelburg, in which "you had ſo earneſtly endeavoured to be diſpenſed "from the order which is made, that no converted "Roman Catholic be admitted to the holy Miniſtry "(which you deſigned to invade, that you might "give greater offence) till after a tryal of four years "your petition being rejected, you ſhewed your pre-"ſumption, pride, and vanity; and returning home, "you happened to be in the night-time in the cabin "of the boat with ſeveral women; and as you could "not ſpeak to them but by ſigns, you expoſed "your obſcene parts before them by the light of the "candle, which made them cry out ſo loudly againſt "the wicked and abominable Prieſt, as they called "you, that they awaked not only a faithful ſervant "of God, who was there, but alſo all the paſſengers "that were in the boat, who being alarmed by the "womens outcry, run to their aſſiſtance, and having "heard the whole ſtory, would needs throw you "into the water, which they had certainly done, "had not that honeſt man appeaſed them: however "the ſkipper promiſed ſolemnly that he would give "an account of the whole ſtory at the place whence "you came."

JAVERSAC (N) was one of the authors that entered the liſt during the great controverſy between Balzac and Father Goulu. He was born in a city pretty near Angoulême (a); he went to Paris with a Book againſt both Phyllarchus (b) and Narciſſus (c), and intitled it Ariſtarque à Nicandre (Ariſtarchus to Nicander). His criticiſms were very wrong in ſome particulars; as for inſtance, he aſſerted that one muſt ſay (in French) une Ruette (a narrow lane, and alſo the bed-ſide) and not une Ruelle; un Livraire (a Bookſeller) and not un Libraire, becauſe we ſay un Livre (a Book) and not un Libre. This new author was aſſaulted with ſword and piſtol at his Inn, and even whilſt he was in bed. But as he was young and valiant, he took his ſword, and purſued his enemy into the ſtreet, ſo that he had all the honour of that ſtout defence. Notwithſtanding this, ſome perſons took care to have this ſtory cried the next day about the ſtreets, quite otherwiſe than it really happened [A]. They publiſhed a libel intitled Le Defaite du Paladin Javerſac par les alliez & confederez du Prince des feuilles (d). i. e. "The Overthrow of the Knight "Errant Javerſac by the Allies and Confederates of the Prince of the Leaves (*)." I have been told by a man, who has a great deal of wit, that Balzac was the author of that piece, and that it is the beſt that was publiſhed about this controverſy. The public found that there was a ſacrilegious calumny in the title of that libel (e); for Father Goulu was charged there with the attempt committed notwithſtanding the holineſs of his profeſſion.

(a) Sorel, Biblioth. Françoiſe, pag. 132. edit. 1667. Obſerve that the city mentioned by Sorel is Coignac.

(b) It is the name which F. Goulu took.

(c) Thus F. Goulu called Balzac.

(*) This is what Phyllarchus ſignifies in Greek.

(d) Sorel, Biblioth. Françoiſe, pag. 132.

(e) Idem, ibid.

[A] This ſtory was publiſhed quite otherwiſe than it happened.] Never did two things differ more, than the account of this ſtory as it is related by Sorel, differs from the account we read in the Défaite du Paladin Javerſac (1). It is aſſerted in this pamphlet, that the Knight-errant was of Cognac, where he had pleaded at the bar; that when his book was publiſhed, there was a wicked plot formed to aſſault him in the open ſtreet, but they were obliged to attack him in his own chamber, becauſe he kept himſelf locked in all day long; that they ſurprized him in bed ſleeping in the arms of his landlord's wife, on a thurſday, Auguſt 11, 1628; that they waked him out of his ſleep by a volley of baſtinadoes, which did not ceaſe till the aggreſſor thought fit, for the Knight-errant did nothing but ſubmit entirely to providence. The concluſion of the libel is, that Phyllarchus's friends, "being united in this "with thoſe of the other ſide, have ſworn to exter-"minate all the Javerſacs they ſhall meet with, and "to let the bad Poets know, that beſides the golden "age, the brazen age, and the iron age, ſo often "mentioned, there is ſtill a wooden age to come, of "which the antient Poets do not ſpeak a word, and "in the misfortunes and calamities of which the bad "Poets will have a greater ſhare than other men." I make uſe of the edition publiſhed in 1665 (2). See the following remark.

(1) It is a very ſmall pamphlet containing but 16 pages in 8vo. It has been reprinted in the folio edition of Balzac's works, with other pieces written in his defence.

(2) That is to ſay in the folio edition of Balzac's Works.

(f) See the laſt remark, quotation (14).

(g) Sorel, Biblioth. Françoiſe, pag. 132.

feſſion. Javerſac cleared him of the charge, and laid it only upon Balzac (f), but conſiderate perſons could neither accuſe Phyllarchus nor Narciſſus of it (g). However we know certainly, that it has been publiſhed (h), that Balzac being on his death-bed called to mind that in his younger days there happened ſomething between him and Monſieur de Javerzac, upon which he ſent one of his friends to that Gentleman's houſe, ſeven or eight leagues diſtant from Angoulême, deſiring him to come to ſee him that he might have the pleaſure of embracing him before he died. That he actually embraced him with an incredible tranſport of joy, and ſhewed him ſuch a ſincere love as agreeably baniſhed from their mind the remembrance of their former quarrel. That Monſieur de Javerzac was ſo deeply affected with it, that he immediately, with tears in his eyes, compoſed a Sonnet, to lament for ever the loſs of his friend.

(h) Moriſcer, in his Account of Balzac's death. It is printed in the folio edition of Balzac's works.

Since the firſt edition of this Dictionary I have learnt ſome particulars, which I ſhall acquaint the reader with [B].

[B] I have learnt ſome particulars, which I ſhall acquaint the reader with.] The Sieur de Javerſac's book was printed and reprinted in the year 1628, with this title, Diſcours d'Ariſtarque à Nicandre, ſur le jugement des eſprits de ce temps, & ſur les fautes de Phyllarque. i. e. "A diſcourſe from Ariſtarchus to Nicander, concerning the judgment of the wits of this age, and "concerning Phyllarchus's miſtakes." The firſt thing we meet with in it is an advertiſement from the printer. It contains nothing but falſities; for it is aſſerted there, that they were obliged to make uſe of a thouſand artifices, in order to render the care, with which the author endeavoured to prevent the publication of his work, ineffectual. He was not ſo very fond of it, as willingly to expoſe it to the rage of envy. We meet next with an abuſive letter, which he had written to Monſieur Bergeron, the King's Counſellor, and Referendary in Chancery. He ſhews a very great paſſion in that letter, becauſe he ſuppoſed this Monſieur Bergeron had made objections againſt granting him a licenſe for his book, that he might not have the advantage of being the firſt that publiſhed any thing concerning this controverſy between Balſac and Father Goulu, and that la Motte Aignon might have time to be before-hand with him. We meet thirdly with his preface, in which he gives us an account of the great pains which his enemies took to ſtop the printing of this work. After all theſe pieces follows the book itſelf. This is not the only work which the Sieur de Javerſac publiſhed. The ſame year 1628, he preſented the world with a Diſcours d'Ariſtarque à Calidoxe ſur ce qui s'eſt paſſé entre lui & Balſac. i. e. "A diſcourſe of Ariſtarchus to Calidoxus, concerning what paſſed between him and Balſac." The printing of it coſt him an hundred crowns (3); nor could he find means to have it printed at Paris, neither with a licenſe, nor otherwiſe. He aſſerts (4), that his father had been in ſeveral honourable deputations, and was raiſed to the moſt conſiderable employments in the aſſemblies of the reformed before the civil wars. . . . . and (5) that he can prove by authentic records, that his anceſtors acquired him a title to nobility, by their poſſeſſing a long while ſeveral conſiderable employments at the court of Navarre. He aſſerts alſo (6), that he had offered Balſac to give him ſatisfaction either as a gentleman or as a philoſopher. He relates at length the misfortune that happened to him when he was aſſaulted in his bed (7). He avoided a little the blow which one of the three fellows, that entered the chamber, ſtruck at him; but it is too glorious for me, ſays he (8), not to confeſs that he hit me on the arm, telling me, you was forbidden to write againſt Balſac. He adds (9), that his landlady was wounded in her little finger, and that he purſued them ſword in hand into the ſtreet, and that two hundred witneſſes, who ſaw him in his ſhirt on the threſhold, had publiſhed it every where before-hand; that with his ſword he thruſt the man, who had ſtruck him, in the breaſt, and that fifty perſons, who ſaw his ſword bend quite double, judge from it that the villain had a coat of mail on (10). He obſerves (11), that he had the honour, two or three days before, to be a ſecond to a Marquis in a duel. And indeed I think that he was more proper to fight than to write books, and that he would ſoon have got the better of Balſac, in a diſpute that muſt have been determined ſword in hand. He lets fall from his pen very ſilly bravadoes againſt him (12), but he ſeems to be afraid leſt his adverſary ſhould charge him with ſome amorous intrigues, in which he was engaged in his youth (13). Let us remember that he never ſuſpected Father Goulu to be the author of the affront that was offered him. I do not know, ſays he (14), why Balſac ſhould ſtand in fear of me, if he be not guilty, and if he think he can clear himſelf perfectly of that crime, by charging Phyllarchus with it, who has acted a much more generous part, and who has too good an opinion of his own wit to vindicate himſelf. I had ſuch ſtrong proofs againſt Balſac, and judged ſo well of Phyllarchus's honeſty, that I never could ſuſpect him in the leaſt. He was, I think, much more angry with my book, than with my perſon.

(3) Ariſtarque, Avis au Lecteur.

(4) Diſcours à Ariſtarque, pag. m. 166.

(5) Ibid. pag. 168.

(6) Ibid. pag. 174.

(7) It was on a Thurſday Auguſt 2, 1628, according to the 8vo edition of the Defait du Paladin Javerſac.

(8) Diſcours d'Ariſtarque, pag. 183.

(9) Ibid. pag. 184.

(10) Ibid. pag. 185.

(11) Ibid. pag. 198.

(12) See eſpecially pag. 198.

(13) Ibid. pag. 201.

(14) Ibid. pag. 199.

Let us conclude with obſerving, that it is eaſy to know he was born an Huguenot, but not, whether or no he was one ſtill; for the paſſage which I ſhall now quote is equivocal. After they had enquired where I lodged, and heard from my landlady that I lodged at her houſe, they aſked her of what religion I was. She anſwered, that ſhe did not know it, but that, however, I went often to church. It might very well have been declared upon oath, that there is not one Catholic, whoſe faith is more orthodox than mine is (15). The Sieur de Bergeron printed a letter againſt the impertinencies and falſities written by the Sieur de Javerſac, in a letter which he prefixed to a book, &c. (16). There was alſo publiſhed (17) a piece with this title, Le non paſſionné ſur le Livre intitule la Defaicte du Palladin Javerſac. i. e. "The impartial judge concerning a book intitled "the deſeat of the knight-errant." This piece is infinitely more favourable to the knight than to his adverſary. But as for the book intitled, Achates à Palemon pour la Defenſe de Phyllarque (18). i. e. "Achates to Polemon, in defence of Phyllarchus;" it cuts Javerſac in pieces. I have quoted a paſſage from it in the remark of the article ARTABANUS IV (19).

(15) Ibid. pag. 176.

(16) It was written to Monſ. Balzac, and printed in the year 1628.

(17) In the year 1628.

(18) Printed that ſame year.

(19) See alſo the article MUSAC.

JENISCHIUS (PAUL) was born at Antwerp June the 17th 1558, and died at Stugart December the 18th 1647. He was a learned man, and underſtood ſeveral languages. His book intitled Theſaurus Animarum, (The Treaſure of Souls) drew a heavy perſecution upon him; he was baniſhed, and his baniſhment continued above fifty years. He ſuffered it very patiently, and enjoyed a very good health till the laſt year of his life; eating and ſleeping well (a), and applying himſelf to Muſic, which he underſtood in perfection, and to the ſtudy of the holy Scriptures, and to Mechanics. He had nineteen children, of whom there were but four alive when he died. The laſt year of his life his health was very much impaired, and he expired in very violent pains (b). The Bibliographers of the Low-Countries knew nothing of him.

(a) Perpetua animi tranquillitate & corporis valetudine firma cum orexi & ſuavi ſomno uſus. Joh. Valentinus Andreas, Epiſt. 190.

(b) Taken from the 190th Letter of John Valentine Andreas.

☞JENKIN (ROBERT), a learned Engliſh Divine, in the beginning of the eighteenth Century, was ſon of Mr. Thomas Jenkin of Minſter in the Iſle of Thanet in Kent, and born there, and baptized January the 31ſt 1656. He was educated at King's School at Canterbury, and from thence ſent to St. John's College in the Univerſity of Cambridge, of which he was afterwards choſen Fellow. He was made Chaplain to Dr. John Lake, who was tranſlated from the See of Briſtol to that of Chicheſter in 1685; and in 1688 promoted by him to the Præcentorſhip of that Church, which he ſoon vacated by refuſing to take the Oaths to King William and Queen Mary. In 1711, upon the death of Dr. Humphrey Gower, Maſter of St. John's College, he was elected Maſter in his room, and likewiſe Lady Margaret's Profeſſor of Divinity; which places he held to the time of his death, which happened April the 7th 1727 (a). He wrote ſeveral works [A].

(a) Hiſtory and Antiquities as well Eccleſiaſtical as Civil of the Iſle of Tenet in Kent. By John Lewis, M. A. pag. 40. 2d edit. London 1736 in 4to.

[A] He wrote ſeveral works.] I. An hiſtorical Examination of the Authority of General Councils; ſhewing the falſe dealing, which hath been uſed in the publiſhing of them; and the difference among the Papiſts themſelves about their Number. 1688, in 4to. II. The Reaſonableneſs and Certainty of the Chriſtian Religion, two Volumes in 8vo. 3d Edit. 1708. III. Defenſio S. Auguſtini adverſus Joannis Phereponi in ejus opera Animadverſiones, Cambridge 1707, in 8vo. There was a ſecond Edition printed at London 1728, in 8vo. This book is written againſt Monſieur Le Clerc, whom our author complains of for having treated the fathers, and eſpecially St. Auſtin, with ſeverity, tho' he allows Monſieur Le Clerc to be a man of no ſmall or contemptible abilities: Mihi profecto eſt nec amore nec odio, ſed ſcriptis ſolis cognitus: in ipſo autem non exiguas nec contemnendas dotes agnoſco. IV. Remarks on ſome Books lately publiſhed, viz. Mr. Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews: Mr. Whiſton's Eight Sermons: Mr. Lock's Paraphraſe and Notes on St. Paul's Epiſtles: Mr. Le Clerc's Bibliotheque Choiſie, London 1709, in 8vo. V. He tranſlated the Life of Apollonius Tyanæus, written in French by Monſieur Tillemont. H.

☞JEWEL (JOHN) a learned Engliſh Writer and Biſhop in the ſixteenth Century, was ſon of John Jewel Gent. and was born at Bowden or Buden in the Pariſh of Berrinerber in Devonſhire May the 24th 1522 (a). In July 1535 he was ſent to the Univerſity of Oxford, and entered into Merton College (b) under the tuition of Mr. John Parkhurſt, afterwards Biſhop of Norwich. Auguſt the 19th 1539 he was admitted Scholar of Corpus Chriſti College; and on the 20th of October 1540 took the Degree of Bachelor of Arts (c). Being now in the capacity of taking Pupils, many reſorted to him, whom he moſtly inſtructed privately in Proteſtant principles, and publicly in Humanity Studies, being choſen Rhetoric Reader in his College (d). January the 28th 1544 he took the degree of Maſter of Arts (e). His life during his reſidence in the College was ſo exemplary, that Mr. Moren, Dean of the College, uſed to ſay to him: I ſhould love thee, Jewel, if thou wert not a Zuinglian; in thy Faith I hold thee a Heretic; but ſurely in thy life thou art an Angel. Thou art very good and honeſt, but a Lutheran (f). Upon the death of King Henry VIII he openly declared himſelf a Proteſtant, and upon Peter Martyr's coming to Oxford, he frequented his lectures and ſermons, and was Notary to that Divine, when he diſputed in the Divinity-Schools with Chedſey, Treſham, Morgan, and others, about the Real Preſence (g). In 1550 he took the Degree of Bachelor of Divinity (h); and became a zealous promoter of the Reformation, and a Preacher and Catechiſer at Sunningwel near Abingdon in Berkſhire (i). Upon the acceſſion of Queen Mary to the Crown in July 1553, he was one of the firſt who felt the rage of the ſtorm then raiſed againſt the Reformation; for before any law was made, or order given by the Queen, he was expelled the College by the Fellows, by their own private authority (k) [A]: upon this he retired to Broad-gate's Hall, (now Pembroke College) where he continued ſome time, and the fame of his learning drew many ſcholars to him. He was likewiſe choſen Orator to the Univerſity [B]. He continued

(a) See his Life prefixed to his Works, and to his Apology; and Prince's Worthies of Devon, pag. 418.

(b) Prince, ubi ſupra.

(c) Wood, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 63. 2d edit.

(d) Idem, Athen. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 169.

(e) Idem, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 69.

(f) Prince, pag. 419.

(g) Idem, ibid.

(b) Wood, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 75.

(i) Prince, ubi ſupra, and Wood, Athen. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 169.

(k) Fuller's Church Hiſtory of Britain, B. 8. pag. 8. and Prince, ubi ſupra, pag. 419.

[A] Expell'd the college by the fellows, by their own private authority.] They had nothing to object againſt him, but, 1. His following of Peter Martyr. 2. His preaching ſome doctrines contrary to Popery. 3. His taking orders according to the laws then in force (1). 4. His refuſal to be preſent at maſs, and other Popiſh ſolemnities (2). At his departure he took leave of the college in a Latin ſpeech, full of pathetic eloquence: "I have often, ſays he, heretofore upon divers occaſions, if not "with ſo good ſucceſs as I wiſhed, yet with moſt "ardent affection and deſire of good, ſpoken unto you "out of this place. But now, thro' the iniquity of "the times, things are brought to this paſs, that I "am to ſpeak only this at the laſt, that I muſt ſpeak "no more unto you. I have incurred, I ſee, ſome "mens implacable hatred; but how deſervedly, God "knows, and let them look to it. This I am ſure "of, that they who would not have me ſtay here, "would ſuffer me to live no where. I yield to the "time; and if they take any delight in my miſery, "I hinder them not. What Ariſtides prayed before "he went into baniſhment, that I pray of Almighty "God, that no man may think of me when I am "gone; and can they deſire more?" Here his tears could no longer be reſtrained; at laſt he proceeded thus: "Pardon me, if it do grieve me to leave the place, "where I have been brought up, where I have lived "hitherto, where I have been in ſome place of reckon-"ing. But why do I ſtick to kill my heart with one "word? Alas! that I muſt ſpeak it, as with grief I "muſt. Valeant ſtudia, valeant hæc tecta, valeat "ſedes cultiſſima literarum, valeat jucundiſſimus con-"ſpectus veſtri; valete juvenes, valete ſocii, valete "fratres, valete oculi mei, valete omnes mei."

(1) Prince's Worthies of Devon, pag. 419.

(2) Fuller, Church Hiſtory of Britain, B. 8. pag. 8.

[B] He was likewiſe choſen Orator to the univerſity.] This we are informed of by Mr. Prince (3). And we find that in the beginning of Queen Mary's reign he was employed to write in the name of the univerſity, the firſt congratulatory letter to her Majeſty. Wood informs us (4), that this taſk was evidently impoſed upon Mr. Jewel by thoſe who meant him no kindneſs; for it was taken for granted, that he muſt either provoke the Roman Catholicks, or loſe the good opinion of his party. But he was ſo dexterous in his compoſition, as to eſcape the ſnare. The addreſs being both reſpectful and guarded, paſſed the approbation of Treſham the Commiſſary (5), and ſome other Doctors, and was well received by the Queen. Epiſtolam quandam gratulatoriam tranſmittendam decrevere ſodalitiorum præpoſiti, Magiſtro Johanni Jewel, Collegii Corporis Chriſti Socio, id negotii demandantes. Hoc hoſtili in virum animo factum liquet, quem utique munere illo fungi non aliter poſſe ſponderent, quam ut vel Pontificiorum exacerbaret,

(3) Ubi ſupra, pag. 420.

(4) Hiſt. & Antiq. Univ. Oxon. lib. 1. pag. 274, 275. See likewiſe Fuller, Church Hiſtory, B. 8. pag. 6.

(5) Commiſſario. Mr. Collier in his Eccleſiaſt. Hiſtory, Part 2. B. 5. pag. 349. has erroneouſly rendered this word Vice-Chancellor.

continued ſo long at Oxford, till he was called upon to ſubſcribe to ſome of the Popiſh doctrnes under the ſevereſt penalties; which he ſubmitted to. However this did not procure his ſafety; for Dr. Martial, Dean of Chriſt Church, who had changed his Religion twice already, as he afterwards did twice or thrice more in the reign of Queen Elizabeth (l), had certainly caught him in a ſnare laid for him, had he not gone that very night he was ſent for, a wrong way to London. In this journey, one Auguſtin Berner, a Swiſs, firſt a ſervant of Biſhop Latimer, and afterwards a Miniſter, found him lying upon the ground, almoſt dead with wearineſs and cold; and ſetting him upon an horſe, (for Mr. Jewel, though lame, made his eſcape on foot) conveyed him to the Lady Anne Warcup's a widow, who entertained him for ſome time, and then ſent him up to London. Having twice or thrice changed his lodgings in London, Sir Nicholas Throgmorton, a man of great diſtinction and in conſiderable offices at that time, furniſhed him with money for his journey, and procured him a ſhip to convey him beyond ſea. He arrived at Francfort in the beginning of the ſecond year of Queen Mary's reign, where he made a public recantation of his ſubſcription to the Popiſh doctrines. Thence he went to Straſburg, and afterwards to Zurich, whither he attended Peter Martyr, in whoſe houſe he reſided. During this time it is probable, that he made an excurſion to Padua, where he contracted a friendſhip with Signior Scipio, a Venetian Gentleman, to whom he afterwards addreſſed his Epiſtle concerning the Council of Trent (m). After Queen Mary's death he returned to England in 1558, and was ſoon after employed with ſome others in a diſputation at Weſtminſter againſt the Papiſts; and deputed by the Queen to viſit the weſtern parts of England in order to root out Popery there (n). About this time he wrote a letter to Henry Bullinger concerning the ſtate of Religion in England [C]. January the 21ſt 1559 he was conſecrated Biſhop of Saliſbury (o). His writings have rendered his name famous over all Europe [D]. He was created Doctor of Divinity May the 26th 1565 (p). He died at Monketon-Farley September the 23d 1571

(l) Life of Biſhop Jewel, prefixed to his Apology, printed in 1585, pag. 11.

(m) Ibid. and Prince, pag. 420, 421.

(n) Prince, pag. 422.

(o) Godwin, de Præſulibus Angliæ, in Epiſcop. Sariſburienſib.

(p) Wood, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 96.

cerbaret, vel ſuorum à ſe mentes alienaret. Verum ſpes eos egregie fefellit, utriſque enim dubio quodam & obſcuro ſcribendi genere ſatisfecit Jewellus, & epiſtolam à Treſhamo Commiſſario ac Doctoribus nonnullis prius approbatam, grate admodnm accepit Maria.

[C] About this time he wrote a letter to Henry Bullinger at Zurich, concerning the ſtate of religion in England.] In this letter, dated May 22, 1559, he returns Bullinger thanks for his favours in Germany, and for the letters which he had lately written to encourage the Engliſh Divines to ſtand firm for the truth. He obſerves, "That arguments for reſolution were "very neceſſary at the preſent juncture. That the "reformed in England had not only their old antago-"niſts, but their late friends to encounter. That "theſe latter had deſerted the cauſe, joined the enemy. "and made a more vigorous and obſtinate reſiſtance "than any of the reſt. And what gives us, ſays he, "moſt trouble, we have the remainder of the Spaniſh "vices, luxury, pride, and libertiniſm to contend "with. As yet our fortunes are unreſtored, and we "are little better for returning to our country. But "we hope our affairs will mend ſhortly; for the "Queen is a prudent and religious Princeſs, and in-"clined to favour us. Religion is recovered to the "ſame foot, in which it ſtood in the reign of King "Edward VI. And I am ſatisfied the letters ſent "hither by yourſelf and your republic, had a conſi-"derable weight in this matter. The Queen will not "endure the ſtyle of head of the Church. She is al-"together of opinion, that this title is too great for "any mortal, and ought to be given to none but "Chriſt. And beſides, it has been ſo horribly abuſed "by the Pope, that it is ſcarcely conſiſtent with a good "conſcience for any perſon to make uſe of it. The "Scottiſh Preſbyterians called this diſtinction a blaſ-"phemous Title, when uſed either by Popes or Princes. "Their argument is this: The Church, ſay they, is "the Spouſe of Chriſt. No Spouſe can be ſaid to "have any other head, but him whoſe Spouſe ſhe is. "Now if the Church ſhould acknowledge herſelf to "be the Spouſe of any other but Chriſt, ſhe would be "a profeſſed Adultereſs. To return, our univerſities "are in a lamentable Condition, and almoſt quite loſt "to all ſenſe of orthodoxy. There are not now above "two in Oxford of our ſentiment, and thoſe ſo far "diſpirited as to be of no uſe. Thus Friar Soto, and "another Spaniſh Monk, have entirely deſtroyed "Peter Martyr's plantation, and made a mere wilder-"neſs of the Lord's vineyard. You can ſcarcely ima-"gine that ſo great a ravage and deſolation of prin-"ciples could have happened in ſo ſhort a time. And "tho' I ſhould be glad to ſee any thing from Zurich "in England, yet I would not adviſe you to ſend any "young travellers hither at preſent, unleſs you would "have them come home with leſs learning, and a "worſe belief." The reſt of the letter relates either to private perſons, or buſineſs of the ſtate.

(6) Bibliotheca Tigurina, pag. 134. and Collier, ubi ſupra, Part 2. B. 6. pag. 432.

[D] His learned writings have rendered his name famous over all Europe.] They are as follow, I. Exhortatio ad Oxonienſes (7). II. Exhortatio in Collegio Corporis Chriſti, ſive Concio in Fundatoris Foxi Commemorationem (8). III. Concio in Templo B. Mariæ Virg. Oxon. Ann. 1550, in Pet. 4. 11. This ſermon was preached for his Degree of Batchelor of Divinity. It is reprinted in Dr. Laurence Humphrey's Life of him, p. 49. and it was tranſlated into Engliſh by R. V. and printed at London 1586, in 8vo. IV. Oratio in Aulâ Collegii Corporis Chriſti (9). This ſpeech was made to this ſociety, when he was obliged to leave them in 1554. V. Epiſtola ad Scipionem Patritium Venetum de Cauſis cur Epiſcopi Angliæ ad Concilium Tridentinum non convenirent, Ann. 1559. It is reprinted in an Appendix to the ſecond edition of Sir Nathaniel Brent's tranſlation of the Hiſtory of the Council of Trent, London 1629, in folio. Signior Scipio, a noble Venetian, with whom our author had contracted an acquaintance at Padua, had written a letter to him, in which he obſerved, that himſelf, and many others, were extremely ſurpriſed, that the Engliſh took no notice of the Council of Trent, nor ſent any repreſentatives, nor excuſed their abſence by letters. "That they had "made a ſudden alteration in religion, and taken "leave in a manner of every thing, which had been "for ſo many years eſtabliſhed. That as far as he "could judge, this looked like pride in the manage-"ment, and ſchiſm in the iſſue. That it was a moſt "unwarrantable neglect to ſet aſide the Pope's autho-"rity, and not appear at the Council upon his ſum-"mons. That it was not lawful to diſcuſs matters of "religion elſewhere. That at ſuch general aſſemblies "the Patriarchs and Biſhops might be conſulted. "Here the learning of Chriſtendom and the flower of "the Church was to be met with. This was the place "where people might expect the Oracles of truth, and "the reſolutions of the Holy Ghoſt. That when any "controverſy happened about the worſhip of God, it "had been the cuſtom of pious Princes to refer the "matter to a public aſſembly of the Biſhops. That "the Apoſtles and Primitive Fathers eſteemed councils "as the beſt expedient for diſcovering truth, and ſettling "controverſies. By this means the hereſies of Arius "and Eunomius, of Eutyches, of Macedonius, and Pe-"lagius, were ſuppreſſed. And thus the modern dif-

(7) Vide Laurent. Humfredum in Vitâ Johann. Juelli, pag. 35. edit. 1573, in 4to.

(8) Ibid. pag. 45, 46, &c.

"ferences

1571 in the fiftieth year of his age, and was interred almoſt in the middle of the choir of his Cathedral at Saliſbury (q). With regard to his perſon, he was of a thin habit of body, which he exhauſted by his intenſe application to his ſtudies, which occaſioned a cold

(q) Godwin, ubi ſupra.

" ferences might be agreed, and the breaches in the " Church made up, if the parties would lay down " animoſities, and apply to this remedy. But that to " go about adjuſting of theſe matters without the de- " ciſion of a Council, is an irreligious attempt." To this letter our author returned a large and ſolemn anſwer, wherein he takes notice, " That the Engliſh " were not the only nation which declined coming to " Trent; ſince the Patriarchs of Conſtantinople, An- " tioch, and Alexandria, ſtood off; and the Church " of the Abyſſines, the Greeks, and Armenians, the " Chriſtians in Egypt and Barbary, in Perſia and " India, ſent no body to appear at the Council. And " for inſtance in Europe; did the Crowns of Sweden " and Denmark, ſays he, the Princes of Germany, " the Republics of Swiſſerland, the Kingdom of Scot- " land, to mention no more, comply with the ſum- " mons? And ſince ſo many other countries are not " repreſented at Trent, it is ſomewhat odd to wonder " at the Engliſh. And beſides, the Pope himſelf does " not appear at a Synod of his own convening. This " ought to be eſteemed a ſtrange omiſſion." Our author goes on with his objections and remonſtrances againſt the Council, becauſe it was convened by the Pope, and not by the Emperor. He ſuppoſes, that Trent was not large enough to accommodate ſuch numbers as were neceſſary. He obſerves, that the Engliſh Biſhops were employed in inſtructing and governing their charge, and could not be abſent from their dioceſes without deſerting their function in ſome meaſure. That the preſent Pope Pius IV. made his way to the chair by Simony, and bribing the Cardinals. That inſtead of paying his debts to Cardinal Caraffa, who procured him a majority, he confined that Prelate, and diſpatched him in priſon. That the antient Fathers declined coming to Councils, when they had reaſon to believe them to be packed and prejudiced againſt them. Thus St. Athanaſius refuſed to come to the Council of Sirmium; and St. Chryſoſtom took no notice of the Synod ſub quercu; neither could Paulinus, Biſhop of Triers, appear at the Council of Milan, where he foreſaw that every thing would be carried in favour of the Arrians. That the Fathers of Trent had pre-engaged themſelves to the Pope, and ſworn away their freedom in voting. Laſtly he wonders, " That the Pope ſhould ſummon the Engliſh to " the Council, who had been already pronounced he- " retics by his predeceſſors. What character ſhould " they appear under? It was not probable, that the " Council would allow them the common privilege, " conſidering the cenſure paſſed on their doctrine. " What then muſt they take ſo long a journey to be " ſet at the bar, and plead as criminals? By this me- " thod they could expect nothing more, but either to " recant, or have the cenſure repeated upon them. " But to ſtand to the Pope's juſtice, when they had " ſuch weighty exceptions to his authority, was more " than they could ſubmit to." VI. Letters between him and Dr. Henry Cole, upon occaſion of a Sermon that Mr. Jewel preached before the Queen's Majeſty, and her Honourable Council, London 1560, in 8vo. This letter-combat began March 18, 1559, and continued till May 18, 1560. VII. A Sermon preached at St. Paul's Croſs the ſecond Sunday before Eaſter, Ann. 1560. on 1 Cor. xi. 23. London 1560, in 8vo. From this text he took occaſion to make a remarkable challenge in defence of the Reformation. The Church of England was reproached with novelty by the Papiſts, and charged with departing from the primitive doctrine. In anſwer to this charge, the Biſhop defended the Proteſtant cauſe from the Scriptures and Fathers, adding this ſolemn proteſtation; " That if any learned man " of all our adverſaries, or if all the learned men that " be alive, are able to ſhew any one ſufficient ſentence " out of any old Catholic Doctor or Father, or out " of any old General Council, or out of the Holy " Scriptures of God, or any one example of the Pri- " mitive Church, whereby it may be clearly and " plainly proved, that there was any private maſs in " the world for the ſpace of ſix hundred years after " Chriſt, or that the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper " was ever adminiſtred to the people under one kind, " or that the people then had their Common Prayers in " a ſtrange tongue, that they underſtood not, or that " the Biſhop of Rome was then called an univerſal " Biſhop, or the head of the univerſal Church, or " that the people were taught to believe that Chriſt's " body is really, ſubſtantially, corporeally, carnally, " or naturally in the Sacrament, or that his body is " or may be in above a thouſand places at one time, " or that the Prieſt did then hold up the Sacrament " over his head, or that the people did then fall down " and worſhip it with Divine honour, or that then the " Sacrament was hanged up under a canopy, or " that in the Sacrament, after words of conſecration, " there remained only the accidents or ſhew, without " the ſubſtance of bread and wine, or that the Prieſt " then divided the Sacrament in three parts, and after " received all alone himſelf, or that whoſoever had " then ſaid, that the then Sacrament is a pledge, token, " or remembrance of Chriſt's body, had therefore been " judged for an heretic, or that it was then lawful to " have thirty, twenty, fifteen, or five maſſes ſaid in " one day, or that images were then ſet up in churches, " that the people might worſhip them, or that the " lay-people were then forbidden to read the word of " God in their own language; if any man alive can " prove any one of theſe articles, by any one clear or " plain clauſe or ſentence of Scripture, antient Fathers, " or any one General Council, or any example of the " Primitive Church, I here promiſe, that I will give " over my opinion, and ſubſcribe to him. Yea, I " further promiſe, that if any of all our adverſaries be " able clearly and plainly to prove, in manner afore- " ſaid, that it was then lawful for a Prieſt to pro- " nounce the words of Conſecration cloſely and in " ſilence to himſelf, or that the Prieſt had then autho- " rity to offer up Chriſt unto his Father, or to receive " the Sacrament for another, as they now do, or apply " the virtue of Chriſt's Death and Paſſion to any man " by means of the maſs, or that then it was thought " a ſound doctrine to teach the people, that the maſs " ex opere operato is able to remove our ſins, or that " any Chriſtian man called the Sacrament his Lord " and God, or that the people were then taught to " believe, that the body of Chriſt remaineth in the " Sacrament ſo long as that bread remaineth without " corruption, or that a mouſe, worm, or other creature " may eat the body of Chriſt, or that ignorance is the " mother of devotion: as I ſaid before, ſo ſay I now " again, if any of them can clearly prove any of theſe " things in the manner aforeſaid, I promiſe to yield " and ſubſcribe unto him. Indeed they have long " boaſted of antiquity, &c. but when they are put to " their proofs, they can produce nothing. I ſpeak " not this out of arrogancy, (thou Lord knoweſt it, " that knoweſt all things) but becauſe it is in the cauſe " of God, and for aſſerting his truth, I ſhould do God " great injury, if I ſhould conceal it." This challenge made a great noiſe, and the Papiſts thought themſelves obliged to anſwer it. Dr. Henry Cole wrote ſeveral letters to him upon this ſubject (9). John Raſtell, a Jeſuit, publiſhed likewiſe, A Confutation of a Sermon pronounced by Mr. Jewel at Paul's Croſs, Antwerp 1564. The Biſhop was likewiſe attacked by Dorman, in his Proof of certain Articles of Religion denied by Mr. Jewel, Antwerp 1564, in 4to, and his Requeſt to Mr. Jewel, that he keep his Promiſe made by a ſolemn Proteſtation in his late Sermon at St. Paul's Croſs, 15 June 1567, London 1567, in 8vo. And by Martial. But the former of theſe was anſwered by Dr. Alexander Nowel, in his Reproof of a Book intitled, A Proof of certain Articles in Religion denied by Mr. Jewel, ſet forth by Tho. Dorman, London 1565, in 4to; and his Reproof of Mr. Dorman's Proof continued, &c. London 1566, in 4to. The latter was anſwered by his Anſwer to John Martial's Treatiſe of the Croſs, London 1565, in 4to. But the Biſhop's moſt conſiderable antagoniſt was Mr. Thomas (10) Hardyng, who publiſhed, An Anſwer to Mr. Jewel's Challenge, Louvain 1564, in 4to. Upon this Biſhop Jewel publiſhed, VIII. A Reply to Mr. Hardyng's Anſwer; by peruſing whereof the diſcreet

(9) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 197.

(10) Mr. Collier in his Eccleſ. Hiſtory, Part 2. B. 6. pag. 462. erroneouſly calls him John.

cold that was the cauſe of his lameneſs, which affected him to his death. Notwithſtanding this, moſt of his journies in Germany as well as in England were undertaken on foot, till he became a Biſhop. He was of a pleaſant and affable temper. He had naturally a very ſtrong memory, which he greatly improved by art; ſo that he could exactly repeat whatever he had written after once reading; and therefore generally at the ringing of the bell he began to commit his ſermons to his memory; which was ſo firm, that he uſed to ſay, that if he were to deliver a premeditated ſpeech before a thouſand auditors, ſhouting or fighting all the while, yet he could ſay all that he had provided to ſpeak. And ſo quick was it in receiving, that when the Biſhop of Norwich propoſed to him many barbarous words out of a Kalendar, and Hooper Biſhop of Glouceſter forty ſtrange words, Welſh, Iriſh, and foreign terms, he after once or twice reading at the moſt, and a little recollection repeated them all by heart backward and forward. Another time when Sir Nicholas Bacon, Lord Keeper of the Great Seal read to him only the laſt clauſes of ten lines in Eraſmus's Paraphraſe confuſed and diſmembered on purpoſe, he ſitting ſilent a while, and covering his face with his hand, on the ſudden rehearſed all thoſe broken parcels of ſentences the right way, and the contrary, without any heſitation. He profeſſed to teach others this art, and taught it his tutor Parkhurſt beyond the ſeas; and in a ſhort time learned all the Goſpel forward and backward. He was a great maſter of the antient languages, and ſkilled in the German and Italian. He was a conſtant Preacher, greatly charitable, an encourager of learning, and a regular Conformiſt [E].

IGNATIUS

and diligent Reader may eaſily ſee the weak and unſtable Grounds of the Romiſh Religion in 27 Articles, London 1566, in fol. This was tranſlated into Latin by William Whitaker, Fellow of Trinity College in Cambridge, and printed at Geneva 1585, in fol. with our author's Apologia Eccleſiæ Anglicanæ. Mr. Hardyng wrote, in anſwer to this Reply, A Rejoinder to Mr. Jewel's Reply; by peruſing whereof the diſcreet and diligent Reader may eaſily ſee the Anſwer to his inſolent Challenge juſtified, and his Objections againſt the Maſs, &c. Antwerp 1566, in a thick quarto. And, Another Rejoinder to Mr. Jewel's Reply againſt the Sacrifice of the Maſs, Louvain 1567, in 4to. IX. Apologia Eccleſiæ Anglicanæ, London 1562, in 8vo. It was ſeveral times printed in England and abroad, and tranſlated into Greek, and printed at Oxford 1614, in 8vo. It was alſo tranſlated into Engliſh, by the Lady Bacon, wife to Sir Nicholas Bacon, ſoon after the publication of it, and printed under this title, An Apology, or Anſwer in Defence of this Church of England, concerning the State of Religion uſed in the ſame, London 1562, in 4to. This Apology was approved by the Queen, and ſet forth with the conſent of the Biſhops. It is a defence of the Engliſh Reformation, with a brief declaration of the religion profeſſed in the Church of England. It is written with great learning, clearneſs, and ſtrength, and with a peculiar elegance of ſtyle. It was well received by the Proteſtants abroad, as appears from a letter of Peter Martyr to our Biſhop, in which he informs him, that himſelf, Bullinger, and other Divines had read it with prodigious ſatisfaction. Mr. Wood obſerves (11), "That the Council of Trent, held at that "time, ſaw and cenſured it, and appointed a French-"man and an Italian to anſwer it; but they hung "back, and would, or rather could, not anſwer it." Mr. Thomas Hardyng publiſhed A Confutation of it, printed at Antwerp 1563, in 4to. Upon this the Biſhop wrote, X. A Defence of the Apology of the Church of England, containing an Anſwer to a certain Book lately ſet forth by Mr. Hardyng, and intitled, A Confutation, &c. in ſix Parts, London 1564, 1567, in folio. Tranſlated into Latin by Thomas Braddock, B. D. and Fellow of Chriſt's College in Cambridge, and printed abroad in 1600, in folio. In anſwer to the Biſhop's Defence, Mr. Hardyng publiſhed A Detection of ſeveral foul Errors, Lyes, Slanders, &c. uttered and practiſed by Mr. Jewel, in a Book by him ſet forth, intitled, A Defence of the Apology, &c. Louvain 1564, in 4to. Upon this the Biſhop wrote, XI. An Anſwer to Mr. Hardyng's Book, intitled, A Detection of certain Errors, &c. London 1565. XII. A View of a ſeditious Bull ſent into England from Pius the Fifth, Biſhop of Rome, ann. 1569. Delivered in certain Sermons in the Cathedral Church of Sarum, 1570. London 1582, in 8vo. XIII. A Treatiſe of the Holy Scriptures, gathered out of the Sermons preached at Saliſbury, 1570, London 1582, in 8vo. XIV. Expoſition on the two Epiſtles of the Apoſtle St. Paul to the Theſſalonians, London 1594, in 8vo. XV. A Treatiſe of the Sacraments, gathered out of his Sermons, London 1583, in 8vo. XVI. Certain Sermons preached before the Queen's Majeſty at Paul's Croſs, and elſewhere. There are 13 in number. All theſe books, (except the firſt five abovementioned) with the Sermons and Apology, were printed in one volume in folio at London 1609, with an Abſtract of his Life, but full of faults, (ſays Mr. Wood) written by Daniel Featly. Beſides theſe writings, he left in manuſcript, A Paraphraſtical Expoſition of the Epiſtles and Goſpels throughout the whole Year: A continuate Expoſition of the Creed, Lord's Prayer, and Ten Commandments: A Commentary upon the Epiſtle of the Galatians, and on the Epiſtle of St. Peter. In 1641 there was printed in his name at London, in one ſheet in quarto, An Anſwer to certain frivolous Objections againſt the Government of the Church of England. He wrote likewiſe a Dialogue, in which he comprehended the ſum of the Art of Rhetoric (12).

(11) Ath. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 171.

(12) Prince's Worthies, pag. 424.

[E] A regular conformiſt.] Dr. Laurence Humfrey, in the Life of our Biſhop, has endeavoured to repreſent him a favourer of the Non-conformiſts. But it is certain, that he oppoſed them in his exile, when they began their diſputes at Franckfort; and in a ſermon of his preached at Paul's Croſs, not long before his death, and printed among his Works in 1609, he defended the rites and ceremonies of the Church againſt them. He had likewiſe a conference with ſome of them concerning the ceremonies of the preſent ſtate of the Church, which he mentioned with ſuch vigour, that tho' upon his death-bed he profeſſed, that neither his ſermon nor conference were undertaken to pleaſe any mortal man, or to trouble thoſe who thought differently from him; yet the Puritans could not forbear ſhewing their reſentments againſt him (13). It was ſtrange to me, ſays Dr. Whitgift (14), to hear ſo notable a Biſhop, ſo learned a man, ſo ſtout a champion of true religion, ſo painful a Prelate, as Biſhop Jewel, ſo ungratefully and ſpightfully uſed by a ſort of wavering wicked tongues. He is ſuppoſed likewiſe to have been the author of a paper, intitled, A brief and lamentable Conſideration of the Apparel now uſed by the Clergy of England, written in the year 1566. His addreſs to the Non-conformiſts in the cloſe is very remarkable; "Do not ſuffer Satan, ſays he, to perplex your con-"ſciences. Throw up your conteſt, and make for "unity. Be not aſhamed to repent, nor afraid of "loſing your credit with the people. We are com-"manded to go to Nineveh, and denounce the judg-"ment of God. Inſtead of this, we deſert our buſi-"neſs, and lie idle in the hold. This miſbehaviour "draws the ſtorm upon us; and unleſs Jonas repents, "the ſhip is in danger of being loſt. You have "churches; why do ye quit them, and run to field-"conventicles? You have public places to officiate in; "what makes you affect private meetings? You have "the Chriſtian Religion preached to you in its original "purity; what reaſon then can ye have to be diſ-"guſted? Are not the Holy Scriptures read to you? "Have ye not the liberty of peruſing them at plea-"ſure? And is not Popery diſcharged? As for thoſe, "who conform to the habit, were they not baniſhed

(13) Prince, ubi ſupra, pag. 426.

(14) Anſwer to the Admonition, pag. 423.

IGNATIUS, the Founder of the Jeſuits. See LOYOLA.

" for their orthodoxy? And did they not give up " their fortune with all the reſignation imaginable? " Who takes more pains in preaching? Who writes " to better purpoſe? Who manages with more vigi- " lance and vigour in their reſpective ſtations than " theſe men? You talk of reformation, but they " practiſe it. If you love Chriſt, feed his ſheep, and " do not quarrel in his vineyard. Let us help to bear " one another's burthens, love our brethren, and not " diſturb the public repoſe." T.

ILLYRICUS (MATTHIAS FLACIUS) one of the moſt learned Divines of the Augſburg Confeſſion, was born at Albona in Iſtria (a) March the 3d 1520. He ſtudied the Belles Lettres at Venice under Egnatius, and having from his ſeventeenth year a ſtrong inclination to ſtudy Divinity, he reſolved to be a Monk, becauſe he wanted money to maintain himſelf in the Univerſities, and therefore the only means he had to ſatisfy his inclination was by ſtudying in a monaſtery. He acquainted a Provincial of the Cordeliers, who was his mother's relation, with his deſign. This Provincial, who began already to have a taſte for the Reformation [A], adviſed him to go into Germany, and not to ſhut himſelf up in a convent. Flacius followed that advice, and arrived at Baſil in the year 1539 [B]. Having continued there a few months he went to Tubingen, whence he removed to Wittemberg in the year 1541, and ſtudied there under Luther and Melanchthon. He got a livelihood by teaching Greek and Hebrew. Having acquainted Pomeranius, and afterwards Luther with the temptations that diſturbed his mind concerning ſin, God's wrath, and predeſtination, he was publicly prayed for at church, and they afforded him all the comfort which the holy Scriptures furniſh us with, ſo that his mind was ſoon eaſy. Melanchthon gave him a thouſand proofs of his good nature and generoſity: they found a wife for him, and gave him ſome employment in the Univerſity in the year 1544 (b). All the ſchools in Saxony having been diſperſed by the war, Flacius went to Brunſwick, where he gained a great reputation by his Lectures. He returned to his former employment at Wittemberg in the year 1547, and ſoon after he ſtrongly oppoſed the Interim, and all the prudent and diſcreet methods, which Melanchthon hinted were proper to be followed; and that he might be more at liberty to exclaim againſt Popery, without regard for any body, he retired (c) to Magdeburg, which town was at that time proſcribed by the Emperor. He publiſhed there ſeveral works, but the moſt conſiderable of them is certainly that Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, which was called the Centuries of Magdeburg, and of which he had the chief direction. He accepted the poſt that was offered him in the new Univerſity of Iena in the year 1557, and taught there five years; after which, as he could not agree with his collegue Victorinus Strigelius [C], he

(a) A part of the Country, which was anciently called Illyrium or Illyris; hence it is, that Matthias Flacius was ſurnamed Illyricus. It is not true, as Melchior Adam, and ſeveral others aſſert, that he was born in Sclavonia.

(b) Micrelius therefore is miſtaken who makes him Profeſſor at Wittemberg as ſoon as the year 1540. Syntagm. Hiſt. Eccleſ. pag. m. 751.

(c) In April 1549. Buchole. pag. m. 564.

[A] This Provincial, who began already to have a taſte for the Reformation.] He deſerves a place in the Martyrology of the Proteſtants, ſince after he had ſuffered during twenty years great hardſhips in goal, becauſe he was ſuſpected of hereſy, he was thrown into the ſea. His name was Baldus Lupatinus. Baldus autem iſte, ut hoc ἐν παρόδῳ addamus, paulo poſt in ſuſpicionem hæreſeos venit: ac Venetiis viginti ipſos annos ſitum ſqualoremque carceris, tandem in mari ſummerſus ſupplicium fortiter pertulit (1). i. e. " This Baldus, to add " this by the by, was ſoon after ſuſpected of hereſy; " and having ſuffered great hardſhip in goal at Ve- " nice during twenty years, he was at laſt caſt into " the ſea, and underwent his puniſhment with a great " courage."

(1) Melch. Adam, in Vit. Theol. pag. 472. See alſo Verheiden, in Effigiebus, pag. 157.

(2) In Effigiebus, pag. 157.

(3) Addit. aux Elog. tom. 1. pag. 471.

[B] He arrived at Baſil in the year 1539.] He was therefore nineteen years old at that time. Whence it follows that Verheiden (2) is miſtaken, when he aſſerts that Illyricus was ſeventeen years old when he went to Baſil. Monſieur Teiſſier (3) has followed Verheiden's account.

(4) In the year 1560 according to Micrælius, Syntagm. Hiſt. Eccleſ. pag. m. 827, 828. But according to Melch. Adam, in Vit. Theolog. Germ. pag. 420. it was in 1557.

[C] He could not agree with his Collegue Victorinus Strigelius.] They were of different opinions concerning the converſion of man, and concerning the power of free-will. They diſputed upon theſe ſubjects at Weimar before the Duke of Saxony (4). They ran upon the contrary extremes; Strigelius favoured thoſe that are called Adiaphoriſtes and Synergiſts, who aſcribed a great deal to free-will, and pretended that original ſin did but ſlightly wound the ſoul (5). Flacius on the contrary aſſerted, that that ſin was the very ſubſtance of the ſoul. The controverſy was carried on in thirteen meetings, the acts of which were publiſhed with a preface to them by Muſæus, who was one of Flacius's followers (6). We ſee here plainly what a deſire to contradict others may produce. It is a paſſion which carries perſons of a briſk and lively genius beyond bounds. Flacius, who could not be ſatisfied with differing moderately from his rival, receded from his opinion as far as he could, and ſeeing him aſſert that original ſin wounded the ſoul only with regard to her accidental properties, he reſolved to maintain that the very ſubſtance of the ſoul was corrupted, whence it followed that ſin was the very ſubſtance of the ſoul. Flacius would never have dreamed of that doctrine, had not his Collegue taught the contrary doctrine. But if the controverſy which aroſe between theſe two Profeſſors, ſhews us what may be the conſequences of a ſpirit of contradiction, and of the ἀμεσρία τῆς ἀνθολχῆς, or the keeping no medium in going to contrary extremes, it ſhews us alſo how proper the Peripatetic Philoſophy is to foment diviſions amongſt the Divines: For Illyricus's doctrine would have given no offence, had men believed with the new Philoſophers, that there are no accidents diſtinct from the ſubſtances; that pain for inſtance is nothing elſe but the ſoul itſelf as it is modified after a certain manner: this being granted, it is plain that Illyricus's doctrine is very true; ſin is not a being diſtinct from the ſoul that ſins, nor is virtue a being diſtinct from the virtuous ſoul. I cannot conceive how thoſe Divines, who ſuppoſe, that there is a real diſtinction between the ſoul and the modifications of the ſoul, dare to aſſert that there happens an alteration in a man, when he paſſes from a ſtate of innocence to a ſtate of ſin, or from a ſtate of ſin to a ſtate of grace. According to theſe Divines, when a man ſins, there is an entity produced diſtinct from the ſoul, which entity unites with the ſoul, and makes up with it an whole, which contains two beings really diſtinct from each other, the one of which is called ſubſtance, and the other accident. I maintain that this union does not produce any alteration in the ſoul, and that the ſoul continues to be exactly the ſame as it was before that union. You may mix grains of wheat with grains of barley as much as you pleaſe, you will never make them ceaſe to be wheat; and in all the natural and artificial mixtures, the compound bodies become indeed capable of a new kind of actions; but yet each part of theſe compounds, as much as it is diſtinct from all the other parts, keeps diſtinctly the ſame

(5) Spondanus, ad ann. 1560, num. 32.

(6) See Micrælius, Syntagm. Hiſt. Eccleſ pag. m. 827, 828.

REFLECTIONS on Flacius's opinion concerning the nature of ſin.

he retired to Ratiſbon, where he continued to publiſh a great many books. In the year 1567 he was called into Brabant to eſtabliſh churches there according to the Augſburg Confeſſion; but the perſecution ſoon diſperſed theſe new congregations; ſo that he went to Straſburg, and thence to Francfort, where his reputation ſuffered a great loſs; for he was forſaken by moſt of his followers, becauſe he was charged with holding the opinions of the Manichees; the ground of this charge was, his teaching that ſin is not an accident, but the very eſſence of our ſouls (d). He died at Francfort March the 11th 1575 (e). He was a man of excellent parts, of a vaſt genius, extenſive learning, and great zeal againſt Popery, but his reſtleſs, paſſionate, and quarrelſome temper ſpoiled all his good qualities, and occaſioned a thouſand diſturbances in the Proteſtant Church. He did not ſcruple to aſſert that Princes ought to be kept in awe by the fear of ſeditions (f). There was no reaſon to lament his death; for diviſions, which are always juſtly ſcandalous, were at that time more pernicious than war, becauſe they gave the Church of Rome a fair opportunity to reproach the growing Reformation. Some have ſaid that the only good action he did was to die (g): this is running upon extremes. He publiſhed a great many books (b), and none of his contemporaries knew how to ſearch old Libraries with more advantage than he did. He got from one of them an antient Maſs-book [D], which

(d) See the remark [C].

(e) Taken from Melchior Adam. in Vitis Germanorum Theologorum, pag. 472, & ſeq.

(f) Metu ſeditionum terrendos eſſe Principes. Melanchth Epiſt. cvii. pag. 134.

(g) Nequidquam recti ferisse niſi cum moreretur. Guil. Budæus, Cent. 16. Σχολίας, ad ann. 1575. apud Quenſtedt, de Patriis Eruditor. pag. 263.

(b) Simlerus, in his Epitome of Geſner, and Teiſſier, Addit. aux Eloges, tom. 1. pag. 422. gives a catalogue of them.

ſame nature it had before. And thus we may ſay, that if the ſoul were really diſtinct from its ſin, that is to ſay, from the ſin, with which it would be united, in that caſe the ſoul would never paſs to another ſtate. A ſoul once innocent would for ever be ſo. See what the Nominals ſay (7) againſt thoſe who aſſert that Accidents are really diſtinct from Subſtances.

(7) Caſimirus Tholoſas, in Atomis Peripatetici, tom. 3. pag. 249, & ſeq.

[D] He got from a Library an antient Maſs-Book.] Here follows the title of that work, which was printed at Straſburg for Chriſtopher Mylius in the year 1557. Miſſa Latina, quæ olim ante Romanam circa ſeptingenteſimum Domini annum in uſu fuit bona fide ex vetuſto authenticoque Codice deſcripta à Matthia Flacio Illyrico. i. e. "The Latin Maſs-Book, which "was formerly in uſe before the Roman, about the "year 700, faithfully tranſcribed from an antient and "authentic Manuſcript, by Matthias Flacius Illyri-"cus." Thus Monſieur Colomiés gives us that title (8), and he had perhaps tranſcribed it from the Sieur du Peyrat's work (9). He has added ſeveral curious particulars concerning that Maſs-Book. He obſerves that the Lutherans thinking it "inconſiſtent "with the belief and practice of the Roman Catho-"lics, boaſted of it on every occaſion; that the Ca-"tholics, for their part, without examining that "Maſs-Book very exactly, prohibited it in their In-"dexes (10); .... that the Lutherans coming to "examine that Maſs-Book more carefully, and find-"ing that it did not favour their opinions, ſuppreſſed "all the copies of it they could meet with, ſo that it "became very ſcarce: and that the Roman Catho-"lics making an advantage of this kind of a retrac-"tation, have ſince cauſed that Maſs-Book (11) to be "reprinted, notwithſtanding the prohibition of the "Pope and of the King of Spain." I do not doubt but he owes to the Sieur du Peyrat all that he aſſerts of the Lutherans concerning the ſuppreſſing of the copies: but I would not anſwer for him, that he was not a little too credulous in this reſpect; for du Peyrat does not give us any other reaſon for what he charges the Lutherans with, but the ſcarcity of the copies of that Maſs-Book. I own that he quotes a paſſage from Wicelius, in which Illyricus is cenſured for imprudently furniſhing the Roman Catholics with arms againſt his own ſect by the printing of that Maſs-Book. But this makes rather againſt than for du Peyrat's aſſertion. For Wicelius does not charge the Lutherans with making amends for their blunder by ſuppreſſing the copies; and yet if du Peyrat were in the right, they had already ſuppreſſed them when Wicelius publiſhed his book. He publiſhed it in the year 1564. Now du Peyrat's argument is grounded upon this, namely, that Caſſander and Pamelius his Contemporary, did not in the leaſt mention Illyricus's Maſs-Book in their works concerning Liturgies. And yet, ſays he (12), they have very carefully enquired for all that relates to this ſubject, and they had great credit in Germany .... by which they could eaſily get all the books that were of any uſe to them. He argued therefore after this manner: If the Lutherans had not deſtroyed all the copies of the Maſs-Book, which Illyricus had publiſhed, Caſſander would have mentioned that Maſs-Book, for he would certainly have ſeen a copy of it. But he has not mentioned it in the leaſt; it is therefore certain that the Lutherans had deſtroyed all the copies of it. Obſerve that Caſſander's book upon the Liturgies was printed (13) ſome years before Wicelius's. We ſhall ſhew hereunder, that Caſſander's not mentioning Illyricus's Maſs-Book is no proof of the ſcarcity of it, and that it does not follow from thence that he knew nothing of it. I ſhall only obſerve at preſent, that Wicelius's cenſure is an argument againſt the Sieur du Peyrat. But let us ſee what he relates (14).

(8) Colomiés, Biblioth. Choiſie, pag. 12.

(9) Du Peyrat, Antiquitez de la Chapelle du Roi, pag. 561.

(10) Philip II by the Duke of Alva's advice and at his requeſt, and afterwards Sixtus V. Colomiés, Biblioth. Choiſie, pag. 12.

(11) Father Le Cointe has inſerted it in his Eccleſiaſtical Annals of France; and Cardinal Bona at the end of his Liturgica. Ibid. pag. 12.

(12) Du Peyrat, Antiquitez de la Chapelle du Roi, pag. 618.

(13) In the year 1558. See Val. Andr. Biblioth. Belgic. pag. 261.

(14) Du Peyrat, Antiquitez de la Chapelle du Roy, pag. 617.

"Flavius (15) Illyricus having inconſiderately pub-"liſhed it at Straſburg in the year 1557, not mind-"ing what he was doing, and the Lutherans and "other Heretics in Germany obſerving the great "prejudice their new opinions received from that "antient Maſs-Book, gathered up all the copies of it "they could meet with, and ſuppreſſed them, that "the Roman Catholics might not have any know-"ledge of it, nor urge it againſt them, as claſhing "entirely with Luther and Calvin's ſect. George "Wicelius (*), an antient diſciple of Luther, who left "him at laſt, and threw himſelf into the pale of the "church, mentioning Flavius Illyricus in his defence "of the Church-Liturgy, printed in the year 1564, "ſeven years after this Gallican Maſs-Book was pub-"liſhed, ſeverely cenſures Flavius Illyricus on ac-"count of that Latin Maſs-Book's (†), ſaying, even "the blind might ſee very plainly, that by printing "it, he had ignorantly and imprudently hurt the "cauſe of Luther and Calvin's parties, and very much "obliged the Catholics. Wicelius's words are as "follow. Mathias Flavius Illyricus edidit repertam "Miſſam Latinam, non triumphans tamen de Theſauro "tanto adverſus Catholicos, quùm vel cæcutienti homini "apparet totum illud quod edidit, contra Lutheri, "Calvinique ſectas edidiſſe, ſed & Catholicis nobis rem "longe gratiſſimam feciſſe; quid enim ibi niſi Miſſam "Latinam, quæ hodie in uſu generali eſt, inſciens, im-"prudenſque defendit? Tantùm abeſt, ut ſuo, ſectæque "more oppugnet; locupletior eſt illa quidem, pluſque pre-"cum continet, ſed omninò tamen eadem cum uſitatâ, "cujus etiam dicta, factaque omnia paſſim ſequitur, ut "diverſam eſſe confirmare nemo audeat. i. e. "Mathias "Flavius Illyricus publiſhed a Latin Maſs-book which "he met with: but yet he could not make any ad-"vantage of that treaſure againſt the Catholics; for "even the blind may plainly ſee that the whole book "he publiſhed is againſt Luther and Calvin's ſect, and "that by printing it he obliged us Catholics very "much. For what elſe has been done beſides vindica-"ting the Latin Maſs, which is generally in uſe? "That which he publiſhed is indeed larger, and con-"tains more prayers, but yet it contains the very "ſame things with that which is in uſe, the words "and actions of which it follows through the whole, "ſo that no one will dare to aſſert that it is different "from it." This was undoubtedly the reaſon, why "Flavius Illyricus and his followers in Germany, be-"ing ſenſible of the imprudence they had been guilty "of, burnt or otherwiſe ſuppreſſed that Gallican or La-"tin Maſs-Book, fearing leſt they ſhould be a laugh-"ing-ſtock to all the world. I am confirmed in this "opinion, when I conſider, that though that Maſs-"Book was printed at Straſburg in the year 1557,

(15) He calls him always thus.

(*) Vide Georgium Wicelium in Defenſione Liturgiæ Eccleſiaſticæ.

(†) It was called the Gallic or Latin Maſs-Book.

which he publiſhed in the year 1557. This will give us an opportunity to examine ſeveral particulars. He got alſo from thoſe Libraries an infinite number of collections, which have been very uſeful to ſeveral perſons. I mean the Memoirs he collected to compile his Catalogus Teſtium Veritatis [E]; i. e. "A Liſt of the Witneſſes to the Truth." It

" yet neither George Caſſander, who died but in Fe" bruary 1566 (†), nor Pamelius his Contempo" rary . . . . mention it in the leaſt." Du Peyrat reports the ſame thing in page 623. " I maintain, ſays
" he, that ſince neither Caſſander nor Pamelius, who " carefully enquired for all kinds of Liturgies, never
" ſaw this, which yet was printed in their life-time,
" eight or nine years before the death of either (16),
" and ſince even at preſent it is very ſcarce both in " France and in Germany, the Lutherans and the " Calviniſts have made a ſacrifice of it to Vulcan, as
" ſoon as it was publiſhed, to prevent the Catholics
" from having any knowledge of it, and from urging
" it againſt them, as a very ſharp knife, come from " their own ſhop and out of their own hands, to cut
" their throat with, and prove their blind obſtinacy
" againſt the antient and true doctrine of the Ca" tholic, Apoſtolic, and Roman Church." Let us ſee now whether Caſſander's ſilence proves any thing.

(†) This is plain from Caſſander's Epitaph, made by Cornelius Galterus of the City of Ghent, and put up in the church of St. Francis of Poland. It is prefixed to Caſſander's Liturgies.

(16) This is falſe with regard to Pamelius, who died in Sept. 1587, in the 52d year of his age. His book of Liturgies, was printed in the year 1571. See Val. Andreas, Biblioth. Belgic. pag. 425.

Mr. Colomiés, who refutes Cardinal Bona, ought to have known, that du Peyrat miſled that Cardinal: The cenſure muſt therefore have been levelled firſt againſt du Peyrat. However it be, here follow Colomiés's words (67). " Cardinal Bona was miſtaken,
" when he imagined that Caſſander never ſaw the " Maſs-Book publiſhed by Illyricus. For beſides that " in Caſſander's collection of antient prayers, there
" are ſome which are alſo to be met with in Illyricus's
" Maſs-Book, here follow the words of Fr. Baudouin,
" a famous Civilian, in a letter to Caſſander, dated from
" Francfort in the year 1557, that is to ſay, the ſame
" year that Maſs-Book was printed. Francofordiam re-
" verſus, reperi Illyrici ad me literas cum libello de
" Miſſa ad Palatinum noſtrum. (He means Otho Elec-
" tor Palatine, to whom the book is dedicated.) Ro-
" gat ille meum judicium de ſuis Miſſæ antiquitatibus.
" Ego id ad te nunc refero, & libellum ipſum mitto, de
" quo quid ſentire debeamus familiariter nos moneas, ut
" de qua re tam multi multa confuſè balbutiunt, rectè &
" diſtinctè reſpondere aliquando poſſimus. i. e. " Being " returned to Frankfort, I found there a letter from
" Illyricus to me, with his Maſs-Book dedicated to " Otho Elector Palatine. He deſires me to give him
" my opinion concerning the antiquity of that Maſs-
" Book. I refer it now to you, and ſend you the " book, praying you would let me know in a friendly
" manner, what we ought to think of it; that as ſe-
" veral perſons ſay now a great many things of it at " random, we may know at laſt how to anſwer them
" rightly and poſitively." I have another argument ſtronger than that to prove, that Caſſander had peruſed Illyricus's Maſs-Book; and, what is very remarkable, du Peyrat himſelf affords me that argument. I find in a marginal note (18), which he has put in page 622, that this Maſs-Book is mentioned at the end of a book printed in the year 1561, intitled, De officio pii ac publicæ tranquillitatis vere amantis viri, &c. i. e. " Con" cerning the duty of a pious man, and a true lover of " the public tranquillity, &c." Now it is certain that Caſſander wrote a book with this title. If du Peyrat had known this, he would not have aſſerted that Caſſander never ſaw Flacius's Maſs-Book. It appears from thence that he urged a very bad argument, as to what relates to Caſſander, in order to prove that the copies of that Maſs-Book were become very ſcarce. But after all, will ſome ſay, it is certain that they became ſcarce, and that Caſſander did not mention that Maſs-Book in his Book of Liturgies. With regard to this laſt particular I anſwer, that this work of Caſſander was perhaps already printed off, when the author received Illyricus's book. Valerius Andreas obſerves in his Bibliotheque, that Caſſander's book was printed in the year 1558. Though this be put in the title-page, yet the book might have been expoſed to ſale in Autumn 1557, at which time Caſſander might not yet have received the book, which Illyricus had publiſhed in the year 1557. As to the other particular, I ſhall only obſerve that there are ſeveral works of Illyricus which are as ſcarce as his Gallican Maſs-Book.

(17) Colomiés, Biblioth. Choiſie, pag. 14.

(18) Here it follows, but I have corrected ſome errors of the preſs in it. Ad calcem libelli de officio pii ac publicæ tranquillitatis vere amantis viri in hoc Religionis diſſidio typis excuſi, anno 1561 referuntur doctorum aliquot ac piorum virorum libri, ex quibus videri poteſt quam non ſit difficilis controverſiarum in Religione conciliatio, ſi controvertendi ſtudium vitetur, inter quos ſit mentio ejuſmodi Miſſæ his verbis, Miſſa Latina vetus, quæ ante 700 annos in uſu fuit in Eccleſia Gallicana, & Germanica, Argentorati apud Chriſt. Mylium 1557.

There are a great many other reaſons of the ſcarcity of a book, beſides the care that is taken to burn all the copies of it, that can be met with.

[E] I mean the Memoirs he collected to compile his Catalogus Teſtium Veritatis.] The misfortune is, that he is charged with having ſtolen manuſcripts. Let us ſee what Melchior Adam relates. Tertium locum facile obtinet Martyrologium illud, quod hac occaſione compilatum ferunt. Contexuit abbas Johannes Trithemius catalogum auctorum. Hunc cum vidiſſet Flacius, temperare ſibi non potuit, quin diſſimulatâ perſonâ & habitu, aliquot in Germaniâ monaſteriorum bibliothecas perluſtraret: quos commode poſſet hiſtoricos clam auferret: atque iſto adminiculo librum, qui Catalogus Teſtium Veritatis indigitatur, conſcriberet (19). i. e. "We may juſtly place in " the third rank that Martyrology, which was compoſed
" on this occaſion. The Abbot John Trithemius drew " up a catalogue of authors. When Flacius had ſeen
" it, he had no reſt till under a falſe name and in diſ-
" guiſe he viſited ſome libraries of the Convents in " Germany; whence he ſtole clandeſtinely all the hiſ-
" torical books he could conveniently take, and by
" that help he wrote the work, which is intitled, A
" Liſt or Catalogue of the Witneſſes of the Truth." The Roman Catholic writers did not fail to make an advantage of this obſervation. Egregium ſcilicet opus, ſays Spondanus (20), after he had tranſcribed that remark, and quoted Melchior Adam, quod ex furto & ſacrilegio impii tranſfugæ confectum eſt, ut mirum videri non debeat ſi tot mendaciis & falſiloquiis ſcateat à patre omnis nequitiæ & immunditiæ eructatis. i. e. " An
" egregious work indeed, which an impious deſerter
" compiled from what he ſacrilegiouſly ſtole: nor " ought we to wonder that it ſhould abound with
" ſo many lies and falſities, belched out by the fa" ther of all wickedneſs and villainy." See in page 120 of Colomiés's Opuſcula, what is ſaid there of Lindenbroch. But after all, it is going too far, to infer from a man's ſtealing of manuſcripts, that he alſo falſifies them afterwards, and publiſhes them with a thouſand alterations. Spondanus is not well warranted in drawing ſuch a reference. And beſides he is miſtaken in ſuppoſing that Illyricus publiſhed his Catalogus Teſtium Veritatis, only with a deſign to oppoſe it to William Eiſengreinius's work. For on the contrary, Eiſengreinius publiſhed his Catalogus Teſtium Veritatis, only to oppoſe that of Illyricus. This appears from the date of the impreſſions. Illyricus's Catalogue, firſt printed at Baſil in the year 1556, was reprinted at Straſburg in the year 1562. Whereas Eiſengreinius's was printed at Dillingen in the year 1565. This is ſufficient to refute the paſſage which I ſhall now tranſcribe (21). Nec vero tam illud æmulatione Trithemii, cujus opus omninò diverſum eſt, ſuum concinnaſſe putamus; quàm turpiori flagitio ad obſcurandum illud, quod Guilelmus Eiſengreinius itidem Germanus Catholicus ediderat eodem titulo Catalogi Teſtium Veritatis, quo Patrum & Eccleſiaſticorum omnium qui ad eum uſque diem hæreſes expugnaverant, non parvo labore teſtimonia pro veritate fidei Catholicæ protulerat. In cujus invidiam, ſimul & ut fucum faceret imperitis, Flacius commentarium ſuum eodem titulo edidit, ſed abſque nomine auctoris (22), fabulis & mendaciis refertum. i. e. " Nor do I think
" that he (Illyricus) wrote his book, with a deſign to " imitate Trithemius, whoſe work is quite different;
" but with a more baſe and wicked intention, to de-
" ſtroy the reputation of that, which William Eiſen-
" greinius, who was alſo a German, but a Roman " Catholic, had publiſhed with the ſame title, of A
" Catalogue of the Witneſſes of the Truth, in which he " had with great pains collected the paſſages from
" the Fathers and from all the eccleſiaſtical writers to " his time, in favour of the Catholic faith. Flacius
" therefore out of envy againſt him, and with a de-
" ſign to miſlead the ignorant, publiſhed his book
" with the ſame title, but without his name (22):
" it abounds with idle ſtories and falſities."

Obſerve that Simon Goulart of Senlis had made a great many additions to that work of Illyricus in the editions publiſhed in 1597, and 1608. But the public (19) Melchior Adam, in Vitis Theol. pag. 475. He quotes Keckerman. in Method. Hiſtor.

(20) Spondanus, ann. 1560. num. 32. He is miſtaken when he ſtiles Melchior Adam a Lutheran.

(21) Spond. ad ann. 1560, pag. m. 602. Poſſevin. Apparat. Sacr. tom. 1. and ſeveral other authors, as Baillet obſerves in his quotation, aſſert the ſame. He aſſerts it alſo himſelf, Jugemens des Savans, tom. 1. pag. 537, 538.

(22) This is falſe; ſee below quotation (59).

It is pretended that he concealed ſometimes his own name under a fictitious one [F]. Moreri was very much in the wrong to refer his article to the letter T, under the name of Trancowitz [G].

Spondanus committed a very groſs blunder when he mentioned the Centuries of Magdeburg [H]. You will find it in the remark (i), in which I relate ſome particulars concerning public had reaſons to complain (23), that ſince he took the liberty to alter the whole diſpoſition of that work, and to add or ſuppreſs what he thought fit, he did not diſtinguiſh by ſome particular marks, what was his, and what belonged to Illyricus. It was this perhaps, that engaged a Lutheran to publiſh a new edition of the Catalogus teſtium veritatis, in every reſpect like that of Illyricus himſelf, except only that he prefixed to it the teſtimonies of the learned both for and againſt it. This new edition was printed at Francfort in the year 1666 in 4°, without John Conrad Dietericus's name, who publiſhed it, but his name was prefixed to it in the edition which was publiſhed in the year 1672 (24). Let us obſerve that Melchior Adam does not well abridge the author he quotes. I have conſulted the original ſince the firſt edition of this Dictionary, and I have met with a particular in Keckerman which ought not to have been omitted. It is, that our Illyricus having learnt from John Trithemius's work, that ſeveral authors, who lived in the darkeſt ages of Popery, and yet ſhewed the corruptions of it, reſolved to render ineffectual the care that was taken to conceal the books of thoſe authors. Let us tranſcribe the whole paſſage from Keckerman. Cæterum quod attinet ad inſidioſos occultatores Hiſtoriarum, certum eſt in Bibliotheca Vaticana, & aliis Bibliothecis Italiæ, imprimis autem in Bibliothecis Monaſteriorum, clam ſervari multos Hiſtoricos ſuperiorum ſeculorum, qui de fraudibus Pontificum, deque abuſibus Eccleſiæ Romanæ, & contra de conſervatione veræ doctrinæ, etiam ſub mediis tenebris Papatus ſcripſerunt, id quod manifeſtè patet ex Catalogo autorum, edito ab Abbate Johanne Trithemio qui iſtos autores ex Bibliothecis ante annos paulo plus centum collegit; quem Catalogum cum vidiſſet Matthias Flacius, temperare ſibi non potuit, quin diſſimulatâ perſonâ, & habitu aliquot in Germania Monaſteriorum Bibliothecas perluſtraret, artemque arte eluſerit, quos commodè poſſet Hiſtoricos clam auferret, atque adeo eximium iſtum librum, qui dicitur Catalogus teſtium veritatis, iſto adminiculo conſcriberet (25). i. e. "As to the crafty concealers of Hiſtorians, it is "certain that in the library of the Vatican, and in "ſeveral other libraries of Italy, particularly in thoſe "of the Monaſteries, they keep ſecretly a great many "Hiſtorians of the former ages, who wrote of the "impoſtures of the Popes, and of the abuſes of the "Church of Rome, and of the preſervation of the "true doctrine, even in the greateſt darkneſs of Po-"pery; as appears plainly from the catalogue of au-"thors publiſhed by the Abbot John Trithemius, who "a little above an hundred years ago made a collection "of thoſe authors from the libraries. Matthias Flacius "having ſeen that catalogue had no reſt, till under a "falſe name and in diſguiſe he viſited ſome libraries "of the Convents in Germany, and eluding artifice "by artifice, ſtole clandeſtinely all the hiſtorical "books he could conveniently take, and by that help "he wrote that egregious book, which is intitled, A "Catalogue of the Witneſſes of the Truth."

(i) It is the remark [H].

(23) See John Albertus Faber, in Decade Decadum, num. 96.

(24) Joh. Albertus Faber, in Decade Decad. num. 96.

(25) Keckerm. de Natura & Propietat. Hiſtor. in Auctario, cap. 1. p. m. 151.

(26) He lived in the 9th Century.

[F] It is pretended that he concealed ſometimes his own name under a fictitious one.] It is aſſerted that the Achilles Gaſſarus, who publiſhed a work of Otfridus a Monk of Weiſſenburg (26), is no other but Flacius Illyricus. That Monk's work is an harmony of the four Goſpel's in German verſe; it was dedicated to Solomon and Luitbert, Archbiſhops of Mentz, and to Lewis King of Eaſtern France (27). Wharton, who pretends (28) that Illyricus publiſhed it under the name of Achilles Gaſſarus, muſt give me leave to obſerve to my readers, that there was in the ſixteenth century a German Phyſician named Achilles Gaſſarus, who had publiſhed ſome books (29), when Illyricus was ſtill a ſchool-boy.

(27) See the Acta Erudit. Lipſ. for 1691, pag. 295. in the account of Archbiſhop Uſher's book intitled, Hiſtoria Dogmatica Controverſiæ de Scripturis ſacris Vernaculis.

(28) Apud Acta Erud. Lipſienſ. ibid.

(29) His Epitome Chronicorum mundi was printed at Baſil in the year 1532. See Geſner's Bibliotheca.

[G] Moreri was very much in the wrong to refer him to the letter T under the name of Trancowitz.] Monſieur Teiſſier has been the occaſion of that blunder by theſe words in page 471 of his firſt volume. The name of Matthias Flacius was Trancowitz. He quotes Verheiden's effigies. But Verheiden does not ſay this. Let us ſee what the curious Colomies has diſcovered upon this ſubject (30). "To conclude, let us "here give the true name of Illyricus, which was "Francowitz, as Bucholcer the ſon tells us in page "83 of his Chronology, or rather of the Continua-"tion of his Fathers, printed at Gorlitz in the year "1599. Verum & integrum, ſays he, Flacii nomen "ego ex certis authoribus cognovi eſſe tale; Matthias "Francowitzius, cognomento Flacius, gente Illyricus, pa-"triâ Albonenſis." i. e. "I have found in authors of "an unqueſtionable authority, that the true and whole "name of Flacius was, Matthew Francowitz, an Il-"lyrian by nation, and a native of Albona." Konig (31) calls him alſo Francowitzius; but Quenſtedt (32) calls him Trancowitzium.

(30) Bibliotheque Choiſie, pag. 15.

(31) Biblioth. vet. & nova, pag. 306.

(32) De Patriis Illuſt. pap. 262.

[H] Spondanus committed a very groſs blunder, when he mentioned the centuries of Magdeburg] He aſſerts that they began to publiſh them in the year 1560, and that the fourth volume was the firſt that was publiſhed (33). This is what is abſolutely falſe. The three firſt centuries were printed before the fourth. In the catalogue of the library of Francfort, publiſhed in the year 1604 by Becman (34), the three firſt centuries are ſaid to have been printed in the year 1559, and the fourth in the year 1560. Draudius (35) alſo places the edition of the three firſt under the year 1559. Monſieur Sagittarius tells us, that in his copy the year 1562 was ſet down for the three firſt centuries, the year 1560 for the fourth, 1562 for the fifth and ſixth, 1564 for the ſeventh and eighth, 1565 for the ninth, 1567 for the tenth and eleventh, 1569 for the twelfth, and 1574 for the thirteenth, which is alſo the laſt. It is very probable, that Spondanus's edition was like that of Monſieur Sagittarius; that is to ſay, that neither of them had the firſt edition of the three firſt centuries. But this does not clear Spondanus; for if he had read the preface to the firſt century, he would have ſeen that the centuriators complain there of a libel in which their work was cried down, before the public had ſeen any thing of what they had compoſed. De ſumptibus vero profitemur, ſay they, nos pauciſſimos habere, qui annuatim aliquid conferunt: nec pro laborum conditione operarii ſatis ſuſtentantur, ſicut ipſimet optimè teſtes ſunt: imo niſi Deus nobis quoſdam Mecœnates adhuc excitarit (quod tamen ne fiat, multi invidi ſtrenue laborant) neque progredi ſatis expedite poterimus: neque forte totum Opus, ut eſt inſtitutum, abſolvere. Impudens igitur, planeque diabolicum eſt mendacium, & criminatio tetra iſtius ſcurræ, qui nuper in maledico & famoſo ſcripto, ſine nomine edito (ubi tamen aliam ſaltat fabulam) Sardonio riſu, & virulento ſarcaſmo noſtrum opus hiſtoricum Aureum appellat: eo quod ex multo auro Germanico ſit conflatum. Non vidit ſceleratus iſte ſcurra Opus, & tamen non veretur canino, aut viperino potius dente arrodere. Deinde non habet cognitas rationes noſtras iſte conviciator ac criminator: & tamen ut Semei, nos falſe irridet, ac mentitur ſplendide. Nam quam pauci, & quam parce dent, quam frugaliter alantur hujus inſtituti operarii, poterat iſte irriſor explorare, non a profugis, ſceleratis, pollutis, mendacibus, quibus gubernationis noſtræ ratio ne nota quidem eſt, ſed a nobis ipſis. i. e. "As to the charges of this work we can truly de-"clare, that there are but few perſons who contribute "any thing yearly towards them; nor are the under-"takers ſufficiently ſupported in proportion to their la-"bour, as they can all witneſs; nay, if God does "not raiſe us ſome more friends (which invidious "perſons endeavour to prevent as much as lies in "their power) we ſhall not be able to carry on this "work with ſpeed, nor even perhaps, to compleat it "according to our deſign. It is therefore an impu-"dent and deviliſh lie, and an horrible ſlander, which "a certain buffoon lately publiſhed in an anonymous "and ſlanderous libel (in which he would however "ſeem to have another deſign) calling our work ironi-"cally and with a very bitter joke, a golden work, "becauſe, ſays he, it is made with a great deal of "German

(33) Spondanus, ad ann. 1560, num. 31. p. 601.

(34) See Gaſpar. Sagittarius, Introduct. in Hiſt. Eccleſioſt. p. 279.

(35) Ibid.

concerning the Hiſtory of thoſe Centuries. Monſieur Varillas, who has faithfully tranſcribed that blunder of Spondanus, has added ſo many others of his own to it [I], that one

" German gold. The wicked wretch has not ſeen " all the work, and yet he dares to aſperſe it in the " moſt cruel manner. And beſides, this ſlanderer and " accuſer does not know our circumſtances, and yet, " like Shimei, he pretends to be ſmart againſt us, and " lies impudently. For this ſcoffer might have en- " quired, not indeed from renegado's, villains, wicked " men, and lyars, who have not the leaſt knowledge " of our affairs, but from ourſelves, how few perſons " there are, that give us any thing, how ſparingly " they give, and how frugally the undertakers of " this work are ſupported." This long paſſage may ſerve us for two purpoſes. For beſides that it is an argument againſt the falſe æra of the centuries, it does alſo hint to us, what we ought to think of theſe words of Spondanus. Quod opus vocatum eſt ab aliis Evangelicis Aureum: non quidem in laudem, ſed ironice, propterea quod multo principum quorundam Germaniæ & civitatum auro, oſtiatim emendicato, ſit editum. i. e. " The other Evangelicks (or Proteſtants) " called it a golden work; not to commend it, but " ironically, becauſe it was made by dint of gold, " begged from door to door, of ſome Princes and " cities in Germany." This is aſſerting that the other Evangelicks called that work of the centuriators a golden work, to ridicule it, and to give the public to underſtand that it was compiled at the expence of the Princes of Germany. But all theſe pretended Evangelicks are no more than anonymous writers, who publiſhed a libel under the falſe name of the ſtudents of Wittemberg (36). See in Monſieur Sagittarius (37) ſeveral extracts from the dedications of the centuries, which are deſigned to ſhew, that Illyricus, Wigandus, Judex, Faber, and the other undertakers of that work, had but too much reaſon to deſire the public's aſſiſtance. Obſerve that there were addititions made to the third century, when it was reprinted at Baſil (38). Acceſſerunt caſtigationes & additiones locorum aliquot in prima editione depravatorum vel omiſſorum (39). i. e. " With " corrections and additions of ſome paſſages, which " were either erroneouſly printed or omitted in the firſt " edition." Obſerve alſo that the firſt four centuries and part of the fifth were compoſed at Magdeburg; that the fifth was finiſhed at Iëna; that the ſixth was written in the place to which Illyricus, Wigandus, and Judex retired, on account of the perſecution; that the ſeventh was compoſed in the country of Mecklenburg, and the reſt in the city of Wiſmar in the ſame country (40).

(36) See Sagittarius, Introd. ad Hiſt. Eccleſ. pag. 256 and 266.

(37) Idem, ibid. pag. 260, &c.

(38) In the year 1562, if I am not miſtaken.

(39) Sagittar. Introd. ad Hiſt. Eccleſiaſt. pag. 269.

(40) Idem, ibid. pag. 245.

I had compoſed all this before I could meet with a copy of the firſt editions of theſe centuries; for as the edition of Baſil 1624, in three volumes in folio, publiſhed by the care of Lewis Lucius, is more eſteemed than any of the others, every one endeavours to get it, and it is a difficult matter to meet with the others in the libraries of private perſons. I have at laſt been able to conſult leiſurely the edition which the centuriators cauſed to be printed at Baſil by Oporinus; but the copy of the three firſt centuries, which was lent me, having been bound more than once, I could not meet in it with the date of the impreſſion. I believe that the laſt leaf had been torn off before it was bound the laſt time, and it was probably on that laſt leaf, that Oporinus placed the date 1559 (41). However it be, this copy of the three firſt centuries is printed in an Italic letter, and contains neither corrections nor additions. Now we have ſeen that the edition which Monſieur Sagittarius made uſe of, which is of the year 1562, contains additions and corrections. It is therefore neither the firſt, nor that which I have now before me. Obſerve that the copy of the fourth century, printed by Oporinus in the year 1560, is in a Roman letter.

(41) Mr. Hill, Miniſter of the Engliſh Church at Rotterdam, who has a fine Library, and an admirable knowledge of books, has aſſured me that the firſt Centuries were printed that year.

[I] Monſieur Varillas .... has added many blunders of his own to that of Spondanus.] Melanchthon, ſays he (42), was hardly dead, when the centuriators of Magdeburg began to publiſh their work upon Church Hiſtory, with the fourth volume. This is his firſt blunder. That volume, continues he, is indeed the beſt of the thirteen in the opinion of the Lutherans, or the laſt bad according to the Catholics. We defy him to prove this. There were (43) at firſt but four of the Miniſters of Magdeburg that were engaged in it, namely Matthias Flacius, John Vigand, Matthew Judex, and Baſil Faber. But afterwards the moſt learned of the Lutherans had an hand in it, though we know the names of but four more, who were Nicholas Gal, Celeſtinus Hutten, Jaſpar Nidpruc Counſellor of State to the Emperor, and Baptiſt Hoincel (44). Conſult Monſ. Sagittarius, he will tell you, that Andrew Corvinus, Thomas Holthuter, Pancratius Veltbeck, Nicholas Amſdorf, Nicholas Gallus, Martin Copus, Ebeling Almannus, Ambroſe Hidfeld, David Cicelerus, Jaſper Leunculus, William Radenſis, Nicholas Beumuller, Bernard Niger, Peter Schrader, and Conrad Agrius have alſo had a ſhare in that work. So that Monſieur Varillas names three perſons who are not in that liſt of Monſieur Sagittarius, and he ſuppoſes falſely that we know the names of only eight centuriators. I have ſeen indeed in Monſieur Sagittarius the name of John Baptiſt Heinzelius, and that of Jaſpar Nidpruck, Counſellor to the Emperor; but he does not ſay that theſe perſons were concerned in the centuries, he obſerves only that they encouraged Marc Wagner, who went from one library to another in order to collect materials (46). This Wagner was very ſerviceable to the centuriators; he viſited the libraries in Germany and Denmark, that of Edinburgh in Scotland, &c. He had a particular talent for that kind of inquiries, and they gave him a very glorious certificate, in which they acknowledged his fidelity, diligence and accuracy (47). That certificate is dated September the 30th 1557; it is declared therein amongſt other things, that he had taken ſeveral journeys with Illyricus to collect materials (48), and that having given ſeveral proofs of his capacity that way, it was thought that he could alone continue his travels; that they had therefore committed it to his care, giving him recommendatory letters, by which all learned and devout perſons were deſired to communicate to him the manuſcripts and antient records, which could be of any uſe. Illyricus was one of thoſe that ſigned this certificate. Monſieur Varillas aſſerts, that the authors of the other ſects, which ſeparated from that of Luther, cenſured the centuries ſeveral ways, and publiſhed divers extracts of the errors, which they pretended crept into them. Not one perſon, that I know of, ever mentioned thoſe extracts; Monſieur Varillas would have been very much puzzled, had he been obliged to prove his aſſertion. Conrad Brunus, whoſe invective againſt the work of the centuriators has been refuted by Illyricus in the year 1556, was a Roman Catholic. Eiſengreinius, who alſo wrote againſt them, was of the ſame religion. Let us take notice of ſome other blunders of Monſieur Varillas. Illyricus, ſays he (49), engaged the next year 1561 at Weimar in Thuringia, in a public diſputation with the famous Victorinus Spingel. He is miſtaken both with regard to the time when this diſputation was held (50), and with regard to the name of Illyricus's antagoniſt (51). The Catholics obſerved that in leſs than fifty years there ſprung up more hereſies from that of Luther, than there had been ſince Jeſus Chriſt even to Luther (52). This hyperbole, which he tranſcribed from Spondanus, but not without making it ſomething leſs, is the moſt ſilly thing in the world. Et videas hinc etiam quam fœcundus fuerit Lutherus qui plures protulerit peſtiferarum hæreſum auctores, quam ab orbis ortu fuerint ante in univerſo mundo (53). " i. e. It appears alſo from thence how fruitful Luther " was, who has produced more authors of peſtiferous " hereſies, than there had been before in the whole " world ſince the creation." You will find in Moreri, " that the number of the chief heretics, who appeared in the world, from the firſt century of Chriſtianity, to the time of Luther, amounts to 183: and it is hardly poſſible to find above ten or twelve ſchiſms during the firſt fifty years of Lutheraniſm. Let us continue to hear Mr. Varillas (54). " It was probable with a de- " ſign to eſcape for a time the perſecution which Fla- " cius expected from his friends, on account of the " paſſion he had ſhewed at Weymar, that he diſguiſed " himſelf, and went incognito to viſit all the libraries " of the Monaſteries in Germany. He made bold " to ſteal all the ſcarce books he could conveniently " take,

(42) Varillas, Hiſt. de l'Hereſie, liv. 24. pag. m. 229. under the year 1561.

(43) Ibid.

(44) Spondanus, ad ann. 1560, num. 52. p. 602, calls him Joannem Baptiſtam Hencelium.

(45) Sagit. Introd. ad Hiſt. Eccleſ. pag. 247, 248, 249.

(46) Idem, ibid. pag. 252, 253. Obſerve that Melchior Adam, in Vit. Theol. pag. 474. aſſerts, that Jaſpar Nidpruck and John Baptiſt Heincelius aſſiſted Flacius and his fellow-labourers.

(47) Ibid. pag. 253, 254.

(48) Cum D. Illyrico aliquot monaſteria perluſtraſſe, & cum ipſo nulla alia de cauſa peregrinatum fuiſſe, quam ut pium hunc conatum pro ſua tenuitate juvaret. Ibid. pag. 254.

(49) Varillas, Hiſt. de l'Hereſ. lib. 24. pag. 231, 232.

(50) See the remark [C].

(51) His name was Strigelius, and not Spingel.

(52) Varillas, Hiſt. de l'Hereſ. lib. 24. pag. 232, 233.

(53) Spondan. ad ann. 1560, num. 32. pag. 602.

(54) Varillas, Hiſt. de l'Hereſ. liv. 24. pag. 233.

one cannot conceive how a man of wit can be guilty of ſo many miſtakes. Let us not forget to obſerve, that Illyricus's Clavis Sacræ Scripturæ, i. e. "A Key to the holy "Scripture," is one of his beſt works. See what Monſieur Simon ſays of it in his Critical

(*) In the Life of Flacius.

"take (*), and made extracts of the others. The "author of his life relates that he did it out of emu- "lation, and to compoſe, after Trithemius's example, "a collection of all thoſe that had wrote books: but "this will not ſeem probable to thoſe who will com- "pare theſe two books together, ſince they are quite "different. Trithemius's work is, properly ſpeak- "ing, a catalogue of the Eccleſiaſtical writers, and of "the books they have compoſed; and Flacius's is a "collection of paſſages which ſeem to be contrary to "the Roman Catholic Religion, and favourable to "rigid Lutheraniſm." There are a great many errors in theſe words. For in the firſt place, Illyricus viſited the libraries before the year 1560; he did it with a deſign to collect materials for his Catalogus teſtium veritatis. Melchior Adam, the only voucher quoted by Spondanus and by Monſieur Varillas, declares it poſitively. Now that Catalogue was printed in the year 1556 (55); therefore, &c. In the ſecond place, it is falſe that Melchior Adam aſſerts that Illyricus undertook ſuch a work out of emulation, and to compoſe after Trithemius's example a collection of thoſe that had wrote books, If Melchior Adam had ſaid this, he would have been very much miſtaken; and conſequently Spondanus (56) would aſſert a thing, which upon the whole is falſe. See in the remark [E] how the reading of Trithemius's work gave riſe to Illyricus's deſign. In the third place, what Varillas ſays of Trithemius's work, and of that of Illyricus ſhews plainly that he knew nothing of either: for Trithemius does not confine himſelf to the Eccleſiaſtical writers, nor does the other confine himſelf to thoſe paſſages, which ſeem to be favourable to the ſtricteſt Lutheraniſm. Monſieur Varillas ſuppoſes, that the envy which Illyricus had conceived againſt the book of William Eiſengrem (†) a Roman Catholic Divine, intitled The Catalogue of thoſe, who bore witneſs to the Truth, determined him to undertake a work of the ſame kind in favour of his ſect (57); the contrary of this is true, as you have ſeen above (58). Laſtly, Monſieur Varillas charges him with having publiſhed his book without putting his name to it, either becauſe he would not expoſe himſelf again to the reſentment of the other ſects, which he foreſaw would not like his work, or becauſe he ſuppoſed that the world would know well enough that he was the author of it, though his name was not prefixed to it (59). All this is nothing but idle fancies; for he put his name to that work; nor had he any reaſon to fear leſt the other Proteſtants ſhould diſlike his compilation.

(55) See Joh. Albertus Faber, in Decade Decadum, num. 96.

(56) Nec vero tam illud æmulatione Trithemii . . ſuum concinnaſſe putamus, quam &c. Spondan. ad ann. 1560, pag. 602.

(†) Thus he writes that name.

(57) Varillas, Hiſt. de l'Hereſie, liv. 24. pag. 233.

(58) In the remark [E].

(59) Varillas, Hiſt. de l'Hereſie. liv. 24. pag. 234.

I have omitted a particular, for which Monſieur Varillas deſerves to be cenſured. Let us conſider it here. It relates to the dedication to Queen Elizabeth. Monſieur Varillas aſſerts (60), that it vexed that Princeſs more than it did her honour; and that there are but few inſtances of ſuch ſtrange and unſeaſonable actions in the hiſtory of men of letters, though they be charged with not being always very polite. The centuriators could not but know this notorious fact, namely that Queen Elizabeth was a Calviniſt with regard to doctrine, though ſhe were a Lutheran with regard to Church diſcipline. And yet in that ſame dedication, by which they endeavoured to obtain that Queen's protection, they inſerted a ſatire againſt the Calviniſts. They charged them with rendering Chriſt's teſtament ineffectual, as much as lay in their power, by arguments borrowed from Philoſophy; with rejecting the Real Preſence, and the Communion of our bleſſed Saviour's Body and Blood, againſt his own expreſſions, which are very plain; with endeavouring to miſlead thoſe who read the Goſpel, by perplexing with ſubtle and farfetched interpretations the natural ſenſe of a great many paſſages, which are ſo plain that they need no explication. They proved afterwards unanſwerably in the body of that volume, and in the twelve following, that the Church had always believed that Preſence; and whoever will take the pains to read them, will obſerve immediately, that though they who paid them wiſhed that they would write with leſs accuracy and with more temper upon that ſubject, that they might not prevent the union between the Lutherans and the Zwinglians, which was then again negotiating; yet they had ſo little condeſcenſion for their benefactors, that they handled this ſubject with more accuracy and paſſion than they did any other. Theſe are all gloſſes forged in the hiſtorian's own brains. He added theſe flouriſhes of his own invention to an obſervation which Spondanus made incidentally; and we may be ſure he ſpoke without any voucher, and without having read the dedication he was cenſuring. There was not the leaſt unpoliteneſs or imprudence in the conduct of the centuriators. They did not know yet what final reſolution the Queen of England would take: they knew only that ſhe laboured to eſtabliſh a good form of religion. They commended her for it; they congratulated her upon it, and they encouraged her very earneſtly to apply herſelf effectually to root out all the evils which the followers of Antichriſt had occaſioned. Ad te igitur nunc, Regina potentiſſima & ſereniſſima, convertimur. Audimus enim, te poſt accepta Regia ſceptra, etiam de præcipuo fine ac munere tui officii, ſocietatis ac vitæ totius omnium ſubditorum tuorum cogitare. Itaque non tantum lætis acclamationibus Regiæ tuæ dignitati gratulamur: ſed toto etiam pectore patrem Domini noſtri Jesu Christi invocamus, ac rogamus, ut . . . Sed quia non ſatis eſt bene cœpiſſe, hortamur etiam te, illuſtriſſima & potentiſſima Regina, ut totis viribus in id opus incumbas, ut Religio pura, integra, inviolata in toto regno tuo inſtauretur, omnibus Antichriſti crudelitatibus, vulneribus, peſtibus ac carcinomatis rectè curatis, atque ſublatis. Debes enim hunc honorem Deo conditori ac redemptori tuo, debes tibi ipſi, debes ſubditis tuis (61). i. e. "We addreſs ourſelves therefore unto "you, moſt powerful and ſerene Queen: for we hear "that after your acceſſion to the Crown, you began "immediately to think of the chief end and duty of "your ſtation, on which the union and life of all your "ſubjects depends. And therefore we do not only "congratulate you with joyful acclamations upon "your royal dignity, but we alſo from our hearts pray "and beſeech the Father of our Lord Jeius Christ, "that . . . But as it is not enough to begin well, we "alſo intreat you, moſt illuſtrious and powerful Prin- "ceſs, to apply yourſelf earneſtly, and as much as "lies in your power, to eſtabliſh a ſound, pure and "uncorrupted religion throughout your whole King- "dom, and to root out all the cruelties, wounds, dan- "gerous evils, and cankers of Antichriſt. This you "are bound to do in honour to God your Creator and "Redeemer; this you owe to yourſelf, this you owe "to your ſubjects." It was but fit that Divines of the Augſburg Confeſſion ſhould add to this a word of advice concerning the Corporal Preſence, They did it after the following manner (62). Illud verò etiam non prætereundum eſt, cum jam variæ paſſim graſſentur quaſi factiones opinionum, inter quas aliqui etiam teſtamentum Domini planè philoſophicis rationibus ita evacuant, ut corpus & ſanguinem Chriſti, quod ad præſentiam & communicationem, juxta clariſſima, evidentiſſima, veraciſſima & potentiſſima verba ipſius Christi, prorſus removeant, miraque verborum perplexitate fucum faciant: in primis videndum tibi eſt, ut & articuli fidei ſine phariſaico fermento, & Sacramenta à Chriſto inſtituta citra omnem adulterationem inſtaurentur: id quod te facturam eſſe, omnes pii ſperant, ſummiſque votis à te contendunt. i. e. "We muſt not omit to obſerve, "that there are ſeveral factions, if we may ſay ſo, "with regard to opinions, and amongſt them ſome "who by arguments that are only Philoſophical, do "ſo enervate the Teſtament of our Lord, that they "entirely exclude the Body and Blood of Chriſt, as to "their Preſence and Communication from the Sacra- "ment, againſt the moſt plain, moſt clear, moſt evi- "dent and ſtrong expreſſions of Christ himſelf; and "by the wonderful ambiguity of their words they im- "poſe upon the readers. You ought therefore to take "a particular care that the articles of the Chriſtian "Faith be eſtabliſhed without any Phariſaical Leaven, "and the Sacraments inſtituted by Chriſt himſelf be "reſtored without any corruption. This is what all "good men hope you will do, and what they moſt "earneſtly entreat you to do."

(60) Ibid. pag. 230.

(61) Epiſt. Dedicat. Centuriæ quartæ Magdeb. pag. 8.

(62) Ibid. pag. 9.

When Monſieur Varillas ſuppoſes that the centuriators could not but know this notorious fact, namely that Queen Elizabeth was a Calviniſt with regard to doctrine, Critical Hiſtory of the Old Teſtament (k). See alſo John Albert Faber in the 96th article of his Decas Decadum.

(k) Hiſt. Critique du Vieux Teſtament, chap. 13. pag. 428, &c. of the edition printed at Rotterdam 1685.

trine, he only ſhews his own ignorance: he does not conſider that they wrote their dedication at a time when they did not yet know upon what footing the reformation would be eſtabliſhed in England. Their volume is indeed dated 1560, and Elizabeth's reformation was eſtabliſhed in the year 1559. But who is there that does not know it is the Bookſeller's cuſtom to put the date of the next year to the books that are printed off towards the end of Auguſt? I believe therefore, that this dedication, which has no date to it, was ſent to Oporinus, Bookſeller at Baſil, in the year 1559, before they knew in Germany the Eccleſiaſtical regulations made in England by Queen Elizabeth; and after all it could not appear at that time that this Princeſs had declared for Calvin's opinion with regard to the Corporal Preſence. Read the following page from Biſhop Burnet. "Some of the reformed Divines were appointed to review King Edward's liturgy, and to ſee if in any particular it was fit to change it. The only conſiderable variation was made about the Lord's Supper... It was propoſed to have the Communion Book ſo contrived, that it might not exclude the belief of the Corporal Preſence. For the chief deſign of the Queen's Council was to unite the nation in one faith, and the greateſt part of the nation continued to believe ſuch a preſence. Therefore it was recommended to the Divines to ſee that there ſhould be no expreſs definition made againſt it, that ſo it might be as a ſpeculative opinion, not determined, in which every man was left to the freedom of his own mind. Hereupon the rubric that explained the reaſon for kneeling at the Sacrament, that thereby no adoration is intended to any Corporal Preſence of Chriſt's natural Fleſh and Blood, becauſe that is only in Heaven, which had been in King Edward's liturgy, was now left out, &c. (63)."

(63) Burnet, Hiſt. of the Reform. of England, vol. 2. B. 3. under the year 1559 pag. 393. See alſo pag. 405.

INCHOFER (MELCHIOR) a German Jeſuit, born at Vienna in the year 1584, entered into the Society of the Jeſuits at Rome in the year 1607. He had already diſtinguiſhed himſelf by his knowledge of the Law. He taught a great while Philoſophy, Mathematics and Divinity at Meſſina, and in the year 1630 he publiſhed there a book, which brought him into ſome trouble [A]. He was obliged to go to Rome to anſwer the complaints that had been made againſt him before the Congregation of the Index. The Judges were very well ſatisfied with the reaſons he pleaded in his defence, and ordered him only to alter the title of his book, and to explain ſome things in it more at large, which he did accordingly in a ſecond edition. He continued ſeveral years at Rome, and died at laſt at Milan, September the 28th 1648 (a). Beſides the works of his that are extant [B], and by which it appears that he was very learned, he was preparing others for the preſs (b), which would have ſhewed how extenſive his learning was, had not death prevented him from compleating them. He is thought to be the author

(a) Taken from Nath. Southwell, Biblioth. Script. Societ. Jeſu, pag. 608.

(b) See the titles of them, in Nathaniel Southwell, ibid.

[A] He publiſhed a book, which brought him into ſome trouble.] Here follows the title of it. Epiſtolæ B. Mariæ Virginis ad Meſſanenſes Veritas vindicata, i. e. "The Bleſſed Virgin Mary's Letter to the "people of Meſſina, proved to be genuine," in Folio. The Congregation of the Index having heard Father Inchofer's arguments, gave him leave to reprint that work with this title, Conjectatio ad Epiſtolam beatiſſimæ Mariæ Virginis ad Meſſanenſes. i. e. "A Conjecture "concerning the Bleſſed Virgin Mary's Letter to the "people of Meſſina." This ſecond edition was publiſhed at Viterbo in the year 1633. He got leave to ſtrike out and add to it what he pleaſed. S. Congregatio non ſolum permiſit eidem dictum opus de novo edere, mutato tamen juſtis de cauſis titulo in hunc modum, Conjectatio, &c. & quibuſdam magis explicatis ..... ſed etiam demendi & addendi ſi quæ viderentur, liberam & amplam facultatem permiſit (1). This gives us to underſtand, that provided one does not affirm too poſitively, that the Virgin Mary wrote to the inhabitants of Meſſina the letter which paſſes under her name, it is not unlawful to believe it, and to make others believe it alſo. A German writer (2) obſerves, that Baronius and Theophilus Raynaud are not of Inchofer's opinion with regard to that letter. I will not contradict what he aſſerts of Baronius; for though this Annaliſt does not mention particularly the pretended letter to the Meſſinians, yet he declares in the general, that all the letters, which it is pretended the Bleſſed Virgin wrote to ſome cities, muſt be looked upon as apocryphal. Traduntur & aliæ ab ipſa ad alias ſcriptæ civitates, quas cunctas, cum careant Eccleſiæ auctoritate, nonniſi in apocryphorum claſſem rejiciendas eſſe omnes facile judicabunt (3). i. e. "There are ſome other letters handed about written by her to other cities; "but as they are not ſupported by the authority of "the church, every one will eaſily judge, that they "muſt be placed amongſt the apocryphal pieces." But as for Theophilus Raynaud, he ought not to be quoted on this occaſion, ſince he only mentions the letter, which it is pretended the Bleſſed Virgin wrote to St. Ignatius, and that Saint's pretended anſwer (4). The German author is not more happy, when he quotes Rivetus (5), who without mentioning in the leaſt the letter to the Meſſinians, does only explode what has been reported concerning the epiſtolary correſpondence between the Bleſſed Virgin and St. Ignatius.

(1) Nath. Sotuel, Biblioth. Script. Societ. Jeſu. pag. 608.

(2) Placcius, de Pſeudonymis Jo. Rhodii, num. 59. pag. 44.

(3) Baron, ad ann. 48. num. 25.

(4) Theophil. Raynaudus, de malis & bonis Libris, num. 235. pag. m. 148.

(5) In Critico Sacro, lib. 2. cap. 1.

[B] The works of his that are extant.] I ſhall not repeat here what relates to his volume concerning the Virgin Mary's pretended letter to the Meſſinians. His other works are, Tractatus Syllepticus, in quo quid de terræ ſoliſque motu vel ſtatione ſecundum ſacrum Scripturam & SS. Patres ſentiendum, quave certitudine alterutra ſententia tenenda ſit, oſtenditur. i. e. "A Trea-"tiſe, in which is ſhewed what we ought to believe "concerning the motion or reſt of the Earth and the "Sun, according to the holy Scriptures, and the Fa-"thers, and with that certainty we muſt hold either "opinion." Printed at Rome in the year 1633, in 4to. De ſacra Latinitate, hoc eſt, de variis Linguæ Latinæ myſteriis, ex origine, progreſſu, fine, cæteraque inſtituti ſui ratione ad Evangelii prædicationem, Latinæ Eccleſiæ exaltationem, Romanique Imperii majeſtatem ſpectantibus. i. e. "Of the ſacred Latin tongue; that "is to ſay, of the ſeveral myſteries of the Latin "tongue, from its riſe, progreſs, deſign, and other "reaſons of its being uſed, relating to the preaching "of the Goſpel, to the exaltation of the Latin Church, "and to the Majeſty of the Roman Empire." Printed at Meſſina, in the year 1635, in 4to; and at Munich in the year 1638, in 8vo. Hiſtoria trium Magorum. i. e. "The Hiſtory of the three Wiſe Men." Printed at Rome in the year 1639. Annalium Eccleſiaſticorum Regni Hungariæ Tomus I. i. e. "The firſt "Volume of the Annals of the Church of the King-"dom of Hungary;" at Rome in 1644, folio. The Funeral Oration on the death of Nicholas Ricardi, a Dominican, and Maſter of the Sacred Palace. He publiſhed ſome other books, to which he did not put his name. Alia quædam ipſius prodierunt ſub alienis nominibus R. P. E. L. &c. & ſub nomine Academici Vertumnii, adjectum prælectionibus Joannis Baptiſtæ Corteſii Poëma in laudem Medicinæ & contra malos Medicos. i. e. "He had publiſhed ſome other works under "fictitious names, and there is a Poem of his in praiſe "of Phyſic, and againſt bad Phyſicians, under the "name of Vertumnius Academicus: it is added to John "Baptiſt Corteſius's Lectures."

(6) Sotuel, Biblioth. Societ. Jeſu. pag. 608.

thor of a Libel againſt the Jeſuits, intitled, Monarchia Solipſorum [C]. He was not well pleaſed with them (c).

(c) This appears from the following words of the Preface. Illud conſtat, niſi inter Solipſos rubiginaſſet, & copia & ſplendore inter ſummates literarum viros fuiſſe radiaturum. i. e. "It is certain that he would have gained a very great reputation amongſt the moſt "eminent men of Letters, had he not been forced to ruſt away amongſt the Solipſi, that is to ſay, thoſe men who live only for "themſelves."

[C] He is thought to be the author of a libel againſt the Jeſuits, intitled Monarchia Solipſorum.] The author of that libel (†) calls himſelf Lucius Cornelius Europæus. It was printed in Holland in the year 1648, juxta exemplar Venetum, according to the copy printed at Venice, as it is ſaid in the title-page; they added to it a key to explain the fictitious names mentioned therein. This work is aſcribed to Melchior Inchofer in the edition publiſhed at Venice in the year 1652 (7). Chriſtopher Pellerus, who relates this conjecture, adds alſo, that this German Jeſuit went to Rome after he had wrote that book, and never returned from thence. Monarchia Solipſorum quam perhibent ſcripſiſſe quempiam patrem ex Societate N. Inckhoferum Germanum, poſtea Romam profectum nunquam reverſum (8). i. e. "The Monarchy of the Solipſi, "which is ſaid to be written by a Father Jeſuit, "named N. Inckhofer, a German, who went afterwards to Rome, whence he never returned." He is miſtaken with regard to this journey to Rome; for it was a great while after Inchofer had left Germany, that he wrote that ſatyr: he wrote it only after he had bore great diſcontents in the order, the habit of which he took at Rome at the age of twenty three years. The paſſage I have quoted from Pellerus made Konig (9) give us two authors out of one. He mentions Melchior Inchofer, and Nicholas Inkoffer: To the former he aſcribes part of what Alegambe relates, and to the latter the Monarchy of the Solipſi. He quotes Chriſtopher Pellerus, but he makes him ſay more than he ſhould, namely, that this piece was compoſed in the year 1648. Pellerus does not ſay this. If Konig had remembred, that when we do not know a perſon's Chriſtian name, we uſe to put an N. inſtead of it, he would not have invented, on Pellerus's authority, a pretended Nicholas Inckoffer. He obſerves that others aſcribe that work to Scioppius. It is certain that Otto Tabor, a German Civilian, imagined that Scioppius might be the author of it; but he did not aſſert it poſitively. Lucius Cornelius Europæus, ſays he (10), ſive is ſit Gaſpar Scioppius, ſive quis alius ex genere Scriptorum ſatyricorum, in Monarchia quam dicit Solipſorum Leoni Allatio dedicata, &c. i. e. "Lucius "Cornelius Europeus, whether he be Jaſper Scioppius, "or any other of the ſatyrical writers, in the Monarchy of the Solipſi, as he calls it, dedicated to "Leo Allatius, &c." Decker (11), without exploding Pellerus's conjecture (12), or that of Tabor, offers us another, which is intirely groundleſs. He imagines that one Gabriel Bariacus Lermæus, a Gentleman of Languedoc, might be the author of that Monarchy of the Solipſi. We ſhall now quote two paſſages from Monſieur Arnauld, one of which will remove our doubts, and the other will acquaint us with Inchofer's deſign, and with the true meaning of the word Solipſi. One would think, ſays Monſieur Arnauld (13), that the Monarchia Solipſorum was written by Scioppius, becauſe we find it printed in Germany with ſome books, which were undoubtedly compoſed by that author. And yet IT IS CERTAIN that this Monarchy of the Solipſi is the work of a German Jeſuit, named Melchior Inchofer. We know where the original of a letter, written by a Spaniſh Jeſuit, who acknowledges this, and complains bitterly of it, is lodged. The other paſſage is as follows (14). It is well known, ſays Monſieur Arnauld to the Jeſuits, that it is your character to be eager in doing good, provided you do it ALONE, and no man has a ſhare in the glory of it but yourſelves. And if you will be ſincere, you muſt confeſs, that one of your Fathers, who wrote a book intitled Monarchia Solipſorum, was very well acquainted with your character. See Giſbert Voetius's Theſes (15).

There was a pretended Letter from Pope Innocent the XIIIth to the Emperor, diſperſed abroad in the year 1696; the Pope in that letter calls the Society of the Jeſuits Monarchiam Monopanthorum: upon which Father Papebroch made the following reflection. Forſitan quaſi μόνοι πάντα ſoli omnia velint eſſe & æſtimari Jeſuitæ, ſcilicet alludendo ad vetus ſcomma ſatirici cujuſdam commenti quo ſcripſit anonymus aliquis Monarchiam Solipſorum, veluti innuere volens quod Societas ſoli ſibi arrogare nitatur omnia (16). i. e. "Perhaps from "the Greek words μόνοι πάντα (alone all), as though "the Jeſuits pretended that they alone were ſufficient "for every thing, and muſt be eſteemed ſuch; for "this is an alluſion to a ſatyrical invention of an "anonymous writer, who publiſhed the Monarchy of "the Solipſi, as though he would hint thereby, that "the Society of the Jeſuits endeavoured to arrogate "every thing to themſelves alone."

(†) It was tranſlated into French and printed at Amſterdam in 12mo. The Tranſlator added ſome remarks, and ſeveral other pieces to it. The Preface contains a great many particulars concerning that work and its author. Addit. to the Amſt. edit.

(7) Vide Placcium, in Rhodianis, num. 59. pag. 43.

(8) Chriſtoph. Pellerus, in Politico ſcelerato impugnato, pag. 9. edit. 1665.

(9) Biblioth. vet. & nova, p. 417.

(10) Otto Tabor, in Præfat. ad Diſputationes de confrontatione, apud Placcium in Rhodianis, pag. 43.

(11) De Scriptis Adeſpotis, pag. 93. edit. 1686.

(12) There is Pecler, in the edition of Decker printed in 1686.

(13) Morale Pratique, tom. 3. pag. 686.

(14) Ibid. pag. 86.

(15) Vol. 3. pag. 685, 686.

(16) Papebroch. Elucid. Hiſtor. Actor. in Controverſia Carmelitica, cap. 10. pag. 138.

INNOCENT VIII, elected Pope in the year 1484, was of Genoa, and his name was John Baptiſt Cibo. Authors differ with regard to the nobility or meanneſs of this extraction [A]. But it is agreed that he was ſent to the Court of Naples in his youth, and that he waited on King Alphonſus. He went afterwards to Rome, and was one of the Cardinal of Bologna's ſervants; and this, I think, was the occaſion of his being promoted to the Biſhopric of Savona (a). Pope Sixtus IV, who had a great friendſhip for him, gave him the Biſhopric of Melfi, and afterwards a Cardinal's Cap. One of the firſt actions, which Innocent VIII did after he was raiſed to the Papal dignity, was his entering into a conſpiration againſt Ferdinand King of Naples with the Barons of that Kingdom. He ſent for Robert Sanſeverini to Rome, and conferred upon him the command of the army in the expedition againſt that Prince; but as he had no reaſons to be well

(a) You will find in Moreri, that Paul II gave him that Biſhopric.

[A] Authors differ with regard to the nobility or meanneſs of his extraction.] We ſhall ſee hereunder (1), that he had been a poor boy according to Volaterranus. Onuphrius Panvini aſſerts the ſame in one of his books (2), and ſuppoſes that he was born of a mean family, and that his father was a Phyſician. But he ſpeaks quite otherwiſe in another work (3); for he expatiates there upon the antientneſs and nobility of the houſe of Cibo, he makes Innocent VIII to be the ſon of Aaron Cibo, a Nobleman of Geneva, illuſtrious for his military actions, Governor of Naples under the Kings Renatus, and Alfonſus, and famous for the office of a Roman Senator, the functions of which he had gloriouſly performed (4). It is ſuppoſed (5), that Panvini corrected his former account upon reading the Funeral Oration on the death of Pope Innocent VIII, delivered by Leonelli, Biſhop of Concordia, who was ſure to ſpeak of Aaron Cibo's noble extraction and employments. It is a little ſurpriſing, that ſo learned an Hiſtorian as Panvini was, who was alſo a Monk, and lived ſoon after this Pope, ſhould have been unacquainted with the merit and great employments of Innocent VIII's father, and ſhould have known him rather as a Phyſician and Commoner, than in the glorious character of a Nobleman of Genoa, a Governor of Naples, and a Roman Senator. Several perſons will imagine, that when Panvini retracted his former aſſertions, he conformed not ſo much to the exact truth, as to the notions of the Preacher who made Innocent's Funeral Oration, a kind of diſcourſe which admits of flattery without meaſure. Let the reader judge of this what he pleaſes; but I would adviſe him to remember, that exaggerations are often made uſe of to diſgrace the former condition of thoſe, who riſe to the higheſt poſts (6).

(1) In the remark [E].

(2) In Commentario de Pontificibus & Cardinalibus.

(3) In Vita Innocentii VIII.

(4) See Spondanus, Annal. Eccleſ. ad ann. 1484, num. 5. pag. m. 180.

(5) Idem, ibid.

(6) See the remark [A] of the article TOUCHET.

well pleaſed with this General's conduct, he turned him out of his place, and made a treaty of peace with Ferdinand. The terms of this treaty were, that the King of Naples would pardon the rebels, and pay to the holy See the tribute which he owed; but he performed neither of theſe conditions, and rendered ineffectual all the meaſures which the Pope took, to get ſatisfaction for this infringement [B]. After this Innocent VIII would not engage any more in a war, and applied himſelf intirely to make the city of Rome reap the benefits of peace [C]. He took care to have proviſions plentiful and cheap in that city, and cauſed all robbers to be puniſhed ſeverely. He created new offices, the ſale of which brought him in large ſums of money; he was the firſt Pope who ever boaſted of his baſtards, and who loaded them with riches [D]. He was a handſome man,

[B] Ferdinand . . : . rendered ineffectual all the meaſures which the Pope took to get ſatisfaction for this infringement.] The author from whom I borrow this article, does not tell us, that Innocent VIII excommunicated King Ferdinand; he obſerves only the Pope's Deputies returned home without ſucceeding in their commiſſion. Quorum neutrum Ferdinandus quum poſtea minimè præſtaret, miſſus Petrus Vincentinus cameræ auditor audaciſſimus, una ſimul cum Jacobo Volaterrano Secretario Apoſtolico ac cubiculario viro prudente ad res repetendas re infecta revertit (7). i. e. "As Ferdinand performed neither of the conditions, Peter Vincentius, Auditor of the chamber, a very haughty man, being ſent with James Volaterranus, Apoſtolical Secretary, and Chamberlain to the Pope, a prudent man, to demand ſatisfaction, returned home without obtaining any thing." To ſupply Volaterranus's omiſſions, I ſhall tranſcribe here Coeffeteau's words. "As Ferdinand had not performed the conditions of the treaty he had made with him (the Pope) he ſent to aſk him the tribute which he owed to the church; but Ferdinand did not give his Embaſſadors much ſatisfaction, upon which the Pope thundered out a ſentence of excommunication againſt him, deprived him of his Kingdom, and declared Charles King of France lawful heir of it, in right of King Renatus of Sicily, and of his brother the Count of Maine (8)."

(7) Volaterranus, lib. 22. pag. 821.

(8) Coeffeteau, Réponſe au Miſtére d'Iniquité, pag. 1209.

[C] He would not engage any more in war, and applied himſelf intirely to make the city of Rome reap the benefits of the peace.] You will ſee here how difficult it is for a Pope to acquit himſelf of his functions to the ſatisfaction of mankind. For if the Popes are blamed, when they pretend to meddle with the political affairs of Europe, they are alſo blamed when they do not meddle with them, in which caſe it is aſſerted, that they are of no uſe to the public good. Guicciardini has given us this notion of Innocent VIII. He adds indeed an obſervation to it, which ſoftens his cenſure; for he obſerves, that the idleneſs, in which the Pope indulged himſelf, was attended with this good effect, namely, that nothing was apprehended from him that could diſturb the tranquillity of Italy. You will ſee this fact related with a parentheſis of a Proteſtant Divine. "Guicciardini gives us the following character of Innocent VIII. His life, which otherwiſe was of no uſe to the public (a noble qualification in a Pope), was however attended with this advantage, that having on a ſudden laid down his arms, which he had unluckily taken up in the beginning of his Pontificate, againſt Ferdinand, at the inſtigation of ſeveral Barons of the Kingdom of Naples, he indulged himſelf afterwards only in IDLE PLEASURES; ſo that he had not the leaſt thought nor deſign, neither for his own, nor for his relation's advantage, that could in the leaſt diſturb the tranquillity of Italy (9)." They, who will take notice of the parentheſis, will eaſily underſtand, that if I chooſe rather to quote Rivet's words, than Guicciardini's original, it is becauſe they are a proof of my aſſertion. Would to God that men committed no other faults but ſuch as promote the public tranquillity!

(9) Rivet, Remarques ſur la Réponſe au Myſtére d'Iniquité, Part 2. pag. 626, 627. What he quotes from Guicciardini is towards the beginning of the 1ſt book.

[D] He was the firſt Pope that boaſted of his baſtards, and who loaded them with riches] Volaterranus ſpeaks of it thus: Pontificum etiam primus qui novum & ipſe exemplum introduceret palam liberos nothos jactandi, ac ſoluta omni antiqua diſciplina divitiis eos omnibus cumulandi (10). i. e. "He was alſo the firſt Pope who gave a new example of boaſting publickly of his baſtard children, and loading them with all ſorts of riches, having entirely relaxed the antient diſcipline." He mentions only one ſon and one daughter of this Pope; and he obſerves, that the former obtained from his father ſome cities in the neighbourhood of Rome, with the advantage of being ſon-in-law to Laurence of Medicis; and that he married his daughter (11) to a Genoeſe, and gave her a very great portion (12). Moreri has blundered here: he aſſerts, that Innocent VIII left two ſons behind him very rich, whom he had got before he was raiſed to the Papal See. This is a miſtake both with regard to the ſex and to the number of theſe baſtards; there were ſixteen of them, eight ſons and eight daughters, upon which this epigram was made:

(10) Volaterran. lib. 22. pag. 822.

(11) Her name was Theodorina.

(12) Gerardo Uſumari Gennenſi nuptam opibus per quam magnis ornavit. Volaterran. lib. 22. pag. 821.

Quid quæris teſtes, ſit mas an fœmina Cibo,
Reſpice natorum, pignora certa, gregem:
Octo nocens pueros genuit, totidemque puellas.
Hunc merito poterit dicere Roma patrem.

"Why would you inquire for witneſſes, to know whether Cibo is a man, or a woman? Do but look upon the number of his children; they are a certain proof of what he is: he has wickedly begotten eight boys, and as many girls; ſo that Rome may juſtly call him father."

According to Monſieur du Pleſſis (13), theſe four verſes are an epitaph, which Marcellus compoſed for Innocent VIII; but I do not meet with them in my edition (14) of that Poet's works; nor do I think that they were omitted out of regard to the Court of Rome; for they have left the following verſes in it.

(13) Du Pleſſis Mornai Myſtere d'Iniquité, pag. 559.

(14) Printed at Spires in the year 1595.

Epitaph. Innocentii Octavi.
Spurcities, gula, avaritia, atque ignavia deſes
Hoc Octave jacent quo tegeris tumulo (15).

(15) Marcell. Epigram. lib. 4. pag. m. 84.

"The Epitaph of Innocent the Eighth. Villainy, gluttony, covetouſneſs, and ſlothful lazineſs lie here in this tomb, Innocent, in which you are buried."

We alſo meet there with the following epigram.

De Xyſto & hærede.
Exhauſit Xyſtus bellis & cædibus urbem;
Tercentena hæres reſtituit ſobole (16).

(16) Idem, lib. 3. pag. 60.

"On Pope Sixtus and his ſucceſſor. Sixtus has drained the City of men by wars and murders: his ſucceſſor has peopled it again with three hundred children of his own."

Mr. du Pleſſis aſſerts, that the former of theſe two diſtichs is the concluſion of the epitaph, or four lines, which I have tranſcribed in the firſt place. I do not know whether or not he made uſe of an edition different from mine, or whether he followed ſome inaccurate tranſcriber; but I am certain that the author of the Well-grounded prepoſſeſſions againſt Popery aſſerted without any examination (17), that the character of Pope Innocent VIII was expreſſed after his death in ſix Latin verſes, which he tranſcribes. They are an epigram, the laſt diſtich of which is the epitaph, which is really to be met with amongſt Marullus's Poems. The two firſt diſtichs are thoſe four lines which are not in my edition, neither before the epitaph nor in any other place. Mr. Zuinger (18) Profeſſor at Baſil, ſuppoſes that theſe ſix lines are two of Marullus's Epigrams; however he has ſhewed more good ſenſe than the author of the Prepoſſeſſions; he has not joined together

(17) Jurieu, Préjugez Legitimes, Part 1. pag. 247.

(18) Jo. Zuinger, de Feſto Corporis Chriſti, pag. 135.

man, polite to an exceſs, but covetous, ignorant, and of an indifferent genius [E]. He died in July 1492, at the age of ſixty. He had received a conſiderable preſent from the Sultan, namely the head of the ſpear, with which our Lord's ſide had been pierced [F]. It together what ought to be ſeparated. As for the following epigram of Sannazar,

Innocuo priſcos æquum eſt debere Quirites,
Progenie exhauſtam reſtituit patriam,

" The antient Romans are juſtly obligated to Inno-
" cent, ſince he has peopled again with his own chil" dren their country, which was drained of men."

Mr. Zuinger, I ſay, is in the right to quote this epigram as Sannazar's, for it is really to be met amongſt his Poems (19). Coeffeteau was in a great perplexity when he came to anſwer that part of Monſieur du Pleſſis's book, which relates to Pope Innocent's baſtards. Let us tranſcribe Coeffeteau's words. " Du Pleſſis, " not being able to aſperſe Innocent with regard to " his lawful marriage (for he had been married be- " fore he was choſen Pope) quotes an obſcure writer, " who aſſerts that this Pope was the firſt that took a " pride in having baſtards. And to confirm this aſ- " ſertion, he tranſcribes an epitaph written by Marul- " lus, who yet ſpeaks there only of the children which " Innocent had got in lawful marriage. Now none of " theſe authors are worthy to be credited, and they all " deſerve to be ſeverely puniſhed for the licentiouſ- " neſs with which they wrote, having taken li- " berty thus to aſperſe with their calumnies the ſu- " preme head of the church. And indeed the good " Hiſtorians do not accuſe Innocent VIII of any of " thoſe wickedneſſes, which the obſcene Poet Marul- " lus charges him with. However we are willing to " let him enjoy the privileges of his profeſſion (20)." The abſurdity of this anſwer of Coeffeteau, will plainly appear by Rivet's reply. " This Pope's pleaſures, " ſays he, had not always been idle, for he got a " great many children. If it had been in lawful " marriage, before he was a Prieſt, he could not " have been blamed for it. And if Coeffeteau had " quoted credible authors to prove this aſſertion, he " would have vindicated the Pope's memory to ſome " purpoſe. But I do not meet with any author who " aſſerted that this Pope had been married. And as " for the writer who obſerves, that he was the firſt " Pope who gave a new example of boaſting publickly " of his baſtard children, he is no obſcure writer, as " my adverſary would make us believe, but that Vo- " laterranus, whom not long ago he called a great " man, and an orthodox writer . . . . Coeffeteau could " not but know this author, but he diſſembled it, " and fell only upon the poor Poet Marullus, as tho' " he had been the inventor of that ſtory, and he calls " him an obſcene Poet. But let him conſult his Poſſe- " vinus, who will tell him that this Marullus (*) lived " in the Church of Rome with the reputation of a " pious man, and his works have often been printed " at Antwerp, at Cologne, and elſewhere (21)." I obſerve that there is a ſin of commiſſion, and not of omiſſion, in theſe words of Rivet. The latter is his not cenſuring Coeffeteau's audaciouſneſs, with regard to Marullus's verſes (22) : He aſſerts that this Poet ſpeaks only of the children which Innocent had got in a lawful marriage. But in this caſe, what can be the ſenſe of the word nocens (criminal), which we read in the third line ? Does it not ſignify that he became a father in a criminal manner ? The ſin of commiſſion conſiſts in his pretending that Marullus of Spalato, whom Poſſevinus commended, is the ſame Marullus, whoſe poems are ſo well known. They are two different perſons.

[E] He was a handſome man, polite to an exceſs ; but covetous, ignorant, of an indifferent genius.] Let us quote a Roman Catholic author, for a Proteſtant might be excepted againſt. Fuit Innocentius corpore excelſo, ac candido, decoroque : ingenio tardo, ac literis procul (23). i. e. " Innocent was tall, fair and handſome, " but of a ſlow genius, and had no inclination for " literature." He had ſaid a little before (24) : Pauper olim puer, forma tamen præſtanti inter Alfonſi regis Siciliæ miniſtros (25) inde Romam veniens in contubernio Philippi Cardinalis Bononienſis fuit . . . . . Quum Xyſto plurimum dilectus eſſet ob dulces mores & humanitatem qua omnes uſque ad vitium ſuperavit. Nam & infimæ conditionis homines ſæpe exoſculabatur, amplectebaturque. Verum quum omnibus blandus eſſet, nemini tamen benignus, innatamque avaritiam jocis atque dicteriis tranſigebat. i. e. " Formerly when he was a poor boy " but very handſome, he was one of the under-ſer- " vants of Alfonſus King of Sicily. He went after- " wards to Rome, and lived in the family of Philip " Cardinal of Bologna . . . . Pope Sixtus had a great " friendſhip for him on account of his ſweet temper, " and politeneſs, in which he excelled all others, " even to an exceſs. For he would often kiſs and em- " brace even perſons of the meaneſt condition. But tho' " he was civil to all, yet he was kind to none, and " his jokes and jeſts he diſguiſed that covetouſneſs, " which was born with him." Monſieur du Pleſſis Mornai imagined, that Volaterranus hinted there by modeſt expreſſions the infamy of Innocent VIII's private life (26). Upon which Coeffeteau fell into a paſſion. " It is a ſtrange thing, ſays he (27), that he " would reckon his natural beauty as a crime, and " ſuſpect him from thence of that ſin, which was pu- " niſhed with fire from heaven ; which againſt all the " rules of charity, and even againſt all the rules of " that civil behaviour we owe to each other, he would " confirm by this Prelate's great affability, which " made him embrace even perſons of the meaneſt con- " dition. Reader, muſt not a man's mind be ex- " tremely corrupted by hereſy, to paſs ſo odious a " judgment on a Pope, who was commendable for his " ſingular innocence ?

[F] He had received from the Sultan . . . . the head of the ſpear, with which our Lord's ſide had been pierced.] Bajazet II dreading his brother, even after he had obliged him to retire to Rhodes, tried all poſſible means to perſuade the Grand Maſter, Peter d'Aubuſſon, to deliver him up to him, or at leaſt to prevent him from having any correſpondence with the Turks. The Grand-Maſter engaged himſelf upon very advantageous terms to have him well guarded. The articles of this agreement were ſigned December 8, 1482 (28). He ſuffered him to go into France ſome time after, and conſented at laſt that Innocent VIII ſhould have him in his power, and receive the money which Bajazet paid (29). He obtained a Cardinal's cap as a reward for it, and took the precaution to ſhelter himſelf under the authority of the King of France ; for it was the French Court that delivered the Turkiſh Prince into the hands of the Pope's Embaſſadors in the year 1488 (30). Bajazet had made the King of France very conſiderable offers, " only to prevail upon him to keep " the young Prince in his own Kingdom in ſafe cuſ- " tody, ſo that it might not be in his power to make " his eſcape, to return into his own country, and be- " gin a new war there. Theſe offers were, that he " would give him all the relics of God our Creator, " of the Apoſtles, of the male and female Saints, " which his late father Mahomet had met with at " Conſtantinople, when he took that city, and in all " the other cities which he had conquered from the " Chriſtians ; he repeated the ſame offers, which he " had already made to the Grand-Maſter of Rhodes, " namely, that he would do his beſt endeavours to " conquer the Holy Land, and to deliver it up to the " King ; he offered him alſo a very conſiderable pen- " ſion for his maintenance (31)." Bajazet's Letter came too late : it had already been promiſed to commit his brother to the care and keeping of Innocent VIII. As ſoon as he was acquainted with this, he wrote to the Pope, and endeavoured to prevail upon him by preſents, and particularly by offering him the head of the ſpear, which had pierced the ſide of our Lord, which he had already offered to the Grand-Maſter, and he aſſured him, that he would punctually pay him 40000 ducats yearly, on condition that he would not let him go away for whatſoever pretence it might be (32). Volaterranus mentions this ; it is proper to tranſcribe the whole paſſage : the reader will meet with other particulars in it, he will ſee, that Innocent VIII was buried near the ſhrine in which was contained the head of the ſpear found at Antioch at the time of the cruſades (33).

Sepultus

(19) It is the 38th of the 1ſt book, pag. 124. of the edition publiſhed at Amſterdam in the year 1689.

(*) Marcus Marullus Spalatinus.

(20) Coeffeteau, Reponſe au Myſtére d'Iniquité, pag. 1209.

(21) Rivet, Remarques ſur la Réponſe au Myſtére d'Iniquite, pag. 627.

(22) That is to ſay the verſes which he confeſſed were written by Marullus.

(23) Volaterran. lib. 22. pag. 821.

(24) Idem, ibid. pag. 820.

(25) The Sieur de Rocolles, in pag. 123. of his Vie du Sultan Gemes, ſays that he waited on an Officer of Alfonſus's Court ; and in the next page that he had been a footman in his youth.

(26) Du Pleſſis Mornai, Myſtere d'Iniquite, pag. 558.

(27) Coeffeteau, Reponſe au Myſtere d'Iniquite, pag. 1208.

(28) See Rocolles, Vie du Sultan Gemes, p. 91.

(29) Bajazet paid 40000 ducats yearly, beſides 35000 for his brother's maintenance. Ibid. pag. 92.

(30) Ibid. pag. 126.

(31) Rocolles, Vie du Sultan Gemes, pag. 127, 128.

(32) Ibid. pag. 142.

(33) See the Hiſtoire des Croiſades, written by the Jeſuit Maimbourg, lib. 2. pag. 178, &c. of the Dutch edition, under the year 1089.

(b) Taken from Volaterran. lib. 22. pag. m. 820, & ſeq.

It is reported, that the title which had been put on the croſs was found at Rome under his reign (b). See in Father Gretſer how the Roman Catholics endeavour to anſwer the objections that are urged to prove that this title is ſpurious (c).

(c) Gretſer, Exam Myſterii Pleſſæani, pag. 549, & ult.

Sepultus in Baſilica Petri æreo monumento juxta arcam ab eo deſignatam, in qua ferrum haſtæ conditur quod latus dominicum perfodit. Hoc ſiquidem olim apud ædem ſancti Andreæ Antiochia repertum, capta jam civitate, Bohemundus in prælio corripiens, arcem quæ expugnari non poterat illico cepit, ſimul & hoſtium L. milia prodigioſe trucidavit. Inde Conſtantinopolim dono imperatori advectum. Poſtremo Turca illi ſuccedens, Innocentio ut eum fratris captivi cauſa leniret, pro munere miſerat (34). i. e. "He is buried in St. Peter's church, under a braſs "tomb, near the ſhrine which he had appointed, and "in which is contained the head of the ſpear, which "pierced our Lord's ſide. It had been formerly found "in St. Andrew's church at Antioch, and that city "being taken, Boemundus ſeized upon this relic du-"ring the battle, upon which the fort, which till then "could not be maſtered, was immediately taken, and "50000 men were ſlain by Boemundus. This relic "was carried thence to Conſtantinople, the Emperor "having made a preſent of it to that city. The Turk "ſucceeding him afterwards, ſent it as a preſent to "Innocent, with a deſign to draw him over to his "intereſt, on account of his brother who was Inno-"cent's priſoner." See the article VIGERIUS (35).

(94) Volaterran. lib. 22. pag. 821, 822.

(35) Remark [A].

INNOCENT XI, created Pope September the 21ſt 1676, was of Como in Lombardy; his name was Benedict Odeſchalchi, as you may ſee in Moreri's Dictionary, where you will alſo meet with ſeveral other particulars, which for that reaſon I ſhall omit here. He bore arms in his youth [A]; and left them afterwards to enter into the Eccleſiaſtical State. He went to ſtudy at Naples, where he commenced Doctor; after which he retired to Rome, under Pope Urban VIII, who appointed him firſt Apoſtolic Secretary. He acquitted himſelf ſo well of that employment, that he was promoted to that of Preſident of the Apoſtolic Chamber, and then to that of Apoſtolic Commiſſary, and Governor of the Marca di Roma. He was made a Cardinal March the 6th 1645, and ſoon after he was ſent Legate to Ferrara, and then promoted to the Biſhopric of Novara (a). The French reported that his liberality and court artifices procured him the Cardinal's Cap, by Donna Olympia's credit [B]; but they muſt confeſs that he appeared to have a great averſion for a voluptuous life. He was a man of ſtrict morals, and had the reputation of a religious man. He favoured the Janſeniſts much more than his predeceſſors had done; which made the Janſeniſts adhere to the cauſe of the Pope with more zeal than they had done before [C]. He gave offence to an infinite number of perſons, by [A] He bore arms in his youth.] Here follows what we read in the pamphlet of ſixteen pages (1). "Benedict therefore had a mind in his younger days "to exert himſelf in the profeſſion of a ſoldier, for he "had a great deal of courage and bravery, though he "was not very tall; and as if he had foreſeen the "wars in which he was to be engaged in his old age, "he deſired chiefly to improve himſelf in the know-"ledge of the art of war, that he might afterwards "carry it on to an advantage in the church militant." The reaſoning in theſe words is not much better than the ſtyle; but this is out of the queſtion here. Let us only obſerve, that this author gives us to underſtand that his Benedict bore arms only in Poland. And yet other writers aſſert (2), that he alſo bore arms in Flanders under the Spaniards againſt the French, and that he was wounded there with a muſket-ſhot in his right ſhoulder, of which he continued indiſpoſed all his life-time. I have read in I know not what news-writer, that Innocent XI's indignation againſt France was owing to an affront he received from a certain Frenchman in the army, and which Benedict Odeſchalchi ſuffered to go unpuniſhed, but of which he revenged himſelf on the whole French nation, when he came to be Pope.

(a) Taken from a piece containing but 16 pages in 4to, and intitled, La Vie d'Innocent XI, Pape de Rome, écrite par D. G. B. P. à l'Illuſtre Seigneur le Baron Giovannelli, Couſin de ſa Sainctété.

(1) See the title of it in the margin of the text of this article, quotation (a).

(2) Mercure Galant, fur Auguſt 1689.

[B] His liberality and court-artifices procured him the Cardinal's cap, by Donna Olympia's credit.] See the Mercure Galant (3); you will find there, that our Benedict Odeſchalchi, who was the ſon of a rich Banker of Como, uſed to game with Donna Olympia, and loſt his money deſignedly out of complaiſance to that woman. The mentioning of a Banker calls to my mind the following paſſage in the Menagiana (4). "Pope "Innocent XI was a Banker's ſon: he was elected "Pope on St. Matthew's-day; and that very day "Paſquin ſaid, Invenerunt hominem ſedentem in te-"lonio. i. e. "They have met with a man ſitting at "the receit of cuſtom."

(3) Ibid.

(4) Page 185. of the 1ſt edition printed in Holland.

We meet with the following paſſage in a ſmall pamphlet printed at Avignon for John Bramereau in the year 1652, which is intitled, La juſte Balance des Cardinaux vivans. i. e. "A true Balance of the Car-"dinals now living." "After the death of Urban VIII, "Odeſchalchi began to make his court to Donna O-"lympia, Innocent X's niece (5), and after he had "given her ſeveral entertainments, ſhe began to make "intereſt for him very zealouſly, particularly for an "action which this prelate did, and which deſerves to "be related. As he was gone to pay her a viſit, in "the beginning of the reign of her uncle (6) Pope "Innocent X, it happened that a Silver-ſmith came to "her houſe to ſhew her a very rich and beautiful ſilver "cheſt which he had to ſell. After ſhe had examined "it ſome time ſhe ſaid, in the preſence of Odeſchal-"chi and of ſeveral Lords, who heard her anſwer, "that it was a beautiful piece of plate, but as ſhe "was a poor widow, ſhe could not go to the price of "it: having ſaid this ſhe retired into her chamber. "Odeſchalchi called the Silver-ſmith immediately, "aſked him the price of that piece of plate, and "agreed with him to buy it for eight thouſand crowns, "after which, without more words, he ſent it with a "compliment to Donna Olympia, who ſeeing ſo fine a "preſent, wondered at this extraordinary action, and "went immediately to meet the Pope, and aſked him "the poſt of Clerk to the Chamber as a preſent for the "prelate, and afterwards a Cardinal's cap, which he "obtained alſo by Cardinal Palotta's interceſſion." I tranſcribe theſe words according to the copy which has been communicated to me (7). I have the ſame book in Italian; it is intitled La giuſta Statera de' Porporati, and was printed at Geneva in the year 1650. I have examined it, and met in it not only with the paſſage you have juſt now read, but alſo with ſome other particulars, namely, that our Benedict Odeſchalchi had paid his attendance to Don Barberini, in order to be promoted to the poſt of Clerk of the Chamber, that he had paid him the money that is required, and that nevertheleſs he could not compaſs his deſign; that he was a man of an indifferent underſtanding (8), and that though he had ſpent large ſums of money, yet he was a rich and liberal Cardinal; that when he was but a Biſhop, he loved to make parties of pleaſure, and was very fond of plays, and entertainments, but that he led a very retired life after he was a Cardinal.

(5) It ſhould have been ſiſter-in-law, for this is the ſenſe of the word cognata, which is in the Italian original.

(6) It ſhould be her brother-in-law.

(7) By Monſieur Pillardy, whom I have mentioned above, quotation (e) of the article GLEICHEN.

(8) E ſogetto di mediocre intelligenza.

[C] The Janſeniſts adhered to the cauſe of the Popes with more zeal, than they had done before.] This is what Monſieur Talon cenſures them for in the famous plea he made againſt Innocent XI, January 23, 1688. "It by ſuppreſſing an office of the Immaculate Conception, and ſeveral Indulgences. None but the Janſeniſts were pleaſed with this in France. They diſperſed his two decrees, and added ſome remarks to them [D]. I do not believe that his prohibiting ſeverely to pay any honour to the name and bones of Anthony Cala [E] was generally approved. He ſhewed an inflexible obſtinacy in his conteſts with France, by which he convinced all the world, that perſons who pretend to a ſtrict morality, exceed all others when they deſign to revenge themſelves [F]. It is pretended that a voluptuous Pope, but who at the (9) Talon, Plaidoyer, pag. 42. of the Dutch edition.

" It is a ſtrange thing, ſays he (9), that the Pope, " whoſe chief care ought to be to keep our faith un- " corrupted, and to prevent the ſpreading of new opi- " nions, ſhould not have ceaſed, ſince he is raiſed to " St. Peter's See, to keep a correſpondence with thoſe, " who publickly profeſs themſelves to be the followers " of Janſenius, whoſe doctrine all his predeceſſors " have condemned. He has loaded them with fa- " vours, he has made their elogies, he has declared " himſelf their protector; and this dangerous faction, " which during the ſpace of thirty years has omitted " nothing that could leſſen the authority of all the " ſpiritual and temporal ſuperiors, who would not " favour it, does now raiſe altars to the Pope, be- " cauſe he ſupports and encourages its cabal, which " would again have diſturbed the peace of the church, " had not its progreſs been ſtopped by the prudence " and indefatigable labours of a Prince, ſent by Hea- " ven to be the protector and defender of the faith." I do not think that any Janſeniſt ever undertook to write a vindication of the four propoſitions agreed upon by the French Clergy in the year 1682, againſt which the ſupporters of the Italian doctrines have exclaimed ſo loudly, and publiſhed ſo many books. If the ſame thing had happened under Pope Innocent X, or Alexander VII, it is certain that the Janſeniſts would have compoſed a thouſand volumes to vindicate the deciſions of the clergy, and to refute the writings of the Italians. The weakneſs of man appears in every thing; the rules of our conduct differ according to the times we live in, and as we happen to be well or ill diſpoſed towards ſome perſons. The ſame doctrines, which we ſpare out of gratitude towards a benefactor, are cenſured and exploded out of reſentment againſt an oppreſſor.

[D] . . They diſperſed two of his decrees, and added ſome remarks to them.] The one was given at Rome February the 17th 1678, and condemns the book intitled Officio dell' immaculata concettione della Sanctiſſima Vergine noſtra Signora, approvato dal ſommo Pontefice Paolo V, il quale à chi devotamente lo recitarà concede indulgenza di cento giorni, come appariſce nel ſuo breve dato in Roma li x. Juglio M DC XV. in Milano per Franceſco Vigone. i. e. " The Office of the Immaculate Conception of " the moſt bleſſed Virgin our Lady, approved by Pope " Paul V, who grants an Indulgence for an hundred " days, to thoſe who repeat it with devotion, as ap- " pears by his Brief dated from Rome July the 10th, " 1615. Printed at Milan, for Francis Vigone." The other decree was given at Rome March the 17th 1678, and abrogates a great many indulgences. The Janſeniſts took care to have theſe two decrees ſecretly printed in France, and added ſome rules to it, by which the readers might know how uſeful they were; they are made up of a collection of paſſages. It will be of ſome uſe to tranſcribe here the reflection of a Jeſuit concerning the eager zeal of the Janſeniſts with regard to theſe decrees, and concerning the little account they make of the Pope's conſtitutions againſt Janſenius. " Some years ago they put into the Index at Rome an " Italian book printed at Milan, which contains the " office of the Immaculate Conception of the Mo- " ther of God. The prohibition did not relate to the " office of the Conception, which has been a long " while known and admitted in the Church, and " which has been again approved ſince by Innocent XI. " But this decree related to ſome other matters which " are either falſe or raſh, and which happened to be " printed with the ſame book: and beſides the decree " was made for Italy only, and not for the reſt of the " world, where this little book could not certainly " be publiſhed. And yet this decree was immediately " printed and publiſhed both in Latin and in French " by ſome perſons of that party (the Janſeniſts) with " a rhapſody of paſſages which were nothing to the " purpoſe, and deſigned only to make it ſwell to the " bulk of a conſiderable pamphlet. It was diſperſed, " I ſay, through all France and the Low-Countries " with as much care and diligence as though it had " been a Canon of ſome General Council upon a moſt " important doctrine of religion; and it is well known " to what an exceſs ſome of their Ghoſtly Fathers " carried their inconſiderate zeal. Thus you ſee how " far theſe Gentlemen know how to ſubmit to the or- " ders of the Church, when they pleaſe. Would not " this make us think, that as ſoon as the Pope (10) " ſhould prohibit the tranſlation of the New Teſta- " ment publiſhed at Mons, they would no longer diſ- " perſe it nor recommend it to the world? And had we " not reaſon to expect, that they would do no leſs " with regard to his new decree in favour of the office " of the Conception, than they had done for the firſt, " which I have mentioned? But we ſhould have been " very much diſappointed in our expectations. They " act upon other principles with regard to thoſe things, " in which they are themſelves concerned (11).

(10) He means Innocent XI, who had condemned the Tranſlation printed at Mons.

(11) Father Le Tellier, Obſervations ſur la nouvelle Defenſe de la Verſion de Mons, pag. 422.

[F] He prohibited the paying any honour to the name and bones of Anthony Cala.] This man had been a long time venerated as an holy Hermit in the Kingdom of Naples; but Innocent XI in the year 1680 commanded to ſuppreſs all that worſhip, and ordered to carry Anthony Cala's bones into a common Church-yard, to be there mixed with the other bones, and never to be carried off again. He alſo ordered to remove his images, clothes and other relicks from all conſecrated places (12). Father Papebroch quotes this inſtance to juſtify the liberty he took to ſuppreſs ſome ſaints.

(12) See Father Papebroch, in Reſponſ. ad Exhibitionem Error, pag. 18, 19.

[F] When they deſign to revenge themſelves.] The Court of France under Lewis XIV and the Court of Rome under Innocent XI were acted upon by the ſame ſpirit of haughtineſs and inflexibility, and have thus preſented all Europe with a long ſcene in which they tried which of the two would gain the greateſt reputation with regard to ſuch a ſpirit. They vied with each other who would be moſt openly revenged. But at leaſt the civil world was obliged to yield to the Church. The Pope ſhewed that it is not without reaſon he ſtyles himſelf the Vicegerent of God upon Earth; of God, I ſay, who keeps to himſelf the right of revenge (13), and declares that to him belongeth vengeance, and that he will take it. The Pope as Lieutenant of the God of Vengeance, has admirably well aſſerted the rights and privileges of that noble Lieutenancy. I do not admit of the thoughts of thoſe ſatyrical wits, who pretend that in matters of revenge laymen are but unſkilful beginners, if compared with Clergymen; but there have been few controverſies between the civil world and the Church, in which the Popes have not at laſt gained the upperhand, and been much beyond the laymen in point of revenge. They are the Vicars and Proxies of God, who has kept vengeance to himſelf; which is ſaying all that can be ſaid. If my memory does not fail me, the firſt ſtep, which exaſperated the Court of France, was the protection which Innocent XI granted to ſome French Biſhops (14) who were perſecuted becauſe they would not conſent to the extenſion of the Regale. The reaſon why the Court of France was ſo angry, was that the briefs of Pope Innocent XI (15) in behalf of theſe Biſhops contained very ſtrong and ſmart expreſſions. When they had obſerved this haughtineſs, they reſolved to make uſe of the moſt effectual means to vex him. The French Clergy delivered (16) their opinions concerning the power of the Church, and drew up four propoſitions upon this ſubject, by which the Pope's power is confined within ſuch narrow bounds, as are very odious to the Court of Rome. But after all this was no new doctrine; the Clergy determined nothing but what was agreeable to the maxims of the Church of France, and what the Sorbonne had taught an hundred times over. Men might therefore have imagined that any other Pope would not have taken offence at it, and that

(13) Deut. xxxii. 35.

(14) See a Catalogue of ſeveral other reaſons of diſcontent which the Court of France had, and which were poſterior to this, in the Anſwer to the Marquiſs of Lowardin's Proteſt, pag. m 97, &c.

(15) Directed to the King of France in the year 1678, and in the year 1679.

(16) In the year 1682.

the ſame time had known how to make his own private paſſions a ſacrifice to political views, had been much more uſeful to the Roman Catholic party [G]. The French are very Innocent XI would perhaps conceal his grief; but in order to put him under a neceſſity to confeſs, that he had received a very great affront, the determinations of the Clergy were propoſed, by the King's authority, as a doctrine, which no perſon whatſoever would be ſuffered to contradict, and which all they, who deſigned to take their degrees in Divinity or in the Canon Law, and commence Doctors, would be obliged to hold and maintain. Thoſe propoſitions were aſſerted by the Rector of the Univerſity of Paris in a public diſputation, at which the Archbiſhop of Paris preſided, and in which the diſputant was in all his formalities as Rector, that it might appear it was the whole body of the Univerſity, repreſented by the head of it, that aſſerted theſe propoſitions. The Theſis was poſted up at the door of the Nuncio's houſe, in ſpite of all the oppoſition he pretended to make againſt it. The Pope ſhewed his reſentment openly againſt the Clergy; he made a ſevere anſwer to a letter he received from them, and would never grant bulls to thoſe who had been preſent at the Aſſembly held in the year 1682. He abrogated all the immunities of the French Embaſſador, as well as thoſe of the others, and he would never receive the Marqueſs de Lavardin who was ſent Embaſſador to him (27). Hereupon France did a bold action: that Embaſſador entered Rome in a manner ſword in hand, and having taken poſſeſſion of his privileged quarters, he cauſed it to be guarded as though it had been a ſtrong hold (18). The Pope, without ſhewing any concern, revenged himſelf in a ſurpriſing manner; he ſhut up St. Lewis's Church, becauſe the Marquiſs of Lavardin had been ſuffered to come into it; he excommunicated that Embaſſador, and perſiſted in his reſolution not to acknowledge him as ſuch.

(17) In the year 1687.

(18) See Mr. Leti, Monarchie Univerſelle, Part 2. pag. 346, &c.

Things were in that paſs, when his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, obſerving that the continuing of theſe diſputes would be detrimental to him, ſent ſecretly to Rome a perſon whom he could truſt, and to whom he gave a credential letter written in his own hand for his Holineſs (19). This perſon was to acquaint the Pope with the King's moſt ſecret intentions. But the Pope would neither receive his letter, nor give him audience. Whereupon the King wrote another letter to Cardinal d'Etrée, which was communicated to the other Cardinals. His Majeſty complained therein of the Pope's behaviour, and ſhewed particularly what prejudice all Europe and the Church might receive from what the Pope had already done againſt the Cardinal of Furſtenberg. To this partiality he aſcribed the meaſures that were taking againſt King James in favour of the Proteſtant Religion, &c. This letter being diſperſed through the city of Rome was perhaps a new reaſon, which determined the Pope to ſupport more and more the cauſe of Prince Clement of Bavaria againſt the Cardinal of Furſtenberg. Now by giving this Cardinal the excluſion he revenged himſelf fully of all the affronts he might have received: he robbed the French King of the advantage of being the ſole arbiter of peace and war, and forced him, whether he would or not, to engage in a war againſt all Europe. He perceived very ſoon what were the conſequences of this conduct; and though he did not live long after ſo dreadful a revenge, yet he lived long enough to have the ſatisfaction of ſeeing France attacked by ſo many enemies, that it was a general opinion ſhe muſt abſolutely ſink and be undone at the very firſt campaign. Who will ſay then that the Church did not get the victory over the civil world in a long trial who ſhould better be revenged? If Alexander the Great had been a Roman Catholic, he had found it a very difficult matter in a ſtruggle with the Pope to make him ſay the words which he forced from the Prieſteſs of Delphos; My Son, thou art invincible. Delphos invifit, Apollinem de eventu belli, quod moliebatur, conſulturus. Sed Virgo fatidica negabat, per eos dies adiri deum fas eſſe; donec ipſe eo profectus, vi conripuit virginem, & ad templum traxit. Sed quum inter eundum illa patrium morem pertinacia regis victum reputans, exclamaſſet, invictus es, fili; accipere omen dixit: nec alio oraculo ſibi opus eſſe (20). "Alexander went to Delphos to conſult Apollo about "the war which he deſigned to undertake. But the "Virgin Propheteſs told him it was not lawful to "conſult the God in thoſe days. Wherefore he went "thither himſelf, took her by force, and dragged "her to the temple. As they went along ſhe conſi- "dered that that King's obſtinacy made her break "through the cuſtom of their anceſtors, and ſhe cried "out, My ſon, thou art invincible. I accept the omen, "ſaid he, nor have I occaſion for any other oracle."

(19) Lettre du Roy de France au Cardinal de Etrée, dated Sept. 6, 1688. It is inſerted in Mr. Leti's Monarchie Univerſelle, Part 2. pag. 447, &c.

(20) Freinſhem. Supplem. in Q. Curtium, lib. 1. cap. 11. num. 16. ex Plutarcho.

[G] It is pretended that a voluptuous Pope . . . had been much more uſeful to the Roman Catholic Party.] They who do not love this Pope aſſert that he was ſufficiently acquainted with the general condition of Europe to know, that conſidering the ſituation affairs were in, when the Cardinal of Furſtenberg claimed the Electorate of Cologne, it was in his power to ſave the King of England, and to furniſh France with the neceſſary means to execute whatever ſhe would think fit to undertake; for with the aſſiſtance of ſuch a Cardinal, who would have inherited the whole eſtate of his predeceſſor, the French King would have tied up the hands of all the German Princes, who were ill-affected to him. They had experienced this in the year 1684, when France deſired a truce. Now it is certain that the victories which France might have gained would have extended the Roman Catholic Religion farther, and ſtrangely weakened the Proteſtant intereſt. Why then was the Pope ſo much againſt that Cardinal? It is, ſay ſome, becauſe he hated the King of France, and choſe to ſacrifice the intereſt of the Roman Religion rather than deprive himſelf of the pleaſure he took in vexing his enemy, and renounce the ſweets of revenge. The ſame perſons ſay that he knew very well there was an alliance upon the carpet, of which the Proteſtants were to have the chief direction, and which might become capable of oppreſſing the Roman Catholic Religion throughout all Europe: and that the moſt effectual method that could be imagined to prevent that alliance, was to confer the whole eſtate of the late Elector of Cologne on a Cardinal, who would never enter into a confederacy with heretical Princes. Why then did Innocent XI oppoſe this Cardinal's intereſt ſo ſtrongly? It is, ſay they, becauſe he was overjoyed to have an opportunity to expoſe the French Monarchy to the greateſt dangers; and if he could but revenge himſelf of the Court of France, he was very little concerned for the detriment which Popery might receive. This is what his enemies ſaid; we ought not to lay too much ſtreſs upon it; their anger muſt make us miſtruſt their conjectures. It is perhaps much more reaſonable to think that Innocent XI, applying himſelf very much to the reformation of manners, and to religious exerciſes, was not capable either of knowing what was really advantageous to his religion, or of preferring what is profitable to what is honeſt. Now he imagined it was but juſt to prefer the Elector of Bavaria's brother before the Cardinal who claimed the Electorate. Some apply to Innocent XI what was ſaid of Hadrian VI. He was an honeſt man, but unacquainted with the intrigues of politicians (21). It was a great happineſs for the Proteſtants, that the See of Rome in the year 1688 happened to be filled by a Pope, who was either unacquainted with his own true intereſt, or too obſtinate to improve the opportunities he met with, when they chanced to claſh with his own private paſſions.

(21) See the remark [Q] of the article of HADRIAN VI.

But after all, who could prove that Innocent XI did not in ſome reſpects follow the rules of a wiſe policy? Has the Court of Rome nothing to dread from the exceſſive power even of thoſe Princes, who are moſt bitterly exaſperated againſt the ſects that are ſeparated from the Catholic Church? Did not Sixtus V, whoſe knowlege and ſkill in politics were ſo great, chooſe rather to ſupport Henry IV, and Queen Elizabeth, than to ſuffer the King of Spain to enlarge his dominions too much (22)? Who can aſſure us that Innocent XI did not act from the ſame principles, when he took meaſures that were ſo much againſt the true intereſt of France, and ſo profitable to the Proteſtants? One thing however ſeems to be very certain; namely, that the anonymous author of a pamphlet (23) intitled, Le Reproche extravagant, où l'on fait voir qu'on ne peut ſans

(22) See the remark [F] of the article ELIZABETH.

(23) Printed at Cologne for Peter Marteau in the year 1689.

very angry with him, and it is ſaid, that this will be a great help to promote his canonization [H]. He had no learning [I]. He died Auguſt the 12th 1689. The French King's letter to the Conclave, though in a few words, ſignifies much againſt the deceaſed Pope's memory [K].

I have met with a paſſage in the Valeſiana, which I think deſerves to be tranſcribed here at length [L]. I ſhall alſo quote ſome of Monſieur La Fontaine's verſes, which ſhew ſans folie reprocher au Pape la ruïne de la Religion Catholique en Angleterre; i. e. "The Impertinent Charge, "in which it is proved that it is a folly to charge the "Pope with the ruin of the Catholic Religion in "England;" it is certain, I ſay, that this author is in the wrong to aſſert that ſuch a charge is impertinent.

[H] The anger of the French againſt him ... will be a great help to promote his canonization.] It is not long ſince (24) the news-writers in Holland have aſſerted in the pamphlets, which they publiſh monthly, that there are a great many miracles performed at this Pope's tomb, which is a great mortification to the court of France; and that the enemies of that Court on purpoſe to vex it, will probably endeavour to have this Pope canonized. Here then we ſhall have a Saint made ſo out of ſpite. Prudence requires, generally ſpeaking, that we ſhould adhere to the ſtrongeſt party; but this maxim proves ſometimes falſe. There are ſome Princes who owe their riſe only to the crafty policy with which they declared themſelves very early irreconcileable enemies to a powerful ſtate, which had made itſelf dreadful to all its neighbours; for all thoſe, who dread ſuch a ſtate, willingly promote the intereſt of this open enemy, and furniſh him, as much as lies in their power, with all that he deſires. It is not neceſſary to go back as far as the time of the antient heathens, in order to meet with inſtances of Princes, who ruined themſelves to all intents and purpoſes, by chooſing to enter into an alliance with their moſt powerful neighbour, rather than with any other ſtate (25). A private man, who from a proſperous condition comes to misfortunes, will no longer ſee about him that croud of friends which ſurrounded him before; they all forſake him and leave him alone.

(24) I wrote this in the beginning of Sept. 1695.

(25) Compare this with what is obſerved in the remark [X] of the article BELLARMIN.

Donec eris felix multos numerabis amicos;
Tempora ſi fuerint nubila, ſolus eris (26).

(26) Ovid. Triſt. lib. 1. Eleg. ix. 5.

"In happy days a thouſand friends you'll find:
"If fortune turns, they'll turn all with the wind."

Sovereign Princes meet with a quite contrary fate; for if they become too powerful, all their neighbours forſake them, and confederate againſt them. It is certain that Innocent XI got an infinite number of friends and admirers, only becauſe he endeavoured to diſappoint the deſigns of France as much as lay in his power. This will raiſe his reputation, and make people believe his pretended miracles the eaſier.

[I] He had no learning.] It is ſaid, that his Secretaries were obliged to explain to him in Italian what they wrote for him in Latin. See hereupon the Menagiana, where you will meet with this paſſage (27). "Favoriti, the late Pope's Secretary, uſed to read to "him the briefs which he had drawn up, and to explain them to him in Italian, upon which the Pope "uſed to weep for joy, and to ſay, coſa diranno di noi "nella poſterita, quando vederanno coſi bella latinita "noſtra. i. e. What will poſterity ſay of us, when "they ſhall ſee our fine Latin ſtile?"

(27) In pag. 52. of the firſt Dutch edition. It ſeems as though the Printers had omitted a word or two in the Italian paſſage.

[K] The French King's letter to the Conclave, though in a few words, ſignifies much againſt the deceaſed Pope's memory.] It begins thus (28): Your letter dated the 13th Inſtant has acquainted us with the death of our holy Father Innocent XI, and we have good reaſons to believe that it pleaſed God Almighty to take him at a time when all the forces of hereſy united together ſeem to contrive the ruin of our religion, to which the diviſion of the Catholic Princes does not contribute a little. This is ſaying in a few words, which ſeem to favour of nothing but moderation, that the preſent circumſtances the Church was in requiring a Pope heartily concerned for her intereſt, God took Innocent XI out of this world, becauſe he was either ill-affected to the Church, or incapable to promote her intereſt.

(28) The Letter is dated from Verſailles Auguſt 24, 1689. It is inſerted entire in the Mercure Hiſtorique & Politique, for October 1689, pag. 1026.

[L] I have met with a paſſage in the Valeſiana, which I think deſerves to be tranſcribed here at length.] "It is pity, ſaid the learned Hadrian Valeſius (29), "that Innocent XI ſuffered himſelf to be continually "beſet by the enemies of France. How many ad"vantages would he not have procured to the Chriſtian "Religion, had he been ſupported by perſons as well "affected as himſelf? What would he not have "reſtored? What would he not have reformed? What "great expectations did he not raiſe in us, when he "ſuppreſſed the Office of the Conception, as Cle"ment IX had done that of Slavery? What would he "not have done, had he been told of the impertinent "devotion of that Monk, whom M.... mentioned "to us the other day? Would he not have ſeverely "cenſured and condemned thoſe ſuperiors, who ſuffer "one of their Fanatics to publiſh Collects or Prayers "directed ſeparately to every part of the Holy Vir"gin's body (30)? Is not ſuch an impertinence ſhock"ing, and repugnant to religion, modeſty, and good "ſenſe. Innocent XI would not have ſtopt there; "he would have reſtrained the luxury and extrava"gancy of the women. What obligations would he "not have laid upon a great many huſbands, had his "deſign ſucceeded? I have it alſo from very good "hands, that he would have ſuppreſſed the privileged "altars, which are a very great abuſe. And indeed, "can ſome indulgences granted to an altar make the "maſs that is ſaid at it more effectual? And does "Chriſt's blood, which is of an unvaluable price, "want ſome additional merit, to be more acceptable "to God, and more prevailing with him in favour of "thoſe, who are prayed for? They are only Men"dicant Friars that invented thoſe things, to entice "more cuſtomers to their Churches."

(29) Valeſiana, pag. 45, & ſeq. edit. de Hollande.

(30) Monſieur Baudelot aſſerts in page 183. of his Ptolomée Auletes, that he has ſeen the printed book which contains thoſe Collects or Prayers.

A DIGRESSION concerning the reformation of luxury.

What Valeſius obſerves here, concerning the deſign of reſtraining the luxury and extravagancies of the women, puts me in mind of the great zeal which Innocent XI expreſſed againſt the women who uſed to ſhew their breaſts. "This Pope not being able to per"ſuade the fair ſex not to ſhew their breaſts and arms, "notwithſtanding ſeveral powerful motives he urged "for that purpoſe; and being even told that the great "conſternation under which all Italy laboured, when the "Turks were beſieging Vienna, could not put a ſtop "to this exceſs, reſolved finally to try the laſt remedy, "namely excommunication. He publiſhed a decree "November the 30th 1683, by which all maidens "and women were commanded to cover their ſhoulders "and breaſt to their neck, and their arms to the wriſt, "with ſome thick and untranſparent ſtuff; they that "did not obey this order within ſix days after its pub"lication, were to be excommunicated ipſo facto, ſo "as that the Pope alone had power to abſolve them, "unleſs they were at the point of death; for it was "therein declared, that thoſe Father Confeſſors, who "would pretend to abſolve them from this excommunica"tion, would fall under it themſelves, and ſuffer all "ſuch ſpiritual and temporal puniſhments as his Holi"neſs would think fit: the ſame ſpiritual puniſhments "were to be inflicted on the fathers, huſbands, maſters, "and other heads of families, by whoſe leave or con"nivance the daughters and wives ſhould offend againſt "this decree (31)." I do not know what ſucceſs theſe terrible threatenings had; but I imagine, that as they had been revived from time to time, under Innocent XI's predeceſſors (32), there was occaſion to revive them alſo ſome time after. This is the fate of all ſumptuary laws; luxury, with a deſire of letting off one's beauty, will ſoon break through the moſt wiſe regulations. This is a diſorder to which we may apply what a grave hiſtorian obſerved with regard to Aſtrologers: they were continually commanded to leave Rome, and they never left it (33). King Lewis XIV has lately (34) publiſhed very good edicts againſt luxury. If he can force his ſubjects to obey him in this reſpect, it will be a more wonderful thing than the

(31) Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, for May 1686, article 2. pag. 495.

(32) Ibid. pag. 497.

(33) Genus hominum ... quod in Civitate noſtra & vetabitur ſemper & retinebitur. Tacit. Hiſt. lib. 1. cap. 22.

(34) I write this in May 1700.

(b) Concerning the Orations of this Orator, see Act. Erud. Lipſiæ in the 3d vol. of the Supplements, pag. 43, &c.

ſhew that people wrote very freely at Paris againſt Innocent XI [M]. You will meet with a beautiful elogium of this Pope in Signor Malagonelli's ſeventh Oration (b). It is written in an admirable Latin ſtyle, and worthy of ancient Rome.

power he had to leſſen conſiderably the madneſs of fighting duels throughout his whole Kingdom. The news-writers have told us lately, that the Lawyers belonging to the Parliament of Paris have promiſed they would take care to have luxury ſuppreſſed in their families. We ſhall know in time whether theſe two united powers, that of the ſovereign, and that of the huſband, will be able to compleat a laſting reformation. It was notified to theſe Gentlemen (the Lawyers) that as ſome (25) of thoſe women (36) who chiefly ſet up for Ladies of Quality, would perhaps be unwilling to retrench ſomething both of their rich garments, furniture, coaches, &c. and of the uſeleſs number of their chamber-maids, imbroiderers, tapeſtry-makers, and footmen, that wait upon them; it had been reſolved to put a ſtop to this licentiouſneſs, which does ſo little become the condition and quality of thoſe Ladies .... (37); it being the King's intention that they obey and reform immediately, without any diſtinction of deſcent or quality, and firſt of all ceaſe to have the trains of their gowns carried behind them. It is added that two celebrated Lawyers (38) were commanded to acquaint their brethren with this reſolution; who being overjoyed at it expreſſed their gratitude, and reſolved unanimouſly to give thanks to the firſt Preſident for procuring them an order which was ſo juſt, ſo neceſſary, and ſo worthy of the King's wiſdom; and to aſſure him at the ſame time, that they would take care to have it obeyed, each of them in their own families, with the utmoſt exactneſs; for they looked upon it as the moſt effectual method to ſpare him a thouſand vexations, and to prevent the fruits they might reap from their painful labours, from being made a ſacrifice to the boundleſs ambition of their wives. It is very probable that they ſpoke ſincerely; for after all their weighty, noble, and profitable employments are attended with a great deal of trouble. They envy ſometimes the happineſs of a country-man, who is at liberty to ſleep all the night long.

(35) See the Lettres Hiſtoriques, for May 1700, pag. 574.

(36) That is to ſay the Lawyers wives.

(37) Lettres Hiſtoriques, for May 1700, pag. 575.

(38) Meſſieurs Iſalin and Chardon.

Agricolam laudat juris legumque peritus,
Sub galli cantum conſultor ubi oſtia pulſat (32).

(39) Horat. Sat. 1. lib. 1. ver. 9.

" The Lawyer waked, and riſing with the ſun,
" Cries, happy Farmers that can ſleep till noon."
Creech.

Are they not in the right to wiſh, that a profit, which coſt them ſo much pains, ſhould not be ſquandered away in ſuperfluous expences, and that the ſovereign power ſhould afford them a method to prevent it, ſince they have not the courage to do it themſelves without ſuch an authority?

[M] I ſhall quote ſome verſes of Monſieur de la Fontaine, which ſhew that people wrote very freely at Paris againſt Innocent XI.] There is amongſt his poſthumous works a Letter, ſome part of which I ſhall here tranſcribe.

Pour nouvelles de l'Italie,
Le Pape empire tous les jours,
Expliquez, Seigneur (40), ce diſcours
Du coſté de la maladie.
Car aucun Saint-Pere autrement
Ne doit empirer nullement.
Celui-cy veritablement
N'eſt envers nous ni Saint ni Pere.
Nos ſoins de l'erreur triomphans
Ne font qu'augmenter ſa colere
Contre l'Aîné de ſes Enfans.
Sa ſanté toûjours diminuë,
L'avenir m'eſt choſe inconnuë,
Et je n'en parle qu'à tâtons;
Mais les gens de delà les Monts
Auront bien-tôt pleuré cet homme;
Car il deffend les Jannetons,
Choſe très-neceſſaire à Rome (41).

(40) He ſpeaks to the Prince of Conti.

(41) See Fontaine, Oeuvres Poſtumes p. 182. of the edition printed in Holland.

" If you deſire to hear ſome news from Italy, I ſhall " tell you that the Pope grows worſe and worſe every " day: Your Highneſs muſt underſtand this of his " health; for otherwiſe an holy Father ought never " to grow worſe. Indeed this Pope is neither holy " nor a father with reſpect to us: the care we take " to triumph over Hereſy, does only exaſperate him " more againſt the eldeſt of his children (*). He de- " cays daily in his health. I am perfectly ignorant " of future events, and ſpeak of them only by gueſs: " but I dare ſay, that the people beyond the Alps " will ſoon have done lamenting this man, for he will " not ſuffer them to keep company with Ladies of " pleaſure, which yet is a very neceſſary thing at " Rome."

(*) The King of France, who is ſtiled the eldeſt ſon of the Church.

Here follow ſome lines which are more free ſtill, they are tranſcribed from the ſame work.

Je vois ces Heros retournez
Chez eux avec un pied de nez.
- - - - - -
Et tout le parti Proteſtant
Du Saint Pere en vain très-content.
J'ay là deſſus un conte à faire.
L'autre jour touchant cette affaire
Le Chevalier de Sillery,
En parlant de ce Pape-cy,
Souhaitoit pour la paix publique,
Qu'il ſe fuſt rendu Catholique,
Et le Roy JAQUES Huguenot.
Je trouve aſſez bon ce bon mot (42).

(42) Ibid. pag. 171.

" I ſee theſe heroes now returned home very much " diſappointed .... and the whole Proteſtant party " very well pleaſed with the Holy Father, though to " no purpoſe: whereupon I have a little ſtory to tell " you. The Knight de Sillery ſpeaking of this af- " fair the other day, and mentioning this Pope, ſaid " he wiſhed, for the ſake of the public tranquillity, " that the Pope had turned Catholic, and King James " Proteſtant. I think this a pretty good jeſt."

Monſieur Racine (43) took off the edge of this jeſt, and wrapped it up much better. But ſtill it was a ſmart jeſt.

(45) See the Prologue to his tragedy of Eſther. It is mentioned in the Avis important aux Refugiez pag. 343.

Monſieur de Vizé ſays a great many things to the diſgrace of Innocent XI, both in his Mercure Galant, and in his volumes upon the tranſactions of thoſe times.

JOACHIM, St. Ann's huſband [A], and father of the Virgin Mary. He continued a long while with his ſpouſe without having any children, and for that reaſon his oblations were rejected by the High-Prieſt Iſſachar, who alſo reproached him ſeverely with his infecundity. Joachim was ſo aſhamed to be treated after this manner by the High-Prieſt, that he had not the courage to return home. He went and hid himſelf in the country amongſt the ſhepherds. He was comforted there by an Angel, who told him that he would have a daughter named Mary by his wife Ann. This Angel went immediately to acquaint Ann with the ſame news, who was crying bitterly, not knowing what was become of her huſband. This piece of news, which the Angel told her, was doubtleſs

(1) Joan. Damaſ. de Fide Orthod. l. 4. cap. 15. apud Baron. in Apparatu, num. 42.

[A] Joachim St. Ann's huſband.] His genealogy was as follows. Levi of the tribe of David was Panther's father, who was Barpanther's father, and Joachim was the ſon of this laſt (1). Some have aſſerted that he was not deſcended from David, but from the tribe of Levi, and that he was a Prieſt; upon which the Manichees grounded an objection, which St. Auguſtin has examined (2).

(2) Contra Fauſtum Manicb. lib. 23. cap. 9. See the remark [D] quotation (11).

doubtleſs very acceptable to her, for ſhe was very ſorry that ſhe had no children [B]. Several perſons imagine, that only a kiſs from her huſband made her pregnant; but others aſſert it was neceſſary to go the common way to work [C]; otherwiſe, ſay they, the birth of Jeſus Chriſt would not be ſo wonderful as we hold it to be. But what is really ſurpriſing is, that though we know nothing with certainty either of the names, or of the qualities, or of the hiſtory of the Virgin Mary's father and mother [D], yet all that

[B] She was very ſorry that ſhe had no children.] She was upon that account deprived of a certain honour, which, according to the laws, was paid to mothers. She had therefore her recourſe to God, and applied to him in extraordinary prayers, that ſhe might enjoy that honour. She entered into the moſt holy place, and made fervent application to God, repreſenting to him that ſhe had committed nothing againſt the law, and that therefore ſhe ought not to be deprived of the privileges which the law allowed to the women who had had children. Her prayer was heard. God gave her to underſtand that ſhe ſhould have children (3). St. Gregory of Nyſſa relates this ſtory, which he had read in an apocryphal work. They who know that none but the high-prieſt could enter into the moſt holy place, and that he was not to enter it but once a year, want no other proofs of the falſity of this ſtory. If St. Ann was taking meaſures on her ſide, her huſband was not behind hand with her: for he faſted forty days upon a mountain, in order to obtain from God the poſterity he wiſhed for (4). See St. Epiphanius's words in the following remark.

(3) Gregorius Nyſſenus, Orat. in Natal. Domini, apud Baron. Apparat. num. 44.

(4) Sophron. apud Rivet. Apolog. pro ſanctiſſ. Maria, cap. 3. Oper. tom. 3. pag. 606. col. 2.

[C] Others aſſert it was neceſſary to go the common way to work.] St. Bernard aſſerts that this is the opinion of the church. Si licet, ſays he (5), loqui quod Eccleſia ſentit. (& verum ipſa ſentit) dico glorioſam de Spiritu Sancto concepiſſe, non autem conceptam fuiſſe: dico peperiſſe virginem, non tamen partam à virgine. Alioquin ubi erit prærogativa matris Domini qua ſingulariter dicitur exultare & munere prolis & integritate carnis, ſi tantundem dederis & matri ipſius? non eſt hoc Virginem honorare, ſed honori detrahere. i. e. "If I may "ſpeak the opinion of the church (and the church "believes nothing but what is true) I maintain, that "the bleſſed Virgin conceived indeed from the Holy "Ghoſt, but was not begotten by him: I maintain "that ſhe was delivered being a virgin, but not brought "into the world by a virgin. Otherwiſe what would "be the prerogative of the Lord's Mother, who is "ſaid to rejoice in a moſt particular manner, both "on account of the favour ſhe received of bringing a "child into the world, and on account of her keeping her body undefiled, if you aſcribe the ſame privileges to her mother? This is leſſening the Virgin's glory, inſtead of doing her honour." Pelbart of Temeſwaer, though he was ſuperſtitiouſly credulous, admitted however St. Bernard's opinion. Simplicibus quibuſdam tribuit hanc opinionem quod Anna conceperit per ſolum oſculum Joacim. Agnoſcit tamen eam de viro concepiſſe concubitu matrimoniali (6). i. e. "He "aſcribes to ſome fooliſh perſons this opinion, that "St. Ann conceived only by a kiſs from Joachim. But "he acknowledges that ſhe conceived from her huſ-"band in the common way." The error of St. Ann's pretended virginity is very antient; for St. Epiphanius was obliged to refute it. Εἰ γὰρ Ἀγγέλους προσκυνεῖσθαι οὐ θέλει, πόσῳ μᾶλλον τὴν ἀπὸ Ἄννας γεννηθεῖσαν, τὴν ἐκ τοῦ Ἰωακεὶμ τῇ Ἄννᾳ δεδωρημένην, τὴν οὐκ εὐχῆς, καὶ πάσης ἐπιμελείας καὶ ἐπαγγελίαν παιρὶ, καὶ μήτρι δοθεῖσαν, οὐ μὲν ἑτέρως γεγεννημένην παρὰ τὴν τῶν ἀνθρώπων φύσιν, ἀλλὰ καθὼς πάντες ἐκ σπέρματος ἀνδρὸς, καὶ μήτρας γυναικὸς; εἰ γὰρ καὶ ἡ τῆς Μαρίας ἱστορία, καὶ παραδόσεις ἔχουσιν, ὅτι ἐρρέθη τῷ παιρὶ αὐτῆς Ἰωακεὶμ ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ. ὅτι ἡ γυνή σου συνειληφυῖα, οὐχ ὅτι ἄνευ συζυγίας τοῦτο ἐγένετο, οὐδὲ ὅτι ἄνευ σπέρματος ἀνδρός. i. e. "If God does not ſuffer us "to worſhip even the angels, how much leſs ought "we to worſhip Ann's daughter, whom ſhe got by "her huſband Joachim, thro' God's bleſſing; whom "both her father and her mother obtained by their "prayers, and by all kind of pious endeavours: yet "not otherwiſe than all other men came into the "world; but by the ſeed of a man, and out of a woman's womb. For though according to the hiſtory "of Mary, and to tradition, it was ſaid to Joachim, "Mary's father, in the wilderneſs, thy wife has con-"ceived; yet it muſt not be underſtood as though this "happened without a copulation, or without the ſeed "of a man." The Cavalier Borri had a ſtrange notion about the Virgin's conception. He imagined that St. Joachim was impotent, and that the Holy Ghoſt took fleſh in the womb of the Virgin Mary's mother, ſo that by this means St. Ann continued a virgin after ſhe was delivered. Cadde in propoſizioni più ridicole, inſegnando che la Vergine non era ſtata concetta con ſeme umano, mà per opra divina, avendo lo Spirito Santo pigliato carne nel ventre di S. Anna, e partorita dalla medeſima, che aſſeriva che nel parto era rimaſta Vergine, e tale eſſere ſtata avanti il parto, e aſſicurando che S. Gioachino foſſe ſtato impotente alla conſumazione del matrimonio (8). i. e. "He had a more ridiculous opinion "ſtill; for he pretended that the Holy Virgin was "not conceived by the ſeed of a man, but by a di-"vine generation, the Holy Ghoſt having taken "fleſh in St. Ann's womb, and thus brought her into "the world, whence it happened that St. Ann con-"tinued a virgin after her delivery, as ſhe had been "before: for he maintained that St. Joachim was "impotent and could not conſummate his mar-"riage."

(5) Bernard. Epiſt. 174. ad Can. Lugdun. apud Rivetum, ibid. pag. 608.

(6) Stellarii Coronæ, lib. 4. Part 2. Artic. 1. apud Rivetum, ibid.

(7) Epiph. adverſus Collyridianos, pag. m. 1062.

(8) Relazione della Vita del Cavagl. Borri, pag. 351.

[D] Though we know nothing with certainty, neither of the names, nor of the qualities, nor of the hiſtory of the Virgin Mary's father and mother. . . . .] St. Epiphanius, who flouriſhed in the year 370, is the moſt antient author that mentions the names of the Holy Virgin's father and mother. He pretends indeed, that what he relates concerning Joachim and Mary's prayers, and concerning the angel's revelation (9), is borrowed from tradition and from the hiſtory of the Virgin Mary. But does he not confeſs himſelf that there were very abſurd traditions ſpread abroad concerning Mary's birth? Does he not quote a book upon this ſubject, which contained abominable things (10)? Does he not obſerve, it was reported that Zacharias was ſtruck dumb in the temple, becauſe he had ſeen there a man in the ſhape of an aſs? He was going to leave the place, and to cry out, Wo to you, what Deity do you worſhip? But this Deity prevented him by ſtriking him dumb. When he had recovered his ſpeech again, he declared what he had ſeen, upon which they killed him. St. Epiphanius adds, that it was related in the ſame book, that the reaſon why the law-giver had ordered the High-Prieſt to wear little bells, was to give this Deity time to hide himſelf, that its aſs-like figure might not be ſeen: and that it might not be ſurprized unawares, it was ordered that the ſound of the little bells ſhould give it notice of the High-Prieſt's arrival. I know very well that all ſorts of traditions ought not to be exploded like theſe: but after all, there is not one good reaſon to perſuade us, that thoſe, which St. Epiphanius admitted, were well grounded. This is ſo true, that St. Auguſtin makes no ſcruple to take for an uncertain and apocryphal tradition, the opinion that was ſpread abroad concerning the Virgin Mary's father, that he was called Joachim, and that he was a Prieſt. Quod de generatione Mariæ Fauſtus poſuit quod patrem habuerit ex tribu Levi ſacerdotem quendam nomine Joachim, quia Canonicum non eſt, non me conſtringit (11). i. e. "What Fauſ-"tus has aſſerted concerning Mary's birth, namely, "that her father was a Prieſt, of the tribe of Levi, "and named Joachim, is no argument againſt me, "becauſe it is not canonical." He adds that it is impoſſible for the ſame perſon to be deſcended from two tribes, and concludes, that he would thus ſolve the objection of the Manichean, if he were obliged to have any regard for apocryphal writings. Hoc ego potius vel tale aliquid crederem ſi illius apocryphæ ſcripturæ, ubi Joachim pater Mariæ legitur, authoritate detinerer, quam mentiri Evangelium in quo ſcriptum eſt, &c. i. e. "I would rather believe this, or ſomething like it, if I "was to lay any ſtreſs on theſe apocryphal books, "which mention Joachim as Mary's father, than "that there is a lye in the Goſpel, where it is writ-"ten, &c."

(9) See his words in the preceding remark.

(10) Γέννην μὲν γὰρ Μαρίας βιβλίον τί φασιν εἶναι, ἐν ᾧ δεινά τε καὶ ὀλέθρια ὑποβάλλοντές τινα ἐκεῖσε λέγουσιν. Epiph. adv. Hæreſ. pag. 94. i. e. "There is a "book which "treats of Ma-"ry's birth, and "which con-"tains horrible "and abomina-"ble ſayings of "them."

(11) Auguſtin. contra Fauſtum Manich lib. 23. cap. 9. apud Rivetum, Operum tom. 3. pag. 604, 605.

that I have been obſerving, has been aſſerted, and feſtivals have been appointed to St. Joachim, and to his wife [E]. Some (a) have imagined that he had three daughters by her; but others think that St. Ann was married three times, and had one daughter by each of her huſbands.

(a) See Baronius, in Apparatu, num. 41.

If you want other proofs of the uncertainty of theſe traditions, do but conſider Baronius's conduct. He has exploded part of theſe things which are reported concerning the bleſſed Virgin's father and mother: he has expreſſly obſerved that the book aſcribed to St. Jerom, is the work of ſome unknown and ignorant author, who was not capable to avoid the moſt palpable falſities. Non tantum eam Hieronymi non eſſe dixerimus, ſed auctoris plane ut ignoti, ſic prorſus imperiti, qui in ea condenda & conſcribenda non novit aperta vitare mendacia, dum ait illis temporibus quibus ea acciderunt fuiſſe Iſachar ſummum pontificem (12). He has declared that though this book contains ſeveral true facts, yet he will not lay any ſtreſs upon it. Nec innitimur ſcriptioni illi, quæ hactenus Hieronymi nomine ad Cromatium & Heliodorum ſcripta vulgata eſt, nam licet in ea complura veritate conſtantia conſcripta reperiantur, quæ à dictis auctoribus ſibi vindicent auctoritatem & fidem, tamen, &c. (13). i. e. "Nor do we lay any ſtreſs upon that writing, which has hitherto been publiſhed under St. Jerom's name, addreſſed to Cromatius and Heliodorus; for though it contains ſeveral true particulars, grounded on the teſtimony of the ſaid authors, yet, &c." Thus he ruins one part of the foundation. You will ſee now how Caſaubon overthrows the other. He ſhews that the book De Nativitate S. Mariæ (Of Mary's Birth) falſely aſcribed to St. Jerom, is the work of a Manichee, and abounds with impertinences, and blaſphemies. A peſtilentiſſimo hæretico profectum, poſtremo nugarum & impietatum eſſe plenum (14). He wonders that the Jeſuit Chriſtopher de Caſtro ſhould have dared to maintain that ſuch a book was genuine, the ſuppoſition of which appeared ſo plainly to Eraſmus, to Melchior Canus, to Sixtus Senenſis, and to Baronius. Caſaubon quotes a paſſage from it, which affords me a ſtrong proof. Illud libere dico quod fidelium neminem negaturum puto; ſive hæc vera ſunt, ſive ab aliquo conficta ſacro-ſancta S. Mariæ miracula præceſſiſſe; maxima conſecuta fuiſſe; & idcirco ſalva fide, ab iis, qui Deum facere iſta poſſe credunt, ſine periculo animæ ſuæ credi & legi poſſe (15). i. e. "This I can ſay freely, which I imagine none of the faithful will deny; whether theſe things be true, or invented by ſome perſon, there were holy miracles performed before the bleſſed Virgin's birth, and greater ſtill after it; ſo that they, who believe that God can do ſuch things, may ſafely believe and read them without any danger to their ſoul." Theſe are not the words of the Manichee Seleucus (16) the author of the work, but of the perſon who tranſlated it into Latin; and it is proper to obſerve that this tranſlator owns, there are a great many falſities in the book he tranſlates. Impietas iſtius Pſeudohieronymi, excuſari ſalvo pudore non poteſt: nam quum fateatur, Seleucum, ſive Lucium de doctrina Apoſtolorum multa eſſe mentitum; ea tamen defendit, quæ ſunt ab eodem hæretico ſcripta de virtutibus & miraculis eorum. Poterat-ne hic planus apertiùs oſtendere, nullam ſibi eſſe curam veritatis, neque ullum ſe inter falſum & verum ſtatuere diſcrimen? Addit de eo ipſo libro quem vertebat: ita & his multa non vera de corde ſuo confingit (17). i. e. "This falſe Jerom's impiety cannot without ſhame be excuſed: for though he confeſſes himſelf that Seleucus or Leucius told a great many falſities concerning the doctrine of the Apoſtles, yet he vindicates what the ſame Heretic wrote concerning their power and miracles. Could this impoſtor ſhew more plainly that he had no regard for the truth, and made no diſtinction between truth and falſehood? He ſaid of the very book he was tranſlating, that the author of it invented a great number of falſities from his own head." Is not this ſufficient to ſatisfy any reaſonable perſon of the uncertainty of all theſe traditions? That which St. Gregory of Nyſſa relates is evidently falſe (18). As for Nicephorus Calliſtus, Germanus Patriarch of Conſtantinople, John of Damaſcus, &c. they do not deſerve the leaſt credit, becauſe they lived ſo long after the time when theſe things happened, that the traditions concerning them could not be handed down to theſe authors, but with a great many alterations. And beſides it is well known that Nicephorus is a fabulous and injudicious writer (19). So that we have no reaſon to believe that he quoted Hippolytus, Biſhop of Porto, accurately; and after all, what he quotes from him contains ſome falſities, as Caſaubon ſhews. See the Bibliotheque Univerſelle (20). Rivetus was in the right to think it ſtrange that Richard Montague ſhould have believed moſt of the ſtories, which ſuch people as Bernardine of Buſti, Pelbarts of Temeſwar, Coſterus, and other writers of the ſame rank admit concerning our Joachim (21).

(12) Baronius, in Apparatu, num. 44.

(13) Idem, ibid.

(14) Caſaub. Exercit. ad Baron. I. num. 15. pag. m. 90.

(15) Caſaub. ibid. pag. 91.

(16) Others call him Leucius, or Leontius. Caſaub. Exercit. ad Baron. I, num. 15. pag. 91.

(17) Idem, ibid.

(18) See above, the remark [B].

(19) Nicephorum hunc fabuloſiſſimum eſſe ſcriptorem & judicii in literis nullius, ſatis notum eſt eruditis. Caſaub. Exercit. ad Baron. num. 15. pag. 91.

(20) Pag. 143, &c. of the 11th volume.

(21) Rivet. Apolog. pro SS. Virg. Maria, cap. 3. Oper. tom. 3. pag. 607.

I wonder that the Abbot de Marolles had ſo much regard for the traditions I have mentioned. See page 235 of his Memoirs.

[E] Yet feſtivals have been appointed to St. Joachim, and to his wife.] The huſband obtained that honour much later than the wife, for he enjoys it only ſince the 2d day of December 1622. The day appointed for his feſtival is March the 20th (22). But St. Ann's feſtival was inſtituted in the year 1584. It was not at firſt abſolutely neceſſary to keep that holy-day upon pain of Damnation; it is but ſince the year 1622 that St. Ann was promoted to that honour (23). In every other reſpect the worſhip that is paid to St. Joachim is much inferior to that which is paid to his wife. She is the Patroneſs of an order of Nuns, called the Maidens of St. Joſeph (24), and her miracles are very much celebrated. The village of Ker-Ann in the dioceſe of Vannes in Britany is wonderfully famous on that account, and particularly ſince they have dug up there an old image of this Saint, which had been buried very deep under ground. In the year 1625 it was revealed from heaven to a ploughman where this image was to be found. The moment it was dug out of the ground it performed ſeveral great miracles. The alms of a vaſt number of devout perſons, who flocked there from all parts, amounted ſoon to a ſum of money large enough to build a beautiful church to that image. The Biſhop of Vannes obtained from Rome the neceſſary indulgences for thoſe who out of devotion would viſit it: he charged the reformed Carmelites with the doctrine of this new church, and gave brother Hugo of St. Francis leave to publiſh an account of the miracles, which had been lately performed in thoſe parts (25).

(22) Spond. Annal. ad ann. 1622, num. 1.

(23) Idem, ibid.

(24) See the book intitled, Les Grandeurs de Sainte Anne. It is mentioned in the Bibliotheque Univerſelle, tom. 11. pag. 141.

(25) Taken from Spondanus, ad ann. 1625, num. 3.

JOAN Queen of Naples. See NAPLES.

JOB, whoſe patience has been deſcribed in one of the Canonical Books of the Old Teſtament. That I may not repeat here what the reader may find in Moreri, I ſhall only take notice of ſome errors. They are miſtaken who aſſert that the Turks have a great veneration for this holy man's tomb [A], the chief Judge at Solomon's Court.

[A] They are miſtaken who aſſert that the Turks have a great veneration for this holy man's tomb.] Let us quote a paſſage from Sir Paul Ricaut (1). "Whenever there is a new Emperor of the Turks, it is their cuſtom to conduct him with all the pomp imaginable to a certain place in the ſuburbs of Conſtantinople, which is called Job. There is to be ſeen at that place an antient tomb of a certain Prophet or holy man, whom the Turks, who are not in the leaſt acquainted with Antiquity, nor with Hiſtory, pretend to be Job, who for ſo many ages paſt has been a pattern of patience and conſtancy." Sir Paul Ricaut's tranſlator makes an obſervation upon theſe words, which deſerves to be tranſcribed. "I believe indeed, ſays he (2), that ſome ignorant Turks, unacquainted with Hiſtory and Chronology, may take the tomb of

(1) Ricaut, Etat preſent de l'Empire Ottoman, tranſlated into French by Beſpier, B. 1, p. 16.

(2) Beſpier. Remarques Curieuſes ſur l'Etat preſent de l'Empire Ottoman, pag. 4.

Court [B]. It is a ſcandalous piece of impudence to aſſert, that Job's diſtemper was the foul diſeaſe [C]. I confeſs that in the Church of Rome he is the Patron of them that labour under that diſeaſe [D]; but nothing can be inferred from thence to ſupport the other aſſertion. He was worſhipped in that Church before the pox was known in Europe [E]. Tertullian was in the wrong to aſſert that Job left no children behind him. Upon which ſee Spanhemius's (a) Hiſtory of Job, which is a very good work.

(a) Frederic. Spanheim. F. Hiſt. Job, cap. 15. pag. 481.

" of Job, which is at Conſtantinople, at the foot of " the walls of the city, for the tomb of that holy man, " whoſe hiſtory is related in the Old Teſtament. But " the Turkiſh Hiſtorians tell us themſelves, that this " tomb was built for another Job, who was a Maho- " metan, and had been one of Mahomet's followers. " He was killed at the ſiege of Conſtantinople, which " was attacked by Jezid, the ſon of the Kaliff Moa- " vias, in the 52d year of the Hegira, or 672 ſince " the birth of Chriſt. This is what Elmacin obſerves " in his Hiſtory of the Sarracens, Book 1, Chap. 7. " and though Elmacin was a Chriſtian, yet he relates " what he met with in the Mahometan Hiſtorians, " whoſe accounts he only abridges, as he confeſſes " himſelf." One of the moſt learned Rabbies in the XVIIth Century held the ſame error with thoſe ignorant Turks; for he aſſerted (3) " that the Mahome- " tans have ſtill at this time a great veneration for " Job's tomb which is at Conſtantinople . . . . . (4). " He did not know, to be ſure, that this is the tomb " of another Job, different from the perſon mentioned " in the Old Teſtament, and he imagined erroneouſly, " that all the Mahometans take it to be the tomb of " that holy man."

(3) Menaſſeh-Ben Iſrael, de Reſurrect. mortuor. lib. 1. cap. 16. quoted by Beſpier, ibid. pag. 5.

(4) Beſpier. Remarques Curieuſes ſur l'Etat de l'Emp. Ottoman, pag. 5.

[B] . . . the chief Judge of Solomon's Court.] Let us again quote Sir Paul Ricaut. " The Turks, ſays " he (5), do ſo much blend together all Hiſtories, for " want of knowing Chronology, that they aſſert Job " was the chief Judge at Solomon's Court, and Alex- " ander the Great was General of his armies." Here follows a pretty good critical obſervation upon theſe words (6). " The Engliſh author borrowed this from " Buſbequius, but he miſtook his meaning. For Buſ- " bequius does not ſay, the Turks believe that Job was " the chief Judge at Solomon's Court, nor that Alex- " ander was General of his armies. He only ob- " ſerves, that the Turks are ſo unacquainted with " Chronology and Hiſtory, that if they took it into " their heads, they would not in the leaſt ſcruple to " aſſert, that that Job was the chief Judge at Solomon's " Court, and Alexander General of his armies. Theſe " two aſſertions differ widely. See Buſbequius, Epiſt. 1." Sir Paul Ricaut's miſtake has already been tranſcribed in ſome books (7).

(5) Ricaut. Etat preſent de l'Empire Ottoman, pag. 16.

(6) Beſpier, Remarques ſur l'Etat de l'Emp. Ottoman, pag. 6.

(7) Borremannus has tranſcribed it in his Variæ Lectiones, pag. 260.

[C] It is . . . . impudence to aſſert that Job's diſtemper was the foul diſeaſe.] Guy Patin quotes two celebrated authors, who have aſſerted it. His words are as follow (8). " In anſwer to what you wrote " to me, I muſt tell you that Bolduc, a Capuchin, and " Pineda, a Spaniſh Jeſuit, have both written that " Job had the Pox. I am inclined to believe that " David and Solomon laboured alſo under that diſ- " temper." Obſerve that it can by no means be pretended that Job got that foul diſeaſe by an impure action.

(8) Patin, Lettre 388. pag. 102. of the 3d volume.

[D] He is the patron of them that labour under that diſeaſe.] Conſult Molanus's Diarium Medicorum Eccleſiaſticum; you will meet there, upon the 10th of May, which is Job's feſtival, with theſe words. Volunt non- nulli Sanctum Job peculiarem patronum eſſe eorum qui lue venerea laborant aut eam curant (9). i. e. " Some pre- " tend that Job is in a particular manner the patron " of thoſe who have the foul diſeaſe, or who make it " their buſineſs to cure it."

(9) Molan. in Diario Medicor. pag. 68.

[E] He was worſhipped . . . . . before the pox was known in Europe.] The ſame Molanus warns us not to admit Agrippa's error, who dares to aſſert that the pox was the occaſion of Job's canonization. Before that time, ſays Molanus, there was a church and a feſtival appointed at Venice to this holy man; who was alſo inſerted into the Martyrology as early as the reign of Charles the Great. Cavendus eſt H. Cornelius Agrippa, qui vane ſcripſit luem Veneream Job in divos retuliſſe. Quaſi non multo ante Veneti memoriam ejus & templo & feſto die celebrarint, conſtet quoque Uſuardum Caroli Magni ætate, & Wandelbertum non multo poſt, Martyrologiis ſuis eum inſeruiſſe. Et à Græcis ad jextum diem Maii notatur ſanctus & juſtus Job qui multa contra Satanam certamina ſuſtinuit (10). i. e. " Beware of H. " Cornelius Agrippa, who wrote without reaſon, that " the venereal diſeaſe placed Job amongſt the ſaints; " as though his memory had not been celebrated at " Venice a long while before, a church and a feſtival " being appointed there to him: it is alſo certain that " Vſward in Charles the Great's time, and Wandel- " bert ſoon after, have inſerted his name in their Mar- " tyrology. And the Greek Martyrologies, under the " ſixth of May, mention the holy and juſt Job, who " ſtruggled a long while with Satan." A celebrated Proteſtant Divine, who in ſome meaſure took Agrippa's part on this occaſion, obſerves that there is at Utrecht an Hoſpital, in which thoſe that have the foul diſeaſe are taken care of, and which is called Job's Hoſpital. Dici poteſt ad defenſionem Agrippæ, Jobum inter divos tutelares & quidem fœdi iſtius morbi, poſt ejuſdem morbi exortum, demum fuiſſe relatum. Quidquid ſit, tanquam divus alexicacus ab hujus morbi myſtis, annuente Romana Eccleſia, ſalutatur. Hinc in hac urbe Xenodochium S. Jobi olim dominante papatu conſtitutum, ubi illo morbo laborantes curari ſolent (11). i. e. " It may be obſer- " ved, in Agrippa's defence, that Job was choſen, " amongſt all the Saints, for the particular patron of " thoſe that have the foul diſeaſe, after it had began " to rage. However it be, he is worſhipped by them, " with the church of Rome's conſent, as a Saint that " is particularly proper to cure them. Hence it is " that we have in this city (of Utrecht) an Hoſpital " of St. Job, which was built formerly in the time " of Popery, and in which thoſe that have the vene- " rial diſeaſe are taken care of." It is not long ſince they examined at Rome this queſtion, whether Job, and the other Saints of the Old Teſtament, deſerve the ſame worſhip which is paid to thoſe that are canonized, and whether it be proper to build altars to them. Upon which ſee the Acta Sanctorum Maii (12).

(10) Ibid. pag. 69.

(11) Giſb. Voetius, Diſputat.

(12) There is in the Appendix to the 6th and 7th volumes a Diſſertation upon this ſubject. See alſo the Journal des Savans for March 5, 1703, in the account of a book written by Monſ. Baillet.

JODELLE (STEPHEN) a French and Latin Poet in the ſixteenth Century, was born at Paris (a). He was one of the Pleiades invented by Ronſard (b). Some aſcribe to him the invention of thoſe French verſes compoſed after the manner of the Latin verſes, that is to ſay according to the quantity of the ſyllables; but others pretend that Baïf was the firſt who publiſhed that kind of verſes in French (c). It does but little concern their reputation, whether or not the truth of this fact be clearly ſtated, for this invention fell ſoon into contempt. Men have much more reaſons to pretend, that Jodelle was the firſt of all the French who publiſhed Comedies and Tragedies in his own tongue in the ancient form (d). He wrote verſes with an incredible readineſs [A]; and he had alſo ſeveral other

(a) La Croix du Maine, and Du Verdier, Biblioth. Françoiſe.

(b) Baillet, Jugemens ſur les Poetes, Art. 1342, Menage, chap. 110. of the Anti-Baillet.

(c) See the Anti-Baillet, ch. 111.

(d) Du Verdier, Biblioth. Françoiſe, p. 285. See alſo Paſquier, Recherch. liv. 7. chap. 7.

[A] He wrote verſes with an incredible readineſs.] Du Verdier Vau-Privas (1) acquaints us with this in the following words. " He was admirable in one " thing, which is almoſt incredible; it is, that all " that Jodelle ever compoſed was done readily, with- " out any ſtudy, and without any labour: and we " can witneſs, with ſeveral perſons of this time, that " he never ſpent above ten mornings in compoſing " and writing his longeſt and moſt difficult Comedy or " Tragedy; and even his Comedy of Eugene was " compleated

(1) Biblioth. Françoiſe, pag. 286.

other accompliſhments. He was an Orator; he was ſkilled in Architecture, in Sculpture, in the art of Painting, and he could fence very well (e). He uſed to wear a ſword (f), and by his birth he had a right to it [B]. He died in July 1573, at the age of forty one. See the margin (g). The next year his friends publiſhed a Collection of his Works (b). They are in the wrong, who aſſert that he died for want, and that it was a judgment of God upon him for his prophaneneſs [C], and who cry out, Heatheniſm! on account of a certain carnival-entertainment, in which his friends conſecrated a goat to him [D] (α). I dare

(e) Du Verdier, ibid.

(f) Ibid.

(g) Mr. Varilles is miſtaken, who ſuppoſes in his Hiſtoire de Henry III. B. 12. pag. m. 267. that Jodelle was ſtill living under the reign of Henry III. He aſſerts that the ſeven French Poets, who were called Pleiades having been entertained a whole month at that Prince's expence in a Tavern near the gate of Neſle, went out ſinging, Long live Tyranny, we have juſt now ſpent thirty ſix thouſand livres. (b) Du Verdier, Biblioth. Françoiſe, pag. 284, 285.

" compleated in four mornings. When he was but a " youth he has been ſeen to compoſe and write down " for a wager in one night only, five hundred good " Latin verſes, upon a ſubject that was propoſed to " him ex tempore. All his Sonnets, even thoſe that " were made upon given rhymes, were compoſed by " him in his walks, whilſt now and then his thoughts " run upon other things, and he finiſhed them ſo " quickly, that when he recited them, it was thought " he could hardly have begun them." We ought not therefore to wonder that he compoſed ſuch a vaſt number of them. It is reported that he wrote about ten thouſand verſes on Cæſar's paſſing the Rubicon (2). If his friends had publiſhed all his works, to how many thouſand of verſes would they not have amounted? He attempted all ſorts of Poems, as Elogies, Odes, Sonnets, Songs, Inſcriptions, Canticles (3). He wrote a Poem againſt prepoſterous Venery, or the ſin of Sodomy (4).

(2) La Croix du Maine, Biblioth. pag. 78.

(3) Du Verdier, Biblioth. p. 286.

(4) La Croix du Maine, Biblioth. pag. 78.

[B] By his birth he had a right to it.] He was a Gentleman poſſeſſed of a Lordſhip; for he uſed to take the title of Lord of Limodin (5). I believe it was a patrimonial eſtate.

(5) Du Verdier, Biblioth. p. 285. See alſo La Croix du Maine, Biblioth. pag. 78.

[C] They are in the wrong, who aſſert that he died for want, and that it was a judgment of God upon him for his prophaneneſs.] Voëtius relates (6), that having read in Honſdorf's Theatre, that Stephen Jodelle, a French Poet, an Epicurean, and an Atheiſt, ſpent his whole eſtate and died for want (7), he made diligent enquiries to know whether the fact was true or not. But as his library did not afford him ſufficient means to clear up this matter, he reſolved to conſult Rivetus, who told him, that one could not meet with the leaſt ſign of Atheiſm in Jodelle's works, and that on the contrary they contained ſeveral proofs of his orthodoxy; and that the charge of prophaneneſs, laid to Jodelle, had perhaps no other foundation than the ſacrifice of a goat (8), which was offered to him as to the chief amongſt the Tragic Poets; which was done only out of a frolick, if we may believe the author of Ronſard's Life. And yet Rivetus did not dare to determine whether for this ſingle action Jodelle deſerved to paſs for an Atheiſt or not. Voetius ſubmits to his opinion. Like his friend, he would nor have us declare Jodelle guilty of Atheiſm, if we have no ſtronger proofs of it; but at the ſame time he is far from acquitting him, and ſuffers the queſtion to continue problematical. In medio relinquit (Rivetus) an ob idem factum Atheus ſit dicendus, niſi aliunde alia authentica teſtimonia ſuppetant. In cujus ſententia & nos acquieſcimus (9). It is not at all probable that the compiler Honſdorf grounded his aſſertion on the pretended ſacrifice. He gives Jodelle the character of a diſſolute man, who ſquandred away his whole eſtate; and therefore he argues from a continual courſe of ſin, and not from the farce of a pretended ſacrifice, an action which was committed but once, and in which ſeveral other wits, of whom Honſdorf does not ſay a word, were concerned as well as Jodelle. Let us ſay therefore that that honeſt compiler of inſtances of God's judgment has been groſly miſtaken; and yet here we have two famous Divines, who do him the honour to lay as much ſtreſs upon his accuſation void of all kind of proofs, as upon the teſtimonies of orthodoxy which the very books of the accuſed afford. They imagine, they are ſufficiently equitable and juſt, if they do but determine nothing either for or againſt the accuſed. Is this acting according to theſe maxims, Quilibet præſumitur bonus, donec probetur malus; i. e. " All " men muſt be eſteemed to be good, till it be proved " they are bad." Actore non probante abſolvitur reus: i. e. " When the proſecutor does not prove his charge, " the accuſed is acquitted." It muſt be obſerved, that thoſe who tranſcribed from Honſdorf, or thoſe from whom he tranſcribed himſelf, do not come up altogether to the authority of one ſingle witneſs, whilſt they quote no vouchers, or whilſt they only quote each other (10). Upon the whole, I do not pretend to deny that Jodelle died poor (11). I do not know whether Gentilet was not the original author, that was followed by all the compilers, who mention Jodelle as a particular inſtance of God's judgments on the prophane. " One might quote, ſays he (12), an " infinite number of inſtances of God's judgments and " puniſhments on the Atheiſts, deſpiſers of God " and of religion, even in our days; as that of the " tragic Poet Jodelle, whoſe end was really tragical: " for having ſpent and ſquandred away his whole " eſtate, like an Epicurean, he died miſerably for " want." I have met with part of theſe words in a book printed at Morges in the year 1581, and intitled Punitions & Jugumens de Dieu, &c. i. e. " God's " judgments and puniſhments, &c." and in a book printed in the year 1586, and written by John Chaſſanion of Moniſtrol, in the country of Vellay, with this title, Hiſtoires memorables des grands & merveilleux Jugemens & Punitions de Dieu, &c. (13). i. e. " Remarkable Hiſtories of the great and wonderful " Judgments and Puniſhments, inflicted by God, " &c."

(9) Voetius, Diſputat. tom. 1. pag. 137.

(10) You will meet in Konig's Bibliotheque, under the word Jodellius, with this paſſage, Geo. Richterus Gorlicenſis in Axiom. Eccleſ. numero 108. ſeqq. habet: Memoria noſtra Jodellius, tragœdiarum ſcriptor, tragicum exitum invenit: nam luxu, ganea, ſtupris, ex Epicureorum diſciplina, patrimonium cum conſumpſiſſet, miſerrimo genere mortis fame periit.

(11) See the article FINE, remark [D], towards the end.

[D] His friends conſecrated a goat to him.] Claudius Binet (14) will tell you how this farce was acted. " They (15) blame him amongſt other things for " having ſacrificed a goat to Jodelle in the village of " Hercueil (16); but he anſwers this charge ſufficient- " ly himſelf, and the matter of fact was thus: Jo- " delle had cauſed his tragedy of Cleopatra to be " acted before the King; it met with ſo general an " applauſe, that ſome days after the whole band of " Poets meeting in that village, to divert themſelves " and be merry during the holy-days of Shrove-tide, " there was none of them but made ſome verſes in " imitation of the antient Bacchanals: they chanced " to meet with a goat in the ſtreets, which gave them " an opportunity to make a frolick on this occaſion, " becauſe this animal uſed to be offered to Bacchus; " for they made a ſhew of preſenting it to Jodelle as a " reward for his tragedy, according to the cuſtom of " the antients, which even the Chriſtians, and eſpecially " the Poets imitate ſometimes, not that they believe " any of the Heathen ſtories, but by an alluſion, which " in itſelf is by no means unlawful: what made peo- " ple believe, there was ſomething more in this, were " the verſes and jokes of theſe Poets, which were pub- " liſhed, and eſpecially the Dithyrambi of Bertrand " Berger, a Dithyrambic Poet, amongſt which we " read theſe lines . . . All this was only a ſhew, and " a mere farce." The reader will not, perhaps, be diſpleaſed to meet here with the anſwer, which Ronſard himſelf made, and which Binet hints at, without tranſcribing it: it is as follows.

(12) Gentillet, Diſcours ſur les moyens de bien gouverner contre Nicolas Machiavel, Part 2. pag. 179. edit. 1576.

(13) In book 2. chap. 24. pag. 170.

(14) In the Vie de Ronſard, pag. m. 139.

(15) He means two Miniſters, who wrote againſt Ronſard.

(16) I think it ſhould be Arcueil.

Tu dis en vomiſſant deſſur moy ta malice,
Que j'ay fait d'un grand Bouc à Bacchus ſacrifice:
Tu ments impudemment: cinquante gens de bien
Qui eſtoient au banquet diront qu'il n'en eſt rien.
Muſes, qui habitez de Parnaſſe la crope,
Filles de Jupiter, qui allez neuf en trope,
Venez & repouſſez par vos belles chanſons,
L'injure faite à vous & à vos nourriſſons.
Jodelle ayant gaigné par une voix hardie
L'honneur que l'homme Grec donne à la Tragedie,
Pour avoir en hauſſant le bas ſtile François,
Contenté doctement les oreilles des Rois:

La brigade qui lors au ciel levoit la teſte
(Quand le temps permettoit une licence honneſte)
Honorant ſon eſprit gaillard & bien appris,
Luy fit preſent d'un Bouc, des Tragiques le prix.
J'à la nappe eſtoit miſe, & la table garnie
Se bordoit d'une ſaincte & docte compagnie;
Quand deux ou trois enſemble en riant ont pouſſé
Le pere du troupeau à long poil heriſſé:
Il venoit à grands pas ayant la barbe peinte,
D'un chapelet de fleurs la teſte il avoit ceinte,
Le bouquet ſur le oreille, & bien fier ſe ſentoit
Dequoy telle jeuneſſe ainſi le preſentoit:
Puis il fut rejetté pour choſe meſpriſée
Apres qu'il eut ſervy d'une longue riſée,
Et non ſacrifié, comme tu dis menteur,
De telle faulſe bourde impudent inventeur (17).

(17) Ronſard, in his Réponſe à quelque Miniſtre, pag. 92. of the 9th vol. of his Works, of the Paris edition, 1604, in 12mo.

i. e. " You belch out your wicked reproaches againſt " me, and ſay that I have ſacrificed a large goat to " Bacchus! You lie impudently: fifty honeſt men, " who were at the entertainment will declare, that " there was no ſuch thing as a ſacrifice. Muſes, who " dwell on the top of Parnaſſus, daughters of Jupiter, " ye that walk nine in company, come, and by your " beautiful ſons repel the injury that is offered to you, " and to your Bards. Jodelle by his noble poem de- " ſerved the honour which the Greeks uſed to confer " on Tragic Poets; for he exalted and raiſed the low " ſtile of the French, and pleaſed thus the ears of " Kings; whereupon the band of the Poets, who then " lifted up their heads to the ſky, at a time when " they could lawfully indulge themſelves in ſome ho- " neſt freedom, to do honour to his lively genius, and " to his learning, preſented him with a goat, the " uſual prize of Tragedy. The cloth was already " laid, dinner was upon the table, a ſacred and learned " company ſurrounded it ready to ſit down, when two " or three of the band, out of a frolick, drove in the " fire of the rough-bearded flock. It walked in " gravely, with its beard painted, a garland on its " head, and a noſegay on its ear; it was very proud " that ſuch a company of young men ſhould thus pre- " ſent it. It was afterwards rejected as a pitiful " thing, when it had afforded the company a great " deal of mirth for ſome time; but it was not ſacri- " ficed, as you a liar ſay, who have impudently in- " vented this ſcandalous ſlander."

Of whatever party men be, they run upon extremes, and are but too often impoſed upon by popular rumours. The Miniſters did too raſhly and eaſily believe the report that was ſpread concerning Jodelle's goat: and as Ronſard had ſet up for a perſecutor both by his pen and by his ſword, for he wrote againſt the Proteſtants, and fell upon them at the head of the militia, the Miniſters reproached him with the ceremony of this goat, according to the worſt conſtruction that had been put upon it. They objected it to him as if it had been a heatheniſh ſacrifice, and aſſerted that the goat was offered up to a falſe Deity. This was a calumny, but they were not the authors of it. We ſhall now quote Scaliger, who charges a Prieſt with giving riſe to this impoſture; and obſerve particularly that he explodes this pretended ſacrifice as a mere fable. I do not know whether or not he remembered that ſome Miniſters had accuſed Ronſard of it. But I know very well, that he imagined Scioppius, his adverſary, pretended to involve him (Scaliger) in that affair. Here follow his own words.

" Aſt illud, quod adjiciemus, omnia portenta am- " phitheatrica ſuperat. Pariſienſes illos amicos tuos imi- " taris, quos Dionyſia agitaſſe, & hircum immolaſſe " fama eſt. Dionyſia agitare, dicit eſſe hircum im- " molare. Hujus enim inſimulati ſunt illi, de quibus " nunc agitur. Veſpillonis filius, qui nunquam Lute- " tiæ fuit, in media Suburra habitans Romæ, unde hoc " mendacium expiſcari potuit, niſi à quibus reliqua " portenta didicit? Quos putat Dionyſia agitaſſe, vel " hircum immolaſſe, ut illi perſuaſerunt qui verum " dicere, etiam ſi velint, non poſſint, ii ſunt, Petrus " Ronſardus, M. Anton. Muretus, Janus Baïfius, Re- " migius Bellaqueus, Stephanus Jodellus, Nicol. De- " niſottus, Joan. Auratus, alii, omnes Poetæ, præter " Patoletum, qui in hiſtoriis conſcribendis omne ſtu- " dium ſuum collocarat. Quos tam falſum eſt adeo " execrandum, nefandum, impium facinus feciſſe, " quam certum eſt, impune illis futurum non fuiſſe, " ſiquidem tam Chriſtianæ pietatis, quam exiſtimatio- " nis ſuæ obliti, tam deteſtabile ſcelus in ſe admiſiſſent. " Si illi docti viri viverent, fur non inultum tuliſſet. " Porro tam impudentis calumniæ auctor fuit ſacrificu- " lus Gentiliaci vici, in quo illi doctiſſimi viri de conſti " tuto coierant, ut de ſymbolis eſſent. Totum drama ex- " ponerem, ſi opus eſſet, ut Joſephus me docuit, qui " illud ad unguem tenet (18)." i. e. " But what I " have now to add, is more monſtrous than any thing " that can be imagined. You follow the example, " ſays Scioppius to Scaliger, of your friends at Paris, " who celebrated, they ſay, the Bacchanals, and ſa- " crificed a goat. To celebrate the Bacchanals is, he " ſays, to ſacrifice a goat. For the perſons here meant " were ſuſpected of this. This villain, who was ne- " ver at Paris, and lives at Rome, from whom could " he get that lie, but from thoſe who told him the " other monſtrous ſtories? The perſons, whom he " imagines to have celebrated the Bacchanals, or to " have ſacrificed a goat, as they made him believe, " who could not ſay the truth, even if they had a mind " to it, theſe perſons, I ſay, were Peter Ronſard, " M. Anthony Muret, T. Baif, Remi Belleau, Ste- " phen Jodelle, Nichol. Deniſot, John d'Aurat, and " others, all Poets, except Patolet, who applied him- " ſelf entirely to the writing of hiſtory. It is as falſe " that they committed ſuch execrable, abominable " and wicked actions, as it is certain that they would " not have continued long unpuniſhed, had they been " ſo deſtitute of all Chriſtian piety, and ſo little con- " cerned for their own reputation, as to commit this " horrid crime. Had theſe learned men been alive, " the villain would not have eſcaped unpuniſhed. Such " a ſhameful ſlander was invented by a certain Prieſt " of the village of Gentilli, where theſe moſt learned " men had agreed to meet and be merry together. " I would explain the whole farce to you, if it were " neceſſary, as Joſeph told it me, who was perfectly " well acquainted with it." All this is very right; I wiſh that what follows was as reaſonable as this. Sed ponamus verum eſſe. Quid hæc ad Joſephum, qui tunc puer Burdigalæ primis rudimentis Latini ſermonis initiabatur? An quia ſexto poſt, ſeptimo, & octavo anno omnes, præter Jodellum, illos vidit, & familiariter novit, ideo ejuſdem criminis poſtulandus erit? Hoc modo oporteret omnes, qui Muretum norunt, Dionyſia agitaſſe, hoc eſt majorem partem eorum, qui hodie Romæ agunt. Quanta invidia Joſephum premerent, ſi verum crimen haberent, quod illi objicerent, quum aliorum facta, eaque falſa illi exprobrentur (19). i. e. " But ſuppoſe it be " true; what was this to Joſeph Scaliger who was " then but a boy, ſtudying the firſt elements of the " Latin tongue at Bourdeaux? Muſt he be charged " with that crime, becauſe he ſaw them all, except " Jodelle, and was familiarly acquainted with them, " ſix, ſeven, or eight years after the fact was com- " mitted? At this rate, all they that have known " Muretus, that is to ſay, moſt part of thoſe, who are " now living at Rome, muſt alſo have celebrated the " Bacchanals. How odious would they not render " Scaliger, had they ſome true crime to charge him " with, ſince they even reproach him with other men's " actions, and ſuch actions as are abſolutely falſe?" The heat of the controverſy did a little diſturb Scaliger's mind: he clears himſelf of a crime with which he is not charged. He complains of being calumniated, when he is not, and thus he becomes a ſlanderer himſelf (20). To ſay that a man imitates the faults of his good friends, is not pretending to aſſert, that he was with them at ſuch or ſuch a place where they committed ſome crime: on the contrary, it is ſuppoſing that he was not there: for if he had been with them, one would ſtile him an accomplice, and not an imitator. It is not true therefore that Scioppius involved Scaliger in Jodelle's affair (21). Scaliger therefore ought not to have complained of it, nor had he any occaſion to prove that he was at another place, when the fact was committed.

(18) Scaliger, in Conſutat. Fabulæ Burdonum, pag. m. 338, & ſeq.

(19) Scaliger, ubi ſupra, pag. 340.

(20) See the 4th vol. of the Morale Pratique des Jeſuites, chap. xviii.

(21) Pariſienſes illos amicos tuos imitaris. i. e. " You follow the " example of " your friends at " Paris."

* (a) Conſecrated a goat to him.] It was, ſay they, becauſe Jodelle had carried the prize of Tragedy by his Cleopatra. But how does this agree with what we read in the Perroniana, under the word Belleau, where we find, that Cardinal du Perron placed none beneath Jodelle, in matters of Poetry, except becauſe Remi Belleau, who in that Cardinal's opinion, was a very wretched Poet? CRIT. REM.]

I dare not give any credit to what I read in Beza's Life [E]. You will meet with a great many particulars concerning this Poet, in the paſſage which I have quoted from Stephen Paſquier.

[E] I dare not give any credit to what I read in Beza's life.] I have read there that Stephen Jodelle, one of the Poets of the French Pleiades, wrote a ſtanza of four lines upon Beza's (β) falling ſick of the plague, whilſt he was tranſlating the Pſalms into French verſe. The ſtanza is as follows.

Beze fut lors de la peſte accueilli,
Qu'il retouchoit cette harpe immortelle.
Mais pourquoi fut Beze d'elle aſſailli?
Beze aſſailloit la peſte à tous mortelle.

i. e. "Whilſt Beza was touching again the immortal "harp, he was affected with the plague. But why "did the plague aſſault Beza then? Why, Beza was "aſſaulting that plague which proves mortal to all."

Anthony la Faie, who wrote that Miniſter's life (22), gave Jodelle the firname of Modilin. Stephanus Jodellus Modilinus, ſays he, non poſtremus inter poetas Pleiadis Gallicæ, &c. i. e. "Stephen Jodelle Modi- "lin, who was none of the leaſt amongſt the Poets "of the French Pleiades, &c." One may eaſily think, that Modilinus was put inſtead of Limodinus, which title became Jodelle very well on account of his Lordſhip (23). But as this ſtanza is aſcribed to one Stephin de Modelin in ſeveral editions of the Pſalms, in which it is printed with Clement Marot's epitaph, compoſed by the ſame Modelin, I queſtion whether it be Jodelle's. It is not on ſuch an occaſion that an author is called only by an anagrammatical name. I have another reaſon to queſtion it, which is ſtronger ſtill. Beza was at Lauſanne when he fell ſick of the plague. He was therefore looked upon in France as an apoſtate. The perſecution raged terribly againſt the Proteſtants at that time. And can we imagine, that a Poet, who profeſſed the Catholic Religion publicly, would have written an obliging ſtanza to Beza's honour, which is ſo agreeable to the taſte and ſtile of the reformers? However it is certain that Anthony la Faie's opinion has been followed by Andrew Rivetus (24), and by Jeremy de Pours (25).

(22) Melchior Adam has inſerted it almoſt intirely in the volume of the Divines, who were not Germans.

(23) He was Lord of Lymodin.

§ (β) A ſtanza... upon Beza.] This ſtanza may very well have been compoſed by Jodelle in his younger days. He was then of the reformed religion, and at Geneva. And as to the wonderful readineſs, even in verſes extempore, which is aſcribed to him in the remark [A] by Du Verdier, we may obſerve that one night he wrote at Geneva ex tempore an hundred Latin verſes, in which he deſcribed the Maſs with proper Sarcaſms, as an Huguenot writer of thoſe times relates. In all likelihood Jodelle was but indifferently paid for his Poems at Geneva; for all on a ſudden he returned to Paris, and to that Maſs, which he had ſo much cried down in his Latin verſes (26). As the Roman Religion was not in the leaſt become better, ſince Jodelle had thought fit to return to it, this may be the reaſon why the Huguenots called him an impious man, and even an atheiſt: which may alſo be owing in a great meaſure to thirty ſonnets, which he made immediately after the maſſacre committed on St. Bartholomew's day, in order to charge the Miniſters with being the cauſe of the executions, murthers and wars, which had raged in France ſince the beginning of the reformation, and were occaſioned by it. It is reported, continues the ſame author, that for theſe ſonnets Jodelle received a large ſum of money, which he muſt then have ſpent in leſs than a year, if it be true, as it is pretended, that in July following he died for want. As for the name of Modelen or Modilin, Jodelle himſelf did perhaps turn thus, by way of Anagram, the name of his Lordſhip, that he might not plainly appear to be the author of a ſtanza, in which the Roman Catholic Religion was aſperſed, and Beza commended. CRIT. REM.]

(24) He wrote to Voetius, that Stephen Jodelle had commended his Verſion of the Pſalms, and had even communicated to him the ſtanza.

(25) In Book 2. of the Divine Melodie, p. 586. he cites the ſtanza, and aſcribes it to Stephen Jodelle Modelin.

(26) Memoires de l'Eſtat de France, tom. 1. fol. 178, verſo.

(a) Mémoires pour ſervir à l'Hiſtoire Eccleſiaſtique, tom. 1. pag. 910. &c. of the Bruſſels edition in 12mo.

ST. JOHN the Evangeliſt. That I may not tranſcribe what may be found in Moreri or in Monſieur de Tillemont (a), I ſhall only make the following obſervations, I. There was in St. Auguſtin's time a ridiculous tradition concerning the ſtate St. John was in [A]. II. Nothing is more abſurd than the objection that was made againſt the author of the tranſlation printed at Mons [B], with this falſe pretence; that it was not decent

[A] There was in St. Auguſtin's time a ridiculous tradition concerning the ſtate St. John was in] "There "never were any nations more credulous with re- "gard to traditions than thoſe of Aſia; and particu- "larly the Epheſians. St. Auguſtin relates, concern- "ing the ſubject we ſpeak of, a very remarkable ſtory, "which ſhews very plainly the exceſſive credulity of "that people, and the fillineſs of their traditions. He "obſerves that the Epheſians (*), or perſons who "came to Epheſus, and who had a great deal of wit "and merit, and who were not eaſy of belief, non "levibus hominibus, had aſſured him that St. John was "not dead: that he was indeed buried at Epheſus, "but that he lay in his grave like a man who is "aſleep in his bed; and that as one may obſerve the "ſheet and coverlets move up and down, as a man "that ſleeps in breathing; ſo one might perceive the "earth of the grave, in which St. John was buried, "move up and down by intervals. Can there be any "thing more impertinent than ſuch a tale (1)?" I have juſt now read (2), that Monſieur de Tillemont's critic blames him for relating this ſtory and ſeveral others of the ſame kind. He would deſerve to be blamed if he related it as a matter of fact; but he does not give it for ſuch (3); and therefore he is unjuſtly cenſured; for the compilation of errors is a very uſeful part of hiſtory. I confeſs that he ſeems to believe what is related concerning the Manna of our Apoſtle's tomb (4).

(*) Auguſtin. Comment. in Joan. in hæc verba, Diſcipulus hic non moritur.

(1) The Abbé Faidit, Extrait d'un Sermon prêche le jour de St. Polycarpe, p. 30.

(2) Hiſt. des Ouvrages des Savans, for May 1695, pag. 427.

(3) See Tillemont, Memoir. pour ſervir à l'Hiſt. Eccleſ. tom. 1. pag. 947.

(4) Ibid. p. 943.

[B] Nothing is more abſurd than the objection that was made againſt the author of the tranſlation printed at Mons.] Let us firſt tranſcribe the Greek words of the text. Καὶ ἀπ' ἐκείνης τῆς ὥρας ἔλαβεν αὐτὴν ὁ μαθητὴς εἰς τὰ ἴδια (5). That is to ſay, according to the tranſlation printed at Mons. And from that hour the Diſciple took her into his houſe. This tranſlation was criticized upon after the following manner. "It is certain "that St. John, who lived in a ſtate of poverty re- "commended in the Goſpel, had no houſe of his own, "where he could receive the mother of God; and "tho' he had had one, yet there are ſeveral reaſons "of decency and modeſty, which eaſily perſuade us, "that the Virgin would not have thought it proper "to retire thither. Such a conduct might even have "been attended with dangerous conſequences with re- "gard to future ages. For Miniſters, who lead a ſcan- "dalous life, would be very glad if they could juſtify "their own conduct by ſo illuſtrious an inſtance of the "youngeſt and chaſteſt of all the Apoſtles dwelling un- "der the ſame roof with the moſt prudent and moſt "innocent of all the Virgins. Such a fear is not "groundleſs; for St. Epiphanius, who ſeems to ap- "prove the opinion of the tranſlators of Mons, had "the ſame apprehenſion; and he tells us, that ſome "diſſolute perſons had already attempted to juſtify "their ſcandalous way of living, by the example of "the holy Virgin's living at St. John's houſe. Vereor, "ſays he under the ſeventy eighth hereſy, where he "mentions the holy Virgin's dwelling with St. John, "ne hoc ipſum, quod dicimus, fraudi ſit aliquibus, ut ad "contubernales & dilectas, quas vocant fæminas, reti- "nendas, quod genus peſſimo ſibi errore animi, machi- "nati ſunt, fucum indè aliquem, & colorem arceſſiſſe "videantur (6)." i. e. "I fear leſt what I obſerve "here, be dangerous for ſome, who will take from "thence ſome handle and excuſe, to keep their com- "panions and elect women, as they call them, which "is a ſort of cohabitation they have invented by a "moſt dangerous error."

(5) St. John's Goſpel, ch. xix. ver. 27.

(6) Mallet, Examen de quelques Paſſages, p. 121. of the 3d edition.

decent this holy Apoſtle and the Virgin Mary ſhould live together. III. The anſwer that has been made upon this ſubject deſerves to be tranſcribed [C]. IV. There is a great deal of ingenuity in the anſwer, which St. John is ſaid to have made, to juſtify his ſtroaking a Partridge [D]. V. Some perſons pretend that the marriage in Cana, at which the water was turned to wine, was his marriage [E], and that the ſight of [C] ... The anſwer that has been made ... deſerves to be tranſcribed.] For it contains ſome generous principles, very inſtructive to thoſe who have a mind to judge of things according to their true differences. I ſhall not dwell upon the anſwer which relates to St. John's ſtate of poverty; I ſhall only tranſcribe the refutation of the other part of the objection. It is very ſtrange, ſays Monſieur Arnauld (7), that Monſieur Mallet ſhould not have read what the commentators on the holy Scripture have obſerved upon a ſubject which ought to have appeared much more ſcandalous ſtill. It is, that the Apoſtles always carried a Chriſtian woman with them to take care of their maintenance. And yet St. Paul ſays, 1 Cor. xv. 5. (8) they had a power to do it, and that they did it. Upon which Eſtius makes this very judicious reflection, which ſhews us the true principles, according to which we ought to judge of ſuch things, and which Monſieur Mallet ſhould have been acquainted with before he undertook to ſubject the Virgin to his falſe tales of decency. "If you aſk, ſays that learned Divine, "how the Apoſtles could without giving offence, lead "about women, who were not their wives, I anſwer, "that this was a cuſtom ſo common among the Jews, "that our Saviour himſelf did not take it ill that it "ſhould be practiſed even with regard to him. Nor "was it practiſed but by ſuch women, whoſe chaſtity and "piety were ſo well known, and tryed, that there was no "room to ſuſpect them in the leaſt. To which may be "added, that the Apoſtles led ſuch an edifying life, and "had gained ſuch a reputation of holineſs, that though "theſe women followed them, no man would have "dared to judge ill of them, as the Jews never ſuſ- "pected any thing of that kind with regard to Jeſus "Chriſt, how inclined ſoever they were to ſpeak ill "of him, and to ſlander him." Nothing is more reaſonable than this; and it is indeed by ſuch principles we ought to judge, that an action, which otherwiſe might give offence, if it were not attended with ſuch favourable circumſtances as leave not the leaſt room for bad ſuſpicions, has nothing in it but what is really edifying, when it is attended with ſuch circumſtances. Now when ſhall the conſideration of a tryed holineſs be capable to ſilence calumny, and to prevent all ſuſpicions, even in the moſt inconſiderate perſons, who ſuffer themſelves to be eaſily ſwayed to the moſt trifling appearances, if the veneration which the faithful always had for the mother of Jeſus Chriſt, and for his moſt beloved diſciple was not ſufficient to make them judge that theſe two perſons behaved in the moſt holy and innocent manner, when they lived together, according to the expreſs command they had received from the Saviour dying on the croſs ... Monſieur Mallet (9) is the firſt and only perſon, who entertained ſuch a mean notion of the Virgin's holineſs, and of the eſteem the Church had for her, as to imagine that at the age of above fifty years ſhe could not live with an Apoſtle without expoſing her reputation, and that it was an inſtance attended with dangerous conſequences, becauſe it was proper to juſtify the ſuſpicious cohabitation of Miniſters with women, which was prohibited by the Canons. For thus far he carries his hyperbolical fancies againſt the reputation of the Virgin. But if the authors of thoſe Canons had carried their ſuſpicions as far as this man does, who pretends to blame the bleſſed Virgin and St. John, why did they except ſome perſons in their prohibitions, as for inſtance, a mother, ſiſters, and nieces? Did they imagine that inceſts were abſolutely impoſſible? By no means, but being directed by the Holy Ghoſt, and knowing that with regard to general laws, we ought to avoid all extremes, and keep within the bounds of a prudent moderation, which makes us have no regard for ſuch caſes as will hardly ever happen, they judged on the one hand, that the leaſt virtue in the world was ſufficient to prevent a man from being tempted at the ſight of ſuch perſons, becauſe natural modeſty is generally ſtrong enough to ſuppreſs all the motions of luſt with regard to theſe perſons. And on the other hand they conſidered, that men's diſpoſition to judge ill of their neighbours, does ſeldom make them charge others with ſuch odious crimes without very ſtrong proofs; ſo that the authors of the Canons did not think on theſe occaſions there was any room either to dread ſome real evils from them, or to apprehend ill ſuſpicions.

(7) Nouvelle Défenſe de la Traduction, pag. 430.

(8) It is in the 5th verſe of the 9th chapter of the 1ſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, and not of the 15th chapter, as Mr. Arnauld quotes it.

(9) See the Abbé Faidit, Extrait d'un Sermon prêché le jour de S. Polycarpe, p. 37. that the bleſſed Virgin did not go to Epheſus with St. John; he proves it, I ſay, by obſerving, that Celſus who has ſlandered her very much, would certainly have bantered her on account of that journey, upon which however he does not paſs one joke.

[D] There is a great deal of ingenuity in the anſwer St. John ... made to juſtify his ſtroaking a partridge.] A certain hunter ſeemed ſurprized to ſee, that this great Apoſtle, who was ſo venerable by his age and virtue, ſhould ſtoop to ſo mean an amuſement. The Apoſtle aſked him, whether he always kept his bow bent. The hunter replied, that this would ſoon render the bow abſolutely uſeleſs. If to avoid this you unbend it, ſaid St. John, I do the ſame with regard to my mind, and for the like reaſon. I do not believe that this ſtory is very certain, but I imagine, that they who never heard it mentioned, will not be diſpleaſed to know that it is reported. The author of the treatiſe De ludicra Dictione, i. e. "Of writing in a burleſque "ſtile," has inſerted it in his work. His expreſſions being very ſtrong will not be diſagreeable to the learned; I ſhall therefore preſent them with the whole paſſage. Nec malus, ut opinor, interpres Chriſti conſiliorum & voluntatum Joannes diſcipulus, qui ad leves luſus atque oblectamenta puerorum deſcendit ipſe jam ſenior, atque exemplo præivit, quatenus interjungere, & ex quotidianis occupationibus reficere ac recreare mentem liceret. Hunc, manſuefactæ perdici blande & ſuaviter alludentem, quidam cum arcu & ſagittis venator offendit. Quod eum facere cum vehementer miraretur, hominem id ætatis, ſpectatum & cognitum diuturna virtute; ſenſit Joannes, & interrogavit, an illum ipſum, quem gereret, arcum haberet ſemper intentum. Cui ille, nequaquam vero, inquit: flacceſcat & enim arcus, & molliatur intentione perpetua, inutiliſq; fiat. Tum Joannes, Tu, mi homo, arcum remittis ac relaxas, ne inutilis ſit: ego animum, ne ſit inutilis (10). i. e. "St. John, I think, was not a "bad interpreter of Chriſt's advices and commands: "who, when he was very old did not ſcruple to "divert himſelf with the little plays and amuſements "of children, and ſhewed us by his own example, "how we may intermix ſome diverſions with our "daily occupations, in order to unbend and refreſh "the mind. A hunter meeting St. John one day, "whilſt he was playing gently with a tame partridge, "and coaxing of it, &c.

(10) Vavaſſor, de Ludicra Dictione, pag. 285.

[E] Some perſons pretend that the marriage in Cana... was his marriage.] The curious and learned Thomaſius will afford me all the materials of this remark. I wiſh I had the theſis which he cauſed to be maintained publicly (11) concerning St. John's glaſs: but I have only the preface of it (12), which acquaints me with a cuſtom, that was unknown to me; namely, that in great entertainments the gueſts are obliged to drink a glaſs, which is called St. John's glaſs, or cup. This is not done without ſome mixture of ſuperſtition, which came originally from a legend, in which we find that St. John having ſwallowed poiſon, received not the leaſt hurt from it. This is undoubtedly the reaſon why the painters drew him with a cup in his hand. But let us come to the marriage in Cana. The authors of the legends ſuppoſe, I. That St. John the Evangeliſt was the bridegroom, and Mary Magdalen the bride (13). II. That they both agreed not to conſummate their marriage, but to oblige themſelves to live in a perpetual virginity. III. That as ſoon as St. John had ſeen the miracle of the water turned into wine, he devoted himſelf entirely to Jeſus Chriſt's ſervice, and left his bride (14). IV. That Jeſus Chriſt went on purpoſe to that wedding with a deſign to prevent the conſummation of the marriage (15) One thing perplexes them, which is that St. John's virginity did not come up to the higheſt degree of perfection, if he once deſigned to marry. For it is requiſite to a perfect virginity that a perſon ſhould always have been determined to live in a ſtate of continency. Videbatur ejus (virginitatis) laudem hæc fabula non tollere quidem, labefactare tamen, aut in gradum inferiorem detrudere, cùm ea demùm numeris omnibus abſoluta perhibeatur virginitas, quam perpetua incorruptionis nunquam corrupta meditatio pareat (16). To ſolve this objection, they

(11) Jan. 30, 1675.

(12) Printed with ſeveral others at Leipſic in the year 1681. See the Acta Eruditor. Lipſienſ. for the year 1682, pag. 51.

(13) Molanus, lib. 4. de Hiſt. Sacrar. Imaginum, cap. 20. pag. 228. apud Thomaſium, Præf. LXXVIII pag. 511.

(14) Haymo, Part. hiemal. Homel. pag. 207. Baronius, tom. I. Annal. ad ann. 31. num. 30. apud Thomaſ. ibid. pag. 512.

(15) Meffret. de Sanctis, Serm. 30. folio 53. apud eundem, ibid.

(16) Thomaſius, ibid. he quotes Pelbertus de Temeſwar, de Sanctis, Serm. 30.

of this miracle made him renounce the uſe of marriage, and live in celibacy all his life time.

they obſerve amongſt other things, that Divine Providence ordered things thus, with an intention to extol the merit of St. John's virginity, ſince by that means it is become entirely like that of the bleſſed Virgin, and has been conſecrated, having been united with marriage, which is one of the ſeven ſacraments. Quin ergo potiùs ita cogitemus, decuiſſe, ut eodem virginitatis gradu collocaretur Apoſtolus, quo Virgo mater, quæ ipſi erat à Chriſto monituro commendanda? Quid, quod ita demùm conſecrari virginitas cenſenda eſt, ſi cum ceremoniâ matrimoniali conjungatur? Neque enim virginitas, ſed conjugium eſt in numero ſacramentorum (17). i. e. "Why then ſhould we think, that this was intended to "place the Apoſtle's virginity in the ſame rank with "that of the Mother Virgin, whom Chriſt dying recommended to him? Why, Is not virginity then only to "be eſteemed ſacred, when it is united with the matrimonial ceremony? For virginity is not of the number of ſacraments, but matrimony." Let us not forget to obſerve that Baronius and Molanus explode theſe traditions of the writers of legends. Thomaſius quotes their words (18), and he obſerves with ſome probability, that Abdias's book was the firſt ſpring of all theſe fine ſtories. This fictitious Abdias aſſerts, that Jeſus Chriſt diſſuaded St. John three times from marrying. The authors of two prefaces prefixed to St. John's Goſpel, do only aſſert in general that Jeſus Chriſt made him alter the reſolution he had taken to marry. Theſe two prefaces (19) are falſely aſcribed, the one to St. Jerom, and the other to St. Auguſtin. As there never were any authors more bold than they who compiled the lives of the ſaints, they would be more poſitive than the authors of thoſe prefaces; and for that purpoſe they have ſuppoſed a time and place, that is to ſay, the marriage in Cana, wherein Jeſus Chriſt freed his diſciple from the marriage engagement. Thomaſius does not in the leaſt queſtion this Apoſtle's virginity; it is grounded on a pretty good tradition, ſupported by the authority of St. Jerome, St. Auguſtin, St. Epiphanius, &c. But Baronius is in the wrong to quote alſo St. Ignatius, who ſpeaks only of St. John the Baptiſt (20).

(17) Thomaſius, ibid. pag. 515. He quotes Pelbart. ibid. and Franc. Maro, Serm. de Sanctis, pag. 30.

(18) Tranſcribed from the places quoted above.

(19) Quas conjunctas exhibet quarta pars Gloſſæ in Biblia ordinariæ. Thomaſ. ibid. pag. 516.

(20) See the proof of this in Thomaſius, ibid. pag. 518.

☞JOHNSON or JONSON (*) BENJAMIN) one of the greateſt Engliſh Dramatic Poets in the 17th Century, was ſon of a Clergyman (a), and born at Weſtminſter (b) about the year 1575 [A]. He was firſt educated in a private ſchool in the Church of St. Martin's in the Fields (c); and then removed to Weſtminſter-ſchool, where Camden was his maſter [B]. Thence his mother, who had married to her ſecond huſband a Bricklayer, took him home, and obliged him to work at his father's trade. At laſt being pitied by ſome generous Gentlemen, he received aſſiſtance from them; and by Camden's intereſt was recommended to Sir Walter Ralegh, whoſe ſon he attended in his adventures [C]; by which means gaining a knowledge of the world, his converſation was greatly deſired. Upon their return home, Mr. Johnſon and his pupil parted, not in cold blood; and thereupon our author went to the Univerſity of Cambridge, where he was ſtatutably elected into St. John's College; but what continuance he made there, is uncertain [D]. This is Mr. Wood's account. But Fuller tells us (d), that he ſtaid there but a few weeks for want of farther maintenance, being forced to return to the trade of his father-in-law; and worked at the new ſtructure of Lincoln's-Inn, with a trowel in his hand, and a book in his pocket. Here he was taken notice of by ſome Gentlemen, who enabled him to proſecute his ſtudies, which he did with ſuch vigour and ſucceſs, that he ſoon became eminent for his admirable dramatic writings. Wood affirms (e), that upon his leaving Cambridge, he entered himſelf in an obſcure Play-houſe, called, The Green Curtain, about Shoreditch or Clerkenwell, but that his firſt action and writing there were both ill. Shakeſpear is ſaid

(*) Thus he writes his name.

(a) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 608. 2d edit. London 1721.

(b) Ibid. and Hiſt. & Antiq. Univ. Oxon. lib. 2. pag. 273. and Fuller's Worthies, in Weſtminſter.

(c) Sir Thomas Pope Blount's Characters and Cenſures of the moſt conſiderable Poets, whether antient or modern, pag. 105. edit. London 1694 in 4to.

(d) Worthies, in London.

(e) Ath. Oxon. col. 608.

[A] Born in the year 1575.] Mr. Wood (1), Sir Thomas Pope Blount (2), and Mr. Gerard Langbaine (3) aſſert, that he was in his ſixty third year, when he died Auguſt the 16th 1637.

(1) Athen. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 609.

(2) Characters and Cenſures of the moſt conſiderable Poets; whether antient or modern, pag. 105.

(3) Account of the Engliſh Dramatick Poets, pag. 305. edit. Oxford 1691.

[B] Removed to Weſtminſter School, where Camden was his Maſter.] He dedicated his Comedy, intitled Every man in his Humour, acted in 1598, to Mr. Camden; and in the dedication he writes thus. "There "are no doubt a ſupercilious race in the world, who "will eſteem all offices done you in this kind, an "injurie, ſo ſolemne a vice it is with them to uſe "the authoritie of their ignorance to the crying downe "of poetry, or the profeſſors. But my gratitude muſt "not leave to correct their errour, ſince I am "none of thoſe, that can ſuffer the benefits conferred "upon my youth, to periſh with my age... I pray "you, accept this, ſuch wherein neither the confeſſion "of my manners ſhall make you bluſh, nor of my "ſtudies repent you to have been the inſtructer." And our author's fourteenth epigram begins thus;

"Camden, moſt reverend head, to whom I owe
"All that I am in arts, all that I know;
"(How nothing's that!) to whom my countrey owes
"The great renowne and name wherewith ſhe
"goes."

[C] By Camden's intereſt was recommended to Sir Walter Ralegh, whoſe ſon he attended in his Adventures.] This is the account of Mr. Wood (4); but there is ſome difficulty in it. For if this happened before Ben. Johnſon applied himſelf to acting or writing of plays, as Mr. Wood aſſerts, then Sir Walter's eldeſt ſon, Walter, who was born in 1594, was ſcarce old enough to go to ſchool, much leſs upon adventures. Beſides this ſon never made, that we can hear of, more than one adventure abroad, which was with his father to Guiana in 1617, in which he was killed; and therefore he could not part with his attendant or companion Ben. Johnſon, in the manner Mr. Wood intimates he did after his return. If we ſuppoſe it the other brother, Carew, who was born in 1604, he never made any adventures at all, nor went out of England till ſix years after his father's death, and then only upon a ſhort tour for about a twelvemonth; which was near thirty years after Ben. Johnſon became a Dramatic Poet, and when he had written himſelf into a penſion from the crown, or otherwiſe into eaſy circumſtances, as render it unlikely, that he ſhould attend even on Carew Ralegh in thoſe ſorrows and difficulties he was then under (5).

(4) Ubi ſupra, col. 608.

[D] Statutably elected into St. John's College.] This we are informed of by Mr. Wood (6). The reverend and learned Mr. Thomas Baker, author of the Reflections on Learning, has conſulted the Regiſter of the Univerſity of Cambridge, to ſee whether our Ben. Johnſon's name appears in the liſt of thoſe, who have been matriculated; but finds a neglect in the book for about ten or twelve years together, in which time he ſuppoſes him to have been admitted. In the books of St. John's College no account was kept for a long time of thoſe who were admitted, but only of thoſe who took ſcholarſhips; ſo that Ben. Johnſon is not to be met with either in the public or private regiſters. Mr. Baker ſays, that there has been always a tradition handed down, that he was of St. John's College; that he was probably entered a Sizar; and that he made but a ſhort ſtay. There are ſeveral books in the Library of that College with his name in them, and given by him to the College.

(5) See Mr. Oldys's Life of Sir Walter Ralegh, pag. 172.

(6) Athen. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 608.

ſaid to have firſt introduced him into the world; for Mr. Johnſon, who was at that time altogether unknown to the public, having offered one of his plays to the Players, in order to have it acted, the perſons, into whoſe hands it was put, after having turned it careleſly and ſuperciliouſly over, were juſt upon returning it to him with an ill-natured anſwer, that it would be of no ſervice to their company; when Shakeſpear luckily caſt his eye upon it, and found ſomething ſo well in it as to engage him firſt to read it through, and afterwards to recommend Mr. Johnſon and his writings to the public (f). His firſt printed dramatic performance was a Comedy, intitled, Every Man in his Humour, acted in 1598 by the Lord Chamberlain's ſervants. The year following his Every Man out of his Humour was acted [E]; as were his Cynthia's Revels, or, The Fountain of Self-Love [F], in 1600; his Poetaſter [G] in 1601; his Sejanus's Fall [H] in 1602; his Volpone, or the Fox in 1605; his Silent Woman [K] in 1609 and his

(f) Mr. Rowe's Account of the Life of Mr. William Shakeſpear, prefixed to Shakeſpear's Works in 8vo.

[E] The year following his Every Man out of his Humour was acted.] It was acted by the Lord-Chamberlain's ſervants, with allowance of the Maſter of the Revels; and dedicated to the nobleſt Nurſeries of Humanity and Liberty in the Kingdom, The Inns of Court.

[F] Cynthia's Revels: or the Fountain of Self-Love.] He ſtiles it a Comical Satyre. It was acted by the children of Queen Elizabeth's Chapel with the allowance of the Maſter of the Revels, and dedicated to The ſpecial Fountain of Manners, the Court.

[G] His Poetaſter.] This Comical Satyr was acted by the children of her Majeſty's Chapel, and dedicated to The virtuous and his worthy friend Mr. Richard Martin. Our author having under the character of Criſpinus ſatyrized Mr. Thomas Decker, the latter wrote his Satyromaſtix: or the untruſſing the humorous Poet, a Comical Satyr, preſented publickly by the Right Honourable the Lord-Chamberlaine's Servants, and privately by the Children of St. Paul's: printed at London, 1602 in 4to, and dedicated to the world. Mr. Johnſon is repreſented in it under the character of Horace Junior. In the Epiſtle Dedicatory Mr. Decker ſays: "Horace trailed his Poetaſters to the bar; the Poetaſters untruſſed Horace; how worthily either, or wrongfully leave it to the jury. Horace queſtionleſs made himſelf believe, that his Burgonian wit might deſperately challenge all comers, and that none durſt take up the foils againſt him. It is likely, if he had not ſo believed, he had not been ſo deceived, for he was anſwered at his own weapons; and if before Apollo himſelf, who is Coronator Poetarum, an inquiſition ſhould be taken touching this lamentable merry murdering of innocent Poetry, all mount Helicon to Bun-hill, would find it on the Poetaſter's ſide, ſe defendendo."

[H] His Sejanus's Fall.] It was acted by the King's ſervants, with the allowance of the Maſter of the Revels, and printed at London in 1605 in 4to, under this title, Sejanus his Fall. Written by Ben. Jonſon. In this edition there is a Preface to the Readers, omitted in the other editions, in which he writes thus. "If it be objected, that what I publiſh is no true Poem, in the ſtrict laws of time, I confeſs it; as alſo in the want of a proper chorus, whoſe habite and moodes are ſuch and ſo difficult, as not any, whome I have ſeene ſince the auntients, no not they who have moſt preſently affected lawes, have yet come in the way of. Nor is it needful or almoſt poſſible in theſe our times, and to ſuch auditors, as commonly things are preſented, to obſerve the ould ſtate and ſplendour of Dramatick Poemes, with preſervation of any popular delight. But of this I ſhall take more ſeaſonable cauſe to ſpeak in my obſervations upon Horace his Art of Poetry, which, with the text tranſlated, I intend ſhortly to publiſh. In the meane time, if in truth of argument, dignity of perſons, gravity and height of elocution, fulneſſe and frequencie of ſentence, I have diſcharged the other offices of a tragic writer; let not the abſence of theſe formes be imputed to me, wherein I ſhall give you occaſion hereafter (and without my boaſt) to thinke I could better preſcribe than omit the due uſe, for want of a convenient knowledge. The next is, leaſt in ſome nice noſtril the quotations (7) might ſavour affected, I doe let you know, that I abhor nothing more, and have only done it to ſhew my integrity in the ſtory, and ſave my ſelfe in theſe common torturers, that bring all wit to the rack, whoſe noſes are ever like ſwine, ſpoyling and rooting up the Muſes gardens, and their whole bodies, like moles, as blindly working under earth to caſt any the leaſt hilles upon vertue .... Laſtly I would informe you, that this booke in all numbers is not the ſame with that which was acted on the publike ſtage, wherein a ſecond pen had a good ſhare, in place of which I have rather choſen to put weaker (and no doubt leſſe pleaſing) of mine own, then to defraud ſo happy a genius of his right by my lothed uſurpation. Fare you well: and if you read farder of me, and like, I ſhall not be afraid of it, though you praiſe me out:

—— Neque enim mihi cornea Fibra eſt.

"But that I ſhould plant my felicity in your generall ſaying good or well, &c. were a weakneſſe, which the better ſort of you might worthily contemn, if not abſolutely hate me for.

"BEN. JOHNSON, and no ſuch,

"Quem Palma negata macrum; donata reducit opimum."

(7) Theſe are omitted in the ſubſequent editions.

To this edition are prefixed commendatory poems by George Chapman, Hugh Holland, Th. R. (8), John Marſton, William Strachey, ΦΙΛΟΕ, Ev. B.

(8) Probably Sir Thomas Roe.

[I] His Volpone, or the Fox.] It was acted by the King's ſervants, and dedicated to the two Univerſities in this form: To the moſt noble and moſt equal Siſters, the two famous Univerſities, for their love and acceptance ſhewn to his Poem in the preſentation, Ben. Jonſon, the grateful acknowledger, dedicates both it and himſelf. It is written in imitation of the Comedy of the antients, and the argument is formed into an acroſtich, like thoſe of Plautus, which are ſaid to be made by Priſcian, or ſome other antient Grammarian.

[K] His Silent woman.] It was acted by the children of her Majeſty's Revels, with the allowance of the Maſter of the Revels, and dedicated to The truly noble by all titles, Sir Francis Stuart. Mr. Dryden (9) has given us an examen of this Play, which he ſtiles the Pattern of a perfect Play (10). He obſerves with regard to the length of the action, that it is ſo far from exceeding the compaſs of a natural day, that it takes not up an artificial one. "It is all included in the limits of three hours and an half, which is no more than is required for the preſentment on the ſtage. A beauty perhaps not much obſerved; if it had, we ſhould not have looked on the Spaniſh tranſlation of five hours with ſo much wonder. The ſcene of it is laid in London; the latitude of place is almoſt as little as you can imagine; for it lies all within the compaſs of two houſes, and after the firſt act, in one. The continuity of ſcenes is obſerved more than in any of our Plays, except his own Fox and Alchymiſt. They are not broken above twice or thrice at moſt, in the whole Comedy; and in the two beſt of Corneille's Plays, the Cid and Cinna, they are interrupted once. The action of the Play is intirely one, the end or aim of which is the ſettling Moroſe's eſtate on Dauphine. The intrigue of it is the greateſt and moſt noble of any pure unmixed Comedy in any language: you ſee in it many perſons of various characters and humours, and all delightful. As firſt Moroſe, or an old man, to whom all noiſe but his own talking is offenſive. Some, who would be thought Critics, ſay this humour

(9) Eſſay of Dramatick Poeſy, pag. 33, & ſeqq. edit. London 1693 in 4to.

(10) Ibid. p. 31.

" mour of his is forced: but to remove that objection, " we may conſider him, firſt, to be naturally of a delicate hearing, as many are to whom all ſharp ſounds " are unpleaſant; and ſecondly, we may attribute " much of it to the peeviſhneſs of his age, or the wayward authority of an old man in his own houſe, " where he may make himſelf obeyed; and to this " the Poet ſeems to allude in his name Moroſe. Beſides this, I am aſſured from divers perſons, that " Ben. Johnſon was actually acquainted with ſuch a " man, one altogether as ridiculous as he is here repreſented. Others ſay it is not enough to find one " man of ſuch an humour; it muſt be common to " more; and the more common the more natural. " To prove this, they inſtance in the beſt of comical " characters, Falſtaff. There are many men reſembling him; old, fat, merry, cowardly, drunken, " amorous, vain, and lying. But to convince theſe " people, I need but tell them, that humour is the ridiculous extravagance of converſation, wherein one " man differs from all others. If then it be common, " or communicated to many, how differs it from " other men's? Or what indeed cauſes it to be ridiculous ſo much as the ſingularity of it? As for Falſtaff, he is not properly one humour, but a miſcellany of humours, images drawn from ſo many ſeveral men; that wherein he is ſingular is his wit, or " thoſe things he ſays præter expectatum, unexpected " by the audience; his quick evaſions, when you " imagine him ſurprized, which as they are extremely " diverting of themſelves, ſo receive a great addition " from his perſon; for the very ſight of ſuch an unweildy, old, debauched fellow is a Comedy alone."

(11) Pag. 35. Mr. Dryden obſerves (11), that beſides Moroſe, " there " are at leaſt nine or ten different characters and humours in the Silent Woman, all which perſons have " ſeveral concernments of their own, yet all uſed by " the Poet to the conducting of the main deſign to " perfection. I will not waſte time in commending the writing of this Play, but I will give my opinion, that there is more wit and acuteneſs of fancy " in it, than in any of Ben. Johnſon's. Beſides, that " he has here deſcribed the converſation of Gentlemen " in the Perſons of True-Wit and his friends, with " more gaiety, air, and freedom, than in the reſt of " his Comedies. For the contrivance of the plot, it " is extreme elaborate, and yet withall eaſy; for the " λύσις or untying of it, it is ſo admirable, that when " it is done, no one of the audience would think the " Poet could have miſſed it; and yet it was concealed ſo much before the laſt ſcene, that any other way would ſooner have entered into your " thoughts. But I dare not take upon me to commend the fabric of it, becauſe it is altogether ſo full " of art, that I muſt unravel every ſcene in it to " commend it as I ought. And this excellent contrivance is ſtill the more to be admired, becauſe it is " Comedy, where the perſons are only of common " rank, and their buſineſs private, not elevated by " paſſions or high concernments, as in ſerious plays. " Here every one is a proper judge of all he ſees; " nothing is repreſented but that with which he daily converſes: ſo that by conſequence all faults lie open " to diſcovery, and few are pardonable. It is this " which Horace has judiciouſly obſerved:

" Creditur ex medio quia res arceſſit habere
" Sudoris minimum, ſed habet Comœdia tanto
" Plus oneris, quanto veniæ minus.

" But our Poet, who was not ignorant of theſe difficulties, has made uſe of all advantages; as he who deſigns a large leap, takes his riſe from the higheſt " ground. One of thoſe advantages is that, which " Corneille has laid down as the greateſt, which can " arrive to any Poem, and which he himſelf could " never compaſs above thrice in all his plays, viz. the " making choice of ſome ſignal and long-expected " day, whereon the action of the Play is to depend. " This day was that deſigned by the Dauphine for the " ſettling of his uncle's eſtate upon him, which to compaſs he contrives to marry him. That the marriage had been plotted by him long beforehand, is " made evident by what he tells True-Wit in the ſecond act, that in one moment he had deſtroyed " what he had been raiſing many months. There is " another artifice of the Poet, which I cannot here " omit, becauſe by the frequent practice of it in his " Comedies, he has left it to us almoſt as a rule; that " is, when he has any character or humour, wherein " he would ſhew a Coup de Maitre, or his higheſt ſkill, " he recommends it to your obſervation by a pleaſant " deſcription of it before the perſon firſt appears. Thus " in Bartholomew-Fair he gives you the pictures of " Numps and Cokes, and in this thoſe of Daw, Lafoole, " Moroſe, and the Collegiate Ladies; all which you " hear deſcribed before you ſee them, ſo that before " they come upon the ſtage you have a longing expectation of them, which prepares you to receive them " favourably; and when they are there, even from " their firſt appearance, you are ſo far acquainted with " them, that nothing of their humour is loſt to you. " I will obſerve yet one thing further of this admirable plot; the buſineſs of it riſes in every act: the " ſecond is greater than the firſt; the third than the " ſecond, and ſo forward to the fifth. There too you " ſee, till the very laſt ſcene, new difficulties ariſing " to obſtruct the action of the play; and when the " audience is brought into deſpair, that the buſineſs " can naturally be effected, then, and not before, the " diſcovery is made. But that the Poet might entertain you with more variety all this while, he reſerves " ſome new characters to ſhew you, which he opens " not till the ſecond and third act; in the ſecond, " Moroſe, Daw, the Barber, and Otter; in the third " the Collegiate Ladies; all which he moves afterwards in by-walks or under plots, as diverſions to " the main deſign, leſt it ſhould grow tedious, though " they are ſtill naturally joined with it, and ſomewhere or other ſubſervient to it. Thus, like a " ſkillful Cheſs-player, by little and little he draws " out his men, and makes his pawns of uſe to his " greater perſons. If this Comedy, and ſome others " of his were tranſlated into French proſe, (which " would now be no wonder to them, ſince Moliere has " lately given them plays out of verſe, which have " not diſpleaſed them) I believe, the controverſy would " ſoon be decided between the two nations, even " making them the judges." Mr. Gildon having obſerved (12), that " a comic character can never be va- (12) Laws of Poetry explained and illuſtrated, pag. 246. edit. London 1721, in 8vo.
" luable, that is not general, and that thoſe that are " only particular yield no inſtruction; tells us, that " it was a very odd defence, that he heard a great " Poet once give for the Moroſe of Ben. Johnſon, " which was that Ben. knew a certain perſon of that " extravagant humour. But Ben. was too judicious " a Poet to take the ſingle extravagance of any one " perſon to be a juſt character for comic repreſentation." Mr. Congreve in his Letter to Mr. Dennis about humour gives a much better defence of our author upon this head, and ſhews, that Moroſe is not a particular, but general character. " The character " of Moroſe, ſays he, in the Silent Woman, I take to " be a character of humour, and I choſe to inſtance " this character to you from many others of the ſame " author, becauſe I know it has been condemned by " many as unnatural and farce; and you have yourſelf hinted ſome diſlike of it for the ſame reaſon, " in a letter to me concerning ſome of Johnſon's Plays. " Let us ſuppoſe Moroſe to be a man naturally ſplenetic and melancholy; is there any thing more offenſive to one of ſuch a diſpoſition than noiſe and clamour? Let any man that has the ſpleen (and " there are enough in England) be judge. We " ſee common examples of this humour in little " every day. It is ten to one but three parts in " four of the company that you dine with, are diſcompoſed and ſtartled at the cutting of a cork, or ſcratching a plate with a knife. It is a proportion of the " ſame humour that makes ſuch or any other noiſe " offenſive to the perſons that hear it; for there are " others, who will not be diſturbed at all by it. " Well! but Moroſe, you will ſay, is ſo extravagant, " he cannot bear any diſcourſe or converſation above " a whiſper. Why, it is his exceſs of this humour, " that makes him become ridiculous, and qualifies his " character, for Comedy. If the Poet had given him " but a moderate proportion of that humour, it is " odds but half the audience would have ſided with " the character and condemned the author for expoſing " a humour, which was neither remarkable nor ridiculous. Beſides the diſtance of the ſtage requires the " figure his Alchymiſt [L] in 1610; and his Catiline's Conſpiracy [M] in 1611. The reſt of his writings we ſhall give an account of in the note [N]. By the invitation of Dr. Richard Corbet, afterwards Dean of Chriſt-Church in Oxford, and Biſhop of that See, and others of his friends, he reſided for ſome time in that College, where he wrote ſeveral of his Plays (g); and on the 19th of July 1619 was created Maſter of Arts (*). Upon the death of Mr. Samuel Daniel in October that year, he ſucceeded him in the place of Poet

(g) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 609.

(*) Idem, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 215.

" figure repreſented to be ſomething larger than the " life; and ſure a picture may have features larger in " proportion, and yet be very like the original. If " this exactneſs of quantity were to be obſerved in " wit, as ſome would have it in humour, what would " become of thoſe characters, that are deſigned for " men of wit? I believe, if a Poet ſhould ſteal a " dialogue of any length from the ex tempore diſ- " courſe of the two wittieſt men upon earth, he would " find the ſcene but coldly received by the town.

[L] His Alchymiſt.] It was acted by the King's ſervants, and dedicated to The Lady moſt deſerving her Name and Blood, the Lady Mary Wroth. It is an excellent Comedy. Mr. Dryden ſuppoſes, that this Play was copied from the Comedy of Albumazer, as far as concerns the character of the Alchymiſt, as appears from his Prologue to Albumazer reviv'd at the King's Houſe, where he ſays,

Subtle was got by our Albumazer,
That Alchymiſt by this Aſtrologer:
Here he was faſhion'd, and we may ſuppoſe
He lik'd the faſhion well, who wore the cloaths.

[M] His Catiline's Conſpiracy.] It was acted by the King's ſervants, and dedicated to The great Example of Honour and Virtue, the moſt noble William Earl of Pembroke. He has borrowed very much from the antients in this Tragedy; as for inſtance, the part of Sylla's Ghoſt, in the very entrance of the Play, is copied from the Ghoſt of Tantalus in the beginning of Seneca's Thyeſtes. And he has tranſlated a great deal of Saluſt's Hiſtory, and inſerted it into his Play.

[N] The reſt of his dramatic writings we ſhall give an account of in the note.] I. Caſe is alter'd; a pleaſant Comedy, ſundry times acted by the Children of Black-Fryars. London, 1609, in 4to. II. Bartholomew Fair, a Comedy acted at the Hope on the Bank-ſide, October 31, in the year 1614, by the Lady Elizabeth's ſervants. Dedicated to King James I. III. Devil is an Aſs, a Comedy acted in the year 1616, by his Majeſty's ſervants. IV. Staple of News, a Comedy acted in the year 1625, by his Majeſty's ſervants. V. The Magnetick Lady, or Humours reconciled, a Comedy, acted at Black-Fryars. Dr. Alexander Gill, who ſucceeded his father, in 1635, in the Maſterſhip of St. Paul's School, wrote a Satyr againſt this Play, in which are the following lines.

" But to adviſe thee, Ben, in this ſtrict age
" A Brick-kiln's better for thee than a ſtage:
" Thou better know'ſt a groundſil for to lay,
" Than lay the plot or ground-work of a Play;
" And better canſt direct to cap a chimney,
" Than to converſe with Clio or Polyhymny.
" Fall then to work in thy old age again;
" Take up thy trug and trowell, gentle Ben;
" Let Plays alone; or if thou needs wilt write,
" And thruſt thy feeble Muſe into the light;
" Let Lowen ceaſe, and Taylor ſcorn to touch
" The loathed ſtage, for thou haſt made it ſuch."

Our author anſwered him thus:

" Shall the proſperity of a pardon ſtill
" Secure thy railing rhymes, infamous Gill,
" At libelling? ſhall no Star-Chamber Peers,
" Pillory, nor whip, nor want of ears,
" All which thou haſt incurr'd deſervedly;
" Nor derogation from the Miniſtry,
" To be the Denis of thy father's ſchool,
" Keep in thy bawling wit, thou bawling fool?
" Thinking to ſtir me, thou haſt loſt thy end;
" I'll laugh at thee, poor wretched tike; go, ſend
" Thy blotant Muſe abroad, and teach it rather
" A tune to drown the balads of thy father.
" For thou haſt nought to cure his fame,
" But tune and noiſe, the eccho of his ſhame:
" A rogue by ſtatute, cenſur'd to be whipt,
" Cropt, branded, ſlit, neck-ſtock'd; go, you are
" ſtript."

VI. A Tale of a Tub, a Comedy. VII. The Widow, a Comedy, acted at the Private Houſe in Black-Fryars with great applauſe, by his late Majeſty's ſervants. This was written by our author, in conjunction with Mr. Fletcher and Mr. Middleton, and firſt publiſhed by Mr. Alexander Gough at London, 1652, in 4to. VIII. Mortimer's Fall, a fragment of a Tragedy, left imperfect at his death. IX. The New Inn, or the Light Heart; a Comedy, as it was never acted, but moſt negligently played by ſome, the King's ſervants, and more ſqueamiſhly beheld and cenſured by others, the King's ſubjects, 1629. Now at laſt ſet at liberty to the Readers, his Majeſty's ſervants and ſubjects, to be judged of. London, 1631, in 8vo. To the edition of this Play he ſubjoined the following Ode.

The juſt indignation the author took at the vulgar cenſure of his play by ſome malicious ſpectators, begat the following Ode to himſelf.

Come, leave the loathed ſtage,
And the more loathſome age;
Where pride and impudence, in faſhion knit,
Uſurp the chair of wit:
Indicting and arraigning every day
Something they call a Play.
Let their faſtidious, vain
Commiſſion of the brain,
Run on, and rage, ſweat, cenſure, and condemn:
They were not made for thee, leſs thou for them.

Say that thou pour'ſt them wheat,
And they will acorns eat:
'Twere ſimple fury ſtill thy ſelf to waſte
On ſuch as have no taſte.
To offer them a ſurfeit of pure bread,
Whoſe appetites are dead!
No, give them grains their fill,
Huſks, draff, to drink and ſwill.
If they love lees, and leave the luſty wine,
Envy them not their palates with the ſwine.

No doubt ſome muſty tale
Like Pericles (13), and ſtale
As the Shrieve's cruſt, and naſty as his fiſh-
Scraps out of every diſh,
Thrown forth, and rack'd into the common tub,
May keep up the Play-Club.
There ſweepings do as well
As the beſt order'd meal.
For who the reliſh of theſe gueſts will fit,
Needs ſet them but the alms-baſket of wit.

And much good do't you then;
Brave pluſh and velvet men
Can feed on orts; and ſafe in your ſtage cloths
Dare quit upon your oaths
The ſtagers and the ſtage-wrights too (your Peers)
Of larding your large ears
With their foul comic ſtocks,
Wrought upon twenty blocks;
Which if they're torn, and turn'd, and patch'd enough,
The gameſters ſhare your guilt, and you their ſtuff.

Leave things ſo proſtitute,
And take the Alcaic lute;
Or thine own Horace, or Anacreon's lyre:
Warm thee by Pindar's fire;
And tho' thy nerves be ſtruck, and blood be cold,
E'er years have made thee old,
Strike that diſdainful heat
Throughout, to their defeat,

(13) A Play publiſhed under Shakeſpeare's name, tho' unworthy of it.

As

Poet Laureat to his Majeſty (b). Sir Thomas Pope Blount tells us (i), that "he was ge"nerally eſteemed a man of a very free temper, and withall blunt, and ſomewhat
"haughty to thoſe, that were either rivals in fame, or enemies to his writings; other-
"wiſe of a good ſociable humour, when amongſt his friends in the Apollo (k) [O]."
We ſhall give the reſt of his character from ſeveral authors in the note [P]. He aſſiſted Dr.

(b) Idem, Ath. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 447.

(i) Ubi ſupra, pag. 106.

(k) A room in the old Devil Tavern near Temple Bar.

As curious fools, and envious of thy ſtrain
May bluſhing ſwear no palſy's in thy brain.

But when they hear thee ſing
The glories of thy King
His zeal to God, and his juſt awe o'er men;
They may blood-ſhaken then,
Feel ſuch a fleſh quake to poſſeſs their powers,
As they ſhall cry like ours,
In ſounds of peace and wars
No harp e'er hit the ſtars,
In tuning forth the acts of his ſweet reign,
And raiſing Charles's Chariot 'bove his wain.

Mr. Feltham wrote a ſevere reply to this Ode; the ſecond ſtanza of which is as follows:

"'Tis known you can do well,
"And that you do excell
"As a tranſlator. But when things require
"A genius and a fire,
"Not kindled heretofore by others pains;
"As oft y'ave wanted brains
"And art to ſtrike the white,
"As you have levell'd right.
"Yet if men vouch not things apocryphal,
"You bellow, rave, and ſpatter round your gall."

Mr. Thomas Randolph wrote an anſwer to Mr. Johnſon's Ode to perſuade him not to leave the ſtage; and Mr. Carew has another copy of verſes to him on the ſame occaſion. X. Entertainment of King James in paſſing to his Coronation; in proſe and verſe. XI. Entertainment of the Queen and Prince at Althrope at the Lord Spencer's on Saturday being the twenty fifth of June 1603 as they came firſt into the Kingdom. XII. Entertainment in private of the King and Queen on May Day in the Morning at Sir William Cornwallis's Houſe at Highgate, 1604: in proſe and verſe. XIII. Entertainment of the two Kings of Great Britain and Denmark at Theobalds, July the 24th 1606: in Latin and Engliſh verſe. XIV. Entertainment of King James and Queen at Theobalds, when the houſe was delivered up with the poſſeſſion to the Queen by the Earl of Saliſbury, May the 22d 1607. XV. Entertainment of the King at Welbeck in Nottinghamſhire, a Houſe of the Right Honourable William Earl of Newcaſtle at his going into Scotland 1633. Beſides theſe he wrote ſeveral Maſques; and a Paſtoral intitled, The ſad Shepherd, or A Tale of Robin Hood, which he left imperfect, there being but two Acts, and part of the third finiſhed; and he aſſiſted Mr. George Chapman, and Mr. John Marſton in a Play called Eaſtward-Hoe. His other writings are, Epigrams, Under-Woods; a Tranſlation of Horace's Art of Poetry into Engliſh Verſe; an Engliſh Grammar made for the Benefit of Strangers out of his obſervation of the Engliſh Language now ſpoken and in uſe; and Timber, or Diſcoveries made upon Men and Matter, as they have flowed out of his daily Readings, or had their Reflux to his peculiar notion of the times. After his death there was printed Ben Jonſon's execration againſt Vulcan: with divers Epigrams by the ſame Author to ſeverall noble Perſonages in this Kingdome. Never publiſhed before. London 1640 in 4to. The Imprimatur is dated December the 14th 1639. The Execration againſt Vulcan appears to have been written upon the occaſion of ſome of his writings having been accidentally burnt. It begins thus.

"And why to me this, thou lame God of fire?
"What have I done, that might call on thine ire?
"Or urge thy greedy flames, thus to devour
"So many my years labours in one hour!"

He afterwards writes thus.

"But in my deſk what was there to excite
"So ravenous and vaſt an appetite?
"I dare not ſay a body, but ſome parts
"There were of ſearch and myſtery in the arts:
"And the old Venuſine in Poetry,
"And lighted by the Stagyrite could ſpy,
"Was there made Engliſh, with a Grammar too,
"To teach ſome that their nurſes could not do,
"The purity of language; and, among
"The reſt, my journey into Scotland ſung,
"With all the adventures: three books not afraid
"To ſpeak the fate of the Sicilian maid
"For our own Ladies; and in ſtory there
"Of our fifth Henry, eight of his ninth year.
"In which was oil, beſides the ſuccours ſpent,
"Which noble Cotton, Carew, Selden ſent:
"And humble gleanings in Divinity
"After the Fathers, and thoſe wiſer guides,
"Whom faction had not drawn to ſtudy ſides."

He publiſhed an edition of his works at London 1616 in folio, reprinted there in 1640 in folio, with the addition of another volume in folio. His works were likewiſe reprinted at London 1716 in ſix volumes in 8vo. But in all theſe additions his Comedy intitled, The Caſe is altered, is omitted.

[O] Of a good ſociable humour, when amongſt his friends in the Apollo.] In the marble over the chimney in that room, where he kept his club, there are the following laws engraven.

Leges Convivales.
Quod felix fauſtumque Convivis in Apolline ſit.

I. Nemo aſymbolus, niſi umbra, huc venito.
II. Idiota, inſulſus, triſtis, turpis abeſto.
III. Eruditi, urbani, hilares, honeſti, adſciſcuntor.
IV. Nec lectæ fœminæ repudiantor.
V. In apparatu quod convivis corruget nares, nil eſto.
VI. Epulæ delectu potius quam ſumptu parentur.
VII. Obſonator & Coquus convivarum gulæ periti ſunto.
VIII. De diſcubitu non contenditor.
IX. Miniſtri à dapibus oculati & muti, à poculis auriti & celeres ſunto.
X. Vina puris fontibus miniſtrentur, aut vapulet hoſpes.
XI. Moderatis poculis provocare ſodales fas eſto.
XII. At Fabulis magis quam vino velitatio fiat.
XIII. Convivæ nec muti nec loquaces ſunto.
XIV. De ſeriis ac ſacris poti & ſaturi ne diſſerunto.
XV. Fidicen, niſi accerſitus, non venito.
XVI. Admiſſo riſu, tripudiis, choreis, cantu, ſalibus, omni gratiarum feſtivitate ſacra celebrentor.
XVII. Joci ſine felle ſunto.
XVIII. Inſipida poemata nulla recitantor.
XIX. Verſus ſcribere nullus cogitor.
XX. Argumentationis totus ſtrepitus abeſto.
XXI. Amatoriis querelis ac ſuſpiriis liber angulus eſto.
XXII. Lapitharum more Scyphis pugnare, Vitrea collidere, feneſtras excutere ſupellectilem dilacerare, nefas eſto.
XXIII. Qui foras vel dicta vel facta eliminat, eliminator.
XXIV. Neminem reum pocula facinnto.
Focus perennis eſto.

[P] We ſhall give the reſt of his character in the note.] Sir John Suckling in his Seſſions of the Poets (14) writes thus.

(14) Fragmenta aurea. A Collection of the incomparable pieces written by Sir John Suckling, pag. 7. edit. 1648 in 8vo.

"The firſt, that broke ſilence was good old Ben,
"Prepared before with Canary Wine;
"And he told them plainly he deſerved the bays,
"For his were call'd Works, where others were but "Plays,
"And
"Bid them remember how he had purg'd the ſtage
"Of errors, that had laſted many an age;
"And he hop'd, they did not think the Silent Woman,
"The Fox, and the Alchymiſt outdone by no man.

Dr. John Hacket, afterwards Biſhop of Lichfield and Coventry in tranſlating the Lord Bacon's Eſſays into Latin. He died on the 16th of Auguſt 1637 in the ſixty third year of his age, and was interred three days after in Weſtminſter-Abbey, at the weſt-end near the Bellfrey, under the Eſcutcheon of Robert de Ros or Roos, with theſe words, O rare Ben Johnſon, engraven on a common pavement ſtone over his grave, at the expence of Mr. John Young of Great Milton in Oxfordſhire, afterwards knighted by King Charles II. There was a conſiderable ſum of money collected among the men of wit and learning for the " Apollo ſtopt him there, and bade him not go on;

" 'Twas merit, he ſaid, and not preſumption
" Muſt carry't. At which Ben turn'd about,
" And in great choler offer'd to go out.
" But

" Thoſe that were there thought it not fit
" To diſcontent ſo antient a wit;
" And therefore Apollo call'd him back again,
" And made him mine Hoſt of his own New Inn."

(15) Lives of the moſt famous Engliſh Poets, pag. 125. edit. 1687.

Mr. Winſtanley (15) ſays, " that he was paramount in " the Dramatic Poetry, and taught the ſtage an exact " conformity to the laws of the Comedians, being ac- " counted the moſt learned, judicious, and correct of " them all, and the more to be admired for being " ſo, for that neither the height of natural parts, (for " he was no Shakeſpeare) nor the coſt of extraordinary " education, but his own proper induſtry and addiction " to books advanced him to this perfection."He obſerves

(16) Ibid. pag. 126.

afterwards (16), " that his Plays were above the vul- " gar capacity, (which are only tickled with down- " right obſcenity,) and took not ſo well at the firſt " ſtroke as at the rebound, when beheld the ſecond " time; yea, they will endure reading, and that with " due commendation, ſo long as either ingenuity or " learning are faſhionable in our nation. And al- " tho' all his Plays may endure the teſt, yet in three of " his Comedies, namely, the Fox, Alchymiſt, and Silent " Woman, he may be compared, in the judgment of " the learned men, for decorum, language, and well " humouring parts, as well with the chief of the an- " tient Greek and Latin Comedians, as the prime of " modern Italians, who have been judged the beſt of " Europe for a happy vein in Comedies; nor is his " Bartholomew-Fair much ſhort of them. As for his " other Comedies, Staple of News, Devil's an Aſs, " and the reſt, if they be not ſo ſprightful and vigorous " as his firſt pieces, all that are old will, and all that " deſire to be old, ſhould excuſe him therein, and " therefore let the name of Ben Johnſon ſhield them " againſt whoever ſhall think fit to be ſevere in cen- " ſure againſt them. Truth is, his Tragedies, Seja- " nus and Catiline, ſeem to have in them more of arti- " ficial and inflate, than of a pathetical and natu- " rally tragic height; yet do they each of them far " excel any of the Engliſh ones that were writ before " him; ſo that he may be truly ſaid to be the firſt re- " former of the Engliſh ſtage, as he himſelf more " truly and modeſtly writes in his commendatory ver- " ſes of his ſervant Richard Broome's Comedy of the " Northern Laſs;

" Which you have juſtly gained from the ſtage,
" By obſervation of thoſe Comic Laws,
" Which I, your maſter, firſt did teach the age.

" In the reſt of his Poetry, (for he is not wholly " Dramatic) as his Underwoods, Epigrams, &c he is " ſometimes bold and ſtrenuous, ſometimes magiſte- " rial, ſometimes lepid and full enough of conceit, " and ſometimes a man as other men are." Mr. Dry-

(17) Eſſay of Dramatic Poeſy, pag. 9.

den (17) ſtiles him the greateſt man of the laſt age; and tells us, " that he was not only a profeſſed imita- " tor of Horace, but a learned plagiary of all the " others: you track him every where in their ſnow. " If Horace, Lucan, Petronius Arbiter, Seneca, and " Juvenal, had their own from him, there are few ſe- " rious thoughts which are new in him." He after-

(18) Ibid. pag. 32.

wards thinks (18), " that if we look upon him, " while he was himſelf, (for his laſt Plays were but " his dotages) he was the moſt learned and judicious " writer, which any theatre ever had. He was a moſt " ſevere judge of himſelf as well as others. One " cannot ſay he wanted wit, but rather that he was " frugal of it. In his works you find little to retrench " or alter. Wit, and language, and humour alſo in " ſome meaſure we had before him; but ſomething of " art was wanting to the Drama till he came. He " managed his ſtrength to more advantage than any " who preceded him. You ſeldom find him making " love in any of his ſcenes, or endeavouring to move " the paſſions: his genius was too ſullen and ſatur- " nine to do it gracefully, eſpecially when he knew " he came after thoſe, who had performed both to " ſuch an height. Humour was his proper ſphere, " and in that he delighted moſt to repreſent mecha- " nic people. He was deeply converſant in the an- " tients both Greek and Latin, and he borrowed bold- " ly from them. There is ſcarce a Poet or Hiſtorian " among the Roman authors of thoſe times, whom he " has not tranſlated in Sejanus and Catiline. But he " has done his robberies ſo openly that one may ſee, " he fears not to be taxed by any law. He invades " authors like a monarch, and what would be theft " in other Poets, is only victory in him. With the " ſpoils of theſe writers he ſo repreſents old Rome to us " in its rites, ceremonies, and cuſtoms, that if one of " their Poets had written either of his Tragedies, we " had ſeen leſs of it than in him. If there was any " fault in his language, it was, that he weaved it too " cloſely and laborioufly, in his Comedies eſpecially; " perhaps too he did a little too much Romanize our " tongue, leaving the words tranſlated almoſt as much " Latin as he found them; wherein tho' he learnedly " followed their language, he did not enough comply " with the Idiom of ours. If I would compare him " with Shakeſpeare, I muſt acknowledge him the more " correct Poet, but Shakeſpeare the greater Wit. " Shakeſpeare was the Homer or Father of our Dra- " matic Poets; Johnſon was the Virgil, the pattern " of elaborate writing; I admire him, but I love " Shakeſpeare. To conclude of him, as he has given " us the moſt correct Plays, ſo in the precepts, which " he has laid down in his Diſcoveries, we have as ma- " ny and profitable rules for perfecting the ſtage, as " any wherewith the French can furniſh us." The ſame author in another place (19) tells us, that " Ben

(19) Poſtſcript to the Conqueſt of Granada.

" Johnſon is a moſt judicious writer, and that he al- " ways wrote properly, and as the character required; " and I will not, ſays he, conteſt farther with my " friends, who call that wit; it being very certain, " that even folly itſelf well repreſented is wit in a " larger ſignification, and that there is fancy as well " as judgment in it, though not ſo much or noble; " becauſe Poetry being imitation, that of folly is a " lower exerciſe of fancy, though perhaps as difficult " as the other: for it is a kind of looking downward " in the Poet, and repreſenting that part of mankind, " which is below him. In theſe low characters of " vice and folly lay the excellency of that inimitable " writer, who when at any time he aimed at wit in " the ſtricter ſenſe, that is, ſharpneſs of conceit, was " forced either to borrow from the ancients, as to my " knowledge he did very much from Plautus; or " when he truſted himſelf alone, often fell into mean- " neſs of expreſſion. Nay he was not free from the " loweſt and moſt groveling kind of wit, which we " call Clenches, of which Every man in his humour is " infinitely full, and which is worſe, the wittieſt per- " ſons in the Drama ſpeak them." Mr. Dryden in another place (20) writes thus: " Ben Johnſon is to " be admired for many excellencies, and can be taxed " with fewer failings than any Engliſh Poet. I know, " I have been accuſed as an enemy of his writings; " but without any other reaſon than that I do not ad- " mire him blindly, and without looking into his im- " perfections. For why ſhould he only be excepted " from thoſe frailties from which Homer and Virgil " are not free? Or why ſhould there be any ipſe dixit " in our Poetry, any more than there is in our Phi- " loſophy? ... To make men appear pleaſantly ridi-

(20) Preface to the Mock Aſtrologer.

the erection of a ſtatue and monument to him; but this deſign was broken off by the civil wars, and the money was refunded (l). Mr. Wood was informed by Dr. George Morley, Biſhop of Wincheſter, that our Poet had a penſion of a hundred pounds per ann. from the King, a penſion from the City of London, and the like from ſeveral of the Nobility and Gentry, and particularly Mr. Sutton, the Founder of the Chartreux Hoſpital in London. Among his Underwoods there is a piece intitled, The humble Petition of poore Ben, To the beſt of Monarchs, Maſters, Men, King Charles; in which he requeſts his Majeſty, that as his Royal Father had allowed him an annual penſion of an hundred Marks, he would make them Pounds. In 1629 he wrote an epigram to the King upon his ſending him a hundred pounds in his ſickneſs; and 1631 he wrote an Epiſtle Mendicant to the Lord Treaſurer to ſollicit him for ſome money, complaining, that he had laboured under ſickneſs, and want for five years. When he was in his laſt ſickneſs the Prelate abovementioned, who was then Maſter of Arts, frequently viſited him among others of his acquaintance, and as often heard him repent of his profaning the Scripture in his Plays (m). It appears from a letter of Mr. James Howell (n) to Dr. Brian Duppa Biſhop of Chicheſter, and tutor to King Charles II, then Prince of Wales, that the Biſhop was preparing to publiſh a piece intitled, Jonſonus Virbius; to which Mr. Howell contributed a Decaſtich. This piece was publiſhed in 1638 under the title of Jonſonus Virbius; or the Memorie of Ben Johnſon revived by the Friends of the Muſes [2], London in 4to. He

(l) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 610.

(m) Idem, ibid.

(n) Howell's Familiar Letters, vol. 1. Sect. 6. Let. 31. There is ſome miſtake in the date of that Letter, for it is dated May 1, 1636, whereas Ben. Johnſon did not die till Aug. 16, 1637.

" culous on the ſtage, was, as I have ſaid, his talent, " and in this he needed not the acumen of wit, but " that of judgment. For the characters and repre- " ſentations of folly are only the effects of obſervation, " and obſervation is an effect of judgment. Some in- " genious men, for whom I have a particular eſteem, " have thought I have much injured Ben Johnſon, " when I have not allowed his wit to be extraordinary. " But they confound the notion of what is witty with " what is pleaſant. That Ben Johnſon's Plays were " pleaſant, he muſt want reaſon who denies. But that " pleaſantneſs was not properly wit, or the ſharpneſs " of conceit, but the natural imitation of folly; which " I confeſs to be excellent in its kind, but not to be " of that kind, which they pretend. Yet if we will " believe Quintilian in his chapter de movendo riſu, he " gives his opinion of both in theſe following words: " Stulta reprehendere facillimum eſt, nam per ſe ſunt " ridicula; & à deriſu non procul abeſt riſus. Sed " rem urbanam facit aliqua ex nobis adjectio. And " ſome perhaps would be apt to ſay of Johnſon, as it " was ſaid of Demoſthenes, non diſplicuiſſe illi jocos, " ſed non contigiſſe." Mr. Shadwell ſays (21) that our author was incomparably the beſt Dramatic Poet that ever was, or he believes, ever will be; and that he had rather be the author of one ſcene in his beſt Comedies, than of any Play the age had produced. Mr. Thomas Rymer (22) having obſerved, that in a Play one ſhould ſpeak like a man of buſineſs, his ſpeech muſt be πολιτικὸς, which the French render agiſſante, the Italians negotioſa and operativa; tells us, that it was then a ſtrange imagination in Ben Johnſon to go ſtuff out a Play with Tully's Orations. He afterwards obſerves (23), that our author knew how to diſtinguiſh men and manners; and that in his Catiline, the ſcene is Rome, and firſt on the ſtage appears Sylla's Ghoſt.

(21) Dedication to his Virtuoſo.

(22) A ſhort View of Tragedy, cap. 1. pag. 5, 6. edit. London 1693.

(23) Ibid. cap. 8. pag. 159.

Doſt thou not feel me, Rome? Not yet?

One would in reaſon imagine the Ghoſt is in ſome public open place, upon ſome eminence, where Rome is all within his view. But it is a ſurprizing thing to find, that this rattling rodomontado ſpeech is a dark, cloſe, private ſleeping-hole of Catiline's. Yet the Chorus is of all wonders the ſtrangeſt. The Chorus is always preſent on the ſtage, privy to, and intereſted in all that paſſes, and thereupon make their reflections to conclude the ſeveral Acts. Sylla's Ghoſt, though never ſo big, might ſlide in at the key-hole; but how comes the Chorus into Catiline's chamber? Aurelia is ſoon after with him too; but the Poet had perhaps provided her ſome truckle-bed in a dark cloſet by him. In ſhort, it is ſtrange that Ben who underſtood the turn of Comedy ſo well, and had found the ſucceſs, ſhould thus grope in the dark, and jumble things together without head or tail, without any rule or proportion, without any reaſon or deſign. Might not the Acts of the Apoſtles, or a Life in Plutarch, be as well acted, and as properly called a Tragedy, as any Hiſtory of a Conſpiracy?... What is there material in this Catiline, either in the manners, in the thoughts, or in the expreſſion, (three parts of Tragedy) which is not word for word tranſlated? Mr. Lewis Theobald (24) obſerves, that Shakeſpeare and our author " are profeſſedly the " greateſt writers our nation could ever boaſt of in " the Drama. The firſt, we ſay, owed all to his " prodigious natural genius; and the other a great " deal to his art and learning. This, if attended to, " will explain a very remarkable appearance in their " writings. Beſides thoſe wonderful maſterpieces of " art and genius, which each has given us, they are " the authors of other works very unworthy of them; " but with this difference, that in Johnſon's bad pieces " we do not diſcover one ſingle trace of the author of " the Fox and Alchymiſt; but in the wild extravagant " notes of Shakeſpeare, you every now and then en- " counter ſtrains, that recognize the divine compoſer. " This difference may be thus accounted for. John- " ſon, as we have ſaid before, owing all his excellence " to his art, by which he ſometimes ſtrained himſelf " to an uncommon pitch, when at other times he un- " bent and played with his ſubject; having nothing " then to ſupport him, it is no wonder he wrote ſo " far beneath himſelf. But Shakeſpeare indebted " more largely to nature, than the other to acquired " talents, in his moſt negligent hours could never ſo " totally diveſt himſelf of his genius, but that it " would frequently break out with aſtoniſhing force " and ſplendor."

(24) Preface to the Works of Shakeſpeare, pag. 33, 34. ed. London 1733, in 8vo.

[2] Publiſhed under the title of Jonſonus Verbius: or the Memorie of Ben Johnſon revived by the Friends of the Muſes.] The Imprimatur is dated January the 23d 1637. It contains 74 pages. The Printer in his advertiſement to the reader writes thus. " It is now " about ſix months ſince the moſt learned and judicious " Poet Ben Johnſon became a ſubject for theſe Elegies. " The time interjected between his death and the pub- " liſhing of theſe, ſhews that ſo great an argument " ought to be conſidered before handled; not that the " Gentlemen's affections were leſs ready to grieve, but " their judgments to write. At length the looſe pa- " pers were conſigned to the hands of a Gentleman, " who truly honoured him (for he knew why he did " ſo). To his care you are beholden that they are " now made yours. And he was willing to let you " know the value of what you have loſt, that " you might the better recommend what you have " left of him to your poſterity." It contains a collection of Poems written upon our author's death by the Lord Falkland, Lord Buckhurſt, Sir John Beaumont Bart. Sir Thomas Hawkins, Mr. Henry King, Mr. Henry Coventry, Mr. Thomas May, Mr. Dudley Diggs, Mr. George Forteſcue, Mr. William Abington or Habington, Mr. Edmund Waller, Mr. James Howel, Mr. John Vernon, Mr. J. Cl. (25), Mr. Jaſpar Mayne, Mr. William Cartwright, Mr. Jo. Rutter, Mr. Owen Feltham, Mr George Donne, Mr. Shakerly Marmion, M. A. Mr. John Ford, Mr. R. Brideoak. M. A. Mr. Richard Weſt, Mr. R. Meade, Mr. H. Ramſay, Sir Francis Wortley, Bart. Mr. T. Terrent, Mr. Rob. Waring, Mr. William Bew, and Mr.

(25) Probably John Cleveland.

He had ſeveral children, but none ſurvived him (o) [R]. He had a very ſtrong memory [S]. His conſtant humour was to ſit ſilent in learned company, and "ſuck "in, ſays Fuller (p), their ſeveral humours into his obſervation. What was Ore in "others, he was able to refine unto himſelf." In his Diſcoveries he obſerves, that his innocence had often reſcued him from the dangers, to which the malice of his enemies had expoſed him [T]. Mr. Wotton (q) remarks, that our Author was the firſt, that he knew of, who did any thing conſiderable with regard to the grammar of the Engliſh language; but that "Lilly's grammar was his pattern, and for want of reflecting upon "the grounds of a language, which he underſtood as well as any man of his age, he "drew it by violence to a dead language that was of a quite different make, and ſo "left his work imperfect." Our author had a very intimate friendſhip with Mr. Selden, who wrote a Latin Poem in praiſe of him, intitled, Ad Virum Cl. Ben Johnſonum Carmen Protrepticon, and wrote a letter to him, dated from the Inner-Temple, February the 28th 1615 (r), concerning "the literal ſenſe and hiſtorical of the holy text uſually "brought (o) Winſtanley, Lives of the moſt famous Engliſh Poets, pag. 127. edit. London 1687.

(p) Ubi ſupra.

(q) Reflections upon Ancient and Modern Learning, cap. 5. pag. 58. edit. London 1694.

(r) It is publiſhed in Dr David Wilkins's edition of Mr. Selden's Works, vol. 2. pag. 1691, edit. London 1726 in fol.

Mr. Samuel Evans L L. B. The Lord Falkland in his Eclogue upon Johnſon's death hath theſe lines.

"His learning ſuch, no author old nor new "Eſcap'd his reading that deſerv'd his view;
"And ſuch his judgment, ſo exact his teſt,
"Of what was beſt in books, as what books beſt,
"That had he join'd thoſe notes his labours took,
"From each moſt prais'd and praiſe-deſerving book,
"And could the world of that choice treaſure boaſt,
"It need not care, though all the reſt were loſt;
"And ſuch his wit, he wrote paſt what he quotes,
"And his productions far exceed his notes.
"So in his works where ought inſerted grows.
"The nobleſt of the plants engrafted ſhews,
"That his adopted children equal not
"The generous iſſue his own brain begot.
"So great his art, that much which he did write
"Gave the wiſe wonder, and the croud delight.
- - - - - - - - -
"How in an ignorant and learn'd age he ſway'd
"(Of which the firſt he found, the ſecond made)
"How he, when he could know it, reap'd his fame,
"And long outliv'd the envy of his name:
"To him how daily flock'd, what rev'rence gave
"All that had wit, or would be thought to have,
"Or hope to gain, and in ſo large a ſtore,
"That to his aſhes they can pay no more,
"Except thoſe few, who cenſuring thought not ſo,
"But aim'd at glory from ſo great a foe."

Mr. Jaſpar Mayne in his Poem writes thus.

Scorn then their cenſures, who gav't out, thy wit
As long upon a Comedy did ſit,
As elephants bring forth; and that thy blots
And mendings took more time than fortune plots;
That ſuch thy drought was, and ſo great thy thirſt,
That all thy Plays were drawn at th' Mermaid * firſt:
That the King's yearly Butt wrote, and his wine
Hath more right than thou to thy Catiline.
Let ſuch men keep a diet, let their wit
Be rack'd, and while they write, ſuffer a fit;
When th' have felt tortures, which out-pain the gout;
Such as with leſs the ſtate draws treaſon out;
Though they ſhould the length of conſumptions lie
Sick of their verſe, and of their Poem die,
'Twould not be thy worſt ſcene.

* A famous Tavern in Bread-Street.

[R] He had ſeveral children, but none ſurvived him.] His 22d Epigram is upon his firſt daughter, Mary, who died at ſix months; and his 45th on his firſt ſon, who died at ſeven years of age.

[S] He had a very ſtrong memory.] "I myſelf, "ſays he (24), could in my youth have repeated all "that ever I had made, and ſo continued till I was "paſt forty. Since it is much decayed in me. Yet "I can repeat whole books that I have read, and "poems of ſome ſelected friends, which I have liked "to charge my memory with. It was wont to be "faithful to me; but ſhaken with age now and ſloth "(which weakens the ſtrongeſt abilities) it may per-"form ſomewhat, but cannot promiſe much. By ex-"ercile it is made to be better and ſerviceable. What-"ſoever I pawned with it, while I was young and a "boy, it offers me readily, and without ſtops: but "what I truſt to it now, or have done of later years, "it lays up more negligently, and oftentimes loſes; "ſo that I receive mine own (though frequently cal-"led for) as if it were new and borrowed. Nor do I "always find preſently from it what I do ſeek; but "while I am doing another thing, that I laboured "for will come, and what I ſought with trouble, "will offer itſelf when I am quiet. Now in ſome "men I have found it as happy as nature, who, "whatſoever they read or pen, they can ſay without "book preſently, as if they did then write in their "mind. And it is more a wonder in ſuch as have "a ſwift ſtile, for their memories are commonly "ſloweſt. Such as torture their writings, and go in-"to council for every word, muſt needs fix ſome-"what, and make it their own at laſt, though but "through their own vexation."

(24) In his Diſcoveries.

[T] In his Diſcoveries he obſerves, that his innocence often reſcued him from thoſe dangers, to which the malice of his enemies had expoſed him.] "An innocent, "man, ſays he (25), needs no eloquence: his innocence is "inſtead of it. Elſe I had never come off ſo many "times from thoſe precipices, whither men's malice "hath purſued me. It is true, I have been accuſed "to the Lords, to the King, and by great ones. But "it happened my accuſers had not thought of the ac-"cuſation with themſelves, and ſo were driven for "want of crimes to uſe invention, which was found "ſlander; or too late, (being entered ſo far) to ſeek "ſtarting holes for their raſhneſs, which were not "given them. And then they may think, what ac-"cuſation that was like to prove, when they that "were the engineers feared to be the authors. Nor "were they content to feign things againſt me, but "to urge things feigned by the ignorant againſt my "profeſſion; which though from their hired and mer-"cenary impudence I might have paſſed by, as grant-"ed to a nation of barkers, that let out their tongues "to lick others ſores, yet I durſt not leave myſelf "undefended, having a pair of ears unſkillful to hear "lies, or have thoſe things ſaid of me, which I could "truly prove of them. They objected making of "verſes to me, when I could object to moſt of them "their not being able to read them, but as worthy of "ſcorn. Nay, they would offer to urge my own "writings againſt me, but by pieces, (which was an "excellent way of malice, as if any man's context "might not ſeem dangerous and offenſive, if that, "which was knit to what went before, were defrauded "of his beginning, or that things by themſelves ut-"tered might not ſeem ſubject to calumny, which "read entire would appear moſt free. At laſt they "upbraided my poverty: I confeſs, ſhe is my do-"meſtic; ſober of diet, ſimple of habit, frugal, "painful, a good counſellor to me, that keeps me "from cruelty, pride, or other more delicate imper-"tinences, which are the nurſe-children of riches. "but let them look over all the great and monſtrous "wickedneſſes, they ſhall never find thoſe in poor fa-"milies. They are the iſſue of the wealthy giants, "and the mighty hunters; whereas no great work, "or worthy of praiſe or memory, but comes out of "poor cradles. It was the antient poverty that "founded commonweals, built cities, invented arts, "made wholeſome laws, armed men againſt vices, "rewarded them with their own virtues, and preſerv-"ed the honour and ſtate of nations, till they betray-"ed themſelves to riches." T.

(25) In his Diſcoveries.

" brought againſt the counterfeiting of ſexes by apparel." He ſtiles Mr. Johnſon likewiſe (s) his beloved friend, and ſingular Poet, whoſe ſpecial worth, ſays he, in Literature, accurate judgment, and performance, known only to that few, which are truly able to know him, hath had from me, ever ſince I begun to learn, an increaſing admiration. And in another place (t) he calls him his beloved Ben Johnſon, and ſpeaks of his curious learning and judgment. About the year 1615 our author lived in Black Fryars, as appears from a letter of Tom. Coryat (u); tho' it is ſaid, that he had afterwards an houſe in Alderſgate Street at the corner of Jewin Street, where it is reported he died. Mr. Pope obſerves (x), " that " he getting poſſeſſion of the ſtage, brought critical learning into vogue; and that this was " not done without difficulty, may appear from thoſe frequent leſſons (and indeed almoſt " declamations) which he was forced to prefix to his firſt plays, and put into the mouth " of his actors, the Grex, Chorus, &c. to remove the prejudices, and inform the judg- " ment of his hearers. Till then our authors had no thoughts of writing on the model " of the ancients; their Tragedies were only hiſtories in dialogue; and their Comedies " followed the thread of any novel as they found it, no leſs implicitly than if it had been " true hiſtory."

(s) Preface to the firſt edition of his Titles of Honour, London 1614 in 4to.

(t) Titles of Honour, Part 2. See his Works, vol. 3. pag. 466.

(u) Dated at the Great Mogol's Court, Wedneſday Nov. the 8th 1615, printed in Purchas's Pilgrims, Part 1. pag. 597. edit. London 1625, in fol.

(x) Preface to his edition of Shakeſpeare's Works, pag. 6. 2d edit. London 1728.

☞ JOHNSON (SAMUEL) was born in the year 1649 in Warwickſhire, and educated at St. Paul's School in London, where he made ſuch an extraordinary proficiency, that when he was fitted for the Univerſity, he was made Library-Keeper of that ſchool; during which time he ſtudied the Oriental Languages with ſuch ſucceſs, that they were afterwards of great uſe to him in his ſtudy of Divinity. He had his Univerſity education at Cambridge; and having entered into holy Orders (a), he was preſented March the 1ſt 1669 (b) by Mr. Bidolph to the Living of Curingham in the hundreds of Eſſex, worth eighty pounds a year; which was the only Church-preferment he ever had (c). But the air of that place not agreeing with him, he was obliged to leave it for his health, and placed a Curate there, to whom he gave forty pounds a year; but viſited his pariſhioners himſelf as often as his health would allow. His patron obſerving his inclination to the ſtudy of politics, adviſed him to read Bracton and Forteſcue de Laudibus Legum Angliæ, &c. that he might be acquainted with the old Engliſh Conſtitution; but by no means to make politics the ſubject of his ſermons. Mr. Johnſon religiouſly obſerved this advice. He ſoon became acquainted with thoſe perſons who oppoſed the meaſures of the Court in the reign of Charles II, and particularly the Lord Ruſſel, who made him his domeſtic Chaplain; and when that Lord, in conjunction with others, carried on the Bill of Excluſion againſt the Duke of York, Mr. Johnſon, to promote that deſign, wrote a book, intitled, Julian the Apoſtate [A]; againſt which Dr. Hickes having publiſhed by way of anſwer a book called Jovian, Mr. Johnſon replied to him in a treatiſe intitled, Julian's Arts to undermine and extirpate Chriſtianity, together with Anſwers to Conſtantius the Apoſtate and Jovian; which was printed in 1683, and entered at Stationers Hall; but before he publiſhed it, the Lord Ruſſel being impriſoned, and Mr. Johnſon being told by ſome of his friends that it would not be ſafe for him at that time to publiſh his book,

(a) Some Memorials of the Reverend Mr. Samuel Johnſon, communicated in a Letter to a Friend by one of his intimate Acquaintance, pag. 3. prefixed to The Works of the late Reverend Mr. Samuel Johnſon, 2d edit. London 1713 in fol.

(b) Newcourt, Repertorium, vol. 2. pag. 194.

(c) Some Memorials, ubi ſupra.

[A] Wrote a book, intitled, Julian the Apoſtate.] It was printed in 1682 under the following title: Julian the Apoſtate: being a ſhort Account of his Life; the ſenſe of the Primitive Chriſtians about his Succeſſion; and their Behaviour towards him. Together with a Compariſon of Popery and Paganiſm. In this book our author endeavours to ſhew, that there was a remarkable difference betwixt the caſe of the primitive Chriſtians, who had the laws againſt them, and ours, who had laws on our ſide. That when Chriſtianity came to be eſtabliſhed in the Empire, and Julian the Apoſtate's defection ſuſpected, the Chriſtians in thoſe days did all they could to hinder his ſucceſſion; and were ſo far from paying him a blind ſubmiſſion, when he came to the throne, that they oppoſed his proceedings to overturn their religion, upbraided him with his apoſtacy, and carried it towards him in ſuch a manner, as diſcovered that they knew nothing of the doctrine of Non-Reſiſtance. This book of our author was anſwer'd by ſeveral writers, viz. I. Mr. John Bennet of Chriſt Church Oxford, in his treatiſe intitled, Conſtantius the Apoſtate; being a ſhort Account of his Life, and the Senſe of the Primitive Chriſtians about Succeſſion. Wherein is ſhewn the Unlawfulneſs of excluding the next Heir upon the account of Religion, and the Neceſſity of Paſſive Obedience, as well to the unlawful Oppreſſor as legal Perſecutor. Being a full Anſwer to a late Pamphlet intitled Julian the Apoſtate, &c. London, 1683, in 8vo. Dr. Barlow, Biſhop of Lincoln, wrote the following note upon this book: " Many miſtakes are " in this book, but no medium or material argu- " ment at all to prove it unlawful for the King and " Parliament to ſeclude a Popiſh ſucceſſor." II. Mr. Thomas Long, B. D. Prebendary of Exeter, in his Vindication of the Primitive Chriſtians in point of Obedience to their Princes, againſt the Calumnies of a Book entitled, The Life of Julian the Apoſtate, written by Ecebolius the Sophiſt. London, 1683, in 8vo. III. An anonymous author, by ſome ſuppoſed to be Mr. Edward Meredith, who turned Papiſt, in Some Remarks upon a late popular piece of Nonſenſe, called Julian the Apoſtate, &c. Together with a Vindication of his Royal Highneſs the Duke of York againſt many impudent Calumnies, fooliſh Arguments, falſe Reaſoning, and Suppoſitions impoſed upon the Public from ſeveral ſcandalous and ſeditious Pamphlets, eſpecially from one more notorious and generally virulent than the reſt, entitled, A Tory Plot, &c. London, 1682, in a thin folio. IV. The author of The Triumph of Chriſtianity: or, the Life of Cl. F. Julian the Apoſtate: With Remarks contained in the Reſolution of ſeveral Queries. To which are added Reflections upon a Pamphlet called, Seaſonable Remarks on the Fall of the Emperor Julian; and on part of a late pernicious Book, entitled, A ſhort Account of the Life of Julian, &c. London, 1683, in 8vo. This is ſaid to have been written by Mr. John Dowell, M. A. of Chriſt's College in Cambridge. V. Dr. George Hickes, in his Jovian: or an Anſwer to Julian the Apoſtate. London, 1683, in 8vo. The author is highly applauded for this book by Mr. John Dryden, the Poet, in his Vindication: or, the Parallel of the French League and Engliſh, &c. p. 39. Edit. London, 1683, in 4to. But there was publiſhed againſt it a pamphlet entitled, A Letter of Remarks upon Jovian. By a Perſon of Quality, London, 1683, in 4to. pagg. 15. in which the author undertakes to prove, that Dr. Hickes in his Jovian hath ſhewn himſelf neither a Logician, nor good Hiſtorian, nor a fair and equal Writer; but that he undermines the force of all that he would ſeem to ſay, by his conceſſions and contradictions.

book, he complied with their advice. However about two months after that Lord was beheaded, our author was ſummoned to appear before the King and Council, where he was examined by the Lord Keeper North [B], and on the 3d of Auguſt 1683 committed priſoner to the Gatehouſe; whence he was bailed out by two of his friends. The Court having uſed all poſſible endeavours to diſcover and ſeize the copies of his book, but in vain [C]; they were obliged to drop the proſecution upon it, and lodged an information againſt him in the King's-Bench for writing Julian the Apoſtate [D], for which he was fined five hundred marks, and to be committed priſoner to the King's-Bench till he ſhould pay it, which the Court knew was the ſame with perpetual impriſonment, ſince he was not able to raiſe that ſum. Here he lay in very neceſſitous circumſtances [E], and during his confinement publiſhed ſeveral pieces, which after the Revolution he collected into a volume, and intitled, A Second Five Years Struggle againſt Popery and Tyranny [F]. Among theſe one of the moſt remarkable was, An humble and hearty Addreſs to all the Proteſtants in King James's Army, at that time encamped on Hounſlow-Heath. The Court was ſo much incenſed at this, that he was condemned at the King's-Bench to ſtand three times in the pillory, and to be whipt from Newgate to Tyburn, and ordered to be degraded from the Prieſthood [G]. December the 1ſt 1686 his ſentence was put in execution,

[B] Summoned to appear before the King and Council, where he was examined by the Lord-Keeper North.] His examination turned upon theſe two points: 1. Whether he was the author of a book called, Julian's Arts to undermine and extirpate Chriſtianity? To which he anſwered in the affirmative. 2. Why after that book had been ſo long entered at Stationers-Hall, it was not publiſhed? To which he replied, That the nation was in too great a ferment to have the matter further debated at that time. Upon this he was commanded to produce one of thoſe books to the Council, and was told, that if they approved it, it ſhould be publiſhed; but he anſwered, that he had ſuppreſſed them himſelf, ſo that they were now his own private thoughts, for which he was not accountable to any Power upon Earth. The Council diſmiſſed him at that time, but ſent for him twice afterwards, preſſed the ſame thing upon him, and received the ſame anſwers, for which they ſent him priſoner to the Gate-houſe (1).

(1) Some Memorials of the Reverend Mr. Samuel Johnſon, pag. 5.

[C] The court having uſed all poſſible endeavours to diſcover and ſeize the copies of his book, but in vain.] Mr. Johnſon had committed them to the care of a friend. A Meſſenger was ſent to ſearch the houſe, where the Court had information they were, but miſſed them; which was the more remarkable, becauſe after the firſt ſearch, his friends apprehending a further inquiry, and not thinking them ſecure enough, removed them; and when the meſſenger ſearched again, he found the firſt place, but miſſed the ſecond; after which they were removed to a third place in the ſame houſe, and upon a freſh ſearch, the Meſſenger found the ſecond place, but miſſed the third (2).

(2) Ibid. pag. 6.

[D] Lodged an information againſt him in the King's Bench for writing Julian the Apoſtate.] The proſecution was begun and carried on by the intereſt of the Duke of York. "The Papiſts about that Prince "knowing there was no ſuch effectual way to ruin Pro-"teſtants, as to ſow diviſions among them, reſolved to "ſplit them with a wedge of their own timber. To "this end they run down the old Queen Elizabeth-"Proteſtants, who began to grow out of faſhion, and "thoſe of the Laudean ſtamp were the only men in "vogue. One of that ſort, who wore the Church's "livery, was pitched upon to cull thoſe paſſages out "of Mr. Johnſon's book, upon which the information "againſt him was founded, and that Gentleman then "made his boaſts of it (3)." When Mr. Johnſon was brought to trial, he employed Mr. Wallop as his Council, who urged for his client, that he had offended againſt no law of the land. That the book taken together was innocent; but any treatiſe might be made criminal, if dealt with as thoſe, who drew up the information, had dealt with this. The Judges had orders to proceed in the cauſe; and the Lord Chief-Juſtice Jefferies upbraided Mr. Johnſon for meddling with what did not belong to him, and ſcoffingly told him, that he would give him a text, which was, Let every man ſtudy to be quiet, and mind his own buſineſs; to which Mr. Johnſon replied, that he did mind his buſineſs as an Engliſhman, when he wrote that book (4).

(3) Ibid.

(4) Ibid. pag. 7.

[E] Here he lay in very neceſſitous circumſtances.] When the Duke of Monmouth landed in England, all the halls in London, as well as jails in the country were filled with perſons, whom the court ſuſpected to be averſe to their meaſures. This proved ſome relief to Mr. Johnſon, by affording him good company; for in thoſe days it was reckoned criminal to viſit or ſhew him any kindneſs, ſo that few had courage to come near him, or give him any relief; by which means he was reduced very low. About this time his mother, whom he had maintained for many years, ſent to him for ſubſiſtence; and ſuch was his filial affection, that though he knew not how to ſupply his own wants, and thoſe of his wife and children, and was told on this occaſion, that charity begins at home, he ſent her forty ſhillings, though he had but fifty in the world; ſaying, that he would do his duty, and truſt providence for his own ſupply. The event ſhewed that his hopes were not in vain; for the next morning he had ten pounds ſent by an unknown hand, which he afterwards knew to have come from the reverend Dr. Edward Fowler, afterwards Biſhop of Glouceſter (5).

(5) Ibid. pag. 7, 8.

[F] Collected into a volume, and intitled, A ſecond Five Years Struggle againſt Popery and Tyranny.] This collection contains, I. A Sermon preached before the Lord Mayor and Aldermen at Guildhall-Chapel, on Palm-Sunday, 1679, on Matth. xv. latter part of the 14*th verſe.* II. The Church of England as by Law eſtabliſhed: Being the very Doctrine and expreſs Words of the Homilies againſt Popery. III. A ſhort Diſſuaſive from Popery, and from countenancing and encouraging of Papiſts: Publiſhed immediately after the defeat of the Duke of Monmouth. IV. A Parcel of wry Reaſons and wrong Inferences, but right Obſervator. V. An Oration of John Hales to the Queen's Majeſty, and delivered to her by a certain Nobleman at her firſt entrance to her Reign. VI. Several Reaſons for the Eſtabliſhment of a Standing Army, and the diſſolving the Militia. VII. A piece containing the following Chapters. Chap. 1. Of Magiſtracy. 2. Of Prerogatives by Divine Right. 3. Of Obedience. 4. Of Laws. VIII. The Grounds and Reaſons of the Laws againſt Popery. IX. An humble and hearty Addreſs to all the Engliſh Proteſtants in this preſent Army. X. That Reſiſtance may be uſed, in caſe our Religion and Rights ſhould be invaded. XI. The Trial and Examination of a late Libel, intitled, A new Teſt of the Church of England's Loyalty. With ſome Reflections upon the Additional Libel intitled, An Inſtance of the Church of England's Loyalty. XII. The abſolute Impoſſibility of Tranſubſtantiation demonſtrated. XIII. The Way to Peace amongſt all Proteſtants: Being a Letter of Reconciliation ſent by Biſhop Ridley to Biſhop Hooper. With ſome Obſervations upon it. Publiſhed in April 1688; and licenſed in July following; but ſeized ſoon after by order from the Lord Sunderland. XIV. A Letter from a Freeholder to the reſt of the Freeholders of England and all others, who have Votes in the Choice of Parliament-Men. Publiſhed in September 1688. XV. Religion founded upon a Rock: Or, the Eternal Obligations of being Religious. In a Diſcourſe on 1 Tim. i. 17. XVI. The true Mother-Church: Or, a ſhort Practical Diſcourſe upon Acts ii. concerning the firſt Church at Jeruſalem.

[G] Ordered to be degraded from the Prieſthood.] This cution, which he bore with great firmneſs [H] ; and the King immediately gave away his Living [I]. He continued in priſon till a quarter of a year after the Revolution ; for though he might have been diſcharged upon the Prince of Orange's arrival, he was ſo juſt to his ſecurity, that he would not go out till he could get up a bond of a thouſand pounds, ſigned by two of his friends for his true impriſonment, upon his being allowed the benefit of the rules. The Parliament taking his caſe into conſideration [K] reſolved, June the 11th 1689, "that the judgment againſt him in the King's-Bench, upon an in-"formation for a miſdemeanor, was cruel and illegal." And a Committee was at the ſame time appointed to bring in a bill for reverſing that judgment [L]. The Houſe preſented ought to have been done, according to the Canons, by his own Dioceſan the Biſhop of London ; but that Prelate was then under ſuſpenſion himſelf, becauſe he would not obey the King's orders to ſuſpend Dr. Sharp, afterwards Archbiſhop of York, for preaching againſt Popery in his own pariſh church of St. Giles in the Fields. Dr. Crew, Biſhop of Durham, Dr. Sprat, Biſhop of Rocheſter, and Dr. White, Biſhop of Peterborough, being then Commiſſioners for the Dioceſe of London, in the place of the ſuſpended Biſhop, were appointed to degrade Mr. Johnſon ; which they performed in the Chapter-Houſe of St. Paul's, where Dr. Sherlock, and other Clergymen attended ; but Dr. Stillingfleet, then Dean of St. Paul's, refuſed to have any hand in it. Mr. Johnſon's behaviour on this occaſion was obſerved to be ſo becoming that very character, which his enemies would have him deprived of, that it melted ſome of their hearts, and forced them to acknowledge, that there was ſomething very valuable in him. Among other things, which he ſaid to the Divines then preſent, he told them in the moſt pathetic manner, It could not but grieve him to think, that ſince all he had wrote was deſigned to keep their gowns on their backs, they ſhould be made the unhappy inſtruments to pull off his. And he begged them to conſider, whether they were not making rods for themſelves. When they came to the formality of putting a Bible in his hand, and taking it from him again, he was much affected, and parted with it with difficulty, kiſſing it, and ſaying with tears, that they could not however deprive him of the uſe and benefit of that ſacred Depoſitum. It happened, that they were guilty of an omiſſion in not ſtripping him of his caſſock ; which, as ſlight a particular as it may ſeem, rendered his degradation imperfect, and afterwards ſaved him his benefice (6).

(6) Ibid. pag. 8, 9.

[H] December 1, 1686, his ſentence was put in execution, which he bore with great firmneſs.] A Popiſh prieſt had made an offer for 200 l. to get the whipping part of the ſentence remitted. The money was lodged by one of Mr. Johnſon's friends in a third hand for the Prieſt, if he performed what he undertook. The man uſed his endeavours, but to no purpoſe ; for the King was deaf to all intreaties. The anſwer was, That ſince Mr. Johnſon had the Spirit of Martyrdom, it was fit he ſhould ſuffer. He obſerved afterwards to one of his moſt intimate friends, that this text of Scripture which came ſuddenly into his mind, He endured the croſs, and deſpiſed the ſhame, ſo much animated and ſupported him in his bitter journey, that had he not thought it would have looked like vain-glory, he could have ſung a pſalm, while the Executioner was doing his office, with as much compoſure and chearfulneſs, as ever he had done in the church ; though at the ſame time he had a quick ſenſe of every ſtripe, which was given him, with a whip of nine cords knotted, to the number of 317. This was the more remarkable in him, becauſe he had not the leaſt tincture of Enthuſiaſm (7).

(7) Ibid. pag. 9.

[I] The King immediately gave away his living.] The Clergyman (*), who had the grant of it, made application to the three Biſhops abovementioned for inſtitution ; but they being ſenſible of the omiſſion in his degradation, told him, that he ſhould have it, if he could get two common Lawyers and two Civilians to give it under their hands that Mr. Johnſon was legally degraded, and thereby deprived. The Clergyman brought them the hand of one inconſiderable common Lawyer, that the degradation and deprivation were both good ; but the Civilian, to whom he applied, was more modeſt, and only ſigned a paper with his opinion, that if Mr. Johnſon was legally degraded, he was ipſo facto deprived. But this not proving ſatisfactory to the three Biſhops, the Clergyman was obliged to give them a bond of five hundred pounds to indemnify them, before they would grant him inſtitution. Having received it, he went to Curingham for induction ; but Mr. Johnſon's pariſhioners oppoſed him ; ſo that he could never get entrance, but was obliged to return re infecta. This was extraordinary in his pariſhioners, at a time when the court carried all by violence ; but it proceeded from their great reſpect to him, and experience of his goodneſs ; for no Miniſter was more obliging to his people than he, who was ſo far from exacting upon them, that he would rather quit his own right than be any ways troubleſome to them ; of which there is one remarkable inſtance among many others. One of his neighbours owing him twenty pounds upon bond, and falling afterwards into low circumſtances, Mr. Johnſon was adviſed to put the bond in execution, while ſomething was to be had ; but he abſolutely refuſed it, and choſe rather to loſe the money, ſaying, that no man's ruin ſhould lie at his door (8).

(*) Tho. Berrow, M. A. who was preſented to the Living, Feb. 4, 1686. See Newcourt's Repertorium, vol. 2. pag. 194.

(8) Ibid. pag. 9, 10.

[K] The Parliament taking his caſe into conſideration.] In the firſt Parliament after the Revolution, when the Houſe of Commons was preparing an Act of Indemnity, Mr. Johnſon was adviſed by his friends to get a clauſe put into it, that he might have his remedy at law againſt ſuch as had been his illegal oppreſſors. They ſeemed to be ſenſible, that they were obnoxious, and could not juſtify what they had done. About that time the Biſhop of Durham gave Mr. Johnſon and his Lawyer a meeting, and made his peace with him to their mutual ſatisfaction. Sir Francis Withens, who pronounced the ſentence againſt him, ſent a relation of Mrs. Johnſon's to tell him a feigned ſtory, that Sir Francis lay dangerouſly ill, and could not die in peace, unleſs Mr. Johnſon would forgive him. To which he replied, that he heartily forgave him what injury he had done to him. Some few days after the ſame perſon brought Sir Francis to Mr. Johnſon as he was walking in Weſtminſter-Hall, where Sir Francis ſaluted him, and told him, that his Chriſtian and kind anſwer had proved a reviving cordial to him. To which Mr. Johnſon replied, that he heartily forgave the injury done to himſelf ; but as he had been an enemy to his country, he hoped he would be made accountable for it ; it being a common ſaying with him, That he was obliged to forgive his own enemies, but not the enemies of his country (9).

(9) Ibid. pag. 10.

[L] A Committee was at the ſame time appointed to bring in a Bill for reverſing that judgment.] The Committee was likewiſe ordered to enquire how Mr. Johnſon came to be degraded, and by what authority it was done. Mr. Chriſty, the chairman, ſome days after, reported his caſe to this purpoſe : "That in "Trinity-Term 1686, an information was exhibited "againſt Mr. Johnſon in the name of Sir Robert "Sawyer, Attorney General, for writing and publiſh-"ing a ſcandalous and ſeditious libel, intitled, An "humble and hearty Addreſs, &c. That the ſame "Term they forced him to plead, got a jury to find "him guilty, and Sir Francis Withens pronounced the "following ſentence upon him : To pay five hundred "marks to the King, and to lie in priſon till it was "paid. To ſtand twice in the Pillory, in the Palace-"Yard, at Charing-Croſs, and at the Old Exchange : "and to be whipped by the common Hangman from "Newgate to Tyburn. That the Judges then in court "were the Lord Chief Juſtice Herbert, Sir Francis "Withens, Sir Robert Wright, and Sir Richard Hol-"loway. That apprehending it would be a ſcandal "to the Clergy to have ſo infamous a puniſhment inflicted ſented two addreſſes to the King in behalf of Mr. Johnſon. But though his Majeſty was inclinable enough to have complied with their requeſt, our author could never obtain any Church preferment [M]. However he did not paſs altogether without a reward; for the King gave him three hundred pounds a year out of the Poſt-Office for his and his ſon's life, beſides a thouſand pounds in money; and likewiſe beſtowed a place of about an hundred pounds a year on his ſon. On Sunday November the 27th 1692, there was an attempt to murder him. To this end ſeven aſſaſſins broke into his houſe in Bond-ſtreet very early in the morning, and five of them with a lanthorn got into his chamber, where he with his wife and young ſon was in bed. He was faſt aſleep; but his wife being awaked by their opening the door, cried out Thieves, and endeavoured to wake her huſband. The ruffians in the mean time threw open the curtains; three of them placed themſelves on that ſide of the bed, where he lay, with drawn ſwords and clubs, and two ſtood at the bed's-feet with piſtols. Mr. Johnſon ſtarted up, and endeavouring to defend himſelf from their aſſaults received a blow on the head, which made him fall backward. His wife cried out with great earneſtneſs, and begged them not to treat a ſick man with ſuch barbarity; upon which they pauſed a little, and one of them called to Mr. Johnſon to hold up his face; which his wife begged him to do, thinking they only deſigned to gag him, and that they would rifle the houſe, and be gone. Upon this he ſate upright; when one of the aſſaſſins cried, Piſtol him for the book he wrote; which diſcovered their deſign, for it was juſt after the publiſhing of his book concerning the Abrogation of King James II. Whilſt he ſate upright in his bed, one of them

" flicted on a Miniſter, they deſired Mr. Johnſon " might be firſt degraded; in order to which, being " a priſoner in the King's Bench, in the Dioceſe of " the Biſhop of Wincheſter, he was ſummoned to ap- " pear the 20th of November in the Convocation- " Houſe of St. Paul's in the Dioceſe of London, his " living being within that Dioceſe, and brought thither " by Habeas Corpus; where he found the Biſhops of " Durham, Rocheſter, and Peterborough, Commiſ- " ſioners to exerciſe the juriſdiction of the Biſhop of " London during his ſuſpenſion, with ſome Clergy- " men and many ſpectators. A libel was exhibited " againſt him, charging him with great miſbehaviours, " though none were ſpecified nor proved. That Mr. " Johnſon demanded a copy of the Libel, and an Ad- " vocate; both which the Biſhops denied, and imme- " diately proceeded to ſentence; That he ſhould be de- " clared an infamous perſon: That he ſhould be deprived " of his Rectory: That he ſhould be a mere Layman, " and no Clerk; and be deprived of all right and pri- " vilege of Prieſthood: That he ſhould be degraded there- " of, and of all Veſtments and Habits of Prieſthood. " Againſt which proceedings Mr. Johnſon proteſted, " as being againſt Law, and the 132d Canon, not " being done by his own Dioceſan; but his proteſta- " tion was refuſed, as was alſo his appeal to the King " in Chancery. After which they proceeded to de- " grade him, by putting a ſquare cap on his head, " and then taking it off; by pulling off his gown and " girdle, which he demanded as his proper goods " bought with his money; which they promiſed to " ſend him, but he could not get them till he paid " twenty ſhillings. Then they put a bible into his " hands, which he not parting with readily, they " took it from him by force. That on the 22d of " November the judgment in the King's-Bench be- " gan to be executed with great rigour and cruelty; " that Mr. Rouſe, the Under-Sheriff, tore off his " caſſock on the pillory, and put a frize-coat upon " him. That he was whipped with a whip of nine " cords knotted, which was ſhewed to the Committee. " That Mrs. Johnſon had alſo an information exhibit- " ed againſt her for the like matter as that againſt " her huſband. On all which the Committee came " to the following reſolutions, which, on the report " were all agreed to by the Houſe: That the judgment " againſt Mr. Johnſon was illegal and cruel: That " the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion was illegal, and conſe- " quently the ſuſpenſion of the Biſhop of London, and the " authority committed to the three Biſhops, null and ille- " gal: That Mr. Johnſon's not being degraded by his " own Dioceſan, if he had deſerved it, was illegal. " That a bill be brought in to reverſe the judgment, " and to declare all the proceedings before the three Bi- " ſhops null and illegal: And that an addreſs be made " to his Majeſty to recommend Mr. Johnſon to ſome Ec- " cleſiaſtical Preferment ſuitable to his ſervices and ſuf- " ferings." The Houſe likewiſe ordered, that in the ſaid bill the proceedings upon the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion ſhould be declared void (10).

(10) Ibid. pag. 10, 11.

[M] Our author could never obtain any Church preferment.] This may appear ſtrange, when it is conſidered how well he deſerved it; but Mr. Hamden, who was his Fellow-Priſoner, and great friend, may help to furniſh us with ſome reaſons for it in the account, which he gave of Mr. Johnſon's book about the Abrogation of King James, to the Ducheſs of Mazarine. " The " Biſhops, ſays he, and Clergy of the Church of " England, having abandoned King James, and owned " King William and Queen Mary; ſuch of them as " had formerly maintained the doctrine of Paſſive Obe- " dience and Non-Reſiſtance in an unlimited ſenſe, " were upbraided with it, as having acted contrary to " thoſe principles, which they had impoſed upon " others to believe on pain of damnation. The mat- " ter of fact being undeniable, ſeveral of them, rather " than own their miſtake, had recourſe to ſubterfuges " to juſtify their practice, and at the ſame time to " maintain their doctrine. To this end they publiſhed " ſeveral books, one of which advanced, that King " William had conquered the nation by his army and " fleet, and therefore they were obliged to ſubmit to " him as a conqueror, but not as to a King ſet up by " Parliamentary authority, it not being in the power " of the nation to change or dethrone their Kings. " Others not liking this way of arguing had recourſe to " another topic, viz. that God, for the fulfilling of Pro- " phecies, and of his own Eternal Decrees, had, by an " extraordinary Providence, and by virtue of his abſolute " power to diſpoſe of Princes and people as he pleaſed, " ſet up King William upon the throne by his own " hand: Therefore they were obliged to ſubmit to his " will. Some again liking neither of theſe arguments, " but ſtill being willing to ſave their doctrine of " Paſſive Obedience, ſaid, that it was not the nation, " either by themſelves, or repreſentatives, who had " dethroned King James, but that he depoſed himſelf, " by deſerting and abdicating the Kingdom. There- " fore they were obliged to ſet up another in " his place, leſt the nation ſhould fall into a republic, " which would have been the greateſt of all calami- " ties. Others again endeavoured to juſtify themſelves " from the authority of St. Paul, who commands all " Chriſtians to ſubmit to the powers that be; from " whence they inferred, that it did not belong to " ſubjects to enquire into the rights of Princes, but to " ſubmit to thoſe who are in poſſeſſion, without " troubling themſelves to examine whether their titles " were good or not." Theſe ſeveral propoſitions, ſays the writer of Some memorials of our author (11), being maintained by Divines of note, it is the leſs to be wondered that Mr. Johnſon, who oppoſed thoſe principles, and particularly in his book about the Abrogation of King James, could get no Church Preferment, ſince he had ſuch numerous and powerful enemies among the Clergy, who repreſented him as a republican, for maintaining that King William and Queen Mary were ſet up in his ſtead by authority of Parliament.

(11) Ibid. pag. 12.

them cut him with a ſword over the eye-brow, and thoſe at the bed's-feet preſented their piſtols at him; but upon Mr. Johnſon's paſſionate entreaties they went off, without doing him further miſchief, or rifling the houſe. A Surgeon was immediately ſent for, who found two wounds on his head, and his body much bruiſed. However with due care he recovered, and afterwards died in peace, though in what year we have no certain account. His works were reprinted together at London in one volume in fol. (*) [N].

(*) The ſecond edition was printed in 1713.

[N] His works were reprinted together at London in one volume in folio.] Beſides his writings already mentioned, this collection contains the following tracts. I. Remarks upon Dr. Sherlock's Book intitled, The Caſe of Reſiſtance of the ſupreme powers ſtated and reſolved, according to the doctrine of the Holy Scripture. This book of Mr. Johnſon's was written in the year 1683, and publiſhed in 1689. II. Reflections on the Hiſtory of Paſſive Obedience; firſt printed in the year 1689. III. An Argument proving, that the Abrogation of King James by the People of England from the regal throne, and the promotion of the Prince of Orange, one of the royal family, to the throne of the Kingdom in his ſtead, was according to the conſtitution of the Engliſh Government, and preſcribed by it. In oppoſition to all the falſe and treacherous Hypotheſes of Uſurpation, Conqueſt, Deſertion, and of taking the Powers that are upon Content. Firſt printed at London 1692 in 4to. Dedicated to the Commons of England in Parliament aſſembled. This book occaſioned A Letter from Oxford concerning Mr. Samuel Johnſon's late book, Oxford 1693 in 4to, pagg. 31. The author of this Pamphlet obſerves (12), that it was reported at Oxford, "that Mr. Johnſon's "book is not well received at Court, where, of all "other places, in our poor opinions, it ought to meet "with the kindeſt entertainment, becauſe it juſtifies "his Majeſty's proceedings, which were previous to "the Revolution; and repreſents him, as the truth "is, to be a King, who has a juſt and a legal right to "the Crown by the laws of the land. By what logic "it can be made ill doctrine to aſſert the lawfulneſs "of removing bad Princes under the government of "good ones, and thoſe ſuch, as upon a ſuppoſition of "the unlawfulneſs of removing bad ones, can have no "good title to the Crown themſelves, is what we can-"not eaſily comprehend. But I have ever thought, that "Courtiers ſee farther into a mill-ſtone than other men, "and that their way of reaſoning differs from that of "the reſt of mankind, ſince I ſaw King Charles II "heal. I took notice, that when the King put the "gold about their necks that came to be touched, the "Biſhop repeated over and over theſe words out of "St. John's Goſpel, viz. This is the true light, which "enlighteneth every man that cometh into the world. I "aſked a Courtier what relation the meaning of thoſe "words could have to ſuch an occaſion? And he told "me, that I interpreted Scripture like a Peaſant, and "that I did not underſtand the Court-Interpretation of "Scripture." He concludes with theſe words (13). "We could wiſh that Mr. Johnſon had inlarged his "book with what he does but hint at and barely "mention: I mean the doctrine of the Mirrour, the "Confeſſor's Laws, the Curtana ſword, and the power "of the Lord High Steward, and other great officers of "the Kingdom; but particularly that he had given us "an account of the authority of the Lord High Steward, "concerning which great officer, we find but ſome few "ſcraps here and there in any printed book; but they are "ſuch as give us good cauſe to believe that he was farther "intruſted and impowered to redreſs miſgovernment in "the ſtate, than our Clergy are generally aware of. And "tho' there be no ſuch ſtanding officer at this day; yet "there having been ſuch an one, it would do well, "if we were informed both wherein his office did par-"ticularly conſiſt, and how it came to be diſuſed." IV. An Eſſay concerning Parliaments at a certainty; or, the Kalends of May. V. Notes upon the Phenix Edition of the Paſtoral Letter. Firſt printed in 1694 in 4to. VI. A Confutation of a late Pamphlet, intitled, A Letter ballancing the Neceſſity of keeping a Land-Force in time of Peace, with the dangers that may follow on it. Firſt printed in 1697. VII. The ſecond Part of the Confutation of the Ballancing Letter; being an occaſional Diſcourſe in Vindication of Magna Charta. In this tract he endeavours to ſhew, "firſt that Magna Charta "is much older than King John's time, and conſe-"quently that its birth cannot be blemiſhed with any "thing that was done in his time, though his confir-"mation of it had been really extorted by rebellion. "Secondly, that the confirmations, which were had "and procured to it in King John's and Henry III's "time, were far from being gained by rebellion," He concludes with obſerving, "that the plain notion "of Magna Charta is this. It is a ſummary of the "native and inherent rights of Engliſhmen, which "the Norman Kings by granting afterwards by Char-"ter, bound themſelves not to break in upon and in-"vade; ſo that it was only a Norman-faſhioned ſecu-"rity, that theſe rights ſhould not be violated. But "we do not hold theſe rights by Charter, no, not by "the old dear-bought Parchment and Wax, for they "are the birthright of Engliſhmen, which no Kings "could ever give or take away. They are, as they "are called 25 Edward III. the Franchiſes of the "Land; and every Engliſhman by being born in the "land is born to them." VIII. Several Diſcourſes upon Practical Subjects; containing eleven Sermons.

T.

(12) Pag. 19.

(13) Pag. 30, 31.

☞JOHNSON (JOHN) was the only ſon of the Reverend Mr. Thomas Johnſon Vicar of Frindſbury near Rocheſter in the county of Kent, and of Mary his wife, the daughter of the Reverend Mr. Francis Drayton Rector of Little Chart in the ſame county, but within the Dioceſe of Canterbury [A]. He was born December the 30th in the year of our Lord 1662, and was educated in the King's School at Canterbury, where he made ſuch a progreſs in the three learned languages, Latin, Greek and Hebrew under Mr. Lovejoy then maſter of that ſchool, that when he was very little more than fifteen years of age he was ſent to the Univerſity of Cambridge, where he was admitted in the College of St. Mary Magdalen, under the tuition of Mr. Turner Fellow of that Houſe March the 4th $167\frac{7}{8}$. And in Lent Term $168\frac{1}{2}$ he took the degree of Bachelor of Arts as a Member of that College. Soon after he was nominated by the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury to a Scholarſhip in Corpus Chriſti (commonly called Bennet) College in that Univerſity, being of the Foundation of Matthew Parker, the firſt Archbiſhop of Canterbury after the Reformation was ſettled under Queen Elizabeth, to which he was admitted April the 29th 1682 under the tuition of Mr. Beck Fellow of that Houſe. He took the degree of Maſter of Arts as a Member of Bennet College at the commencement

[A] Within the Dioceſe of Canterbury.] His father, having been married about four years, died, leaving his ſon and one daughter to the care of his wife, with a ſmall eſtate; which lying at Barham near Canterbury, ſhe ſettled in that city for the conveniency of her children's education; where ſhe continued near ſixty years, dying about the ninetieth year of her age, about two years after the death of her ſon, which was prudently concealed from her by her daughter, that ſhe might not in her very old age be diſquieted with the knowledge of ſuch a loſs, and thereby the little remainder of her life be made more uneaſy to her.

commencement 1685. Soon after he entred into Deacons Orders, and became Curate to the Reverend Mr. Thomas Hardres Rector of both Upper and Lower Hardres near Canterbury. He was ordained Prieſt in King Henry the Seventh's Chapel, by the Right Reverend Dr. Thomas Sprat Lord Biſhop of Rocheſter and Dean of Weſtminſter, December the 19th 1686. And July the 9th 1687, he was collated to the Vicarage of Boughton under the Blean, by the moſt Reverend Father in God Dr. William Sancroft Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and at the ſame time he was allowed by the ſame Archbiſhop to hold the adjoining Vicarage of Hern-Hill by ſequeſtration: both which Churches he ſupplied himſelf, officiating one part of the day at one Church and the other at the other Church [B]. In the year 1689 October the 24th, he married Margaret the daughter of Thomas Jenkin of the Iſle of Thanet Gent. ſiſter to the Reverend Mr. Robert Jenkin late Maſter of St. John's College in Cambridge, and to the Reverend Mr. Henry Jenkin Rector of Tilney in Norfolk. About the ſame time there was one Sale, a vile fellow (who had counterfeited holy Orders, having forged Letters of Ordination both for himſelf and his father) that came into this Dioceſe, and taking occaſion from the confuſion occaſioned by the Revolution, during the time Archbiſhop Sancroft was under ſuſpenſion, and before Dr. Tillotſon was conſecrated to the Archbiſhopric, he made it his buſineſs to find out what Livings were held by ſequeſtration only, and procured the Broad Seal for one of theſe for himſelf, and another for his father [C]. Mr. Johnſon hereupon thought it neceſſary to ſecure his Vicarage of Hern-Hill, that he might prevent Sale, or any ſuch like fellow, from depriving him of that benefice: and Archbiſhop Sancroft being then deprived ab Officio only, but not a Beneficio, preſented him to Hern-Hill, to which he was inſtituted October the 16th 1689, by Dr. George Oxenden Vicar General to the Archbiſhop, but at that time to the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury, Guardians of the Spiritualities during the ſuſpenſion of the Archbiſhop. But as the Living had been ſo long held by ſequeſtration, that it was lapſed to the Crown, he found it neceſſary to corroborate his title with the Broad Seal, which was given him April the 12th 1690. In the year 1697 the Vicarage of St. John in the Iſle of Thanet, to which the town of Margate belongs, becoming void, Archbiſhop Teniſon the Patron conſidering the largeneſs of the Cure, was deſirous to place there a perſon better qualified than ordinary to ſupply it, and could think of no man in his Dioceſe ſo well qualified for ſuch a town as Mr. Johnſon, and therefore entreated him to undertake the paſtoral care of that large and populous pariſh. And becauſe the Benefice was but ſmall and the Cure very great, the Archbiſhop, to induce him to accept of it, collated him to the Vicarage of Appledore (a good benefice) on the borders of Romney Marſh, on the firſt day of May 1697; but Mr. Johnſon choſe to hold Margate by ſequeſtration only. And having now two ſons ready to be inſtructed in learning, he would not ſend them abroad to ſchool, but taught them himſelf; ſaying that he thought it as much the duty of a father to teach his own children, if he was capable of doing it, as it was of the mother to ſuckle and nurſe them in their infancy, if ſhe was able; and becauſe he believed they would learn better in company than alone, he took two or three boarders to teach with them, being the ſons of ſome particular friends, He was much importuned by ſeveral others of his acquaintance to take their ſons, but he refuſed: for he was well known throughout the Dioceſe to which he belonged, and his ability in all parts of learning ſo much eſteemed, that though he lived in the remoteſt corner of the country, he might have had a large houſe full of boarders if he had pleaſed. But finding he could not attend his little ſchool, his great Cure, and his ſtudies in ſuch manner as he was deſirous to do, he humbly entreated his Patron, the Archbiſhop, to give him leave entirely to quit Margate, and to retire to his Cure of Appledore, which, with ſome difficulty was at laſt granted him; but not till his Grace had made enquiry throughout his Dioceſe and the Univerſity of Cambridge for one

[B] And the other at the other Church.] Although he entered ſo young on the cure of ſouls, yet by his firſt ſermon he convinced his pariſhioners and all others who heard him (which were not a few) that he was well qualified for that charge. His text was Heb. xiii. 17. Obey them that have the rule over you and ſubmit your ſelves, for they watch for your ſouls, as they that muſt give an account, that they may do it with joy, and not with grief, for that is unprofitable for you. From which words he took occaſion to inform them what was his own duty to them, and that he purpoſed faithfully to diſcharge it: and likewiſe what he might reaſonably expect from them, that his labour and care might not be vain. This he did in ſuch a manner, as to convince all that heard him, that young as he was, he very well underſtood his office, and how he ought to execute it, and that he was a perſon whoſe youth they might not deſpiſe. And he proceeded anſwerable to this beginning: ſo that he was very much beloved and reſpected in both his pariſhes; and was alſo ſoon taken notice of by the neighbouring Clergy of the city of Canterbury, and the adjacent parts, as one no ways inferior, except in age, to any Pariſh-Prieſt in the Dioceſe.

[C] One for himſelf and another for his father.] Dr. Tillotſon, during the three years he held the Archbiſhopric, never viſited the Dioceſe: but Dr. Teniſon in the firſt year of his tranſlation to it, in the year 1695, made his viſitation, at which time all perſons that had cures were required to ſhew their letters of ordination. Theſe letters of ordination being put into the hands of Dr. John Batteley, then Archdeacon of Canterbury, upon the peruſal of thoſe exhibited by the two Sales, he ſoon diſcovered them to be forged; and charged them with it. The ſon obſtinately maintained that the letters were not forged, but the father ſoon confeſſed that he was never ordained; only that his ſon had brought him theſe two pieces of parchment, and told him that one of theſe made him a Deacon and the other a Prieſt. However they ſtaid not to be proſecuted, but both fled immediately. What became of them afterwards I know not; only have heard that the ſon ſet up ſomewhere for a Preacher among the Diſſenters.

one might be thought qualified to ſucceed him [D]. He ſettled at Appledore in the year 1703, and as ſoon as his eldeſt ſon was fit for the Univerſity (which he was, before he attained to be full fifteen years of age, in the year 1705) he ſent him to Cambridge, and his other ſon to ſchool till he was of age to be put out apprentice, and diſmiſſed all the reſt of his ſcholars. He ſeemed much pleaſed with Appledore at his firſt retirement thither, as a place where he could follow his ſtudies without interruption. But this ſatisfaction was not of long continuance; for that marſhy air, in a year or two, brought a ſevere ſickneſs on himſelf and all his family, ſo that they were every one like to die; but it pleaſed God they all eſcaped at that time. Nevertheleſs, his conſtitution (which till then had been very good) was ſo broken, that he never afterwards recovered it in a degree like what he had before enjoyed. This made him deſirous to remove from thence as ſoon as he could; and the Vicarage of Cranbrook becoming void, he aſked the Archbiſhop to beſtow it on him, which his Grace readily did, and accordingly collated him to it April the 13th 1707, where he continued till his death, holding Appledore with it [E]. In the year 1710, and again in the year 1713, he was choſen by the Clergy of the Dioceſe of Canterbury to be one of their Proctors for the Convocation ſummoned to meet with the Parliament in thoſe years. And as the firſt of theſe Convocations was permitted to ſit and act, and to treat of matters of Religion (though they brought no buſineſs to any perfection, by reaſon of the difference had been raiſed between the two Houſes) he conſtantly attended the Houſe of which he was a member whilſt any matter was there under debate; whereby his parts and learning came to be known and eſteemed by the moſt eminent Clergy of the Province, as they had been before by thoſe of the Dioceſe where he lived; ſo that from this time he was frequently ſought to for his opinion in particular caſes, and had letters ſent to him from the remoteſt parts of the Province of Canterbury, and ſometimes from the other Province alſo, to conſult him for his opinion in matters of learning, eſpecially as to what concerned our Religion and our Eccleſiaſtical Laws. He continued at Cranbrook about eighteen years; and as he had been highly valued, eſteemed and beloved at all other places where he had reſided, ſo was he here alſo by all that were true friends to the pure Catholic Religion of JESUS CHRIST, as profeſſed and eſtabliſhed in the Church of England. But as there were many Diſſenters of all denominations in that place, and ſome others, who (though they frequented the Church yet) ſeemed to like the Diſſenters better, and to ſide with them upon all occaſions, except going to their meetings for religious worſhip, I cannot ſay how they loved and eſteemed him. However, he was ſo remarkably upright in his life and converſation, that even they could accuſe him of no other fault, except his known hearty zeal for the Church of England, which all impartial perſons would have judged a virtue. For certainly thoſe that have not an hearty affection for a Church ought not to be made Prieſts of it. Some of thoſe favourers of the Diſſenters ſtudied to make him uneaſy, by endeavouring to raiſe a party in his pariſh againſt them, merely becauſe they could not make him like themſelves, a Latitudinarian in matters of Religion; but they failed in their deſign, and his friends were too many for them [F]. A little before he left Appledore, he began to diſcover that learning to the world, which till this time was little known beyond the Dioceſe where he lived, except to ſome particular acquaintance, by printing ſeveral Tracts; though his modeſty was ſuch, that he would not put his name to them, till they had, at leaſt, a ſecond edition. The firſt of theſe was a Paraphraſe with Notes on the Book of Pſalms according to the Tranſlation retained in our Common-Prayer Book [G]. This he publiſhed in the year 1706. The next book he wrote and [D] One might be thought qualified to ſucceed him.] Mr. John Warren, then Fellow of Queen's College in Cambridge, was with ſome intreaty prevailed with to accept the cure, and gave very good ſatisfaction to the pariſhioners, being a very good Preacher, and of a friendly diſpoſition: but not voting for Parliament and Convocation men ſo as to pleaſe the Archbiſhop, and holding this living by ſequeſtration only, his Grace required him to quit it after he had held it two years. But he ſoon after became Chaplain to Dr. Blackhall Biſhop of Exon, by whom he was preferred to a living and a Prebend in that Church. He died in the year 1736.

[E] Holding Appledore with it.] He maintained a conſtant Reſident-Curate at Appledore: and as Cranbrook was a very large cure, though but a ſmall benefice, he for many years kept a Curate there alſo to aſſiſt him. Neither did he leave Appledore ſo intirely to his Curate, as not to make his pariſhioners there frequent viſits, and to preach and adminiſter the Holy Euchariſt to them.

[F] His friends were too many for them.] Cranbrook and other pariſhes in the Weald of Kent have a great number of Diſſenters of all ſorts, Preſbyterians, Anabaptiſts, Quakers, &c. A certain Squire in the pariſh, being a Juſtice of the Peace, and a profeſſed admirer of Dr. Tindal's book falſely intitled The Rights of the Chriſtian Church, endeavoured to make himſelf Church-Warden, that he might be as troubleſome to Mr. Johnſon as he could. But notwithſtanding he brought in all the Diſſenters, and likewiſe the poor, blind and lame to vote for him, he could not carry his point. However he commenced a ſuit in the ſpiritual court on that occaſion, wherein he was caſt; and not paying his fees, and ſtanding in contempt of the court, he was excommunicated. Upon which he firſt turned Preſbyterian, then Anabaptiſt and Sabbatarian, amongſt whom he is now a Preacher. This Gentleman was the only one, who endeavoured to give Mr. Johnſon any diſturbance in his pariſh, but according to the proverb, Though he often ſhewed his teeth he could never bite.

[G] Tranſlation retained in our Common-Prayer-Book.] The book bears this title. Holy David and his Old Engliſh Tranſlators cleared and vindicated. Containing 1. Directions for the more devout uſing the Pſalms, and a Short Hiſtorical Account of the Tranſlation and Tranſlators. 2. The Pſalter or Pſalms of David after the Tranſlation of the great Bible, printed as they are to be ſung or ſaid in Churches. With large Explanatory Notes. 3. A and publiſhed was the Clergyman's Vade Mecum in the year 1708 [H]. And in the year 1709 the Clergyman's Vade Mecum, Part 2. [I]. In the year 1710 the Propitiatory Oblation in the Euchariſt [K]. In the year 1714 The Unbloody Sacrifice [L]. In the year 1717

3. A general Defence of this Old Tranſlation in Anſwer to all the Objections and Cavils that have been raiſed againſt it. He choſe to vindicate this tranſlation, becauſe the Clergy are obliged to give their aſſent and conſent to it, as well as to the other parts of the book of Common-Prayer. And in this work he ſhewed himſelf a great maſter both of the Greek and Hebrew languages, eſpecially with regard to the Holy Scriptures, and an excellent critic to judge when it might be more proper to follow the tranſlation of the Septuagint than our preſent Hebrew copies as pointed by the Maſorites.

[H] Clergyman's Vade Mecum in the year 1708.] This book (as we learn from the title-page) contains An Account of the Antient and Preſent Church of England, the Duties and Rights of the Clergy, and of their Privileges and Hardſhips. Containing full Directions relating to Ordination, Inſtitution, and Induction, and moſt of the Difficulties which they commonly meet with in the Diſcharge of their Office. Here he ſhews himſelf to be well ſkilled in all the laws of this Church civil or eccleſiaſtical. And this book was ſo well received by the public, eſpecially by the Clergy, that about every third year there was a call for a new impreſſion: for in about fifteen years there were no fewer than five editions of it; the firſt edition being in the year 1708, and the fifth in the year 1723.

[I] Clergyman's Vade Mecum, Part 2.] This Part contains the Canonical Codes of the Primitive, Univerſal, Eaſtern and Weſtern Church down to the year of our Lord 787. done from the Original Greek and Latin, omitting no canon, decree, or any part of them that is curious or inſtructive. With explanatory Notes, a large Index, or a Preface ſhewing the uſefulneſs of the work, with ſome reflections on two books called Moderate Conformity, and the Rights of the Church. In this ſecond Part he ſhewed himſelf to be no leſs ſkilled in the eccleſiaſtical laws and diſcipline of the antient Catholic Church, than in the former he had ſhewed it in the laws and diſcipline of his own particular Church. And of this book he lived to ſee three editions.

[K] The propitiatory oblation in the Holy Euchariſt.] This little piece, as likewiſe all that he had hitherto publiſhed, came out without a name. This, as to the former books proceeded from his modeſty, he being willing to continue in the ſame obſcurity he had done unto this time. But the books, when they had been read, gave ſo general a ſatisfaction, that people could not help enquiring who was the author of them: neither could his particular friends, to whom he had been ſo kind as to give them, forbear to let the world know to whom they were obliged for thoſe valuable and uſeful treatiſes. But as to this Propitiatory Oblation, he has himſelf given us the reaſon, why he conceals his name, at the very beginning of that book: where he ſays, "The impartial reader will not entertain any "prejudice againſt this treatiſe for coming abroad "without a name, if he do but conſider how dange-"rous it is for a man openly to plead on that ſide of "the cauſe, for which I have declared in my title-"page. A very learned Divine has been ſometimes, "in words at length, reproached for being inclined "to Popery, becauſe he had freely declared his mind "to this purpoſe. His adverſary is not content to "hint his ſuſpicion once or twice, but repeats it al-"moſt twenty times in a book conſiſting of little more "than two hundred pages: and I do not think it ne-"ceſſary to give opportunity to ſuch men to mark "me out for deſtruction by loading me with that in-"famous character." And the then Biſhop of Norwich (afterwards of Wincheſter) Dr. Charles Trimnel, having in a Charge to his Clergy (printed a little before the publication of this tract) made ſome reflections on a paſſage or two in the ſecond Part of the Vade Mecum relating to this ſubject, Mr. Johnſon added a Poſtſcript to vindicate that paſſage from his Lordſhip's objections. But notwithanding his endeavours to conceal himſelf, he was quickly known to be the author of this book, and he was ſoon after reflected on upon that account, and his book anſwered (I mean pretended to be anſwered) by Dr. Thomas Wiſe, a Clergyman then beneficed at Canterbury, and ſome others, who thereby endeavoured to pleaſe the then Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Dr. Thomas Teniſon, who did not approve the doctrine of the EUCHARISTICK SACRIFICE; and this put Mr. Johnſon quite out of favour at Lambeth during the remaining part of that Archbiſhop's life, who till this time ſeemed at leaſt to have a particular eſteem for him. However this did not diſcourage him from going on to maintain what he believed to be the truth; which he judged he was obliged to adhere to, whomſoever he might diſpleaſe by it, eſpecially if it was what he believed this to be, an Important Truth. Therefore he reſolved to examine and to handle the argument more thoroughly, and to ſet the Chriſtian Sacrifice in its full light, and to prove the Holy Euchariſt to be a Sacrifice truly and properly ſo called from the authority of the Holy Scriptures, and the teſtimony of the Antient Fathers and Liturgies of the firſt four or five centuries after Chriſt. This was a work, which required time and labour to collect materials, and judgment to make a proper uſe of them. However in about three years he finiſhed the firſt and moſt laborious part of this very uſeful work.

[L] The Unbloody Sacrifice.] The whole title is, The Unbloody Sacrifice and Altar unveiled and ſupported. In which the Nature of the Euchariſt is explained according to the Sentiments of the Chriſtian Church in the four firſt Centuries. Proving that the Euchariſt is a proper material Sacrifice. That it is both Euchariſtick and Propitiatory. That it is to be offered by proper Officers. That the Oblation is to be made on a proper Altar. That it is to be conſumed by Manducation. To which is added a Proof that what our Saviour ſpeaks concerning eating his Fleſh and drinking his Blood in the ſixth chapter of St. John's Goſpel is principally meant of the Euchariſt. With a Prefatory Epiſtle to the Lord Biſhop of Norwich. Animadverſions on the Reverend Dr. Wiſe's Book, which he calls the Chriſtian Euchariſt ſtated. And ſome Reflections on a ſtitched Book intituled, An Anſwer to the Exceptions made againſt the Lord Biſhop of Oxford's (Dr. William Talbot's, afterwards Lord Biſhop of Durham's) Charge. At the end is a collection of the Teſtimonies of the Antient Fathers, Councils and Liturgies in the Original Greek or Latin, wherein they were written, which are referred to in ſeveral parts of the book, beginning with St. Clement of Rome, who was contemporary with the Apoſtles, and ending with Theodorit who flouriſhed A. D. 423. With the Council of Toledo A. D. 400. The Sacramentary of St. Gregory A. D. 590. In the Prefatory Epiſtle to this book, addreſſed to the Right Reverend the then Biſhop of Norwich, he uſes a true Engliſh freedom with that Prelate, yet is in no wiſe wanting in the reſpect due to his character. At the beginning of this addreſs he ſays, "My Lord, you are one of that Reverend Order, "which has always been eſteemed, till now, of very "late, to have had the guardianſhip of the Altar in "an eſpecial manner committed to it by Chriſt him-"ſelf. One Biſhop and one Altar, has been the diſ-"tinguiſhing motto of the Apoſtolical Church ever "ſince the time of St. Ignatius, and to contend pro "Aris (for the Altars) has ever been thought ho-"nourable in all men, but eſpecially in thoſe whoſe "buſineſs is continually to attend them." And p. 10. he ſays, "I have reaſon to expect that all impartial "men ſhould believe what I now ſay, till our oppo-"nents can produce a proof of a Biſhop without an "Altar, or a Liturgy without a proper Sacrifice from "the remains of genuine antiquity.." And pag. 25. he ſays, "I doubt not but in the primitive Church, "whatever Biſhop had oppoſed or depraved the Sa-"crifice, he would have been immediately obliged "to give place to an Orthodox Succeſſor. For I "have reaſon to believe, that the antient Biſhops, "Clergy and people were not more uniform in any "point of doctrine or worſhip, than in the notions and "practice concerning the Euchariſtical Oblation." And at the concluſion of this Prefatory Epiſtle, pag. 59. he ſays, "I ſhall think it much more honourable in

"the

1717 The Unbloody Sacrifice, Part 2. [M]. In the year 1720 A Collection of Eccleſiaſtical

" the ſight of God and my ever bleſſed Redeemer, " and of all truly judicious Chriſtians, to be conſi- " dered as the laſt Prieſt of this Church that ever " wrote in defence of the Sacrifice, than to have been " the firſt Biſhop that ever oppoſed it." In the ſame Prefatory Epiſtle he alſo takes notice of the then Biſhop of Oxford, Dr. William Talbot, and one or two more who had written againſt the ſacrifice, and expoſes the weakneſs of their arguments both with judgment and ſmartneſs. And the book itſelf gives full and ſatisfactory proofs of what is promiſed in the title page; in which he ſhewed himſelf ſo much an overmatch for all his adverſaries in learning as well as reaſoning, that none of them afterwards attacked him openly in a manner worthy of his notice. Indeed he had one great advantage over them, for he contended for the truth: and as he ſhews in his Prefatory Epiſtle pag. 22, GREAT IS THE TRUTH, AND WILL PREVAIL AGAINST THE MOST POWERFUL OPPONENTS. In a word, he ſhewed himſelf a compleat maſter of his ſubject, while his adverſaries appeared to have but a very ſuperficial knowledge of it. However one Mr. Pfaffy a German Divine of the Lutheran perſuaſion, and tutor to the young Prince of Wirtenburg, took upon him to be a kind of moderator in this controverſy, and was pleaſed to expreſs his diſlike of ſome things in this firſt part of the Unbloody Sacrifice; and Dr. John Turner at that time Vicar of Greenwich, and afterwards Prebendary of Canterbury, made ſome reflections upon it in a pamphlet which he called The Chriſtian Euchariſt no proper Sacrifice, wherein he charges Mr. Johnſon with aſſertions, that are not to be found in his book or any thing like them. The ſame was alſo done by another, who although he had been much obliged to Mr. Johnſon, and had pretended great friendſhip, yet when he found he was out of favour at Lambeth, thought it proper to publiſh to the world that he was no longer his friend; for although we ought not to join with a friend in what we believe to be erroneous, yet common honeſty will not allow us to charge even an enemy with what he has not aſſerted. Alſo his old antagoniſt Dr. Wiſe, in a Letter of Advice to Dr. Brett (as he called it, though he never ſent it to him) under the borrowed name of Ezekiel Standfaſt, made ſome ſcurrilous reflections on Mr. Johnſon and this book of his. But not one of theſe ſaid any thing that deſerved a reply, ſince they did not invalidate one argument or authority in the whole book.

[M] The Unbloody Sacrifice, Part II.] The Printer by miſtake has dated it 1718, but it was really printed and publiſhed in February 171⅞, the whole title is, The Unbloody Sacrifice and Altar unveiled and ſupported. In which the nature of the Euchariſt is explained according to the Sentiments of the Chriſtian Church in the four firſt Centuries. Part the Second: Shewing the Agreement and Diſagreement of the Euchariſt with the Sacrifices of the Antients, and the Excellency of the former. The great moment of the Euchariſt, both as a Feaſt and Sacrifice. The Neceſſity of frequent Communion. The Unity of the Euchariſt. The Nature of Excommunication. And the primitive Method of Preparation. With Devotions for the Altar. In the Preface to this book he takes notice of the forementioned perſons who had written againſt his former book. Mr. Pfaffy he treats like a Gentleman and a Scholar, becauſe he had ſhewed himſelf to be ſo, though his objections were eaſily anſwered, eſpecially by one who was ſo great a maſter of the ſubject as Mr. Johnſon. The other he juſt mentions, and treats them with contempt, as they deſerved. Theſe two books of the Unbloody Sacrifice deſerve to be well read and conſidered by every Divine, and to have a place in every Clergyman's ſtudy: and the ſecond part is very proper to be in the hands of every pious Chriſtian. This was his deſign in writing theſe two books, as he informs us in his Preface to his Second Part, where he ſays, " The firſt part of this work was compoſed for " the uſe of them who had leiſure and inclination to " enter into the more abſtruſe parts of this controverſy. " Since my publication of it, I have been deſired by " perſons of great worth and judgment to draw up " a ſcheme of this doctrine, and in as narrow a com- " paſs and as plain a ſtyle as poſſible; for the infor- " mation of ſuch readers as do not care to concern " themſelves with books which require long and " earneſt application. I have accordingly ſo con- " trived this ſecond part, that though it be much leſs " than the former, and be chiefly intended to com- " pleat my whole deſign on this ſubject, yet the firſt " view of the Sacrament of the Euchariſt may be ta- " ken from this volume. To this end I have been " obliged to repeat ſome things in the Introduction, " which have been ſaid in the firſt part; and yet I " may call them improvements rather than repetitions: " And that a middling reader might be capable of un- " derſtanding the book, I have always endeavoured " to expreſs myſelf in the moſt known common words " our language affords, or at leaſt that I could find. " The ſubject is ſeemingly new: For whatever is ſo " old as to be out of uſe has no appearance of novelty " in the eyes of the preſent generation. But in truth, " the Sacrifice of the EUCHARIST is as old as " Chriſtianity itſelf, and ſacrifice in general as old as " mankind. Now to receive notions which have been " long ſince out of date, and to expreſs the opinions " and practice of the antients in the language of the " preſent age, and to do it in ſuch a manner as to ren- " der their thoughts agreeable to the reliſh of com- " mon Engliſh readers, is no eaſy matter. However " my end was to be underſtood by all. If I miſs of my " aim, the reader is to impute it to my want of " words." After the publication of this ſecond part, Mr. Johnſon had the ſatisfaction to find, that though this truly primitive doctrine of the Chriſtian Church, which he endeavoured to revive in theſe two books, was not ſo heartily and generally embraced as he could have wiſhed, yet it was leſs ſpoken againſt. His adverſaries were ſo far ſilenced as to ſuppreſs their railing accuſations of Popery, and durſt no longer directly deny the doctrine to be true, though they would not acknowledge it to be ſo, only intimating as if they thought it a doctrine, which, though it might be true, yet was not neceſſary to be taught or known. This appears from the Preface of the next book of which I am to give an account; wherein, at pag. liii. he ſays, " Our Right Reverend Fathers do, upon all occaſions, " hint to us their opinion of the neceſſity of reviewing " the Liturgy of the Church of England. And I can- " not but declare my opinion that there is no one of- " fice in that book more needs a review, than the " Communion Service. And I cannot but conceive " ſome hopes this will be done, whenever our Con- " vocation ſhall be permitted to enter on that great " work. For I cannot but with ſatisfaction obſerve " that Divines, of greateſt note in our Church, do " not ſpeak ſuch abhorrence, or expreſs ſo zealous an in- " dignation againſt the ſacrifice, as they have formerly " done. One of the moſt eminent of them, whom I " ſhould leaſt of all hope to favour my ſentiments, in " a Sermon preached at the anniverſary meeting of " the Charity Schools, 1716, is content to ſay, whe- " ther the Lord's Supper be a real Sacrifice, or only a " commemoration of a real Sacrifice, Divines are agreed " that the real effects are the very ſame. And it is " true, that Divines, who do not believe the Euchariſt " to be a Sacrifice, may, and probably do, propoſe to " themſelves the ſame ends in adminiſtring and re- " ceiving this Sacrament, with thoſe who believe it " to be a Sacrifice; but the true ſtate of the queſtion " is, whether they, who do not believe it to be a Sa- " crifice, nor adminiſter it as ſuch, do really obtain " theſe ends? Or whether it can be that Sacrament " which was inſtituted by Chriſt, if it be not conſe- " crated in the manner Chriſt directed? Or whether " it can be truly conſecrated without being offered to " God? Further, this great man thinks it much to " be lamented, That Divines ſhould raiſe a diſpute " concerning that point (the Sacrifice of the Euchariſt) " at a time when it is openly denied that the Sacrifice of " Chriſt was real and propitiatory. Now, with ſub- " miſſion, I know no time more ſeaſonable for the " confutation of this falſe doctrine, than that in which " it was publiſhed and advanced. And by proving " the Euchariſt to be a Sacrifice, we do, by neceſſary " conſequence, prove Chriſt's natural body and blood " to have been a Sacrifice. And if it was a Sacrifice, " it muſt unavoidably have been propitiatory, becauſe ſiaſtical Laws &c. [N]. In the year 1728, Mary his daughter, and only ſurviving child being his Executrix, publiſhed ſome poſthumous Diſcourſes of his which he had deſigned for the preſs, if it had pleaſed God to have continued him longer here [O]. And as no Prieſt was more careful and diligent to inſtruct thoſe committed to his care in the knowledge of their duty by his Sermons and Diſcourſes, ſo was he no leſs careful to inſtruct them by his example in a regular Chriſtian life: and therefore none was better beloved

" there never was a ſacrifice offered to God in a due " manner, but what was propitiatory. Propitiation " is eſſential to Sacrifice duly offered. And I muſt " humbly declare my opinion, that it is impoſſible " to eſtabliſh the doctrine of Chriſt's body and blood " being a real Sacrifice, by any other arguments but " thoſe by which we prove the Euchariſt to have " been inſtituted as a Sacrifice by our bleſſed Saviour. " It would be a very great hardſhip upon the aſſertors " of the Sacrifice, if they muſt be reſtrained from " publiſhing their notions till after the Socinians are " dead. And it would much better have become this " Great Man, to have injoined ſilence to the Socini- " ans, than to the defenders of the Apoſtolical Faith. " And if we muſt be ſilenced till we have proved the " reality of the Sacrifice of Chriſt, without proving at " the ſame time the Sacrifice of the Euchariſt, I am " pretty ſure we may ſtay till dooms-day, and yet neither " be able to do it ourſelves, nor to ſee it done by " others."

[N] A Collection of Eccleſiaſtical Laws.] This book, as we are told in the title-page, contains, " A col- " lection of all Eccleſiaſtical Laws, Canons, Anſwers, " Reſcripts, with other memorials concerning the go- " vernment, diſcipline, and worſhip, of the Church " of England, from its firſt foundation to the Con- " queſt, that have been publiſhed in the Latin or Saxo- " nick tongues. And all the canons and conſtitutions " eccleſiaſtical made ſince the Conqueſt and before the " Reformation, in any National Council, or in the Pro- " vincial Synods of Canterbury and York, that have " hitherto been publiſhed in the Latin tongue. Now " firſt tranſlated into Engliſh with explanatory notes, " and ſuch gloſſes from Lyndwood and Athon as were " thought moſt uſeful." But I muſt obſerve that he was miſtaken in ſaying now firſt publiſhed in Engliſh, becauſe Mr. Collier had ſome years before publiſhed the moſt of them in that language in his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of Great Britain. But this was more than Mr. Johnſon knew. Beſides Mr. Collier did not pub- liſh them entire as Mr. Johnſon has done, but omit- ted many, and abridged ſome others. There are two volumes of this in 8vo. The firſt contains the Eccleſi- aſtical Laws to the Conqueſt: The ſecond from the Conqueſt to the Reformation. And if it had pleaſed God to have ſpared his life a little longer, he would have publiſhed a like collection from the Reforma- tion to this time, much more full and compleat than what we have in Biſhop Sparrow's Collection. But he had ſcarce begun the rough ſketches of this work, when it pleaſed God to deprive us of him, and to take him un- to himſelf. To the books, which he printed after his Propitiatory Oblation, he prefixed his name, and like- wiſe to that later edition of his Vade Mecum. But ſome other little things he publiſhed without his name; as Paſtoral Advices to a perſon that intends to be confirmed by the Biſhop: and Paſtoral Advice to a perſon lately confirmed by the Biſhop: and ſome other little ſtitched books, which he printed at his own charge for the uſe of his pariſhioners, and diſtributed amongſt them gratis.

[O] Some poſthumous Diſcourſes of his &c.] The firſt of thoſe treatiſes he had deſigned for the preſs is intitled, The Primitive Communicant, which conſiſts of three Sermons or Diſcourſes, together with Devoti- ons for the Altar. The firſt Diſcourſe is on Heb. x. 8, 9. Above, when he ſaid, ſacrifice, and offering, and offering for ſin thou wouldeſt not, neither hadſt pleaſure therein, (which are offered by the law). Then ſaid he, lo, I come to do thy will, O God. He taketh away the firſt, that he may eſtabliſh the ſecond. The ſecond Diſ- courſe is on Luke xxii. 19, 20. And he took bread, and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave unto them, ſaying, This is my body which is given for you; this do in re- membrance of me. Likewiſe the cup after ſupper, ſaying, This cup is the New Teſtament in my Blood, which is ſhed for you. The third Diſcourſe is on John vi. 27. Labour not for the meat which periſheth, but for the meat which endureth to everlaſting life, which the Son of man ſhall give you. Theſe we may call an Appen- dix to the Unbloody Sacrifice.

The next treatiſe he deſigned for the preſs, is An Explanation of that Prophecy of Seventy Weeks, as re- lated in the ninth Chapter of Daniel. This prophecy has very much puzzled interpreters to make it agree with the Chronology of that time, from the beginning of it unto the coming of Chriſt: and different expoſi- tors have aſſigned different beginnings to theſe Seventy Weeks, although the expreſs words of the prophecy appear, one would think, to fix the beginning of theſe weeks to the very time that it was delivered to Daniel, and ſo Mr. Johnſon, as well as others, conceive they do. Now ſeventy weeks of years, that is ſeven times ſeventy years make but 490 years, and it is very cer- tain that there were more than that number of years from the firſt year of Darius or Cyrus to the coming of Chriſt and completion of the prophecy, which has given the occaſion for ſo many diſtinct methods taken to fix the time when to begin the computation of theſe weeks. Mr. Johnſon therefore ſhews, that all theſe difficulties and various expoſitions ariſe only from following the Hebrew Text, as pointed by the Maſo- rites: whereas it has been proved, and all the learn- ed, or at leaſt the greateſt part, are agreed that the points are modern, and therefore not to be regarded. Mr. Johnſon therefore rejecting theſe points, and read- ing the text according to the unpointed Hebrew letters, and comparing it with the old Italian verſion, as pre- ſerved in this place by Tertullian, and with the tranſ- lators of Aquila and Theodotion, proves that the firſt ſeven weeks, (which the prophecy very plainly diſtinguiſhes from the 62 weeks following) are to be repeated; conſequently thoſe ſeven weeks being count- ed twice, make not 49 but 98 years: which being added to that 62 weeks or 434 years, make 532 years. Then he proves by Ptolemy's canon (which contains the moſt certain indiſputable Chronology of thoſe times) that from the firſt year of Darius, (which was alſo the firſt of Cyrus) at which time Daniel expreſly teaches that the decree went forth to build Jeruſalem, to the birth of Chriſt, was juſt that number of 532 years. Then he ſhews that the laſt week was not, like the reſt, to conſiſt of 49 years only, but the length was to be diſcovered by the events, and that it continued from the birth of Chriſt to the deſtruction of Jeruſa- lem, which, according to his account, contains 77 years. And the reaſon he gives why this week ſhould be different from the reſt as to its time of continu- ance, is becauſe it is ſtiled the one ſingle or eminent week.

The next Diſcourſe contains two Diſſertations or Ser- mons on the Nature of God and his true Worſhip. The text is John iv. 24. God is a Spirit, and they that worſhip him, muſt worſhip him in ſpirit and in truth. In the firſt of theſe Sermons he ſhews what a ſpirit is, and then that God is ſuch a ſpirit. " A ſpirit, " ſays he, ſignifies ſuch a being as has the power " of thinking, and God, angels, and the ſouls of " men, are ſuch beings. Therefore the only way to " come at the knowledge of God as a ſpirit is, to con- " template our own ſouls, and obſerve what are the " principal qualities belonging to them." 1. Our ſouls, that being or ſubſtance within us, by which we think, that is apprehend, conceive, deliberate, judge, agree, conclude, remember, is what we call a ſpirit. 2. Another property of the ſoul is, that it feels what- ever affects the body; for the body, without the ſoul can feel nothing. 3. Another property of the ſoul is, that it can move the body. There is nothing, per- haps, in nature more ſtrange, than that bodies of ſuch a bulk as ours ſhould be moved by a thought. We need but will or reſolve, and our hands will work, our feet walk, and our whole body be put into motion, and it bends and turns itſelf into as many poſtures as beloved by his pariſhioners in general in the ſeveral Cures he was placed in, and by all who had the happineſs of his acquaintance; and what enemies he had were only ſuch as were enemies to thoſe Chriſtian Doctrines which he taught and practiſed. And indeed, when we conſider his Learning, and his Critical Skill in the Languages proper, not to ſay neceſſary for a Divine, his great and extenſive Knowledge in the Canons, Conſtitutions, and Cuſtoms of the Catholic Church of Chriſt, as well as thoſe of this particular Church of England, its Uſages and Diſcipline in the ſeveral ages from the firſt planting of the Goſpel downward, even to the preſent times, joined to his clear underſtanding in all Chriſtian Doctrines, and his capacity to teach them, and likewiſe his exemplary life and converſation, the buſineſs requires, except when the limbs are impeded by ſickneſs, lameneſs, and the like, 4. It acts freely, has the power of chooſing or refuſing: and in this it differs from all things that conſiſt of body or matter only. This property of ſouls makes us capable of virtuous actions, and of being rewarded for them. Then he ſhews that God is ſuch a ſpirit as he has deſcribed our ſouls to be; but then he poſſeſſes all theſe properties in an infinite manner. 1. He thinks not in that defective manner we do, who can conſider but one little object at once; for he, at one ſingle view, diſcerns all things that are, were, or ſhall be. We are certainly ignorant of the inward eſſence of all things; and there is reaſon to believe there are more things hid from us entirely, than there are of thoſe which come under our notice in any meaſure: But nothing is or can be hid from the knowledge of God. And whereas our memories contain only the imperfect footſteps of ſome few things done ſome years or ſome ages paſt, God's knowledge extends to all the greateſt and moſt minute particulars; nothing is or can be hid from him. 2. God is a perceiving ſpirit. Our ſouls have a ſenſe or perception of what is done to the body, and we can ſee and hear what is done at ſome diſtance from us. But the perception we have is liable to be taken from us, and often is by diſeaſes. And while we enjoy it in the moſt perfect manner our natures will allow, it often gives us pain and diſquiet. But God is an infinite ſpirit, conſcious, and equally conſcious to any thing done in any part of the univerſe. He feels without pain, he perceives without uneaſineſs; and this moſt perfect perception is not liable to be impaired by any infirmities. 3. God is a ſpirit that can move matter or body. We can, after a ſort, move our bodies to do ſuch things as are neceſſary for our ſubſiſtence. Our ſouls can at pleaſure move our limbs, or command them to reſt, while the body is in health and vigour; diſeaſes or age, ſooner or later diſable our limbs from obeying the command of our ſouls. And while we are in our beſt ſtate of health, youth and ſtrength, our ſouls have no power over our ſtomach or other vitals. But God is that moſt perfect ſpirit, who is the firſt mover of all things, and in whom we ourſelves live, move, and have our being. By his power of moving matter, and impreſſing what laws of motion he pleaſes upon it, he made this beautiful frame of things, which we now behold: and by continuing ſuch laws of motion as are proper for every part of the world, he is its preſerver; and by his power of ſuſpending, varying, and revoking thoſe laws at his pleaſure, he is its governor: for every part of nature cannot but obey his almighty will, and move or ſtep at his irreſiſtible ſovereign command. 4. God is a ſpirit that acts with moſt perfect freedom. The ſoul of man is ſo far free that it cannot be forced to ſin without its own conſent; and the body cannot do any thing good or bad without its direction. And the ſoul, by uſing this freedom with diſcretion, is capable, by God's grace, of rendering itſelf eternally happy. But thro' our perverſeneſs this freedom of will often becomes a ſnare to us. But the freedom of God's will, which is directed by the moſt perfect wiſdom and purity, is indeed the perfection of the divine nature; becauſe by this he is always determined to chooſe the beſt. And thus we ſee God to be an infinite, perfect ſpirit, who thinks moſt clearly, who perceives all things, who is the creator and firſt mover of matter, who acts freely, and always for the beſt. It muſt however be confeſſed that our idea of God is imperfect, and ſo is our knowledge of any thing elſe.

The ſecond diſſertation on the ſame text conſiſts of the following heads: 1. To ſhew what is meant by worſhipping God in ſpirit and in truth. 2. To ſet aſide a wrong meaning given by ſome to the phraſe of worſhipping God in ſpirit, as if it meant uttering of prayers or praiſes without premeditation. 3. To ſhew, how far ſpiritual worſhip excludes outward expreſſions of it, and the uſe of bodily things in the worſhip and ſervice of God. 4. That in order to worſhip God in ſpirit, one very proper means is to worſhip him by ſtated forms of prayer. 5. The great excellency and acceptableneſs of ſpiritual worſhip.

The next diſcourſe, which is the firſt in the ſecond volume of Mr. Johnſon's poſthumous works, is his Sermon preached at Canterbury-School Feaſt: to which is prefixed a Preface to prove there were no alphabetical letters before Moſes. The writing with hieroglyphical figures, as the antient Egyptians did, or in ſuch characters as are ſtill uſed by the Chineſe, where every character marks a word, he grants may be older than Moſes, only maintains that to find out a means to expreſs all words that may be ſpoken by little more than twenty characters is beyond the reach of human invention: And therefore he ſays Moſes was taught this art by God, and that the firſt writing in alphabetical letters was the Ten Commandments written by God himſelf on two tables of ſtone. Neither was Mr. Johnſon ſingular in this opinion. For Gale in his Court of the Gentiles, Part 1, Book 1, Chap. 10, §. 4. obſerves that St. Auguſtin (Lib. 18, cap. 39, de Civitate Dei) ſays, "that the Hebrew letters (which he ſuppoſes to "be the moſt antient) began from Moſes." And Ludovicus Vives, in his notes on thoſe words of St. Auguſtin, ſays, "The vulgar opinion both of Chriſtians "and Hebrews is, that Hebrew letters had Moſes for "their author, which Eupolemus and other prophane "writers do aſſert, who delivered that Moſes was the "moſt wiſe of men, and the inventor of letters." Gale alſo brings ſeveral other teſtimonies both from Chriſtian and Heathen writers, to prove Moſes to have been the inventor of letters.

The Sermon, which follows this Preface, has for its text, Numb. xi. 29. Would God that all the Lord's people were prophets. Here he ſhews the meaning of this wiſh of Moſes, which depends upon the ſignification of the word prophets. All will agree, that whatſoever that exerciſe was, wherein the ſeventy, together with Eldad and Medad, were employed, it was propheſying. Then he ſhews there were Prophets in the higheſt ſenſe, who received revelations immediately from God, and Prophets in a ſecondary ſenſe, who received revelation from ſuperior Prophets, in order to teach and inſtruct others; and ſuch was the employ of theſe ſeventy Elders. But if this was their only buſineſs, what occaſion for the particular effuſion of God's ſpirit on them? For Moſes expreſly ſays, when the ſpirit reſted upon them they propheſied. And indeed, if theſe Elders had before known to read, there had been no occaſion for an extraordinary aſſiſtance of the divine ſpirit. But as Moſes had but newly learned this excellent art, theſe Elders were ignorant of it as well as others. Therefore it is ſaid, God took of the ſpirit that was upon Moſes, and communicated to the ſeventy Elders. Thus this knowledge of letters, which by the ſpirit was conferred on Moſes, was communicated to ſeveral others, that ſo they might read and write with uniform harmony: And it is not conceiveable how this ſhould be done by men wholly illiterate by mere human means in ſo ſhort a time as the occaſion required. And it moſt deſerves our notice, that by taking prophecy in this ſenſe, that is for reading exactly ex ſcriptis, what had been firſt written by a ſuperior Prophet, there will be no occaſion to diſguiſe the laſt words of the 25th verſe (as our Engliſh tranſlation does) we may tranſlate converſation, we may juſtly ſay of him, what was ſaid of the late learned Mr. Bingham, viz. Qui Patriarchatum in Eccleſiâ meruit, obiit Parochus. But I need ſay no more of his learning, the extenſiveneſs of which is ſo viſible in his works. His converſation was eaſy, and chearful, and very improving. If any one departed out of his company without learning ſomething uſeful from him, it was his own fault. He was very diligent in the performance of all parochial duties. He read prayers every morning in his Pariſh Church, when he was at home. He preached twice every Sunday till within a few years before he died, that he kept a Curate to aſſiſt him, and then he ſeldom failed to preach once himſelf. He frequently inſtructed children in the Catechiſm, and adminiſtred the Holy Euchariſt once a month. He was diligent in viſiting the ſick, or any other that needed his ghoſtly advice or prayers; and, in a word, uſed all that faithful diligence which he promiſed when he was admitted into the Order of Prieſthood: ſo that conſidering how diligently and faithfully he diſcharged the parochial duties of a large and populous pariſh, for both Margate and Cranbrook were ſuch, it is wonderful to think how he found time to write ſuch learned and elaborate treatiſes as he has done. He was a very dutiful ſon, a loving huſband, a careful and tender father, and obliging kind friend, who ſtudied to do good to every one as he was able, and had opportunity, and to do injury to no man, always endeavouring conſcientiouſly to diſcharge his duty in every relation. He had five children, of which only two were ſons; but they all died in his lifetime, except his daughter Mary. The death of his eldeſt ſon was the moſt ſenſible affliction he met with in the whole courſe of his life. He outlived that ſon but two years, and died December the 15th 1725, having nearly compleated the ſixty third year of his age [P].

tranſlate them as the Greeks do, and as the Hebrew clearly ſignifies, viz. They prophefied and added not. They read ſuch leſſons as Moſes had aſſigned them without making any addition of their own. And Moſes's wiſh is, that all the Lord's people were ſuch Prophets, that is, able to read the Divine Law.

The next diſcourſe is of the Nature and Office of Angels, for Pſal. ciii. 20. O praiſe the Lord, ye Angels, ye that excell in ſtrength, and hearken to the voice of his word. In this Sermon he proves that angels were before the Moſaical creation, from Job xxxviii. 6, 7. When the foundations of the earth were faſtned, and the corner-ſtone thereof laid, the morning ſtars ſang together, and all the ſons of God ſhouted for joy. By the ſons of God we can underſtand no other than his holy angels, and they who expreſſed their joy at the creation of the earth, muſt have been created before that time. And that angels are not naked ſpirits, but are clothed with bodies or vehicles, he proves from Luke xx. 35, 36. when he tells us that they who ſhall obtain the reſurrection, that is clearly a happy reſurrection, ſhall be equal to the angels. If angels were naked ſpirits, good men would be more like them, or equal to them, during their ſtate of ſeparation, while they are abſent from the body, than they ſhall be after the body and ſoul are again united. It ſeems therefore that good Chriſtians ſhall be made more like the angels at the reſurrection than before, by being reunited to their bodies. The ſpiritual ſubſtance of angels can no more be ſeen by bodily eyes, or be felt by hands, than our ſouls can be ſo; yet angels have appeared evidently to the ſight of men, as we learn from many places of ſcripture. But though angels have bodies, yet it is not neceſſary to ſuppoſe they are of any determinate bulk or dimenſion, as ours are now, but that they can enlarge or contract, extend or draw cloſe, as is moſt for their preſent convenience. And that their bodies are ſuch as they can render themſelves viſible or inviſible at diſcretion.

The laſt diſcourſes among his poſthumous works are four Sermons. 1. On the death and reſurrection of Chriſt, from Acts ii. 31, 32. 2. Of God's extraordinary grace to St. Paul, on 1 Tim. i. 14. 3. Of the neceſſity, hardſhip, and miſſion of Chriſtian Paſtors, on Matth. ix. 35. And 4. the holineſs of times and places, on Lev. xix. 30. We have been the more particular in the account of his poſthumous works, becauſe as no more were printed than were ſubſcribed for, they are not eaſy to be met with.

[P] He . . . . died December the 15th 1725, having nearly compleated the ſixty third year of his age] He was buried in the Church-yard of the pariſh of Cranbrook, cloſe to the wall of the Veſtry. Over his grave is erected a handſome Altar-monument of grey Marble, with only this inſcription, John Johnſon, Vicar. But on the other ſide of the wall, within the Veſtry, there is erected a Monument of white Marble affixed to the wall, with the following inſcription.

Extrâ hunc parietem ſub tumulo lapideo requieſcit Joannes Johnſon, A. M. per Annos octodecim hujus Eccleſiæ paſtor; Morum Caſtitate, Ingenii Acumine, interioribus et reconditis Literis ornatiſſimus. Filius Reverendi Thomæ Johnſon de Frindſbury in Diœceſi Roffenſi Vicarii, et Mariæ Filiæ Reverendi Franciſci Drayton Chart parvæ hujus Diœceſeos Rectoris. Uxorem habuit Margaretam Filiam Thomæ Jenkin in Inſulâ de Thanet Generoſi. De qua quinq; ſuſcepit liberos, quorum quatuor ſuperſtitit; Viz. Margaretæ in Cunabulis mortuæ, Thomæ Londini ſepulto, alteri Margaretæ ſiniſtrâ patris dormienti: Joanni S. T. B. de Standiſh in Comitatu Lancaſtrienſi Rectori, Paternæ Virtutis, Ingenii et Eruditionis exemplari. Cujus poſt Mortem, cum ferè per Biennium ægre ſuſpiria duxiſſet, Animam Spei beatæ Immortalitatis plenam Deo reſtituit 15° die Decembris, A. D. 1725. Ætatis 63°. Eccleſiæ Anglicanæ Pugil, Schiſmatis debellator occidit. Si plura quæris, ſcripta Mortui verſato. Pientiſſima Filia Maria Johnſon poſuit.

JOLY (CLAUDIUS) Chanter and Canon of the Church of our Lady at Paris, and Official to the Archbiſhop, was a man of great merit and learning. He obtained a Canonſhip in the year 1631, on the reſignation of Monſieur Loiſel, his uncle by the mother's ſide, and Counſellor in the Parliament of Paris. The Duke of Longueville, Plenipotentiary from the French King for negotiating a general peace through all Europe, took him with him to Munſter, and Joly aſſiſted the Duke faithfully with his advices and counſels. He took a journey to Rome during the commotions at Paris. He was appointed Official, firſt by Cardinal de Retz after the death of John Francis de Gondi Archbiſhop of Paris; ſecondly by the Chapter whilſt the See was vacant; and thirdly by the preſent (a) Archbiſhop. He died at Paris January the 15th 1700, at the age of fourſcore and thirteen (b). He enjoyed a very good health in his old age, and had the uſe of all the faculties of his mind.

(a) I write this in the year 1700.

(b) Taken from the Mercure Hiſt. for Feb. 1700, pag. 205.

JONAH one of the Prophets of the Jewiſh Nation. As there are two Dictionaries (a) which may acquaint the reader with moſt of the particulars relating to him, I ſhall confine myſelf only to a few. There are ſome Rabbies (b) who are ſilly enough to aſſert, that Jonah being firſt ſwallowed up by a male fiſh, was afterwards vomited into the body of a female fiſh. As he did not find himſelf much ſtrained in his firſt priſon, ſay they, he did not think of praying to God; who therefore ordered the male fiſh to caſt him up into the ſtomach of a female fiſh, which was with young. Ut ex imprægnatione & alvi tumore in angustias virum Dei redigeret (c). i. e. "That the Man of God might be "ſtraitened by the ſwelling of the animal's womb, occaſioned by its being big with "young." There he found himſelf very much ſtraitened, whereupon he pronounced that beautiful Canticle, which is ſtill extant (d), and by which he appeaſed God's wrath. They who pretend to refute this ſtory by obſerving that Jonah would not have been ſqueezed in a whale big with young, unleſs he had been placed in its womb, do not make a good objection [A]. We have ſeen in another place (e) that the heathen Poets related a particular concerning their Hercules, which is ſomewhat like this. They had borrowed it from the Sacred Hiſtory, and had falſified and dreſſed it up after their own fancy. This at leaſt is the common opinion of our authors (f). The antient Fathers thought it ſtrange, that the Heathens ſhould explode this hiſtory of Jonah [B], though they

(a) That of Moreri, and the Dictionary of the Bible written by Monſieur Simon a Prieſt.

(b) Solomon Jarchi, apud Martinum Lipenium, in Jonæ Periplo thalaſſio, folio B verſo edit. 1678, in 4to.

(c) Idem, ibid.

(d) It is in the 2d chap. of the book of Jonah.

(e) In the remark [O] of the article HERCULES.

(f) See Voſſius, de Origin. le Progreſ. Idololatriæ, lib. 2. cap. 15. pag. 381, 382. edit. Francof. 1675, in 4to.

[A] They who . . . obſerve that Jonah would not have been ſqueezed in a whale big with young, unleſs he had been placed in its womb, do not make a good objection.] We ſhall here quote a man, who imagines he holds the Rabbi Jarchi very faſt, by aſking him, Numquid arbitraris in uterum quoque imprægnatæ Balænæ immiſſum eſſe Prophetam, ut ex fœtus piſcini multitudine coanguſtaretur? In ſtomachum ceti credo deſcendiſſe Jonam, non in matricem ejuſdem. Quomodo itaque Jonæ in ventriculo latenti plus anguſtiarum ex uteri intumeſcentia poterat ſurgere (1)? i. e. "Do you think "then, that the Prophet was taken into the womb of "a whale big with young, ſo that the number of the "young ones ſtraitened him? For my part, I think "that Jonah deſcended into the ſtomach and not into "the womb of the whale. How then could Jonah, "who was hid in the ſtomach, be more preſſed by the "ſwelling of the womb?" Theſe queſtions ſpoil the good cauſe which Lipenius had to maintain, and give the Rabbies an opportunity to recover themſelves from the ridicule which he deſigned to caſt on them: they might in their turn ridicule him, if they ſhould aſk him how he came to be ignorant of a thing, which all the world knows: namely that the uterus by its dilatation preſſes upon the bowels and ventricle, and often conſiderably hinders the reſpiration.

(1) Martinus Lipenius, in Jonæ Periplo thalaſſio, folio B 2.

[B] The ancient Fathers thought it ſtrange, that the Heathens ſhould explode this Hiſtory of Jonah, though they admitted the Fable of Hercules.] Here follows a noble paſſage from Theophylact. Devoratur ergo a ceto Jonas, treſque dies ac totidem noctes in eo permanet vates: quæ res omnem excedere fidem audientibus videtur, maxime iis qui ex Græcorum ſcholis ſapienteque doctrina, ad hanc hiſtoriam accedunt. Quos equidem non ſatis demirari poſſum, qui fiat quod hæc non intelligant, cum ſuis ipſorum aliis capiantur. Apud ipſos enim nonnihil tale de Hercule narratur: nempe quod & ipſe a balæna devoratus, incolumis remanſerit, niſi quod tantummodo depilatus redierit, idque ob ingenitum & internum belluæ calorem. Aut igitur noſtra ſuſcipiant, aut ſua rejiciant (2). i. e. "Jonah then was ſwallowed up by a whale, and "continued three days and three nights in its belly: "a ſtory, which ſeems incredible to them that hear it, "particularly to them that come from the ſchools of "the Greecs, and have ſtudied their Philoſophy. But "I wonder, why they ſhould pretend that they cannot "comprehend this, ſince they very well underſtand "other ſtories of their own, which are of the ſame "kind. For they relate ſomething like this of their "Hercules, namely that he was alſo ſwallowed up by "a whale, from which he received no hurt, having "only loſt a little hair, which was occaſioned by the "natural heat of the animal's bowels. Let them there-"fore admit our Hiſtories or explode their own." I do not doubt but Theophylact might have met with ſeveral perſons amongſt the Greeks, who would have taken him at his word. We accept the conditions, would the Philoſophers and learned men of Greece have anſwered; you will have us either explode the ſtory of Hercules, or admit that of Jonah: well, we explode them both. But as an infinite number of perſons amongſt the Heathens would have condemned theſe conditions; and maintained that though they continued to believe what the Poets had related concerning Hercules, yet they had a right to ridicule the Jewiſh ſtory about Jonah, it is certain that Theophylact's reflection is very well grounded, and ſhews admirably well how ridiculouſly the Heathens were prepoſſeſſed. Let us come now to St. Auguſtin. He had a great friendſhip for a certain Heathen (3), and had wrote ſeveral letters to him, ſome of which remained unanſwered. He inferred from his friend's ſilence that he would not continue that correſpondence any longer. Non inconvenienter arbitror eum quem video mihi reſcribere noluiſſe, nihil ſibi a me ſcribi voluiſſe (4). i. e. "I had reaſon to "think, that ſince he did not anſwer me, it was a "ſign he did not care that I ſhould write any more "to him." As he deſigned therefore to anſwer ſome objections, which that Heathen had made to the Prieſt Deogratias, he directed his anſwer to that Prieſt. It appears by his anſwer, that the Heathens very much ridiculed the Hiſtory of Jonah. Poſtrema quæſtio propoſita eſt de Jona, nec ipſa quaſi ex Porphyrio (5), ſed tanquam ex irriſione Paganorum (6). i. e. "The laſt "queſtion, which is propoſed relates to Jonah; nor is "it urged as though it were from Porphyry, but it is a "banter of the Heathens." The method St. Auguſtin pitched upon to anſwer this objection of his friend is very judicious. We ought, ſaid he, either to explode all God's miracles, or to acknowledge that there are no reaſons to explode this. Should we believe the reſurrection of Chriſt, if we were awed by the railleries of the Infidels? Si fides Chriſtianorum cachinnum mereretur paganorum (7). And ſince our friend made no objections againſt our believing the reſurrection of Lazarus and that of Jeſus Chriſt, I wonder very much that he ſhould think the ſtory of Jonah to be incredible. It is more difficult to raiſe a dead man from his grave, than to keep a man alive in the belly of ſuch a large fiſh (8)? Will they aſſert, that the digeſtive faculty of the ſtomach cannot be ſuſpended for a while? But they would make a more conſiderable objection, if they were to urge againſt us the inſtance of the three men, who received no hurt in the furnace at Babylon. If they will alſo reject that ſuſpenſion of the activity of the fire, and all the other miracles recorded in the Scripture, we ſhall be obliged to make uſe of another method to refute them: for the Infidels ought not to raiſe difficulties againſt one particular fact only; they muſt either wave ſuch difficulties, or reject abſolutely all other facts of the ſame kind, and which are even more incredible ſtill. They would not be ſo ſcrupulous with regard to ſuch men as Apuleius, or Apollonius of Tyana. They would not banter, they would on the contrary inſolently boaſt of their triumphs, if what we relate of Jonah were aſcribed to the power of one of theſe two Heathens. I have not tranſlated here St. Auguſtin's words exactly, I have only given a general notion of his argument. But that they, who underſtand Latin, may not be deprived of any part of his reaſoning, I ſhall tranſcribe here the moſt conſiderable paſſage of the original. Sed habent revera, quod non credant in divino miraculo, vaporem ventris quo cibi madeſcunt, potuiſſe ita temperari, ut vitam hominis

(3) See St. Auguſtin's 49th Letter, towards the beginning.

(4) Aug. Epiſt. 49. pag. m. 195.

(5) Lipenius is then miſtaken, when he aſſerts (in Peripto thalaſſio Jonæ, folio A 3 verſo) that St. Auguſtin argues there ſtrongly againſt Porphyry.

(6) Auguſt. Ep. 49. pag. 207.

(7) Auguſt. ibid. pag. 207, 208.

(8) Niſi forte facilius putat mortuum de Sepulcro reſuſcitari, quam vivum in tam vaſto ventre belluæ potuiſſe ſervari. Idem, ibid. pag. 208.

(2) Theophylact. in Jonam, cap. 11.

they admitted the fable of Hercules. They who have aſſerted that this Prophet was caſt up by the fiſh at the Port of Niniveh [C], had but little ſkill in Geography; and it is not at all probable that he came out of the fiſh's belly on the coaſt of the Euxin or Black Sea [D], or on that of the Red Sea [E]. It is much more probable that he was caſt on ſhore near the city of Joppa, where he had embarked. Some confirm this conjecture by hominis conſervaret! Quanto incredibilius ergo proponerent tres illos viros, ab impio Rege in caminum miſſos, deambulaſſe in medio ignis illæſos? Quapropter ſi nulla iſti divina miracula volunt credere, alia diſputatione refellendi ſunt. Neque enim debent unum aliquid tanquam incredibile proponere, & in quæſtionem vocare; ſed omnia, quæ vel talia, vel etiam mirabiliora narrantur. Et tamen ſi hoc quoa de Jona ſcriptum eſt, Apuleius Madaurenſis, vel Apollonius Tyaneus fuiſſe diceretur, quorum multa mira, nullo fideli auctore jactitant; [quamvis & Dæmones nonnulla faciant Angelis ſanctis ſimilia, non veritate, ſed ſpecie, non ſapientia, ſed plane fallacia]: tamen ſi de iſtis, ut dixi, quos Magos vel Philoſophos laudabiliter nominant, tale aliquid narretur, non jam in buccis creparet riſus; ſed typhus (9). Several perſons will judge, that this method of refuting the Heathens is much more reaſonable than that which St. Auguſtin followed in another book, where after he had obſerved that the very ſame men who laughed at the hiſtory of Jonah, did not in the leaſt queſtion the ſtory of Arion, he propoſes this objection to himſelf, namely, that the ſtory of Jonah is more incredible. Certainly, replies he, but it is becauſe it is more miraculous; and it is more miraculous becauſe it ſhews a greater power. Verum illud noſtrum de Jona incredibilius eſt; plane incredibilius, quia mirabilius, & mirabilius, quia potentius (10). Theſe are witty conceits, ſome will ſay, and pretty fancies, but not good arguments: for it would follow from thence, that the more a thing ſeems to be impoſſible, the more it deſerves to be credited. The fable of Arion was this, it was reported that in order to ſave his life he had been obliged to throw himſelf over board out of the ſhip in which he was ſailing from Italy into Greece, and that he leapt on the back of a dolphin, which carried him to land. I do not obſerve this for the ſake of thoſe who never heard it mentioned, for there are but few ſuch perſons, but for the ſake of thouſands and thouſands of perſons, who do not remember it, and who would be ſorry if they could not ſee immediately the difference there is between the ſtory of Arion, and that of the Prophet Jonah.

(9) Aug. Epiſt. 49. pag. 208.

(10) Auguſt. de Civit. Dei, lib. 1. cap. 14.

A Reflection upon one of the effects of prepoſſeſſion.

Let us reflect a little on the inconſiſtent conduct with which St. Auguſtin charges the Heathens. One cannot but obſerve here one of the moſt ridiculous effects of prepoſſeſſion. The managers of the Heathen Religion had fed the people's mind with a thouſand fables for ſeveral ages; they would not have ſuffered any perſon to examine whether they were poſſible or not, nor to ſtile them incredible. But when the miracles of the Chriſtians were propoſed to them, they ſet up for Philoſophers, they urged the impoſſibility of thoſe miracles, they alledged all the arguments that can be urged to prevent a fooliſh credulity, and pretended ſcornfully to ridicule thoſe that believed. What an impertinency is this! What an odd way of acting! What an inconſiſtency! What a fantaſtical humour! The ſeveral Chriſtian ſocieties ſhew almoſt the ſame diſpoſition againſt each other. If the Greek Church boaſts of ſome miracles, proper to ſhew that God is diſpleaſed with the ſchiſm of Neſtorius, the Neſtorians will make a thouſand ſhifts, and invent all poſſible arguments to evade that objection. But as for ſuch miracles as are proper to convict the Greek Church of injuſtice, they believe them blindly, without any examination, and think it ſtrange that their adverſaries ſhould ſcruple to admit them. All the world knows how eaſily the Roman Catholics ſuffer themſelves to be led into a perſuaſion of an infinite number of miracles. They make it a matter of conſcience to believe innumerable ſtories, that are daily ſpread abroad, and they look upon the moſt plauſible argument of thoſe who pretend to call them into queſtion, as mere cavils of obſtinate Heretics. But if they happen to hear that ſome miracle or another is pretended to be performed amongſt the Proteſtant Party, then they argue from quite different principles: they have recourſe to all the common topics which the unbelievers urge in their own defence. They deny the fact, they raiſe objections againſt the witneſſes, and charge them either with impoſture, or with being crack-brained. If the fact be ſuch as it cannot be denied, they explain it away by natural cauſes; they compile from the writings of the natural Philoſophers and from the accounts of travellers, a thouſand inſtances of the ſame kind. In a word, what they uſed to ſtile obſtinacy, cavilling, contradicting reaſon and good ſenſe, becomes a very ſolid and reaſonable refutation of a falſity; for they inſiſt upon the very ſame common topics, which the Proteſtants had urged againſt the Monks. There are every where perſons who believe very eaſily what pleaſes them, but who are the moſt difficult in the world to be perſuaded when they do not like a thing. When they alledge arguments to juſtify their unbelief, they cannot bear that you ſhould take them for bad arguments; but if at another time the ſame arguments are urged againſt them, they are angry, if you will not give them leave to ſlight and ridicule them. Thus men paſs away their life; this is an effect of prepoſſeſſion, which is almoſt unavoidable; divers weights and divers meaſures: if men could not avoid this but by diveſting themſelves of all prejudices, the remedy would perhaps prove worſe than the diſtemper.

[C] It has been aſſerted that he was caſt up at the port of Niniveh.] Sulpicius Severus fell into this geographical error. Exceptus a ceto, marino monſtro, ac devoratus poſt triduum fere Ninivitarum littoribus ejectus, juſſa prædicat (11). i. e. "Being ſwallowed "up by a whale, a ſea-monſter, he was about three "days after caſt up on the coaſt of Niniveh, where "he preached as he was commanded to do." The learned Druſius did not obſerve any blunder in theſe words, when he was commenting upon them; he only tells us, that it is not mentioned in the Holy Scripture on what coaſt the ſhip caſt Jonah up (12). The other commentators on Sulpicius, and amongſt them Hornius, have been very well apprized of this blunder. Lipenius did alſo obſerve it; but he has been ſtrangely miſtaken with regard to Chronology, for he imagined that Sulpicius Severus borrowed this from St. Gregory's Ethicks (13), who yet was a Pope that flouriſhed 150 years after Sulpicius. The blunder of this laſt writer has been tranſcribed by Monſieur Simon. A whale, ſays he (14), received Jonah in its bowels . . . and ſerved him inſtead of a ſhip much ſafer than that on board of which he had been, and put him aſhore, or rather caſt him up the third day at the port of Niniveh. Obſerve that Niniveh was built on the river Tigris, which has no immediate communication with the Mediterranean Sea. And beſides, that river is not deep enough to carry ſuch a large fiſh to the port of Niniveh. This reaſon, together with the ſurpriſing miracle, which we muſt ſuppoſe, if we aſſert that the whale went into the ocean, doubled the Cape of Good-hope, and entered the mouth of the Tigris, and performed that immenſe voyage in three days, all this, I ſay, cuts off all evaſions to thoſe, who would attempt to juſtify Sulpicius Severus. Never did ſuch a fancy come into his head: he imagined innocently that Niniveh was ſituated on the Mediterranean Sea. His blunder was owing to his ignorance in Geography.

(11) Sulpicius Severus, Hiſt. Sacræ, lib. 1. pag. m. 79. cap. 48.

(12) Druſius in Sulpic. Severum, pag. 179.

(13) Sulpicius Severus . . . ex S. Gregorio l. vi. Moral. cap. xii. arbitratur Jonam eſſe expoſitum in littoribus Ninivitarum. Lipen. in Jonæ Periplo thalaſſio. cap. 3.

(14) Simon, Diction. de la Bible, pag. 432, 433.

[D] . . . . it is not at all probable that he came out of the fiſh's belly on the coaſt of the Euxine ſea.] Joſephus (15) relates this tradition, which ſeveral modern authors (16) have followed, though it be againſt all probability, and ſuppoſes a multiplication of miracles: for ſuch a large fiſh could not, according to the laws of nature, paſs in ſo ſhort a time from the Phœnician Sea into the Black Sea. And beſides, Jonah would have had too long and too difficult a journey before him, either to return into Judea before he went to Niniveh, or to go directly to that city.

(15) Joſeph. Antiquit. Judaic. lib. 9. cap. 11. folio m. 355 verſo.

(16) See Lipenius, in Jon. Periplo thalaſſio, cap. 3.

[E] . . . . or on that of the Red Sea.] Lipenius (17) aſcribes this opinion to Pineda, and to the Rabbies; and it is not a difficult taſk for him to refute it. The whale muſt have entered into the ocean, and ſwam round Africa. See above, the remark [C], towards the end.

(17) Lipen. ibid. fol. C verſo. He quotes Pineda, lib. 4 de Rebus Salomonis, cap. 12.

by the fable of Andromeda; for they pretend (g) that the ſtory of Jonah was the groundwork of the poetical narrations concerning Andromeda's being expoſed to the rage of a ſea-monſter, and ſhe was expoſed to it near Joppa (h). See the margin (i). Here follows another fancy of the Rabbies, which is very whimſical. They aſſert (k), that the fiſh, which ſwallowed Jonah, had ſeven eyes, which were as ſo many windows, through which the Prophet could behold all that was in the Sea, and amongſt other things the road which the Iſraelites followed when they croſſed the Red-Sea. They who take him for the ſame young man, who was ſent by Eliſha to Jehu [F] to anoint him, do not deſerve any credit. Jonah's tomb was ſtill ſhewed at his native place in St. Jerom's time (l). Monſieur Simon (m) aſſerts, that the Turks have built a very noble Moſque to the honour of Jonah, in which there is a miraculous lamp, which burns continually, though neither oil nor any other liquor be ever poured into it, if we may lay any ſtreſs upon their idle fancies. He obſerves, that this Moſque is in a little village (n) built to this Prophet's honour, and under his name. Monſieur d'Herbelot (o) does not ſay a word of all this, though he tells us ſeveral things which the Mahometans relate concerning Jonah. I ſhall name the modern author, who, according to Moreri, has made a very ingenious Poem on this Prophet's hiſtory [G].

(g) See Lipenius, in Jonæ Periplo thalaſſio, folio A 3.

(h) Plinius, lib. 5. cap. 13. pag. m. 567. & 31. pag. 613; & lib. 9. cap. 5. pag. 283.

(i) Hadrian Scrieckius, Origin. Indice 3. folio pag. verſo imagines erroneouſly, that the 3d verſe of the 3d chap. of Jonah, proves that the fiſh caſt him up at a place three days journey diſtant from Nineveh, and that the Prophet performed that journey in one day.

(k) Apud Lipenium, in Jonæ Periplo thalaſſio, folio C 1 verſo.

(l) That is to ſay at Gbath-Chepher, near Mount Tabor. Lipenius, in Jonæ Periplo thalaſſio, folio præced. He quotes S. Jerom. Proœm. in Jonam.

(m) Simon. Diction. de la Bible, pag. 433.

(n) In the Tribe of Zebulun.

(o) D'Herbelot, Biblioth. Orient. pag. 495.

[F] They who take him for the ſame young man who was ſent by Eliſha to Jehu (18).] This is what the Rabbies do, and after them Mariana and Tarnovius (19). But if this were true, he muſt have been then above an hundred years old. Theſe are Monſieur Simon's words in his Dictionary of the Bible; but they are very dark, for we do not know to what the word then muſt be referred. Is it to the time when Jehu was anointed? The Grammar requires it; but this ſenſe would be abſurd. Is it to the time of Jonah's journey to Nineveh? Is it to the time of Jeroboam the ſecond of that name? gueſs it if you can.

(18) 2 Kings ix. 1.

(19) Hebræi in Seder Olam, & ex iis Jo. Mariana in Scholiis Bibl. & D. Job. Tarnovius, Comm. Jon. p 2. Lipen. in Jonæ Periplo thalaſſio, folio B.

[G] I ſhall name the modern author, who, according to Moreri, has made a very ingenious Poem on this Prophet's Hiſtory.] He was a Gaſcon Miniſter, named Coras. He had been Chaplain to M. de Turenne in ſome campaigns; he was afterwards appointed Paſtor to a congregation in Lower Gaſcony; but he ſoon turned Papiſt, and obtained a conſiderable employment in the Preſidial Court at Montauban. Before he forſook his religion he publiſhed a book, in which, if I remember it well, he aſſerted that the Proteſtants could not unite themſelves with the church of Rome. After his abjuration he wrote another book to refute this. His four Poems (20) on ſome Hiſtories taken from the Bible, ſold pretty well, notwithſtanding what Monſieur Boileau Deſpreaux aſſerts in his IXth ſatire,

Le Jonas inconu ſeche dans la pouſſiere,
Le David imprimé n'a point veu la lumiere.

" Jonas, unknown, lies buried in the duſt;
" David, though printed, never ſaw the light.

Coras's enemies ſent him by the poſt to Montauban a letter ſuppoſed to come from his Bookſeller at Paris, who deſired him to defend himſelf againſt Boileau, becauſe none would buy his Poems, ſince that IXth ſatire had been publiſhed. This affront exaſperated him very much, and he publiſhed a very abuſive pamphlet againſt his Critic. In the year 1675 he wrote ſome verſes againſt Monſieur Racine. You will find in the Menagiana (21) a very pretty epigram written by Monſieur Racine againſt him. Obſerve that he was deſcended from the celebrated Civilian John Coras, Counſellor in the Parliament of Toulouſe, and one of the Proteſtant Martyrs: for he was hanged for his religion at Toulouſe, dreſſed in his Counſellor's robes, in the year 1572 (22).

(20) One upon Jonah, one upon David, one upon Joſhua, and one upon Samſon.

(21) In pag. 300. of the 1ſt edition printed in Holland. It is alſo to be found in Furetiere's 2d Factum, pag. 13. of the edition printed in Holland, where it is aſcribed to Monſ. de la Fontaine.

(22) See d'Aubigné, Hiſt. Univ. tom. 2. liv. 1. chap. 5. pag. m. 560.

JONAS (ARNGRIMUS), an Iſelander by nation, gained a reputation in the 16th and 17th Centuries, by the works which he publiſhed. He was ſtill living in the year 1644, and was then above fourſcore and ten years old (a). Four years before, he had married a young girl to his ſecond wife. He was a learned and honeſt man, and very much eſteemed by all the learned. He had been Coadjutor to Gundebrand of Torlac Biſhop of Hola in Iſeland (b). This Gundebrand was an Iſelander, and a man of great learning and probity (c). He had been a diſciple of Tycho-Brahe, and underſtood Aſtrology (*) very well. After the death of this man Arngrimus refuſed the Biſhopric of Hola, to which the King of Denmark deſigned to promote him (d). He deſired that Prince to excuſe him, both that he might not expoſe himſelf to envy, and that he might apply himſelf more quietly to his ſtudies. Moſt part of the books which he publiſhed [A] are either Hiſtories and Deſcriptions of Iſeland, or Apologies for his own

(a) La Peyrere, Relation de l'Iſlande, pag. 55, 56.

(b) Ibid. pag. 55.

(c) Ibid. pag. 5, and 15.

(*) I ſuppoſe Mr. Bayle means Aſtronomy.

(d) La Peyrere, ibid. pag. 55.

[A] The books which he publiſhed.] Here follow the titles of all that I met with in Albertus Bartholinus's Catalogues. Idea veri Magiſtratus, i. e. " The " Character of a true Magiſtrate," printed at Copenhagen in the year 1589, in 8vo. Brevis Commentarius de Iſlandia; i. e. " A ſhort Hiſtory of Iſeland," printed in the ſame city in the year 1593, in 8vo. Anatome Blefkeniana, i. e. " The Anatomy or Diſ- " ſection of Blefkenius;" at Hola in Iſeland, in the year 1612, in 8vo, and at Hamburg in the year 1618, in 4to. Epiſtola pro patria defenſoria; i. e. " A " Letter in Defence of his Native Country," printed alſo there in the year 1618. Ἀπολογία Calumniæ; i. e. " A refutation of Slander," printed at the ſame place in the year 1622, in 4to. Chrymogæa (1) ſeu Rerum Iſlandicarum libri tres; i. e. " Three Books of the " Hiſtory of Iſeland," printed alſo there, in the year 1630, in 4to. Vita Gudbrandi Thorlacii; i. e. " The " Life of Gundebrand Torlac," at the ſame place in the year 1630, in 4to. Specimen Iſlandiæ Hiſtoricum, & magna ex parte Chorographicum; i. e. " An Hiſ- " torical and chiefly Geographical Eſſay relating to " Iſeland," printed at Amſterdam in the year 1643, in 4to (2).

(1) It ſhould be Crymogæa.

A learned man, who has publiſhed Albertus Bartholinus's treatiſe with hiſtorical and critical additions, tells us, that the Anatome Blefkeniana is a refutation of a book printed at Leyden in the year 1607, and intitled Iſlandia ſeu Deſcriptio populorum & memorabilium hujus Inſulæ; i. e. " Iſeland, or an Account of the People " and remarkable things of that Iſland;" and that the Crymogæa was written in the year 1603, and printed at Hamburg in the year 1609, with a map of Denmark, and in the year 1610 without that map; that the Specimen Iſlandiæ Hiſtoricum is a vindication of the author's opinion againſt the arguments of John Iſaacius Pontanus. Our Arngrimus Jonas maintained that Iſeland was not peopled till about the year 874, ſo that it cannot be the antient Thule (3). Pontanus thought it ſomewhat ſtrange, that Arngrimus Jonas ſhould undertake

(2) Taken from Albert. Bartholin. de Scriptis Danorum, pag. 12.

(3) Taken from Mollerus, Hypomn. ad Bartol. de Scriptis Danorum, pag. 12.

own Nation. Blefkenius had publiſhed ſeveral diſhonourable particulars of it, both with regard to witchcraft [B], and with regard to diſſoluteneſs [C]. Arngrimus refuted him.

(e) See Mollerus, Hypomnem. ad Albert. Bartholinum, de Scriptis Danorum, p. 164.

He died in the year 1649 (e). He had been Paſtor of the Church of Melſtad, and Intendant of the neighbouring Churches of the Dioceſs of Hola (f).

(f) Idem, ibid.

dertake to vindicate an opinion which was leſs glorious to Iſeland than the contrary opinion; yet he ſpoke very civilly of this learned Iſelander, and with a great deal of regard. See the letter which he wrote to Stephanus July 1, 1638 (4). You will meet in Mollerus (5) with the titles of ſome other works of our Jonas, which had been omitted by Albertus Bartholinus, and ſome of which have been printed, and the other are only manuſcripts.

(4) It is the 122d of thoſe which Matthæus publiſhed at Leyden in the year 1695. See page 325. of that Collection of Letters, as alſo pag. 210.

[B] Blefkenius had publiſhed ſeveral diſhonourable particulars of Iſeland, both with regard to witchcraft . . . .] Blefkenius aſſerts, that the Iſelanders ſell the wind, and that he knew it by his own experience (6). Arngrimus laughs at this; for ſays he, "a ſeaman of Iſeland knew in the evening by the diſpoſition of the air, how the weather would be the next day, and from what corner the wind would blow: and when he ſuppoſes that the wind would be ſuch as a ſtranger waits for to ſail away, he goes and meets him, and engages to ſell him the wind he wants; which he does after this manner. He aſks the ſtranger for his handkerchief, and makes a ſhew to mutter a few words in it, and immediately ties up the handkerchief (7), as though he feared leſt the words he had pronounced ſhould fly away; he then returns it thus tied up to the ſtranger, and charges him to keep it very carefully juſt as he receives it, aſſuring him that he ſhall have a fair wind as long as he ſhall be on board. Now it happens ſometimes that the wind blows really from that corner the next day; but it changes generally after the ſtranger is ſailed, and has reached the main ſea. . . . If it happened once in an hundred times, that the wind continued fair till the ſtranger arrived at the place he intended to ſail to, this one ſucceſs alone will give credit to the common error more than a thouſand contrary experiences will invalidate it. It is diſperſed by the perſon, who publickly declares, that he bought the wind in Iſeland, becauſe he imagines it, and that with that wind he ſailed ſafe home." The ſame Blefkenius relates (8), "that there are Conjurers in Iſeland, who have it in their power to ſtop ſhips that are under ſail in the main ſea: he alſo aſſerts, that they who are thus ſtopt make uſe, for a countercharm, of certain ſtinking ſuffumigations (9), of which he gives us a deſcription; with theſe, ſays he, they who are ſtopped drive away the devils that ſtopped them, and the ſhips thus diſinchanted continue again to ſail."

(6) La Peyrere, Relat. de l'Iſlande, pag. 28.

(7) See the ſtory which Charles Ogier relates in pag. 433. of his Iter Polonicum.

(8) La Peyrere, Relat d'Iſlande, pag. 31.

(9) See the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, for Feb. 1685, pag. 135.

[C] . . . . and with regard to diſſoluteneſs.] "Blefkenius aſſerts, that the Germans who trade in Iſeland, ſet up tents near the Ports at which they land, and there they expoſe their wares to ſale, which conſiſt of cloaks, ſhoes, looking-glaſſes, and a great many trifles, which they change for what the Iſelanders bring them. Some girls, who are very handſome in that iſland, but very indifferently dreſſed, go and viſit theſe Germans, and offer to thoſe who have no wife, to lie with them for ſome bread or biſket, or for ſome other trifling reward. Even the fathers preſent their own daughters to the ſtrangers, and if their daughters become pregnant, it is a great honour to them, they being more eſteemed and more courted by the Iſelanders on that account, than the other maidens, and they have a great many ſuitors. When the Iſelanders have bought (that is to ſay exchanged ſomething for) wine or beer of the foreign Merchants, they invite their relations, their friends and their neighbours to come and drink it with them, nor do they part as long as there is one drop left. Whilſt they are drinking together, they ſing the heroic deeds of their Captains . . . . . It is a piece of rudeneſs amongſt them to riſe from the table in order to make water, whilſt they are a drinking. The girls, who are not unhandſome in that country, as I have already obſerved, preſent them with chamber-pots, which they convey to them under the table. Arngrimus Jonas calls this raillery an impoſture, and is in a very great paſſion againſt Blefkenius, for the injury which that author, ſays he, did to the reputation of the girls of Iſeland. This good man cannot bear to ſee his countrymen treated with contempt, and ſtiled barbarians (10)." If it was ever lawful for an apologiſt to fly into a paſſion, Arngrimus's anger cannot be blamed; for it is not at all probable, that the Goſpel, which has been known in Iſeland for ſo many ages, would have left that nation in a ſtate of ſuch a wicked brutality; nor is it likely that if the Chriſtian religion had been ſo ineffectual with regard to the reformation of their manners, the King of Denmark would ſuffer them to have ſo little regard for public decency. The cuſtom that prevails in their entertainments, is not, I think, faithfully related: the fact has been exaggerated to entertain the reader. Was there ever ſuch an office as that of theſe girls mentioned, or did any one ever hear of ſuch a ridiculous lazineſs? Here you have men, who not only will not take the trouble to riſe from table in order to make water, but who even will not be at the pains to make the leaſt motion with their hand: for this is the notion which this ſtory gives us: otherwiſe, why ſhould we be told, that the girls convey the chamber-pots under the table? They might give them to the gueſts after another manner, if the deſign were only to ſpare them the trouble of getting up. If all that Blefkenius has told us here were true, we ſhould be obliged to confeſs, that jealouſy is not uſeleſs in this world (11).

(10) La Peyrere, Relat. d'Iſlande, pag. 23, 24.

(11) See the Nouvelles Lettres contre le Calviniſme de Maimbourg, pag. 542, &c.

An objection concerning the imprudence of ſome Nations.

If it were lawful to tell lies for the ſake of religion, we ſhould deny all that is related concerning the imprudence of ſome nations. For it is ſaid, that the Free-thinkers pretend to draw an inference, which is very much in their favour, from the practice of ſome nations, amongſt whom, as it it reported, the proſtitution of women is not attended with any infamy. This would be the caſe of the Iſelanders, if we were to credit Blefkenius's account; nay they would go farther ſtill, for they would look upon it as a great honour for a girl to be got with child by a ſtranger, to whom ſhe had proſtituted herſelf; and the fathers would think themſelves happy, if the offer they made of their daughter's maidenhead were accepted by ſtrangers. Where then, would the Free-thinkers aſk, is that impreſſion of nature, which makes all men diſtinguiſh between good and evil? Here are Chriſtian nations, who not only have not the leaſt regard for chaſtity in their practice, but who have even loſt the theory of it: whence it follows that in this reſpect their conſcience is intirely void of all ſenſe of the law of nature. And does not this prove, that the notions of virtue depend on education and cuſtom, and not on an impreſſion of nature? How can theſe people be reclaimed, ſince their conſcience is entirely ſeared in this reſpect? For if it be poſſible for a man to live in a wretched ſecurity, though he has a notion of good and evil, this muſt infallibly happen when theſe notions are abſolutely rooted out. There is no occaſion to anſwer this objection, ſince Arngrimus Jonas denies the fact on which it is grounded. We muſt refer to him all thoſe, who pretend to make an advantage of his adverſary's account. And if they ſhould quote unqueſtionable facts, in ſuch a caſe, we ſhould not be at a loſs for an anſwer.

☞ JONES (INIGO), an eminent Engliſh Architect in the ſeventeenth Century, was ſon of Ignatius Jones [A], a Citizen and Cloth-worker of London. He was born about the

[A] Inigo Jones . . . . ſon of Ignatius Jones.] It is obſervable, that the ſon's name is in Spaniſh, and the father's in Latin; for which ſome have aſſigned this reaſon, that as his father was a conſiderable dealer in the Woolen Manufacture, ſome Spaniſh Merchant might probably have aſſiſted at his Baptiſm (1).

(1) Life of Inigo Jones, prefixed to the edition of his Moſt notable Antiquity of Great Britain, vulgarly called Stone-Henge, reſtored, printed at London 1725 in fol.

the year 1572 in the neighbourhood of St. Paul's in London (a). It is ſaid, that he was at firſt put apprentice to a Joiner (b); but he was early diſtinguiſhed by his inclination to drawing or deſigning, and was particularly taken notice of for his ſkill in the practice of Landſkip-painting. This afterwards recommended him to the favour of William Earl of Pembroke, at whoſe expence he travelled over Italy and the politer parts of Europe, and ſaw whatever was remarkable for its antiquity or merit; and from thoſe plans formed his own obſervations, which he perfected by ſtudy and application (c). He reſided many years in Italy, eſpecially at Venice; from whence he was ſent for to be Architect-General to Chriſtian IV King of Denmark, upon whoſe firſt coming into England, Mr. Jones attended him, and being deſirous that his own native country, rather than a foreign, ſhould enjoy the fruits of his ſtudies, Queen Anne, wife to King James I, appointed him her Architect, and ſoon after he was honoured with the ſame place by Prince Henry, under whom he diſcharged his truſt with ſuch fidelity and judgment, that King James made him Surveyor General in reverſion. Upon the Prince's death he travelled into Italy again, and returned to England when his place of Surveyor fell [B], which he enjoyed under King James I, Charles I, (unto whoſe conſort he was alſo Architect General) and King Charles II (*); "though death, ſays Mr. Webb (†), through grief, as is well "known, for the fatal calamity of his dread maſter, prevented him of doing his now "ſacred Majeſty [Charles II] any actual ſervice." By theſe degrees he roſe to ſuch eminence, that he was eſteemed the Vitruvius of his age and country. We have a fine intermixture of fancy and judgment in his Decorations of Dramatic Entertainments, and the pompous Machinery of Maſques and Interludes. Several repreſentations of this nature are ſtill extant by Ben. Johnſon, George Chapman, Sir Will. Davenant, and the moſt eminent Poets of the age. The ſubject was ſet down by the Poet, but the invention, ornaments, ſcenes, &c. were the contrivance of Mr. Jones; and for theſe he received very conſiderable encouragement from the Court. In 1620, at the command of King James I, he drew up a Diſcourſe concerning Stone-Henge on Saliſbury-Plain, which was not publiſhed till after his death [C]. He formed the Banqueting-Houſe at Whitehall, which was at firſt deſigned for the reception of foreign Embaſſadors. The ceiling was ſome years after adorned by the pencil of Sir Peter Paul Rubens; and draughts of theſe have been ſince publiſhed by Mr. Sim. Gribelin the Engraver. To Mr. Jones we owe the Church and Piazza of Covent-Garden. In this laſt performance he had in view the Piazza of Leghorn, but has vaſtly ſurpaſſed the original by the beauty and largeneſs of his pillars. In repairing of the Cathedral of St. Paul's [D], he having demoliſhed part of the Church of St. Gregory adjoining to it, was brought into trouble about it at the opening of the Long-Parliament. For December the 10th 1641, he was obliged to appear before the Houſe of Lords, according to their Order, to hear a Declaration read, which was brought up againſt him from the Houſe of Commons, upon the complaint and in behalf of the Pariſhioners

(a) Life of Inigo Jones, prefixed to the edition of his Moſt notable Antiquity of Great Britain, vulgarly called Stone-henge, reſtored, &c. London 1725, in fol.

(b) This was frequently related by Sir Chriſtopher Wren.

(c) Life of Inigo Jones, ubi ſupra.

(*) Webb's Vindication of Stone-Henge Reſtored, pag. 119. 2d edit. London 1725 in fol.

(†) Ibid.

[B] When his place of Surveyor fell.] Mr. Webb tells us (2), that "the office of his Majeſty's works, "having through extraordinary occaſions in the time "of Mr. Jones's predeceſſor contracted a great debt, "amounting to ſeveral thouſands of pounds, he was "ſent for to the Lords of his Majeſty's moſt Ho"nourable Privy Council, to give them his opinion, "what courſe might be taken to eaſe his Majeſty of "it, the Exchequer being empty, and the workmen "clamorous: when he of his own accord voluntarily "offered not to receive one penny of his own enter"tainment in what kind ſoever due, untill the debt "was fully diſcharged. And this was not only per"formed by him himſelf, but upon his perſuaſion his fel"low-officers, the then Comptroller and Pay-maſter, "condeſcended to do the like alſo, whereby the whole "arrears were abſolutely cleared."

(2) Vindication of Stone-Henge Reſtored, pag. 119 2d edit. London 1725 in fol.

[C] Drew up a Diſcourſe concerning Stone-Henge on Saliſbury-Plain, which was not publiſhed till after his death.] It being left imperfect by him at his death came into the hands of Mr. John Webb of Burleigh in Somerſetſhire, who married the daughter of our author's couſin-german (3), at the deſire of Dr. William Harvey, Mr. Selden, and other learned men (*), perfected and publiſhed that Diſcourſe at London 1655 in folio under the following title, The moſt notable Antiquity of Great Britain, vulgarly called Stone-henge on Saliſbury-Plain, reſtored; and prefixed to it the author's picture, etched by Hollar from a painting of Van Dyke. In this Diſcourſe Mr. Jones endeavours to ſhew, that Stone-henge was a temple built by the Romans, while they were in Britain, and dedicated by them to Cælus or Cælum, from whom the Antients imagined, that all things took their beginning. This book, of which but a few copies were printed, was generally approved of by the Antiquaries; but Dr. Walter Charlton being diſſatisfied with it, ſent it to Olaus Wormius, a learned man in Denmark, who returning his ſentiments in ſeveral letters to Dr. Charlton, the Doctor drew up a Diſcourſe, intitled, Chorea Gigantum: or, the moſt famous Antiquity of Great Britain, vulgarly called Stone-henge, ſtanding on Saliſbury Plain, reſtored to the Danes. London 1663 in 4to. "This book, ſays Mr. Wood (4), "though exploded by moſt perſons, when it was pub"liſhed, yet ſome of the moſt noted Antiquaries of this "nation, particularly Sir William Dugdale, did applaud "it, and hath ſaid in my hearing more than once, that he "verily thought, that Dr. Charlton was in the right in "what he delivered in the ſaid Chorea Gigantum." But Mr. Webb abovementioned publiſhed in anſwer to the Doctor, A Vindication of Stone-henge reſtored, in which the Orders and Rules of Architecture obſerved by the antient Romans are diſcuſſed, together with the Cuſtoms and Manners of ſeveral Nations of the World in matters of Building of the greateſt Antiquity; as alſo an Hiſtorical Narration of the moſt memorable Actions of the Danes in England. London 1665 in folio. The three Diſcourſes of Mr. Jones, Dr. Charlton, and Mr. Webb, were reprinted together at London 1725 in folio.

(3) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 1113.

(*) Vindication, pag. 118.

(4) Ubi ſupra.

[D] In repairing of the Cathedral of St. Paul's.] In a royal commiſſion under the great ſeal of England dated November the 16th 1720 he was appointed with ſeveral others a Commiſſioner for repairing that cathedral (5); and in 1633 he, as Surveyor of that work, laid the fourth ſtone at the eaſt end (6). Mr. Webb tells us (7), that "for the magnificence of St. Paul's "all poſterity will be grateful to Mr. Jones, who was "ſole Architect, and ſolely, by that ever glorious Mo"narch K. Charles the Martyr, entruſted with the repair "thereof; and who in faithful diſcharge of that truſt, "reduced the body of it from the ſteeple to the weſt "end into that order and uniformity we now behold; "and by adding that magnificent portico there, hath "contracted the envy of all Chriſtendom upon our na"tion for a piece of Architecture not to be paralleled "in theſe laſt ages of the world."

(5) Dugdale's Hiſtory of St. Paul's Cathedral London, pag. 135, 136. edit. London 1658 in fol.

(6) Ibid. pag. 159.

(7) Vindication, &c. pag. 27.

Pariſhioners of St. Gregory's in London (e) [E]. The Declaration being read, he deſired, that he might have ſome time to anſwer by his Council (f); and December the 21ſt he appeared before the Lords in Parliament and anſwered, "that he was not guilty of the "offence charged in the ſaid Declaration in ſuch manner and form as therein was ex- "preſſed;" upon which Friday fortnight was ordered for the day of hearing the cauſe (g). But what was the iſſue of this affair, we do not find. His adherence to the King's intereſt during the civil wars expoſed him to conſiderable loſſes; and Mr. David Lloyd tells us (h), that he paid four hundred pounds by way of compoſition. He died about Midſummer Day 1652 (i), and was interred in the Chancel of the Church of Bennet near Paul's Wharf in London June the 26th, and his monument ſet on the North wall at ſome diſtance from his grave, was very much defaced by the Fire of London in September 1666 (k). Several of his deſigns have been publiſhed by Mr. Kent, Mr. Colin Campbell, and Mr. Iſaac Ware. A Copy of Verſes by him are publiſhed in the Odcombian Banquet prefixed to Tom. Coryat's Crudities, printed at London in 1611 in 4to. Ben. Johnſon, upon ſome quarrel with him, wrote a ſevere Satyr againſt him, in which he ſtiles him Sir Lantern Leatherhead; but this Satyr was forbid by the King to be printed at that time, and is ſtill extant in manuſcript. Mr. Webb tells us (l), that the Art of Deſign was ſcarcely known in England, till Mr. Jones, under the protection of King Charles I, and Thomas Earl of Arundel and Surrey, brought it into uſe and eſteem among us here. Mr. Webb had in his poſſeſſion the chiefeſt Antiquities of all Chriſtendom deſigned by our author's own hand (m).

(e) Nalſon's Impartial Collection, vol. 2. pag. 728.

(f) Ibid. pag. 729.

(g) Ibid. pag. 771.

(b) Memoires, pag. 577. edit. London 1668, in fol.

(i) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 1113. But the ſame writer, vol. 1. col. 423. tells us, that he had been informed by letters of Mr. James Webb, ſon of Mr. John Webb, who married the daughter of the couſin-german of our author, that he died July 21ſt 1651, aged about 79 years.

(k) Idem, vol. 1. col. 1113.

(l) Ubi ſupra, pag. 19.

(m) Ibid. pag. 119, 120.

[E] Obliged to appear before the Houſe of Lords, according to their order, to hear a declaration read, which was brought up againſt him from the Houſe of Commons, upon the complaint and in behalf of the pariſhioners of St. Gregory's in London.] The declaration was as follows.

"The Declaration of the Commons upon the complaint, "and in the behalf of the Pariſhioners of St. Gregory's, "London, againſt Inigo Jones Eſq;

"The Pariſh Church of St. Gregory's adjoining to "the Cathedral Church of St. Paul's in London afore- "ſaid, is, and, from the time whereof the memory "of man is not to the contrary, hath been the Pariſh- "Church for the Inhabitants of that Pariſh, lately "computed to be 3000 perſons, for the adminiſtration of "Divine Service and Sacraments. The ſaid Inigo Jones "being Surveyor of his Majeſty's Works, and parti- "cularly thoſe to be deſigned for the re-edifying of "the ſaid Church of St. Paul's, would not undertake "the work, unleſs he might be, as he termed it, the "ſole Monarch, or might have the principality thereof, "conceiving the work would not well be done with- "out pulling down the ſaid Church of St. Gregory's, "preſented a plot to his Majeſty accordingly. The "ſaid Inigo Jones having preſented the ſaid plot, his "Majeſty hereupon ſignified his pleaſure, and in pur- "ſuance thereof, ſeveral orders were alſo made at the "Council-Board, that the ſaid Church ſhould be taken "down by the Pariſhioners for the more convenient re- "pairing of the Cathedral Church of St. Paul's; "which the Pariſhioners refuſing to obey, as was law- "ful for them to do, the ſaid Inigo Jones, in execu- "tion of the plot and deſign by him preſented as "aforeſaid, and of his Majeſty's ſignification, and the "orders at the Council-Board thereupon had, in or about "March 1639, did pull down and cauſed to be pul- "led down part of the ſaid Church, and did alſo "threaten, That if the ſaid Pariſhioners would not take "down the reſt of it, then the galleries ſhould be ſawed "down, and with ſkrews the materials of the ſaid "Church ſhould be thrown down into the ſtreet. And "the ſaid Inigo Jones did further threaten the ſaid "Pariſhioners, That if they did not take down the ſaid "Church, they ſhould be laid by the heels. Whereby "the Pariſhioners being thus affrighted, and to ſave "the materials, which not long before had caſt them "1500 l. were inforced to take down ſome part of "the ſaid Church, inſomuch as it thereby was made "altogether uſeleſs, and the ſaid Pariſhioners to that "great number have been wholly deſtitute of any "place within their own Pariſh for the public exer- "ciſing of Religion. The damages the Pariſhioners "have hereby ſuſtained is very great, and the charge "of re-edifying the ſaid Church and reſtoring it to as "good plight as it was in, before it was ſo wrong- "fully taken down, will amount at leaſt to 3000 l. "all which the ſaid Pariſhioners are ready to prove "and maintain. For remedy therefore and redreſs "herein, and chiefly to the end, that the ſaid Church "of St. Gregory's may be fully repaired and reſtored "to the plight and condition, wherein it formerly "was, by and at the charge of him and them, by "whoſe undue means it was in part taken down, or "cauſed to be taken down as aforeſaid, it is deſired, "that ſuch proceedings may be uſed and had againſt "the ſaid offenders herein, as to right and juſtice "doth appertain" T.

JORNANDES, a Goth by extraction, was Biſhop of Ravenna towards the middle of the ſixth Century. . . . . His Hiſtory of the Goths, tranſlated into French, was printed at Paris in the year 1703, and dedicated to the King of Sweden (a).

(a) See the Mémoires de Trevoux, for Jan. 1704, Art. 6. of the edition printed in France.

JOUBERT (LAURENCE) Counſellor and Phyſician in Ordinary to the King of France and to the King of Navarre, firſt Doctor Regent, and Chancellor and Judge of the Univerſity of Montpellier, was born at Valence in Dauphiné December the 6th 1529 (a). He ſtudied under Silvius at Paris, and under L'Argentier beyond the Alps (b). He gained a great reputation by the Lectures he read at Montpellier as a Profeſſor, and more ſtill by the books he publiſhed. People had ſo great an opinion of his knowledge, that Henry III, who paſſionately wiſhed to have children, ſent for him to Paris, being in hopes that this Phyſician's ſkill would remove the obſtacles which rendered his marriage fruitleſs (c); but he was diſappointed in his expectations. Joubert died at Lombez [A] October

(a) La Croix du Maine, pag. 285.

(b) Sammarthanus, Elog. pag. m. 75.

(c) Eum in Aula vidimus à Rege Henrico III evocatum, cum pius ille Princeps prolis in publicam utilitatem ſuſcipiendæ cupidus, maximam voti ſui ſpem in ejus induſtria nequaquam collocaſſet. Sammarth. Elog. pag. 76.

[A] He died at Lombez.] La Croix Du Maine acquaints me with this particular. He adds that Lombez is ſeven leagues diſtant from Toulouſe; and it is towards Languedoc and not towards Guienne, it follows certainly from this, that Sammarthanus is miſtaken (1), who aſſerts that Joubert died on his return from Toulouſe to Montpellier. The city of Lombez is very far from that road. Moreri is ſtill more to blame than Sammarthanus, for the following reaſon: he aſſerts, as he read it in La Croix du Maine, that this

(1) In Elog. pag. m. 76.

October the 29th 1582. He publiſhed a great many books [B], both in Latin and in French. That which he intitled Vulgar Errors raiſed great clamours againſt him, becauſe he ſpeaks in it too freely on ſeveral tickliſh ſubjects [C]. It was particularly thought ſtrange that he ſhould have dedicated ſuch a book to the Queen of Navarre, conſort to Henry IV. But all theſe clamours were ſo far from preventing the ſale of his book, that on the contrary, they contributed conſiderably to make it ſell the more [D].

This

this Phyſician died at Lombez; and he adds to this what he had found in Sammarthanus, that Joubert died on his return from Toulouſe to Montpellier. The blending together theſe two particulars, betrays in him an ignorance of Geography, with which Sammarthanus cannot be charged, ſince he did not mention Lombez. A writer is liable to commit a great many blunders, when he blends together the accounts of different authors, without altering and correcting ſuch particulars as render thoſe accounts inconſiſtent together. I do not mention the chronological blunder we meet with in Moreri. It is plainly an error of the preſs, or only an overſight. You will find in Moreri, that Joubert was born in the year 1629, that he became famous in the ſixteenth century, that he died in the year 1682, and that Du Verdier Vau-Privas and La Croix du Maine mention him in their works (2) which they publiſhed in the year 1584, and which have never been reprinted.

(2) Intitled, Bibliotb. Françoiſe.

[B] He publiſhed a great many books.] His Latin treatiſes make up two volumes in folio in the editions printed at Francfort in the years 1582, 1599, and 1645. One of the moſt conſiderable of theſe treatiſes is a collection of paradoxes, againſt which ſeveral Phyſicians (3) wrote, and to whom he replied.

(3) Thomas Jourdain, Francis Valleriola, Bruno Seidelius.

I obſerve that his treatiſe of the Pancreas was compoſed French, tho' when he publiſhed it, he put in the title-page that John Paul Zangmaiſter a native of Augſburg. and a pupil of Monſieur Laurence Joubert had tranſlated it into French from the Latin of the ſaid Joubert. (4).

(4) See La Croix du Maine, p. 255.

[C] He ſpoke too freely on ſeveral tickliſh ſubjects in his Vulgar Errors.] The ſubject relating to virginity, and to generation had perhaps never been handled in French in ſuch plain terms. He was even ſo free, that he produced three affidavits or certificates drawn up by ſworn matrons, who at the Magiſtrate's command had examined whether ſome maidens, who complained that they had been raviſhed, had reaſons to complain. The firſt of theſe affidavits was made in Bearn, the ſecond at Paris, and the third at Carcaſſonne. It is declared in the firſt that the maiden, who complained, was ſtill a virgin; in the two others it is aſſerted that the plaintiffs had been deflowered. Joubert compares together very exactly the expreſſions which theſe matrons made uſe of. In the year 1686 they printed in Holland a book intitled Tableau de l'Amour conſideré dans l'état du Marriage (5). i. e. "A Deſcription of "Love conſidered in the Marriage-State." The author takes there the name of Salocini a Venetian Phyſician; but it is well known that his true name is Nicholas Venette, and that he is a Phyſician of Rochelle (6). He quotes alſo affidavits, and it is from him that Furetiere borrowed what he ſays upon that ſubject in his Dictionary, under the word Pucelage. But to return to Joubert, he was charged with having forged himſelf thoſe affidavits. "He refutes this very "well in his epiſtle to his friends and well-wiſhers, "naming the perſon who communicated to him the "affidavits from Paris and from Bearn. As for that "from Carcaſſonne, I know very well that he had it "from a perſon, who was principal Secretary to the "Marſhal Dampville, who uſed to repeat it often for "his diverſion. And Monſieur Joubert can hardly "underſtand the words, which theſe midwives made "uſe of, ſo as to apply them properly to every part of "that member which diſtinguiſhes the ſex. Not but "that he can very well obſerve in it as many parts "as theſe matrons reckon up; for in our public lectures on Anatomy we demonſtrate ſixteen or ſeventeen of them, which I ſhall rehearſe here in their "proper order, &c. (7)." La Croix du Maine obſerves, that ſome perſons objected to Joubert, that he ſpoke too freely, and quoted too obſcene paſſages in ſome of his works, and particularly in his learned books concerning Vulgar Errors. But, continues he, if he made uſe of ſome ſmutty expreſſions which give offence to ſcrupulous perſons, he was obliged to expreſs himſelf thus, if he deſigned to be underſtood, and for the ſake of thoſe readers who deſire to be improved by his books. Scevola Sammarthanus is in the right to obſerve, that the author wronged his reputation by this work. Futurus tamen cautior, ſi contentus iis, quæ in uſum eruditorum ſermone Latino componebat, à ſcriptionibus Gallicis abſtinere maluiſſet. Naturam enim pro conceſſa Medicis facultate liberius evolvens, temere ſe in plebis imperitæ cenſuram atque riſum objecit (8). i. e. "He had been more pru- "dent, if forbearing to write in French, he had "been content to write in Latin for the uſe of the "learned. For as he explained nature freely, accord- "ing to the liberty which Phyſicians are allowed to "take, he expoſed himſelf to the cenſure and ridicule "of the unlearned multitude." Joubert himſelf was ſenſible of it, for he did not continue his work; and as to what had already been publiſhed, he endeavoured to anſwer ſome complaints againſt it. He was blamed for dedicating his book to the Queen of Navarre, a very virtuous (9) and generous Princeſs, a true mirrour and pattern of honour, ſince in the beginning of his work he was to treat of ſmutty ſubjects, as they call them, and of the privy parts, for he was writing of generation, conception, pregnancy, and delivery (10). He anſwered this objection in the ſecond edition of his book; for beſides the excuſes, which he and Louis Bertravan alledged, he altered the dedication, and preſented the whole work to Monſeigneur de Pibrac that Princeſs's Chancellor, that he might chooſe and point out ſuch paſſages, as were proper to be preſented to her Majeſty, and of which ſhe might judge with a ſafe conſcience: the ſaid Lord keeping the reſt for himſelf as being more ſuitable to her condition (11). There was another complaint againſt him. All this, it was ſaid (12), would have been much better in Latin than in French; ſince ſuch diſcourſes do not ſound ſo ill in a foreign language as they do in a vulgar tongue; nor would the women and maidens, who are more modeſt and baſhful, have had any knowledge of them. To which Cabrol makes the following reply (13). "Joubert has "already given a full anſwer to this in his epiſtle to "his friends and well-wiſhers, in which he obſerves "very judiciouſly that the moſt chaſte women in the "world may very well read his work, in which they "will meet with nothing but what leads to virtue, "and which will acquaint them, and their huſbands "alſo, with their duty in the marriage-ſtate. As to "the maidens, they will not underſtand any thing in "it relating to the works of the fleſh, if they be true "virgins both in body and ſoul, if I may ſay ſo. But "further, to ſatisfy every one in this as in all the reſt, "he has ſince ſuppreſſed all that could give any offence "to the moſt ſcrupulous perſons, knowing very well "that we ought to abſtain not only from evil, but alſo "from all appearance of evil." All theſe reaſons are not ſolid, and ſome of them are wretched arguments.

(8) Sammarth. in Elogiis, p. 76.

(9) She was very well skilled in theſe matters, if we may depend on d'Aubignés Satyrs.

(10) Cabrol, Epitre Apologet. prefixed to the 2d Part of the Erreurs Populaires, &c.

(11) Ibid.

(12) Ibid.

(13) Ibid.

[D] The clamours . . . that were raiſed againſt this book . . . contributed conſiderably to make it ſell the more.] Let us tranſcribe the words of Joubert's Apologiſt. The Treatiſe of Vulgar Errors, ſays he (14), "has been "printed at four different places within ſix months; "namely at Bourdeaux, at Paris, at Lyons, and at "Avignon: and they have not printed leſs than ſix- "teen hundred copies in every one of theſe cities. "This book has been ſo highly eſteemed, that where- "as it was ſold at firſt only for ten pence or twelve "pence, it was afterwards ſold for a crown, and even "for four livres, juſt as in a time of ſcarcity (which "is a kind of famine) the price of wheat riſes daily. "And beſides, the Bookſellers and Printers are conti- "nually aſked for the continuation of that work; and "even the author is daily preſſed to publiſh the re- "mainder of it, or at leaſt five books of it from time "to time (if he does not care to print it all at once) "according to the diviſion he made of it; beſides what "he promiſed over and above it. But as he is a man

(14) Cabrol, Epitre Apologet. prefixed to the 2d Part of the Erreurs Populaires, &c.

(5) See the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, for Oct. 1686, pag. 1221. It has been tranſlated into Dutch. See the Boekzaal, for Aug. 1695. It has alſo been tranſlated into Engliſh.

(6) He is mentioned in the Journal des Savans, for May 13, 1686, pag. m. 188.

(7) B. Cabrol, Epitre Apologetique, prefixed to the 2d Part of Laurence Joubert's Erreurs Populaires.

This work was to have contained ſix parts [E], each of them divided into five books; but the public never ſaw but the firſt, and part of the ſecond. I ſhall relate a particular which ſhews that Joubert was a modeſt man [F], and knew very well within what limits human learning is confined.

I have obſerved, from La Croix du Maine, that he was born December the 6th 1520; but I muſt add here, that we read in an inſcription which is round his picture, that in the year 1570 he was in his fiftieth year; whence it follows that he was born in the year 1530. Rondelet, whoſe favourite pupil he was, and whom he ſucceeded in the year 1567 in the poſt of Regius Profeſſor of Phyſic at Montpellier, truſted him, when he died, with his manuſcripts, and deſired him to reviſe, correct, and publiſh them (d). Joubert gained that poſt of Regius Profeſſor after he had held a public diſputation for four days upon ſeveral theſes, which have been printed, with divers other treatiſes, at Lyons, in the year 1571. There are amongſt theſe treatiſes ſome obſervations, which ſerve to clear up certain paſſages in his Paradoxes [G]. He was an

" of an high ſpirit, and very jealous of his reputation, " he has been ſo much vexed and exaſperated by all " thoſe complaints, that he had often a mind (I know " it very well) to burn all that he had written upon " thoſe ſubjects. Oh, what a pity it would have been (α)!"

§ (α) There is a Latin tranſlation of this book of the Vulgar Errors printed by Chr. Plantin with this title: Laur. Jouberti de Vulgi erroribus Medicinæ & Medicorum dignitatem deformantibus, cum Notis Joan. Bourgeſii. i. e. " Laurence Joubert's work of the Vulgar Errors which " tend to depreciate the dignity of Phyſic and of the " Phyſicians, with John Bourgeſius's notes." In 8vo, 1600 *. Let us obſerve here that Mr. Bayle ſhould have ſaid a word of the orthography, which Joubert affected to follow in this work. It is almoſt the ſame with that, which Lewis Maigret, and James Pelletier attempted to introduce; but it was ſo little approved of, that it was abſolutely altered in the edition printed at Roan, in the year 1601. CRIT. REM.]

* Bibliot. Draudii, tom. 1. pag. 939.

[E] This work was to have contained ſix parts.] When he publiſhed the firſt part he added to it a table exhibiting the diviſion of the whole work, and the titles of the chapters which every book was to contain. But as it was not he himſelf that ſent the ſecond part to the preſs, it did not anſwer the ſcheme which he had publiſhed. It was not divided into five books, and the twenty five which it contains do not anſwer thoſe of his ſcheme, neither with regard to the number, nor to the ſubjects of theſe chapters. The following paſſage from Cabrol will acquaint you with the reaſons of this. " He could not yet be prevailed upon " to conſent that the other parts might be publiſhed. He " keeps them ſo ſecret and hidden, that there is no " poſſibility of having a ſight nor the leaſt communi- " cation of them. Finding therefore that ſuch was his " reſolution (not to ſay obſtinacy) I was determined to " publiſh ſome chapters, which I received formerly " from him; for he had done me the favour to ex- " plain ſome propoſitions to me, which I deſired to " underſtand from him, and of which I aſked him his " opinion. There is not a great number of them, " but moſt of the chapters are very long, and contain " ſeveral heads. So that whoever would take the " pains to ſubdivide them, would find about thirty of " them. Monſieur JOUBERT had compoſed them " long before he publiſhed the firſt part of his Vulgar " Errors: they treat of certain ſubjects, which have " ſince been reduced to ſeveral heads in the general and " particular diviſion of the whole work, to be inſerted " ſome in the ſeventh book, others in the eleventh, " the ſeventeenth, the twentieth, the twenty third, " the twenty fifth, the twenty ſixth, and in the follow- " ing books to the thirtieth. I have not much mind- " ed in what order I placed them, ſince this is all we " can have at preſent from the author, notwithſtand- " ing his promiſe (15)." The ſame Cabrol aſſerts (16), that whilſt he was taking care to have this printed as it were by ſtealth, he was ſurpriſed at his Printer's by Monſ. JOUBERT, " who was very angry with me, " ſays he, becauſe of my undertaking. However when " he heard that I deſigned to make you a preſent of " it, ... he ſuffered ... the Printer to go on, and even " gave him two beautiful diſcourſes extracted from his " Latin paradoxes, and tranſlated by his eldeſt ſon Iſaac " Joubert." Let us obſerve here, that Gaſpar Bachot Counſellor and Phyſician to the King, publiſhed in the year 1626 a book which he had compoſed a great while before in order to compleat Laurence Joubert's deſign with regard to the third part of the Vulgar Errors (17). He followed the chapters of the books, according to the ſcheme of them, which he met with in the table annexed to the firſt part. But he drew up the whole after his own manner, and according to his particular opinions, without obliging himſelf to follow his maſter's (18). This book of Gaſpar Bachot is entitled, Erreurs populaires touchant la Medicine & Regime de Santé. i. e. " Vulgar Errors concerning Phy- " ſick, and the Diet neceſſary to keep us in health." This author is not mentioned in Lindenius renovatus.

(17) At Lyons, for Bartholomew Vincent, in 8vo.

(18) See Bachot's Preface.

[F] I ſhall relate a particular, which ſhews that Joubert was a modeſt man.] Gaſpar Bachot, whom I have mentioned in the preceding remark, was admitted Doctor of Phyſic in the year 1592 (19). He boaſted that he had maintained his theſis againſt all opponents, and he looked upon his Doctorate as the trophy of his victory. But as ſoon as I had read your Anſwer, ſays he in his letter to Monſieur de Lorme Phyſician in Ordinary to Lewis XIII, and firſt Phyſician to the Queen-Dowager (20), " in which you " write to me, that the late Monſieur Joubert, your " collegue and your friend, uſed to ſay of himſelf, " Ter Doctor nunquam futurus doctus. i. e. I have been " three times admitted a Doctor, and ſhall never be a " learned man; that he being a Doctor, and having " taken that degree in three different univerſities, could " not be ſatisfied with himſelf, though he was admired " by all the world; I began then to miſtruſt myſelf " ſo, that I looked upon all my former ſtudies as " uſeleſs, without any hopes of ever becoming learned, " ſince ſuch a man, like another Socrates, confeſſed " his own incapacity, or the fear he was in never to " enjoy the deſire of his heart." Take notice, that he obſerves, that " Joubert had learnt his profeſſion at " Montbriſon (21) and in the neighbouring houſes, " and that he lived there, when his Decades were dedi- " cated to that celebrated Civilian, Papon, the orna- " ment of that city (22)."

(19) See his Letter to Mr. de Lorme, prefixed to his book of Vulgar Errors.

(20) Ibid.

(21) A City in the County of Forez.

(22) That is to ſay of Montbriſon.

[G] .... Some obſervations which ſerve to clear up certain paſſages in his paradoxes.] He had aſſerted in his ſecond paradox, that it is poſſible for a man to live a long while without eating and drinking. This propoſition was exclaimed againſt, as though the author deſigned to hint thereby that Moſes, Elijah and Jeſus Chriſt faſted forty days without any miracle. He made a very good anſwer to this objection, for his anſwer was approved by John de la Place, Miniſter of Montpellier. This Miniſter's approbation is not printed in the French tranſlation of this work of Joubert, but it is to be met with in the Latin edition of his Opuſcula printed at Lyons in the year 1570 (23). This confirms what we have obſerved in another place (24), namely, that Joubert was of the reformed religion. It muſt be obſerved, that when he undertook to explain thoſe paſſages which were exclaimed againſt, it was only for the ſake of thoſe pious perſons, who either becauſe they have a tender conſcience, or becauſe they are not ſufficiently acquainted with Philoſophy, are eaſily offended. But as for thoſe, who out of malice pretended to find dangerous aſſertions in his works, he left them to the hardneſs of their heart. Hujus enarrationis, ſays he (25), vel ſolo argumento vel demonſtrationibus commoveri poſſe hominum duo genera, facile præſentio. Unum eſt naturalis Philoſophiæ & Medicinæ imperitum, ſimplicitatis & impietatis nomine venerandum: qualis

(23) In page 139 of the 2d Part.

(24) In the remark [A] of the article VIRET.

(25) Joubert, Opuſcul. Part 2. pag. 136.

(15) Cabrol, Epitre Apologetique, prefixed to the 2d Part of the Erreurs Populaires.

(16) Ibid. in the Dedication to Monſ. de Villeroi.

an innovator with regard to the orthography of the French tongue [H].

qualis plebecula, & quicunque in æſtimandis rerum cauſis ſtudium non adhibent. Alterum διαβολικὸν, quod etiam quæ bene dicta eſſe novit, impudentiſſimis calumnis inſectatur. Hoc, quia explicationem non expectat, & quæcunque impura ſua mente excipiuntur depravat, ſuoque veneno inficit, me nihil moratur. Alteri verò benignè ſatisfaciendum puto. i. e. "I am ſenſible that either "the very ſubject of this treatiſe, or the arguments "urged in it may give offence to two ſorts of perſons. "The one is of thoſe, who are unacquainted with Na"tural Philoſophy and with Phyſic, and who for their "honeſty and piety deſerve to be regarded: ſuch are "in general the common people, and all they who do "not apply themſelves to ſtudy the cauſes of things. "The others are a deviliſh ſort of men, who by their "impudeut ſlanders exclaim even againſt what they "know to be well grounded. As they do not expect "an explication from me, and are uſed to corrupt "and infect with their venom whatever they conceive "in their wicked mind, I ſhall have no regard for "them. But I am of opinion that I ought to anſwer "the others with kindneſs, and in a friendly manner." He muſt have been highly provoked by thoſe men's imputations, ſince he wiſhes that God would give him that patience and meekneſs, which are neceſſary when a man is expoſed to the rage of ſlanderers. His words, which ſhew that his heart was full of reſentment, are at the ſame time a terrible invective againſt his adverſaries. He concludes after this manner. Hæc διαβόλους καιροδαίμονας ab iſtius enarrationis prophanatione avertant, quibus eſt peculiare etiam ſacram paginam corrumpere, & in alienum peſſimumque ſenſum detorquere, impudentiſſime mentiri, & maledicere, animorum concordiam diſſolvere, inimicitias colere, invidiam crepare, & nunquam non quibus nocere queant modos excogitare, piiſque omnibus eſſe infeſtiſſimos. Deus miſericors parcat hominibus quicunque ab ejuſmodi furiis agitati, earumque veneno afflati & infecti, ſimilem naturam induunt & referunt: quoſque ab iſtis nequiſſime tractari patitur, patientia (quæ omnia vincit) & manſuetudine bene muniat. Amen (26). i. e. "Let this keep thoſe deviliſh ſlan- (26) Joubert, Opuſcula, pag. 156, 157.
"derers from prophaning this work, whoſe particular "character is to falſify even the Holy Scripture, and "to wreſt the words of it to a wrong and moſt dan"gerous ſenſe; to lye and ſlander moſt impudently, "to ſow diſſentions and to keep up diviſions amongſt "friends; to burſt with envy, to be continually in"venting ſome miſchief, and to be moſt bitterly exaſ"perated againſt all good men. I pray the moſt "merciful God to pardon all thoſe who, being perſe"cuted by thoſe furies, and acted upon and infected "by their venom, happen to aſſume the ſame charac"ter; and if he ſuffers any to be injured by them, "may he grant them the neceſſary patience (which "overcomes all things) and that meekneſs they want; "Amen."

[H] He was an innovator with regard to the Orthography of the French Tongue.] For he uſed to write jantil, accion, parfet, æmer, inſtead of gentil (gentile); action (action), parfait (perfect), aimer (to love). He alſo made a diſtinction between the v conſonant and the u which is a vowel; and he would have the conſonant (27) written otherwiſe than the vowel (28). (27) Compare this with the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, for July 1704, Art. 8.

(28) Taken from Sorel, pag. 114. of his Perfection de l'homme.

JOVIAN, a Roman Emperor, obtained that dignity by the election of the army in the year 363, after the death of Julian the Apoſtate. He was more conſidered by the merit of his Father Count Varronian, than by his own (a), for he was ſtill very young, and ſerved in the troops of the Life-guards [A]. Moſt of the particulars that relate to him being ſet down in Moreri's Dictionary, I ſhall confine my ſelf to two facts only, which are not to be met with there. The firſt is, that Jovian concluded a peace, which was ſo diſhonourable and ſo prejudicial to the Roman Empire, that he expoſed himſelf to the complaints and railleries of the public [B]. The other is, that he

(a) Suidas in Ἰοβιανῷ. See alſo the words of Eutropius in the remark [A].

[A] He ſerved in the troops of the Life-Guards.] When I ſay this, it is chiefly with regard to theſe words of Eutropius. Poſt hunc (Julianum) Jovianus, qui tunc domesticus militabat, ad obtinendum imperium conſenſu exercitus electus commendatione patris quàm ſua militibus notior (1). i. e. "After Julian's death, Jo- (1) Eutrop. lib. 10. pag. m. 123.
"vian, who ſerved then in the troops of the Life"Guards, was choſen Emperor by the army, though "he was known to the ſoldiers by his father's merit "rather than by his own." But I muſt alſo obſerve that this author's expreſſions are not ſufficiently exact, and that we ought to correct them by thoſe of another Hiſtorian, who does more diſtinctly tell us to what poſt Jovian had been raiſed. Jovianus eligitur Imperator Domeſticorum Ordinis primus, paternis meritis mediocriter commendabilis (2). i. e. "Jovian being (2) Amm. Marcellin. lib. 25. cap. 5. p. m. 430.
"Captain in the Life-guards was choſen Emperor; "his father's merit was the only recommendation he "had." As the military poſts are not at preſent in the ſame order or diſpoſition as they were at that time, it is very difficult to find a word in the modern languages, that anſwers exactly to the meaning of theſe expreſſions, Domeſticorum ordinis primus, or Primicerius Domeſticorum (3). But we may with reaſon aſ- (3) Hieron. in Chron. makes uſe of this expreſſion.
ſert, that they do not ſignify that Jovian was the Chief or the Leader of thoſe guards, which were called Domeſtici: for the true name of their Leader or Colonel, was Comes Domeſticorum (4). It has been aſ- (4) See Valeſius, in Ammian. Marcellin. lib. 14. cap. 10.
ſerted in Moreri's Dictionary, that Jovian was Captain of the Prætorian Guard, when he refuſed to renounce the Chriſtian Religion under Julian the Apoſtate. This is borrowed from Socrates the Hiſtorian, who though he made uſe of the word χιλιαρχὸς (5), a (5) Socrat. Hiſt. lib. 3. cap. 22.
Captain of a thouſand men, does not however juſtify Moreri's expreſſion. Let us obſerve that Theodoret aſſerts (6), that Jovian had no employment in the army when he was made Emperor. Ammianus Marcellinus, who ſays the contrary, is more credited, ſince he was on the ſpot. (6) Theodor. Hiſt. lib. 4. cap. 1.

[B] Jovian concluded a peace which was ſo diſhonourable and ſo prejudicial . . . that he expoſed himſelf to the . . . railleries of the public.] He yielded five Provinces to the Perſians, with ſome places, which ſerved as ſtrong barriers to the Roman Empire. Amongſt other places he gave up to them the important City of Niſibis, and that of Singara (7), and it was with difficulty he obtained leave for the inhabitants to retire to the territories of the Romans (8). He promiſed that he would no longer ſend any aſſiſtance to the King of Armenia, who had been conſtantly a true and faithful friend to the Emperors. This was, ſay the Hiſtorians, a kind of impiety, and proved the ruin of that faithful friend, and ended in the loſs of Armenia. Quibus exitiale aliud acceſſit & impium, ne poſt hæc ita compoſita, Arſaci poſcenti contra Perſas ferretur auxilium, amico nobis ſemper & fido . . . Unde poſtea contigit, ut vivus caperetur idem Arſaces, & Armeniæ maximum latus Medis conterminans, & Artaxata inter diſſenſiones & turbamenta raperent Parthi (9). i. e. "To which (9) Idem, ibid. pag. 434.
"was added this pernicious and impious circumſtance, "that after the concluſion of this treaty of peace, no "aſſiſtance ſhould be given to Arſaces againſt the "Perſians, though he ſhould aſk for it; to Arſaces, "I ſay, who always was our faithful and conſtant "friend. Whence it happened afterwards that the "ſame Arſaces was taken priſoner, and during the "broils and troubles, the Parthians ſeized upon the "greateſt part of Armenia, which borders upon Media, "and made themſelves maſters of Artaxata." It is impoſſible to read any thing more moving than the deſcription of the condition, to which the inhabitants of Niſibis were reduced, when they were forced to remove to another place (10). Their humble ſupplications to Jo- (10) See Marcellinus, ibid. cap. 9.
vian, to deſire him not to oblige them to leave their native country, are enough to make our hearts bleed; and yet the Emperor had no regard for them: he inſiſted upon his having given his word, and upon his fearing to forſwear himſelf: but it was imagined, that he

(7) Vide Valeſium, in Ammian. Marcel. lib. 25. cap. 9. pag. 439.

(8) Amm. Marcell. lib. 25. cap. 7.

he did not approve of that violent means be made uſe of in order to ſuppreſs the Sects, he did not mention the true cauſe of his fears. Et hæc quidem ſuppliciter ordo & populus precabatur: ſed verbis loquebantur incaſſum, Imperatore, ut fingebat, alia metuens, perjurii piacula declinante (11). i. e. "The "magiſtrates and the people did humbly entreat him; "but to no purpoſe, the Emperor fearing, as he ſaid, "to be guilty of perjury; though what he feared was "quite another thing." It was imagined that he kept his word only becauſe he feared leſt he ſhould meet with a competitor to the crown, if he ſhould continue longer in thoſe parts, and engage in a new quarrel with the Perſians. They who imagined this were perhaps in the right; but after all, the Roman Hiſtorians are very much to blame for finding fault with his performing punctually the conditions of the treaty of peace. Let us quote a paſſage from Eutropius, in which he is cenſured for this, and in which his whole fault is made to conſiſt in his obſerving that treaty; for it is acknowledged on the other hand, that he was under a kind of neceſſity to accept diſhonourable terms, which were ſuch as the Romans had never ſubmitted to before. Jam turbatis rebus, exercitu quoque inopia laborante uno à Perſis atque altero prælio victus (Jovianus) pacem cum Sapore neceſſariam quidem, ſed ignobilem fecit, mulctatus finibus, ac nonnulla Imperii Romani parte tradita: quod ante eum annis mille centum & duobus-de-viginti fere, ex quo Romanum imperium conditum erat, nunquam accidit. Quinetiam legiones noſtræ ita & apud Caudium per Pontium Teleſinum, ita & in Hiſpania apud Numantiam, & in Numidia ſub jugum miſſæ ſunt, ut nihil tamen finium traderetur. Ea pacis conditio non penitus reprehendenda foret, ſi fœderis neceſſitatem, cum integrum fuit, mutare voluiſſet: ſicut a Romanis omnibus bis bellis, quæ commemoravi, factum eſt. Nam & Samnitibus, & Numantinis, & Numidis confeſtim bella illa ſunt: neque pax rata fuit (12). i. e. "The affairs being reduced almoſt to a deſpe- "rate condition, and the army wanting proviſions, "Jovian, who had already been more than once van- "quiſhed by the Perſians, made a treaty of peace "with Sapor, which was indeed neceſſary, but very "diſhonourable; for the Emperor was obliged to give "up the frontiers of the Empire, with part of its "territories. This never happened before, ſince the "firſt foundation of the Roman Empire, about eleven "hundred and eighteen years ago. Nay, even when "our legions were forced to undergo the yoke at "Caudium by Pontius Teleſinus, and in Spain near "Numantia, and in Numidia, they never yielded "one inch of ground. The peace, though made "upon ſuch terms, would not be altogether to blame, "if, when it was in his power, he had endeavoured "to mend what the neceſſity he was under forced him "to accept, as the Romans did in thoſe wars, which I "have mentioned. For the Romans attacked im- "mediately the Samnites, the Numantines, and the Nu- "midians, nor would they keep to the treaty of peace."

(11) Marcellinus, ibid. See alſo the Chronicle of Alexandria.

(12) Eutropius, lib. 10. pag. 123.

You ſee here, that Jovian is blamed for not following the example of the antient Romans, who without any delay fell upon thoſe nations, which obliged them to ſubmit to a diſgraceful capitulation, but which had not made them loſe one inch of ground. And ſince he had been cenſured for not reſenting the ſhame and retrieving the loſs of this treaty of peace, though he reigned but ſeven or eight months, it is plain that they wiſhed he had broke through the articles of the treaty, a few days after they had been agred upon, and as ſoon as his army was furniſhed with proviſion and in a ſecure place. But is not this policy too viſibly unjuſt? Suppoſe it be lawful to retrieve the loſſes ſuſtained by a diſadvantageous peace made by an unavoidable neceſſity, does it follow from thence, that one muſt not let ſome time paſs, and wait for thoſe pretences and opportunities which ſeldom fail to offer in the courſe of a few years? Thus you ſee, that even according to the moſt looſe maxims of politics, Jovian would have been guilty of a moſt horrid perfidiouſneſs, had he done that which the Hiſtorians blame him for not doing. The three inſtances of the ancient Romans, which Eutropius quotes, are of a quite different nature. The Senate and the people might lawfully make void all the treaties which their Generals made. But Jovian, who had concluded the peace had no ſuperior: he was the ſovereign maſter, all the power being lodged with him. Obſerve that what vexed the true Romans moſt, was the giving up of a country, which had been a part of their Empire; for they pretended, that this had never been done; and it was ſo much againſt their maxims to ſuffer the leaſt diminution of their dominions, that they granted the honours of a triumph only to thoſe, who had removed the borders farther back; and refuſed them to great Generals, who had done very noble actions, but without any other advantage to the State, but that of recovering what had been loſt. Read the deſcription of this grandeur of the Romans in the following words from Marcellinus. Illud tamen ad medullas uſque bonorum pervenit: quod dum extimeſcit æmulum poteſtatis, dumque in animo per Gallias & Illyricum verſat, quoſdam ſæpe ſublimiora cæptaſſe, famam adventus ſui prævenire feſtinans, indignum imperio facinus amictu perjurii fugiendi commiſit, Niſibi prodita: quæ jam inde à Mithridatici regni temporibus, ne Oriens à Perſis occuparetur, viribus reſtitit maximis. Numquam enim ab Urbis ortu inveniri poteſt annalibus replicatis, ut arbitror, terrarum pars ulla noſtrarum ab Imperatore vel Conſule hoſti conceſſa: ſed ne ob recepta quidem quæ direpta ſunt, verùm ob amplificata regna triumphalis gloria fuiſſe delata. Unde P. Scipioni ob recuperatas Hiſpanias, Fulvio Capuâ poſt diuturna certamina ſuperatâ, & Opimio poſt diverſos exitus præliorum, Fregellanis tunc internecivis hoſtibus ad deditionem compulſis, triumphi ſunt denegati. Id etiam memoriæ nos veteres docent, in extremis caſibus icta cum dedecore fœdera, poſtquàm partes verbis juravere conceptis, repetitione bellorum illico diſſoluta: ut temporibus priſcis apud Furcas Caudinas ſub jugum legionibus miſſis in Samnio, & per Albinum in Numidia ſceleſtè pacs cogitata, & auctore turpiter pactionis feſtinatæ Mancino dedito Numantinis (13). i. e. "But what grieved all good Romans to the very "heart was, that whilſt Jovian was fearing a compe- "titor, and calling to his mind, that in Gaul and in "Illyricum ſeveral perſons had often uſurped the ſo- "vereign power, and deſigning to prevent the very "report of his coming, he committed the moſt un- "worthy action under a pretence not forſwearing him- "ſelf; he gave up Niſibis to the enemy, the inhabi- "tants of which had from the time of Mithri- "dates bravely reſiſted the Perſians, that they might "not make themſelves maſters of the Eaſt. I believe "it would be impoſſible to find in the whole ſeries "of our Annals and Records, that ſince the building "of Rome any General or Conſul ever yielded one "inch of ground to the enemy: nay, the honour of "a triumph was not granted to thoſe, who had only "retaken what had been loſt, but only to thoſe who "had enlarged the dominions of the Commonwealth. "And for this reaſon the triumph was refuſed to Scipio "who had recovered Spain, to Fulvius, who after a "long war had taken Capua, to Opimius, who after "ſeveral battles forced the Fregellani to ſurrender, "who were at that time our moſt bitter enemies. "We alſo find in ancient Records, that when, even "in the utmoſt neceſſity, a diſhonourable treaty had "been concluded, which both parties had ſworn in "form to keep, yet ſuch treaties have been annulled, "and the war was begun again; as when in former "days our legions were forced to paſs under the "yoke at Caudium in the country of the Samnites, "and when Albinus had wickedly formed the deſign "of making a peace in Numidia, and Mancinus, who "made too much haſte to conclude it, was delivered "up to the Numantines." Obſerve that the remark [D] muſt be conſidered as a part of this: for I examine there whether Eutropius and Ammianus Marcellinus were well grounded in their aſſertions or not.

(13) Amm. Marcellin. cap. 9. pag. 439, 440.

If we do but ever ſo little conſider the natural temper of the people in general, and the circumſtances, which the Chriſtians and the Heathens were in at that time, we ſhall eaſily believe, that Jovian became odious and contemptible, and was the ſubject of ſeveral ſatires. The people dread and hate war, and love and long for peace; and not without good reaſons; for it is the people that ſuffer the greateſt inconveniencies of war: but yet that ſome people will grieve and be vexed at a treaty which diſgraces the nation, and deprives her Sects [C], that differ from the eſtabliſhed Religion. Some authors aſſert that before his time the Romans had never yielded one inch of ground by a treaty of peace [D]. Others maintain, of a barrier, which was her ſecurity, and made her formidable to her neighbours. Victories and conqueſts fill the hearts of the very countrymen with joy and content, and makes them bear patiently the weight of the war. Men will much eaſier forget the heavy duties and numerous taxes they pay, when they behold the happy ſucceſs of the armies, and the advantageous terms of a treaty of peace: every one takes his ſhare in the glory the nation has acquired; but to think, that the enemies will become proud, ſcornful, and inſulting, when they have put an end to the war by ſuch a treaty of peace as they could wiſh, fills the heart even of the meaneſt amongſt the people, with grief and vexation. Muſt ſo many expences, ſay they, and ſuch heavy taxes be all to no purpoſe, &c.? See above (14) the complaints and murmurs of the French againſt the peace of Cateau. Never was the people more capable to ſhew ſuch a reſentment than under the Emperor Jovian. There was a great emulation between the Chriſtians and the Heathens. The latter had juſt loſt an Emperor whom they loved, and from whom they had great expectations; they had flattered themſelves with the hopes that his expedition againſt the Perſians would be attended with conſiderable advantages, and with great glory; and they found that when death had ſnatched from him thoſe noble triumphs, he had a ſucceſſor, under whom the affairs of the Empire were reduced to a miſerable condition. To murmur againſt ſuch an Emperor, to blame him, to ridicule him, was gratifying at once ſeveral paſſions; it was raiſing Julian's glory, it was loading the Chriſtians with confuſion, it was making a ſacrifice to the idol of political vanity, and to zeal for religion. Men were ſure to act from all theſe different principles: they made verſes and parodies to banter and ridicule Jovian (15). The wits at Antioch ſignalized themſelves particularly on this occaſion, they diſperſed libels againſt him about the ſtreets; they poſted others up; they turned him into ridicule by applying to him ſome paſſages in the Iliad, and amongſt others that in the third book (16), where Paris is ſo ſeverely reproved by his brother Hector, and that in the ſecond book (17), where Ulyſſes threatens Therſites that he will ſtrip him to the very ſkin, and drive him away with ſhame.

(14) In the remarks [C], [G], [H] of the article HENRY II. See alſo the remark [P] of the article HENRY IV.

(15) Suidas, in Ἰοβιανῷ.

(16) Verſu 39.

(17) Verſu 261.

Ἐι μὴ ἐγώ σε λαβὼν, ἀπὸ μὲν φίλα εἵματα δύσω
Χλαῖναντ', ἠδὲ χιτῶνα, τὰ τ' αἰδῶ ἀμφικαλύπτει
Αὐτὸν δὲ κλαίοντα θοὰς ἐπὶ νῆας ἀφήσω (18).

(18) Idem, ibid.

"If I do not take you, and ſtrip you of all your "cloaths, even of thoſe that cover your ſecret parts, "and ſend you thus crying immediately to the Perſians."

An old woman ſeeing him tall and handſome, and hearing that he had neither genius nor good ſenſe (19), cried out, his madneſs is as great as his perſon is tall (20). Suidas, who acquaints us with all theſe particulars, had already obſerved, that this Emperor knew nothing, that he had had no education, and that by his baſe lazineſs he loſt thoſe talents which nature had beſtowed upon him. Ἀμελέτητος δὲ ὢν, καὶ ἄγευστος παιδεύσεως, καὶ ἣν εἶχε φύσιν δὲ ῥαθυμίαν ἠμαύρωσε καὶ ἠφάνιζεν (21). i. e. "He had no education, and not ſo much as the firſt "principles of learning: and even the natural genius "he had, he defaced and ſpoiled by his negligence." Neither Eutropius, nor Ammianus Marcellinus give him that character. Vir alias neque iners neque imprudens (22). i. e. "A man who otherwiſe wanted neither "diligence nor wiſdom." You will meet with Ammianus Marcellinus's words in the beginning of the remark [E].

(19) Idem, ibid.

(20) Ὅσον μῆκος, καὶ βάθος ἢ μωρία. Quanta longitudo & profunditas eſt hujus ſtultitiæ. Idem, ibid.

(21) Suidas, ubi ſupra.

(22) Eutrop. lib. 10. ſub finem.

[C] He did not approve that violent means ſhould be made uſe of, in order to ſuppreſs the ſects.] The Philoſopher Themiſtius commends him after ſuch a manner, as does not agree with the particulars we meet with in Church-Hiſtory: he extols him for giving to all men the liberty of worſhipping God according to their own fancy, by which means he had put a ſtop to the waverings of thoſe flatterers, who had changed their religion as the Imperial crown paſſed from one head to another; he compares ſuch men to the Euripus (23). Θαυμάζει τὸν βασιλέα, ὡς τὸ ἐφεῖναι θρησκεύειν ὡς ἕκαστοι βούλονται, νικήσαντα τῶν κολάκων τοὺς τρόπους· οὓς καὶ διασύρων πάνυ γελοίως ἔφη, ἐλέγχεσθαι αὐτοὺς ἀλυργίδα, ἀ Θεὸν θεραπεύοντας· μηδὲν τε διαφέρειν αὐτοῦς εὑρίσκειν, νῦν μὲν ἐπὶ ταῦδε· νῦν δὲ εἰς τοὐναντίον τὰ ῥεύματα μεταβάλλοντας. i. e. "He commends the Emperor very much, becauſe he "had granted to every one the liberty of worſhipping "as he pleaſed, by which he put a ſtop to the cuſtom "of thoſe flatterers, of whom he ſays wittily, that "they did not worſhip God, but the people; and he "adds that they are like the Euripus, which ſome-"times runs this ſide, and then quite the contrary "way (24)." Themiſtius ſpoke thus in an oration which he delivered on Jovian's Conſulſhip. The ſenſe of his words is, that Jovian did not forbid the Heathens to worſhip their Gods, according to the antient cuſtom: and yet Socrates the Hiſtorian tells us (25), that all the temples of the Heathens were ſhut up, and that theſe idolaters hid themſelves ſome in one place, ſome in another. That the Philoſophers left off wearing the habit of their ſects, and that the ſacrifices, which uſed to be ſo frequently offered under Julian, ceaſed entirely. We muſt ſay therefore that Themiſtius ſpoke in an hyperbolical ſtile, which was grounded only on Jovian's moderation towards the Heretics, and which was perhaps an artful exhortation to uſe the ſame toleration with regard to all ſorts of religions. However it is certain, that this Emperor finding himſelf courted by all the Chriſtian ſects, for every one of them would gain him on their ſide, he declared himſelf for the orthodox party as to the conſubſtantiality of the word (26), but he would not conſent to drive from their churches thoſe that were of a contrary opinion (27), and he anſwered that he hated controverſies, and would love and eſteem the promoters of peace and concord. He deſigned to ſuppreſs by his meekneſs and indulgence all the ſchiſms that were in the church. He therefore gave the world to underſtand, that he would perſecute no man, but that he would chiefly love and honour thoſe, who ſhould be very zealous for reſtoring the public peace and tranquillity. Ὁ μέντοι βασιλεὺς προθεσιν εἶχε, κολακείᾳ καὶ πειθοῖ τῶν διεφθαρμένων τὴν φιλονεικίαν ἐκκόψαι, φήσας μηδενὶ ὀχληρὸς τῶν ὁπωσοῦν πιστευόντων ἔσεσθαι· ἀλλὰ πᾶσιν ἀγαπήσειν καὶ ὑπερεμνήσειν τοὺς ἀρχὴν τῇ ἑνώσει τῆς ἐκκλησίας παρεῖχον τας (28). i. e. "The Emperor was determined, to ſuppreſs by his meekneſs "and perſuaſions the quarrels of thoſe who differed in "their opinions, and he ſaid, that he would moleſt "none, of what perſuaſion ſoever they might be; but "that he would love and diſtinguiſh thoſe, who made "it their buſineſs to reſtore the peace of the church." Let us obſerve that he made ſevere laws againſt thoſe who ſhould court Nuns with a deſign to marry them, or who looked laſciviouſly upon them: for he would have them be capitally puniſhed (29). He reſolved upon this ſeverity, to refrain the audaciouſneſs men had uſed under the Emperor Julian, in marrying Nuns, and debauching them either by main force, or by perſuaſions (30).

(23) See Penſées diverſes ſur les Comètes, p. 244.

(24) Socrates, Hiſt. Eccleſiaſt. lib. 3. cap. 15, pag. m. 205.

(25) Idem, ibid. cap. 24.

(26) Idem, ibid. & cap. 25.

(27) Idem, ibid. cap. 25.

(28) Idem, ibid. pag. 204, 205.

(29) Sozomen. Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. 6. cap. 3.

(30) Idem, ibid.

[D] Some authors aſſert, that before his time the Romans had never yielded one inch of ground by a treaty of peace.] The paſſages, which I have already quoted above (31) from Eutropius and Ammianus Marcellinus, are a plain argument that this was reported. Caſaubon (32) pretends, that they who ſpoke thus, aſſerted a falſity: the ground of his opinion is that Hadrian gave up three Provinces (33), and that Diocleſian reduced his empire within more narrow bounds. Diocleſianus . . . . Auguſti præceptum, Hadrianique exemplum ſecutus, imperii fines à meridie ſupra Ægyptum arctavit: auctor Procopius in Perſicis. Idem Imperator reliquit & Daciam à Trajano conſtitutam, ſublato exercitu & provincialibus: deſperans eam poſſe retineri, Vopiſcus ait. i. e. "Diocleſian . . . . according to Auguſtus's ad-"vice, and after the example of Hadrian, reduced the "Empire within narrow bounds towards the ſouth "above Egypt, as Procopius tells us in his account of "the affairs of Perſia. The ſame Emperor abandoned "alſo Dacia, of which Trajan had made a Province; "having

(31) In the remark [B].

(32) Caſaubon. Not. ad Spartian. Vit. Adriani, cap. 5. pag. m. 47.

(33) See above, the remark [G] of the article HADRIANUS (Publius Ælius).

tain, that they who ſpeak thus are miſtaken. I ſhall examine this in a note, and I ſhall alſo quote what the Fathers of the Church have ſaid of this peace concluded by Jovian (b). Let us add, that he was a very tall man, zealous for the Orthodox Doctrine, but very much given to drinking and to lewdneſs [E]. We ought rather to believe thoſe who

(b) See the remark [F].

" having removed his army out of it, and all the " Governors that were there, not thinking that he could " keep that country, ſays Vopiſcus." But Valeſius (34) ſhews, that there is a great difference between what theſe two Emperors did, and what Jovian conſented to. The latter gave up provinces by a treaty of peace, and as a kind of ranſom: whereas the other abandoned freely a country, the keeping of which coſt too much money: this was acting according to the rules of prudence, and not receiving the law from the conqueror, as Jovian did. There was not therefore any reaſon to blame Marcellinus for his aſſertion, as Caſaubon, Lindenbrog (35) and Le Cocq (36) have done; and it is certain that Jovian's action was unheard of. It is a general opinion that this action was diſgraceful (37). There was no diſpute upon this between the Chriſtians and the Heathens, they differed only with regard to this Emperor's juſtification: the Chriſtians endeavoured to clear him from the reproach of it, and the Heathens to load him with it. We have ſeen above (38) that an Heathen Hiſtorian blames him, not indeed for conſenting to the treaty of peace, but for keeping to the terms of it. This cenſure is ill-grounded, and even horrid. If neceſſity forced him to conclude a peace, as theſe authors confeſt, he muſt be excuſed, for neceſſity has no law.

(34) Valeſ. in Amm. Marcell. lib. 25. cap. 9. pag. m. 439, 440.

(35) Lindenbr. in Amm. Marcell. ibid.

(36) Leonardus Coqueus, in Auguſt. de Civit. Dei, lib. 4. cap. 29.

(37) Poſt ... pudendæ pacis icta fœdera. Amm. Marcell. lib. 27. cap. 12. See alſo Agathias, lib. 4. Socrates, lib. 3. cap. 22. Zonaras, &c.

(38) In the remark [B], citation (12).

Neceſſitas, cujus curſus tranſverſi impetum
Voluerunt multi effugere, pauci potuerant (39).

" Many have endeavoured to avoid the force of ne- " ceſſity, but few have been able to do it."

When Jovian is once cleared in this reſpect, all the reſt goes of courſe. The next obſervation of a treaty of peace confirmed by a ſolemn oath, does not deſerve to be condemned. Ammianus Marcellinus is a much more dreadful Critic than Eutropius; he was an eye-witneſs, and he gives us ſuch an account of thoſe events, as to hint to us (40) that Jovian put himſelf in that dangerous ſituation, without any neceſſity, and that the perplexity to which the Perſians had reduced him was not ſo great, but it had been much better for him to try the fortune of the war, rather than to ſubmit to the diſgraceful terms, which he accepted. He charges him poſitively with timorouſneſs, and with hearkening to the flatterers, who diſpirited him. Et cum pugnari decies expediret, ne horum quidquam dederetur: adulatorum globus inſtabat timido Principi, Procopii metuendum ſubſerens nomen, eumque adfirmens, niſi rediret, cognito Juliani interitu, cum intacto milite quem regebat, novas res nullo renitente facilè moliturum. Hac pernicioſa verborum ille adſiduitate nimia ſuccenſus, ſine cunctatione tradidit omnia quæ petebantur (41). i. e. " And though it was ten times better to engage in " battle, rather than to give all that up, yet the ti- " morous Prince was ſurrounded with a croud of flat- " terers, who repeated to him continually the dreadful " name of Procopius, and aſſerted, that unleſs Jovian " returned very ſoon, Procopius hearing that Julian " was dead, and being at the head of a freſh army, " would be in a condition to revolt, and to ſeize the " crown, having no man to reſiſt them. Jovian be- " ing too much affected by theſe pernicious diſcourſes, " yielded up without delay, all that was demanded " of him." Agathias (42) charges him plainly enough with the ſame weakneſs. The Chriſtians, in order to clear Jovian take care to obſerve that Julian the Apoſtate was the chief cauſe of all this misfortune, ſince he had been ſo raſh and inconſiderate, as to order all the boats to be burnt, which might have carried proviſions; for this occaſioned that terrible ſcarcity, which forced Jovian to accept a ſhameful capitulation (43), Cujus vanis deditus oraculis erat (Julianus), quando fretus ſecuritate victoriæ naves quibus victus neceſſarius portabatur, incendit. Deinde fervidè inſtans immodicis auſibus & mox merito temeritatis occiſus, in locis hoſtilibus egenum reliquit exercitum, ut aliter inde non poſſet evadi, niſi contra illud auſpicium Dei Termini, de quo ſuperiore libro diximus, Romani imperii termini moverentur. Ceſſit enim Terminus Deus neceſſitati, qui non ceſſerat Jovi (44). i. e. " Julian was addicted " to their idle oracles, when depending upon a ſure " victory, he burnt the ſhips which carried the ne- " ceſſary proviſions; and proſecuting earneſtly his bold " undertaking, he met ſoon after with death as a re- " ward for his temerity, leaving his army in the ene- " mies territories, whence it could not retire other- " wiſe, than by removing the boundaries of the Ro- " man Empire, againſt the auſpices of the God Ter- " minus, which we have mentioned in the foregoing " book. For the God Terminus, who would not give " way to Jupiter, was found to ſubmit to neceſſity." You ſee that in theſe words St. Auguſtin lays all the blame on Julian, and ridicules alſo the Heathen Religion on the immobility of the God Terminus, who on this occaſion had been obliged to contradict his former conduct (45). The Heathen might have anſwered, that it was no wonder this Deity would not exert himſelf in Jovian's favour, who had revolted from the Gods. But this evaſion might eaſily be refuted, ſince after all it had been true, that the promiſe, which the Romans pretended the God Terminus had made them, proved deceitful, namely, that the boundaries of their empire would never move back. Now this is what St. Auguſtin deſigned to prove againſt the Heathens.

(39) Laberius, apud Macrobium Saturn. lib. 2. cap. 7. See alſo Horace's words quoted above, citation (11), of the article of the 3d Duke of GUISE.

(40) Amm. Marcell. lib. 25. cap. 7. pag. 433.

(41) Idem, ibid. pag. 434.

(42) Agathias, lib. 4.

(43) See Gregorius Nazianzenus's 2d Oration againſt Julian the Apoſtate. See alſo Socrates, lib. 3. cap. 22. pag. 196.

(44) Auguſt. de Civitate Dei, lib. 5. cap. 21. pag. m. 554. See alſo lib. 4. cap. 29.

(45) See Dionyſius Halicarn. lib. 3. cap. 92.

Let us obſerve by the by, how prudently ancient Rome acted. She deſigned to conquer: and to compaſs ſuch a deſign, there is nothing more neceſſary than never to yield up by a treaty of peace, what has been taken during the war, for take as many cities and provinces as you pleaſe, this will never enlarge your dominions, if by the articles of a treaty you are obliged to reſtore them. The Romans in order to ſucceed in their deſign of forming a very large empire, made it a point of honour and a matter of conſcience for their Generals to conquer new countries, and never to ſuffer thoſe conqueſts to be loſt, that had been once made. They did not grant a triumph to thoſe, who only recovered what the enemy had taken (46), and they gave out that it would be a ſin againſt the God Terminus, and againſt his ſacred Auſpices (47), to move the limits of the empire backwards. The Turks, deſigning to make great conqueſts, and to lay the foundations of a very large empire, have made a more direct and immediate uſe of religion, for they aſſerted, that it was inconſiſtent with religion to reſtore to its former poſſeſſors a city, in which there had been a Moſque; and therefore they make haſte to build one in all their new conqueſts. This they did, that they might be under an obligation to keep them, when they come to conclude a peace, and to make the Governors of cities defend themſelves from a principle of conſcience with a wonderful obſtinacy (48). But they have found lately by experience, how ineffectual this artful policy proves. The treaty of Carlowitz, made in the year 1698, has expoſed them to the ſame railleries, which St. Auguſtin levelled at the God Terminus, who gave place to neceſſity under the Emperor Jovian. The Sultan has been forced to yield to the Chriſtian Princes, ſeveral places, in which there had been Moſques. It was to no purpoſe that they repreſented to him, that he ſinned againſt the principles of his religion: he was obliged to ſtoop to this, and of two evils to chooſe the leaſt.

(46) See the remark [B] quotation (13).

(47) See St. Auguſt. de Civitate Dei, lib. 4. cap. 29.

(48) Sir Paul Ricaut, Preſent State of the Ottoman Empire, B. 2. chap. 3. pag. m. 320.

[E] He was a very tall man, zealous for the orthodox doctrine, but very much given to drinking and to lewdneſs.] Here follows his character drawn up by an Heathen Hiſtorian (49). Incedebat motu corporis gravi, vultu lætiſſimo, oculis cæſiis, vaſta proceritate & arcua, adeo ut diu nullum indumentum regium ad menſuram ejus aptum inveniretur. Et æmulari malebat Conſtantium, agens ſeria quædam aliquoties poſt meridiem: jocarique palàm cum proximis adſuetus. Chriſtianæ legis idem ſtudioſus, & nonnunquam honorificus, mediocriter eruditus, magiſque benevolus, & perpenſius, ut apparebat ex paucis quos promoverat, judices electurus: edax tamen, & vino Venerique indulgens: quæ vitia imperiali verecundia forſitan correxiſſet. i. e. " He had a grave " gait, but a chearful countenance: he had grey eyes; " he who assert that he wanted neither activity, nor prudence, nor learning, than those who charge him with great faint-heartedness, great ignorance, and great stupidity (c); for he acted with a great deal of care and vigilance, in order to prevent the tumults and compositions, which he apprehended the news of his election would raise in the western Provinces of the Empire (d). The measures he took for that purpose proved very effectual; though he could not hinder the true news concerning the bad condition of the east from out-running the false news which he had ordered to be dispersed every where, with a design to conceal the advantages which the Persians had gained [F]. His father who had quitted the service that he might lead a quiet life in his own house (e), had not time to rise to that dignity which was designed him. He died before Jovian had executed the resolution he had taken to make him his collegue in the Consulship (f). This dignity was conferred on a child (g), namely on Varronianus, the son of Jovian and of Charis, Lucilian's daughter (h). Jovian's reign was very short, for it did not last full eight months.

(49) Amm. Marcell. lib. 25. ſub fin. pag. m. 443.

(c) See the remark [B] towards the end.

(d) See Ammianus Marcellinus, lib. 25. cap. 8.

(e) Amm. Marcel. lib. 25. cap. 5.

(f) See Valesius, in Marcell. lib. 25. cap. ult.

(g) Amm. Marcell. ibid. cap. 10.

(h) Idem, ibid. cap. 8. pag. m. 436.

JOVIUS

" he was very strait, and so tall, that it was long be" fore they could find amongst the Imperial garments,
" one that was long enough for him. He chose to " imitate Constantius, applying himself to something
" of importance in the afternoon: he also used to be " sometimes merry with his near relations; he was
" zealous for the Christian Religion, and also some" times an ornament to it: he was not very learned,
" but good-natured, and would have chosen Judges
" with deliberation, as appeared by a few he had ap" pointed. But he was a great eater, and given to " drinking, and the pleasures of love. However,
" the Imperial dignity would perhaps have made
" him forsake those vices as being a disgrace to
" it." Zonaras, who was a Christian and a Monk, has copied the chief strokes in this picture in the character he gives us of this Emperor. Ὁ μὲν Ἰοβιανὸς, says he, εὐσεβὴς ἦν περὶ τὸ δόγμα καὶ ἀγαθοδοτελὴς. οἶνῳ δ' ἥττητο καὶ ἀφροδισίων. καὶ τῆν τοῦ σώματος ἀναδρομὴν εὐμήκης, καὶ γραμμάτων ἐκ ἄπειρος. i. e. " Jovian was a " religious man with regard to the Christian doctrine,
" and good-natured, but given to drinking and to
" love-pleasures: he was very tall, and unacquainted
" with learning." Here then we have an Emperor who was very religious as to the doctrines of religion, but a great drunkard, and a great whore-master. He gave too strong proofs of his zeal for the Gospel before he was raised to the Imperial throne: for in the first place, he shewed that he was ready to resign his place rather than forsake his religion (50), when Julian commanded all the Officers of the army to embrace the Heathen religion, or to lay down their employments. Secondly, he would not accept the empire, till upon his declaring that he was a Christian, and that he would not command over Heathens, the soldiers had also declared that they were Christians (51). He had then courage enough to quit, for the love of God, not only an inconsiderable employment, but even the most eminent dignity, that was then upon earth: he was capable to prefer his religion before the whole Roman empire. But that conscience which filled his heart with courage, and which was so tender and so scrupulous in that respect, had no power to make him forsake drinking and whoring. He could make a sacrifice to religion of every other thing but these two. What an odd thing is this! What a mixture of good and evil in the same heart. All ages furnish us with numberless instances of persons, who go into banishment for the sake of their Religion, who leave their estate, their employments, friends and relations, and who cannot forsake Bacchus and Venus. Do not imagine, that Jovian's Orthodoxy was imperfect; you may be sure that he knew perfectly well that drunkenness and impudicity are forbidden of God, and that the same Religion which condemned the heathen idolatry, also condemned the inclination to drinking and to sensual pleasures. Observe, that he was as great an eater as he was a drinker; it has even been asserted that he died of excessive eating. Multi examinatum opinantur nimia cruditate, inter cœnandum enim epulis indulserat (52). i. e. " Several persons are of opinion " that he died of an indigestion, having too much
" indulged his appetite at supper." There were other reasons given of his death (53); as for instance, the steam in a room too hot and too close, poison (54), &c. But the first reason was given even by the Christians. Ἐτελεύτησεν, ἢ ἀφυδίτησον, ὡς τινες λέγουσι, δυπνίσας, ἢ ὑπὸ τῆς ὀδμῆς τοῦ οἰκήματος. i. e. " He " died, either because he had eat too much at supper,
" as some say, or being smothered by the steam that
" was in his chamber (55). Have you taken notice of the Historian Marcellinus's conjecture? He observes that Jovian, out of regard for his Imperial dignity, would perhaps have forsaken his intemperance and his incontinency. This is speaking very sensibly: tho' if we consider things only in a general view, and according to some trials we have, the sovereign power does not seem to be a proper school of sobriety and continence with regard to those who are naturally fond of gross and sensual pleasure; it seems rather much more proper to encrease the evil than to suppress it, since the means of gratifying one's passions are both more numerous and more effectual. But if it be true that Jovian died of an excess in eating, and if what we read in Suidas be not a mere fable, Marcellinus's conjecture is very doubtful. Suidas relates (56), that Jovian, at his wife's instigation, caused a beautiful temple, which Hadrian had consecrated to Trajan, to be set on fire, together with the library, which Julian had lodged in that temple. He adds, that Jovian's concubines set fire to it themselves, and laughed heartily at it. Such an action is much like the debauchery of Alexander (57), and of the courtezan Thaïs.

(50) Socrat. lib. 3. cap. 22.

(51) Idem, ibid.

(52) Eutropius, lib. 10. sub fin. See also Amm. Marcell. lib. 25. pag. 443.

(53) Alii odore cubiculi, quod ex recenti textorio calcis, grave quiescentibus erat; quidam nimietate pruinarum, quas gravi frigore adoleri multas jusserat. Eutrop. lib. 10. See also Ammian. Marcellin. lib. 25. pag. 443.

(54) See Valesium, in Amm. Marcellin. ibid.

(55) Sozomen, Hist. Eccles. lib. 6. cap. 6.

(56) Suidas in Ἰοβιάνος.

(57) When he set the city of Persepolis on fire. See Quintus Curtius, lib. 5. cap. 7.

[F] He could not hinder the true news . . . from out-running the false news, which he had ordered to be dispersed every where, with a design to conceal the advantages which the Persians had gained.] It is one of the most useful and necessary artifices of politics, to impose upon the people by false accounts, when there are no good news to tell them (58). It is indeed a difficult task to stop the progress of bad news, when it is but too true; but one does all that one can. Jovian was sure to make use of this stratagem. Justum est autem ad implenda hæc perrecturis, extollere seriem gestorum in melius, & rumores quaquà irent verbis diffundere, concinentibus procinctum Parthicum exitu prospero terminatum. . . . (59). Hos tabellarios fama prægrediens, index tristiorum casuum velocissima, per provincias volitabat & gentes; maximoque omnium Nisibenos acerbo dolore perculsit, cùm urbem Sapori deditam comperissent (60). i. e. " They who were to perform these commands,
" and were going to set out, had orders to put the " best construction upon what was past, that lay in " their power, to disperse reports in all the places
" they passed through, to this purpose, that the " expedition against the Parthians had had good " success. But fame outrun the messengers, and with " the utmost dispatch spread the news of these unfor" tunate events through all the Provinces and amongst
" all Nations; but none were so much afflicted at
" these misfortunes, as the inhabitants of Nisibis,
" when they heard that their city was to be surrender-
" ed to Sapor." These words of Marcellinus, Fama index tristiorum casuum velocissima, are very remarkable; they hint to us, that fame never runs swifter than when it has some bad news to report. If it be so, it deserves still better the character that is given it.

(58) See at the end of this Dictionary, the Dissertation upon Libels, remark [B].

(59) Ammianus Marcellinus, lib. 25. cap. 8. pag. m. 436.

(60) Idem, ibid. pag. 437.

Fama, malum quo non aliud velocius ullum,
Mobilitate viget, viresque adquirit eundo (61).

(61) Virgil. Æn. lib. 4. ver. 174.

" Fame, the great ill, from small beginnings grows,
" Swift from the first; and every moment brings
" New vigour to her flights, new pinions to her
" wings." Dryden.

JOVIUS (PAUL) in Italian Giovio, was born at Como in Italy, and gained by his works a great reputation, and the Biſhopric of Nocera (a); but he paſſed for a mercenary writer, ſo that his Hiſtories are not much credited [A]. It is ſaid that he did not much labour to clear himſelf of that bad quality [B], and that he ingenuouſly confeſſed, that (a) Pope Clement VII promoted him to it.

[A] His hiſtories are not much credited.] James Gohorri made no ſcruple to aſſert, that the adventures of Amadis would appear as probable as Paul Jovius's hiſtories. Illud certe ad ſempiternam memoriam teſtatum reliquit Gorræus Pariſienſis, qui quas finxit (1) Amadiſi fabulas non minus veras ac probabiles quam Jovii ſcripta fore confidit (2). i. e. "Gohorri of Paris has indeed "made in his writings this declaration for an everlaſting memorial, that he was certain the ſtories of Amadis, which he invented, would not appear leſs true "and probable, than the writings of Jovius (α)." Thuanus did not make uſe of this hyperbolical expreſſion, but yet what he ſays is ſufficient to let us know how little that writer is eſteemed. Cum aliqui homo gratioſus ſe paſſim obnoxium prodat, eoque nomine ipſi in pleriſque rebus fides derogetur, quod ad gratiam & in odium ſcripſiſſe, & venalem calamum habuiſſe fere omnibus perſuaſum ſit (3). i. e. "Jovius, though otherwiſe an "agreeable writer, ſhews his partiality, ſo that the "greateſt part of what he relates is diſcredited, becauſe moſt people are perſuaded that he wrote to "favour ſome, and out of hatred againſt others, and "that he was a mercenary writer." Add to this a paſſage from Voſſius, who acquaints us that Paul Jovius had, in a manner, ſet up a bank, and promiſed an antient genealogy and immortal glory to every villain, that would give him a good ſum of money for his pains; and that he uſed to ſlander and aſperſe all thoſe that would not pay him for his falſities. Quam fluxæ etiam fidei patrum ævo fuit Paullus Jovius? quem conſtat in aula Henrici ſecundi quibuſque terræ filiis bene de ſe merentibus generis claritatem ac perpetuum nomen pollicitum: contraque maledice eos traduxiſſe, qui venali hiſtorico morem non gererent (4). i. e. "How little "does Paul Jovius, who lived in our Fathers time, "deſerve to be credited? For it is certain that he uſed "to promiſe he would find noble anceſtors and give an "everlaſting reputation, to every obſcure fellow at the "court of Henry II, that deſerved well of him; and "on the other hand, this mercenary hiſtorian aſperſed "and ſlandered all thoſe who would not ſtoop to pay "their court to him." We ſhall ſee in the following remark whence this is extracted. He offered to write in favour of Don Juan III, King of Portugal, and becauſe his offer was not accepted, he would not mention a victory, which the Portugueze had gained. If he had been well paid for writing the Hiſtory of Portugal, he would have been ſo far from omitting true victories, that he would have forged imaginary ones: his credit has therefore been very juſtly brought into queſtion. Here follows the ſtroke which the writer of Emanuel's Life levels at him. Victoria fuit præclara: quam tamen Paullus Jovius, cum de Sultani claſſe hac in Indiam contra Luſitanos delata narraret, ſilentio ſuppreſſit, iratus videlicet, quod cum Luſitanæ hiſtoriæ ſcribendæ munus Joanni, hujus nominis tertio, Luſitaniæ regi venale proponeret, rex optimus non illum muneribus Indicis ad res Luſitanorum virtute geſtas monimentis illuſtrandas invitavit (5). i. e. "It was a very "great victory: and yet Paul Jovius did not ſay a "word of it, when he mentions the fleet which the "Sultan ſent into the Indies againſt the Portugueſe: "For he was exaſperated againſt Don Juan III, King "of Portugal, becauſe having offered him to write his "hiſtory for a ſum of money, that good Prince would "not give him the treaſures of the Indies to tranſmit "to poſterity an account of the noble actions of the "Portugueſe." He met with the fate of all lyars, I mean, that he was hardly believed, even when he tells the truth. The misfortune is, that he reaped more benefit from his falſities, than the faithful Hiſtorians do from their love of the truth. This complaint of Bodinus is very well grounded. Non quod multa non ſint verè & eleganter ab eo ſcripta; ſed hunc mendacii fructum tulit, ut etiam cùm vera ſcribit, ſuſpectus habeatur. Hoc tamen acerbius eſt ac indignius, quod cum hiſtoriam venalem proſtituiſſet, uberiores tulit mendacii fructus, quàm quis alius vera ſcribendo (6). That man was not proper to write a good hiſtory; for when it was in his power to tell the truth, he had no mind to tell it, and when he deſigned to be ſincere, he could not; for he had no authentic memoirs but ſuch as related to what happened in Italy. This is what Bodinus aſſerts (7), and he ſupports his aſſertion by obſerving, that Jovius never travelled abroad, that he was not a witneſs of the events he relates, but lived conſtantly at the court of the Popes during thirty ſeven years. But, in my opinion, he could, notwithſtanding all this, have collected authentic memoirs concerning the other countries. And beſides, Jovius boaſts that he had ſeen ſieges, battels, &c. (8). See in the remark [F] another paſſage of Bodinus, and the judgment which Juſtus Lipſius paſſes on our author, whom he charges with an exceſſive partiality.

(1) Bodin does not expreſs himſelf well, for Gohorri was only the Tranſlator of Amadis. But ſee the critical remark (α).

(2) Bodinus in Methodo Hiſtoriarum, cap. 4. pag. m. 71.

(3) Thuan. lib. 11. ſub fin. pag. m. 235.

(4) Voſſius, de Art. Hiſt. cap. 9. pag. 48.

(5) Oſorius, de Rebus Emmanuelis, lib. 6. folio m. 179.

(6) Bodin. in Methodo Hiſtor. cap. 4. pag. 73.

§ (α) James Gohorry is as much an author as a tranſlator with regard to the Xth, XIth, and XIIIth book of Amadis, which are the only books he has tranſlated (*), for he has inſerted into them a great many things of his own invention. And this is what Bodinus hints at in the words above. REM. CRIT.]

[B] It is ſaid that he did not much labour to clear himſelf of that bad quality.] Bodinus aſſerts, that Paul Jovius being aſked why he related falſities, and concealed the true events, anſwered, that he did it for the ſake of his friends; that he knew very well, that they who were then living, would not give any credit to his hiſtories, but that he was alſo ſenſible, that in future ages men would not in the leaſt queſtion what he related. Cum autem rogaretur cur ſimularet falſa, vera diſſimularet, amicorum gratia id à ſe factum reſpondit: ac tametſi ſuperſtites intelligeret ſuis ſcriptis fidem derogaturos, attamen intelligebat infinitæ poſteritati credibilia fore quæ ſibi ſuiſque popularibus laudem eſſent allatura (9). Some perſons ſuppoſe that he made this anſwer: A hundred years hence there will not be one ſingle proof extant to convince me of impoſture; men will therefore be obliged to believe what I relate in my hiſtories. Anzi mi vien detto, che eſſendo biaſimato il Giovio della infedeltà della ſua hiſtoria, egli la confeſsò, ſoggiungendo però, che ſi riconfortava, ſapendo, che dopò lo ſpatio di centi anni, non vi ſarà più alcuna memoria in contrario; onde veranno i poſteri neceſſariamente à dare indubitata fede à ſuoi ſcritti (10). Some aſſert (11) that he boaſted he had a golden pen, and an iron pen; the former for thoſe Princes, who beſtowed favours upon him, and the latter againſt the Princes from whom he received none. It is alſo pretended, that he owned he had ſuppreſſed the three books in which he mentioned Anthony de Leva, becauſe that famous warrior gave him nothing, and he would not ſuffer that the name of an ungrateful man ſhould appear in his works. Quis neſcit quanta fuerit virtus Antonii Levæ Hiſpani ducis, ut ſolus dici, aut cum paucis Imperator appellari noſtri temporis poſſit: tamen nequiſſimus hiſtoricus (12), ſeu potius fabulator, quod pecunias non dediſſet, maluit totam corrumpere hiſtoriam, treſque libros qui illi debebantur intermittere, ne (ut ajebat) ingratum inſereret hiſtoriæ (13). i. e. "Who is "there but knows what a great man Anthony de Le"va was, who alone deſerved the title of a General "in our time, or at leaſt, could ſhare that glory with "but a few: and yet that wicked Hiſtorian, or ra"ther fabulous Writer, omitted him in his work, "becauſe that great man gave him no money: and "he choſe rather to falſify the whole Hiſtory, and "to omit three books, in which he was to give an "account of him; becauſe, ſaid he, he would not "mention an ungrateful man in his Hiſtory." It is pretended, that he promiſed an illuſtrious genealogy to any perſon of Henry II's Court, who would pay him well, and threatned to traduce all thoſe that oppoſed him in his trade. Paulus Jovius, me puero, in aula Henrici ſecundi obſcuriſſimo cuique claritatem generis mercede pollicebatur, maledicentia ulturus qui ejus nundinationi adverſaretur (14). For my part, I can hardly believe that Jovius ever confeſſed ſuch things, as I have here obſerved. I find that he boldly aſſerts, that he publiſhed his work during the life of moſt of the perſons concerned in it, becauſe he did not fear leſt they ſhould convince him of falſity, as they might eaſily do, had he not been a faithful Hiſtorian. Abſoluto tandem opere

(7) Cum rumoribus fidem habuerit, nec conciones, nec Epiſtolas, nec res geſtas, nec ulla publica monumenta viderit: ſic tamen ſcribit, quaſi rebus interfuiſſet, nec ullum dubitationi locum relinquit. Quæ igitur veriſſime ſcribere potuit, noluit; puta, res in Italia geſtas; quæ voluit, non potuit, ſcilicet externa. Idem, ibid.

(8) See the Dedication of his Hiſtory.

(*) See the Dedication of his Tranſlation of the 13th book.

(9) Bodinus, in Methodo Hiſtoriar. cap. 4. pag. 73.

(10) Stephano Guazzo, della civil Converſazione, lib. 2. pag. m. 242.

(11) Teiſſier, Addit. aux Eloges, tom. 1. pag. 67.

(12) Paulus Jovius.

(13) Cardanus in Apologia Neronis.

(14) Joſeph Scaliger, Epiſt. de Vetuſt. Gentis Scaligeræ. pag. 3. This is, no doubt, the author from whom Voſſius borrowed what he relates above, quotation (4).

that he commended or blamed according as men took care or neglected to court his favour. No man ever aſked for preſents with leſs reſerve than he did [C]. You will find in Moreri what Thuanus relates concerning this author's reſentment againſt the Great Conſtable Anne de Montmorenci. Brantome gives a more full account of it [D]. It is pretended that the reaſon why Paul Jovius complained that he had loſt ſome books of his Hiſtory at the ſacking of Rome, was only that the publiſhing of them was inconſiſtent with his own private intereſt. He was not much eſteemed with regard to his morals [E]; and he was charged with being very careleſs in ſaying his Breviary. His ſtile is bright enough, but not ſufficiently hiſtorical nor exact [F]. His partiality is not the only defect they opere id in publicum edere non dubitem, magno hercle incorruptæ veritatis argumento: quandoquidem plerique eorum, qui hæc bello paceque geſſerunt, adhuc vivant, ac idcirco gravi exiſtimationis meæ cum periculo mentientem refellere poſſint (15). i. e. "My work being now finiſhed, I do not ſcruple to publiſh it; which is a ſtrong proof that I relate the truth ſincerely. For moſt of thoſe, who have been concerned in theſe tranſactions both in peace and in war, are ſtill alive, and would eaſily refute me, if I had told falſities; ſo that I ſhould be in great danger of diſgracing myſelf, and loſing my reputation."

(15) Jovius, Præfat. Hiſtoriæ ad Coſmum Medicen.

[C] No man ever aſked for preſents with leſs reſerve than he did.] "His way of begging (16) calls to my mind that of Paul Jovius, who uſed to beg more openly and more baſely ſtill. I have read ſome of his letters, which are wonderful in that reſpect. In one of them he declares ſolemnly, that in caſe Cardinal de Lorraine does not take care to have his penſion paid him, he will ſay, that the Cardinal is no longer deſcended from Godfrey, who promoted a Pedant to the Archbiſhopric of Tyre. In others he aſks the Marquis of Peſcara for two horſes, and for that effect he deſires him to ſtrike the ground a little harder than Neptune did. In other letters he wiſhes that a certain Lady, who was his friend, would ſend him ſome ſweetmeats from Naples, becauſe he begins to be tired of new-laid eggs, &c (17)."

(16) That is to ſay, the begging of a man whom Balzac calls Jean Jaques. He means the perſon who made Peireſkius's Funeral Oration at Rome.

(17) Balzac. Lettre 9. to Chapelain, liv. 3. pag. m. 114.

[D] Thuanus relates . . . this author's reſentment againſt . . . . Anne de Montmorenci. Brantome gives a more full account of it] Though the paſſage from Brantome be pretty long, yet I ſhall tranſcribe it intire. "I have been told by a great man, ſays he, that he had read in the firſt Latin edition of Paulus Jovius (whether it be true or not I cannot tell) a paſſage, in which it is obſerved, that when the Grand Seignior Soliman turned his great favourite Ibrahim Baſhaw out of his favour, and put him to death, King Francis did at the ſame time turn his great favourite the Conſtable Anne de Montmorency out of his favour. But why, ſays Jovius, did he not alſo put him to death, as the other did Ibrahim or Hibraun Baſhaw? It was not, adds he, but that he had well deſerved it: and hereupon he mentions ſome impertinent ſtories, which it was not proper to relate, and which are falſe: but becauſe, continues he, this great King was good-natured and merciful, whereas the Grand-Seignior was a cruel tyrant. I do not know whether this be in the Latin edition, but that Gentleman told me ſo for certain. It is not in the French tranſlation; nor ought we to credit it in the leaſt, for if the ſaid Jovius aſſerted it, he did it as a paſſionate man, who was exaſperated againſt the Conſtable, who being again called to Court by King Henry, and ſettling the eſtabliſhment of the King's houſhold, which was part of his office, found that amongſt the penſions granted by the late King, there was one of five hundred crowns to the ſaid Paul Jovius, which he ſuppreſſed immediately, giving the King to underſtand that this money was ill beſtowed, ſince Jovius was more addicted to the Emperor's party than to the French, and was beſides a notorious lyar. Jovius therefore knowing that his penſion was ſuppreſſed, began to inveigh bitterly againſt the Conſtable, and to aſperſe him in the moſt outrageous manner. You ſee what it is to have to do with the venomous tongue and ſharp pen of a writer, who when he is exaſperated ſpares no body. Some ſay, that the Conſtable at the time he was out of favour had ſeen the ſtroke which that fellow had levelled againſt him, with a deſign to pleaſe the King, rather than for any other reaſon, ſuch writers being generally flatterers, becauſe they always get ſomething by it. And therefore when the Lord Conſtable came to King Henry's Court, he revenged himſelf on Jovius, and would have treated him more ſeverely ſtill had it been in his power; for a brave and generous man, as the Conſtable was, is deeply vexed, when he is thus ſlandered and traduced by a writer without any reaſon (18)." Some aſſert that Jovius was exaſperated againſt the Conſtable, becauſe he had not obtained from him ſomething, which he had aſked impudently. Quod equidem expertus eſt Annas Mommorantius Comes Stabuli Franciæ traductus à venali hiſtorico, non aliam ob rem quam quod neſcio quod impudenter petens repulſam tuliſſe (16). i. e. "This is what Anne de Montmorency Conſtable to Francis II found by experience, being traduced by a mercenary Hiſtorian for no other reaſon, but becauſe he had refuſed him I know not what, which he had impudently aſked." I ſhall obſerve by the by that Francis I had no reaſon to repent of the penſion, which he had granted to Paul Jovius; for he was repreſented by his penſioner under the character of a conqueror, rather than under that of a conquered Prince. And it is pretended that Charles V complained of this. Cum aliquando Cæſar noſter legeret victoriam quam de Gallis habuerat, dixit, profectò non meam, ſed Gallorum Regis victoriam hic ſcripſit, indicans, ex pecuniis acceptis à Rege quanta mendacia inſeruiſſet Hiſtoriæ (20). i. e. "Our Emperor reading once an account of the victory he had gained over the French, ſaid, this writer deſcribes indeed the victory of the French King, and mine; hinting thereby how many falſities he had inſerted in his Hiſtory, becauſe of the money he had received."

(18) Brantome, Eloge de François, in the 1ſt volume of his Memoires, pag. 228.

(19) Joſeph Scaliger, Epiſt. de Vetuſtate gentis Scaligeræ, pag. 3.

(20) Cardanus, in Apologia Neronis.

[E] He was not much eſteemed with regard to his morals.] Cardanus charges him with lewdneſs. Hic noſter hiſtoricus, ſays he (21), admirandus profectò magis aliis (22) qui tametſi ſenex, parum abfuit, quin pepererit (*). Sed & id teſtabilius quod cum eſſet etiam Antiſtes, gaudebat numerari (23) procos adoleſcentulos. i. e. "This Hiſtorian of ours was indeed more wonderful ſtill than the others; for though an old man, yet he was like to be brought to bed (ſee the margin *). But what is more ſtill, is, that though he were a Biſhop, yet he delighted to be reckoned amongſt the young men, that made love to the women." Cardan's marginal note contains a very ſtrange particular, namely, that Paul Jovius was an Hermaphrodite. Imperialis (24) confeſſes that this author was charged with leading a diſſolute life, and with great negligence in ſaying his prayers, and reciting his breviary.

(21) Idem, ibid.

(22) That is to ſay, than the Hiſtorians, whom Cardanus had juſt been mentioning, and whom he had charged with ſeveral vices.

(*) Quippe Hermaphroditus. i. e. "For he was an Hermaphrodite.

(23) Thus I read in my edition; I imagine that the word inter is omitted.

(24) In Muſæo Hiſtorico, pag. 7.

[F] His ſtile is bright enough, but not ſufficiently hiſtorical nor exact.] Scaliger ſaid of it what you will read in the following paſſage. Paulus Jovius mendaciſſimus & Guicciardino inferior, nimis affectato & luxuriante ſtylo, potius quam caſtigato utens (25). i. e. "Paul Jovius a great lyar, and inferior to Guicciardini, has an affected and pompous rather than an accurate ſtile." Roland des Marets ſpeaks of it with the utmoſt contempt, and even aſſerts that it abounds with barbariſms. Quantum ſentio, ſays he (26), non bonus eſt hiſtoriæ ſcriptor (Paulus Jovius) nec judicio ſatis valet: qui ſi vernaculè ſcripſiſſet, nullo in numero haberetur. Latinus enim ſermo quaſi fucus quidam labes illius multas contegit: qui prima ſpecie elegans videtur, nam belle ſonat, & quibuſdam imponit, mihi non item. Vix enim Latinus eſt, certè minime purus, totuſque idiotiſmi ſcatet; nihil fere proprie effert, ſed plerumque περιφραστικῶς loquitur, nec pene ulla vox eſt ſine epitheto. i. e. "Paul Jovius is not a good Hiſtorian, in my opinion, nor does he diſtinguiſh himſelf by his judgment;

(25) Scaligerana prima, pag. m. 95.

(26) Rolandus Mareſius, Epiſt. 41. lib. 1. pag. m. 218.

(b) See the remark [F].

they blame in his Hiſtory (b), which is the moſt elaborate of all his works [G]. However, it muſt be confeſſed that this writer had a great deal of wit, and that his books abound with a great many curious obſervations. He died December the 11th 1552 (c) at

(c) Raüſner, in Diario Hiſtor. pag. 185.

" ment; he would not have been eſteemed in the leaſt " had he written in the vulgar tongue. But the La- " tin language, like a veil, covered many of his " faults: his ſtile at the firſt ſight ſeems to be elegant, " for it ſounds well, ſo that it impoſes upon ſome " readers, but not upon me; and indeed it is hardly " Latin, and not at all exact; he ſeldom expreſſes any " thing in terms that are proper, but generally uſes " periphraſes; and there is ſcarce one word without an " epithet to it." We have here two ſkilful judges. Who then would not wonder to find Lipſius ſpeak ſo advantageouſly of our Paul Jovius's ſtile? Muſt we not infer from thence, that the moſt excellent critics differ in their taſte, even with regard to ſuch a ſubject on which they ſhould all paſs the ſame judgment. When men know the rules of eloquence, and thoſe of the art of writing Hiſtory, ought they not to agree in their commendation or cenſure of a writer's ſtile? But let us ſee what Lipſius obſerves concerning Paul Jovius (27). Paulus Jovius multorum judicia magis acerba quam libera experitur. Acriter valde in virum eunt. Ego de eo ſic cenſeo, ſtilo bonum gravemque eſſe & plane ad hiſtoriam: judicio ac fide ambiguum. Ubi affectus non diſtrahunt, rectum, ubi illi adſunt, obnoxium. Ad gratiam ſcilicet ſe dat & auram. Laudationum nec cauſam ſæpe habet nec modum. Genti ſuæ, Vaſtio, Mediceis nimis ex profeſſo addictus. His quidem ita ut Laurentium Medicen parricidii reum velut apud judices agat. Orationibus quoque aut frigidus interdum, aut ineptus. Laudandus tamen legenduſque ob multiplicem & variam rerum ſeriem, quas redegit compoſite & dilucide in unum hiſtoriæ corpus (28). i. e. " Several perſons " judge more ſeverely than freely of Paul Jovius; " and inveigh very bitterly againſt him. My opinion " of him is as follows. His ſtile is good and grave " and perfectly adapted to Hiſtory. His judgment " and impartiality are juſtly queſtioned: when no " paſſions ſway him he relates the truth; otherwiſe " he is ſuſpicious. For he ſuffers himſelf to be ſway'd " by partiality and favour. He praiſes often without " reaſon, and immoderately. He is too much devoted " to his own nation, to Vaſtius, and to the Houſe of " Medicis. And to the latter to ſuch a degree, that " he ſpeaks of Laurence de Medicis as though he was " pleading againſt him before the Judges. His ora- " tions are alſo ſometimes either dull or impertinent. " He deſerves however to be commended and read, " on account of the great number and variety of par- " ticulars, which he has collected into a body of " Hiſtory, in a proper order and in a clear light." Lipſius's obſervation concerning the dull and impertinent orations, which Paul Jovius has inſerted in his Hiſtory, calls to my mind what Bodinus ſays, who ridicules him for making the ſoldiers ſpeak like ſtudents of Rhetoric. Præſertim in concionibus, epiſtolis, fœderibus, decretis, quæ Jovius pro arbitratu fingit, in quo tamen decorum ita confudit, ut imperiti milites, ipſius Alciati ſui Laudatoris judicio, declamatores ſcholaſtici eſſe videantur (29). i. e. " Particularly in the orations, " letters, treaties and decrees, which Jovius invents af- " ter his own fancy, in which however he does ſo little " keep up to the characters of the perſons he mentions, " that, even in the opinion of Alciat his great admirer, " he makes the unlearned ſoldiers ſpeak like young " ſtudents of Rhetoric." I am perſuaded that the reader will not be diſpleaſed to meet here with Alciat's words, on which Bodinus grounded his aſſertion. Id à te præcipue deſiderabam, ut ad illud quod Græci πρέπον vocant, non abſurdè reſponderes. Sicuti in ea oratione animadvertebam, quæ à Marconio gregario milite, ad legiones jam planè conſternatas & ad ſeditionem ſpectantes habebantur, quum Solymano Pannoniæ finibus exedente, Carolus Cæſar Vienna profectus in Italiam rediret. In ea ſiquidem concione omnes artis nervos numeroſque ita expreſſiſti, ut ille Marconius nequaquam ab aratro Volaterrani agri ad ſigna vocatus, ſed ex ſchola Ciceronis & Hermogenis ad ſuggeſtum raptus eſſe videatur, quum paſſim exactæ eloquentiæ ſchemata interniteant, quæ peroranti turbam parêre coëgerint (30). i. e. " I wiſhed chiefly, that you had not acted abſurdly " againſt what the Greeks call πρέπον, decorum, or " keeping up the true character of perſons; as I obſerved " you had done in that oration, which a common ſol- " dier named Marconius made to the army, which was " already under a great conſternation and ready to re- " volt, when Soliman being paſſed the frontiers of " Pannonia (or Hungary) the Emperor Charles V went " from Vienna into Italy. For you have ſo well ex- " preſſed all the ſtrength and elegance of the art of " Rhetoric, that this Marconius does not ſeem to be " liſted into the army from the plough, and from the " fields of Volterra, but to be hurried from Tully's " and Hermogenes's lectures to the pulpit; ſo much " does his diſcourſe abound with eloquent ſtrokes, " which made the multitude follow his direction when " he had done ſpeaking."

(27) Lipſius, Not. ad 1 lib. Politic. cap. 9. pag. m. 218.

(28) La Popeliniere, Hiſt. des Hiſtoire, liv. 7. pag. 403. giving his opinion of Paul Jovius does only tranſlate this paſſage, without mentioning Lipſius. He did not even underſtand theſe words, Laudationum nec cauſam ſæpe habet, nec modum; which he tranſlates thus; Il obſerve ni les cauſes ni moyens en ſes louanges. i. e. " He obſerves " neither the " reaſons, nor " means in his " commendati- " ons."

(29) Bodin, in Methodo Hiſtor. pag. 72.

(30) Alciatus, Epiſt. ad Paulum Jovium, in limine Hiſtoriarum Jovii.

Obſerve that theſe words of Lipſius, Laurentium Medicen parricidii reum velut apud judices agat, have been thus tranſlated by Monſieur Teiſſier (31): He clears Laurence de Medicis of the crime of parricide, as though he were pleading his cauſe before his Judges. Paul Jovius does quite the contrary; he ſpeaks as the Counſellor of this Laurence's accuſer would have done (32). Monſieur Teiſſier imagined, no doubt, that the great Laurence de Medicis was meant here, who was a great patron of the men of letters in the fifteenth century, whereas Jovius means another Laurence, who aſſaſſinated Alexander de Medicis in the year 1537.

(31) Addit. aux Eloges tirez de Monſ. de Thou, tom. 1. pag. 65.

(32) See book the 38th of Paul Jovius's Hiſtory.

[G] His Hiſtory . . . . . is the moſt elaborate of all his works.] It is the firſt which he compoſed, and the laſt which he publiſhed. He formed the plan of it in the year 1515, and continued all his life-time to perform it. He choſe for the ſubject of his work the events that happened in his own time over all the world, beginning with the year 1494, which was that in which the French conquered the Kingdom of Naples under Charles VIII. This Hiſtory contains XLV books, and extends to the year 1544; but there is a conſiderable gap from the XIXth book to the XXIVth inclu- ſive (33). Theſe ſix books, which extended from the death of Pope Leo X, to the taking of Rome in the year 1527, contain only a ſhort ſummary of the events. He loſt, at the ſacking of Rome, what he had already compoſed relating to that part of his Hiſtory (34), and he would not compoſe it over again, nor compleat what was wanting in them. He had two reaſons not to do it: the firſt was, that he would have drawn upon him ſome people's indignation in a terrible manner; the other was, that he would not employ his pen upon a ſubject, which was ſo diſhonourable to Italy. Peritos medicos imitatus, carcinomata deſperatæ curationis, quæ ſi attrectes, & acri medicamine laceſſas, in immenſum furere, & peſtifera edacique ſerpigine mortem afferre ſolent, naturæ relinquenda, neque his ullo pacto manum admovendam judicavi. Quamobrem exiſtimationi ſalutique meæ conſulens, diræ tempeſtatis materiam, tamquam abominabilis impiique operis, minimè attingendam arbitratus ſum, quando hæc adverſæ fortunæ accepta vulnera, inſaniæque noſtræ detrimenta, non modo non prodenda poſteris, ſed pro virili occultanda eſſe videantur: Ea ſiquidem, quæ Italicum nomen dedecorent, neque memoria recoli ſine dolore, neque ſine uberrimis lachrymis ſcribi, nec ſine flagitio pudoreque poſteris enarrari queunt (35). i. e. " I have done like ſkillful Phyſicians: as for thoſe deſ- " perate cancers, which if you pretend to touch them, " and to apply ſharp remedies to them, rage more, " and ſpreading their venom farther and farther, oc- " caſion a certain death, I thought it proper to leave " them to nature, without offering to apply a healing " hand to them. Taking care therefore of my own " reputation and ſecurity, I judged that I muſt not " treat of the hiſtory of thoſe dreadful times, which was " an abominable and impious work; ſince the misfor- " tunes we underwent, and the wrong we ſuffered " by our own folly were not only improper to be tranſ- " mitted to poſterity, but were even to be kept ſecret " as much as it was poſſible; I mean thoſe events, " which are a diſgrace to Italy, which cannot be re- " membred without grief, nor written without a flood " of tears, nor related without ſhame nor without " crime."

(33) Obſerve, that there is alſo a gap, from the 4th book to the 10th inclusive. See his Adver- tiſement at the end of his fourth book.

(34) Fatali illa ſub Clemente VII urbis æternæ clade nonnulli libri in ſchedis tantum deſcripti illi deperiere, haud ſine ſuo dolore maximo. Baſilius Joannes Arnoldus, Epiſt. Dedicatoria Operum Jovii.

(35) Jovius, Præfat. II Tom. Hiſtoriarum.

at Florence, to which City he retired, being very much diſſatisfied with the Court of Rome, becauſe he had not been able to obtain the Biſhopric of Como [H]. He had a brother named BENEDICTUS JOVIUS, who wrote ſome books [I]. There was one PAUL JOVIUS, who in the Council of Trent voted in a very remarkable manner upon the queſtion concerning reſidence [K].

Let

(36) In the remark [B].

" crime." We have obſerved above (26) that this gap in Jovius's Hiſtory has been found fault with very much to his diſhonour. It is remarkable, that though he had urged theſe two arguments as a very good apology, yet in the very next page he promiſed the public, that he would ſoon publiſh that part of his Hiſtory which was wanting. Quod ſi mihi quanquam pedibus capto, atque adeo graviter ſeneſcenti, Deus magnus fatalis horæ ſpatium extendat, perpetua procul dubio lucubratione enitar, ut totum id quod in clade urbis ereptum, vel à me poſtea contumaci quadam indignatione prætermiſſum fuit, non diu à bonis mortalibus deſideretur (37). " i. e. Though I be lame, and grow very old, " yet if Almighty God ſuffer me to live any " longer, I ſhall certainly labour, by my continual " ſtudy, that what I loſt at the ſacking of Rome, or " what I afterwards omitted, through an obſtinate in- " dignation, be not long wanted by the honeſt part of " mankind." He tells us beſides, that he has ſupplied this gap by the particular lives he has publiſhed. The Preface from which I have extracted theſe particulars was written at Piſa May 1, 1552 : It is the Dedicatory Epiſtle of the ſecond volume of his Hiſtory. The author died in December following, and had not the ſatisfaction to ſee the third volume of his work, which is the laſt, come from the preſs. He had it printed at Florence. Let us obſerve, that the author who tells us that this is the firſt book which Jovius compoſed, has been wretchedly miſtaken in his calculations. He aſſerts, that Jovius firſt began this Hiſtory in the year 1515, being then about thirty years old, that he died whilſt he was ſtill ingaged in it, at the age of threeſcore and fifteen, and that he met with a very unſettled fortune during the thirty ſeven years he ſpent in compoſing that work. Cum enim anno à nato CHRISTO qui numerabatur M. D. XV. ætatis autem ſuæ circa trigeſimum, ea quæ poſt annum M. CD. XC. IV. per totum orbem terrarum geſta eſſent, atque ſe vivo gererentur, animo complexus fuiſſet, illud Hiſtoriæ opus omnium ſuorum primum exorſus fuit, licet omnium poſtremum illud ediderit, eique quinque fermè annis ſeptuagenario major immortuus eſt. Triginta itaque illis ac ſeptem annis quibus hiſtoriam concinnavit, varia & ipſe fortuna (uti fieri ſolet) jactatus JOVIUS (38). i. e. " In the " year 1515, when he was about thirty, he formed " the deſign to write a hiſtory of all that happened in " the whole world from the year 1494, and in his " own time ; this is the firſt work he ever begun, " though it be the laſt he publiſhed, and he died when " he was near threeſcore and fifteen, being ſtill em- " ployed in this hiſtory. He met with an inconſtant " fortune (as is uſual) during the thirty ſeven years he " ſpent upon that hiſtory." We may obſerve three blunders in this account. I. A man who applies himſelf to a work from his thirtieth year to his ſeventy fourth year, applies himſelf forty four years to it, and not thirty ſeven only. II. Since Paul Jovius died in the year 1552, he did not live above threeſcore and fourteen years, if it be true that he was but about thirty in the year 1515 : at that rate, he would have lived but about threeſcore and ſeven years. III. It is obſerved in Jovius's Epitaph (39) that he lived 69 years ; 7 months, and 22 days : it is not true therefore that he lived near threeſcore and fifteen years ; and to aſſert that he was about thirty in the year 1515, is ſpeaking without any accuracy.

(37) Jovius, Præfat. tom. 2. Hiſtoriarum, ſub finem.

(38) Baſil. Joh. Heroldus, Epiſt. Dedic. Operum Jovii.

(39) Apud Paulum Freherum, Theatr. p. 1454, & apud Pope Blount, Cenſ. Author. pag. 449. where inſtead of 22 days we read 22 ; Thuanus ſays 22.

I ſhall obſerve occaſionally, that the book De Piſcibus Romanis (Of Roman Fiſhes) is the firſt book which Paul Jovius publiſhed (40). He dedicated it to Cardinal Lewis of Bourbon. The dedication is dated from the Vatican March the 29th 1524. He had then a deſign, which he did not perform ; it was to publiſh very ſoon the firſt Decad of his Hiſtory. Exibit in publicum propediem hujuſmodi laborioſiſſimi operis prima decas, non ſine aliqua ſpe immortalitatis (41). i. e. " The firſt Decad of this laborious work will " ſoon be publiſhed, not without ſome hope of an " immortal reputation."

(40) Herold, Epiſt. Dedic. Operum Jovii, which acquaints us with the chronological order in which this author's works were publiſhed.

(41) Jovius, Epiſt. Dedic. Libri de Piſcibus.

Alcyonius commends this Decad in a work, which was publiſhed in the year 1522. But it does not follow from thence that it had already been printed. He might have ſeen it in manuſcript. Here follows what he ſays of it. Quam etiam ſcribendi laudem feliciſſimè conſecutus eſt Paulus Jovius tuus, in ea Decade, qua res omnes complexus eſt, quæ toto terrarum orbe geſtæ ſunt ; poſtquàm Carolus VIII Rex Galliæ, cum maximis copiis tranſgreſſus Alpeis, tranquillum Italiæ ſtatum perturbavit, & prima funeſtiſſimorum in Italia bellorum jecit ſemina. Hiſtoria enim hujus clariſſimi ſcriptoris, omnes elegantiæ flores, omnia eloquentiæ lumina habet, & mira orationis claritate ſplendeſcit, (uſque eò omnia ornatè narrantur,) & regiones aut pugnæ admirabiliter deſcribuntur, & conciones hortationeſque prudenter, & graviſſimè interponuntur. Denique illius auctor, varietate, evagationibus, amplificationibus, digreſſionibus non minus præſtantis Hiſtorici, quam eximii Oratoris laude, ab omnibus decorari debet (42). i. e. " Which glory of " writing your friend Paul Jovius has alſo moſt hap- " pily acquired in that Decad, in which he gives us " an account of all that paſſed in the world, ſince " Charles VIII King of France had paſſed the Alps " with a numerous army, diſturbing the peace of " Italy, and ſowing the firſt ſeeds of thoſe moſt fatal " wars. For the Hiſtory of this moſt eminent writer " abounds with all the flowers of Rhetoric, and with " all the ornaments of eloquence, and is written in a " moſt clear and perſpicuous ſtile (ſo elegantly is every " thing there related) : the countries and battles are " admirably well deſcribed, and the whole is wiſely " and gravely interſperſed with orations and exhorta- " tions. Laſtly, the author deſerves juſtly the repu- " tation both of an eminent Hiſtorian and of a diſ- " tinguiſhed orator, for the variety, applications, and " digreſſions with which he has adorned his work."

(42) Petrus Alcyonius, in Medice Legato Poſteriore, pag. 103. edit. Genev. 1624.

[H] He had not been able to obtain the Biſhopric of Como.] This appears from a letter which Andrew Alciat wrote to him (43). It is dated from Pavia October the 7th 1549, and is an anſwer to a letter, which Paul Jovius had written to him, to acquaint him with his diſcontent, and with his reſolution to leave Rome, and to retire to Florence. Scribis te gravi injuria permotum, Urbe (quod nunquam fieri poſſe putaram) propediem exceſſurum, ne diutius acceptæ contumeliæ deformis teſtis in ea aula ſpecteris, in qua per multos annos (uti mihi videtur) cum aureæ mediocritatis bonis planè beatus, tum ſtudiorum tuorum authoritate clarus hactenus fuiſti. Mirum profectò videri poteſt, quòd tibi doctrinæ ac ætatis honore majora promerito, in petitione Pontificatus patriæ tuæ Paulus Pontifex quendam prætulerit. At quem hominem ? qui Comi neque natus, neque unquam viſus ſit, & qui (ſicut à multis audio) ex arcanis cubiculi ſordibus in lucem repente ſit productus. i. e. " You wrote to me, that being highly " incenſed at the injury you have received, you de- " ſign very ſoon to leave the city (which I ſhould " never have thought) that you may no longer ap- " pear a ſad witneſs of the affront that has been of- " fered you, at that Court, where (in my opinion) " you lived many years happy in a golden media- " crity, and with reputation on account of your learn- " ing. It may indeed appear ſtrange, that though " you deſerved a greater reward by your age, and " by your reputation of learning, yet the Pope ſhould " have preferred another to you, in the Biſhopric of " your own native place. And what man ! A man " who was neither born at Como, nor ever ſeen there ; " and (as I have been told by ſeveral perſons) who " was from the low drudgery of a private ſervant all " on a ſudden raiſed to an high poſt." This is well enough ! it is making pretty free with the holy Father's character. He is not treated much better in the following words. Quis in hoc Pontificem ἀμαυσότερον non judicet : non enim hoſtis bonarum literarum & plane ferreus eſſe non poteſt, qui te graviſſimarum rerum ſcriptorem intempeſtive contempſerit. . . . Dices te indigne deceptum ab inveterati aſtus ſene Principe, qui blandis promiſſis

(43) It is prefixed to Paul Jovius's Hiſtory.

Let us not forget to obſerve, that our Paul Jovius was blamed for giving too much credit to Aſtrological Predictions, and to other ſuperſtitions of the ſame kind [L]. His Elogies promiſſis vota tua honeſte concepta inique fefellerit. i. e. " Who will not judge from this that the Pope is an " enemy to the Muſes? For whoever does deſpiſe " you, who are a moſt grave Hiſtorian, muſt be an " enemy to all kind of literature, and abſolutely rude " and ignorant. . . You will ſay that you have been " unworthily impoſed upon by an old Prince of an " inveterate malice, who wickedly diſappointed the " hopes which you had conceived from his fair pro- " miſes." I am much miſtaken if Thuanus has not committed a blunder here; for he pretends that it was Clement VII, who refuſed to promote Paul Jovius to the Biſhopric of Como, and who for that reaſon was ill treated in the petitioner's works. Cum ad Novocomenſem Epiſcopatum omnibus votis anhelaret, ſuæque erga Mediceam familiam, in cujus laudes profuſus fuerat, obſervantiæ deberi id meritorum fiducia putaret, tamen ab eo obtinere non potuit: quod in cauſa fuiſſe plerique credunt, cur Clementem in Hiſtoriis avaritiæ & tenacitatis inſimulet (44). i. e. " He heartily wiſhed to ob- " tain the Biſhopric of Como, which he truſted he had " deſerved by his great regard and reſpect for the houſe " of Medices, on whoſe praiſes he had expatiated in " his works; but he could not obtain it; which moſt " people think was the reaſon why he charged Pope " Clement in his Hiſtory with avarice and niggard- " lineſs."

(44) Thuan. lib. 11. pag. 235.

[I] He had a Brother named BENEDICTUS JOVIUS, who wrote ſome books.] He was Paul's eldeſt brother, and was to him inſtead of a father: it was he that educated him; that inſtructed him, and encouraged him to become an author: for having ſhewed him two of his works, namely, the Hiſtory of Como, and a treatiſe of the actions and manners of the Swiſs nation, he raiſed in him a deſire to write a general Hiſtory. He led a very quiet and retired life in his native place, which he never left but to go to Milan to hear the lectures of a Greek Profeſſor. He had learned that tongue by himſelf, but he wanted to learn how to pronounce it, and this was the reaſon of his journey to Milan. He lived to be threeſcore and thirteen years old, and always continued ſtrong and ſound both in body and mind. He intended to preſent the public with about an hundred letters, which abounded with learned obſervations: his ſons were to take care to publiſh them, with ſome other pieces of his compoſing, with ſome tranſlations from Greek authors, and with ſome Poems. Sed hæc & Græcæ traductionis non ignobilia opera cum lepidis poëmatibus eruditorum liberorum diligentia publicabit (45). i. e. " But this, with his Greek tranſlations, " which are no inconſiderable work, and with his " agreeable Poems, will be publiſhed by the care of " his children." Their uncle expected this from their diligence (46); but I do not think there was any thing of this author's works printed, but his Latin Poems.

(45) P. Jovius, Elog. cap. 106.

(46) Taken from Paul Jovius, Elog. cap. 106.

We ought not to imagine, that PAULUS JOVIUS, Junior, of whom there are ſeveral Latin verſes in the Elogies written by our Paul Jovius, was the ſon of Benedictus Jovius. He was nephew to JULIUS JOVIUS, who was made Coadjutor to his uncle (47) in the Biſhopric of Nocera, Auguſt 21, 1551, and who enjoyed that Biſhopric after him. Paulus Jovius, junior, a good Poet, was made Coadjutor to his uncle Julius Jovius in the ſame Biſhopric, November 29, 1560, and was alſo his ſucceſſor in it. He kept that ſee twenty five years, and died in the year 1585 (48). I have obſerved in another place (49), that Paul Jovius was no Poet.

(47) That is to ſay to our Paul Jovius.

(48) Taken from Ughelli, Ital. Sacra, tom. 7. pag. 746.

[K] One PAUL JOVIUS, who voted in a very remarkable manner upon the queſtion concerning Reſidence.] A friend of mine, who had heard me relate all that I remembered concerning our Paul Jovius, repreſented to me, that I omitted the moſt remarkable particulars. He was, ſaid that friend to me, one of the Fathers of the Council of Trent; and as he was not in the leaſt acquained with Divinity, for he had been a Phyſician before he was promoted to be a Biſhop, and never diſcontinued the ſtudy of the Belles Lettres, I imagine that he did not diſtinguiſh himſelf much in that aſſembly, when he was to give his opinion upon ſome point of doctrine. It concerned him very much not to ſuffer the Council to determine that Biſhops are obliged to reſidence by the law of God. This doctrine, which was ſtrongly aſſerted by ſome of the members, could by no means be reliſhed by him; this was

(49) In the article HADRIAN VI, remark [D].

Aux Evêques de Cour prêcher la réſidence.

" To preach up reſidence to Court Prelates."

He refuted that doctrine by arguments borrowed from the common practice: he ſhewed that there was no leſs diſſoluteneſs in thoſe Dioceſſes in which the Biſhop reſided, than in the others (50), and named particularly the city of Rome. But it is better to hear him ſpeak himſelf. My friend referred me immediately to page 470 of Father Paul's Hiſtory of the Council of Trent, where I met with the following words. " If " theſe diſorders were really occaſioned by the abſence " of the Prelates, there would appear a leſs corrup- " tion of morals in thoſe churches where the Biſhops " have reſided in our time. The Popes have conſtant- " ly kept at Rome theſe hundred years paſt, and have " taken the utmoſt care to have the people inſtructed, " and yet we do not find, that this city is better regu- " lated for all that. The capital cities of kingdoms, " in which the Biſhops never failed to reſide, are " much more corrupted than thoſe ſmall and incon- " ſiderable towns, which have not ſeen their Biſhops " for a whole century. And none of the antient pre- " lates who are here, and have conſtantly reſided on " their Biſhoprics, (for there are ſome of them) will " be able to ſhew us that their dioceſs are better re- " gulated than thoſe of their neighbours, who never " reſided. They who aſſert that ſuch churches are " flocks without ſhepherds, ſhould conſider, that the " Curates have the cure of ſouls as well as the Biſhops, " and yet the latter only are mentioned, as though " there could be no faithful Chriſtians, where there " are no Biſhops. There are in the mountains ſome " nations, who never ſaw a Biſhop in their life, and " who yet may be a pattern to epiſcopal cities. We " ought to commend and imitate (*) the zeal and con- " duct of the Fathers of this Council under Paul, " who have decreed penalties againſt the prelates, to " oblige them to reſide; and who have began to re- " move thoſe obſtacles, which keep them from their " churches. And inſtead of flattering ourſelves with " the vain hopes, that their reſidence will occaſion a " reformation of manners in the church, we ought ra- " ther to fear, that whereas we now labour to find out " ſome means to oblige them to reſidence, the incon- " veniencies (51), that may attend it, will oblige our " ſucceſſors to provide againſt them by obliging the " prelates to be abſent from their Biſhoprics." I had not much trouble to undeceive my friend: I had only to make him obſerve, that the Hiſtorian of the Council ſpeaks of a Paul Jovius, who was Biſhop of Nocera in the year 1562, ten years after the death of Paul Jovius, who is the ſubject of this article.

(50) Compare this with what Brantome obſerves in the paſſage which I have quoted in the remark [N] of the article FRANCIS I, and add to it the following words from Mezerai's Abrege Chronologique, tom. 6. pag. 434. The Parliament commanded the Biſhops to go and reſide in their Biſhoprics to do their duty there, otherwiſe they ſhould be forced to it, by the ſeizing of all their furniture and equipage. But conſidering the life moſt of them led, their abſence gave perhaps leſs offence to their flocks, than their reſidence would have done.

(*) I ſuppoſe it ſhould be, but not to imitate, otherwiſe Jovius ſeems to contradict himſelf. ADD. REM.

(51) He pretends that if it were decreed, that reſidence is Jure Divino, the Biſhops would no longer be ſubject to the Popes, nor the Prieſts to the Biſhops.

[K] He was blamed for giving too much credit to aſtrological predictions, and to other ſuperſtitions of the ſame kind.] Martin del Rio having related ſome facts, which ſeem to prove that future events may be foretold by the means of aſtrology and chiromancy, adds, Unus iſta omnia narrat Jovius (*), nec uſquequaque indubitatæ fidii hiſtoricus, nec ſatis à ſuperſtitioſis & gentilium ne dicam opinionibus, ſaltem locutionibus, alienus (54). i. e. " Jovius alone relates all this; but he " is not an Hiſtorian on whom we may abſolutely de- " pend; he was a little too much addicted to ſuperſti- " tions, and to the expreſſions, not to ſay, the opinions " of the Heathens." He had already cenſured him for ſhewing too much regard for an obſervation of Amniomancy. Thus they call the art of divining by obſerving the membrane amnios, which was the fœtus in the mother's womb. Sed & Jovius, ne quid ſuperſtitionis omitteret, nimis hujuſmodi vanitatibus pro Epiſcopo deditus, in Ferdinandi Davali nativitate (lib. 1. Piſcarii) hujuſmodi pelle involutum ex utero prodiiſſe conſideravit (55). i. e. " But Jovius alſo, that he might " not omit any ſuperſtition, and who for a Biſhop " was

(52) Fra-Paolo, Hiſt. du Concile de Trente, liv. 6 pag. 470. under the year 1562, of Amelot's Tranſlation. See pag. 499. of the Italian edition in 4to.

(53) It is Paulus Jovius. I have mentioned him above in the remark [I] towards the end.

(*) In Elogiis.

(54) Mart. del Rio, Diſquiſ. Magic. lib. 4. cap. 3. Quæſt. 5. pag. m. 278.

(55) Idem, ibid. cap. 2. Quæſt. 7. Sect. 1. pag. 237.

Elogies of Illuſtrious Men are judged to be too bitter and too ſlanderous (d), but they are ſometimes alſo too flattering. See the judgment which a learned Critic (e) has paſſed upon them in his Dialogue De bene inſtituendis Græcæ Linguæ Studiis; i. e. "Concerning "the beſt Method of ſtudying the Greek Tongue." George Sabinus complains that Paul Jovius does not do juſtice in his Hiſtories to the Proteſtants of Germany, and particularly to Sigiſmund II Elector of Brandenburg. Conſult the Letter which George Sabinus wrote to John Sleidan September the 1ſt 1556 (f).

(d) Balzac, Diſſertat. à Dom. André de Saint Denys, at the end of his Socrate Chrétien, pag. m. 174.

(e) Henry Stephen. See Crenium, Animadv. Part 5. pag. 163.

(f) It is the laſt of them that have been printed with George Sabinus's Poems, pag. 419, & ſeq. edit. Lipſ. 1606. See alſo Crenii, Animad. Part 6. pag. 209.

It is neceſſary to make ſome additions to what I have obſerved concerning the firſt work he publiſhed [M].

" was a little too much addicted to theſe idle things, " obſerved at the nativity of Ferdinand Daval, that " he was born wrapt up in ſuch a membrane." This membrane breaks generally when the child comes into the world; but ſometimes it keeps whole, and in ſuch a caſe it is taken for a ſign of good luck; whence comes this proverb, il eſt né coiffé (56), properly, he is born with a coif on; that is, he is born to good fortune. Paul Jovius obſerved this circumſtance very accurately in the nativity of the Marqueſs of Peſcara, and you have ſeen juſt now, that he was blamed for it by Martin del Rio. Let us give here another proof of his credulity with regard to aſtrology. Having obſerved that there happened revolutions in religion over all the world in the beginning of the ſixteenth century, he aſcribes it to the influence of the ſtars. In the account of this particular I ſhall tranſcribe Florimond de Remond's words, becauſe they acquaint us with a little artifice of a tranſlator. " Very near the ſame time, " ſays Jovius, when Iſhmael became Emperor of Perſia, and changed the religion of that country, mixing " it with a new Mahometan ſuperſtition, there aroſe in " Germany under Luther's direction that monſtrous " hereſy, which was calculated to overthrow the Catholic Religion, and all that antiquity ever received, " as the people had already done in Perſia, being obſtinate and mad with their new follies and ſuperſtitions. So that I am eaſily perſuaded, adds he, that " by a ſecret power from heaven, and by a malignant " influence of the ſtars, all religions began at the " ſame time to be altered through the whole world, " ſince not only the Mahometans, but alſo the Chriſtians, and even the Idolatrous nations the moſt remote from us, which worſhip Idols, in the Eaſt-Indies, and the countries newly diſcovered towards " the Weſt, have admitted new religions and opinions. " This is what we meet with in Jovius's Latin words. " But in the French tranſlation of it you may obſerve " the ſincerity and honeſty of the tranſlator, who " omits all that Jovius relates of theſe changes of religions, and of the monſtrous Lutheran hereſy, which " ſprung up in Saxony. With what impartiality and " honeſty do they handle the holy and ſacred writings, " ſince they are not aſhamed thus to mutilate Hiſtories which have but lately been publiſhed, in order " to conceal from the reader a ſhort paſſage, which " relates to Luther, the father of all the hereſies that " have diſturbed the Chriſtian Church (57)? Florimond de Remond quotes the thirteenth book of Paul Jovius's Hiſtory, where I met with the following paſſage, in folio 239 verſo of the edition printed at Straſburg in the year 1556. Nec multo poſt exarſit in Germania authore Luthero dira hæreſis, quæ populis, ut in Perſide acciderat, ad inſaniam verſis, Chriſtiani dogmatis placita, & veteres ſacrorum ritus vehementiſſimè conturbavit. Ita ut facilè crediderim ab occulta cœli poteſtate, malignoque ſyderum concurſu proveniſſe, ut religiones toto terrarum orbe enatis factionibus, uno tempore ſcinderentur, quando non Mahometani modo Chriſtianique, ſed & remotiſſimæ gentes idololatræ, aut ſydera aut portenta pro Diis venerantes, cum in India quæ ad Orientem vergit, tum in novo orbe ad Occiduam plagam reperto, novas ſacrorum opiniones induerint. I know no other French tranſlator of Paul Jovius's General Hiſtory, than Denis Sauvage. Was he a Proteſtant? And was he guilty of the artifice with which Florimond de Remond charges the reformed?

(56) See Mr. Drelincourt's Treatiſe, an account of which is given in the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, for July 1685, Art. 11. pag. 815.

(57) Florimond de Remond, Hiſt. de l'Hereſie, liv. 1. chap. 4. pag. m. 24.

[M] It is neceſſary to make ſome additions to what I have obſerved concerning the firſt work he publiſhed.] I have obſerved (58) 1. That it was the treatiſe De Piſcibus Romanis. 2. That he dated the dedication of it, March the 26th 1524. In the 3d place, that he deſigned then to publiſh very ſoon the firſt Decad of his Hiſtory. With regard to the firſt of theſe three particulars I have quoted Heroldus, who ſays expreſly, illud (ſcriptum) quod OMNIUM PRIMUM edidit de piſcibus Romanis. The ſecond particular wants no proof; every one may ſee it at the bottom of the dedication; and I have proved the third by a paſſage from Paul Jovius. I have ſtarted an objection from Alcyonius's aſſerting in a work printed in the year 1522, that he had ſeen this Hiſtorian's firſt Decad, and I have anſwered that objection as well as I could: but here follows another difficulty. Calcagnini tells us in a letter written from Rome under the Pontificate of Leo X (59) that Paul Jovius's firſt Decad was printed. Paulus Jovius... tam luculènter, tam doctè, tam eleganter ſcribit noſtri temporis hiſtoriam, cujus decem libros JAM EDIDIT, ut pudeat me de homine tam diſerto tam indiſertè ſcribere (60). i. e. " Paul Jovius writes the hiſtory of " our time, of which he has already publiſhed ten " books, with ſo much clearneſs, learning, and elo- " quence, that I am aſhamed to ſpeak with ſo little " elegance of ſo elegant a writer." If Calcagnini means here that this firſt Decad was printed, and if it be really ſo, Paul Jovius is guilty himſelf of the miſtake which one would charge me with. It would be to no purpoſe to urge, that the date of the dedication of the treatiſe De Piſcibus Romanis has been altered by the Printers; for it is certain, after all, that this dedication was compoſed under Clement VII, who was choſen Pope in the month of November 1523.

(58) See the remark [G] towards the end.

(59) He died in the year 1521.

(60) Calcagninus Epiſt. ad Jacobum Zieglerum, in Collectione Colomeſiana Clarorum Virorum Epiſtol. pag. 234.

JOURS (in Engliſh, the Day). This article, which was printed in our propoſals, will be inſerted at the end of this Dictionary, in the form of a Diſſertation. See HIPPOMANES.

IPRES, or YPRES, an Epiſcopal City in the County of Flanders, borrows its name from a River which runs through it: it was at firſt but a Caſtle. The Normans having ruined it, Count Baudouin or Baldwin, the ſecond of that name, had it repaired in the year 880; Count Arnoul added fortifications to it in the year 901; and Count Baudouin III made ſeveral additions to it ſome years after. New additions were made to it from time to time, ſo that in the year 1473 the City of Ipres contained already within its walls 1173 Verges of Land (or Perches) of fourteen geometrical feet each. It was beſieged by thoſe of Ghent and by the Engliſh in the year 1373, during nine weeks. Its ſtone walls were built in the year 1388 by Philip the Bold's conſent (a). The woolen manufactures and the art of dying them were in a thriving condition there at the end of the twelfth Century, as it appears from William Brito's teſtimony (b). The French took that city in the year 1648, and loſt it again the next year. They took it a ſecond time in the year 1658, and reſtored it to the Spaniard by the treaty of the Pyrenees. They took it a third time in the year 1678, and it was yielded to them by the Spaniards in the

(a) Taken from Valerius Andreas, in Topographia Belgica, pag. 43, 44.

(b) Ipra coloran-dis gens prudentiſſima lanis. i. e. " The people of " Ipres are very " skilful in dy- " ing of wool." Wil. Brito, Philippid. lib. 2.

the treaty of peace, concluded at Nimeguen that ſame year. The Controverſies about Janſeniſm have made the name of the City of Ipres very famous; for Janſenius is ſeldom mentioned, but it is obſerved at the ſame time that he was Biſhop of that City. Thus the connection there is between that City and the Controverſies of the Janſeniſts has been known to all the world; and to this is owing, undoubtedly, the jeſt of a pretended letter which was handed about as though it had been written by the King of France to Monſieur Arnauld [A], dated from the camp before Ipres in the year 1679. There were a great many tranſcripts taken from this letter, and I remember, that ſeveral perſons, who were reckoned to have a very good taſte, found it ingenious; it is aſcribed to Monſieur Roze private Secretary to the King. I do not believe it was ever printed; which determines me to publiſh it here.

[A] A pretended letter ... of the King of France to Monſieur Arnauld.] Here it follows according to the copy I took of it, when it was handed about as a piece quite new.

" Lettre du Roi à Mr. Arnaud ſur le Siege d'Ypre.

" Monſieur Arnaud. Nous allons commencer un " ſiege où vous pourriez nous ſervir beaucoup de vôtre " credit. J'ay 5 Propoſitions à faire à Meſſieurs d'Ypre: " la 1, que je ſuis venu en Flandre pour faire du bien " à tout le monde. La 2, que le commandement que " je leur fais de rendre la ville n'eſt pas impoſſible. " La 3, qu'il eſt en leur pouvoir de meriter ou de de- " meriter mes bonnes graces. La 4, que j'ay des ſe- " cours avec moi plus que ſuffiſans pour les fair obéïr " à mes ordres: & la 5, que quelque neceſſitez qu'ils ſoi- " ent de ſe rendre, ils ne le feront qu'avec une entiere li- " berté. Il s'agit donc, Monſieur, de leur faire ſig- " ner ces 5 Propoſitions, qui renferment tout le Traitté " de la Grace que j'ay à leur faire. Je ne crois pas " qu'ils puiſſent éluder mes ordres par la diſtinction " du Droict & du Faict; car pour le Droict, il y a ſi " long-tems que je ſuis en poſſeſſion de prendre des " villes, que le tems ſeul pourroit me ſervir de preſcrip- " tion dans le Pays-Bas, quand je n'aurois pas d'ail- " leurs tant de droits inconteſtables. Ils ne peuvent donc " ſe retrancher que ſur le Fait, & c'eſt dequoy je les " veux convaincre par une trentaine de canons auſ- " quels de les defie de répondre efficacement, car ils " percent toutes les difficultez à jour. Par là vous ju- " gerez bien que je ne ſerai pas ſi long-tems à leur " faire ſigner mes 5 Propoſitions, que vous avez été à " ſigner celles du Pape. C'eſt pour quoy je vous donne " ordre de convoquer le ban & l'arriereban des Janſe- " niſtes, & de partir inceſſamment de Paris pour venir " à leur tête chanter le Te Deum, ſur le tombeau de " Janſenius, pour rendre graces à Dieu de l'heureux " ſuccez de mes 5 Propoſitions. Vous pourrez appor- " ter pour le feu de joye une centaine d'exemplaires " du Miroir de la Piété Chrétienne, pour jetter ces " bons Flamans dans un ſaint deſeſpoir d'être à jamais " à l'Eſpagne. Enſuite vous paſſerez en Angleterre pour " y diriger la Chambre baſſe qui a de grandes indiſpo- " ſitions d'eſprit & de cœur à la paix. Au reſte, je " goûte fort vôtre politique & plus encore vôtre ar- " gent, dont vous vous ſervez ſi avantageuſement " pour perſuader aux gens tout ce que vous voulez. " Avec cela je ſuis ſeur que nous aurons la paix avec " l'Angleterre & l'Eſpagne, avant que vous l'ayez " avec les Peres Jeſuites. Au Camp devant Ypre le " 17 Mars 1678."

The King of France's Letter to Monſieur Arnaud upon the Siege of Ipres.

" Monſ. Arnaud. We are going to begin a ſiege " in which you can be very ſerviceable to us by your " credit. I have five propoſitions to offer to the Gen- " tlemen at Ipres. The firſt, that I came into Flan- " ders with a deſign to do good to all the world. " The ſecond, that the command I give them " to ſurrender their city to me is not impoſſible. The " third, that it is in their power to deſerve or not de- " ſerve my favour. The fourth, that I have brought " ſuch aſſiſtance with me, as is more than ſufficient " to make them obey my orders. The fifth, that " though they be never ſo much neceſſitated to ſurren- " der, yet they will not do it but with a perfect liberty. " Now, Sir, the queſtion is, to make them ſubſcribe " to theſe five propoſitions, which contain the whole " treatiſe of the Grace (α) which they have to expect " from me. I do not think that they can evade my " commands by a diſtinction de jure and de facto: of " what is right, and of what is fact. For as to right, " it is ſo long ſince I have aſſumed to me a power of " taking cities, that time alone might be to me a " title by preſcription in the Low-Countries, if I had " not ſo many indiſputable claims beſides. They can " therefore confine themſelves only to the matter of " fact; but here I will convince them by about thirty " Guns, to which I defy them to make an effectual " anſwer, for they pierce all oppoſitions through and " through. You may eaſily judge by this, that I ſhall " not ſpend ſo much time to make them ſign my five " propoſitions, as you have ſpent, before you would " ſign thoſe of the Pope. I command you therefore " to ſummon together the Ban and Arrierban of the " Janſeniſts, and to ſet out immediately from Paris, to " come and ſing Te Deum at their head on Janſe- " nius's tomb, to give thanks to God for the good " ſucceſs of my five propoſitions. You may take with " you an hundred copies of the Mirror of the Chriſtian " Piety, to make a bonfire in order to ſtrike theſe ho- " neſt Flemings with a ſacred deſpair ever to be again " under the government of the Spaniards. Hence you " may go into England to direct the Members of the " Houſe of Commons, who both in their minds and in " their hearts are very ill-diſpoſed towards a peace. " To conclude, I muſt tell you that I like your po- " licy very well, and more ſtill your money, of which " you know ſo well how to make a good uſe, to per- " ſuade people whatever you pleaſe. By this means " I am certain that we ſhall have peace with England " and Spain, before you have it with the Jeſuits. " From our camp before Ypres, March the 17th, " 1678."

§ (α) The whole Treatiſe of the Grace.] The French words are Tout le Traité de la Grace, in which words there is a double alluſion, which it is impoſſible to preſerve in the tranſlation; it is grounded on the double ſenſe of the word Traité, which ſignifies both a Treatiſe and a Treaty; and of the word Grace, which ſignifies both the Grace of God, which aſſiſts us in the work of our ſalvation, and Favour or Mercy. ADD. REM.]

IRNERIUS (a), a German Civilian, lived in the twelfth Century. He is reckoned to be the firſt that revived the ſtudy of the Roman Law, which had been interrupted ſince the invaſion of the Barbarians. He had great credit in Italy with Princeſs Mathildis, and having perſuaded the Emperor to order that the Code and the Digeſts ſhould be read in the ſchools, he was the firſt Profeſſor that explained them in Italy. His method was to reconcile the determinations of the Civilians, and thoſe Laws, which ſeemed to be contrary to each other. He died about the year 1190 [A], and was buried at (a) He is alſo called Wernerus, or Guarnerius.

[A] He died about the year 1190.] I can hardly believe that he lived till that time; for in the firſt place Lotharius II lived at moſt only till the year 1138; which is an evident proof that Forſterus was not very accurate; at Bologna, where he had been Profeſſor (b). Some authors go farther ſtill; for they ſay, that Lotharius, repealing all other Laws, ordered that the Laws of Juſtinian ſhould have again their ancient authority at the bar [B]. The famous Calixtus, Divinity Profeſſor at Helmſtad, has maintained (c) that this is falſe, and has been followed herein by the learned Conringius, his collegue (d). But Bertold Nihuſius wrote in favour of the contrary opinion (e), and ſilenced Doctor Calixtus. It is certain that tradition is not for the latter, and that it gives Irnerius the title of firſt reſtorer of the Roman Law [C]. It is he alſo, ſay they, who perſuaded the Emperor Lotharius, whoſe Chancellor he was, to bring into the Univerſity the cuſtom of making Doctors, and who drew up the form of it; whence it came that even at that time Bulgarus, Hugolinus, Martinus, Pileus, and ſome others, who began to explain the Roman Laws, were promoted to the Doctor's degree in a ſolemn manner. Theſe noble ceremonies had their firſt beginning at Bologna; whence they ſpread into the other Univerſities, and paſſed from the Faculty of the Law to that of Divinity. It is pretended that the Univerſity of Paris having admitted theſe ceremonies, uſed them for the firſt time with regard to Peter Lombard, whom that Univerſity promoted to the degree of Doctor of Divinity (f).

(b) Ex Forſtero, Hiſt. Juris Civil. Roman. lib. 3. cap. 6.

(c) In Libello de Morali Theologia.

(d) Conſult the Preface of his Origo Juris Germanici, printed in the year 1643.

(e) See the work which he intitled Irnerius, and publiſhed in the year 1642.

(f) Mathias, Theatr. Hiſt. in Vita Lotharii II.

accurate; for he has aſſerted that this reſtoration of the Roman laws happened about the year 1150 (1). Why ſhould we think that he was more accurate in his calculation with regard to the death of Irnerius? Secondly, theſe tranſactions are placed under the year 1133 (2). Now who could believe that an affair ſo important as that was, had been reſolved upon, and put in execution by the advice of a young man. It is an hundred times more probable, that Irnerius's advice was followed, only becauſe he had already gained great credit by his learning and prudence; ſo that we cannot ſuppoſe him much leſs than forty years old at leaſt. If then he had lived till the year 1190, he would have been near an hundred years old, in which caſe Forſterus had been inexcuſable for taking no notice of ſuch an unuſual old age. Add to this that generally ſpeaking a Chancellor to an Emperor muſt be pretty old. But we ſhould make an unanſwerable objection againſt Forſterus, if we ſhould aſſert that the Princeſs Mathildis, with whom he ſuppoſes that Irnerius had ſo great credit, was that Counteſs, who was ſo liberal towards the Popes, and who died in the year 1115, or that Queen of Italy, who died in the year 1101 (3) and who was married with Conrad, the ſon of the Emperor Henry IV. She was Roger King of Sicily's daughter.

(1) Incidit hæc revocatio & reſtitutio Juris Civilis in annum Chriſti 1150. Forſterus, Hiſt. Juris Civil. lib. 3. cap. 6.

(2) See the following remark.

(3) Mathias, Theatr. Hiſt. pag. m. 902.

During the controverſy, which aroſe between Doctor Calixtus, and Bertoldus Nihuſius, upon this queſtion, whether our Irnerius revived the ſtudy of the Law by the Counteſs Mathildis's authority, or by that of the Emperor Lotharius II, the Univerſity of Bologna being conſulted, made ſuch an anſwer as agreed with Nihuſius's aſſertion. We find in that anſwer, that it is a conſtant tradition that Irnerius began to teach the Law at Bologna in the year 1128. This tradition is ſupported by an inſcription on Irnerius's picture, which is to be ſeen amongſt ſeveral others in the college of Bologna. Irnerius omnium primus leges commentatus eſt MCXXVIII. i. e. "Irnerius is the firſt that began to "explain the Law in the year 1128." Such is the inſcription. Nicholas Alidoſio, in the preface to his book intitled Li Dottori Bologneſi di legge Canonica e Civile, i. e. "The Doctors of the Civil and Canon Law "at Bologna," aſſerts, that whilſt this Doctor was teaching Philoſophy at Bologna, the Emperor Lotharius commanded him to teach the Law, and that he began to read lectures upon it about the year 1128. However there are reaſons to think that he did it of his own accord for ſome years, and that he was not impowered to it by the Emperor's command till the year 1137 (4). It is certain that he died before the year 1150, and not in the year 1190: for it is well known (5) that James de Porta Ravegnana was Irnerius's ſucceſſor in the chair of Profeſſor of Law, and that he taught the Law publicly at Bologna as ſoon as the year 1150. See the author I quote (6).

(4) See Nihuſius, in Irnerio, pag. 13.

(5) Otto Murena in Chronologia Laudenſi, apud Baronium, ad ann. 1158.

[B] It is ſaid that Lotharius ... ordered that the laws of Juſtinian ſhould have again their ancient authority at the bar.] Here follows what Monſieur Heiſs obſerves in his Hiſtory of the Empire, under the year 1133. This ſolemnity being ended the Emperor returned into Germany, where by the advice of a certain man named Werner Urſperg, otherwiſe Irnerius (7), who was very learned in the ancient laws of Juſtinian, he ordered that juſtice ſhould be adminiſtered for the future in the empire according to the Digeſts and the Code, which had been five or ſix years out of uſe. So that theſe laws were introduced into Italy, and Germany, and afterwards into France and Spain, which nations were governed before by ſuch laws as were peculiar to them, and by their own particular cuſtom. Antea homines Jure incerto utebantur, Jure nempe Romanorum corrupto, Jure item Longobardico & Lege Salica (8). i. e. "Men had "but uncertain laws before, namely thoſe of the "Romans, but corrupted thoſe of the Lombards, and "the Salic Law." Calviſius, without mentioning our Werner, obſerves under the year 1137, that Lotharius found the Roman Laws in Apulia, that he gave them to the people of Piſa, and ordered that they ſhould be explained, and that all the Courts of Judicature in the empire ſhould judge according to thoſe laws. He adds that this book was afterwards lodged in the library of Florence. Another Hiſtorian (9) applies this to the time when that Emperor marched againſt Roger King of Sicily, about the year 1335, and obſerves that the manuſcript of the Roman laws wanting an interpreter, Irnerius was ordered to explain them.

(6) Nihuſius in Irnerio, where he has inſerted the whole anſwer of the Univerſity of Bologna.

(7) In the edition printed in Holland they have put Irnevis.

(8) Chriſt. Mathiæ, Theatr. Hiſt. pag. 921.

(9) Chriſt. Mathias, ibid. pag. 920. He quotes Chytræus in Chronol. pag. 309.

[C] Tradition ... gives Irnerius the title of the Firſt Reſtorer of the Roman Law.] An author whom I have already quoted, ſpeaks thus (10). Irnerius primus legibus gloſſas appoſuit, & ſuo exemplo cæteris illuminandi juris exemplum dedit; unde LUCERNA JURIS dictus fuit: & inſtaurator legum Romanorum cognominatus, i. e. "Irnerius is the firſt that wrote explanatory notes on "the Laws, and by his example encouraged others "to clear up the Laws; whence he was called, the "LIGHT OF THE LAW, and ſurnamed the Reſtorer "of the Roman Laws." An infinite number of writers make the ſame obſervation.

(10) Mathias, in Theat. Hiſt. pag. 920.

ISAACITES (a). Rabbi Solomon Jarchi is mentioned under that name in Bartolocci's Rabbinical Library. I may therefore place under this name what is wanting in the article JARCHI. Let us then obſerve here, that the ſurname of Raſci, which was given to this Rabbi is compoſed of the initial letters of his names (b). Father Bartolocci acquaints me with this (c). He adds that this Rabbi was born at Lunir, a City in the province of Aquitain [A], but that ſome perſons make him a native of Troies in France, and

(a) Conſtantin. L'Empereur, Not. in Itinerar. Benjam. Tutel. pag. 149. ſays, that Solomon Jarchi was called Iſacides, becauſe he was the ſon of Rabbi Iſaac.

(b) R. Salomon Iſaacites.

(c) Bartol. Bibliotb. Rabbinica, Part 4. pag. 378.

[A] Bartolocci ſays that he was born at Lunir, a city in the province of Aquitain.] Bartolocci adds that it is a city where ſeveral Jews lived, as St. Gregory witneſſes it in the twenty firſt Letter of the third book (1). All this abounds with errors: for in the 1ſt place, he ſhould have ſaid Lunel, and not Lunir. 2. Lunel is not ſituated in the province of Aquitain. 3. Pope Gregory ſpeaks neither of Lunel nor of Lunir, but of and place his birth under the year 1105. Isaacites began to travel when he was thirty years of age. He visited Italy, and afterwards Greece, Jerusalem, and all Palestine; he went afterwards into Egypt where he saw Rabbi Maimonides. He travelled into Persia, Tartary, Muscovy, and into other northern countries, and afterwards into Germany, whence he returned into his own country. He took a wife and had three daughters by her, who were married to very learned Rabbies, authors of a great many books. Some of his Commentaries on the holy Scriptures have been translated into Latin, by Christians [B]. It is said that he understood Physic, Astrology, and several other Languages very well, and that he died at Troies at the age of threescore and fifteen years. His corps were carried into Bohemia, and buried at Prague in the year 1180 (d).

(1) Bartol. Bibliotb. Rabbin. Part 4. pag. 378.

(d) Taken from Bartolocci, Biblioth. Rabbin. Part 4. pag. 378, & seq.

of Luna, an episcopal city in Italy: see a blunder of Hornbeeck criticized upon above (2). Here follows another mistake. Ibidem (that is to say in the Catena Cabalæ) Rabbi Joseph Iachijà Auctor dicit quod natus sit anno ab Orbe condito . . . . 4865. Chr. 1105. in Urbe Trevis, seu Trecis (α) in Gallia in provincia Narbonensi, vel in Linguadoca (3). i. e. "Rabbi Jachija asserts, "that he (Isaacites) was born A. M. 4865, and 1105 "of Christ, in the city of Trevis, or Trecis (Troies) "in France, in the province called Narbonensis (an-"tiently) otherwise Languedoc." This is pretending that Troies is in Languedoc, than which nothing is more ridiculous. Observe that according to some Rabbies the death of our Isaacites happened in the year 1105 (4); but we have seen just now, that according to other authors this was the year of his birth. The Jewish writers never distinguished themselves by any accuracy in Chronology; and it is a strange thing that they should have been so careless in observing the time when their most famous Doctors lived. Benjamin of Tudelle (5), who died in the year 1173, commends very much the Jews of Lunel, and names some of their learned men, and amongst others Rabbi Solomon. Some persons pretend (6) that he means our Solomon Jarchi. And if you object to them, that this Solomon died in the year 1105, they answer, that Benjamin of Tudelle does not assert, that all the Doctors he mentions in the account he gives us of what he did at Lunel, were living then. I do not like this answer. It seems to me, that Benjamin of Tudelle speaks of a Solomon, who was still living: it must therefore be supposed, either that we are mistaken, when we place Solomon Jarchi's death under the year 1105, or that the Solomon mentioned by Benjamin of Tudelle is not our Isaacites. I am apt to believe, that Constantin L'Empereur was in the wrong to imagine, that this Benjamin mentioned Solomon Jarchi. If he had mentioned so famous a Doctor as this was, he would have commended him very much, whereas he does not at all commend the Solomon he speaks of. If you have a mind to see an instance of the bad Chronology of the Jewish writers, do but consider, that in the same book (7), in which it is asserted that Rabbi Solomon Isaacites was born in the year 1105, it is also asserted, that Maimonides was born in Spain in the year 1135, and that these two Rabbies met in Egypt, whither Solomon went when he was about thirty two years old (8). Observe that some persons (9) maintain that Rabbi Solomon Isaacites is not sirnamed Jarchi in the books of the Jews, and that it would be a difficult matter to find out the time when this false name was given him, for what reason, and on what occasion, and that the Jews ridicule the Christian authors, who call him by that name.

§ (α) Trecæ, in Bartolocci's Latin words, do not signify Troies in Champagne, but Treys in Provence (β). It is true that the former is named Trecæ in Gregorius Turonensis; but Thuanus, who calls the latter Trecæ, always calls the inhabitants of Troies in Champagne Tricosses. REM. CRIT.]

§ (β) But this would still be a mistake, since Isaacites was born at Troyes in Champagne, and not at Treis in Provence. However I am apt to think, that Bartolocci imagined Troies was in Languedoc: he does not mention Provence; for the general expression of Provincia Narbonense, which contained Dauphiné, Provence and Languedoc, is by him explained of Languedoc only. ADD. REM.]

[B] Some of his Commentaries have been translated into Latin by Christians.] His Commentaries on Joel, and Solomon's Song, have been translated into Latin by Genebrard. He published his translation of the Commentary on Joel at Paris in the year 1563, and that of the Commentary on Solomon's Song in the year 1570. Arnaud de Pontac has translated the Commentaries on Obediah, Jonah and Zephaniah into Latin (10). Henry Aquinus published the Commentary on Esther with Notes at Paris in the year 1522 (11).

(2) In the remark [A] of the article JARCHI.

(3) Bartolocci, Biblioth. Rabbin. Part 4. pag. 378.

(4) See above, quotation (1) of the article JARCHI.

(5) Benjamin. Tutel. Itiner. pag. m. 6.

(6) Const. L'Empereur, Notis in Itinerar. Benjam. Tutel. pag. 149.

(7) Catena Cabalæ. See Bartolocci, Biblioth. Rabbin. Part 4. pag. 378.

(8) See Bartolocci, ibid.

(9) Andreas Acoluthus, in Tractatu de Aquis amaris maledictionem inferentibus, pag. 3.

(10) Printed at Paris in the year 1560, in 4to.

(11) Taken from Bartolocci, Bibliothec. Rabbin. Part 4. pag. 380, 381.

ISLEBIANS. This is the name that is given to those who followed the opinions of a Saxon Divine named John Agricola, a native of Islebe, and a disciple and countryman of Martin Luther. I have given a large account of this JOHN AGRICOLA (a). He taught for some time a very false doctrine concerning the use of the ancient Law. He had misunderstood St. Paul's controversies with the Jews, and the opposition which this great Apostle and Preacher of Grace makes so often between the Law of Works, and the Law of Faith. Luther opposed Agricola's errors so vigorously, that he obliged him to retract them. It is an easy matter to understand why this man's followers were called Antinomians. Their opinions have not been fairly represented by their adversaries, nor ought we to question but there are a great many exaggerations in what Prateolus has said of them [A]. But that is nothing if compared with Father Garasse's silly

(a) See his article under the letter A.

[A] There are a great many exaggerations in what Prateolus has said of them.] He has not consulted the original, he has only transcribed Staphylus, Hosius, and Lindanus. Here follows the substance of what he borrowed from Staphylus (1): according to John Agricola the law of God is absolutely useless, it is not necessary neither before nor after our justification; under the gospel men are not obliged to do good works. What he took from Lindanus is much more harsh still; namely, that according to Agricola men may be righteous even against their own conscience; that an adulterer, a usurer, a fornicator, or any other great sinner shall be saved, if he does but believe. Antinomi à Joanne Islebio Lutheri cive ac discipulo exorti. Hi dogma sequuntur legibus divinis contrarium, (ait Querela Lutheri) legem operum rejicientes, finguntque homines contra conscientiam justos esse. Ajunt enim, teste Luthero lib. de Conciliis; Si es adulter, scortator, usurarius, avarus, aut aliis pollutus peccatis, si tantum credis, salvus es. Hactenus Lindanus (2). i. e. "The Antinomians sprung "up from Islebius, a fellow-citizen and disciple of "Luther. They maintain a doctrine contrary to the "laws of God (says Luther in his complaint) for they "reject the law of works, and imagine that men may "be righteous against their own conscience: for they "say, according to Luther in his book about Coun-"cils, be you an adulterer, a fornicator, an usurer, a "covetous man, or given to any other wicked habit, "if you have but faith, you are safe." I cannot imagine that this is giving a faithful account of Agricola's opinions.

(1) Prateolus, in Elencho Hæreticorum, under the word Antinomi. pag. m. 41. He observes that Staphylus extracts this from Agricola's Notes on St. John's Gospel, and from Luther's Antinomian Disputations.

(2) Prateolus, ibid.

3

filly jests in his account of the pretended heresies of the Islebians [B].

[B] Father Garasse's filly jests in his account of the pretended Heresies of the Islebians.] It is an advantage for the readers that we should lay before them notorious instances of the impudence with which some persons dare to asperse their neighbours; and therefore the length of the following passage will not prevent me from transcribing it at large. "The Islebians or Antimonians, who are otherwise called Nomomachi, "because they oppose the law of Moses, saying in "their articles of belief, that it is a constraint upon "our souls, are the followers of a certain ploughman, "named John Islebius, who coming from behind his "plough, Triduo se Theologum professus est, set up for a "Divine in three days time, as Melanchthon speaks, "writing against him. The chief fancies of these "upstarts are accurately set down in the book intitled "De Libertate Christianâ, (Of Christian Liberty) "written by Dr. Paul Crellius, one of the most con"siderable assertors of that cursed sect. I shall men"tion but three of their tenets, but these the most noto"rious, which I shall transcribe word for word from "their articles of belief. The first is, that the whole "Gospel, and all the Old Testament, if they be not "preached by word of mouth, sunt veteres calcei in "angulo derelicti, are like an old pair of shoes, which "are left in a corner, when they are worn out: but when "the Gospel is preached, then there is, as it were, a "new pair of shoes made, of which it is said in Solo"mon's Song; Quàm pulchri sunt gressus tui in calcea"mentis tuis, filia principis. i. e. "How beautiful are "thy feet with shoes, O Princes daughter (*)!" and "in the CVIIth (†) Psalm, In Idumæam extendam "calceamentum meum: that is to say, according to "Beza's translation:

(*) Solomon's Song, chap. vii. ver. 1.

(†) Or 108 according to the Hebrew.

"Contre Edom peuple glorieux
"Je jetteray mes souliers vieux,

"i. e. [according to Sternhold's translation,]

"My shoe on Edom will I throw.

"So that according to their saying, the Preachers are "Coblers, the Holy Scriptures are old Shoes, the "Pulpit is a Cobler's Stall, the time of Lent and Ad"vent is the fair for old Shoes.

"The second proposition of the Antimonians is more "horrid still, and I am very sorry that I cannot find "words proper to express the whole indignation of my "heart. That proposition is thus laid down by Dr. "Crellius. Qui quærit salutem in veteri lege, quærit "PEDICULUM IN SCABIE, whoever looks for sal"vation in the law of Moses, looks for a LOUSE in "a scab. That is to say, that the salvation of "our souls is like lice, and that God is like a scab. "There are no words that can express my astonish"ment . . . . (3).

(3) Garasse, Doctrine Curieuse, lib. 5. Sect. 16. pag. 557.

"The third maxim of the Nomomachi (or fighters "against the law) is quoted by Dr. Crellius in these "words. Moses ad corvos abeat cum lege suâ, nam si "non resipuit, est damnatus ad omnes Diabolos. i. e. "Let Moses go to the gallows with his Law, for if he "did not repent, he is damned with all the Devils in "hell. For my part I lodge an appeal against this "sentence of the Antinomians, as having Moses's "Letter of Attorney for it; and I find that the blind"ness of these Nomomachi is much greater than that "of the Manichees was: for when they sent Moses a "packing, they pretended to have some honourable "reasons for it, as St. Augustin tells us in his XVth "book against Faustus: and being asked, why they "rejected the Old Testament, and the whole Law of "Moses, they answered in plausible words, and in "an elaborate stile, that for their part, they obeyed "Jesus Christ's command, who forbad his Apostles "to put new wine into old casks, and that their church "was like a young Lady, who would not receive any "love-letters from her old lovers, who endeavoured to "debauch her by fair promises: that is to say, that "their church does not receive nor acknowledge the "Old Testament, which is an old wine that is turn"ed, an old piece of parchment all torn and useless; "an old discarded lover; and then they add, boast"ing and insulting our church, Vos quidem pergite "agere ut cœpistis, rudem pannum veteri vestimento com"mittite, novum vinum veternosis utribus credite, duo"bus maritis nulli placituri servite, Christianam fidem "Hippocentaurum facite, nec equum perfectum nec ho"minem: nobis soli Christo servire permittite. i. e. As "for you, go on as you have begun; put a piece of new "cloth to an old garment, put new wine into old casks, "serve two husbands to please neither; make a centaur "of the Christian religion, neither a perfect horse nor a "perfect man; but suffer us to obey Christ alone. Would "not such a cunning boldness, such enchanting words "make us believe, that these people are perfect saints? "But after all it appears that the Manichees are but "poor beggars; but how ragged soever they may "have been, they had not so many lice as the Anti"nomians (4)."

(4) Ibid. pag. 559.

ITALICA, a city of Spain, was thus called after Scipio Africanus had given it the form of a City (a). It became very considerable; Trajan and Hadrian were born there (b). It continued a pretty while (c) in the condition of those cities, which were called Municipia; the inhabitants desired afterwards to pass to the condition of those cities that were stiled Colonies. Hadrian wondered that they should desire such an alteration (d); for in his opinion the privileges of a municipium were more valuable than those of a Colony. There is nothing to be seen at present of Italica but its ruins (e). Some authors pretend that it was situated near Seville, in a place which is now called Sevilla la Veja (f). I have observed above (g), that I do not think it possible to prove, that there ever was in Italy a city called Italica; I have not altered my opinion, though I know one may make a plausible objection against it [A].

(a) Appian, in Ibericis, pag. m. 464.

(b) Idem, ibid.

(c) Aulus Gellius, lib. 16. cap. 13.

(d) Idem, ibid.

(e) See Ludovicus Nonnius, in Hispanis, cap. 17. pag. m. 64.

(f) Idem, ibid. pag. 65.

(g) See the remark [A] of the article HADRIAN (Publius Ælius).

JUBA.

[A] I know one may make a plausible objection against my opinion.] It is grounded on a passage in Strabo, who tells us, that certain nations in Italy having revolted against the Romans and entered into a conspiracy against them, chose Corfinium to assemble their army there, and called it Italica. Μετονομασθῆναι Ἰταλικὴν, Italicæ nomen indiderunt (1). Observe that Corfinium was the capital city of the Peligni, and that the war we mention was called Sociale, or Marsicum, or Italicum, and began in the year 662 since the building of Rome (2). It is very probable that in the following words of Diodorus Siculus, τὴν κοινὴν πόλιν Ἰταλίαν ὀνομάσαντες, i. e. "They called their common city "Italia (3)," we must read Ἰταλικὴν (Italica) (4) instead of Ἰταλίαν; so that we have here two authors, who assert that the city of Corfinium was called Italica, when those nations confederated against the Romans. Velleius Paterculus may be considered as a third witness, caput imperii sui Corfinium legerant, says he (5), quod appellarent Italicum, i. e. "They chose Corfini"um for the capital city of their Empire which they "called Italicum." Some Critics (6) correct the words thus, quod appellarunt Italicam, which they called Italica. Others (7) keep the word Italicum. It signifies very little to me, the answer I have to make does not require that I should choose the reading, which is the most favourable to my opinion; for here follows what I have to offer. The name of Italica, which the confederated nations give the city of Corfinium, continued no longer than the war. They had given it this new name when they chose it for their common metropolis, and had established there a civil government exactly

(1) Strabo, lib. 5. pag. m. 167.

(2) See Sigonius, in Fastis, ad ann. 662.

(3) In Excerptis, lib. 37. apud Photium.

(4) See Casaubon, in Strab. lib. 5. pag. m. 94.

(5) Velleius Paterculus, lib. 2. cap. 16.

(6) Gerardus Vossius, Not. in Paterc. ibid.

(7) Sigonius, de Ant. Jure Italiæ, lib. 3. cap. 1. folio m. 100. Boecler. in Paterc. ibid.

JUBA. Two Princes of that name are mentioned in hiſtory, one of which was the father of the other. Moreri has given an account of them, but he has committed ſome errors [A], which it will be proper to obſerve. We ſhall take notice of but very few blunders of other authors [B].

(8) See Sigonius, ubi ſupra.

exactly like that of Rome (8). They had ſhewed by this not only their emulation for the capital city of the Romans, but alſo the reſolution they had taken to make themſelves independent. Since therefore the new name of Italica was a conſequence and a memorial of their conſpiracy, we ought not to think that the Romans ſuffered it to remain. Corfinium took its old name again as ſoon as the war was finiſhed, which was in the year 664 ſince the building of Rome, nor do we find that ſince that time it was ever called otherwiſe than Corfinium. Whence it appears how much they are miſtaken, who pretend that the Poet Silius Italicus was born at Corfinium, and was for that reaſon ſirnamed Italicus.

[A] Moreri ... has committed ſome errors.] I. He aſſerts that Juba the father was King of Mauritania, which is falſe. In Juba's time the Mauritania Cæſarienſis belonged to Bocchus, and the Tingritana to Bogud. Some time after, that is to ſay in the year of Rome 716, Bocchus made himſelf maſter of the Mauritania Tingritana. After his death his Kingdom was made a province of the Empire in the year 721, as Numidia had been under Julius Cæſar (1). II. Moreri ſays, that Juba the ſon was reſtored to his father's Kingdom, that is to ſay, to that of Numidia by Auguſtus. He ſhould have ſaid, with Dion Caſſius (2), that Auguſtus gave him ſome parts of Getulia, and the two Mauritania's, and the greateſt part of Numidia was left in the condition of a Roman province. Strabo indeed aſſerts (3), that Auguſtus reſtored Juba to his father's Kingdom, and granted him Mauritania beſides. But if we conſider how this Geographer places the limits of the Roman province, and of this Juba's Kingdom, we ſhall find that Numidia belonged to the Romans (4). III. He charges Pliny with ſaying, that Juba the ſon found a plant, which his Phyſician Euphorbus called Euphorbia after his own name. This is not what Pliny ſays. Let us tranſcribe his words (5). Invenit & patrum noſtrorum ætate Rex Juba, quam appellavit Euphorbiam Medici ſui nomine (α). That is to ſay, that Juba found a plant which he called Euphorbia after his Phyſician's name. It would be ſomewhat ſtrange that a Prince's Phyſician ſhould be ſo bad a Courtier as to give his own name to a plant, which his maſter had found: and yet this is what Pliny aſſerted, if we believe Moreri. It would be much leſs ſtrange that a King having found out a plant, ſhould chooſe to give it his Phyſician's name rather than his own. This is what Juba did, if we muſt reſt ſatisfied with Pliny's authority in the words which I have quoted. But we have reaſon to think that Pliny was not on this occaſion ſo accurate as he ſhould have been. What he obſerves in another place is more probable: namely that the Euphorbia was thus called from the name of the perſon who found it firſt, and who was King Juba's Phyſician. He adds a particular, which was well worthy to be tranſcribed by Moreri; namely, that Juba wrote a particular treatiſe on this plant, in which he commended very much the remarkable qualities with which it is endowed. Juba Ptolemæi pater, qui prius utrique Mauritaniæ imperavit, ſtudiorum claritate memorabilior etiam, quam regno, ſimilia prodidit de Atlante: præterque gigni ibi herbam Euphorbiam nomine ab inventore medico ſuo appellatam. Cujus lacteum ſuccum miris laudibus celebrat in claritate viſus, contraque ſerpentes, & venena omnia, privatim dicato volumine (6). i. e. " Juba, Ptolemy's father, who reigned over both the " Mauritania's, a Prince more eminent ſtill for his " learning than by his Kingdom, wrote ſomething " like it of mount Atlas; and adds that the plant Eu- " phorbia grows there, which was ſo called from the " name of Euphorbus the King's Phyſician, who " found it. Juba compoſed a particular treatiſe on " this plant, which he greatly extols on account of " its milky juice, which is good for the eyes, and " againſt ſerpents, and all ſorts of poiſons." IV. I might place amongſt Moreri's blunders his wrong way of quoting (7).

(1) See the proofs of all this in Father Noris, Cenotaph. Piſana, pag. 235.

(2) Lib. 53. ad ann. 729.

(3) Lib. 17. pag. 570.

(4) See Father Noris, Cenotaph. Piſana, pag. 235.

(5) Plin. lib. 25. cap. 7. pag. m. 400.

(6) Plin. lib. 5. cap. 1. ſub fin. pag. m. 527.

(7) He quotes Dion. lib. 41, & ſeq. he ſhould have quoted particularly lib. 43. He quotes Plin. cap. 1. lib. 25. it muſt be cap. 7. He quotes the 8th book of Athenæus, where there is only a Greek Epigram of Juba mentioned. He ſhould have quoted lib. 3 and 4. He ſhould alſo have quoted Strabo, lib. 17. and Voſſius, lib. 2.

§ (α) Rabelais, l. iii. ch. 48, admits this laſt opinion of Pliny. CRIT. REM.]

[B] We ſhall take notice of but very few blunders of other authors.] Joſephus ſeems to have aſſerted, that Juba the ſon married Glaphyra, the widow of one of Herod's ſons. See the article of that woman (8), in which I refute that aſſertion. Father Salian imagined that Juba died in the year 759 ſince the building of Rome. Father Noris (9) has refuted this unanſwerably by the following obſervation. Strabo wrote his fourteenth book ſoon after the year 771; now in his ſeventeenth book he mentions Juba as a Prince who was but lately dead. Whence it follows that Juba did not die before the year 772 or thereabout. The ſame Strabo obſerves in another place (10) that Juba lived under the Emperor Tiberius; now Tiberius did not begin his reign before the year 767. It ſeems one might infer from a paſſage in Tacitus that Juba was ſtill living in the year 776 (11). Noldius is miſtaken, who ſuppoſes that Dion Caſſius aſſerts, that Auguſtus gave Egypt to Juba beſides his father's Kingdom (12). There is nothing in Dion's words, that obliges us to refer ταύτην to Egypt, and it is certain that it muſt be referred to Cleopatra. The tranſlator has blundered here wretchedly. Ἥ τε Κλεοπάτρα Ἰόβα τῷ τοῦ Ἰόβα παιδὶ συνῴκησε· τοῦτον γὰρ ὁ Καῖσαρ τραφέντα τε ἐν τῇ Ἰταλίᾳ, καὶ συστρατευσάμενον οἱ ταύτην τε καὶ τὴν βασιλείαν τὴν πατρῴαν ἔδωκε. Cleopatra autem Jubæ, Jubæ filio, in matrimonium tradita eſt. Hunc Jubam Cæſar in Italia educatum, ac ſuam militiam ſecutum, hoc regno (read ea, Cleopatra ſcilicet) & paterno etiam donavit (13). i. e. " Cleopatra was mar- " ried to Juba, Juba's ſon. The Emperor, who had " him educated in Italy, and had taken him with him " in the armies, gave him that Princeſs, and his " father's Kingdom." Noldius having quoted the paſſage in which Dion Caſſius aſſerts (14) that Juba, inſtead of his father's Kingdom, received from Auguſtus ſome parts of Getulia, and the dominions of Bocchus, with thoſe of Bogud, obſerves that Pliny is in the right to mention the two Mauritania's inſtead of thoſe dominions. Pro quibus rectè Plinius, hiſt. nat. V. c. I. utramque Mauritaniam ſubſtituit, hoc eſt Cæſarienſem & Tingitanam. This is plainly inſinuating this falſity, namely that the two Mauritania's and the dominions mentioned by Dion Caſſius were not the ſame thing.

(8) In the remark [B].

(9) Noris, Cenotaph. Piſana, pag. 238.

(10) Lib. 6. circa finem.

(11) See the article GLAPHYRA, granddaughter, &c.

(12) Noldius, de Vita & Geſtis Herodum, pag. 176.

(13) Dio, lib. 51, pag. 520. Leunclavius has taken notice of this blunder of Xylander, in his edition of Dio.

(14) Idem, lib. 54. pag. 589, ad annum 729.

JUDEX (MATTHEW) one of the chief authors of the Centuries of Magdeburg, was born at Tippolſwald (a) in Miſnia September the 22d (b) 1528. He ſhewed great inclination for Literature, wherefore his father gave him leave to go and ſtudy at Dreſden. He did not continue long there, chooſing rather to ſtudy in the College of Wittenberg, and afterwards in that of Magdeburg. He was in a ſad condition when he arrived in this laſt city, being all over covered with ſcabs, and having no money in his pocket. The method he took to get ſome, was by begging and ſinging from door to door. But at laſt it being found that he was a hopeful youth, they procured him a tutor's place at a Lawyer's, who ſent him with his ſon to Wittemberg in the year 1546. He took his degree of Maſter of Arts there in October 1548. After which he returned to Magdeburg, and taught the ſecond form there for ſome years, and was afterwards choſen Miniſter of St. Ulric's Church there, in which poſt he continued till the year 1559. He left it only to be Divinity Profeſſor in the Univerſity of Jena; but he did not perform the functions of it above eighteen months, for he was deprived by the orders of John Fre-

(a) That place is two German leagues diſtant from Dreſden.

(b) Andrew Schoppius below, quotation (c) obſerves, that it was St. Matthew's day; he ſhould then have ſaid the 21ſt, and not the 22d.

deric Duke of Saxony, in the beginning of October 1561. He continued ſix months longer at Jena, and having ſtaid about as long at Magdeburg he retired to Wiſmar. He died May the 15th 1564 [A] at Roſtock, whither he had been a few days before, to be preſent at the promotion of the ſcholars. He was a man of good morals, laborious, zealous, learned, and wrote a great many books [B]. He had ſuffered many perſecutions

[A] He died May the 15th, 1564.] I would not make any remark upon this, if I had not to obſerve, that moſt authors are but too apt to be inaccurate with regard to the dates of men's death, and in their calculations. I find in Paul Freher's Theater (1) that our Judex died June the 11th, 1564. This date is put down on the credit of the Nomenclator Profeſſorum Jenenſium, i. e. "A Liſt of the Names of the Profeſſors "of Jena," written by Hadrian Beyer. Sagittarius (2), quoting the ſame Nomenclator, places Judex's death on the ſame day as Paul Freherus does: but I find that in Micrælius (3), this death is placed under the year 1587, which was the ſeventy ninth of the deceaſed's life. There is this reference in the margin, Freher. p. 202. It is a difficult thing to gueſs, how ſo falſe a quotation could creep into that place: and obſerve, that Judex would not have lived ſeventy nine years, though he had lived till the year 1587; for he was born in 1528. It is aſſerted in his life (4), that his death was ſo much the more lamented, that he was not yet paſt his thirty ſeventh year. This account is not exact; for ſince his birth was fixed on the 22d of Sept. 1528, and his death on March 15, 1564, it ſhould have been ſaid, that he was not yet thirty ſix years old.

(1) In page 202.

(2) Sagittar. Introd. in Hiſt. Eccleſ. pag. 247.

(3) Micrælius, Hiſt. Eccleſ. pag. 770. edit. 1699.

(4) Andr. Schoppius, Orat. de Vita Matth. Judicis, apud Crenium, Anim. Phil. & Hiſt. Part 4. pag. 71.

[B] He was a man of good morals . . . and wrote a great many books.] He was ſo ſober, that he did not eat ſo much in a whole week, as other people, who have but a moderate ſtomach, eat in two days, and his beſt friends could never prevail upon him to be ſo complaiſant as to drink more than to ſatisfy his thirſt (5). He abhorred all pomp and luxury ſo much, that even on his wedding-day he would not ſuffer his bride to dreſs fine, and obliged her to be ſatisfied with a very indifferent gown (6). His chaſtity was ſo great, that before he was married, ſome perſons imagined, that there was a kind of frigidity or inſenſibility in the conſtitution of his body; and he confeſſed as a ſecret to his intimate friends, that he imagined, his ſtaying too long to take a wife was the cauſe of the ill ſtate of his health, or had at leaſt greatly added to his infirmities. Ante legitimum conjugium adeo pudicè vixit, ut à nonnullis frigidus ſit judicatus, ac ipſe intimis ſit confeſſus, ſe judicare originem aut certè non leve ſuæ adverſæ valetudinis incrementum inde exiſtere, quòd non priùs duxiſſet uxorem (7). And yet he married at the age of twenty ſix (8), when he was choſen Miniſter of St. Ulric's Church at Magdeburg. He married a maiden of fifteen or ſixteen, who had no fortune. Some of his friends were ſorry, that he ſhould take a wife, who was neither old enough nor rich enough: but he anſwered them, that he had always prayed to God, to give him a wife unacquainted with wickedneſs, who was good-natured, and had no pride, &c. Ægriùs tulêre amicorum quidam, quòd juvenculam & minùs dotatam ſibi jungeret virginem, ſed iis reſpondit, ſe ab adoleſcentia aſſiduè petiiſſe à Deo, ut puellam bonis prognatam, honeſtè educatam, virtutibus & pietate ornatam, malarum rerum ætate adhuc imperitam, & morigeram potiùs, quàm natalibus elatam, delicatâ & blandâ educatione ac converſatione malâ depravatam, ac dotibus & ornamentis fortunæ protervam, ſibi dare dignaretur, ac ſe voti ſui compotem factum, in Dei providentia acquieſcere (9). i. e. "Some of his friends being ſorry that he ſhould "take for his wife a virgin who was ſo young, and "had no fortune; he anſwered them, that from his "youth he had always prayed to God, to give him "for his wife a young girl, of a good family, honeſtly "educated, adorned with virtue and piety, on ac"count of her tender age, unacquainted with "wickedneſs, and tractable, rather than a woman "proud of her family, nicely and delicately edu"cated, and haughty on account of her fortune "And ſince he had his wiſh, he ſubmitted and truſted "to Providence." He lived a little above ten years with his wife in an agreeable and religious manner, and had ſix children by her (10). She married to her ſecond huſband Andrew Schoppius (11).

(5) Schopp. ibid. pag. 58.

(6) Ibid. pag. 58, 59.

(7) Ibid. pag. 57, 58.

(8) Ibid. pag. 58.

(9) Ibid.

(10) Ibid.

(11) Ibid. pag. 59.

Let us now ſpeak of the books he wrote. He tranſlated out of German into Latin Luther's book concerning the literal ſenſe of theſe words, This is my Body. He dedicated this work to the ſenate of Ratiſbone, and refuted in his dedication the fifteen moſt conſiderable arguments of the Zwinglians. Here follows the title of a book which he publiſhed in the year 1559: Quod arguere peccata, ſeu concionari pœnitentiam ſit proprium Legis & non Evangelii proprie dicti, Rationes & Argumenta. i. e. "Reaſons and Arguments "to prove, that to reprove men for their ſins, or to "preach repentance belongs to the Law, and not to "the Goſpel properly ſo called." His treatiſe De Typographiæ inventione, & de prælorum legitima inſpectione, i. e. "Of the invention of Printing, and of a lawful "Inſpection over the Preſs," was printed in the year 1566. His Enarrationes Epiſtolarum Dominicalium, i. e. "Expoſitions on the Epiſtles read every Sunday," were publiſhed in the year 1578. The public has ſeen ſix works of his in the German tongue. He and Wigandus publiſhed jointly ſome works. As for inſtance (12) Reſponſio ad Confeſſionem Majoris de Juſtificatione & bonis operibus. i. e. "An Anſwer to Ma"jor's Confeſſion concerning Juſtification, and good "Works." Reſponſio ad ſcurriles & blaſphemos fœtidi Rambocchii Rythmos Witebergæ impreſſos. i. e. "An "Anſwer to the ſcurrilous and blaſphemous Verſes of "the wicked Ramboch, printed at Wittenberg." De Adiaphoricis corruptelis in magno libro Actorum Interimiſticorum, ſub conficto titulo Profeſſorum Wittebergenſium edito, repertis, Admonitiones. i. e. "Admonitions con"cerning the indifferent falſifications obſerved in that "great Book of the Acts of the Interimiſts, publiſhed "under the falſe name of the Profeſſors of Witten"berg." Corpus Doctrinæ ex Novo Teſtamento. i. e. "A Body of Divinity extracted from the New Teſta"ment." De Victorini Strigelii declaratione ſeu potiùs occultatione. i. e. "Of Victorinus Strigelius's declara"tion or rather concealment." Andrew Schoppius adds this. Item cum Illyrico, Muſæo, & Wigando miſit Epiſtolam ad quoſdam pios fratres de cauſſa Victorini. i. e. "He together with Illyricus, Muſæus, and Wi"gandus wrote a Letter to ſome of the pious brethren, "concerning the affair of Victorinus." Et cum iiſdem ſe purgavit de fictis rationibus demiſſionis Jenenſis, quas charta ἀνώνυμος referebat (13). i. e. "And with "the ſame perſons he cleared himſelf of the falſe rea"ſons, for which it was aſſerted in an anonymous "piece that he had been deprived at Jena." He gives us afterwards the title of ſome German books, and thoſe of ſome Latin pieces which have not been printed. He obſerves (14) that Judex underſtood Muſic very well, and had ſome knowledge of Mathematics. He was not unacquainted with Aſtrology, and even drew up ſome Horoſcopes. Judicia nativitatum ſibi, liberis ſuis & Embdenis (15) nonnullis compoſuit, atque figuras cœli, quas vocant, aliis rebus accommodatas erexit. i. e. "He caſt up Horoſcopes for himſelf, for his children, "and for ſome of Embdenus's: and made aſtrologi"cal ſchemes, as they call them, adapted to ſome "other things." He had ſtudied the Law for ſome time at Wittenberg; he could write verſes, both in Latin and in Greec; and he deſigned to write an Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of his own time (16). All the world knows what ſhare he had in the two firſt centuries (17) of Magdeburg; and that it was a very heavy taſk: ſince therefore it is known that Judex died very young, and that he was for fifteen years in a very ill ſtate of health (18), it cannot be queſtioned but that he was a very ſtudious and laborious man.

(12) In the year 1558.

(13) Taken from Andrew Schoppius, pag. 63, &ſeq.

(14) Idem, ibid. pag. 56.

(15) He was tutor to Levin Embdenus's children, a Civilian at Magdeburg.

(16) And. Schoppius, pag. 56.

(17) Obſerve, that he had a ſhare in the German tranſlation of the three firſt Centuries.

(18) Annis quindecim valetudine afflictiſſima. And. Schoppius, pag. 56.

Let us take this opportunity to relate a particular, which will ſerve as a ſupplement to what we have obſerved above (19) concerning the centuries of Magdeburg. The three laſt have never been publiſhed, though the centuriators had forwarded them very much, and the Marquiſs of Brandenburg Duke of Pruſſia had commanded Andrew Stangewald to put the finiſhing hand to them in order to their being publiſhed. Andreas Stangewaldus . . . ſibi ab inclyto Marchione Brandenburgenſi,

(19) Remark [H] of the article ILLYRICUS.

secutions and vexations during the time he was a Miniſter (c) [C].

(c) Taken from Andrew Schoppius, in Oratione de Vita Matthæi Judicis; It is to be found at the end of the ſecond Part Enarrationis Epiſtolarum Dominicalium Matthæi Judicis, in the edition of Iſlebe, 1578, in 8vo. Crenius has inſerted this Oration in the 4th Part of his Animadverſiones Philol. & Hiſtor. pag. 49, & ſeq.

burgenſi, Duce Boruſſiæ, tùm temporis negotium datum eſſe confirmabat, ut reliquas tres centurias Eccleſiaſticæ Hiſtoriæ Magdeburgenſ. ab auctoribus affectas jam penèque perfectas, perpoliret, atque ad editionem accuratè præpararet. Crenius (20) tranſcribes the letter from which I have extracted this paſſage. He met with it in a poſthumous work of ConradSchluſſelburgius printed at Roſtock in the year 1624. He wonders that Sagittarius omitted this particular. He acquaints us with another, which he read in a work of Francis Baudouin the Civilian (21): namely, that they printed at Geneva a French tranſlation of the Centuries of Magdeburg, with ſuch falſifications as had been obſerved in the French tranſlation of Luther's Commentary on St. Paul's Epiſtle to the Galatians (22).

(20) Crenius, Animadv. Part 4. pag. 72.

(21) His Anſwer to Beza, under the name of Michael Fabricius.

(22) Crenius, Animadv. Part 4. in Addendis, pag. penult.

[C] He had ſuffered a great many perſecutions and vexations during the time he was a Miniſter.] He was one of thoſe who drew up a form of diſcipline for the church of Magdeburg, which was printed in the year 1554. He took care to have it obſerved very punctually, and he refuſed the Sacraments to ſome impenitent perſons. For which reaſon they threatned to beat him, and to tread him under foot (23). He was ſeverely abuſed in the libels which were made at Wittenberg againſt the Centuriators. Scurriles Neminiſtæ & Acolaſti Wittebergenſes in famoſa illius laboris reprehenſione & acerba invectiva D. Judicem vocabant Judam & pullum filium aſinæ ſubjugalis (24). i. e. "The anonymous and incorrigible ſlanderers of Wittenberg, "in their abuſive cenſure of that work, and bitter in"vective againſt it, called Judex a Judas, and the "ſon of an aſs accuſtomed to the yoke." Whilſt he was Profeſſor of Divinity at Jena, he ſtrongly oppoſed thoſe, who maintain that man co-operates with God's grace. Their party was very numerous, and they diſperſed paſquils againſt him in the moſt impudent and ſlanderous manner. They alſo made uſe of ſtones; for there was a parcel of wicked fellows, who committed great diſorders about his houſe, during a whole night, and threw ſtones at his windows. He was turned out of his poſt, after he had performed the functions of a Profeſſor during eighteen months amidſt great diſorders and confuſions. The pretext that was uſed was the publication of a book in the German tongue de fuga Papatus, Of avoiding Popery (25): but one of the true reaſons of his deprivation was his oppoſition to that party, which the court (26) favoured. It was the party of Profeſſor Strigelius, one of the heads of the Synergiſtæ, or aſſertors of man's free-will. They diſperſed abroad ſeveral reaſons or rather pretences for Matthew Judex's deprivation, which were all refuted. He was charged amongſt other things, with diſperſing ſeveral copies of Balthazar Winter's Life; and it was demanded of him to name the author of that ſatire, and to call in all the copies of it, and to deliver them up to the court. He anſwered, that this work was no libel, that it was only a true account of the life and death of a faithful ſervant of God, that it had been neceſſary to publiſh it in order to refute the calumnies which the enemies of that pious man had ſpread abroad, and to communicate it to his widow and ſome other perſons, in order to comfort them. He did not think himſelf under any obligation to name the author of it: but he offered to give an account of this whole affair before impartial judges, partly laymen, and partly eccleſiaſtics. His adverſaries did not care for ſuch a tribunal (27). When he left Jena he retired to Magdeburg with his friend Wigandus, but he did not enjoy long the liberty which the Senate had granted him to continue there. Some Miniſters were arreſted; others were turned out of the city in the night time. Judex did not approve this conduct of the Magiſtrates, and exhorted thoſe Miniſters to patience. By this behaviour he expoſed himſelf to all ſorts of opprobious language, and outrages, and there was a citizen who was forbidden to let out his houſe to him. His father-in-law had his ſhare of this ill treatment, becauſe he had given him a lodging in his houſe. Laſtly, the Senate commanded Judex to leave the city immediately. His wife all in tears went to the firſt Burgomaſter, and begged of him moſt earneſtly, that ſhe might have leave to continue at her father's, with her five children, till the ſharpneſs of the winter ſhould be a little abated. She repreſented to him, that her eldeſt ſon was but eight years old, and the youngeſt but three months, and very ill. All her prayers and repreſentations proved ineffectual: they were obliged to ſet out, and retire to Wiſmar through froſt and ſnow (28). The Roman Catholics have triumphed on account of this treatment which the Centuriators of Magdeburg have met with. I ſhall only quote the reflection of a Jeſuit. "The four firſt authors of the "Centuries, ſays he (29), met with a fate very diffe"rent from that of Baronius; for ſoon after they had "publiſhed their work they were baniſhed by the Lu"therans themſelves, who could not ſuffer ſuch wicked "men to live amongſt them."

(23) Ipſi verbera & conculcationem fœdiſſimam minati ſunt, quòd eos ad Baptiſmum & uſum Cœnæ non admiſerat. Andr. Schoppius, apud Crenium, Animadv. Part 4. pag. 62.

(24) Idem, ibid. pag. 63.

(25) Idem, ibid. pag. 67.

(26) That of the Duke of Weimar.

(27) And. Schoppius, apud Crenium, Animadv. Part 4. pag. 68.

(28) Idem, ibid. pag. 69.

(29) Maimbourg, Hiſt. du Luther. tom. 2. pag. 179. of the edition printed in Holland.

JUDITH, a Jewiſh woman, who delivered her native place which was beſieged by Holofernes. You will meet with this Hiſtory in Moreri, where you will alſo find ſome obſervations on the perplexity into which it throws the Commentators. Of all the books which the Proteſtants have exploded as apocryphal, there is none that deſerves this diſgrace more than the book of Judith; for all that can be ſaid of it at beſt is, that it is a religious romance [A]. A few years ago a learned Benedictine wrote a book to ſolve the objections that are made againſt this ſtory [B]. If he has not removed the difficulties,

[A] It is a religious romance.] Don Bernard de Montfaucon (1) obſerves, that the Proteſtants, in order to remove all objections (againſt the Hiſtory of Judith) have ſaid that it is only a fiction or a parable, and that ſome of them have aſſerted that it is a Tragedy. I think that the Proteſtants do not much care whether theſe objections be removed or not: on the contrary, it is their intereſt that they ſhould ſubſiſt, and be more and more multiplied in the moſt perplexing manner. This ſhews that they are in the right to explode that Hiſtory, and that the church of Rome admits a book as canonical, which is not ſo. I imagine therefore, that when that author ſpoke this, he did not call to mind the ſyſtem of the Proteſtants, and thought that it was theirs as well as the Roman Catholic's intereſt to vindicate the honour of the Holy Ghoſt with regard to that book. When it cannot be vindicated by reconciling the particulars mentioned in a book with the truth of Hiſtory, men have recourſe to allegories, to parables, to a myſtical ſenſe, &c. This is what the Proteſtants would do, if they believed that the Hiſtory of Judith was inſpired by God; but as they do not believe it, it does not concern them much to ſay, it is or it is not a parable.

(1) Preface de la Vérite de l'Hiſt. de Judith. At Paris 1690 in 12mo. The 2d edition was printed in the year 1692.

[B] A learned Benedictine wrote a book to ſolve the objections that are made againſt this ſtory.] You may ſee his name and the title of his work in the foregoing remark. The method he follows to aſſert the truth of the Hiſtory of Judith, which the Roman Catholics believe to be canonical, is more inſtructive, and at the ſame time more edifying, than that of the other Roman Catholic writers on controverſy. The latter do, generally ſpeaking, but return the objections: they endeavour to ſhew that the difficulties of the Proteſtants againſt the Apocrypha may alſo be urged againſt the canonical books. But Don Bernard de Montfaucon only glances upon this ſubject, and applies himſelf entirely to make a direct anſwer. His whole recrimination is contained in theſe words. "Are there not ſeveral "Hiſtories in the Bible, in which we meet with theſe culties, he has however furniſhed us with ſeveral uſeful hints. I remember to have ſeen a diſſertation (a), in which amongſt other arguments the author urges the following one, namely, that we ought not to look upon a book as canonical, in which private murther is juſtified. This calls to my mind a particular concerning the aſſaſſin of William I Prince of Orange [C]. Some body has obſerved, that it is commending Judith in the moſt ſignificant manner, to ſay that ſhe has never been the object of ſlander [D].

JULIA,

(a) Intitled, Ficta Juditha, &c. printed at Verona in the year 1674, and written by Mirabilis de Bonacaſa; it is proved there, 1. that the book of Judith is Apocryphal; 2. that Judith's action was criminal; and Roſſæus, Mariana, and other oppoſers of Monarchy are in the wrong to make an advantage of it. The true name of this Mirabilis de Bonacaſa was Eberhart de Weibe: he was Chancellor to Prince Julius Duke of Brunſwick. See Placcius, De Pſeudonym. pag. 166.

" and even with greater difficulties? and did ever any " perſon deny for that reaſon that they are true in the " literal ſenſe? Does not the Hiſtory of Eſther abound " with difficulties, which it is almoſt impoſſible to ſolve? " Could it ever be determined with certainty who the " Ahaſuerus is, who is mentioned in that book, and to " what time that Hiſtory muſt be referred? Is it not " as difficult to determine the time of the Hiſtory of " Ruth, and of the deſtruction of the tribe of Benja- " min? But would any perſon, for theſe reaſons, dare " to aſſert that theſe hiſtories are only parabolical, or " enigmatical (2)?" I do not know whether he had read Rainolds's objections, who has handled this controverſy of the apocryphal books with more accuracy and ſtrength of argument than any other Proteſtant author.

(2) Pag. 283.

[C] This calls to my mind a particular concerning the aſſaſſin of William ... Prince of Orange.] I mean that villain, Balthazar Gerard, who killed him; for there have been other aſſaſſins, who only wounded him. " Though a ſincere Catholic, yet he perſonated " the Proteſtant. He heard Sermons; he was at the " Evening Prayers; he had always Marot's Pſalms, " or ſome other Huguenot Book in his hands: he uſed " alſo to read du Bartas's Poetical Week; and it was " obſerved that that part of the Book was moſt worn " out, which contained the Hiſtory of Judith cutting " Holofernes's throat (3)." This woman's example is certainly very proper to perſuade us that it is a very holy action for a man to introduce himſelf under a thouſand falſe pretences into the Court of a Prince, who is an enemy to liberty and to religion, in order to ſtab him, the firſt opportunity that offers. In a word, this Hiſtory being once looked upon as Canonical, is an encouragement for all aſſaſſins to venture any thing againſt the lives of thoſe Princes, that are reckoned enemies; and affords the orators a crown of glory to put on the heads of all the Clements and the Ravailliacs. Here follows a paſſage from Father Maimbourg. The Leaguers " did even publiſh in their " writings printed at Paris and at Lyons, that an " Angel had declared to James Clement, that the " crown of a Martyr was ready for him, when he " would have delivered France of Henry of Valois, " and that Clement having acquainted a learned " Monk with this viſion, the latter approved his de- " ſign, and told him for certain, that by that attempt " he would make himſelf as acceptable to God, as Judith " was by killing Holofernes. And as his Prior, named " Father Edme Bourgoing, was of all the Preachers of " the League, the moſt forward and zealous in com- " mending this abominable murtherer, directing his diſ- " courſe to him from the pulpit, ſtiling him a bleſſed " child of his Patriarch, and a holy Martyr of Jeſus " Chriſt, and comparing him with Judith, it was no " longer doubted but he was the Monk whom that " young man, who was under his direction, had aſked " for advice, nor was it queſtioned but he confirmed " him afterwards in his abominable deſign (4)."

(3) Hiſt. d'Alexandre Farneſe Duc de Parme, liv. 3. pag. 205. printed in the year 1692.

(4) Maimbourg, Hiſtoire de la Ligue, pag. 358.

[D] To ſay that ſhe has never been the object of ſlander.] The reflection I hint at is to be met with in the extract from a panegyrick (5). The Abbé de la Chambre being to deliver a funeral oration on the death of the late Queen of France (6) " took for " his text theſe words from the book of Judith, She " made her ſelf commendable, famoſiſſima, in every " thing, becauſe ſhe greatly feared the Lord, and there was " none that gave her an ill word. This is perhaps the " greateſt commendation that ever was paſt on a wo- " man. For though in ſpite of that terrible diſpoſition " to ſlander, which prevails in the world after ſo " many ages, there are ſome women, whom that " cruel and inſatiable monſter never touches, yet " thoſe women who have gained a great reputation, " and who are, as the text expreſſes it, famoſiſſimæ, " greatly renowned, ſeldom meet with that happineſs; " ſo that we may boldly challenge all the Greeks and " all the Romans to ſhew us one ſingle paſſage in all " their books, which in ſo few words gives ſo great a " character of a perſon, as that which is given us in " the book of Judith, in the words we have quoted. " Homer's artifice, to give his readers a moſt exalted " notion of Helena's beauty (7), comes infinitely ſhort " of the natural ſimplicity of the Jewiſh author: " and what is ſtill more beautiful in his way of com- " mending is, that he acquaints us in his elogy with " the real cauſe and true ſpring of the virtue he deſ- " cribes. She had, ſays he, a great reputation in every " thing, and was ſecure againſt ſlander, becauſe ſhe " feared the Lord from her heart. It is upon this " happy expreſſion of Judith's panegyriſt, that Mr. de " la Chambre has formed the plan of his funeral ora- " tion on the Queen."

(5) In the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, for Dec. 1684, Art. 8. pag. 1041.

(6) I write this Aug. 20, 1695.

(7) See the article of HELENA, quotation (7).

Auſonius mentions among the ſentences of one of the ſeven wiſe men of Greece, that a chaſte woman frightens calumny away.

Quæ dos matronæ pulcherrima? Vita pudica.
Quæ caſta eſt? De qua mentiri fama veretur (8).

(8) Auſon. in Septem Sapientum Sententiis ſeptenis verſibus explicatis, pag. m. 288.

He ſuppoſes that Bias had two queſtions to anſwer. The firſt was, What is the moſt agreeable portion of a woman? A chaſte life, anſwered he. The ſecond was, What woman is chaſte? She againſt whom even fame dares not to diſperſe falſities, anſwered he. Theſe rules are too ſevere, will ſome ſay; for by them you muſt condemn all women that have been expoſed to the ſtrokes of calumny; and yet it is certain that there have been ſome very virtuous women, who could not eſcape them. It muſt be confeſſed, that Bias's maxim ought not to be taken for a general rule, without any exception. But yet, when a woman has the reputation of a chaſte woman, without any oppoſition, without any report to the contrary, it is, generally ſpeaking, an argument that ſhe has behaved herſelf modeſtly both in her public and private conduct. Magnus eſt pudicitiæ fructus pudicam credi; & adverſus omnes illecebras atque omnia delinimenta muliebris ingenii eſt veluti ſolum ac firmamentum in nullum incidiſſe fabulam (9). i. e. " One of the great advantages of chaſtity for a wo- " man, is to be reputed chaſte. And when ſhe never " was the talk of the town, it is a ſtrong argument, that " ſhe was always proof againſt all the alluring plea- " ſures and temptations, to which the fair ſex is ex- " poſed." This is what the orator Porcius Latro obſerved when he pleaded for an huſband, who had brought in an action of adultery againſt his wife, becauſe a rich foreign merchant had made her his heireſs, giving this reaſon for it, that he had not been able to debauch her. The Counſel for the huſband grounded one of his arguments upon that particular: he maintained that a woman was juſtly ſuſpected as ſoon as a man undertook to debauch her; for if ſhe were very chaſte, one might read a refuſal in her very face, and her countenace alone would put a lover out of all hopes, ſo that he would not dare to be ſo bold as to make a declaration. Or if he did, ſhe would at leaſt refuſe him with ſo much ſeverity, that he would never venture to aſk her the queſtion a ſecond time. If ſhe does not mind whether or no people think her capable to commit the fault, ſhe will not ſcruple to commit it. Matronaquæ ſe adverſus ſollicitantes aviam volet, prodeat in tantum ornata, ne immunda ſit: habeat comites ejus ætatis, qui impudicos, ſi nihil aliud, verecundia annorum removeant;

(9) Seneca, Controv. 7. lib. 2. pag. m. 187.

removeant: ferat jacentes in terram oculos: adverſus officioſum ſalutatorem inhumana potius quam inverecunda ſit etiam in neceſſariam reſalutandi vicem multo rubore confuſa longe ante impudicitiam neget ore, quam verbo: in hac ſervandæ integritatis cuſtodia, nulla libido irrumpet. Prodite mihi fronte in omne lenocinium compoſita, paulo obſcœnius quam poſita veſte nudæ, exquiſito in omnes facetias ſermone, tantum non ultro blandientes, ut quiſquis vicerit, non metuat accedere. Deinde miramini, ſi cum tot argumentis pudicitiam proſcripſerit, cultu, inceſſu, facie, aliquis repertus eſt qui incurreret, & reti adulteræ ſe non ſubduceret. Internuntium, puto ſollicitantis ſe, arripi, & denudari juſſit, & flagella & verbera, & omne genus cruciatus popoſcit in plagas deterrimi mancipii; vix imbecillitas muliebris manus continuit. Nemo ſic negantem iterum rogat . . . (10). Quæ poteſt non timere opinionem adulteri, poteſt non timere adulterium (11). i. e. " A matron, who would be inacceſſible to all inticing " lovers, muſt appear in public dreſſed only ſo as not " to be ſluttiſh; let her be attended with ſuch com- " panions, whoſe age, if nothing elſe, might awe the " lovers away; let her walk modeſtly, caſting her " eyes downwards: if a man offers officiouſly to ſa- " lute her, let her be unpolite rather than immodeſt; " and if ſhe muſt ſalute him again, let the bluſhes in " her face deny his wicked requeſt long before ſhe de- " nies him by word of mouth. If ſhe thus takes " care to keep her chaſtity, nothing that is laſcivious " will ever break in upon her. But if a woman has " a wanton and enticing air, if ſhe be dreſſed ſo as " to appear a little more immodeſt than if ſhe were " quite naked, if ſhe be gay and free in all her diſ- " courſes, and almoſt courting the lovers herſelf, ſo " that the firſt that ſees her makes his addreſſes to her, " it is no wonder that being ſo many ways loſt to all " ſenſe of modeſty, by her dreſs, her countenance, " and by her looks ſhe ſhould meet with ſome man " who would be ſure to make an advantage of it, " and not avoid the ſnares of adultery, that are thus " laid before him . . . She ordered the meſſenger (ſent, " I ſuppoſe, by the man who would debauch her) " to be taken, ſtript and ſeverely whipt, and would " have him afterwards tortured moſt cruelly; and " though weak as a woman, ſhe could hardly forbear " ſtriking him herſelf. No man will ever aſk a wo- " man a ſecond time, who denies him after that man- " ner. . . She who is not afraid to have the reputation " of committing adultery, may alſo not ſcruple to " commit it." Theſe maxims are too ſevere, and carried too far (12); and would often be unjuſt, if we were always to judge according to them. But yet the advantage, happineſs and glory of our Judith are a prejudice in her favour, which gives us the moſt exalted notion of her virtue and prudence. I ſhall obſerve here by the by, that ſome Heathens had ſuch ſtrict and ſevere principles of morality, that they would have a woman give occaſion neither to ſlander nor to commendations; that is to ſay, they pretended that the true merit of a woman conſiſted in her being not in the leaſt talked of, nobody ſpeaking well or ill of her. Plutarch did not like this maxim, for he ſpeaks thus in the preamble of one of his works (13): " I am not " of Thucydides's opinion . . . concerning the virtue " of the women: for he believes that ſhe is the moſt " virtuous and the beſt, who is the leaſt talked of, and " of whom neither good nor ill is ſaid, imagining that " the name of an honeſt woman ought to be kept as ſe- " cret as her perſon, and never to come abroad. As " for my part, I think that Gorgias was more rea- " ſonable, who would have a woman's reputation but " not her face to be known to ſeveral perſons; and I " do very much approve the law or cuſtom of the Ro- " mans, which is that the women as well as the men " received publicly at their funeral after their death the " praiſes they deſerve." St. Gregory of Nazianzen was of Thucydides's mind. Dread the praiſes of men, ſaid he to a woman, that fear is the ornament of your ſex.

(10) Seneca, ibid. pag. 186.

(11) Idem, ibid. pag. 187.

(12) See above, the remark [O] of the article BLONDEL (David).

(13) Plutarch. de Mulier. Virtutib. pag. 242. Mr. Bayle quotes Amyot's French Tranſlation.

Ἄλλησιν τὰ πέρισσὰ, σὺ δ' ἄζεο χείλεσιν ἀνδρῶν.
Καὶ κλῃζομένη, τῦτο γυναιξὶ κλέος.

(14) Gregorius Nazianzenus.

i. e. " Leave theſe vanities to others; fear thoſe com- " mendations that come from the lips of men; that " fear is the glory of your ſex."

Add to this theſe words of Syneſius (15). Μίαν ἀρετὴν Ὄσιρις ᾤετο γυναικὸς εἶναι, τὸ μήτε τὸ σῶμα αὐτῆς, μήτε τὄνομα διαβῆναι τὴν αὐλίαν. i. e. " Oſiris " was of opinion that the only virtue of a woman is, " that neither her body nor her name paſs the threſhold " of her houſe." The opinion which Syneſius aſcribes to Oſiris is upon the whole the ſame with that which Plutarch aſcribes to Thucydides. Some have given it as an opinion of Pericles. See the following words of John de la Caſa. Cujus quidem mulieris (Victoriæ Farneſiæ) modeſtia ac pudor ingenuus illud profecto præſtitiſſet, quod Periclem ajunt dixiſſe, primam in muliere laudem eſſe, ut ne de virtute quidem illius ulla ad viros fama emanet: ſed nulla ratione occultari tantæ primariæ fœminæ virtus poteſt, ad viros quoque emergat, ac ſuo ipſa ſplendore ſe prodat (16). i. e. " This woman's " (Victoria Farneſe's) modeſty and unaffected baſhfulneſs " would have produced that, which Pericles, they ſay, " maintained was the chief glory of a woman, name- " ly, that the men hear not the leaſt report of their " virtues. But the virtue of this noble woman was " ſo great, that it could by no means be kept ſecret " from the men; it betrayed itſelf by its own bright- " neſs." But though an hundred perſons as illuſtrious as theſe three (17), had aſſerted this maxim, we would not be obliged to approve it. It would be condemning the women to a more auſtere life than that of the Carthuſians; it would be requiring of them to keep themſelves ſhut up and to be ſilent like theſe Monks; it would be forbidding them to receive any viſits in their cells, which yet the Carthuſians are ſuffered to do.

(15) Syneſius, Orat. 1. de Providentia.

(16) Joh. Caſa, in Vita Petri Bembi, pag. 143. Collect. Bateſii.

(17) Oſiris, Thucydides, Pericles.

I ſhall cloſe up this remark by the following obſervation. Judith's reputation, that reputation, I ſay, which was entire, free from all ſuſpicions, and proof againſt all manner of ill reports, is an unqueſtionable argument of virtue and prudence; but it does not follow from thence, that every woman, who does not meet with the ſame happineſs, and of whom ſome reports are ſpread, is guilty at leaſt of imprudence. A woman may have really led a very regular life, and yet becauſe for ſome good reaſons ſhe turned away her woman, or her chamber-maid, or her cook, there will be very ſoon a thouſand reports ſpread againſt her reputation. The perſon that is turned out may be malicious and revengeful; ſhe will go and meet her miſtreſs's enemies; and myſteriouſly hint to them what a ſpirit of calumny inſpires her with. Theſe ſlanders will ſoon be revealed to other people, they will be told as ſecrets, they will be commented upon and improved with a thouſand aggravating circumſtances, they will even be printed; and thus a woman who is really innocent, will not have the reputation of being ſo; ſo true is it, as I have obſerved in another place (18), that it is ſometimes eaſier to be honeſt than to appear ſo. The former is in our power, but not the latter. The Poet Plautus has expreſſed this thought very naturally in a ſcene in which two old men Callicles and Megaronides are introduced talking together,

(18) Above, towards the end of the remark [H] of the article AMPHIARAUS.

ME. Quia omnes bonos, bonaſque accurare, addecet.
Suſpicionem, & culpam, ut ab ſe ſegregent.
CA. Non poteſt utrumque fieri. ME. Quapropter?
CA. Rogas?
Ne admittam culpam, meo ſum promus pectori:
Suſpicio eſt in pectore alieno ſita.
Nam nunc ego ſi te ſurripuiſſe ſuſpicor,
Jovi coronam de capite, è Capitolio,
Quod in culmine aſtat ſummo: ſi id non feceris,
Atque id tamen mihi lubeat ſuſpicarier:
Qui tu id prohibere me potes, ne ſuſpicer (19)?
- - - - - -
- - - - - - - -
CA. Exſpecto, ſi quid dicas. ME. Primum dum omnium,
Malè dictitatur, tibi volgò in ſermonibus:
Turpilucricupidum te vocant cives tui.
Tum autem ſunt alii, qui te volturium vocant:
Hoſteſne an cives comedis, parvi pendere,
Hæc cùm audio in te dicier, excrucior miſer.
CA. Eſt, atque non eſt, mihi in manu, Megaronides.
Quid dicant, non eſt: meritò ut ne dicant, id eſt (20).

(19) Plautus, in Trinummo, Act. 1. Sc. 2. ver. 41. pag. m. 732.

(20) Idem, ibid. ver. 61. p. 733.

The ſenſe is,

" ME. It becomes all honeſt men and women not " only to abſtain from evil but even to keep themſelves " free from the very ſuſpicion of it.
" CA. It is impoſſible to do both.
" ME. Why ſo?
" CA. Why! Becauſe it lays in my power to abſtain

JULIA, wife to Septimus Severus the Roman Emperor, and daughter of Baſſianus Prieſt of the Sun [A], was born in Syria. The Aſtrologers had foretold her that ſhe ſhould marry a ſovereign Prince [B], for which reaſon Severus, before he came to the Empire, made his addreſſes to, and married her. He had a mighty opinion of Aſtrology, and thence was induced to think that ſuch a marriage would one day inſure the throne to him. She was poſſeſſed of great talents, and had abilities for conducting of affairs of importance (a). According to ſome writers, her huſband, though he had little affection for her, let her have a great ſhare in the adminiſtration [C]. She applied herſelf to the ſtudy of Philoſophy [D], and employed a great deal of time in hearing the (a) See the cloſe of the remark [I].

" from evil. But the ſuſpicion of it is in the breaſt " of another. If, for inſtance, I ſhould now ſuſpect " you to have ſtolen the crown from the head of the " ſtatue of Jupiter, which ſtands on the top of the " capital, though you had not done it, yet if it pleaſed " me to ſuſpect you of it, how could you hinder it ?
" - - - - - -
" - - - - - -
" CA. I wait to hear what you have to ſay ?
" ME. Men ſpeak commonly very ill of you. Your " fellow-citizens call you covetous of diſhoneſt gain ; " others ſtile you an extortioner, and ſay that you do " not care whether you devour a citizen or a ſtranger. " I am vexed to death when I hear ſuch things of " you.
" CA. It is, and it is not in my power, Megaronides. " What they ſay of me is not in my power ; but that " they may not ſay it juſtly, that is in my power to " prevent."

This concluſion is very good. I cannot prevent people from ſpeaking ill of me, anſwered Megaronides, I can only take care that they do it not with reaſon. Obſerve that there are a thouſand accidents, that may be attended with the ſame conſequence, as the malice of a ſervant who is turned out of doors.

[A] She was . . . . daughter of Baſſianus, Prieſt of the Sun.] This may be inferred from the following words of Aurelius Victor (1) : Caracalla Severi filius . . . Baſſianus ex avi materni nomine dictus . . . Hujus (Heliogabali) matris Semeæ avus Baſſianus nomine, fuerat ſolis ſacerdos, quem Phœnices unde erat, Heliogabalum nominabant (2). i. e. " Caracalla, the ſon of Se- " verus . . . called Baſſianus from his grandmother by " the mother's ſide . . . Baſſianus, grandfather of Se- " mea, mother of this Heliogabalus, was Prieſt of the " Sun, whom the Phœnicians, whence he was de- " ſcended, called Heliogabalus." Semea (3) was the daughter of Mæſa ; now Mæſa was Julia's ſiſter (4) ; and conſequently Baſſianus, Prieſt of the Sun, was Julia's father. One cannot poſitively affirm whether Julia was born in Emeſa or Apamea ; for, according to ſome authors (5), her ſiſter Mæſa was a native of Emeſa ; but according to others (6) ſhe was born in Apamea. Lampridius (7) ſays that Julia was a noble woman of the Eaſt, nobilem Orientis mulierem : but Dion (8) ſays that ſhe was of Plebean extraction, ἐκ δημοτικῆς γένους.

(1) Aurel. Victor, in Epitome, pag. m. 211.

(2) Idem, ibid. pag. 212.

(3) Or rather Soæmis according to Herodian, lib. 5. cap. 3.

(4) Herodian, ibid.

(5) Herodian, ibid. Julius Capitolinus, in Macrino, cap. 9. pag. m. 759.

(6) Dio, lib. 78. pag. 902.

(7) Lampridius, in Alexandro Severo, cap. 5. pag. 890.

(8) Dio, lib. 78. pag. 899. edit. 1606.

(9) Spartian. in Septim. Severo, cap. 3. pag. m. 594. tom. 1. See alſo Lampridius, in Alex. Severo, cap. 5. pag. 890.

[B] The Aſtrologers had told her that ſhe ſhould marry a ſovereign Prince.] I will tranſcribe Spartian's words, in order that the reader may know, what it was that Severus enquired chiefly about, when he was reſolved to marry again. He did not enquire into the merits of the perſon, but the promiſes of the horoſcope. Quum amiſſa uxore aliam vellet ducere, genituras ſponſarum requirebat, ipſe quoque matheſeos peritiſſimus : & quum audiſſet eſſe in Syria quandam, quæ id genituræ haberet ut regi jungeretur, eandem uxorem petiit, Juliam ſcilicet : & accepit interventu amicorum : ex qua ſtatim pater factus eſt (9). i. e. " When having loſt his wife, " he was deſirous of marrying another, and be- " ing extremely well ſkilled in Aſtrology, he calcu- " lated the nativity of thoſe whom he made choice " of as a wife : and hearing that there was a certain " woman in Syria, whoſe horoſcope declared that ſhe " ſhould be married to a King, he ſought her in mar- " riage (this was Julia) and obtained her by the good " offices of friends, and ſhe ſoon made him a fa- " ther."

[C] According to ſome writers, her huſband . . . let her have a great ſhare in the adminiſtration.] " Dion " informs us in the Life of Caracalla, that ſhe had in " charge his Memorials, Letters, and Petitions, tho' " of the utmoſt conſequence. This ſhews her great " capacity, for ſhe gave her advice on all affairs of im- " portance : and yet they had little affection for one " another, as we find by Dion and Herodian, though " ſhe commonly uſed to receive this honour from him, " viz. that he always named her with applauſe in " his letters ; and even when he wrote to the Senate, " inſerting her name with his and that of his armies, " according to the ſtyle of that age ; and indeed ſhe " maintained her ſtate very well, ſhe not paying " more honour, and not ſaluting with greater reſpect, " perſons of the higheſt diſtinction in the Empire, than " Severus or Caracalla. However when Caracalla " came to the empire, he ſo far leſſened her authority, " that he never followed her counſel, particularly " when he took it into his head to put any perſon " to death : but with regard to Severus her huſband, " he was very much ſwayed by her advice and good " ſenſe (10)." This is what we are told by Triſtan, but it is certain that he is miſtaken, by taking the father for the ſon ; for what he relates does not refer to Julia under her huſband's reign, but ought only to be underſtood of her, under the Empire of Caracalla. There is no great difficulty in the thing, if we do but read Xiphilinus's words with ſome attention (11). Οὐδὲ ἐπείθετο ὅτε περὶ τούτων ὅτε περὶ τῶν ἄλλων τῇ μητρὶ πολλὰ καὶ χρησὰ παρῃνέση. καίτοι καὶ τὴν τῶν βιβλίων τῶν τε ἐπιστολῶν ἐκαλέρων, πλὴν τῶν πάνυ ἀναγκαίων, διοίκησιν αὐτὴ ἐπιτρέψας. καὶ τὸ ὄνομα αὐτῆς ἐν ταῖς πρὸς τὴν βουλὴν ἐπιστολαῖς ὁμοίως τῷ τε ἰδίῳ καὶ τῷ τῶν στρατιωμάτων, ὅτι σώζηται, μετ' ἐπαίνων πολλῶν ἐγγράφων. Τί γὰρ δεῖ λέγειν, ὅτι καὶ ὑπατείας δημοσίᾳ πάντας τοὺς πρώτους, καθάπερ καὶ ἐκεῖνος. i. e. " In which affair, and in all others, " he was far from complying with the juſt and pru- " dent advice which his mother gave him, although he " entruſted her with the petitions and letters of both " kinds, thoſe excepted which were of great impor- " tance (12) ; and joined her name to his, and that " of his army (with the higheſt encomiums) in the " letters he uſed to write to the Senate, acquainting " them that all were well ; nor is there occaſion for " me to relate, that all perſons of the higheſt diſtinc- " on uſed to pay their compliments to her, in the " ſame manner as to the Emperor himſelf." I ſhall obſerve that it was at the requeſt of our Julia, that her huſband engaged in the war againſt Peſcennius Niger and Claudius Albinus (13).

(10) Triſtan, Comment. Hiſtor. tom. 2. pag. 110.

(11) Xiphil. in Epitome Dionis, in Caracalla, pag. m. 553.

(12) Triſtan ſhould not therefore have ſaid, that ſhe was intruſted with the petitions tho' of the utmoſt conſequence. He ſhould have made the following exception (as Tillemont, Hiſt. des Empereurs, tom. 3. pag. m. 189. does) unleſs it was an affair of very great importance.

[D] She applied herſelf to the ſtudy of Philoſophy.] Xiphilin, immediately after the words juſt read, affirms that Julia, in the midſt of her numberleſs affairs, devoted ſome of her hours to Philoſophy. Ἀλλ' ἡ μὲν καὶ μετὰ τούτων ἔτι μᾶλλον ἐφιλοσόφει. Sed ea nihilo minus philoſophabatur. He had ſaid elſewhere (14), that upon her being perſecuted by Plautianus, who had prodigious intereſt, ſhe began to cultivate Philoſophy, and to ſpend whole days with the Sophiſts. Καὶ ἡ μὲν αὐτή τε φιλοσοφεῖν διὰ παντὸς ἤρξατο, καὶ σοφισταῖς συνημέρευσεν. Quæ dum ob eam cauſam philoſopharetur, & tempus cum Sophiſtis tranſigeret. Philoſtratus gives her the name of Female-Philoſopher : Ἀντωνῖνος, ſays he (15), ſpeaking of Caracalla, ἦν ὁ τῆς φιλοσόφου παῖς Ἰουλίας. i. e. " Antoninus was the ſon of Julia the Fe- " male-Philoſopher :" In this manner it ought to be read, purſuant to the learned Salmaſius's happy conjecture (16). He has corrected another paſſage of Philoſtratus, where we are told that Philiſcus the Sophiſt obtained a Profeſſorſhip in Athens by Julia's intereſt. It was ſhe who ordered Philoſtratus to write the Life of Apollonius ; a circumſtance which Philoſtratus himſelf tells us (17), who obſerves at the ſame time that this Lady was very fond of Rhetoric. Tzetzes takes notice of the ſociety of learned men who uſed to attend upon

(13) Capitolinus, in Clodio Albino, cap. 3. pag. 689.

(14) In Sept. Severo, pag. 330.

(15) Philoſtratus, in Vitis Sophiſtarum, in Philiſco.

(16) Salmaſ. ad Spartian. in Vita Severi, cap. 18. pag. m. 625.

(17) Philoſtrat. in Vita Apollonii, lib. 1. cap. 3.

the diſcourſes of thoſe wits who uſed to make their court to her. It is a great pity we cannot juſtly affirm, for the glory and advantage of the Sciences, that her virtue equalled her capacity; for Hiſtorians relate that her adulterous practices reflected ignominy on her huſband [E]. It is related by ſome authors that Julia, after Severus's death, contracted an inceſtuous marriage, by marrying Caracalla her huſband's ſon [F]; but this is a falſity.

upon Julia. Εἷς τῶν χόρυ Ῥηϊώρων τε καὶ Γραμματευόντων τῇ Ἰουλίᾳ τῇ κραταιᾷ τελούσῃ Βασιλίδι (18). i. e. "One of thoſe Rhetoricians and Grammarians who uſed to "wait often on the Empreſs Julia."

(18) Tzetzes, Chil. 6. Hiſt. 45.

Mr. le Moyne has made two obſervations that deſerve to be mentioned. I. He is ſurprized that Scaliger, who was ſo bold in his conjectures, durſt venture none with regard to Antoninus the ſon of Julia, ſpoken of by Philoſtratus. II. He has confirmed by Tzetzes's words the correction of Salmaſius, which he yet ſeems to have never heard of. Here follows what he ſays with regard to Scaliger: "Sic Philoſtratus in vitis Sophiſtarum, in Philiſco, Ἀντωνῖνος δὲ ἦν ὁ τοῦ φιλοσόφου παῖς καὶ Ἰουλίας. Antoninus erat Filius Philoſophi Juliæ. Ad quæ verba hærens & attonitus Scaliger, "Antonino Philoſopho alius filius quam Commodus, "alia uxor præter Fauſtinam? Niſi legamus ὁ τοῦ Σεβήρου παῖς καὶ Ἰουλίας. Hoc etiam tenuit ancipitem "Tſetſem, nec mihi minorem movit admirationem. "Quæ nos proponimus Chronologis eruditis, & Antiquitatis inveſtigatoribus, ut quærant, & nos doceant, "quæ ingenue nos neſcire profitemur. Sed mirum hic "retuſum Scaligeri acumen, & moratam iſtam felicem "audaciam, quæ loca, hoc multo difficiliora, tam ſtrenue "& alacriter ſuperaverat (19)." With regard to the paſſage of Tzetzes, he makes uſe of it to ſhew that Philoſtratus did not write τῷ φιλοσόφῳ; for if Tzetzes had read this in Philoſtratus, he would not have ſaid that this author does not ſpecify the perſon to whom the Empreſs Julia was married. Συζυγος δ' αὐτὴ ὑφηνί τίνος ἦν βασίλεως. Non dicit vero cujus Imperatoris illa fuerit conjux (20). He might have eaſily perceived that Julia's huſband was either Marcus Aurelius, ſurnamed the Philoſopher, or Septimius Severus, who, in imitation of Marcus Aurelius, was extremely fond of philoſophical ſtudies. Amore Marci, quem fuiſſe vel fratrem ſuum dicebat, & cujus Philoſophiam literarumque inſtitutionem ſemper imitatus eſt (21). Philoſophiæ, declamandi, cunctis poſtremo liberalium deditus ſtudiis (22). Philoſophiæ ac dicendi ſtudiis ſatis deditus; doctrinæ quoque nimis avidus (23). By the way, le Moyne generally gives our Julia the ſurname of Severa, for which he is authorized by ſome inſcriptions (24).

(19) Stephanus le Moyne, in Prolegomenis Variorum Sacrorum, folio * 25.

(20) Tzetzes, Chil. 6. Hiſt. 45.

(21) Spartian. in Geta, cap. 2.

(22) Aurelius Victor, in Cæſaribus.

(23) Spartianus, in Severo, cap. 18. pag. 625, 626.

(24) See Triſtan. Comment. Hiſtor. tom. 2. pag. 121.

[E] Her adulterous practices reflected ignominy on her huſband.] Severus had acquired a great reputation by his actions, both as a Soldier and a Politician; but he ſullied it by the indulgence he had for his wife's debaucheries. It is even ſaid that he knew of her being engaged in a conſpiracy againſt him. Huic tanto domi foriſque, uxoris probra ſummam gloriæ dempſere: quam adeo famoſe amplexus eſt, ut cognita libidine ac ream conjurationis retentarit (25). This is what Aurelius Victor relates of this affair, and Spartian ſays no leſs. Domi tamen minus cautus, qui uxorem Juliam famoſam adulteriis tenuit, etiam conjurationis conſciam (26). Triſtan (27) does not think it probable that ſhe ever conſpired againſt her huſband; and the reaſon for it is, that ſhe had too much good ſenſe not to know, that ſuch an attempt could not but be fatal both to herſelf and her two ſons. But to this it may be anſwered, I. That we very often act againſt our true intereſt, when we are determined to indulge an importunate paſſion; as, for inſtance, if Julia had a ſtrong deſire to revenge ſome injurious treatment ſhe had met with from her huſband, or from a deſire to get rid of an intolerable oppreſſion. II. That Julia might have diſpoſed things in ſuch a manner, that the murderers of Severus might beſtow the Empire on her ſon. There are inſtances of this. However this be, it cannot be denied but that ſhe was oppreſſed. Severus entertained ſo very ſtrong a friendſhip for Plautian, that it was manifeſt this favourite had more credit and authority than his Sovereign (28). Now Plautian inveighed in a moſt furious manner againſt Julia; he was for ever aſperſing her to Severus; cauſed informations to be lodged againſt her, and ſought for witneſſes to ruin her: he ſought for them, I ſay, by putting many matrons of diſtinction to the torture.

(25) Aurelius Victor, in Cæſaribus. Triſtan, pag. 110. has not tranſlated the paſſage juſtly; he imagines that it ſignifies that Julia's debaucheries threw a deep ſhade on the glory of Severus, both at home and abroad.

(26) Spartian. in Severo, pag. 626, 627.

(27) Comment. Hiſt. tome 2. pag. 100.

(28) Xiphilin. in Severo, pag. m. 329, 330.

Ὥστε καὶ τὴν Ἰουλίαν τὴν Αὐγέσταν πρὸς τὸν Σεβῆρον ἀεὶ διέβαλλεν, ἐκζελάσεις τε κατ' αὐτῆς, καὶ βασάνους κατ' εὐγενῶν γυναικῶν ποιούμενον (29). Ut etiam apum eum Juliam Auguſtam ſemper calumniatus ſit, & in eam ac de matronis nobilibus tormentis quæſiverit (30). The Hiſtorian who informs us of this, does not ſay that the Empreſs ſought to free herſelf by engaging in a conſpiracy againſt her huſband; he only obſerves, that this was the cauſe that ſhe applied herſelf to the ſtudy of Philoſophy. We cannot but applaud Julia for having recourſe to that conſolation: the misfortune is, that whilſt the favourite made too inſolent an abuſe of his power, ſhe perhaps furniſhed him with but too many reaſons to impeach her for her adulterous practices. Let us here inſert the anſwer that was made her in Great Britain. She had followed her huſband into that iſland (31); and obſerving that the women of this iſland indulged their favours to many men without the leaſt ſenſe of ſhame, ſhe rallied very ſeverely the wife of Argentocoxus on that account, who made her the following anſwer; We ſatiate the cravings of nature in a better manner than your Roman Ladies; for we dally publickly with the moſt worthy men; whereas the women of your country ſecretly commit adultery with the moſt wicked wretches. Μάλα αἰσίως Ἀργεντοκόξου τινὸς γυνὴ Καληδονία πρὸς τὴν Ἰουλίαν τὴν Αὐγέσταν ἀποσκώπτουσάν τι πρὸς αὐτὴν μετὰ τὰς σπονδὰς ἐπὶ τῇ ἀνέσει σφῶν πρὸς τὰς ἀφροδίτας συνουσίαν, εἰπεῖν λέγεται, ὅτι πολλῷ ἄμεινον ἡμεῖς τὰ τῆς φύσεως ἀναλισκόμεθα ἀποπληροῦμεν ὑμῶν τῶν Ῥωμαϊκῶν· ἡμεῖς γὰρ φανερῶς τοῖς ἀρίστοις ὁμιλοῦμεν, ὑμεῖς δὲ λάθρα ὑπὸ τῶν κακίστων μοιχεύεσθε. Urbane imprimis Argentocoxi Caledonii uxor, Juliæ Auguſtæ quæ ipſam mordebat, initis fœderibus, quòd ipſæ impudenter cum maribus verſarentur, dixiſſe fertur, Nos (inquit) multo melius explemus ea, quæ naturæ poſtulat neceſſitas, quam vos Romanæ. Nam apertè cum optimis viris habemus conſuetudinem: vos autem occultè peſſimi homines conſtuprant (32). If any one ſhould aſk on what occaſion the Hiſtorian mentions this anſwer, I ſay it was on account of a law which the Emperor had enacted againſt adultery; the execution whereof he was forced to neglect, becauſe ſuch multitudes (33) were impeached, that the courts did not care to concern themſelves any more with thoſe trials. It muſt be confeſſed that this female Barbarian made a very arch anſwer to the Empreſs's railleries; but then we muſt not think, that the impudence of theſe iſlanders was leſs criminal than the ſecret adulteries which were carried on in Rome. Thoſe who commit evil ſecretly retain the ideas of virtue, and pay ſome homage to it; but ſuch as ſin without the leaſt ſenſe of ſhame, have no regard to juſtice either in theory or practice (34).

(29) Idem, ibid. pag. 330.

(30) Caſeneuve, in his Remarks on Philoſtratus's Letters, pag. 19. gives this, in French, from Suidas; but he makes a very great blunder on that occaſion; Plautianus, ... dit il, taſcha de l'arguer de pluſieurs crimes auprès de Severus, & fiſt à ceſt effect des enqueſtes à l'encontre d'elle. Il ſouloit auſſi propoſer diverſes queſtions à des Dames. i. e. "Plautianus, "ſays he, endeavoured to "accuſe her of "ſeveral crimes "to Severus, "and for this "purpoſe cauſed "informations "to be lodged a-"gainſt her. It "was alſo his "cuſtom to pro-"poſe various "queſtions to "certain Ladies."

(31) Anno 208.

(32) Xiphilin in Severo, pag. 343.

(33) Three thouſand perſons had been impeached for adultery.

(34) See remark [B] of the article JONAS (Arngrimus).

Brantome relates a particular which I have not read in antient Hiſtorians, in giving the reaſon why Severus bore ſo patiently his wife's lewdneſs. Brantome's words are as follow (35). "The Emperor Severus "was not under much concern with regard to his "wife's honour, ſhe being a public proſtitute; and "yet he did not even take the leaſt pains to reform "her, ſaying that her name was Julia, and there-"fore he ought to excuſe her, in as much as all the "women, from the moſt remote antiquity, ſo called, "uſed to be very great whores, and to cuckold their "huſbands; I know many Ladies, bearing certain "Chriſtian names (36), which I forbear to mention "out of the reverence I bear to our holy religion, who "are more ſubject to be proſtitutes, and to &c. more "than women who go by other names; and few have "been ſeen that have eſcaped it."

(35) Brantome, Dames Galantes, tom. 1. pag. 33.

(36) We may here apply the two verſes following of Rutilius Numatianus: Nominibus certos credam decurrere mores,
Moribus an potius nomina certa dari.

[F] It is related by ſome authors that Julia ..... married Caracalla.] This is not a ſtory lately invented, but is found in Spartian and Aurelius Victor. Brantome tells it as follows. "It is farther related of "Julia the Emperor Caracalla's ſtep-mother, that being "one day, as though it had been inadvertently, half "naked, and Caracalla ſpying her, ſaid only theſe "words: how gladly would I, if I might! Julia re-"plied that inſtant, you may if you pleaſe; do not falſity [G]. She was no leſs the true mother of Caracalla than of Geta. Julia was ſo unhappy as not to be able to maintain unity and concord between her two ſons (b); her endeavours, though ſo very induſtrious, not being able to compaſs ſuch a work. Geta was

(b) Herodian. lib. 4. cap. 3.

" you know that you are Emperor, and as ſuch im-
" poſe laws, and not receive them from others?
" Finding ſhe had ſuch an inclination for him, he " married, and lay with her (37). She muſt needs
" have been a proſtitute, to love and marry that very " man who ſome time before had killed her ſon in her " arms. She muſt have been an arrant proſtitute,
" and very mean ſpirited; and yet it is a great thing
" to be an Empreſs, and ſo exalted an honour atones
" for all imperfections. This Julia was very well be" loved by her huſband, though ſhe was far advanced
" in years, notwithſtanding which her beauties were " not leſſened in any manner, ſhe being extremely
" handſome and courteous, as is manifeſt from her words
" which greatly increaſed her grandeur (38)." That the reader may ſee whether the circumſtances are heightened here, I ſhall cite the very expreſſions of the Latin authors who have mentioned this incident. Intereſt ſcire, ſays Spartian (39), quemadmodum novercam ſuam Juliam uxorem duxiſſe dicatur. Quæ quum eſſet pulcherrima, & quaſi per negligentiam ſe maxima corporis parte nudaſſet, dixiſſetque Antoninus, Vellem, ſi liceret: reſpondiſſe fertur, Si libet licet. An neſcis te imperatorem eſſe, & leges dare, non accipere? Quo audito, furor inconditus ad effectum criminis roboratus eſt: nuptiaſque eas celebravit quas ſi ſciret ſe leges dare, vere ſolus prohibere debuiſſet. Matrem enim (non alio dicenda erat nomine) duxit uxorem, ad parricidium junxit inceſtum: ſiquidem eam matrimonio ſociavit, cujus filium nuper occiderat. Aurelius Victor exhibits the artifice ſhe employed a little more clearly. She was not ſo impolitic as to undreſs herſelf at once before Caracalla; ſo looſe and impudent a behaviour might have ſhocked the young man: ſhe ſo ordered matters, that the whole paſſed for a ſurprize; ſhe pretended not to know that Caracalla could ſee her that time, and feigned being ignorant of his being in the place where ſhe was naked. Pari fortuna, & eodem matrimonio, quo pater: namque Juliam novercam . . . forma captus, conjugem affectavit: cum illa factioſior, aſpectui adoleſcentis, præſentiæ quaſi ignara, ſemet dediſſet, intecto corpore, afferentique, Vellem ſi liceret, uti: petulantius multo (quippe quæ pudorem velamento exuerat) reſpondiſſet: Libet? plane licet (40). I know not where Vigenere found what he ſpecifies with reſpect to the circumſtance of the place. " The Empreſs Julia, ſays he (41), was doubtleſs the " wife of Severus; for Antoninus Caracalla married
" her afterwards though ſhe was his mother-in-law:
" and this inceſtuous commerce roſe from his ſpying
" her one day naked in the hot bath, through a pri" vate window that looked into it; he revealed him-
" ſelf: and ſhe aſking Caracalla how he liked her,
" he anſwered, Were it lawful, I ſhould deſire you
" above all other women. How! replied ſhe on a ſud-
" den, are you ſtill ſo ignorant as not to know, that all " things are lawful to you, who are the ſovereign of " the whole earth? Saying which they immediately
" proceeded to their guilt."

(37) Brantome, Dames Galantes, tom. 2. pag. 205.

(38) Ibid. pag. 206.

(39) Spartian. in Caracalla, cap. 10. pag. m. 730.

(40) Aurel. Victor. in Cæſarib. pag. m. 144. See alſo Eutropius, Book 8. and Oroſius, lib. 7. chap. 18. who ſpeak of this inceſtuous commerce.

(41) Vigenere's Preface to Philoſtrata's de Pictur.

[G] . . . but this is a falſity.] It has been proved ſo manifeſtly, that Moreri is inexcuſable for relating this ſtory as a certainty. Had he read Triſtan's commentaries, he would have ſeen ſufficient proofs of the falſity of it; though it muſt be owned that all the arguments of this author are not demonſtrative.

(42) Triſtan, Comment. Hiſtoriques, tom. 2. pag. 113, & ſeq.

His firſt proof (42) is drawn from the ſilence of thoſe Greek authors, who have given a faithful account of Caracalla's actions, without employing the leaſt flattery. Dion Caſſius lived in that age, and had exerciſed very high employments: he conſequently could not be ignorant whether Caracalla had married Julia or not; and had he known of ſuch a marriage he certainly would have ſpoke of it, to throw the greater odium on that Emperor, whom he ſeems not to ſpare in any manner; ſince then he does not ſpeak of it, it is a certain proof of the falſity of that marriage. The ſame circumſtance is confirmed by Herodian's ſilence; Herodian, I ſay, who relates many particular and blackening incidents; and who lived much nearer that period than they who vouch the truth of this pretended marriage.

The ſecond proof is borrowed from the age of our Julia. Triſtan ſuppoſes (43), that at the time thoſe authors repreſent her as ſo beautiful, that Caracalla was ſo captivated by it, that he was deſirous of marrying her, ſhe muſt be 45 at leaſt; for ſhe muſt have been ſeventeen or fifteen years of age when ſhe married Severus; and as ſhe brought Caracalla into the world the firſt year of her marriage, and as Caracalla was 27 when it is ſuppoſed he ſaw her naked, it follows that ſhe was 44 or 45. This author had reaſon to ſay, that Julia was not Caracalla's mother-in-law, but his own mother. He need not fear any ſtrong objection on that occaſion; thoſe which might be made to him, in order to leſſen Julia's age, and againſt the conſequences he draws from her being 45, might puzzle him ſtill more. Nothing hinders, will it be ſaid, but that Julia might be no more than fifteen when ſhe married Severus; and it is probable that Caracalla married her a year after he had killed Geta (45). Now Caracalla reigned ſix years ſince his brother's death (46), and lived but 29 years in all (47). He therefore might have married Julia when he was but 24, which added to ſixteen (his mother's age when ſhe brought him into the world) make but forty in all. According to Triſtan the age of 44 or 45 years is not a period of life in which Julia's luſtre, gracefulneſs and vigour could be ſo great, as to inchant Caracalla to ſuch a degree, that he was forced to marry her in order to poſſeſs her. To this might be objected the example of ſome women, who at that age, or even in a more advanced one, have fired Princes with a very ſtrong paſſion; but Triſtan might anſwer, that the women in queſtion did not atchieve ſuch conqueſts on a ſudden by diſplaying their beauties naked. The charms of converſation, the ſtratagems of love, and a thouſand pretty ways were the ſtrongeſt arms by which they gained their conqueſts; and then I know not what caſt or turn of body or mind enabled them to preſerve their conqueſts. The bare revealing of a body, which has been ſubject to the influences of above forty years, is not an object fit to gain victories; on ſuch an occaſion a woman does not ſhew herſelf to the greateſt advantage. It is therefore no ways probable, that ſo artful a woman as Julia employed the expedients we are told in hiſtory, in order to captivate Caracalla; or that, in caſe ſhe did, ſhe was ſucceſsful in her attempt. I go no farther, I believe a reply might be made to this; the reaſons given here are not of a nature to admit of no room for doubting.

(43) Ibid. pag. 114.

(44) This in all probability is an error of the preſs for 18.

Let us ſee the third proof. Dion (49) obſerves, that when Julia " knew of the death of her ſon, ſhe
" ſtruck her breaſt (50), in order to occaſion her own
" death by reviving and irritating a cancer, which ſhe
" had been troubled with for a long time, and that it
" contributed very much to her death afterwards.
" This ſhews how ridiculous they made themſelves,
" who have forged this pretended hiſtory, that Julia
" ſhewed herſelf naked to Caracalla, and that the ſight
" of her, when ſhe was naked, inſpired him with a deſ" perate paſſion for her. For is it probable that this " woman would have ſhewn herſelf naked, when ſhe
" was thus full of ulcers: and that Caracalla, a young
" Prince, Monarch of the world, who had the option
" of all that was beautiful in ſo extenſive an empire,
" could have been captivated by ſuch an object as they
" repreſent?" As there is nothing too difficult for a ſophiſt, ſome caviller might be found, who would obſerve to Triſtan, that Julia did not expoſe her whole body (51). Spartian ſays, that ſhe only ſhewed above half of it. We may then ſuppoſe, that the part concealed by her was her breaſt, and ſo her cancer did not appear. Mr. Chevreau would not be a proper perſon to make this objection; for he ſays, that Julia appeared before Caracalla, in a negligent manner, and with her breaſt naked (52). It would be in vain to examine, whether it is likely, that a woman, who would expoſe herſelf naked, except ſome part, would determine to hide her breaſt before all others. This, I ſay, would be in vain, ſince, by ſuppoſing the cancer, there were particular reaſons to induce her neceſſarily not to ſhew her breaſt. Let us proceed therefore to a third remark, which

(45) He put to death his wife who was Plautian's daughter, after he had got rid of Geta. Herodian, lib. 4. cap 6.

(46) Herodian, lib. 4. cap. 13. in fin.

(47) Triſtan, Comment. Hiſt. tom. 2. pag. 119, 148.

(48) Ibid. pag. 114.

(49) Ibid.

(50) See the remark [I].

(51) Se maxima corporis parte nudaſſit. Spart. ubi ſupra.

(52) Chevreau, Hiſt. du Monde, tom. 2. pag. 306. Dutch edit. 1687.

was killed by Caracalla in the arms of Julia, who received a wound on that occaſion, but durſt not afterwards diſcover the leaſt uneaſineſs on that account (c). If I miſtake not, the beſt expedient which Caracalla employed, in order to comfort his mother, was to let her enjoy a conſiderable ſhare in the Government [H]. The Lady found infinite charms in this; and if ſhe attempted to kill herſelf when news was brought her that Caracalla had been aſſaſſinated, it did not proceed ſo much from grief at her ſon's death, as from the fear of being ſoon reduced to the condition of a private perſon (d); and accordingly ſhe laid all thoughts of dying aſide, the inſtant ſhe perceived that Macrinus, Caracalla's ſucceſſor, uſed her well: but as ſoon as ſhe was informed that he intended to reſent the injurious expreſſions ſhe had vented againſt him, upon her being told of Caracalla's murther, ſhe ſtarved herſelf to death [I]. The title of Domna that was given which weakens the proof of Triſtan. Let us obſerve, that the cancer was formed after Julia married Caracalla. If it was formed after marriage, ſhe might have had it four years, when Caracalla was killed; and ſo Dion might ſay, that ſhe had been troubled with it for a long time (53).

(c) Xiphilin. in Caracalla, pag. 346.

(d) Xiphil. in Macrino, pag. 362.

(53) Ἐκ πάνυ πολλοῦ χρόνου: jam multo tempore, Dio, in Macrino, pag. 362.

The fourth proof of Triſtan is, that Dion, who "was perfectly well acquainted with Caracalla, obſerves, that he had been prodigiouſly enervated for "a long time, and extremely incapable of that "ſort of exerciſe, having reduced himſelf to that "condition by his debaucheries, ὕστερον γὰρ ἐξησθένησαν (54) αὐτῷ πᾶσα ἡ περὶ τὰ ἀφροδίσια ἰσχύς; for, "ſays he, the natural vigour neceſſary for the ſervice "of the Ladies was exhauſted in him during the laſt "years of his life (55)." It is not true that Dion obſerves, that Caracalla was enervated in that point for a long time; and therefore the fourth proof lies expoſed to the ſame objection as the preceeding; for it may be anſwered, that this Emperor exhauſted his vigour by his debaucheries after his marriage with Julia. The reader will perhaps be pleaſed to know upon what occaſion Dion makes this obſervation. He had ſaid, that Caracalla put four Veſtals to death, and that he enjoyed one of them as much as his ſtrength would give him leave. The Hiſtorian afterwards ſays what is cited by Triſtan, and adds, that this Veſtal cried out when ſhe was conducted to the place of execution, The Emperor himſelf very well knows that I have kept my virginity. Τέσσαρας δὲ τῶν ἀεὶ παρθένων ἀπέκλεινεν, ὧν μίαν βίᾳ, ὅσα γε καὶ ἠδύνατο, ἠσχύνει· ὕστερον γὰρ ἐξησθένησεν αὐτῷ πᾶσα ἡ περὶ τὰ ἀφροδίσια ἰσχύς· ἀφ' ἧπερ καὶ ἕτερόν τινα τρόπον αἰσχρουργεῖν ἐλέγετο· ἡ δὲ δὴ χόρη αὕτη περὶ ἧς λέγω, Κλωδία Λαίτα ὠνομάζετο· ἥ τις καὶ μέγα βοῶσα. Οἶδεν αὐτὸς Ἀντωνῖνος ὅτι παρθένος εἰμὶ, ζῶσα κατωρύγη. Veſtales occidit quatuor, ex quibus unam, quantum in ipſo fuit, vitiavit: nam eum ad extremum vis in rebus Venereis defecerat, qua ex re dicebatur flagitia obſcœna alterius generis facere. Huic virgini Clodia Læta nomen fuit, eaque viva ſepulta eſt: quum tamen exclamaret ſcire ipſum Antoninum ſe virginem eſſe (56).

(54) It ſhould be ἐξησθένησεν.

(55) Triſtan, ubi ſupra, pag. 114.

(56) Xiphil. in Caracalla, pag. 352.

(57) Triſtan, ubi ſupra, pag. 115. He quotes no body. This is to be found in the fragments of Dion, pag. 899. of the edit. of 1606.

Let us proceed to the fifth proof. "It is certain, "that if Julia had been his wife, when ſhe died, her "body would not have been depoſited firſt in the monument of the two brothers, Lucius and Caius Cæ"ſars, and afterwards in that of the Antoninus's with "the bones of Geta, but with him (57)." This proof is a very bad one, and ſhews, that Triſtan did not know, that Caracalla and Geta were in the ſame tomb. Geta was laid in the ſepulture of Severus (58), that is to ſay, in that of the Antoninus's (59), and Caracalla was laid there likewiſe. Corpus ejus Antoninorum ſepulchro illatum eſt, ut ea ſedes reliquias ejus acciperet quæ nomen addiderat (60). His corps was ſent to Rome by the order of his murderer himſelf (61). Others affirm, that Macrinus cauſed it to be burnt, and put the aſhes in an urn, which he ſent to Julia (62).

(58) Funus Getæ accuratius fuiſſe dicitur quam ejus qui à fratre videretur occiſus. Illatuſque eſt majorum ſepulcro, hoc eſt Severi. Spartianus, in Geta, cap. 7. pag. m. 744.

(59) Urnulam auream . . . Severi reliquias continentem eamdemque Antoninorum ſepulcro illatam. Idem, in Severo, cap. ult. pag. 640.

(60) Idem, in Caracalla, cap. 10. pag. 730.

(61) Capitolin. in Macrino, cap. 5. pag. 753.

(62) Herodian, lib. 4. cap. 13.

The ſixth proof is a very good one, and is founded upon Julia's being the mother, and not the mother-in-law of Caracalla. This is evident from the teſtimony of Dion, a perſon of eminence in the Empire, who had ſeen Severus, Julia, Caracalla, Geta, &c. an hundred and an hundred times. Herodian affirms the ſame, and what can be more convincing upon this point, than theſe words of Oppian? τὸν μεγάλῃ μεγάλῳ φυτήσατο Δόμνα Σεβήρῳ. Since Oppian, in a book, which he dedicated to Caracalla, aſſerts, that Julia brought forth Caracalla, can there be the leaſt doubt concerning it? Can a contemporary writer be miſtaken in ſuch a thing? And would he venture to aſſert a falſity in the face of the whole court about a thing, which every body knew? Can any body be ignorant in a Prince's court, whether his wife is the mother or the mother-in-law of his ſons? I ſay nothing of the inſcriptions, in which Julia is ſtiled the mother of Caracalla (63). Now all thoſe writers, who mention the pretended marriage of Julia and Caracalla, ſuppoſe that ſhe was his mother-in-law, and therefore deſerve no credit, as building upon a miſtake. Obſerve likewiſe, that they even fall into a contradiction. Does not Spartian ſomewhere ſay, that Geta was better beloved by his mother than Caracalla? Fratri ſemper inviſus, matri amabilior quam frater (64). Would a perſon, who ſhould make this obſervation, while he believed that Julia was Geta's mother, and Caracalla's mother in-law, have common ſenſe? This is not the only argument which Spartian furniſhes us with againſt himſelf (65). Aurelius Victor (66) aſſerts, that Caracalla died when he was near thirty years of age; which cannot be true, if this Emperor was not Julia's ſon. See the remark [L]. The ſame Hiſtorian obſerves, that Caracalla having ſecretly lain with Semea, his couſin, had a ſon by her, who was the Emperor Heliogabalus (67). If Caracalla was Semea's couſin, he was Julia's ſon. I ſhall obſerve by the way, that Mammea, Semea's ſiſter, and Alexander Severus's mother, is called by Ulpian Caracalla's couſin (68). Here then is a contemporary writer, who ſays, that Julia was Caracalla's mother.

(63) See Salmaſius in Spartian. cap. 20. pag. 633. and Spanhem. de Præſtant. Numiſ. mat. pag. 628.

(64) Spartian. in Geta, cap. 5. pag. m. 740.

(65) See the remark [L].

(66) Aurel. Victor. in Epitome, pag. 212.

(67) Heliogabalus dictus Caracalla x Semea CONSOBRINA occulte ſtuprata filius. Idem, ibid.

(68) Ulpian. Lege ultima de Senator. apud Triſtan, pag. 117.

[H] Her ſon . . . let her enjoy a conſiderable ſhare in the Government.] See what has been cited from Dion, in the remark [C]; and add to it what that Hiſtorian tells us, when he gives an account of the tragical fate of Caracalla. He ſays, that during Caracalla's expedition againſt the Parthians, Julia ſtaid at Antioch, and received all the diſpatches, and communicated to the Emperor only ſuch as were of importance. Thus all the affairs of State paſſed through her hands, and it was ſhe who judged whether ſuch or ſuch letters written to the Emperor, deſerved to be ſent to him, or whether ſhe might not ſpare him the time of reading them. This is at the ſame time a proof of the confidence which Caracalla repoſed in her, and of his opinion of her capacity. Ἐπιτέλευτο αὐτῇ πάντα τὰ ἀφικνούμενα διαλέγειν, ἵνα μὴ μέτην αὐτῷ ὅλῳ γράμματων ἐν τῇ πολιμίᾳ ὄντι πέμπηται. Cui mandatum erat, cuncta quæ mitterentur, diſcerneret, ne ad Antoninum occupatum in terra hoſtili fruſtra multitudo literarum mitteretur (69).

(69) Xiphilin. in Caracalla, pag. 357.

[I] As ſoon as ſhe was informed that Macrinus intended to reſent the injurious expreſſions ſhe had vented againſt him . . . ſhe ſtarved herſelf to death.] Macrinus ſent her Caracalla's aſhes (70), and wrote her an extremely polite letter (71). He deſired her to keep all her retinue, and the ſame guards as uſual, which made him ſuppoſe that ſhe had laid aſide all thoughts of deſtroying herſelf. Ἐπεὶ δ' ὡς ὅτι τι τῆς βασιλικῆς θεραπείας ἢ τῆς τῶν δορυφόρων περὶ αὐτῇ φυλακῆς ἀλλοιοῖτο, καὶ ἰκανῶς χαλεπά τινα αὐτῇ ἐπέστειλε, θαρσήσασα, τὴν τοῦ θανάτου ἐπιθυμίαν κατέθετο. Sed poſtquam ille non modò nihil de regio famulatu ejus, aut de ſtipatoribus quos ſecum habebat cuſtodiæ cauſa immutavit, verùm etiam multa ad eam percommode ſcripſit, cœpit bona ſpe injecta deſiderium mortis deponere (72). But when he was told that ſhe had inveighed bitterly againſt him, and formed factions, in order to obtain the ſovereignty in that country, after the example of Semiramis and Nitocris, he commanded her to leave Antioch immediately, and to retire whitherſoever ſhe might think proper. But now Julia was quite ſick of life; ſhe dreading the condition

(70) Herodian, lib. 4. cap. 13.

(71) Xiphil. in Macrino, pag. 362.

(72) Idem, ibid.

given her was the ſurname of a family [K]. There are ſome difficulties with reſpect to the time of her marriage with Severus [L]. There are extant ſome inſcriptions (e) in which condition of a woman devoid of authority, more than death. Some authors (73) doubt whether ſhe put an end to her life; but Dion does not ſpeak of it in a doubtful manner, he affirming (74) that ſhe ſtarved herſelf to death; and that ſhe effected this the more eaſily, as ſhe had inflamed her cancer, by the blow ſhe gave herſelf on the breaſt. Triſtan fancies that ſhe ſtruck herſelf on the breaſt, in order to kill herſelf by inflaming her cancer; but I doubt very much whether this be the hiſtorian's meaning. I fancy Dion meant no more than this, that the Lady in queſtion, by ſtriking her breaſt, whilſt ſhe was bewailing her ſon's murther, inflamed the cancer (75). It was the uſual cuſtom of women, at the news of a loſs like this, not only to weep, but alſo to ſtrike their breaſts. Julia did like other women; but in all probability ſhe did not ſtrike herſelf ſo hard, as though ſhe intended directly to kill herſelf by thoſe blows. Since ſhe is compared to Semiramis, ſhe muſt neceſſarily have been looked upon as a very ambitious and very artful woman. She did not want this laſt quality, if Dion may be credited. Πρὸς δὲ τούτοις εἶχε καὶ τὸ πανοῦργον τῆς μητρὸς, καὶ τῶν Σύρων ὅθεν ἐκείνη ἦν (76) i. e. "She "had the deceit of her mother, and of the Syrians "from whom ſhe ſprung."

(e) Triſtan gives them in tom. 2. pag. 117, 118. of his Commentaires Hiſtoriques.

(73) Herodian, lib. 4. cap. 13.

(74) Xiphilin. in Macrino, pag. 362.

(75) See the Fragments, pag. 899. of Dion, edit. of 1606.

(76) Xiphilin. in Caracalla, pag. 349.

[K] The title of Domna . . . was the ſurname of a family.] Triſtan (77) proves this very learnedly; and cenſures Ritterſhuſius (78), who thought that in the following verſe of Oppian, Τὸν μεγάλη μεγάλῳ φυτήσατο Δόμνα Σεβήρῳ, the word Δόμνα is an epithet borrowed from the Latin Domina; and that the Poet, by giving it a Greek turn, had introduced it with the licence of the eliſion of the ιοτα. He cenſures another error of the abovementioned Ritterſhuſius, which is, his imagining that Oppian ſpeaks of Martia Severus's firſt wife. See Menage (79), who cenſures Gentilis (80), who had committed the ſame error as Ritterſhuſius's firſt. See likewiſe Spanheim (81), who takes notice of the ſame error in the Notes on Nicephorus Briennius.

(77) Comment. Hiſt. tom. 2. pag. 119, 120.

(78) Not. in Oppiani Cynegetica.

(79) Amœnit. Juris, cap. 25. pag. m. 139.

(80) Lib. 2. Parergorum Juris, cap. 22.

(81) Spanhem. de Præſtant. Numiſmat. pag. 626.

[L] There are ſome difficulties with reſpect to the time of her marriage with Severus.] Dion (82) aſſerts that Fauſtina, wife of Marcus Aurelius, prepared the nuptial chamber of Severus and Julia, in the temple of Venus that was in the palace. Now Fauſtina died in the Eaſt about the cloſe of the year 175 (83). The marriage of Severus and Julia was not therefore after that year. Julia was ſoon made a mother. It is not known whether Caracalla was the eldeſt of all her children, but that might be, according to Spartian, who declares him to have lived forty three years. Caracalla was killed in the year 217; and conſequently he was born in the year 174, in caſe he lived to the age we are told by Spartian. Should it be objected to this author, that Caracalla and Julia muſt have been married about the year 212, ſince it was after the beginning of Caracalla's reign, a reign that continued but ſix years; and ſhould it be concluded from thence, that this marriage is a mere chimera, ſince Julia was then above fifty years of age; this author, I ſay, will anſwer that Julia was not Caracalla's mother: he will inſiſt that ſhe was not married to Severus till a long time after the year 174. Nevertheleſs Dion furniſhes us with a ſtrong proof that Julia muſt have been fifty years of age at leaſt, when her naked charms are ſaid to have inchanted Caracalla to ſuch a degree. From what he ſays, we ſhould ſuppoſe that ſhe married before Fauſtina's death, and conſequently that ſhe was at leaſt twelve or thirteen in 175. I will now ſhew, that Caracalla could not poſſibly have been born the firſt year of Julia's marriage, if it be true that this marriage happened before Fauſtina's death.

(82) Xiphilin. in Severo, pag. 310.

(83) Tillemont, Hiſt. des Emper. tom. 3. pag. 389.

Spartian ſays, that Caracalla was but five years old when his father was Governor of Illyricum (which cannot be fixed before the year 190) and that he put on the Toga virilis when he was nominated Conſul (that is at the cloſe of the year 201; and ſo he was then at moſt but in the beginning of his fifteenth year.) He ſays every where, that Caracalla was very young when Severus came to the Empire. He repreſents him as a child of two or three years old, at moſt, at Geta's birth, i. e. the 27th of May 189 (84). All this is inconſiſtent with the forty three years of age which he declares this Emperor to be, he being killed in the year 217. He therefore contradicts himſelf. Dion affirms that Geta lived but twenty two years and nine months (85), and that Caracalla lived but twenty nine years (86). Now Caracalla lived but ſix years (87) after Geta's death, and was killed in the year 217. Geta therefore muſt have been born in 189, and Caracalla in 188. There then muſt have been a long interval between Julia's marriage, and Caracalla's birth, in caſe Fauſtina had prepared the nuptial bed, as Dion relates; and nevertheleſs, according to Spartian, Julia's marriage was quickly fruitful, and gave Severus a ſecond ſon a few years after the birth of the firſt. Ex qua (Julia) ſtatim pater factus eſt. A Gallis ob ſeveritatem & honorificentiam & abſtinentiam, tantum quantum nemo dilectus eſt. Deinde Pannonias proconſulari imperio rexit. Poſt hoc Siciliam proconſularem ſorte meruit, ſuſcepitque Romæ alterum filium (88). i. e. "By whom (Julia) he was ſoon made a father. "The Gauls had a prodigious affection for him, "becauſe of his ſeverity, honour, and temperance. "He next governed Pannonia in quality of Pro "conſul; was afterwards Proconſul of Sicily, and "had another ſon in Rome." There is a great deal of confuſion in all this. I know not whether the reader will approve of a conjecture I am going to venture at random. Methinks Dion does not ſay that Fauſtina really prepared the nuptial chamber; but that Severus imagined he had ſeen her, in a dream, prepare it. This hiſtorian relates in that place ſeven preſages of Severus's exaltation; and after ſpeaking of the ſix firſt, he adds, that they appeared to him in his ſleep. Ταῦτα μὲν ἐκ τῶν ὀνειράτων ἤμαθεν. ὅπερ δὲ ἐς τε τὸν βασιλικὸν θρόνον ἐφήδρευσεν ὢν ἔτι ἀγένειός τε καὶ ἐφηβῶν. Quæ omnia quum ex ſomniis intellexerit Severus, tum id revera evenit, quod quum adhuc ephebus eſſet, conſedit in ſella principis per imprudentiam (89); and then the Hiſtorian in queſtion ſpeaks of the ſeventh preſage as of a fortuitous action done when he was awake. In relating the ſix firſt, he does not always obſerve, on each in particular, that it was a dream, but he does this three or four times. This muſt have miſled the interpreters; for he does not obſerve it as to this action of Fauſtina, which is one of thoſe ſix preſages or omens; he tells it as a real thing, I mean without giving notice that it was a dream. Now ſince he does thus with reſpect to ſome of the other omens, which it is manifeſt were only dreams; and ſince, before he relates the omen that conſiſted in a real action, he gives notice that all the preceding omens appeared in his ſleep; methinks we may conclude, that he gives this preparation of the nuptial bed by Fauſtina in the temple of Venus, as the viſion of a man who ſleeps. I know not whether a nuptial chamber was ever prepared for a particular perſon in a temple. It is eaſier therefore to come to the aſſiſtance of Dion than to diſengage the other Hiſtorians; and nevertheleſs many contradictions are objected (but without much foundation) to the latter. This I will here examine, after obſerving that Mr. de Tillemont ſhould not have preferred this paſſage of Dion, to the hypotheſis which Spartian leads us to (90). This hypotheſis is to ſay, that Severus married Julia, whilſt he commanded in Gallia Lugdunenſis, in the year 186. According to ſome Hiſtorians (91) Caracalla was born at Lyons.

(84) Ibid. pag. 389, 390.

(85) Xiphilin. in Caracalla, pag. 346.

(86) Idem, ibid. pag. 358.

(87) Herodian, lib. 4. cap. 13. See alſo Xiphilin. in Caracalla, pag. 358. who ſays that Caracalla reigned ſix years, two months and ſome days. Two days, according to Dion, edit. of 1606.

(88) Spart. in Severo, cap. 4. pag. 594.

(89) Xiphilin. Severo, pag. 310.

(90) See Tillemont, Hiſt. des Empereurs, tom. 3. pag. 389. and Spartian, in Severo, cap. 3 & 4. pag. 594.

(91) Aurel. Victor. in Cæſarib. pag. 211.

ENQUIRY into ſome contradictions objected to Spartian.

Triſtan (92) alledges as a proof of the contradictions of Spartian, the following words of Caracalla's Life. Hic tamen omnium duriſſimus, & ut uno complectar verbo, parricida, inceſtorum reus, patris matris, & fratris inimicus (93). i. e. "He yet was the moſt hard-heart-"ted of men; to ſay all in a word, he was guilty of "parricide and inceſt, and an enemy to his father, "mother, and brother." But methinks he cannot hereby be convicted of contradiction, and of forgetting his hypotheſis: he might aſſert, that he takes the word mater, in the ſame idea which he explains two pages before; Matrem enim (non alio dicenda erat nomine) duxit uxorem. i. e. "He married his mother, "for this was the only name ſhe could be called by." And we find that he does not omit the inceſt, in the

(92) Triſtan, Comment. Hiſt. tom. 2. pag. 119.

(93) Spart. in Caracalla, ſub fin. pag. 732.

which ſhe is called the Mother of the Camps, the Mother of the Country, and Mother of the Senate.

(94) Triſtan, Comment. Hiſt. tom. 2. pag. 119.

words related by Triſtan (94). " The abovemention-
" ed Spartian mentions the juſt reaſon which Caracalla
" ſaid he had to get his brother diſpatched, viz. that
" he deſpiſed their mother, and did not pay her the " veneration that was due; whence it is plain that
" Spartian, or the author from whom he borrowed
" it, was perſuaded that ſhe was their common mo" ther; for he would not have had any reaſon to be
" ſo much exaſperated at his brother's irreverence
" with regard to Julia, had ſhe not been his mother;
" and the pretence had been as ridiculous as it was " judged barbarous, notwithſtanding all the other rea-
" ſons he invented to palliate his cruelty and guilt."
Here we have a very bad objection; for firſt, theſe words, matri eum irreverentem fuiſſe (95), ſignify only, that Geta did not reſpect his mother; and they muſt not be tranſlated as if being ſpoken by Caracalla, they mean, Geta does not reſpect our mother. Nevertheleſs, Triſtan underſtood them in this ſenſe, which was his own fault. Secondly, it is a very ſpecious pretence, in order to extenuate the guilt of a murder, to ſay that the perſon murdered uſed his mother ill. An uſurer, who ſhould have dethroned a Prince who had treated his mother with inſolence, would not fail to accuſe him of that crime, though he were not related to the family dethroned. Cromwell and his adherents would have exhauſted all the common places of rhetoric, could they have reproached Charles I with ſo irreverent a behaviour: much more could this pretence be alledged, if a perſon was ſon-in-law to the Lady who had met with ill treatment from her own ſon. Such a man would ſay, that it was incumbent on him to defend all the rights of his father's widow againſt all opponents whatſoever; in a word, he would lay down an hundred very plauſible reaſons, ſuch as might make the ſtrongeſt impreſſion; ſo that I do not know what Triſtan was thinking of, when he called this a ridiculous pretence.

(95) Spart. in Geta, cap. 2. pag. 709.

Here follows a more real objection againſt Spartianus. He ſays (96) that Caracalla, being in his thirteenth year, was proclaimed as a partner of the Empire by the ſoldiers, on the taking of Cteſiphon. He adds that Severus, being returned to Syria, gave the Toga virilis to Caracalla, and appointed him his collegue in the Conſulate, which they entered upon immediately. This Conſulſhip was in 202, and Cteſiphon was taken in 198: and therefore it was not poſſible that Caracalla, who was killed in the year 217, ſhould have lived ſo long as is affirmed by this Hiſtorian, that is, forty three years.

(96) In Severo, cap. 16.

(a) Strabo, lib. 10. Suidas, Stephanus.

(b) Lib. 2. cap. 6.

(c) In the article ZIA, near the cloſe of the remark [C].

(d) Strabo, lib. 10.

JULIS, a town of the iſland Cea in the Ægean Sea. This city (a) gave birth to Simonides the Poet, Bacchylides the Poet his nephew, Prodicus the Sophiſt, Eraſiſtratus the Phyſician, and a Philoſopher called Ariſton [A]. Valerius Maximus (b) relates a very ſingular thing whereof he was witneſs, when he paſſed by Julis, in the retinue of Sextus Pompeius, who was going to Aſia to exerciſe his Proconſulſhip. I have ſpoke of this elſewhere (c). When the four cities in this iſland were reduced to two, Julis was one of the two (d). It was built on a mountain three miles from the ſea. As it was the native place of ſo many great men, it ſhould not have been omitted by Moreri, nor expunged from the Dictionary of Charles Stephens by Lloyd, who ought to have rectified that article [B] rather than quite ſuppreſſed it.

(1) Under the word Cea.

[A] A Philoſopher called Ariſton.] Thus we ought to ſay, and not like Moreri (1) the Philoſopher Ariſton; for this expreſſion would induce me to think, either that there was but one Philoſopher ſo called; or that the Ariſton born at Julis, was infinitely more famous than all the reſt of the Ariſtons. Now both theſe circumſtances are falſe.

[B] Lloyd... ought to have rectified that article.] Charles Stephens had done well not to declare in ſo abſolute a manner, that the iſland of Cea was called indifferently Cia or Cos: and to examine better what he relates, viz. that there was a law in Julis which ſentenced to death all perſons that were above threeſcore; and that this law was enacted in order to keep the reſt of the inhabitants from being in want of victuals. Read what we ſhall ſay on this ſubject in the notes on the article ZIA.

(a) So the Italians pronounce it.

JULIUS II, created Pope the night between the 31ſt of October and 1ſt of November 1503, was nephew to Pope Sixtus IV, and his name was called Julian de la Ruvere (a). It is related that he had been a waterman [A]. There was a very ſingular circumſtance

[A] It is related that he had been a waterman.] Eraſmus has inſerted this tradition in his Adages. A remo ad tribunal, ſays he (1), Dici ſolitum ubi quis repente ab infima conditione provehitur ad honeſti muneris adminiſtrationem. Id quod haud ſcio an ulli contigerit fœlicius quam Julio ſecundo. Nam fama eſt, hunc juvenem ad ſtipem ſcalmum remo ſubigere ſolitum, & tamen à remulco non ſolùm ad tribunal, verumetiam ad ſummum illud rerum humanarum culmen evectus eſt. Nec contentus hoc faſtigio, pontificiæ ditionis pomeria multum protulit: longius etiam productурus, ſi per mortis inclementiam vitam illi producere licuiſſet. i. e. " From the oar to the tribunal (ſays he) is ſaid " in a proverbial way, when a man is advanced " from a low condition, to an honourable poſt. " I do not know whether any man was more for- " tunate on this article than Julius II; for it is ſaid " that he, in his younger days, uſed to row for mo- " ney: and nevertheleſs he was raiſed, not only from " a boat to the tribunal, but even to the ſummit of " all human honours. And not ſatisfied with this ex- " altation, he very much enlarged the authority of the " Popes, and would have enlarged it much more, " had he not been ſnatched away by death." Father Theophilus Raynaud is miſtaken, when he ſays (2) that Eraſmus mentions the ſame thing in his explication of the proverb, A ſcapha triumphalem quadrigam: i. e. " From a boat to a triumphal chariot:" for it was not Eraſmus but Hadrian Junius (3) who explains this adage, and ſays, Efferri poteſt de quovis è fœce hominum ad magnas opes dignitateſque provecto, quemadmodum Julius Ligur poſt ſedentariam operam in ducendo ſcalmo diu navatam, Sixti Pontificis beneficio inſignibus Eccleſiaſticorum honorum ornatus, tandem ad Pontificatum maximum emerſit. i. e. " This may be ſaid of " any one who, from the dregs of the people, is " raiſed to great wealth and honours, as Pope Julius, " who, after having been long employed in rowing a " boat, was by the indulgence of Pope Sixtus, raiſed " to high honours in the Church, and at laſt aſcended " to the pontifical throne." Anaſtaſius Germonius Arch-Biſhop of Tarantaſia, has aſſerted, that whatever is related concerning the birth of Sixtus IV and Julia II is falſe; and that Leonard de la Ruvere, father to Sixtus, was a very noble Knight; and that the Ruvere family, before this Pope's exaltation, lived in great ſplendor. Sixtus IV falſo jactatus eſt è plebeiis & piſcatoribus editus, cùm patrem haberet Leonardum de Ruvere, Equitem nobiliſſimum, ut obſervavit Anaſtaſius Germonius, exponens indultum Hieronymi Cardinalis de Ruvere §. Sixtus num. 28. qui etiam §. Magnis, de gentis Ruvereæ antiquo, (etiam ante Sixtum) ſplendore, agit diffuſiſſimè (4).

(1) Eraſm. Adag. Chil. 3. Cent. 4. num. 86. pag. m. 725.

(2) Theophil. Rainaud. Hoplotheca, Sect. 2. Serie 3. cap. 1. pag. m. 303.

(3) Hadr. Junius Adag. Cent. 6. num. 43.

(4) Theophil. Rainaud. Hoplotheca, pag. 304.

circumſtances in his election [B]; for, ſtrictly ſpeaking, it was before the Cardinals entred into the Conclave. He had won over the Duke of Valentinois's faction, by making this Nobleman believe that he was his father [C], and promiſing to treat him as his ſon. However, he did the very contrary afterwards. No man was ever formed with a more martial ſoul than our Pope Julius [D]. He uſed to be preſent at the ſiege of

(5) In a manuſcript remark he favoured me with.

Mr. de la Monnoie (5) pretends that Anaſtaſius Germonius, "who only copies Onuphrius, cannot "ſtand againſt Philelphus, Baptiſt Fregoſo, Volaterranus, Corio, Eraſmus, Machiavel, Chaſſeneuz, "Bandello, du Ferron, Maſſo, and ſo many others, "many whereof are quoted by Spondanus in his Continuation of Baronius, in the year 1471. n. 10." Bandello affirms that Julius II uſed to boaſt that he had formerly rowed a boat. Giulio ſecondo Pontefice, anchorche di baſſiſſima gente foſſe diſceſo, e non ſi vergognaſſe ſpeſſe fiate dire che egli da Arbizuola, villa del Savoneſe, haveſſe con una barchetta più volte, quando era garzone, menato de le cipolle à vendere à Genova, fù nondimeno huomo di grandiſſimo ingegno, e di molto elevato ſpirto (6). i. e. "Pope Julius II, although of very mean birth, "was not aſhamed to ſay often, that from Arbizuola, a village of the Savoneſe, he, when a boy, "carried onions in a boat to ſell at Genoa; he yet "was a man of prodigious parts, and maſter of an "excellent genius."

(6) Bandello, Novell. 31. of Part 1. fol. 219 verſo. This paſſage was communicated to me by Mr. de la Monnoie.

[B] There was a very ſingular circumſtance in his election.] He was ſure of it before the Cardinals entered into the conclave; ſo that Julian de la Ruvere was Pope at his coming into it. There was an exception to this pretty common proverb, that he who is a Pope at his entering into the conclave, comes out a Cardinal. Chi entra Papa, eſce Cardinale (7). He had made ſure of his faction by ſo many promiſes, and was enabled, ſo many ways, to enrich thoſe who ſhould favour him, that it was not poſſible for him to miſs the Pontificate; for beſides the wealth he had already amaſſed, he had that of other people's, every one being eager to offer him money, and even benefices; ſo that by theſe means he was enabled to promiſe more than was deſired of him. Such are the iniquitous ſteps by which he aſcended to the Pontificate. It is not a Proteſtant who obſerves this; it is an Italian author. Ma molto più ve lo promoſſono le promiſſioni immoderate, & infinite fatte de lui a' Cardinali, a' Principi, a' Baroni, & a ciaſcuno, che gli poteſſe eſſere utile a queſto negotio, di quanto ſeppono dimandare: & hebbe oltra ciò facultà di diſtribuir danari, e molti beneficii, e dignità Eccleſiaſtiche, coſi delle ſue proprie, come di quelle d'altri: perche alla fama della ſua liberalità molti concorrevano ſpontaneamente ad offerirgli, che uſaſſe a propoſito ſuo i danari, il nome, gli ufficii, & i beneficii loro: ne fu conſiderato per alcuno eſſere molto maggiore le ſue promeſſe di quello, che poi Pontefice poteſſe, ò doveſſe oſſervare: perche haveva lungamente havuto nome tale d'huomo libero, & veridico, che Aleſſandro Seſto, nimico ſuo tanto acerbo, mordendolo nell' altre coſe, confeſſava lui eſſere huomo verace; laqual laude, egli ſapendo, che NIUNO più facilmente inganna gli altri, che chi è ſolito, & ha fama di mai non gl'ingannare; non tenne conto, per conſeguire il Ponteficato, di maculare (8). i. e. "But the circumſtances which contributed ſo much more to his advancement, was, the extravagant and numberleſs "promiſes he made to the Cardinals, Princes, Barons, "and to all thoſe who might be of ſervice to him in "that affair. Beſides, he had an opportunity of diſtributing monies and a great number of benefices, and "ſpiritual dignities, not only ſuch as were his own, but "alſo thoſe of other people; for ſo great was the fame "of his liberality, that many came to him ſpontaneouſly, and deſired him to diſpoſe at pleaſure of their "monies, their names, their offices and benefices. "Nor were his promiſes thought by many to be much "greater than he could or would fulfil, when he ſhould "be raiſed to the Pontificate; for he had ſo long enjoyed the reputation of being an ingenuous man, "and true to his word, that Alexander VI, who was "ſo bitter an enemy to Julius, and inveighed ſo "ſharply againſt him on other occaſions, confeſſed "that he was a man of his word; an encomium which "he, in order to obtain the Pontificate, did not "ſcruple to ſtain; well knowing, that no perſons have "a more eaſy opportunity of impoſing upon others, "than thoſe who are not uſed to cheat, and do not "paſs for deceivers." Had he not employed thoſe ſimoniacal methods, how would it have been poſſible for him to prevail with the Cardinals to give him their voices; he who had ever diſcovered ſo turbulent, ſo dreadful a diſpoſition, and had created ſo many enemies? Il qualo era notiſſimo eſſere di natura molto difficile, e formidabile a ciaſcuno; & il quale inquietiſſimo in ogni tempo, e che haveva conſumato l'età in continui travagli; haveva per neceſſità offeſo molti, eſſercitato odii, e nimicitie con molti huomini grandi (9). i. e. "Who being univerſally known to be of a very ſe-"vere and terrible turn of mind; who had ever been "reſtleſs, and having ſpent his life in perpetual toils, "muſt neceſſarily have offended multitudes, and exer-"ciſed hatreds againſt many perſons of high diſtinction." Money effects all things; it created a Pope before the Cardinals had met in order to elect one; a circumſtance that had never happened before. Il Cardinale di San Pietro in Vincola potente d'amici, de riputatione, e di ricchezze, haveva tirati a ſe i voti di tanti Cardinali, che non havendo ardire di opporſegli quegli, che erano di contraria ſentenza, entrando in Conclave gia Papa certo, e ſtabilito; fu con eſſempio incognito prima alla memoria de gli huomini, ſenza che altrimenti ſi chiudeſſe il Conclave, la notte medeſima, che fu la notte dell' ultimo giorno d'Ottobre, aſſunto al Ponteficato (10). i. e. "The Cardinal of St. Peter in Vinculis, who was "powerful in friends, in reputation and riches, had "gained the voices of ſo many Cardinals; that thoſe "who were againſt him not daring to make any oppoſition, he, at his entrance into the Conclave, was "elected Pope that night, the laſt of October, a circumſtance not to be parallelled in the memory of "man."

(7) Memoires des Intrigues de la Cour de Rome, printed at Paris, 1677, pag. 20.

(8) Guicciardin, lib. 6. folio m. 165 verſo.

(9) Idem, ibid.

(10) Idem, ibid. folio 165.

[C] He making.... the Duke of Valentinois believe, that he was his father.] I have read this no where but in a work of Varillas. This Hiſtorian (11) relates, that the French accuſed Julius II "of having aſcended "St. Peter's throne by two irregular ways, viz. thoſe "of ſimony (12) and knavery. To prove the ſimony, "they ſpecified the benefices and legateſhips promiſed "in the Conclave, and beſtowed after the election on "ſuch Cardinals as were chiefs of the factions; and "mentioned the ſums of money which other Cardinals had received as a reward for their voices. To "prove the knavery, they remonſtrated to the ſame "Pope that the Spaniſh Cardinals having bound themſelves by an oath, not to give their voices but to "that perſon, who ſhould be propoſed by the Duke "of Valentinois; the Cardinal of St. Peter in Vinculis, who was that Duke's enemy, bribed ſome perſons, who wrought ſo far upon that Duke as to make "him believe he was his father; that he had kept his "mother, at a time when ſhe was thought to be enjoyed only by Cardinal Borgia, who was afterwards "Alexander VI; that the jealouſy which this Borgia had conceived on that account was the ſole cauſe "of his perſecuting him for upwards of ten years; "but that now ſince a new Pope was to be elected, he, "provided the Duke would employ his intereſt for "him, would treat him as a ſon. The Duke "of Valentinois gave credit to what was told him in "confidence, ſo far as to conſent, that the Cardinals "of his faction ſhould elect him of St. Peter in Vinculis, who did not fail immediately to diveſt him of "all Romagna and Umbria, inſtead of acknowledging "him for his ſon."

(11) Anecdotes de France, pag. 229, 230.

(12) With regard to the Simony, ſee what has been cited from Guicciardin, remark [B] above.

[D] No man was ever formed with a more martial ſoul than our Pope Julius.] Here follows what John le Maire, Hiſtoriographer of Lewis XII ſays concerning this matter. "Let us farther obſerve another ſurprizing "difference in the concluſion of that work; I mean "the gracious treatment and tractable behaviour of the "Soldan towards the Moſt Chriſtian King, in compariſon of the rigour and obſtinacy of the preſent Pope, "who quite martial and ſour, in his armour, as "though of towns; and ſhewed greater ardour at them, than thoſe who commanded his armies [E]. A vaſt number of writers affirm that he one day threw St. Peter's keys into the Tyber [F], in order that he might make uſe only of St. Paul's ſword; but as thoſe writers copy one another,

" though he was deſirous that his dreadful and war-
" like armaments ſhould be ſpoke of, as thoſe of the " mighty Tamerlane, Emperor and Soldan of the " Tartars, will always continue wars, which become
" him as much as it does a Friar to dance in his ha" bit. He yet muſt not think of making a new " world wholly monſtrous, as he thinks to do; for
" hogs will always eat acorns. The oak ſhall be ſtript
" of its leaves in due time, and the wood applied to " ſuch uſes as are proper for it. But the beautiful ſtel-
" liferous crown, and the eagle of Jupiter, which, as " Aſtrologers declare, are bright celeſtial luminaries,
" fixed and immoveable, ſhall ſhine in the firmament
" ſo long as the world laſts (13)." William Budæus calls him a ſanguinary leader of gladiators, Cum interim ſub ipſo laniſta ſanguinario (14); and has repreſented in very ſtrong colours the ſcandal that Pope gave, who, at the age of ſeventy, appeared publicly in a military habit, whilſt the people were going in proceſſion to beg a peace from the Almighty. Cùm ſacerdos ſeptuagenarius Chriſti, Pacis conditoris & parentis Legatus, Bellonæ ſacris operaretur: cui cum generis humani luculento diſpendio litare contendebat. Idque tum, cùm profanum vulgus ad delubra pacis & concordiæ miſerabili ſpecie ſupplicationes inibat. Enimverò viſendum ſpectaculum, Patrem non modo ſanctiſſimum, ſed etiam ſenio & canitie ſpectabilem, quaſi ad tumultum Gallicum Bellonæ ſuma ſuos evocatos cientem; non trabea, non auguſtis inſignibus venerandum, non Pontificiis geſtaminibus ſacroſanctum, ſed paludamento & cultu barbarico conſpicuum; ſed furiali, ut ita dicam, confidentia ſuccinctum, fulminibus illis brutis & inanibus lucidum, eminente in truci vultu cultûque ſpirituum atrocitate (15). i. e. " When a Miniſter of Chriſt, aged ſeventy years,
" an Embaſſador ſent from the Prince of Peace, was " buſied in offering up ſacrifices to Bellona, to whom " vows were made in a great profuſion of human
" blood, and that at a time when the vulgar were " mournfully praying in the Churches of Peace and " Concord, it indeed was a ſurprizing ſpectacle, to " behold a moſt holy father, venerable for his old age
" and ſilver hairs, rouzing his ſubjects to war; not
" dreſſed in kingly robes or in a pontifical habit,
" but in that of a dreadful warrior, girded as it were with
" furious confidence; glittering with vain and empty
" fulminations; and diſcovering by his air and dreſs
" the rage with which he was fired." This is but a ſmall part of Budæus's violent exclamations againſt this Pope. The reader may ſee them more at large in Flacius Illyricus's twentieth book of his Catalogus teſtium veritatis.

(13) John le Maire de Belges, Prologue to his Treatiſe of Schiſms, pag. 2. Lyons edit. 1549 folio.

(14) Budæus, de Aſſe, apud Hotting. Hiſt. Eccleſ. tom. 5. pag. 545.

(15) Idem, ibid. apud eundem, Hottinger, ibid. pag. 546.

[E] He uſed to be preſent at the ſiege of towns, and ſhewed greater ardour at them than thoſe who commanded his armies.] Du Pleſſis Mornai does not make any additions to Guicciardin's expreſſions, when he ſays (16), " Being determined to attack Ferrara, he was adviſed
" to take Mirandola firſt; and being tired with the " ſlow progreſs of the ſiege, which went not to his " mind (a circumſtance not expected, and that never " happened before) *Chriſt's Vicar upon earth, was there
" in perſon, againſt a Chriſtian town*, ſays Guicciar-
" din, and though ſo old and ſick, was ſo obſtinate and
" impetuous, *in a war, which he had raiſed againſt
" the Princes of Chriſtendom*, that nothing was done
" ſoon enough; he was ever crying aloud againſt the " Captains, ever in a fury; and having his quarters
" ſo near the battery, that two men were killed in
" his kitchen, notwithſtanding all the remonſtrances
" his Cardinals could make with regard to the ſcandal
" he brought upon himſelf and the Roman Pontificate.
" Monſtrelet (17) ſays as follows on this occaſion;
" *He abandoned St. Peter's chair, to aſſume the title of " Mars God of Battle, to diſplay his three crowns in the " field, and to ſleep in a watch tower; and God knows
" what a charming figure theſe miters, croſſes and croſiers
" made fluttering up and down the fields; the devil was " not ſo ſilly as to be there, for benedictions were too
" cheap.*" Guicciardin repreſents in very ſtrong terms the particulars relating to the ſiege of Mirandola; he obſerving that the Pope did not regard in any manner the horrible ſeverity and coldneſs of the ſeaſon which retarded the beſieger's works. Partì il ſecondo dì di Gennaio (18) da Bologna accompagnato da tre Cardinali, e giunto nel campo, alloggiò in una caſetta d'un villano, ſottopoſta a' colpi dell' artiglierie de' nimici: perchè non era più lontana dalle mura della Mirandola che tiri in due volte una baleſtra commune: quivi affaticandoſi, & eſſercitando non meno il corpo che la mente, e che l'Imperio, cavalcava quaſi continuamente hora quà, hora là per il campo, ſollecitando che ſi deſſe perfettione al piantare dell' artiglierie, delle quali infino a quel giorno era piantata la minor parte, eſſendo impedite quaſi tutte l'opere militari da' tempi aſpriſſimi, e dalla neve quaſi continua (19). i. e. " The Pope ſet out the ſecond of " January from Bologna accompanied by three Car" dinals; and being come to the camp, he took up
" his quarters in a country cottage that was expoſed
" to the enemy's canon: it not being farther from
" the walls of Mirandola, than twice the diſtance of " a common croſs-bow ſhot. There toiling no leſs
" with his mind than his body, he was continually
" riding up and down the camp, in order to finiſh
" the planting of the cannon, the greateſt part of " which could not be employed till then; moſt of the " operations of war being ſuſpended by the very ri-
" gorous ſeaſon, and the almoſt perpetual ſnows."
Complaning of his Captains, he encouraged his ſoldiers by the hopes of plunder, he promiſing them not to capitulate with the city, but to permit them to ſack it. Stette alla Concordia pochi giorni riconducendolo all' eſſercito la medeſima impatientia, & ardore; il quale non raffredò punto nel camino la neve groſſiſſima, che tuttavia cadeva del Cielo, nè i freddi così ſmiſurati che a pena i ſoldati potevano tollerargli: & alloggiato in una Chieſetta propinqua alle ſue artiglierie, e più vicina alle mura, che non era l'alloggiamento primo, nè gli ſatisfacendo coſa alcuna di quelle, che ſi erano fatte, e che ſi facevano; con impetuoſiſſime parole ſi lamentava di tutti i Capitani, eccetto che di Marc' Antonio Colonna, il quale di nuovo haveva fatto venire da Modena; nè procedendo con minore impeto per l'eſſercito, hora queſti ſgridando, hora quelli altri confortando, e facendo con le parole, e con i fatti l' officio del Capitano. Prometteva, che i ſoldati procedevano virilmente, che non accetterebbe la Mirandola con alcuno patto; ma laſcierebbe in poteſtà loro il ſaccheggiarla (20). i. e. " The Pope did not ſtay
" long at Concordia, the ſame impatience and heat
" drawing him back to the army; nor was his fury
" leſſened in any manner by the prodigious ſnows
" that fell perpetually in the road, nor by the cold
" which was ſo extreme that the ſoldiers could ſcarce
" bear it. He himſelf was quartered in a little Church
" near to his artillery, and nearer the walls than his " former quarters were; and not being ſatisfied with " any thing that had been done or was then doing,
" he vented the moſt bitter complaints againſt all his
" Captains, except Mark Anthony Colonna, whom " he had lately ſent for from Modena. He rode with " great impatience about the camp; one moment
" crying out to one, and the next exhorting another,
" and acting as a Captain both in his words and actions.
" He promiſed that if the ſoldiers would ſignalize
" themſelves, he would not ſuffer the citizens of Mi-
" randola to come to any compoſition whatſoever,
" but ſuffer his army to ſack it." Mezerai (21) relates that the city having been ſurrendered upon articles the 19th of March (22), the Pope would be, and was carried into it through the breach.

(16) Du Pleſſis, Myſtere d'Iniquité, pag. 578.

(17) Du Pleſſis cites Monſtrelet in the new Additions, but it is an error; for Monſtrelet died before the Pontificate of Julius II, and is not author of thoſe Additions.

(18) Of the year 1511.

(19) Guicciard. lib. 9. folio 262 verſo.

(20) Ibid. folio 263.

(21) Abrégé Chronol. tom. 4. pag. 455. ad ann. 1511.

[F] A vaſt number of writers affirm that he one day threw St. Peter's keys into the Tyber.] I have not hitherto met with any other authority for this incident than the following Latin epigram of one Gilbertus Ducherius Vulto (23) of Aigueperſe.

In Gallum, ut fama eſt, bellum geſturus acerbum,
Armatam educit Julius urbe manum:
Accinctus gladio, claves in Tibridis amnem
Projicit, & ſævus, talia verba facit:
Quum Petri nihil efficiant ad prælia claves,
Auxilio Pauli forſitan enſis erit.

(22) He ſhould have ſaid the 20th of January.

(23) Du Pleſſis, pag. 580. cites only this author, and calls him Gilbertus Ducterius. He was of Aigueperſe in Auvergne. His Epigrams were printed at Lyons in 1538.

" Julius

another, without citing one original author of credit, I would not adviſe any perſon to warrant that incident. However this be, it may be ſaid that if this Pope was not endowed with the qualities that form the good Biſhop, he at leaſt had thoſe of a conquering Prince. Pope Julius was very courageous, and had a head that was well turned for politicks, by which he formed alliances, or broke them, accordingly as it ſuited his intereſt. He made a very formidable League againſt the Commonwealth of Venice; and employed, among other things, the thunder of his excommunications; but finding that the victory which the King of France, one of the Chiefs of that League, had obtained over the Venetians, weakened that Republic too much, he abandoned his allies, and joined thoſe of Venice. The Emperor and King of France being equally diſguſted at him, endeavoured to bring him to reaſon, by a method that was always formidable to the Popes, viz. by calling a Council (b). However, this did not intimidate our Julius in any manner, but he proceeded with ſeverity againſt this Council; and called another which gained the ſuperiority, and to which the King of France at laſt ſubmitted, after a low and groveling manner [G]. Julius II was indeed not alive at that time. The ſacred

(b) It was convened at Piſa, and afterwards transferred to Milan, and laſtly at Lyons.

" Julius, as fame reports, reſolv'd to wage
" Fell war with Gaul, leads out a mighty army:
" Girt with his ſword, he into Tiber throws
" The keys; and furious, loudly thus he cries;
" Since, Peter, thy fam'd keys in war avail not,
" I'll now unſheathe, O Paul, thy mighty ſword.

It muſt be confeſſed that this is a very weak foundation; for when a Poet has a pretty thought, but does not find a ſubject proper for him to apply it, he does not ſcruple very much to ſupply the want of it by amplifications and fictions; and will rather ſacrifice the truth than loſe a ſmart ſaying. Poëtæ modo aliquid argutè vel acutè dicere videantur, plerumque verumne ſit an falſum, propemodum non curant (24). Be this as it will, this action of Julius II, whether true or falſe, is related by a great number of authors. One of the lateſt writers where I have ſeen it relates it thus (25). Percuſſo cum ipſis (Venetis) fœdere exercitum ſuum adverſus Imperatoris confœderatos Ferrarienſem & Ludovicum XII, Regem Francorum, iniquiſſimus & perfidiſſimus bellator eduxit (26), cum ea voce, quæ ipſum non S. Petri, ſed perditiſſimi & ſceleratiſſimi latronis ſucceſſorem eſſe commonſtravit. Cum exercitu enim Roma egreſſus, Petri clavem furibundus in Tiberim jactavit, adeoque, uti ingenioſe Bibliander concluſit, omne, quod à Sancto Petro ſe habere finxit jus, Tiberino flumini reſignavit; additis hiſce verbis: Quia clavis S. Petri amplius nil juvat, (evaginato gladio) valeat gladius S. Pauli. i. e. " Having concluded an alliance with the Venetians, " this moſt unjuſt and moſt perfidious warrior marched " out his army againſt the Emperor's allies, viz. the " Duke of Ferrara, and Lewis XII of France, em- " ploying ſuch an expreſſion as ſhewed him to be the " ſucceſſor, not of St. Peter, but of a moſt abandoned " and moſt villainous robber; for leading his army out " of Rome, he, in a fury, threw St. Peter's key into " the Tyber; in this manner reſigning, as Bibliander " ingeniouſly concludes, all the right and power which " he pretended to have received from St. Peter; ad- " ding the following words, ſince St. Peter's key is now " of no ſervice, (ſaying which he unſheathed his ſword) " let's ſee what St. Paul's ſword will do." I muſt not omit that Hotman relates the ſame incident on the credit of Arnould du Ferron a Catholic Hiſtorian. Is eſt Julius ſecundus, ſays he (27), de quo & Arnoldus Ferronus, vir imprimis doctus, & Galliæ noſtræ hiſtoricus, & Burdegalenſis quondam Parlamenti Senator, itemque alii complures memoriæ prodiderunt: quòd cùm exercitu comparato Roma in Galliam, infeſto in Regem noſtrum animo, contenderet, ſuaſque armatas copias ipſe loricatus ex urbe per Tiberis pontem educeret, multis hominum audientibus hæc pronuntiavit: Quando nobis claves Petri nihil proſunt, age, gladium Pauli diſtringamus: ſimul claves, quas ſecum attulerat, in Tiberim projecit, gladiumque vagina eduxit. Qua de re notum illud vetus carmen eſt (28),

I could never have believed that Hotman could be guilty of the unfairneſs, of which I am going to convict him. I have looked into Arnold du Ferron, and do not find that he cites Ducherius's epigram, as Hotman ſeems to ſay. The verſes he quotes are of a very different kind; and he has added to them the anſwer which John de Laſcaris made in favour of Julius II. I do not deny but that he relates the incident concerning the throwing of St. Peter's keys into the Tyber, but he queſtions whether it be not a fiction. Quin vulgatum eſt, ſays he (29), JOCONE CONFICTO an vero, quando Romani pictores Petro claves, Paulo enſem tribuunt, illum in Gallos emiſſurum copias enſe accinctum & clavibus ad Tybrim profectum in aquas amnemque projeciſſe claves, hæc inferentem, quandoquidem nihil Petri claves prodeſſent, Pauli enſem (quem mox eduxerat) auxilio futurum. i. e. " It is reported, truly " or jokingly, that whereas the Roman painters draw " St. Peter with keys and St. Paul with a ſword, our " Pope being about to march out an army againſt the " French, armed with the ſword and keys, and paſſing " by the river Tyber, toſſed the keys into it, ſaying " at the ſame time, that ſince St. Peter's keys were of " no benefit, he would make uſe of St. Paul's ſword " which he immediately drew." Now is it conſiſtent with fairneſs and ſincerity, to ground ſuch a ſtory on the authority of a great Catholic Magiſtrate, and to omit the declaration he made, viz. that he did not know but it might be an impoſture? Moſt books are full of ſuch quotations; and that perſon, who often takes the pains to verify whether thoſe who quote authors act with candor and exactneſs on thoſe occaſions; any perſon, I ſay, who often takes that pains, muſt neceſſarily contract ſuch a diſtruſt as will prompt him to believe only his own eyes. If an author of ſo great a reputation as Hotman takes ſuch a liberty, what will not the little fry of authors do, who have nothing to loſe? We here muſt argue juſt contrary to him who cried out, Quid Domini facient, audent cum talia fures (30)?

The ſenſe is,
" What wou'd not maſters do, if ſervants take " Such freedom?

[G] The King of France ſubmitted after a low and groveling manner.] This confirms what I have ſaid elſewhere (31), that Princes ſeldom or never ended their quarrels with the Popes but to their confuſion. Lewis XII had convened an aſſembly of the Gallican Church at Tours in 1510, in order to enquire whether he could juſtly make war on Julius II. This aſſembly had told him, that his cauſe was juſt, and that of the Pope was not ſo: and that he might proceed to the offenſive part, in order to defend himſelf (32). At his and the Emperor's requeſt, and in execution of the decree of the Council of Conſtance (33), ſome Cardinals had convened a great Council at Piſa. He and the Emperor had approved by their letters patents (34) the calling of this Council; he had protected the fathers who compoſed it, and who had declared Julius ſuſpended from the adminiſtration of the Pontificate, and forbad all obedience to him (35); he had protected them, I ſay, againſt this Pope, who excommunicated and degraded them in his Council of Lateran; and nevertheleſs the ſame King declared ſome time after, that he looked upon the aſſembly of Piſa as a pretended Council. " His proxies, theſe are the words of the inſtru- " ment (36), having in their hands the letters patents " of the ſaid Moſt Chriſtian King, ſealed with his " ſeal, and ſigned by him, and diſpatched by his com- " mand, after the reverence and humility required in " ſuch caſes, have entirely departed from the pre- " tended Council of Piſa, and fully renounced it: and " entirely, freely and ſimply adhered to the moſt holy

" Council

(24) Papyr. Maſſo, in Vita Leonis X.

(25) Joan. Henric. Heideggerus, Hiſt. Papatus, pag. 192, 193.

(26) Du Pleſſis, pag. 580. ſhould not have fixed this expedition a little after his election to the Pontificate.

(27) In Bruto Fulmine, pag. m. 110, 111.

(28) It is Ducherius's Epigram quoted above: Hotman gives it at length.

(29) Arn. Ferronus, in Ludovico XII folio m. 52 verſo.

(30) Virgil. Eclog. 3. ver. 16.

(31) The end of the note [B] in the article GREGORY VII.

(32) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. tom. 4. pag. 453.

(33) Ibid. pag. 457.

(34) Dated in July 1511.

(35) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. tom. 4. pag. 462.

(36) It is found entire in la Reponſe du Coffreteau au Myſtere d'Iniquité, pag. 1221, & ſeq.

sacred League which he formed in Italy received a dreadful blow by the battle of Ravenna (c); and if his enemies had known how, or been able, to make a proper use of that advantage, they doubtless would have humbled this haughty Pontif; whereas they gave him an opportunity to recover himself after this severe shock [H], by the little benefit they made of this victory, to which the powerful diversions made in his favour contributed greatly. The Swiss indulged him great succours; in return for which our Pontif bestowed, with great liberality, titles and a great many marks of honour on the Cantons [I]. He was snatched away by sickness, in the midst of the great designs he was meditating [K], the twenty second of February 1513. He was a lover of

(c) The 11th of April, being Easter Sunday of the year 1512.

" Council of Lateran, as the only true and lawful " one. Farther, pursuant to their procuration aforesaid, " they have promised, that henceforward the said " most Christian King shall not shew any favour, or " give any assistance, in any manner whatsoever, to " the said pretended Council of Pisa: but rather, that " all those who shall be in his city of Lyons, or in " any other part of his Kingdom, Territories and " Lordships belonging to him, persisting in their ad- " herence to the said pretended Council of Pisa, shall " be forced to quit those places in a month; and all " those, of what state, degree, dignity or condition " they may be, whether Laity or Clergy, who shall " refuse obstinately to obey, he will drive them out, " and consider them as Schismaticks; and as such, " on any order of the said holy Father, shall pursue " them with an armed force in case it be necessary. " Farther, the said proxies have promised as above, " that the said most Christian King shall cause six " Prelates, and four Doctors, or most eminent Gra- " duates among those who were in the said pretended " Council of Pisa, shall be deputed to our said holy " Father the Pope, for and in the name of the said " pretended Council of Pisa, and representing the " body of all those who adhered to it, to appear in " person, between this and the first of January, be- " fore his Holiness, in order to renounce entirely and " simply the said Council of Pisa, and abjure it, after " having asked and received, humbly and in due " form, forgiveness and absolution from his Holiness. " And moreover, that they shall adhere and incorpo- " rate themselves with the said Council of Lateran, " as to the only true and undoubted one, both in " their own name and in that of their adherents. " But in case they shall refuse to do this, the said " King shall not give any succour, assistance, or fa- " vour against the authority of the holy, Apostolical " See, to any of those that were present at, or fa- " voured the said pretended Council of Pisa; on the " contrary, he shall to the utmost of his power, cause " to be executed the sentences, decrees, and censures " of our holy Father, even by force of arms, in case " it be necessary, without the least dissimulation or " fraud." This is what those Prelates gain who side with their Prince in the contests he may have with the Court of Rome; they are sacrificed to the Pope when the divisions are ended. It is surprizing that so great a number should prefer their temporal to their spiritual Prince.

[H] They gave him an opportunity to recover himself after this severe shock.] He recovered himself so well, that the French were forced to evacuate the Milanese that very year. Nothing did so much prejudice to Lewis XII as the superstition of Anne of Bretagne his queen. She filled her brain with so many scruples, with respect to the war which the French waged against the Pope, that she retarded all her husband's good designs (37).

(37) See Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. pag. 457, 460.

[I] Our Pontif bestowed, with great liberality, titles . . . . on the Cantons.] " Whereas his predecessors " gave privileges to the Mendicant Friars, this Pope " bestowed them on the Swiss Cantons, who were then " the chief executors of his high enterprizes, to whom " he gave the perpetual title of Defenders of Ecclesiastical Liberty, with several Bulls, Standards, a Sword " and a golden Cap, and other presents, to oblige them " to obey all his commands (38)."

(38) Du Plessis Mornai, Mystere d Iniquité, pag. 580. See also Heidegger, Hist. Papatus, pag. 192, 193.

[K] He was snatched away by sickness, in the midst of the great designs he was meditating (39).] This we are told by Guicciardin (40). In questi tali e tanti pensieri (that is, to prompt the King of England to make war on France, and dethrone Lewis XII, and bestow his Kingdom on the first who should be able to conquer it) e forse ancora in altri più occulti, e maggiori (perche in un' animo tanto feroce non era incredibile concetto alcuno, quantunque vasto, e smisurato) l'oppresse dopò infirmita di molti giorni la morte. . . . . Principe d'animo, e di costanza inestimabile, ma impetuoso, e di concetti smisurati, per i quali che non precipitasse, lo sostenne più la riverenza della Chiesa, la discordia de' Principi, e la conditione de' tempi, che la moderatione, e la prudenza: degno certamente di somma gloria, se fusse stato Principe seculare, ò se quella cura, & intentione, che hebbe ad esaltare con l'arti della guerra, la Chiesa nella grandezza temporale, havesse havuta ad esaltarla con l'arti della pace nelle cose spirituali: e nondimeno sopra tutti suoi antecessori, di chiarissima, & honoratissima memoria, massimamente appresso a coloro, iquali, essendo perduti i veri vocaboli delle cose, e confusa la distintione del pesarle rettamente, giudicano che sia più ufficio de' Pontefici, aggiugnere con l'armi, e col sangue de Christiani, imperio alla Sedia Apostolica, che l'affaticarsi con l'essempio buono della vita, e col correggere, e medicare i costumi trascorsi per la salute di quelle anime, per laquale si magnificano che Christo gli habbia constituiti in terra suoi Vicari (41). i. e. " In " these mighty and various thoughts, and perhaps " in others more secret and more important (for in so " fierce a mind as his, no idea or imagination, how " vast soever it might be, is incredible) he, after " many days sickness, drew near his end. . . . . he " was a Prince of wonderful constancy and courage, " but so impetuous and full of vast conceptions, that " the reverence due to the church, the discord of " Princes, and the state of the times, did more to " prevent his ruin, than his own moderation or pru- " dence. He doubtless would be worthy of the " highest glory, had he been a temporal Prince; or " if that care and attention he had to raise the tem- " poral grandeur of the church by means of war, had " been employed to raise it, by means of peace, in " spiritual matters. Nevertheless he was bewailed " more than any of his predecessors, though ever so " worthy; and particularly by those persons, who " having lost the true names of things, and confound- " ed distinctions in such a manner that they were not " able to weigh them rightly, thought it an office " more duly belonging to the Popes, to increase the " power of the See of Rome by arms and the blood of " Christians, than to endeavour, by good examples " of life, and a proper curing of corrupt manners, at " the salvation of those souls, for which they glory, " that Christ has appointed them his Vicar upon " earth." How judicious is this, and how admirable a censure is it of those impatient Doctors, who believe that every thing is just, provided it contributes to the temporal grandeur of the church! This strikes Cardinal Pallavicino in particular, who speaks so faintly of the faults of Julius II, and excuses them on account of the temporal advantages they brought to St. Peter's patrimony. Fu dotato, says he (42), di spiriti eccelsi, à tal che se fosse stato principe di dominio sol temporale, meriterebbe d'esser contato fra gli Eroi . . . . Certamente senza una tal ferocia non havrebbe ricuperato egli alla Chiesa il piu e'l meglio del suo dominio. i. e. " That " Pope was endowed, says he, with a high spirit, in- " somuch that had he been a temporal Prince, he " would deserve to be ranked among the Heroes . . . " Had it not been for that fierceness, he certainly " would not have recovered to the church the " most and best parts of its jurisdiction or patrimo- " ny."

(41) See a passage of Mezerai, in the remark [O] citation (60).

(42) Istoria del Concilio, lib. 1. cap. 1. num. 3.

Paulus Jovius (43) declares that Julius II, at his death, had meditated a grand design on the Kingdom of Naples. Hæc ingenti animo, verum ægro corpore cogitantem, diuturnus fluentis alvi morbus intercepit (44). It was said that the title of Deliverer of Italy, with which

(43) Ibid. num. 5.

(44) Jovius, in Vita Alfonsi Ferrariæ Ducis, pag. m. 353, 354.

of the fair-ſex and the bottle [L]; and he is even accuſed of ſporting with his own ſex [M]; and there is not a ſingle crime he eſcapes being accuſed of, in a dialogue which it is pretended he had with St. Peter at Paradiſe Gate. The hatred he conceived againſt France, where he had found ſo ſecure an aſylum under the Pontificate of Alexander VI, was ſo exceſſive, that he gave orders for killing all the French that ſhould which he ſuffered himſelf to be flattered, was but an empty name, whilſt the Spaniards were poſſeſſed of Naples: If God will but enable me to act, anſwered he, ſtriking his ſtaff againſt the floor, it ſhall not be ſo long. Ad quod Pontifex quaſſato ſcipione quo innixus pavimentum infrendendo pertundebat, reſpondit brevi futurum, ut Neapolitani non iratis ſuperis externum jugum excuterent (45).

(45) Idem, ibid.

[L] He was a lover of the fair ſex and the bottle.] We are told that the Emperor Maximilian made the following exclamation: Deus æterne! niſi vigilares quam male eſſet mundo, quem regimus nos, ego miſer venator, & ebrioſus ille ac ſceleratus Julius (46). i. e. "Eternal God! if thou didſt not watch over the world "what would become of it, under ſuch an Emperor as "I (a poor hunter) and ſo wicked and drunken a "Pope as Julius II?" Some Hiſtorians obſerve, that this Pontif invented a new name in order to accuſe the French of drinking wine too copiouſly, and voiding it immediately by urine, and they add that this was his great vice. Gallos in univerſum novo nomine augens Romanam ſupellectilem, Micturivinos vocaret, quaſi immodicos vini potores quod mox emittendum eſſet, quo vitio ipſe maximè laborabat (47). i. e. "He added a new word "to the Roman tongue, giving the French the gene-"ral name of Wine-Piſſers, as though they drank "wine immoderately, which was to be voided after-"wards; a vice to which he himſelf was very much "addicted." I proceed next to his lewdneſs. He had a daughter, who was married to John Jordan de Urſinis, and he is made to ſay in a dialogue he had with St. Peter (48), that he had had the foul diſeaſe.

(46) Du Pleſſis, Myſtere d'Iniquité, pag. 580. citing Joachim Curæus, Freiſtadienſis, in Annalibus Gentis Sileſiæ.

(47) Arnoldus Ferronus, in Ludovic. XII, fol. 52 verſo.

(48) I ſpeak of this Dialogue in the remark [N]

It is to be obſerved, that there is an error in the words of Arnold du Ferron above cited. He ſuppoſes that the Pope coined the Latin word Micturivinos to denote the drunkenneſs of the French; but Julius II did not expreſs himſelf in that language; he employing the Italian tongue, and the word Piſciavini. It is ſaid that one of his officers, a Norman, ſaid one day to him, alluding to this, By my troth, holy Father, you are a true Frenchman then; for you are one of the greateſt Wine-Piſſers upon earth (49).

(49) I am obliged to Mr. de la Monnoie for this remark.

[M] He is even accuſed of ſporting with his own ſex.] It is certain that Julius II is accuſed of this abominable vice. We read in a treatiſe of one of our Divines of Paris, of two young Gentlemen forced by him, whom Queen Anne, conſort of Lewis XII, had recommended to Cardinal de Nantes, in order to carry them into Italy (50). In all probability du Pleſſis gives us here a tranſlation of the following words of Wolfius. Legitur in Commentario Magiſtrorum Pariſienſium (α) de Julio ſecundo Papa, quod duobus nobiliſſimi generis adoleſcentibus, quos Anna Galliarum Regina Nanetenſi Cardinali informandos commiſerat, & aliis multis diabolicâ rabie (proh facinus) ſtuprum intulerit (51). This quotation ſeems to me too vague and indeterminate; he ſhould have told us where, and in what place, the treatiſe of the Paris Doctors was printed. John Crepin, has been guilty of an anachroniſm, in the relation he gives of this adventure. "We "read, ſays he (52), in a certain commentary of the "Doctors of Paris againſt the Lutherans, that this "Julius, excited by a diabolical frenzy, forcibly en-"joyed two youths of a noble family, whom Queen "Anne of France had ſent to Robert Cardinal de "Nantes, to be inſtructed by him." The Doctors of Paris would have been far from inſerting ſuch a particular in a controverſial piece againſt the Lutherans; if they had inſerted it any where, it is in the pieces that were wrote againſt Julius II under Lewis XII.

(50) Du Pleſſis, Myſtere d'Iniquite, pag. 581.

(51) Wolfius, Lection. Memorab. tom. 2. pag. 21.

(52) In his Etat de l'Egliſe, ad ann. 1513, pag. m. 512.

§ (α) This citation of Wolfius is falſe. He ſhould have ſaid: in Commentario ſuper Articulos Magiſtrorum Pariſienſium: whence it would have appeared, that this Commentary being a compoſition of the new Lutherans, one might expect to find ſuch facts in it, as could not be decently advanced by the Sorbonne. This commentary, (to obſerve it tranſiently) is cited by John Bale in his Life of Clement VII; and it relates to the XXV articles of the Sorbonne, publiſhed by Peter Gallandius in 1543, and refuted by Calvin in his Antidote, &c. See Du Boulai, Tom. VI, pag. 384 and 385 of his Hiſtory of the Univerſity of Paris. REM. CRIT.]

[N] A Dialogue which it is pretended he had with St. Peter at Paradiſe gate.] This is a very ſatyrical piece. Wolfius has inſerted it in his Lectiones memorabiles (53). Rivetus (54) affirms that it was printed at Paris with the King's licence in the year 1612, at the end of the acts of the Council of Piſa. The ſubſtance of this Satyr is as follows. "Paulo poſt ipſius mortem Vir quidam doctus in lucem emiſit Dialogum, quem inſcripſit, Julius, in quo Pontificem hunc horrendorum criminum inſimulat, nim. quod fuerit homo pa-"lam ſceleroſus, temulentus, homicida, ſimoniacus, "veneficus, perjurus, rapax, portentoſis libidinum ge-"neribus undique conſpurcatus, denique ſcabie, quam "vocant Gallicam, totus coopertus (55). i. e. "Soon "after his death, a certain learned man publiſhed a "dialogue, to which he gave the title of Julius, "wherein this Pope is accuſed of horrid crimes, viz. "with being publickly a miſchievous man, a drunkard, "a murderer, guilty of ſimony, a poiſoner, a per-"jured wretch, rapacious, defiled in every reſpect with "luſts of a monſtrous kind; in fine, quite covered "over with what is called the French diſeaſe." Some declared that this ſharp piece was wrote by Fauſtus Andrelinus (56), and ſome aſcribed it to Eraſmus. Placcius affirms that ſeveral authors declare this, in the two places he quotes of Melchior Adam (57). I have looked into thoſe two places, and find no other teſtimony than that of Leo Juda. Thus Placcius impoſes upon us. Eraſmus was very angry that this piece ſhould be aſcribed to him, and he endeavours to clear himſelf, very ſeriouſly, of this imputation in a letter; wherein he obſerves, that the piece in queſtion was wrote againſt Pope Julius during the ſchiſm, but that he could not tell who the author was. That he had juſt caſt his eye upon it five years before; and had met with it in Germany, but under different titles. That ſome ſaid it was compoſed by a Spaniard, others by Fauſtus the Poet, and others again by Jerom Balbus. That he was not able to gueſs who it was wrote by; that the author, whoever he was, muſt be ſilly; but that he who publiſhed it was much more in fault. That he is ſurprized that ſome perſons ſhould declare it to be his merely from the ſtyle, he judging it to be vaſtly different from it, &c. Dialogi cujuſdam ſuſpicionem mihi moliuntur impingere. Is, ut ex argumento ſatis conſtat, ſcriptus eſt in odium divi Julii Pontificis maximi ſchiſmatis tempore, ſed à quo incertum, ante quinque annos deguſtavi veriùs quam legi. Poſt reperi in Germania apud quoſdam deſcriptum, ſed variis titulis. Quidam teſtabantur Hiſpani cujuſpiam eſſe, ſed ſuppreſſo nomine, rurſus alii Fauſto Poëtæ tribuebant, alii Hieronymo Balbo. Ego quid de his conjectem non habeo, ſubodoratus ſum quoad licuit, verum nondum perveſtigavi, quod animo meo faceret ſatis. Ineptiit quiſquis ſcripſit, at majore ſupplicio dignus, quiſquis evulgavit. Ac miror eſſe qui ſolo ſtyli argumento mihi obtrudere parent, quum nec mea ſit phraſis, niſi prorſus ipſe mihi ſum ignotus, nec mirum ſit futurum, etiam ſi qui in oratione nonnihil referrent Eraſmicum, quum verſer in manibus omnium, & referimus ferè, in quorum aſſidua lectione verſamur (58) (β).

(53) Pag. 61. of vol. 2.

(54) Remarques ſur la Réponſe au Myſtere d'Iniquité, Part 2. pag. 634.

(55) Joan. Zuinger, de Feſto Corporis Chriſti, pag. 140.

(56) In the edition of Wolfius, it is in the title F. A. F. Poetæ Regii Libellus de obitu Julii ſecundi.

(57) A Deſiderio ERASMO Roterodamo conſcriptus eſſe diverſorum teſtimoniis confirmatur apud Melch. Adam. in Vitis Theolog. Germ. pag. m 96. (it ſhould be 97). and pag. 167. (it ſhould be 197) in Vitis Medic. Germ. Placcius, de Anonymis, num. 259. pag. 72.

(58) Eraſmi, Epiſt. 1. lib. 12. pag. 575, 576.

§ (β) Notwithſtanding theſe proteſtations of Eraſmus, yet this dialogue has ſtill been aſcribed to him; and the late Mr. Baluze has left, at the beginning of his copy, a Preface in his own hand writing, wherein he aſſerts that Eraſmus is certainly the author of it. See Num. 2656 of Bibliotheca Baluziana, printed at Paris, for Martin and Boudot, 1719, in three volumes in 12mo. REM. CRIT.]

ſhould be met with [O], and promiſed a reward to all thoſe who ſhould execute his command. We muſt not believe that the wine and hams which he ſent to the King of England, were the true cauſe of the war which the Engliſh proclaimed againſt France [P]. I don't know whether it be poſſible to find a certain ſpeech wherein he was very much abuſed. Varillas who ſpeaks of this, has expoſed himſelf to cenſure [Q]. Cardinal Bembo's

[O] The hatred he conceived againſt France... was ſo exceſſive... that he gave orders for killing all the French that ſhould be met with.] "Pope Julius obſerved no bounds in his anger. He had drawn up "a decree, in the name of the Council, to transfer "the Kingdom of France, and the title of Moſt Chriſtian to the King of England (56), As he was "juſt going to make this public, heaven taking pity "on him and of Chriſtendom ſnatched him away the "23d of February. He died of a hectic fever, cauſed, "as it is related, by the uneaſineſs he was under, at "his not having been able to prevail with the Venetians "to be reconciled with the Emperor; ſo furious were "his paſſions, and more becoming a Turkiſh Sultan "than the common father of the Chriſtians (60)." As for his order to murther all the French, I have read it no where but in page 109 and 110 of Francis Hotman's Brutum Fulmen. Si quæ patrum memoria, ſays he, in hoc regno contigerunt recordari volumus, primùm hoc reperiemus: Ludovicum XII (at, quem Regem? qui Patris patriæ nomen ſummo bonorum omnium conſenſu adeptus eſt) urbes aliquot Italiæ, bello captas, Papæ Julii ſecundi ditioni adjunxiſſe. Papam intermiſſis aliquot menſibus hanc Regi pro accepto beneficio gratiam retuliſſe, ut non modò eum ſchiſmaticum & hæreticum pronuntiaret, proſcriberet, diris ſuis excommunicationum fulminibus inſectaretur: verum etiam Gallos omnes hoſtilem in modum cruciandos, interficiendoſque curaret: præmium etiam percuſſoribus polliceretur, peccatorum omnium veniam, & impunitatem, ſi quis vel unicum Gallum quoquo modo trucidaret... Quo nuntio (61) Julius accepto tanto dolore atque iracundia exarſit, ut non modò Gallis omnibus aqua & igne interdiceret, verumetiam obvium quemque mactari, trucidarique imperaret: præmiis etiam, ut dixi, ſicarios ac percuſſores invitaret. i. e. "If we would recollect thoſe things which happened in this Kingdom "in the memory of our fathers, the firſt incident that "occurs is this: Lewis XII (but what kind of Monarch was he? One who obtained the title, by the "univerſal conſent of all good men, of father of his "country) added ſome cities of Italy, that had been "taken during the war, to the dominions of Pope "Julius II. That this Pontif, ſome months after, "rewarded the King in the following manner for the "favours he had received; viz. that he not only pronounced him a ſchiſmatic and heretic; proſcribed "and excommunicated him; but even cauſed all the "French to be tortured and murthered; and even "promiſed all thoſe who ſhould kill, in any manner "ſoever, but a ſingle Frenchman, not only a reward, "but likewiſe the pardon of all their ſins... This "news being brought Julius (61), he flew into ſuch a "paſſion, that he not only excommunicated all the "French, but even commanded thoſe who ſhould "meet with them to murther them; he alſo en"couraged ruffians and murtherers, as I before ob"ſerved, by promiſing them rewards."

(59) Concitava il Re d'Ingbilterra alla guerra: al quale haveva ordinato ebe per decreto del Concilio Lateranenſe ſe traſferiſſe, il nome del Re Chriſtianiſſimo: ſopra laqual coſa era già ſcritta una Bolla, contenendoſi in eſſa medeſimamente la privatione della dignita, e del titolo di Re di Francia, concedendo quel Regno a qualunque lo occupaſſe. Guicciard. lib. 11. folio 325.

(60) Mezerai, Abreg. Chronolog. tom. 4. pag. 464. ad ann. 1513.

(61) i. e. that he had been ſuſpended by the Council of Piſa tranſferred to Milan.

[P] We muſt not believe that the wine and hams... was the true cauſe of the war which the Engliſh proclaimed againſt France.] Spondanus has been ſo unfair as to inſinuate this, and to joke upon it; and he pretends that the only reaſon why Polydore Virgil ſuppreſſed ſuch an incident, was, that he might have at one and the ſame time the honour both of Italy and England. This Polydore was an Italian, and he reſided in England, for which reaſon he intereſted himſelf for the honour and glory of both nations. Now he thought it ſhame that Italy ſhould win over people by ſuch a lure, and a ſhame for England to let itſelf be caught by ſuch a bait. Here follows the Annaliſt's words. Feſtivum eſt quod refert Guicciardinus, appuliſſe hoc tempore in Angliam Pontificiam longam navem Falerno vino, caſeis ſuminibuſque onuſtam; quæ nomine Pontificis Regi, ac Principibus, Antiſtitibuſque donata, ab omnibus miro applauſu accepta ſunt: & plebem, quam plerumque non minùs levia quàm gravia movent, ad eam navem videndam ſummâ cùm voluptate accurriſſe, gloriantem anteà nunquam in eâ inſulâ navim ullam cum Pontificiis vexillis conſpectam. Quibus bellam gentem nobis depingit Guicciardinus, & vini acutique guſtûs appetentem, quibus ſciret Pontifex eam facilè in partes ſuas trahi poſſe; ſicuti olim Narſes feciſſe dicitur (*), ut Longobardos in Italiam alliceret; omnis generis poma, aliarumque déliciarum irritamenta, quorum Italia ferax eſſet, mittens, ut pauperrima ſua rura deſerentes ad occupandam regionem cunctis refertam divitiis venirent. Eam verò rem adeò inſignem, & Regi, principibuſque, & antiſtibus, ac populo maximè acceptam gratamque, cùm Polydorus Virgilius ſuæ Hiſtoriæ Anglicanæ non inſeruerit; exiſtimamus, ut Italum & in Angliâ commorantem, utriuſque nationis gravitati parcere voluiſſe (62). i. e. "Guicciardin tells a pleaſant ſtory, viz, that one of "the Pope's ſhips, laden with Falernian wine, cheeſes, "and hams, came at that time to England; all which "things being preſented in the Pope's name to the "King, the Lords and Prelates, were received univerſally with applauſe; and that the common people, "who are generally as much affected with trifles as "with things of a ſolid kind, flocked with the utmoſt "pleaſure to view this ſhip; boaſting that they had "never before beheld a ſhip in their iſland carrying "the Pope's colours. Guicciardin ſays, that the fine "nation in queſtion was very fond of wine and high "ſeaſoned meats, by which the Roman Pontif knew "he ſhould eaſily prevail with them to ſide with "him: as it is related that Narſes did formerly, in "order to entice the Lombards into Italy; ſending "them fruits of every kind, and other dainties of "which Italy is fruitful, in order that they might "be prevailed upon to leave their extreme poor rural "cottages, and poſſeſs themſelves of a country abounding with riches of every kind. Now Polydore Virgil "has omitted, in his Hiſtory of England, this re"markable incident, ſo highly acceptable to the King, "the Lords and Prelates, and eſpecially to the people; "and the reaſon for his omitting it I take to be this: "as he was born in Italy, and reſided in England, "he did not care to expoſe either of thoſe nations." Mezerai comes much nearer to truth and good ſenſe; he obſerving, that the Pope fired Henry VIII with the ambition of protecting the true Church. The Engliſh, ſays he (63), "were upon the point of breaking with "the King: for the Pope had intoxicated them with "the vain glory of defending the Holy See, and with "the flavour of the delicious wines of every kind, "whereof he had ſent them a large ſhip-load, toge"ther with hams, ſauſages and ſpices, to make them "reliſh the better." According to Varillas (64), it was from a religious motive, that an Engliſh Biſhop founded an alarm for war the day after the feaſt (65), at which the chief men of the Parliament were regaled with the good wines and excellent cheeſes, which the Pope's galley had brought to London. The Prelate in queſtion repreſented, that Lewis XII was a perſecutor of the Church, and that it would reflect eternal ſhame on the Engliſh nation, to live in peace with thoſe who perſecuted the Holy See. Varillas ought to have explained a little better the ſeveral reaſons employed by this Prelate; and not have contented himſelf with hinting, that religious motives were blended with thoſe of policy. There is no doubt but the Engliſh Prelate repreſented, that Lewis XII wanted to dethrone the Pope, in no other view but to elect another who might ſuffer him to conquer all Italy. This doubtleſs was the true ſpring that put Henry VIII in motion. He ſaw plainly that if this was not oppoſed, Lewis XII would have the glory of depoſing Pope Julius II, the ſcourge of the Chriſtian world; after which he would elect any man he pleaſed for Pope, and ſubdue all Italy. Neither human politicks nor jealouſy will let a Prince conſent to ſuch an increaſe of the glory and power of his neighbour; and for this reaſon Lewis XII was attacked by England, Switzerland and Spain.

(*) Paul. Diacon. de Geſt. Longob. lib. 1. cap. 5.

(62) Spondanus, ad ann. 1512, num. 3. pag. m. 289. where the following words are put by way of ſummary; Quibus illiciis Pontifex ſibi Anglos benevolos reddiderit. i. e. "The allure"ments employed by the "Pope, in order "to win over "the Engliſh."

(63) Abrégé Chronolog. tom. 4. pag. 459. ad ann. 1512.

(64) Varill. Hiſtoire de Louis XII, liv. 8. pag. 81.

(65) Henry VIII gave the entertainment.

[Q] Varillas who ſpeaks... of a certain ſpeech... has expoſed himſelf to cenſure.] He ſays (66), that Pompeio Colonna and Antonio Savelli hearing that Pope

(66) Varillas, Hiſt. de Louis XII, liv. 8. pag. 8. ad ann. 1511.

Bembo's History of Venice, is sufficient to shew the passion, the insincerity, and prodigious ambition of Julius II, though this Historian is not so prolix on this article as Guicciardin.

Our Pope was so tired of the plaisters which his Surgeon had put unsuccessfully upon an ulcer, that at last there was no possibility of prevailing upon him to let it be dress. The Surgeon who had promised with an oath not to use such plaisters any more, had recourse to an artifice which wrought a cure [R]. Bandello relates a pleasant incident.

Pope was fallen "into a kind of swoon which "lasted four hours, and made the persons present "think he was dead... assembled (67) their friends, "ran up and down the streets, stirred up the citizens "to rebellion, and led them to the Hotel de Ville, "where Colonna the best orator of the two, made the "most satyrical speech that is extant, against the Popes "in general, and Julius in particular. He declared "that most of them had abused the supreme authority "ever since the time they had usurped it; and enu-"merating all the cities that had formerly been go-"verned by Tyrants, he concluded that none of them "had met with such ill treatment as Rome. He "descended to the particulars of the conduct of the "last Popes, and dropt some particulars on that "subject which it is not decent to relate." Varillas adds (68) that "Guicciardin had drawn up "this speech from the memoirs of two or three people "who had heard it spoke, but it has been struck "out of the body of his history. It is nevertheless printed separately in Italian; and his French "translator who had recovered it, restored it to the "place from whence it had been taken." I have occasion for another passage of this author, before I make my criticism; let us therefore see the beginning of his preface (69). "When I caused, says he, the "eighth book of this history to be printed, I imagined "that the speech of Pompey Colonna to the principal "citizens of Rome, to prompt them to shake off the "Papal yoke, was a very scarce piece: and indeed I "had seen it no where but in the King's library. "But I have been informed since, that it had been re-"printed, by the direction of the late Mr. de Wicque-"fort, in the beginning of the book published by him, "entitled Thuanus restitutus, and consequently that it is "not hard to be met with at present. It is nevertheless certain, that Mr. de Wicquefort has discharged, "in this respect, only part of what he owed the pub-"lic, since he has not mentioned the motives that "occasioned this speech, which is the most insolent that "can be read; and as Guicciardin has not related "them, the curious will perhaps not be displeased if "I should supply the defect of those two historians. "The first motive &c." I cannot affirm that this speech is in the King's library, nor can I say that it is not, but I may venture to declare that Guicciardin never inserted it in his history. He speaks (70) but transiently of the insurrection. which the two men in question endeavoured to raise; and does not say that Pompeio Colonna, being the best orator, made the speech. It is not true that his French translator has restored that speech to the place from whence it had been taken. If this was so, it would not be a scarce piece, the French translation of Guicciardin being easily met with. It was not reprinted by the direction of Mr. de Wicquefort at the beginning of the Thuanus restitutus: but doubtless what follows misled Mr. de Varillas. In Guicciardin's fourth book, a long discourse has been omitted with respect to the manner how the Popes made themselves temporal sovereigns of part of Italy. The Protestants have preserved this discourse, and published it separately a numberless multitude of times (71). It is (72) in Latin, in Italian, and in French, at the end of the Thuanus restitutus printed at Amsterdam in 1663; and it is inserted in its proper place in the French translation of Guicciardin, by Jerom Chomedey, and printed at Geneva in the year 1593 with summaries, and marginal notes that plainly seem to be writ with a true Protestant spirit (73). Varillas having been told something concerning the history of the discourse in question, and concerning the speech made by those who endeavoured to excite the Romans to rebellion in 1511, has confounded the one with the other (γ).

(67) Ibid. pag. 10.

(68) Ibid. pag. 13.

(69) Of tome 3. of the Hist. of Lewis XII.

(70) Guicciardin. liv. 10. folio 280. See also Paulus Jovius, in Vita Leonis X, pag. m. 108.

(71) See the article GUICCIARDIN, remark [A].

(72) With two other passages that had been retrenched, the one of the 3d book, and the other of the 10th of GUICCIARDIN.

(73) Written by de la Noue.

§ (γ) Some objections may be made to this censure of Mr. Bayle with regard to Varillas; for if it be true, as Bayle pretends, that Guicciardin never inserted Pompeio Colonna's speech in his history, and spoke only transiently of the popular insurrection that he and Antonio Savelli endeavoured to excite in Rome in the year 1511; it is also true that he has inserted an extract of their speech to the people on that occasion; and that this extract, after having been omitted in most of the editions of Guicciardin, has been placed, not in the beginning, as Varillas says, of Wicquefort's Thuanus restitutus, but at the end of it; and it is surprizing, that Mr. Bayle, not only did not perceive this, but even affirmed positively the contrary, since he speaks of three passages of Guicciardin collected by de Wicquefort; and that the third of these passages is the very extract of Pompey Colonna's speech. It is true indeed on the other side, that Varillas should not have spoke of this, as tho' it had been the speech itself, nor as being "the most insolent speech that can be read, and "the most satyrical extant against the Popes in general "and Julius in particular," nor that Colonna descended "to the particulars of the conduct of the last Popes, "and that he dropt some particulars concerning this "subject which it is not very decent to relate;" since, besides that there is nothing like this in the extract in question; that nothing is there said in particular concerning the last Popes, and that Julius II is not so much as named in it, there are but two small pages in 12mo, in which they content themselves with representing in general the inconveniencies and irregularities of Church government. Nor should he have said, that the French translator, who recovered it, restored it to the place, whence it had been taken; for it is not there; a circumstance that is pretty surprizing, since that the other two castrated passages of Guicciardin, and collected by Mr. de Wicquefort, are each fixed in their proper places in the translation just mentioned. It was therefore just in Bayle to affirm that the speech in question was not restored, and this is the only thing on which his censure is grounded; for with regard to what he adds, viz. that doubtless Varillas confounded a castrated passage of the 4th book of Guicciardin, with this which belongs to the 10th book; what has been said above, shews sufficiently that these assertions are not well-grounded; and it is a proof of what Mr. Bayle has himself said elsewhere with so much judgment, viz. that on matters relating to facts, a person ought to be very cautious in his conjectures; and that such a one had much better suspend his judgment till such time as he has perused several writings or memoirs (*). I am informed by Mr. Lieve of Leipsic, that this extract of the speech in question is in its proper place, in the Italian edition of Guicciardin apprεsso Jacobo Stoer 1636; but as to the speech itself, which Varillas says he saw in the King of France's Library, his authority is so much suspected, that it is not safe to rely upon it. REM. CRIT.]

(*) Bayle's article of SEYMOUR (Anne, Margaret and Jane.)

[R] His Surgeon... had recourse to an artifice which wrought a cure.] Naudé brings this as an example, in a Dissertation where he enquires whether a patient may be imposed upon. Is (celeberrimus Chirurgus Joannes de Vigo) dum nodum carnosum Julii secundi contumaciorem in dies fieri, & Pontificem omne genus remediorum constanter respuere animad verteret, novam quamdam medendi rationem meditatus est: pannos siquidem veteres frustillatim conscerptos unà cum panis siliginei mica molliore, & arsenici sublimati in aquis rosarum & plantaginis excepti fomento, ad tertias in vase æneo decoxit, expressisque demum illis, & pulveris modo ulceri admotis, quod nullis deinceps unguentis se curaturum jurejurando receperat, brevi summa cum omnium admiratione Pontificem à gravi & molesto affectu liberavit (74). i. e. "That celebrated Surgeon John de Vigo, observ-"ing that Julius the Second's ulcer grew more "stubborn every day, and that the Pope constantly "refused every kind of remedy, projected a new "method of cure; for he boiled, to a third part, in a "brass incident [S]. I have juſt now read in a French author, that this Pope was ſo malicious, as to invent a fiction injurious to the memory of Gaſton de Foix Duke of Nemours; and which might heighten the ſuperſtition of the people, to the prejudice of France. This fiction was, that a ſerpent had been ſeen to come out of the Duke de Nemour's ſepulchre. The author who tells this ſtory, inveighs very ſharply againſt this Pope [T].

(74) Naudæus, in Pentade Quæst. Iatrophilologicarum, pag. 122, edit. Genev. 1647, He cites Joan. de Vigo, lib. 2. Chirurg. tract. 2. cap. 1.

" braſs kettle, old rags torn to ſcraps, with crums of " the fineſt white bread, and a fomentation of arſenic " ſublimated in roſe-water and plantain; then ex- " preſſing or drying them, and applying them to the " ulcer, to which he had ſwore he would no more " apply any ſalve or plaiſter, he ſpeedily cured the " Pope, to the admiration of every one, of a very " troubleſome diſeaſe."

[S] Bandello relates a pleaſant incident.] The Germans, ſays he (75), " having aſked the Pope leave to " eat fleſh on St. Martin's day when it ſhould fall on " a fiſh day, Julius being unwilling to deny their " requeſt publickly, granted it them, but on condition " that they ſhould drink no wine that day." Now this was equivalent to a refuſal, there being more to be loſt than got by ſuch an indulgence.

(75) Bandell. Novel. 31. of Part 1. folio 219 verſo. This is a remark of Mr. de la Monnoie.

[T] This Pope was ſo malicious, as to invent a fiction injurious to the memory of Gaſton de Foix . . . The author who tells this ſtory, inveighs very ſharply againſt this Pope.] I will firſt relate the ſtory: Non defuere qui prædicarent ſerpentem viſum de Fuxenſis tumulo ſibilum exilire, & hi maximè ſacrificuli; nam ab iiſdem ſæpè aliquid ſpectri novi intelligimus, ſed Phyſici mitiores (76). i. e. " There were not wanting ſome who " ſpread a report, that a ſerpent was ſeen to iſſue " ſwiftly, hiſſing, from Gaſton de Foix's monument, " and thoſe perſons were chiefly trifling Prieſts; for " theſe frequently entertain us with the account of " ſome new phantom or prodigy; but natural Philo- " ſophers are more indulgent to us." The reader will obſerve by the way, that this author ſays that the Prieſts were the chief promoters of this tale, and that it is pretty much their cuſtom to ſpread prodigies. I omit his quotations from Ælian and Sozomen (77), and will take only thoſe particulars which relate to our Julius II. Tales nugas in vulgus emiſerat malignitas Julii II Pontificis Rom. credulitas rudis dederat incrementum (78). i. e. " Thoſe trifling ſtories owed " their riſe to the malice of Pope Julius II, who " ſpread them among the people, and which their " credulity greatly increaſed." He afterwards relates in what manner this Pope impoſed upon Cardinal George d'Amboiſe; made Rome to eccho with the ſound of arms; and how delighted he was with ſatyrical verſes written againſt France. He pardoned a Poet who was guilty of ſeveral crimes; and ordered him a handſome ſum of money, for a diſtich that will be ſeen below. Verſiculis ad Gallorum ignominiam ſpectantibus mirè delectabatur; adeò ut poetæ ſtateres aureos ducentos munerarit, præter delictorum abolitionem, qui hos vulgaſſet:

(76 Forcatulus, de Gallor. Imperio & Philoſophia, lib. 4. pag. m. 553.

(77) Book 9. chap. 17. concerning two ſerpents found in the ſepulchre of Zachariah the Prophet.

(78 Forcat. de Gallor. Imperio & Philoſophia, lib 4. pag. 554.

Julius evulſit Gallis cytherëius alas:
Martius hic priſco Cæſare major erit (79).

(79) Idem, ibid. pag. 556.

" He was exceedingly pleaſed with verſes that re- " flected ignominy on the French; inſomuch that he " preſented to a Poet two hundred pieces of gold, be- " ſides the pardon of all his offences, for publiſhing " the following lines:

" Greater by far than Rome's immortal Cæſar
" Shall Julius be, who pluck'd the wings of Gaul."

Forcatulus, my author in this remark, contraſts theſe two verſes with a very ſatyrical diſtich that was made againſt this Pope. Eminuit in contrarium non inelegans diſtichum, dignum, opinor, quod Catulli eſſet, non autoris incogniti:

Fæx Ligurum Romam, ponti fæx concutit armis
Julius, huic Brutum Gallia fortis alit (80).

(80) Idem, ibid.

" In oppoſition to this, there was handed about a " pretty diſtich, worthy, in my opinion, of Catullus, " not of an unknown author,

" Gaul nurtures a brave Brutus, who ſhall march
" And cruſh this Julius, tho' he now ſhakes Rome."

Some perſons, continues he, obſerved, that the times were come, when another Julius, by the profuſe beſtowing of monies he had borrowed, had obtained the Pontificate, and ſupplanted his competitors; but that the new Julius had nothing in common with the other, neither with regard to knowledge, to clemency, or honeſty; nor any thing in common with the Apoſtle St. Peter, not even to the Fiſherman's boat, ſince the Apoſtle juſt mentioned employed it only in a juſt and honeſt manner, whereas Julius (as it was ſaid) made uſe of it only as a Pirate. A reader who underſtands Latin, will ſoon find that I do not add the leaſt expreſſion to Forcatulus (81). Nonnulli adjiciebant rediiſſe pro certo Julii ſeculum, quo ille nimirum profuſa largitione Pontificatum indeptus fuerat conflato multo ære alieno, ſuperatiſque, ut Tranquillus ait (*), duobus competitoribus ætate & dignitate potioribus . . . . Julius demum, qui nihil doctrinæ cum illo primo & perpetuo Dictatore commune habuit, nihil fidei & benevolentiæ, nihil cum Apoſtolo Petro ſanctitatis & prudentiæ, nihil morum (niſi forſan quod Petrus in mari innoxiam piſcationem exercuit, ille aliquandiu, ut ajunt, piraticam) poſt novenne imperium, & ſi quid menſium excurrit, obſtinatum in Galliam animum ad Manes tulit (†).

(81) Idem, ibid.

(*) In Julio cap. 12.

§ (†) In 1511 Julius II put the whole Kingdom of France, the Dukedom of Britany excepted, under an interdict, which was levelled particularly at the city of Lyons, whoſe fair he removed to Geneva. This appears from the decree made by him in the third Seſſion of the Counil of Lateran, where we read the following words. Anno M. D. XI. die nono Calendas Novembris, & anno ſequenti Idibus Auguſti, Franciæ Regnum, Lugdunum præcipue, (Britanniæ Ducatu excepto) Eccleſiaſtico Interdicto ſubjecit, Nundinaſque Lugduni ſolitus habere in Genebenſem civitatem tranſtulit, ut refert Pontificum Diploma in tertia Seſſione Synodi Lateranenſis, in qua etiam hæc leguntur: " Damna- " tionis alumnos Bernardinum Carvajal, Guillelmum " Briſſonet, Renatum de Pria, & Fridericum de S. Se- " verino, Cardinales, eorumque fautores ſacro Conci- " lio approbante damnamus, reprobamus & deteſta- " mur." Porro Julius Papa, qui antea Julianus, in hæc verba prorupit moriens, Ut Julius Cardinalibus indulgeo Schiſmaticis, ut Julianus juſtitiæ rationem habendum judico: id notatum eſt a Pariſio Craſſ. Cæremoniarum Sacelli Pontificii Magiſtro (†). REM. CRIT.]

(†) Petr. Frizon, in Gallia Purpurata, pag. 557. He cites Craſſus in Diariis Pontif.

JULIUS III, elected Pope the 7th of February 1550, was named John Maria del Monte. He was of mean extraction, and a true ſoldier of eccleſiaſtical fortune. He had riſen gradually till he came to be Preſident of the Council of Trent [A]. Julius was

[A] He had riſen gradually till he came to be Preſident of the Council of Trent.] To omit his firſt employments, I ſhall obſerve, in the firſt place, that he aſſiſted in the Council of the Lateran, and made a ſolemn ſpeech at the concluſion of it. He was Archbiſhop of Siponto, Auditor of the Apoſtolical Chamber, and twice Governor of Rome. He was given in hoſtage when Rome was ſack'd by the forces of the Emperor Charles V; and after his being Cardinal he was ſeveral times Legate in the chief provinces of the Eccleſiaſtical State, and in Bologna (1). " He aſſumed the " name of Julius in memory of Julius II, who had " raiſed his family, by promoting Anthony del Monte " his uncle to the Purple, and from whom he had " obtained the Archiepiſcopal See of Siponto. He was " born in the diſtrict of Rome called del Parione, but " his

(1) Extracted from Palavicino, Hiſt. Concil. Trident. lib. 13. cap. 10. num. 8.

was a very voluptuous man [B], and was paſſionately fond of a very ugly lad, who was very meanly deſcended [C]. As ſoon as he was elected Pope, he gave the youth in queſtion his Cardinal's hat [D]; and made a whimſical anſwer when he was told how unworthy

" his family came originally from Monte-San-Savino " in Tuſcany, whence he took the name of Monte, " inſtead of that of Giocchi, by which he was called " before (2)." He obtained of the Duke of Tuſcany the inveſtiture of Monte-San-Savino for his brother. He could not deny himſelf the pleaſure of ſeeing his family governing, in that place, thoſe who once were their equals: Impotens ſibi temperandi ab ea voluptate qua ſuos aſpiceret in illis dominantes, inter quos educati fuerant æquales (3).

(2) Amelot de la Houſſaye, in the margin of his tranſlation of Fra-Paolo, pag. 280. ex Onufrio.

(3) Palavin. Hiſt. Concil. Trident. lib. 13. cap. 10. num. 8.

[B] Julius was a very voluptuous man.] Thuanus ſpeaks as follows on this ſubject. Sub id tempus Julius III intemperantia vitæ magis quam ſenio effœtus fato conceſſit, qui Joanne Baptiſta Balduini fratris F. mortuo, cum non ita a Fabiano juniore Baptiſtæ fratre ſollicitaretur, totum ſe voluptatibus mancipaverat, parato ad delicias nobili illo ſeceſſu ſtructura & operibus antiquis admirando, in quo fere reliquam vitam a negotiis vacuus cum amicis ſui ſimilibus inter ludos, aleam, comœdias, & quæ talia comitari amant, ſacro faſtigio indigna oblectamenta, continuatis nocti diebus tranſegit (4). i. e. " Near that time Julius III left the world, he owing " his death to intemperance rather than old age. This " Julius, after the deceaſe of John Baptiſt, his brother " Baldwin's ſon, being not ſo much ſollicited by Fa" bian, Baptiſt's younger brother, abandoned himſelf " entirely to pleaſures, in that charming and elegant " retirement, ſo wonderful for its ſtructure and works " of antiquity, wherein he ſpent moſt of the reſt of " his life, diſingaged from all buſineſs, among friends " of his own caſt of mind; paſſing whole nights " as well as days, in gaming, ſeeing of plays, and " ſuch like feſtivities, unworthy of his ſacred dig" nity,"

(4) Thuan. lib. 15. pag. 306.

[C] He . . . . was paſſionately fond of a very ugly lad, who alſo was very meanly deſcended.] Some uſed to ſay that this was his ſon; whilſt others denied this, and related how that Cardinal del Monte, having found this lad playing with a monkey in the ſtreets, took him into his ſervice, becauſe no body but he had the courage to play with that animal. This was the foundation of a favour or kindneſs, which afterwards grew to be a wild paſſion. The lad in queſtion was loathſome in every reſpect, except that he had got a knack of playing the buffoon. We are told theſe particulars by Thomas Eraſtus, whoſe words are as follow. Habet puerum quendam, nigram, turpem, arrogantiſſimam beſtiam, ineptam, ignorantem, & plane inertem, niſi quod nonnihil eorum, quæ ſcurræ, dicteriorum in ore habet. In ſumma, corpore & animo monſtrum. Quis, unde, aut cujus ille puer ſit, tam ſunt variæ hominum ſententiæ & opiniones, ut nemo exploratum habere videatur. Animadverti ego quoſdam, qui filium arbitrabantur; &, qui filium negabant, ingenioſe aliorum dicta refutare, atque in plateis repertum eduxiſſe e parvulo, propter ſimiam, cum qua, præter illum nemo hominum ludere auderet. Ea re Cardinalem (aut Epiſcopum tum) ita delectatum, ut pro ſuo habuerit. Hunc puerum, miſer, ita amat perdite, ita deperit (dicitur autem alios omnes vincere ἐν τῇ παιδιᾳσίᾳ) ut nihil poſſit dici vehementius (5). i. e. " He has I know not what boy; a " black, filthy, and moſt domineering brute, ſilly, " ignorant, and quite devoid of all talents except that " he can play the buffoon a little. In ſhort, he is a " monſter both in body and mind. No one ſeems to " have certainly diſcovered who he is, or whence he " ſprung. I have found ſome who think him Julius's " ſon; and thoſe who deny this, come off ingeniouſly " by ſaying, that he met with him in the ſtreets, and " brought him up from a child, becauſe he played " with an ape, which no one but that boy had the " courage to do. The Cardinal, (or Biſhop at that " time) was ſo delighted with this, that he took him " for his own. He is diſtractedly fond of this boy, " as he indeed is ſaid to ſurpaſs all others in the unna" tural vice." Thuanus ſays a thing, which confirms part of this; as firſt, that this boy was called the Monkey or Ape, even after he had been raiſed to the Purple. Secondly, that he bore this name, becauſe his employment, under the Cardinal his maſter, was to look after a monkey or ape. Soluti ad omnem licentiam animi homo (theſe are the words of this great Hiſtorian, which give a very ill character of Pope Julius III) ſtatim adepta dignitate qualis eſſet, omnibus manifeſtum fecit. Nam cum antiquæ conſuetudinis ſit, ut novus Pontifex galerum, cui velit, ſuum largiatur, eum juveni cuidam, cui Innocentio nomen, quique, quod in familia ſimiæ curam gereret, Simiæ etiam poſt adeptam dignitatem nomen retinuit, cognomine etiam ſuo atque inſignibus attributis donavit (6). i. e. " This man being addicted to " licentious pleaſures of every kind, was no ſooner " raiſed to the Pontificate, but he ſhewed to every one " his diſpoſition: for it being a cuſtom from time " immemorial, for the new Pontif to beſtow his hat on " whomſoever he pleaſes, he gave it to a certain young " fellow named Innocentius; and who on account of " his looking after an ape in his family, retained the " name of Simia after he was raiſed to the purple; in " this manner beſtowing on him a ſurname and marks " of honours" See the notes on the Confeſſion Catholique de Sancy, pag. 249, edit. of 1699.

(5) Thomas Luberus, qui Eraſtus poſtea voce Græca appellari amavit) in Epiſtola ad Pellicanum, apud Hottingerum, Hiſt. Eccleſiaſt. tom. 5. pag. 572.

(6) Thuan. lib. 6. pag. 121. vol. 1.

[D] He gave the youth in queſtion his Cardinal's hat.] We juſt now heard from Thuanus, that Cardinal del Monte, upon his being elected Pope, immediately beſtowed his hat, his name and (7) his arms on a young man whoſe name was Innocent, and whoſe buſineſs it was to look after a monkey. Eraſtus, whom I have already cited, will give us a more circumſtantial relation of this matter. This lad had been left at Bologna; ſo that Julius III, who would not let him come to Rome before he had raiſed him to the Purple, and who wanted a little time in order to get this promotion approved, ſuffered all the rigours of abſence, and ſought for the beſt remedies poſſible. He was never chearful and gay but when he heard of his Innocent; and he enquired about him of all perſons, who were able to give him the leaſt information. He cauſed him to come near to Rome, in order that he might have the conveniency of viſiting him; and having once brought him ſecretly into the city, he waited for him at the window as impatiently as a lover does for his miſtreſs, who had promiſed to paſs the night with him. He was heard to ſay, that the chief reaſon why he rejoiced at being Pope was, that it gave him an opportunity of being a benefactor to Innocent; and that he thought himſelf leſs obliged to the Cardinals for creating him Pope, than for their conſenting to honour Innocent with the purple (8). He appointed him his firſt Miniſter; and all thoſe who wanted to intercede for any favours were ordered to apply themſelves firſt to Innocent. Here follows the original of what I have now ſaid. Dum Romæ poſt electionem commoraretur (manſerat autem Innocentius, id ei nomen, Bononiæ) dicitur nunquam lætus fuiſſe, niſi dum aliquid de Innocentio intelligeret. Et audivi ego à gravibus viris, inter tam multos Bononienſes, qui Romam ſint profecti, neminem eſſe repertum, quem ſciret cum Innocentio, aut ſuſpicaretur fuiſſe, qui non interrogatus ab eo eſſet, quid, & quomodo Innocentius ageret. Poſt aliquot menſes propius Romam accedere juſſit, ut ad eum deambulatum aliquando Roma exire poſſet. Non enim potuit adduci, ut pateretur eum ingredi Romam, niſi galero rubeo eſſet ornatum turpe caput. Ab hac re plurimi Cardinales videbantur abhorrere, minimeque paſſuri, ut in Cardinalium numerum cooptaretur, quem ne hominem quidem eſſe cognoviſſent. Accerſivit igitur noctu aliquando in urbem clam, atque ita in feneſtris expectabat, ut ii ſolent, quibus amica, qua nihil habent in vita charius, pollicita eſt noctem. Dicitur dixiſſe, ſe lætari, quod in ampliſſimam illam poteſtatem eſſet collocatus, non tam ſua cauſa, quam quod poſſet bene de Innocentio mereri. Et tandem factus Cardinalis dixit, ſe pro beneficio magis Cardinalibus obſtrictum eſſe, quam quod ſe Pontificem eſſe voluerint. Præterea, ut qui aliquid à ſe velint, id per Innocentium eſſe impetrandum. Quamobrem Legati Civitatum, Principum & Regum ad puerum concurrunt, illi ſua negotia exponunt, ut is de rebus ſuis graviſſimis etiam ad Papam referat (9). Some ſatires were publiſhed at Rome, wherein it was ſaid

(7) See the remark [M], citation (30) in the margin.

(8) Compare what is ſaid below, remark [M] citation (†).

(9) Eraſtus, apud Hottingerum, Hiſt. Eccleſ. tom. 5. pag. 572.

unworthy a choice he had made [E]. There was little gravity in his diſcourſes, which is manifeſt from the reflection he once made on the anſwer of two Cardinals [F]. The want of gravity was not his greateſt fault; for it is declared that he ſometimes would be profane and blaſphemous in his diſcourſe, as, when he apologized for his fire and paſſion, by inſtancing the anger which God expreſſed againſt Adam for an apple [G]. During the Conclave in which he was elected, ſome of his letters were intercepted; whereby it was ſaid that this favourite, though ſo very ugly, was a new Ganymedes. This the Pope did not make a myſtery of; but would ſometimes tell the Cardinals ſome ſtories of this boy's laſcivious tricks. Romæ fama erat & libellis quoque perſcriptum fuit, à Jove Ganymedem foveri, licet deformem: ſed nec ipſe Pontifex hoc ad reliquos Cardinales diſſimulare, & per jocum fertur aliquando commemorare, quam ſit laſcivus adoleſcens & importunus (10). I ſhall ſpeak further of the adventures of this man in the remark [M].

(10) Sleidan, Hiſt. lib. 21. folio m. 609, verſo.

[E] . . . . and made a whimſical anſwer, when he was told how unworthy a choice he had made.] I will borrow the words of John Bodin. "A Prince who "exalts an unworthy man above men of virtue and "merit, or who ranks them with the greateſt perſons, "in doing good to one does an injury to all the "reſt: as it was repreſented by the Conſiſtory of Cardinals to Pope Julius del Monte, when he beſtowed "the Cardinal's hat he had worn on a young boy he "loved; that it was a great diſhonour to admit a perſon who had neither virtue, knowledge, nobility, "poſſeſſions, nor any other quality, as theſe ſaid, "that deſerved being raiſed to ſo exalted a ſtation. But "the Pope, who was a facetious man, directing himſelf "to the other Cardinals; what virtue, ſays he, what "nobility, what knowledge, what honour, did you find in "me, to raiſe me to the Pontificate (11)?" Was not this laughing at the Sacred College? And might one not apply to this Pope the following exclamation of Cato; What an odd ſort of Conſul have we! Adjungit Plutarchus eum (Ciceronem) cum Murænam Conſul defenderet, quem accuſaſſet Cato, ſcite exagitaſſe ſententias & præcepta Stoicorum in Catone, unde riſus ingens à corona pervenerit ad ſubſellia, ſubriſiſſe porro ipſum Catonem leviter, atque ad conſeſſum dixiſſe, quam ridiculum, Judices, habemus Conſulem (12). Some relate Pope Julius's anſwer as follows, What, pray, did you find in me, to do me the honour of making me Pope undeſervedly? But let us raiſe this young man, and he'll deſerve it (13). Theſe laſt words are a pretty ſmart jeer, and reprove a fault that is found every where. The inſtant a man is raiſed to an employment, a thouſand flatterers ſtart up, and ſay that he very well deſerved it. Montagne ſays ſomewhere (α), that Antiſthenes one day made the Athenians ſenſible of the abuſes that were committed in the beſtowing of public employments: He adviſed them to order, that their aſſes ſhould be made to plough no leſs than their horſes: it was anſwered, that the beaſt in queſtion was not formed for ploughing: No matter for that, replied he, all depends on your decree; for the moſt ignorant, and moſt unqualified perſons, on whom you beſtow the command in your wars, become nevertheleſs inſtantly extremely worthy of them, becauſe they are employed by you.

(11) Bodin. de la Republique, liv. 5. chap. 4. pag. m. 748.

(12) Vavaſſor, de Ludicra Dictione, pag. 329.

(13) Jean Creſpin, de l'eſtat de l'Egliſe, ad ann. 1550, pag. m. 551. ex Paulo Vergerio.

§ (α) Liv. III. Chap. VI. See, on this occaſion, in Feneſte, Liv. IV. Chap. VII. a ſmart ſaying by la Renardiere, a native of Britany, to Henry IV. REM. CRIT.]

[F] The reflection he one day made on the anſwer of two Cardinals.] They found him in the court of his palace in a very indecent poſture; he having thrown off his clothes, and walking only in his drawers, becauſe of the heat. He obliged them to do the ſame, and then aſked what the people would ſay of them, ſhould they go and ſhew themſelves in the field of Flora and the ſtreets of Rome? They would take us, ſaid he, for ſo many raſcals, and ſo throw ſtones at us. We therefore, ſays he, are obliged to our clothes, for preventing our being looked upon as raſcals; are we therefore not prodigiouſly obliged to our clothes? Cum aliquando exutis veſtibus, diploide & caligis tantùm indutus, in aula, quòd ferveret tempeſtas, obambularet, venerunt Cardinales duo, collocuturi cum ipſo. Quos ipſe ad expendas veſtes ſuas, & deambulandum ſecum urgebat, mox autem nudos interrogabat: Quid ſi in Campo Floræ, aut per plateas nudi ſic deambularemus, quid oro populum exiſtimatis de nobis judicaturum? Reſponderunt: Judicarent nos eſſe nebulones, & conjicerent in nos rudera atque lapides. Excepit Pontifex: Ergo quòd non habemur pro nebulonibus, id acceptum ferre debemus noſtris veſtibus. Quantum igitur, ô fratres, debemus illis noſtris veſtibus (14)?

(14) Bullinger, in Vita M. S. Julii III, apud Heideggerum, Hiſt. Papatus, pag. 235.

[G] He apologized for his fire and paſſion, by inſtancing the anger which God expreſſed againſt Adam for an apple.] This particular is related thus by John Creſpin (15). "He loved, among other meats, hogs "fleſh and peacocks; but as his Phyſician had earneſtly adviſed him to refrain from eating of pork, "becauſe it was bad for the gout with which he was "often afflicted, and yet he would not abſtain from "it, the Phyſician privately admoniſhed the Clerk "of the Kitchen, not to order any more pork for the "Pope's table. As therefore it was omitted for ſome "time, and the Pope took notice of it, he aſked the "Clerk of the Kitchen where was his diſh of pork. "The Clerk anſwered, that the Phyſician had ordered that none ſhould be ſerved up at his table; upon "which the Pontif cried, bring, bring me my diſh, "in ſpite of God (al diſpetto di Dio). . . . Seeing one "day a peacock at dinner, and none of the gueſts "having eat of it: keep, ſays he, this peacock cold "for my ſupper; and let a table be ſpread for me in "the garden, for I ſhall have company to night. As "afterwards he ſaw, as he ſat at ſupper, hot peacocks "brought to table, but not the cold one which he "ordered ſhould be kept, he flew into a terrible paſſion, "and uttered a moſt horrible blaſphemy againſt God. "Then ſome of the Cardinals who ſat at table with "him, ſaying, we beſeech your Holineſs not to be "ſo much exaſperated for ſuch a trifle, Julius replied, "If God was ſo angry about an apple, that he drove "our grand parent Adam out of paradiſe on that account, why may not I be allowed (I who am his "Vicar or Lieutenant) to be angry for a peacock, ſince "a peacock is of much more value than an apple?" Thoſe who ſhould be deſirous of reading this incident in two languages, may gratify their curioſity by reading what follows (16). Sæpiſſimè nequiſſimus iſte homo blaſphemiis illis uſus fuit, quæ impuriſſimis lenonibus aliiſque deſperatæ malitiæ hominibus tunc temporis frequenter in ore fuerunt, ad quas animus totus quantus exhorreſcit, vid. Al diſpetto di Dio, in contemptum (17) Dei, & Potta di Dio, i. e. ad vulvam Dei &c. exemplum hujus rei proponit Auctor libri cui titulus, Lectura ſuper Canone de conſecr. diſt. 3. (β) ajens: "Intellexi, "portatam fuiſſe in Civitatem Paduæ quandam hiſtoriam, impreſſam Latine, Italice, Germanice, & "Gallice, in qua narratur, quod Sanctiſſimus Dominus noſter Papa Julius III proximis diebus valde "fuit iratus cum Epiſcopo Arimenſe, ejus Magiſtro "domus, propter certum pavonem, & quum ſua præ"libata Sanctitas bis blaſphemaſſet, primo dicendo, "Potta di Dio, deinde, Al diſpetto di Dio, quod fecit "tanquam Johannes Maria de Monte, & ſic tanquam "homo, non tanquam Julius III Papa, & Vicarius "Chriſti, de quo ſupra dixi. Et quum unus Cardinalis illi dixiſſet, quod non deberet iraſci propter "unam tam parvam rem, id eſt, propter unum pavonem, tunc ſanctiſſimus D. Papa reſpondit: Si Deus "fuit totus turbatus, & in magna ira & colera, propter unum pomum, & tanta mala fecit omnibus hominibus; quare non poſſum ego, qui ſum ſuus Vicarius in terris, iraſci cum meo Magiſtro domus "propter unum pavonem?"

(15) Eſtat de l'Egliſe, ad ann. 1550, pag. 553.

(16) Joan. Zuingerus, in Tractatu Hiſtorico Theologico de Feſto Corporis Chriſti, pag. 146.

(17) The word contemptus, that is contempt, does not expreſs the ſtrength of the Italian diſpetto: It ſhould be invito Deo.

§ (β) Two burleſque pieces, writ in the ſixteenth century, bear this title. The firſt, intitled Lectura ſuper Canonem de Conſecr. Diſt. 3. De aqua benedicta, ſpectabilis viri, Lamperti de Nigromonte. Ad ſacræ Theologiæ Magiſtros noſtros D. Joh. Eckium, & Joh. Cochleum Eccleſiæ Catholicæ ſynceriſſimos defenſores was publiſhed at Wittemberg in 1543 (*). The ſecond, which is the piece in queſtion, was publiſhed eleven years after, and the author D. D. Geraldus Buſdragus de Luca, there ſtiles himſelf Doctor in Decree, Biſhop of Naples, of Romania, and Suffragan of Padua. REM. CRIT.

(*) Antiqua Literarum monumenta autographa &c. Brunſwic. 1690, tom. 1. pag. 448.

was conjectured that the Pope they were going to elect would be of a lewd diſpoſition, thoſe letters being filled with the moſt abominable obſcenities [H]. It is thought that his money fruſtrated the election of Cardinal Pole, which had been concluded on, and the publication whereof had been deferred for no other reaſon than for fear that the notifying it in the night ſhould be of an ill omen. Poſt longam Cardinalium in conclavi diſceptationem, cùm, teſte in Muſæo Hiſtorico Johanne Imperiali, ὁμοψήφως Papa jam electus eſſet Reginaldus Polus, eamque electionem promulgare nocte appetente inauſpicatum duxiſſent iidem; nocte tranſacta & mutatis rationibus aureis Julius Papa ſubitò emerſit (a). The medal which he cauſed to be ſtruck after the death of Edward King of England, had for its motto a paſſage of Scripture, the application whereof ſoon proved falſe [I]. This Pope died the 20th of February 1555, being about ſixty eight years of age (b). He had feigned an indiſpoſition [K]; and the better to impoſe on the world, he had confined himſelf to a regimen, that brought a real diſtemper upon him of which he died. It is related, that there was ſo great an intimacy between our Pope and Cardinal Creſcentio, that they had miſtreſſes in common, and maintained the children they had by them at a common expence [L], for want of knowing who was the genuine father. Each of them alſo

(a) Heidegg. Hiſt. Papatus, pag. 233.

(b) Spondanus, ad ann. 1555, num. 43. but Palavicin. Hiſt. Concil. lib. 13. cap. 10. num. 10. ſays he was ſeventy years old.

[H] Thoſe letters being filled with the moſt abominable obſcenities.] They were writ the 26th of January 1550 to one Hannibal Contin, by Camillo Oliva a Conclaviſt of the Cardinal of Mantua, together with a little poem, in which the author deſcribed very obſcenely his paſſion, and the burning deſire he had to be again with his friend. It is John Sleidan who relates theſe particulars. Dum in Conclavi res agitur, interceptæ fuerunt literæ, quas ex Cardinalis Mantuani familiaribus, quidam, Camillus Olivus, ad quendam ſuum Annibalem Continum, Januarii die XXVI ſcripſiſſe ferebatur, & ſimul carmen lingua populari ſcriptum, ubi de ſua locutus affectione, & abſentis deſiderio, tam pudendis utitur verbis, ut ſine flagitio vix ea recitare liceat. Hinc jocus illorum, qui Pontificem dicebant aliquem obſcœnum prænunciari, qui proditurus eſſet ex eo Conclavi, quod ejuſmodi literas daret (18). An author before cited does not relate this paſſage without ſaying what follows. Vir Doctus anonymus in Epiſt. ad amicum narrat, ex eo Conclavi, in quo creatus eſt Julius, interceptas fuiſſe literas alicujus ex Conclaviſtis, i. e. ex illis, qui ſolent aſſidere Cardinalibus, Papam electuris, quibus quidem literis non putet ulla memoria unquam ſcriptas fuiſſe ullas obſcœniores, ſceleratioreſque. Nudis enim nefandiſſimiſque verbis illic agi cum cinædo, ſalvo honore. Has, fateri, ad ſe primum in Germaniam fuiſſe miſſas, ſed dare typis excudendas (ut multi voluiſſent) nunquam quidem ſe voluiſſe. Paulo poſt addit, Julium III valde male audire in hoc obſcœniſſimo genere, (Sodomitici nim. criminis) ita ut neque a Cardinalibus abſtineat (19).

(18) Sleidanus, Hiſt. lib. 21. folio m. 609 verſo. It is alſo in Thuanus, Frankfort edit. of 1625, lib. 6. pag. 121.

(19) Joan. Zuingerus, in Tractatu de Feſto Corporis Chriſti, pag. 146.

[I] The medal which he cauſed to be ſtruck, had for its motto a paſſage of Scripture, the application whereof proved falſe.] There was extraordinary joy at Rome for the death of young King Edward, becauſe Princeſs Mary who ſucceeded him, reſtored England to the obedience of the Holy See; but the motives which occaſioned that joy ceaſed in a little time; for Queen Elizabeth reſtored the reformation, and made that iſland one of the moſt flouriſhing Kingdoms in all Chriſtendom, ſo that the prediction of the medal proved a mere chimæra. Eo inſaniæ Julius pervenit, ut in perpetuam rei memoriam excudi curaverit monetam, cujus altera pars ejus imaginem tricorniferam oſtentavit, altera inſcriptionem ejuſmodi habuit: Gens & Regnum, quod non ſervierit tibi, peribit. Sibi ſtolide vendicans; quod Chriſto Eſaias. Sed diuturnum & ſtabile gaudium neutiquam fuit (20). i. e. "Julius became ſo "mad, that he cauſed a medal to be ſtruck to perpe- "tuate the remembrance of that particular. On one "ſide of this medal was a figure with three horns, and "the other the following inſcription; The people and "Kingdom, which ſhall refuſe to ſerve thee, ſhall periſh, "ridiculouſly arrogating to himſelf what Iſaiah applied "to Chriſt. But this joy was very ſhort-lived."

(20) Heidegger. Hiſt. Papatus, pag. 238.

[K] He had feigned an indiſpoſition.] The reaſon of this was, his diſcovery that the Cardinals would refuſe to conſent to the demand, which his brother urged him to make to them. His brother had a paſſionate deſire to poſſeſs himſelf of a city, and was for ever importuning the Pope on that account. Julius therefore, in order that he might have a pretence not to hold a conſiſtory, feigned to be ſick. To carry on this trick with the greater art, he was obliged to eat little or nothing, and to make choice of ſuch aliments as are fit for ſick people: now it is ſaid that this change of diet brought upon him the ſickneſs of which he died (21). This puts me in mind of Cælius in Martial.

(21) Spondan. ad ann. 1555. num. 4. pag. 556. ex Onuphrio Panvinio. Thuanus relates this, lib. 15. pag. m. 306.

Diſcurſus varios, vagumque mane,
Et faſtus, & ave potentiorum,
Cum perferre patique jam negaret;
Cœpit fingere Cælius podagram.
Quam dum vult nimis approbare veram,
Et ſanas linit obligatque plantas,
Ineditque gradu laborioſo;
(Quantum cura poteſt, & ars doloris!)
Deſit fingere Cælius podagram (22),

(22) Mart. Epig. 39. lib. 7.

The ſenſe is,

"Cælius quite tired with waiting on the great;
"Their haughtineſs, and ever fruitleſs viſits,
"Reſolves to feign the gout, and feigns ſo well;
"So artfully anoints and ſwathes his feet,
"And limps ſo long, till he no longer feigns,
"But has the fell diſeaſe, and is a cripple."

Some ſay that his ſickneſs was indeed owing to his change of food; but not that he grew abſtemious purpoſely to impoſe on the world: they ſay that he hoped thereby to get rid of the intolerable pains of the gout. Others aſſert that his death was owing to an old diſtemper; and they own that he was very fond of pleaſures, and that he was much more deſirous of enjoying them than of exerciſing the Pontificate: he ſpending his whole time in building voluptuous receſſes, therefore devoted himſelf more to luxury than to buſineſs. Sunt etiam qui dicant, eum veterano interiiſſe: cum, ut idem etiam auctor narrat, externa quæque parum curans, fruendo potius quam regendo Pontificatui incumberet, totuſque eſſet in extruenda elegantiſſima ad voluptarios receſſus extra portam Flaminiam Villa Julia; cujus inſanire ſtudio videbatur; in qua conviviis potius quam publicæ procurationi vacabat (23).

(23) Spond. ad ann. 1555, num. 4. pag. 556. ex Onuphrio Panvinio.

[L] It is related . . . that our Pope and Creſcentio . . . had miſtreſſes in common, and maintained the children they had by them at a common expence.] Thomas Eraſtus informs me of theſe particulars. Julius III Pontifex, ſays he (24), & Creſcentius fere omnes meretrices communes habuerunt, propriiſque ſumtibus neutr, ſed communibus aluerunt, atque ut breviter dicam, omnium ſcelerum ſocii extiterunt. Suſceperunt ex quadam muliere, honeſti viri Viterbienſis, filiam, quam, quod neuter ſuam eſſe dicere credereque poſſet, ut matrem, ita filiam quoque communibus ſumtibus educandam tradiderunt, nuptuique dederunt nobiliſſimo hujus urbis adoleſcenti, & inter Principes hujus urbis, qui ſunt 40, conſtitutum voluerunt. i. e. "Pope Julius III, and Cardinal Creſcentio had "the greateſt part of the proſtitutes in common, and "maintained them at a common expence; to ſay all "in a word, they were companions in all kinds of "wickedneſs. They had a child by a certain wo- "man, the daughter of a gentleman of Viterbo, and "as neither of them could ſay or believe that it was "his, becauſe they had enjoyed the mother in com- "mon, they brought up the daughter at a mutual ex- "pence, and married her to a moſt noble youth in "this city; and would have ranked him among the "Princes or chief men, who are forty in number, of "this city." We here have a ſurprizing inſtance of a freedom from jealouſy, and what is rarely ſeen in that country.

(24) Apud Hottinger. Hiſt. Eccleſ. tom. 5. pag. 574.

alſo paid his quota towards the ſupport of thoſe miſtreſſes. Cardinal Palavicino extenuates to the utmoſt of his power the faults of this Pope; but he does not refute what Fra-Paolo ſays of him [M]. I forgot to take notice, that the Court of France offered this Pope's nephew a Princeſs of the blood, but that this alliance was refuſed [N].

